an unreasonable delay in transmitting and delivering the telegram. In an action sounding in tort, before there can be a recovery for any damages, it must appear from the allegations that there has been a breach of some duty which the telegraph company owed to the plaintiff, and that the damages claimed were the natural and legitimate consequences of such breach of duty. The company owed a duty to the plaintiff to transmit and deliver the telegram within a reasonable time. There was undoubtedly a breach of this duty. Was the damage sustained by the plaintiff the natural and legitimate consequences of this breach of duty? Whether there can be a recovery of damages resulting from mental anguish and pain, when there has been no physical tort committed, is a matter about which the courts of this country are not in accord. In Chapman v. Western Union Tel. Co., 88 Ga. 763, 15 S. E. 901, 17 L. R. A. 430, 30 Am. St. Rep. 133, it was held that the addressee of a telegram was not entitled to recover of the telegraph company damages on account of the mental pain and suffering alleged to have resulted from the failure of the company to deliver a message in due time. In the opinion Mr. Justice Lumpkin says: "The law protects the person and purse. The person includes the reputation. Johnson v. Bradstreet Co., 87 Ga. 79, 13 S. E. 250. The body, reputation, and property of the citizen are not to be invaded without responsibility in damages to the sufferer. But, outside these protected spheres, the law does not yet attempt to guard the peace of mind, the feelings, or the happiness of every one, by giving recovery of damages for mental anguish produced by mere negligence. There is no right, capable of enforcement by process of law, to possess or maintain without disturbance any particular condition of feeling. The law leaves feeling to be helped and vindicated by the tremendous force of sympathy. The temperaments of individuals are various and variable, and the imagination exerts a powerful and incalculable influence in injuries of this kind. There are moral obligations too delicate and subtle to be enforced in the rude way of giving money compensation for their violation. Perhaps the feelings find as full protection as it is possible to give in moral law and a responsive public opinion. The civil law is a practical business system, dealing with what is tangible, and does not undertake to redress psychological injuries."

There were other courts which took a contrary view of this question at the time that the Chapman Case was decided, and since that decision rulings have been made in other jurisdictions which are in conflict with the rule as adopted by this court. On account of these rulings, and statutes passed in the different states, it may be safely asserted that in more than a majority of the states where the question has been dealt with, either by the courts or by the legislatures, provision has been made for the recovery of damages for mental pain and suffering in a number of cases where the transaction does not involve a physical tort. See, in this connection, Western Union Tel. Co. v. Motley, 87 Tex. 38, 27 S. W. 52; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Coffin, 88 Tex. 94, 30 S. W. 896; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Adams, 75 Tex. 531, 12 S. W. 857, 6 L. R. A. 844, 16 Am. St. Rep. 920; Cashion v. Western Union Tel. Co., 123 N. C. 267, 31 S. E. 493; Bonner v. Western Union Tel. Co., 71 S. C. 308, 51 S. E. 117; Watson's Pers. Inj. § 393 et seq., 462. It will be seen that even in those states where recovery is allowed for mental anguish, independently of any contemporaneous physical injury, the damages recoverable must be the natural and proximate result of the breach of duty out of which it is claimed they arose. Without reference to what may be the rule elsewhere as to the recovery of damages merely for mental anguish, independently of a physical tort, this court is committed, under the Chapman Case, to the proposition that there can be, in this state, no recovery of damages in such a case. The plaintiff, therefore, cannot maintain her suit so far as it attempts to recover damages for mental pain and suffering.

But the petition also alleged that the suffering endured by her was physical, and that this could have been relieved if the telegram had been transmitted and delivered within a reasonable time. The case resolves itself, therefore, into the question as to whether the telegraph company is liable for the damages resulting to the plaintiff from physical suffering which she was enduring at the time that the telegram was delivered to the company for transmission, and which she continued to endure up to the time that the physician arrived. Can it be said that her suffering was the natural and proximate result of the failure of the telegraph company to transmit and deliver the message within due time? If so, the plaintiff is entitled to recover. If not, no recovery can be had. Civ. Code 1895, § 3912, declares that "If the damages are only the imaginary or possible result of the tortious act, or other and contingent circumstances preponderate largely in causing the injurious effect, such damages are too remote to be the basis of recovery against the wrongdoer." The suffering which the plaintiff was enduring at the time that the telegram was delivered for transmission was, of course, neither the natural nor proximate result of any act of the defendant. The suffering which was endured during the 19 hours that elapsed after the physician should have arrived and before he did arrive was not caused by any act of the defendant. The suffering was not the result of any breach of duty, either of omission, or of commission, of the defendant. This suffering would have been brought about if there had been no telegraph company and no message. But it is said that relief would have come if the telegram had been delivered within a reasonable time, and that there would have been a cessation of the suffering, and the wrongful act of the defendant was in so conducting its business as that the plaintiff was not relieved from the physical suffering which she was enduring. The mental suffering which the plaintiff endured could not be the subject of recovery, under the ruling in the Chapman Case. The physical suffering stands upon no different footing. There may possibly be cases where there is mental suffering and no physical suffering, though all pain necessarily involves consciousness and mental perception. There cannot be a case where there is physical suffering without more or less mental suffering. Atlanta & West Point Railroad Co. v. Potts, 128 Ga. 397, 57 S. E. 686. The mental suffering of the plaintiff is not recoverable, for the simple reason that it is not the natural and proximate result of the negligence of the defendant. Neither was the physical suffering the natural and proximate result of the defendant's negligence. It had its origin and continuance, not in the defendant's conduct, but in the malady with which she was afflicted. In the origin and continuance of it the defendant's conduct was not in any sense the preponderating cause. We are aware of the fact that there is a case in which the right to recover upon facts very similar, in fact almost identical with the present case, has been sustained. Carter v. Western Union Tel. Co., 141 N. C. 374, 54 S. E. 274. But it is to be noted that this case arose in a state where a recovery for mental pain and suffering, independent of any physical tort, was allowable. There was no error in sustaining the demurrer.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 32)

BROWN v McBRIDE et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 12, 1907.)

1. WILLS — EXECUTION — EVIDENCE — SIGNATURE OF WITNESS.

When it is sought to prove a will in solemn form, where one of the subscribing witnesses is absent, it is competent to prove the signature of such witness, after proving that the witness is inaccessible. Such proof for the purpose mentioned is equivalent to proof that the witness is dead or beyond the jurisdiction of the court.

1 (a). In such a case a witness is competent to testify as to his belief who will swear that he knows or would recognize the handwriting of the subscribing witness. The source of his own knowledge is a question for investigation, and goes entirely to the credit and weight of the evidence. The testimony objected to, fairly interpreted, should be construed as meaning that the witness knew the signature of the subscribing witness to the will, and would recognize it.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 49, Wills, § 687; vol. 20, Evidence, § 2247.]

2. SAME—SANITY OF TESTATOR—EVIDENCE.

In an application to probate a will in solemn form, where the sanity of the testator is the question at issue, it is not erroneous to allow nonexpert witnesses to testify as to their opinion of the condition of the testator's mind, after stating the facts upon which they based their opinion.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 49, Wills, §§ 116, 118.]

3. WITNESSES—IMPEACHMENT.

Where a witness upon his direct examination testified that the testator was of sound mind, and, for the purpose of impeachment, a written contract was introduced, which had been executed by the witness, wherein it was recited that the testator was non compos mentis, it was competent, after the introduction of such contract, for the witness, in explanation, to testify that he did not know the meaning of the terms "non compos mentis" as used in the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 50, Witnesses, § 1281.]

4. WILLS—EXECUTION—EVIDENCE.

The excerpts from the charges of the court complained of stated correct principles of law, and were applicable to the case.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 49, Wills, § 651.]

5. SAME—PROOF IN SOLEMN FORM—EVIDENCE.

Upon an application to prove a will in solemn form, it is not erroneous to exclude from evidence, upon the ground of irrelevancy, letters of administration and the bond of the administrator from the court of ordinary, originating in a proceeding for administration upon the estate of the deceased before the will was offered for probate in solemn form. Nor was it erroneous to exclude from evidence, upon the ground of irrelevancy, a written order signed by the attorneys of one other than the propounder of the will, addressed to the caveator, requesting him to pay certain amounts of money to certain creditors of the estate of the deceased.

6. SAME—EXECUTION.

A will is properly executed if signed by the testator, and, after signing it, he acknowledges to three subscribing witnesses that he signed it, and thereupon the three witnesses, in the presence of the testator and in the presence of each other, sign the will as witnesses thereto. It is not erroneous, therefore, upon an application to prove the will in solemn form, to refuse a request to give to the jury a charge which contains the following: "If it appears from the evidence in the case that Clegg signed the will in the presence of the attesting witnesses, or of one of the attesting witnesses, then it would not have been executed according to law, and could not be probated in solemn form, but your verdict would be against the will."

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 49, Wills, § 249.]

7. TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS.

In the absence of a timely written request, it is not erroneous for the court to omit to charge the law upon the subject of impeachment of witnesses. Boynton v. State, 115 Ga. 587 (3), 41 S. E. 995, and citations.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, § 643.]

8. APPEAL—REVIEW.

Upon the trial certain rulings were made to which exceptions pendente lite were allowed, and upon which error is assigned in the bill of exceptions. These questions were sufficiently dealt with when the case was before this court on a former occasion (Hooks v. Brown, 125 Ga. 122, 53 S. E. 583), and it is not now necessary to deal with them.

9. CONTINUANCE.

Upon the motion to continue, the evidence was of such character as to show no abuse of discretion in ordering the trial to proceed.

10. WILLS—PROBATE.

Upon a careful examination, the evidence appears to be of such character as to support the verdict finding in favor of the validity of the will.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 49, Wills, §§ 700-710.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Lee County; Z. A. Littlejohn, Judge.

Proceedings by J. M. McBride for the probate of the will of one Clegg. S. B. Brown filed a caveat. From a judgment probating the will, he brings error. Affirmed.

Allen Fort & Sons and E. A. Hawkins, for plaintiff in error. Ware G. Martin, Jas. Taylor, and Shipp & Sheppard, for defendant in error.

ATKINSON, J. 1. The issue arose out of an application to probate a will in solemn form. Clegg was the testator. G. A. McDonald, J. M. Rhodes, and A. A. Kerney were the subscribing witnesses. There was no testimony by any witness that the testator actually signed the will in the presence of any of the witnesses, but there was testimony to the effect that all three of the witnesses signed the will in the presence of the testator, and in the presence of each other. Upon this point, Kerney testified by interrogatories: "I was a witness to the will; signed the original will as a witness at the request of Judge D. H. Pope. George McDonald and John Rhodes were the other witnesses. I do not know whether the other two witnesses were present when Clegg signed the will, but my best judgment and recollection is that I was not present when Clegg signed the will. I and the other two witnesses signed the will in the presence of the testator, as witnesses, and in the presence of each other." Neither McDonald nor Rhodes testified. It was proved on the trial that McDonald was dead. It was shown that the signature to the will was the genuine signature of the testator. There was also evidence to the effect that some 15 years before the trial Rhodes had left the country, and had not been heard of since. Frequent inquiries had been made to ascertain his whereabouts, and all efforts to locate him had proved unavailing. He had killed a man before leaving. A witness who saw him at the time he was leaving testified: "Rhodes told me on the train that he had had some trouble, and had to leave. He told me he was going 'up the country,' was what he said. He did not say how far, and I haven't either met or seen him since or heard from him." There was other testimony tending to show an inability to discover Rhodes' whereabouts. It was not affirmatively shown that he was either dead or beyond the limits of the state. Having in this manner shown the absence of the two witnesses, the propounder of the will then offered evidence for the purpose of proving the signatures of such absent witnesses entered upon the original will. For this purpose, several witnesses were permitted to testify, in substance: "I would say to the best of my knowledge that the signature of J. M. Rhodes to the paper presented to me is the signature of J. M. Rhodes. I have seen it a good many times. I have had a good many deals with him." The testimony was admitted over the objections (a) that the evidence was illegal and insufficient to prove the signature of J. M. Rhodes; (b) that there was no proof that Rhodes was dead or beyond the jurisdiction of the court. For the same purpose, another witness testified: "That is Mr. McDonald's and that is Mr. Virgil A. Clegg's signature. That is the signature of McDonald." This evidence was objected to upon the ground that it was illegal and insufficient to prove the signature of McDonald; the witness not having testified to ever having seen him write or that he knew his signature or his handwriting. Under the provisions of Civ. Code 1895, § 3282, a will is proved in solemn form when "the will is proven by all the witnesses in existence and within the jurisdiction of the court, or by proof of their signatures and that of the testator, the witnesses being dead, and ordered to record." There was proof in this case that the witness McDonald was dead, and sufficient proof accounting for the absence of the witness Rhodes to show that he was inaccessible, and that his testimony could not be had. Under these conditions, we think a sufficient showing was made to justify the court in hearing evidence upon the handwriting of both witnesses. The reason is equally as cogent for proving the will by proof of handwriting of the subscribing witness when the witness is inaccessible to the court and cannot be found, in order that his testimony may be procured, although he may at the time be found within the jurisdiction of the court, as if he were dead, or, if living, as if he were living without the jurisdiction of the court. See, in this connection, Robinson v. State, 128 Ga. 254, 57 S. E. 315. The court was authorized to hear evidence for the purpose of determining whether the witness had been shown to be accessible or not. Evidence was submitted upon that proposition, which was of such character as fully sustained the conclusion of the court that the witness was inaccessible. The witness being inaccessible, it was the duty of the court to meet the necessity which arose on account of the absence of the witness by admitting testimony in proof of the signature of the witness to the will. When it is attempted to prove the will by proof of the signature of the subscribing witness, any witness is competent to testify as to his belief who will swear that he knows or would recognize the handwriting; the source of his own knowledge being a question for investigation and going entirely to the credit and weight to be given his evidence. Civ. Code 1895, § 5248. While the testimony which was admitted did not in so many words say that the witness "knows or would recognize the handwriting," yet a reasonable interpretation of the testimony will admit of no other construction than that the witness meant that he knew or would recognize the handwriting. If it had been desired to press him further upon the extent or source of his information, it would have been competent upon cross-examination to do so; but, in the absence of anything further, we think the testimony shows upon its face that it was admissible in evidence for the purpose offered, and, after admission, its credit was for the jury.

2. Ann Willis, a nonexpert witness, testified, with respect to the sanity of the testator: "I judged his mind was good." This testimony was objected to upon the ground that it was an expression of opinion of a nonexpert witness, without stating the facts upon which the opinion was based. It appears from the testimony of the witness that she resided on the testator's place and was acquainted with him. She further testified, in substance, as follows: "All his business he pretty much looked after himself. He gave directions. He had a business transaction the day before he died concerning a barrel of whisky. He appeared all right. He closed the transaction by writing a paper and giving it to the gentleman with whom he had the conversation, and told him to carry it to somebody in Leesburg. Mr. Clegg wrote the paper himself, and died the next day." J. A. McDonald, another nonexpert witness, testified: "I talked with him. He was all right." This evidence was objected to upon the ground that it was an expression of opinion relating to the mental condition of the testator, without stating the facts upon which the opinion was based. An examination of McDonald's testimony shows that he was a neighbor of testator, lived about a mile from him, that he had seen him just a few days before his death, and had had a conversation with him about his farm. The testator told the witness that he was going to town, and afterwards he saw him on his way to town two or three times. He afterwards left home and went to Albany, remained a few days under treatment, and came back home. Witness was working for the testator at the time, and saw him frequently. He says the testator attended to his business himself and gave directions himself; that there was no difference between the general way of transacting business then and prior to that time. The reason for the objection urged against the admissibility of the evidence is not supported by the recitals of the record. Both witnesses testified to such an acquaintance with the testator and to his demeanor in the transaction of business in the conduct of his farm as to authorize an expression of their opinions before the jury as to his mental condition. The opinions, of course, were to be taken in the light of the facts upon which they were based; and, in view of the testimony of the witnesses as a whole, we can see no error in the admission of the testimony in evidence over the objection urged thereto. See, in this connection, Proctor v. Pointer, 127 Ga. 134, 56 S. E. 111; Slaughter v. Heath, 127 Ga. 748 (6), 57 S. E. 69.

3. McBride was called by the propounder of the will to show that the testator was sane and mentally competent to execute a will. The caveators introduced, for the purpose of impeachment, a certain written contract signed by McBride, in which it was declared that the testator was non compos mentis. It was competent by way of explanation for the witness, on redirect examination, to testify that he did not know the meaning of the term "non compos mentis" as used in the paper which he signed. The question here is one of impeachment, and not whether a party is bound by the recitals of the contract which he signed.

4. One of the grounds of the motion for new trial is as follows: "Because the court erred in giving in charge to the jury the following charge, to wit: 'And it is also required, under the law, that the propounders shall produce all the witnesses to that will for the purpose of showing by them the proper execution of that will, unless those witnesses are dead, or out of the jurisdiction of the court, if they cannot show them to be dead, or without the jurisdiction of the court, or beyond the limits of the state. If they fail to show that the witnesses are dead, or cannot show that they are absolutely beyond the limits of the state or boundaries of the State, yet if they show an effort and an endeavor by diligence, a diligent effort to locate a witness, and that they cannot locate the witness, that they have been diligent in trying to ascertain the whereabouts of the witness, if it is shown that the witness is gone, and that they have been diligent in ascertaining the residence of said witness, if they failed to do so after making such diligent search, that would be sufficient accounting for the absence of such witness under the law.'" For the reasons indicated in the first division of this opinion, the foregoing is a correct proposition of law, and it appears to be applicable to the facts as indicated by the record.

Another ground of the motion for new trial is as follows: "Because the court, after giving in charge the following, to wit: 'In the propounding of a will, the burden of the proof is upon the propounder (that is, in this case, upon those who are setting it up, the execution, those affirming it to be the will of V. A. Clegg), to show all the facts necessary to make a good will, and this includes not only the fact of execution, but that the will is the free act of a man competent under the law to make a will. Those are necessary, gentlemen, in setting up and propounding a will in common form'—erred in qualifying the same, under the contention of caveator that greater proof of the knowledge of the contents by the testator was necessary in this case, the capacity of the testator being involved as follows: 'While that is true, if it is shown by satisfactory proof, the execution of the will by the testator, the signing of it, and that the testator could read and write and knew the contents of the will, so far as knowing the contents of the will on the part of the testator, that would be sufficient to carry the burden in that respect; if they can show the execution, that it is the signature of the testator, and that the testator was present, who was competent to read and write, nothing else appearing, that would be sufficient to carry the burden, so far as knowing the contents of the will is concerned.' This ruling is also correct. See, in this connection, Slaughter v. Heath, 127 Ga. 748 (9), 57 S. E. 69.

5. The eighteenth ground of the motion for new trial complains that the court erred in excluding upon the ground of irrelevancy, upon objection being urged, certain letters of administration granted upon the estate of the testator to his daughter, together with the petition for administration, signed by the attorneys of the applicant, and also the administrator's bond filed by the administrator. It was urged that the evidence was material as a circumstance tending to show that the court of ordinary had denied the probate of the will of V. A. Clegg by granting letters of administration; that it was the judgment of a court having jurisdiction of the subject-matter, and was notice to the world that said Clegg died intestate. The nineteenth ground of the motion for new trial complained of a like ruling of the court in excluding from evidence a certain paper which was signed by the attorney of the daughter of the testator, addressed to S. B. Brown, the caveator, requesting Brown to pay certain amounts of money to certain parties designated as creditors of the estate of V. A. Clegg, the testator. There was no error in excluding either of these papers from evidence. Neither was in the slightest degree material upon any question raised upon the application to prove the will in solemn form.

6. The court refused, upon application of the caveator, to charge the following written request: "The law requires that the testator must sign the will in the presence of the attesting witnesses, or the testator must acknowledge the signing of the will in the presence of the subscribing witnesses. If it appears from the evidence in the case that Clegg signed the will not in the presence of the attesting witnesses, or one of the attesting witnesses, then it would not have been executed according to law, and could not be probated in solemn form, but your finding should be against the will. The law requires that there should be three attesting witnesses, and that the testator should have signed in their presence. In investigation of the question of whether or not a testator is of sound mind, if it should appear that at any particular time the insanity of the testator has been shown, then the presumption of law is that this condition of insanity continues until this presumption is rebutted by satisfactory proof." This request contains at least one inaccurate expression which justified the court in refusing to give it in charge. The court was requested to charge: "If it appears from the evidence in the case that Clegg signed the will not in the presence of the attesting witnesses, or of one of the attesting witnesses, then it would not have been executed according to law, and could not be probated in solemn form, but your finding should be against the will." This is not a correct statement of the law. The witnesses need not have seen the testator sign the will. It would have been sufficient if all of the witnesses in the presence of each other, and in the presence of the testator, signed the will, after he had signed it, upon his acknowledgment of having signed it, although they did not see him affix his signature. Such an execution would have complied with the terms of the statute. Civ. Code 1895, § 3272. See, in this connection, Beall v. Mann, 5 Ga. 456-459. The request was not so qualified as would have authorized its submission to the jury.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 174)

BRUNSWICK & B. R. CO. v. HOODENPYLE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 8, 1907.)

1. RAILROADS — FRIGHTENING HORSES — UNUSUAL NOISES.

A railway company is not legally responsible for producing noises which are unusual, or greater than is customary in the running of its locomotive and cars, unless such noises are unnecessary. Morgan v. Central Railroad, 77 Ga. 788; Georgia Railway & Electric Co. v. Joiner, 120 Ga. 905, 48 S. E. 336, and citations.

Where, however, a petition alleged, in substance, that those in charge of a locomotive being operated on the road of the defendant company caused great and unusual volumes of steam to be suddenly emitted from the locomotive, which made a loud and unusual noise, and enveloped plaintiff's horse, being driven near by on a public street of a city, thereby greatly frightening the animal; that by reason of the attempt of the horse in its fright to run away, and the endeavor of plaintiff's driver to prevent it, a portion of the wagon was backed upon defendant's track; that, notwithstanding those in charge of the locomotive saw the wagon on the track, the frightened condition of the horse, the inability of the driver to control the animal, and the great peril of plaintiff, who, on account of a sudden jerk of the wagon by the horse in its fright, had fallen down in the wagon and was unable to extricate himself from the contents of the vehicle and alight therefrom, and though the locomotive was being run so slowly that it could easily have been stopped before reaching the wagon, such employees made no effort to stop the locomotive, but ran the same against plaintiff's wagon before the horse could be made to pull it from the track, thereby violently throwing plaintiff to the ground and greatly injuring him in the particulars described; and that the defendant company was not only negligent because of the emitting of the steam in the manner and under the circumstances set forth, but was also negligent because of the failure to stop the locomotive before it struck the wagon—held, that the petition was not open to general demurrer on the ground that it did not allege that the noise made by the escaping steam was unnecessary.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 41, Railroads, § 1110.]

2. ERROR, WRIT OF—RECORD—REVIEW—RULINGS ON EVIDENCE.

Even if in any event the asking of leading questions and the admission of the answers thereto is cause for a new trial, the mere propounding of such questions is not, when it does not appear what, if any, were the answers thereto. City of Rome v. Stewart, 116 Ga. 738, 42 S. E. 1011, and citations. See, also, Phinazee v. Bunn, 123 Ga. 230, 51 S. E. 300.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 2899.]

3. EVIDENCE—HEARSAY.

When the plaintiff, upon being asked why he left a place where he was being treated by specialists, answered, "Because they could do nothing for me," the answer was not objectionable as being hearsay.

4. WRIT OF ERROR—ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR—OBJECTIONS TO EVIDENCE.

An assignment of error upon the admission of specified evidence as a whole was not well taken when some of such evidence was admissible. Collins Park R. Co. v. Ware, 112 Ga. 663, 37 S. E. 975 (3).

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 3033.]

5. EVIDENCE—OPINION EVIDENCE.

"The opinion of a witness is not admissible in evidence when all the facts and circumstances are capable of being clearly detailed and described so that the jurors may be able readily to form correct conclusions therefrom." Mayor of Milledgeville v. Wood, 114 Ga. 370, 40 S. E. 239; O'Neill Mfg. Co. v. Harris, 127 Ga. 640, 56 S. E. 739, and cases cited.

6. ERROR, WRIT OF—REVIEW.

Where the opinion of a witness, under the rule just stated, was inadmissible, the ruling of the court in rejecting it will be sustained, though based on another and insufficient, or even wrong, reason.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 3413.]

7. APPEAL—REVIEW.

It was not cause for a new trial that the court declined to permit the defendant's counsel, on cross-examination of the plaintiff, to propound to him the following question: "Did you not notice this locomotive pop off down there half an hour before that?" Even if the question had been allowed and had been answered in the affirmative, the answer would not have shown that the locomotive was then emitting steam in the same manner and in such volumes as it was when plaintiff's horse was frightened.

8. TRIAL—REMARKS OF COURT.

The court did not err in stating the contentions of the plaintiff. This is especially clear in view of the amendment to the petition, the effect of which was to make it allege that the defendant company owned, and, at the time of the occurrence complained of, was operating on its track, the engine and car which struck the plaintiff.

9. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS.

The instructions of the court to the jury as to the contentions of the defendant were not such as to lead "the jury to infer that defendant admitted causing the accident and the consequent injury to plaintiff." Nor were these instructions such as to place "upon defendant a burden not imposed by the declaration nor the law"; that is, of showing that the noise made by the escaping steam was necessary.

10. RAILROADS—INJURIES AT CROSSING—INSTRUCTIONS.

The court charged: "So that when an injury is shown to have been sustained by a person by the running of the cars or the locomotives of a railroad company, the presumption of law is that they were negligent, and that presumption remains until the railroad company introduces evidence and shows, or shows by evidence introduced, that it was not negligent." This charge was not fairly subject to the exception that it "probably led the jury to believe that it was necessary to rebut this presumption by the evidence introduced by the defendant, and that they were not allowed to consider evidence introduced by plaintiff to determine whether this presumption had been overcome." The words "or shows by evidence introduced," used by the court, clearly indicated that the evidence introduced by plaintiff should be considered by the jury on the point in question.

11. DAMAGES—AMOUNT.

In view of the evidence for the plaintiff as to the extent of his injuries and the pain suffered by him in consequence thereof, this court cannot say that the verdict was so excessive as to require a new trial.

12. RAILROADS—INJURY AT CROSSING.

The verdict was not without evidence to support it, and the court did not err in refusing to grant a new trial.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Glynn County; T. A. Parker, Judge.

Action by J. N. Hoodenpyle against the Brunswick & Birmingham Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant brings error. Affirmed.

W. A. Wimblish, Twitty & Reese, and J. D. Sparks, for plaintiff in error. F. H. Harris, Ernest Dart, and Courtland Symmes, for defendant in error.

FISH, C. J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 234)

LOUISVILLE & N. R. CO. et al. v. HURT.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 10, 1907.)

ACTIONS—MISJOINDER OF CAUSES—PETITION.

The petition, when properly construed, set forth two separate and distinct causes of action, one of them arising ex contractu and the other ex delicto, and was subject to demurrer on the ground that there was a misjoinder of causes of action.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 1, Action, §§ 469-489.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Gordon County; A. W. Fite, Judge.

Action by J. F. Hurt against the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Reversed.

Julian F. Hurt sued the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company and the Atlanta, Knoxville & Northern Railway Company, alleging that the former company, desiring to complete its line of railroad through the county of Gordon, and acting under the charter of the latter company, and with its knowledge, permission, and consent, sent out agents for the purpose of procuring rights of way; that said agents approached the plaintiff, who represented himself and his sister, Mrs. Newman, and proposed, if plaintiff and his sister would give the company a right of way through their lands in the county named, that, in return for such concession, the company would locate one of its depots and stations on said land, and a town would grow up around it, and, in this way, the value of the land of plaintiff would be greatly enhanced; that believing such an arrangement would be of advantage, and not knowing just where the line of road would run, the plaintiff and his sister executed and delivered deeds conveying rights of way to the Louisville Property Company, a subsidiary corporation of the first-named defendant for the purpose of acquiring and holding real estate that it might need in the construction of its railroad. While petitioner does charge that the agents of the defendant intentionally misled him, it is charged that he believed the statements and acted upon them, and would never have made the deed but for such statements, and that to repudiate the statements would amount to a fraud. The petition charges that the agent of the defendant located the line of road partly on the lands of the plaintiff and partly on the lands of his sister, and have graded and constructed the same ready for the laying of the track, and absolutely refuse to locate a station or depot either on the land of himself or of his sister. The land taken by the railroad amounts to two acres, and is worth at least $100 per acre. In grading the line, the plaintiff was further damaged $500 by the diversion of the waters of a creek and by the manner in which the culverts were constructed. To this petition each of the defendants filed separate demurrers, both general and special. In each of the demurrers the point is made that there is a misjoinder of causes of actions; there being two causes of action alleged, one arising out of contract and the other out of tort. The demurrers were overruled, and the defendants excepted. The trial resulted in a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendants excepted also to a judgment overruling a motion for a new trial.

D. W. Blair, F. A. Cantrell, and F. C. Tate, for plaintiffs in error. T. W. Skelley and R. J. & J. McCamy, for defendant in error.

COBB, P. J. (after stating the facts as above). It is conceded by counsel that, under the ruling in Atlanta, Knoxville & Northern Railway Co. v. Newman, 128 Ga. 281, 57 S. E. 514, the petition set forth no cause of action against the Atlanta, Knoxville & Northern Railway Company. The judgment, therefore, will be reversed in any event so far as that company is concerned. Treating the petition as one in which suit against the Louisville & Nashville Railway Company alone is brought, is it subject to the objection that it sets forth two causes of action, one ex contractu and the other delicto, and is therefore subject to demurrer upon the ground that there is a misjoinder of causes of action? The concluding paragraphs of the petition unquestionably set forth a cause of action ex delicto. This is conceded. The question is: What is the character of the cause of action set forth in the first part of the petition, which relates to the agreement to build a depot and establish a station on the land of the plaintiff? The definite allegation of the petition is that the defendant, through its authorized agents, agreed to do this. If they did, the undertaking amounted to a contract between the parties. They have refused to do it, and hence there has been a breach of the contract, and damages are claimed for this wrong. Unquestionably, if the agreement between the railroad company and the plaintiff was an enforceable contract, the plaintiff, in an action ex contractu, could recover damages for its breach. But counsel say that their petition, properly construed, is not brought for a breach of the contract. Their contention is that the defendant obtained the plaintiff's land by fraudulent misrepresentations, and that they have a right to bring an action for damages and make it pay for the land taken. Counsel do not characterize the form of action which they claim the petition sets forth; but in the way in which it is described by them it must be considered in the nature of an action 'for deceit—a cause of action made up out of the two elements of fraud and injury. The basis of the cause of action, whatever it may be, is the contract. The right of action of the plaintiff must therefore be one that can be enforced either in an action ex contractu for a breach of the contract, or in an action for a tort arising out of a breach of some duty which the contract imposes. As was said by presiding Justice Lumpkin, in Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. v. Spinks, 104 Ga. 695, 30 S. E. 968: "Every person who makes a contract of any kind is, of course, under a duty of performing it; but it would never do to hold that every breach of a civil contract, though necessarily in a sense involving a breach of the duty thereby imposed, would give rise to an action ex delicto." In order to sustain that part of the petition which relates to the agreement to locate a station, it will be necessary to construe the suit as a cause of action for deceit, or in the nature thereof. Before this can be done it must appear that there was actual fraud in the statements relied on. The petition expressly negatives intentional fraud. We do not think that the petition can be properly construed as setting forth a cause of action as for a deceit. It is an action for the damages resulting from a failure to comply with the contract. There is no duty alleged growing out of the contract, except merely the duty of performance in manner and form as the contract provides for. If an action of tort would lie in this case, then an action of tort would lie in any case where the vendee of the land refuses to pay the purchase money. Properly construed, the petition sets forth two causes of action, one ex contractu and the other ex delicto, and was subject to the demurrers urged against it.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 246)

GIDDENS et al. v. GIDDENS.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 12, 1907.)

NEW TRIAL—GROUNDS.

No complaint being made that any error of law was committed upon the trial, the only grounds of a motion for a new trial being that the verdict was contrary to law and to the evidence, and without evidence to support it, and the evidence, though conflicting, being amply sufficient to authorize the verdict, there was no abuse of discretion in refusing a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, New Trial, § 144.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Talbot County; W. A. Little, Judge.

Action between Orrle Giddens and others and Belle Giddens. From the judgment, Orrle Giddens and others bring error. Affirmed.

J. J. Bull, for plaintiffs in error. Persons & McGehee, for defendant in error.

FISH, C. J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 271)

MARTIN v. HUNTER.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 14, 1907.)

INJUNCTION.

There was no abuse of discretion in granting an injunction in this case.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Ware County; T. A. Parker, Judge.

Action by W. A. Martin against J. L. Hunter. From a judgment, Martin brings error. Affirmed.

W. T. Dickerson and Wilson, Bennett & Lambdin, for plaintiff in error. S. C. Townsend, for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 232)

HINTON v. BREWER.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 10, 1907.)

INSANE PERSONS—INQUISITION—COSTS.

One who, after suing out a commission of lunacy, voluntarily dismisses the proceeding, is not compelled to pay the costs which have accrued therein as a condition precedent to instituting a second proceeding of the same character relative to the same person and involving the same questions which were presented by the first.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 27, Insane Persons, § 39.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Elbert County; H. M. Holden, Judge.

Action between E. E. Hinton and S. S. Brewer. From the judgment, Hinton brings error. Affirmed.

See 57 S. E. 748.

Z. B. Rogers and P. P. Proffitt, for plaintiff in error. C. P. Harris, for defendant in error.

FISH, C. J. The sole question presented by the record in this case is whether the costs of a former proceeding to obtain an adjudication that a person is of unsound mind, and the appointment of a guardian for such person, must be paid by the petitioner in such proceeding as a condition precedent to his instituting a second proceeding for the same purposes. Under the provisions of Civ. Code 1895, § 5043, a plaintiff cannot recommence his suit where it has been nonsuited, dismissed or discontinued, without the prepayment of the costs already incurred. Is a proceeding for a commission of lunacy a suit within the meaning of the provisions of that section? In our opinion it is not. A proceeding for a commission of lunacy is begun in the interest of the public and the person alleged to be of unsound mind; and, if voluntarily discontinued, costs should not be imposed upon the petitioner, if the proceeding was instituted in good faith. We quote from 22 Cyc. 1137: "In the absence of statutory regulation, the matter of the allowance of costs in original lunacy proceedings rests in the equitable discretion of the court having jurisdiction, and the same rule obtains in respect of costs upon a traverse or supersedeas of the inquisition. Where there is a finding of insanity, the costs of the inquiry are ordinarily to be paid by the insane person or his estate; it being considered that these are in the nature of necessary expenses incurred for the benefit of the party and for which he or his estate is impliedly bound. Where the proceedings result in a finding of sanity, costs will not be allowed as of course against the prosecutor, if the proceedings were commenced in good faith and for the supposed benefit of the alleged lunatic; but where proceedings are promoted without probable cause or maliciously, the prosecutor will be held liable for the costs." Civ. Code 1895, § 2583, provides: "It shall be the duty of each ordinary of this state to draw his warrant upon the treasurer of his county for such sum or sums as shall be actually necessary or requisite to defray the expenses of trying every commission of lunacy, and of carrying or conveying an insane person from such county to the State Lunatic Asylum, when such insane person shall be lawfully committed to such asylum: provided, that no money shall be drawn from the county treasury for the purposes herein set forth, where the estate of such insane person is sufficient to defray such expenses." It would seem from the language of this section that the costs of trying commissions of lunacy should be paid out of the treasury of the county, except where the person as to whom such proceeding is had is found to be insane and his estate is sufficient to defray such expenses. But whether or not this be a proper construction of this section, or whether the petitioner for a commission of lunacy is, under given circumstances, liable for the costs of the proceeding, we hold that he is not bound to pay the costs of such a proceeding, voluntarily dismissed by him, as a condition precedent to the institution of a second proceeding of like character against the same person whose mental condition was the subject for inquiry in the first.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 227)

WHEELER v. FIDELITY & CASUALTY CO. OF NEW YORK.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 12, 1907.)

INSURANCE—ACCIDENT POLICY—ACTION—PETITION.

The petition sets forth no cause of action, and was properly dismissed on demurrer.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 23, Insurance, § 1164.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Chatham County; Geo. T. Cann, Judge.

Action by F. F. Wheeler against the Fidelity & Casualty Company of New York. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Wheeler sued the Fidelity & Casualty Company, alleging, that the defendant was indebted to him in a stated sum on a policy of accident insurance. The policy insured the plaintiff against "disability or death resulting directly, and independently of all other causes, from bodily injuries sustained through external, violent, and accidental means (suicide, sane or insane, not included)." The policy, in different clauses, made stipulations in reference to the terms upon which the insured would or would not be entitled to indemnity; such clauses containing such expressions as: "If said injuries shall," etc. The policy also contained the following clause: "In case a person other than the insured or his legal representatives is specifically named as beneficiary, then, and not otherwise, this policy shall also, in consideration of the premium, insure the person so named as beneficiary against disability or death, resulting directly, and independently of all other causes, from bodily injuries sustained through external, violent, and accidental means (suicide, sane or insane, not included), and received by said person while riding as a passenger in or on a public conveyance propelled by steam, electricity, compressed air or cable, and provided for passenger service, including a passenger elevator." It was alleged that Lela Wheeler, wife of the plaintiff, was specifically named as the beneficiary in the policy, and that she died as the result of a gunshot wound accidentally inflicted. The shot that killed her was fired from a passing street passenger car, propelled by electricity. The conductor of the car got into an altercation with a passenger, and shot at the passenger in the car, and the bullet struck the plaintiff's wife while she was going up the front steps of her home on the street along which the car was passing. It was alleged that the soliciting agent of the defendant, at the time the policy was sold, represented that the plaintiff would be indemnified in the sum named in the policy in the event that his wife should die as the result of an external, violent, or accidental means, whether received on a car or otherwise; that the agent stated that it was a new form of insurance which furnished greater protection than any policy that had ever been issued; that this was an inducement held out to the plaintiff to take the policy. By amendment it was alleged that at the time the plaintiff paid the renewal premium the defendant was issuing two forms of policies for the same premium, in one of which the liability was not confined and limited, and in the other of which it was confined and limited by express words; and that the plaintiff paid the renewal premium upon the faith of the representation made to him that the policy covered all of the injuries of the nature and character of those which resulted in the death of his wife. The defendants filed a general demurrer; and also a special demurrer to that portion of the petition relating to the representations of the soliciting agent, upon the ground that whatever representations might have been made were merged into the written contract, and the terms of the writing could not be varied by parol testimony.

R. R. Richards, for plaintiff in error. Garrard & Meldrim, for defendant in error.

COBB, P. J. (after stating the facts as above). If the stipulation in the policy providing for indemnity to the insured for loss resulting from the death or disability of his wife is interpreted as it stands alone, there can be but little question that under the terms of the stipulation there was to be no liability upon the company unless the death or disability resulted from an injury to the wife while she was a passenger upon a car or an elevator. The words are clear and unequivocal. This clause in the policy is entirely free from ambiguity. But it is said this clause should be interpreted in the light of the entire contract, and this is the correct rule. And if there is any other clause or stipulation in the policy which would enlarge the liability of the company to the plaintiff growing out of accidents to the wife, then the company would be liable to the extent to which the terms of the policy enlarged the liability, but no further. The insured is indemnified against disability and death resulting from bodily injury sustained through external, violent, or accidental means, except in those cases where the disability or death may result from causes made the subject of express exceptions in the policy. The policy then asserts that "if said injuries" shall disable the insured, etc., the company will pay a certain amount per week, "if said bodily injuries" are received by the insured while riding as a passenger in a public conveyance, etc., the amount paid to be stated amounts, etc.; and again, "if said injuries" shall not wholly disable the insured, the indemnity shall be paid in a prescribed manner. And in other clauses there are different stipulations in reference to the indemnity, preceded by the words, "if said injuries." The clause containing the stipulation upon which the present suit is based follows all of these clauses. It is argued, because there is in that clause the expression, "This policy shall also, in consideration of the premiums, insure the person so named as beneficiary against disability and death," etc., that all stipulations preceding this clause are carried into it, and authorize a claim of indemnity in the event of the death or disability of the beneficiary under the same conditions where such claim could be made by the insured himself; that the subject-matter of the policy is indemnity against death or disability by accidental means of every character, except those expressly excepted, of both the insured and the beneficiary; and that, when the policy is construed as a whole, the insured is indemnified against the death or disability of himself, and also against the death or disability of the beneficiary. We cannot agree to this view. While we recognize the rule that a policy of insurance must be construed most strongly against the insurer, still the words of the policy must be given the meaning which they ordinarily bear; and where it is manifest that it was the intention of the insurer that liability should attach only in given circumstances, the law will uphold the contract according to its true intent and import. We do not think there is any ambiguity whatever in the clause of the policy providing for indemnity resulting from death or disability of the beneficiary. Nor do we think there is any stipulation in the policy which can be properly held to vary or alter the plain and evident meaning of the terms in this clause. The writing being unambiguous, parol evidence as to what was said by the parties at the time it was executed will not be admitted to vary or alter the terms of the writing. The petition set forth no cause of action, and was properly dismissed on demurrer.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 326)

HOLTZENDORFF v. DE RENNE

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 10, 1907.)

NEW TRIAL — INSTRUCTIONS — EXPRESSION OF OPINION.

Where the court, in its charge to the jury, expresses an opinion upon a material question of fact as to which the evidence is conflicting, it is cause for a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, New Trial, §§ 57-61.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Chatham County; Geo. T. Cann, Judge.

W. J. De Renne filed a distress warrant on the property of Nannie L. Young. S. T. Holtzendorff interposed a claim. Judgment finding the property subject, and claimant brings error. Reversed.

Shelby Myrick, for plaintiff in error. W. G. Charlton and Geo. W. Owens, for defendant in error.

FISH, C. J. A distress warrant in favor of W. J. De Renne against Nannie L. Young was levied on certain furniture and household goods, which were claimed by S. T. Holtzendorff. Upon the trial of the issue as to whether or not the property was subject to the distress warrant, the evidence submitted in behalf of the claimant tended to show that, 24 days prior to the levy, the claimant purchased the property levied upon from the defendant, Mrs. Young, and received from her a bill of sale to the same, and very soon afterwards moved it from the house where it then was to another house, where he rented it to Mrs. Young's mother, who was in possession of it at the time of the levy. The evidence in behalf of the plaintiff tended to show that Mrs. Young was in possession of the property for some time prior to the alleged sale, subsequently thereto, and at the time of the levy. So there was, therefore, a sharp conflict in the evidence as to whether or not Mrs. Young retained possession of the property after the alleged sale by her to the claimant. The court instructed the jury as follows: "Whether the retention of possession by the vendor in this case, Mrs. Young, of the property, has been sufficiently explained to remove the presumption of fraud, is a question for the jury to determine. * * * The possession of Mrs. Young of a whole or part of the property sold by her to Holtzendorff after judgment against her and at the time of the levy is presumptively a possession as owner." The jury returned a verdict, finding the property subject and a stated amount of damages against the claimant for filing the claim for delay only. The claimant made a motion for a new trial, which was overruled, and he excepted.

Error was assigned in the motion upon the above-quoted instructions of the court, on the ground that the court therein assumed that the question of possession in the defendant, Mrs. Young, was not a disputed fact, and that the language used by the court amounted to an expression of opinion that possession of the property in question by Mrs. Young had been actually shown after the time claimant contended that he had purchased it from her. We think the assignment of error was well taken. Instructing the jury that it was for them to determine "whether the retention of possession" of the property by Mrs. Young, after the alleged sale of the same by her to the claimant, had been sufficiently explained to remove the presumption of fraud, was equivalent to an expression of opinion by the court that Mrs. Young had retained possession after the alleged sale. The same is true of the instruction that: "The possession of Mrs. Young of a whole or part of the property sold by her to Holtzendorff after judgment against her, and at the time of the levy, is presumptively a possession by the owner." The court therefore should have granted a new trial. While other questions are made in the record, under the view that we have taken of the case, it is unnecessary to deal with them.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 214)

HARLEY v. RIVERSIDE MILLS.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 9, 1907.)

RELEASE—CANCELLATION—RETURN OF BENEFITS.

One who, for valuable considerations, including the payment to him of a given sum of money, has released another from all further liability for personal injuries sustained by the releasor, cannot, even upon legal grounds, obtain a rescission of such contract of release, and recover upon the original cause of action, without first restoring or offering to restore, to the releasee what he paid for such release.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 42, Release, § 45.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Richmond County; H. C. Hammond, Judge.

Action by Harry H. Harley against the Riverside Mills. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

B. B. McCowen, for plaintiff in error. C. Henry and R. S. Cohen, for defendant in error.

FISH, C. J. Harry H. Harley brought an action against the Riverside Mills for damages from personal injuries alleged to have been sustained by him on February 8, 1902, by reason of the negligence of the defendant in furnishing to the plaintiff, its employé, a machine with which to perform the work assigned to him which was defective and not suited to the purpose for which it was used. The petition was dismissed on demurrer, and the plaintiff excepted. In sustaining the demurrer the court passed the following order: "It appearing that petitioner had received a certain sum from defendant's company in payment of the damages received, and had brought suit against said defendant company after having signed a release without restoring to said company the amount received in settlement, it is ordered that the demurrer filed in said case be sustained." So much of the petition as bears on the question presented was as follows: "That defendant corporation recognized its obligation to petitioner, and through its superintendent, James H. Vivian, obtained a release for said liability from petitioner on or about the 18th of February, 1902, under promise to take petitioner back in their employment as soon as he was able to knock about at his half regular salary of $1.40 per day until well, and then to give petitioner employment at $1.40 per day as long as he should live." In connection with this allegation, there was attached, as an exhibit to the petition, a copy of the release contract, executed by plaintiff on February 18, 1902, in the presence of two witnesses, one of them a notary public. This contract, after reciting that the plaintiff on February 8, 1902, had the misfortune to lose a portion of his left hand on a planer in the defendant's shop, contained the following language: "Whereas the Riverside Mills have agreed to pay all doctors' bills in connection with said accident and also pay me half time, namely seventy cents per day, until I am discharged by their physician, now, therefore, this indenture witnesseth that in consideration of the payment of all doctors' bills in connection with said accident, and the further payment of half time to me by the Riverside Mills, until I am discharged by their physician, the receipt of first payment of which half time is hereby acknowledged, namely $4.20 for six days' lost time week ending February 15, 1902, I have remised, released, and forever discharged, and by these presents do * * * remise, release, and forever discharge the Riverside Mills * * * of and from all * * * cause and causes of action, suits, debts, * * * damages, * * * claims and demands whatsoever in law and equity, which against the said Riverside Mills, I ever had, now have, or which I * * * may have, * * * by reason of the accident which happened to me on or about February 8, 1902, as aforesaid." The petition further alleged: "That in recognition of said agreement [the alleged agreement made with plaintiff by defendant's superintendent], petitioner was permitted to return to work, and received his half pay, until about well, when petitioner, without reasonable cause or fault on his part, was discharged, in violation of said agreement, thereby rendering the release signed by petitioner null and void." There was a prayer that the release be declared of no effect, and that plaintiff recover a stated amount of damages on account of his injuries.

Counsel for plaintiff in error contends, in his brief, that the acknowledgment of "having received $4.20 for six days' lost time," contained in the contract of release, "should [not] be construed into an acknowledgment that he had not earned it, when it entered into the general average of his pay while convalescent. The release does not say for lost time to date, but only for time lost to the 15th, when the contract was entered into on the 18th, and after he had according to the petition taken up his light duties at the mill. The idea was to average his pay while disabled at 70 cents per day, including the time lost when he earned nothing, to the time when well and earning almost full pay; the $4.20 received being for salary, and not in settlement of his claim for damages." The essential weakness of this contention consists in the fact that counsel seek to construe the release contract in connection with allegations as to a promise made by defendant's superintendent, on or about the time that this contract was signed, which promise does not appear in the written instrument. It is, perhaps, not material; but we may say, in passing, that the statement that the contract was entered into after the plaintiff, "according to the petition, had taken up his light duties at the mill," is not supported by the petition, as it fails to state when the plaintiff "was permitted to return to work, and received his half pay." This contention of counsel as to the construction to be placed upon the contract of release is not supported by the language of that contract, which states that the $4.20 received by the plaintiff was for six days' lost time during the week ending February 15, 1902, and in consideration of the payment of this sum of money, and the assumption of the other specific obligations by the defendant, the plaintiff executed the release. Nor does it appear from the contract of release that it was obtained by defendant under its promise to take plaintiff back into its employment, as soon as he was able to "knock about," at half his regular wages, until well, and then to give him employment for the balance of his life at $1.40 per day. And, of course, such parol promise or agreement, even if made contemporaneously with the execution of the written contract, by defendant's superintendent, or any one else representing it, could not be added to the written contract of release. The petition, taken in connection with the release contract, which is made a part thereof, when properly construed, is an effort to rescind such contract, for no legal reason, and without restoring, or offering to restore, to defendant, the other party to the contract, the money plaintiff had received by virtue of the same; and then, with this contract out of the way, to recover damages for the injuries sustained by plaintiff. Even if the plaintiff had, by the allegations of his petition, shown a legal reason for a rescission of the contract, such as fraud in its procurement, he could not have obtained a rescission, without refunding, or offering to refund, the money which he had received thereunder. East Tenn. Va. & Ga. Ry. Co. v. Hayes, 83 Ga. 558, 10 S. E. 350; Id., 89 Ga. 264, 15 S. E. 861; Western & Atlantic R. Co. v. Burke, 97 Ga. 560, 25 S. E. 498; Strodder v. Souther Granite Co., 94 Ga. 626, 19 S. E. 1022; Id., 99 Ga. 596, 27 S. E. 174; Bowden v. Achor, 95 Ga. 243, 22 S. E. 254. It follows that there was no error in sustaining the demurrer to the petition.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 257)

STOCKING v. MOURY.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 13, 1907.)

VENDOR AND PURCHASER — PURCHASE-MONEY NOTE—ACTION—EXECUTION—AFFIDAVIT OF ILLEGALITY.

Where land was sold, a promissory note given for the purchase money by the vendee, bond for title executed by the vendor, the note subsequently indorsed by the payee and transferred to a third party, who, upon the maturity of the same, brought suit thereon and recovered a general judgment against the maker and indorser, with a special lien on the land, and the execution issued upon such judgment was levied upon the land, it was not a good ground of illegality to such execution that, after the rendition of the judgment, the land had been conveyed by the payee of the note, who then held the legal title thereto, to the other defendant, the maker of the note, in order that the execution might be levied thereon as the latter's property, in accordance with the provisions of Civ. Code 1895, § 5432.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Gwinnett County; C. H. Brand, Judge.

On levy of execution by David Moury, A. N. Stocking filed affidavit of illegality. Judgment for plaintiff in execution, and claimant brings error. Affirmed.

See 57 S. E. 704.

D. K. Johnston, for plaintiff in error. H. W. Dent and J. A. Perry, for defendant in error.

EVANS, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 255)

SISTRUNK et al. v. PENDLETON, Judge.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 13, 1907.)

1. EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF — MANDAMUS — REFUSAL TO SIGN BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

In passing upon an application for mandamus to compel a judge to certify a bill of exceptions which is presented in proper form, this court will not look into the merits of any assignment of error therein made; but mandamus will not lie to compel the trial judge to sign and certify a bill which is so defective in form as to necessitate a dismissal of the writ of error in case it should be certified and brought to this court.

2. SAME—SUFFICIENCY.

It appearing that persons who are essential parties to a bill of exceptions sued out in this case are neither named nor designated as such in the bill presented, and that the only attempt to do so is by using with reference to them the words "et al." and "tenants," following the name of one who is a proper defendant in error, such bill of exceptions is fatally defective for want of necessary parties. Farr v. Farr, 113 Ga. 577, 38 S. E. 962; Orr v. Webb, 112 Ga. 806, 38 S. E. 98.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Application by J. E. Slstrunk and others for writ of mandamus against J. I. Pendleton, Judge. Writ denied.

BECK, J. Mandamus nisi denied. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 287)

SMITH et al. v. MAYOR AND COUNCIL OF MACON.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 10, 1907.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

The decision in the case of Toney v. Macon, 119 Ga. 83, 46 S. E. 80, upon review, is adhered to and approved.

2. SAME—EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS.

That provision of the act of 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 579), amending the charter of the city of Macon, which authorizes the city authorities to determine which of the existing roads and alleys in the territory annexed to the city by the act shall be declared to be public streets of the city, does not abridge the privileges and immunities of the citizens of the annexed territory, nor deprive them of property without due process of law, nor deny to them the equal protection of the law, within the meaning of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 9, Constitutional Law, §§ 807, 683.]

3. STATUTES—TITLE OF ACT.

The act of 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 579), amending the charter of the city of Macon, is not, for the reasons urged in the present case, subject to the objection that it contains in the body of the same, matter variant from the title thereof.

4. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—EXTENSION OF CITY LIMITS.

The act above referred to is not unconstitutional for any reason urged against it in the present case.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Bibb County; W. H. Felton, Jr., Judge.

Action by William Smith and others against the mayor and council of the city of Macon. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs bring error. Affirmed.

Smith, and more than 50 others, in behalf of themselves and others in a similar situation that might thereafter unite with them, brought an equitable petition against the mayor and council of the city of Macon, alleging: That they are residents and owners of real estate in the territory described in the act approved August 12, 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 579), purporting to extend the limits of the city of Macon. The city authorities of Macon have issued tax executions against plaintiffs, and are proceeding to enforce the same by levy and sale, claiming the act under the authority of the act above referred to. The act of 1903 is violative of that provision in the Constitution of this state which declares: "All government, of right, originates with the people, is founded upon their will only, and is instituted solely for the good of the whole. Public officers are the trustees and servants of the people, and at all times amenable to them." Civ. Code, 1895, § 5698. The act is also violative of that provision in the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which declares: "No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." Civ. Code 1895, § 6030. The act conflicts with this provision, for the following reasons: (a) It places upon the annexed territory their proportionate part of the existing debt of the city of Macon, amounting to $900,000, when the residents thereof had no voice in the creation of the debt. (b) It imposes upon residents of the annexed territory penalties for failure to make sewer connections not imposed upon the other residents of the city. (c) It discriminates against the residents of the new territory by annexing without a vote, as was allowed under the act of 1900 (Acts 1900, p. 336), when other territory was annexed. (d) It discriminates against the residents of the annexed territory in the matter of the sale of liquor. (e) It permits the city authorities to determine which of the existing streets and alleys shall be adopted and maintained as such, thus vesting the authorities of the city with the arbitrary power to refuse to maintain any street in the annexed territory. The act also violates the Constitution of this state, for the following reasons: (a) It contains matter in the body not referred to in the title; such matter being the authority to issue bonds to the constitutional limit without a vote. The title purports to amend the charter of the city, and the body does not refer to the charter, and does not purport to amend the same. The title purports to provide for the amendment or repeal of all existing laws for extension of the corporate limits, and there is in the body no repeal of any existing law on the subject. (b) The provision of the act in reference to the sale of liquor constitutes a surrender of the police power, and is also a special law, and there is an existing general law on the subject. (c) The act authorizes the city authorities to work the county chain gang on the streets of the annexed territory, in violation of the act of November 27, 1901. Acts 1901, p. 221. (d) The act does not allow a vote by the residents of the territory to be annexed, on the question of annexation, notwithstanding a provision to that effect in the act of 1900. Acts 1900, p. 336. (e) The act provides penalties against residents of the annexed territory, not imposed on other residents of the city. The prayer was for an injunction to restrain the sale of the property of the plaintiffs under the tax executions, for general relief, and process. In an amendment allowed on November 30, 1906, it is alleged that only one street in the annexed territory has been worked, graded, or improved since the act of 1903 was passed. This street is the main thoroughfare of the territory, upon which the residents are exclusively white persons. The plaintiffs are all negroes, and the streets upon which they reside have received no attention whatever. Since the petition was filed, the property of plaintiffs has all been sold at the tax sales and bought in by the city. The prayer of the amendment is that the tax sales be set aside and the deeds thereunder canceled. There was also an amendment striking 15 of the plaintiffs. The defendants filed a motion, in the nature of a general demurrer, to dismiss the petition, because it set forth no cause of action, and there was nothing therein alleged which entitled the plaintiffs to the relief prayed. The court sustained this motion, and the plaintiffs excepted.

W. D. McNeill and J. E. Hall, for plaintiffs in error. Minter Wimberly and Jesse Harris, for defendants in error.

COBB, P. J. (after stating the facts as above). 1. Many of the questions involved in the present case were decided in the case of Toney v. Macon, 119 Ga. 83, 46 S. E. 80. We have been asked to overrule that decision, but must decline to do so. Nothing has been suggested which arouses any misgivings as to the soundness of the rulings therein made, and the decision is therefore adhered to and reaffirmed.

2. We will now deal with such questions in the present case as are not controlled by the rulings in the case above referred to. The second section of the act in question is as follows: "The mayor and council of the city of Macon shall have full power and authority, and are hereby vested with power and authority, to select, lay out, and name such of the roads and alleys in the territory hereinbefore set forth, to be adopted and known as streets and public alleys of the city of Macon. The mayor and council of the city of Macon shall not be liable in any amount for any failure to keep in repair any of the roads or alleys in said territory, unless the same shall have been first selected, named, and laid out as streets or alleys." Acts 1903, p. 581. This section simply confers upon the municipality the power, usually given to all municipalities, to determine what shall be its highways and thoroughfares. The General Assembly has the authority to establish and abolish highways, and it may delegate this authority to municipalities. Marietta Chair Co. v. Henderson, 121 Ga. 399, 49 S. E. 312. This is all that has been attempted in the act now in question. When the city authorities select an existing road or alley in the annexed territory as a street of the city, it becomes thereby an established street of the city, and cannot be thereafter vacated except in the manner prescribed by law. The effect of the act is really to authorize the city authorities to vacate such of the roads and alleys in the annexed territory as, in their discretion, they shall see proper not to select, lay out, and name as streets of the city. There can be no question as to the authority of the General Assembly to thus deal with its highways. If, however, any of the roads or alleys were established public highways at the date of the passage of the act, and the city authorities fail or refuse to select them as streets of the city, thus carrying into effect the power to vacate delegated to them, those whose property may be damaged by this act of the municipality may not be without a remedy. See, in this connection, Marietta Chair Co. v. Henderson, 121 Ga. 399-404, 49 S. E. 312. There is nothing in the act in question, in reference to the power given to the city authorities over the roads and alleys of the annexed territory, which violates the provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

3. The title to the act of 1903 is in the following words: "An act to amend the charter of the city of Macon, providing for the extension of the corporate limits of said city, and also providing for amendment or repeal of all existing laws relating to the extension of the corporate limits of the city of Macon, and for other purposes." Acts 1903, p. 579. The body of the act does not, in terms, declare that it is an amendment to the charter, but the subject-matter is such that there can be no doubt that such was the legislative purpose. It deals with matter appropriate only to an amendment to the charter. It is, in substance, an amendment to the charter, and it is entirely immaterial that it is not so declared in terms. The act authorizes the city authorities to issue bonds for the purpose of establishing a system of sewers. There is nothing in the act to indicate that these bonds were to be issued in any other manner than that prescribed by the Constitution and general laws of the state on the subject. If there is any ambiguity in the act on this subject, the doubt will be resolved by according to the General Assembly the intention to follow the Constitution. If the language, properly construed, shows a contrary intention, so much of the act as is subject to this criticism can be disregarded, and the remaining portions of the act will be upheld.

The title is broad enough to embrace the provisions in reference to the issue of bonds. It contains the words "and for other purposes," and these words authorize any legislation germane to the general purpose of the act, which was to amend the charter of the city. Mayor of Macon v. Hughes, 110 Ga. 796, 36 S. E. 247. The act of 1900 (Acts 1900, p. 336), amending the charter, was not a general law within the meaning of the Constitution which would inhibit the General Assembly from thereafter enacting another amendment to the charter providing for the annexation of described territory, and, at the same time, keep in force the act of 1900 as authority for future annexation in the manner therein prescribed. The act of 1903 provided it should not have the effect to repeal the act of 1900, except as to the territory embraced in the act of 1903. This was permissible legislation, and the title of the act was broad enough to cover it. The act distinctly stated that it was an act providing for the amendment or repeal of existing laws relating to the extension of the corporate limits. These words would authorize the legislation in section 5 (page 532) of the act, even if the words "and for other purposes" did not appear in the title. The act of 1900 is amended by the act of 1903, and also partially repealed. A partial repeal of an act in a subsequent act is an amendment of the act therein dealt with.

4. It is contended that the act of 1903 is invalid, for the reason that it authorizes the working of the county chain gang on the roads in the annexed territory, in violation of the act of 1901 (Acts 1901, p. 221). In what respect it violates the act of 1901 is not pointed out, and we are at a loss to ascertain the point intended to be raised. This general attack raises no question for decision, and, in addition to this, nothing is said in the brief of counsel on the subject. Even if the pleadings had raised any question for decision, we would treat it as abandoned. The act of 1903 is not unconstitutional for any reason urged against it in the present case.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 287)

WALKER v. HILLYER.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 10, 1907.)

JUDGMENT—PARTIES.

In a proceeding to foreclose a mortgage on realty, signed by two persons, where a plea in bar filed by one of them is admitted to be good, and the only evidence submitted is the note and mortgage, which contains a written assignment to the plaintiff, it is not error for the court to direct a verdict sustaining the plea of the defendant, which is admitted to be good, and in favor of the plaintiff for the amount due on the note and mortgage against the other defendant, and against the land embraced in the mortgage.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Floyd County; Moses Wright, Judge.

Action by J. F. Hillyer against Caleb Walker. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Henry Walker, for plaintiff in error. W. M. Henry, for defendant in error.

EVANS, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(62 W. Va. 313)

STATE v. HARDEN.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia. Sept. 5, 1907.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS—LICENSE—POWER OF MUNICIPAL AUTHORITIES.

The power reserved to the Legislature by section 46 of article 6 of the Constitution of this state [Code 1906, p. lxiii], to regulate or prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors, sustains legislation, vesting in the councils of cities and towns sole power to grant or refuse state licenses for such sales within the corporate limits thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 29, Intoxicating Liquors, § 7.]

2. SAME.

So much of section 24 of article 8 of the Constitution [Code 1906, p. lxxiv] as commits to county courts the superintendence and administration of the internal police and fiscal affairs of their counties, under such regulations as may be prescribed by law, and provides that no license for sales of intoxicating liquors in any municipal corporation shall be granted without the consent of the municipal authorities, is operative, as to the jurisdiction to grant or refuse licenses for such sales, only so long and to such extent as the Legislature, by committing to county courts such jurisdiction, makes the function a part of the police affairs of the counties.

3. STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION.

In ascertaining the intention of the people in adopting a Constitution, all parts of the Constitution must be considered, every article, section, clause, phrase, and word allowed some effect, and all parts, clauses, phrases, and words harmonized, if possible. No part or word in it can be ignored, discarded, treated as meaningless, or denied purpose and effect, unless there be irreconcilable contradiction and repugnancy.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 10, Constitutional Law, § 9.]

4. INTOXICATING LIQUORS—REGULATION.

As section 24 of article 8 [Code 1906, p. lxxiv] gives jurisdiction to county courts, under such regulations as may be prescribed by law, a construction, denying power in the Legislature to withhold, or take, from them the power to grant or refuse licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors, would render the word "regulating," in section 46 of article 6 [Code 1906, p. lxiii], useless and ineffective of any purpose, contrary to a rule of interpretation, universally observed by courts.

5. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—CONSTRUCTION BY LEGISLATURE.

A contemporaneous construction or interpretation, given to a Constitution by the Legislature, and acquiesced in by the people and the courts for a long period of time, will not be disturbed or overthrown, unless it be plainly wrong.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 10, Constitutional Laws, §§ 14, 15.]

6. SAME—INTERPRETATION OF FRAMERS.

In determining the meaning of a constitutional provision, the interpretation put upon it by its framers in drafting it, and the people in putting it into operation, as shown by existing conditions and laws, left undisturbed and expressly recognized and continued, ought to have great weight.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 10, Constitutional Law, § 13.]

7. STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION—REPEAL.

A statute revising the whole subject-matter of a former one, or a former series of statutes, becomes, by reason of its scope and purpose, to the full extent of the terms used and necessarily implied, the exclusive rule and law, governing the subject, and is therefore a substitute for the former statute or statutes, repealing such parts thereof as are inconsistent with the new act, and not a mere amendatory act, adding to or detracting from the former law.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, Statutes, § 242.]

8. SAME.

The purpose of such a statute is the provision of a new, complete, and comprehensive system of law for the government of its subject-matter, and the method of drafting and passing it is not the erection, upon former laws as a substructure, of a mere superstructure, but the laying of new foundations and the erection of a new and complete structure, using only such of the old materials as are deemed suitable, so that the work consists, not of mere alteration and remodeling, nor of exclusion, nor of the double process of exclusion and inclusion, but of inclusion only, by means of express and implied enactments and re-enactments and express and implied adoptions of existing laws.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, Statutes, § 242.]

9. SAME.

The language of such a statute, relating to a given subject within the scope and purpose of the act, is presumed to be the full and complete expression of the legislative will and intention respecting that matter; and for the law on that subject resort cannot be had to other statutes, unless the language used is incapable of conveying any meaning or has expressly or impliedly adopted them. Statutes formerly in effect relating to the same matter are not considered as laws in pari materia.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, Statutes, § 242.]

10. SAME—INTENT OF LEGISLATURE.

However awkward, informal, and unusual the language of a statute may be, the legislative will and intention manifested by it must be ascertained by the court and enforced as the law. The intention expressed is paramount to form and must have the force of law.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, Statutes, § 261.]

11. SAME.

Awkwardness, informality, and terseness of expression in a statute cannot be imputed to incompetency or lack of wisdom on the part of the Legislature, nor to the perpetration of fraud and trickery upon it.

12. SAME—PRESUMPTIONS.

An interpretation of a statute or clause thereof which gives it no function to perform, and makes it a mere repetition of another clause, must be rejected as unsound, for it is presumed that the Legislature had a purpose in using every word and clause found in a statute, and intended the terms used to be effective.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, Statutes, § 283.]

13. SAME—AMBIGUITY.

Ambiguity in a statute or other instrument consists of susceptibility of two or more meanings and uncertainty as to which was intended. Mere informality in phraseology or clumsiness of expression does not make it ambiguous, if the language imports one meaning or intention with reasonable certainty.

14. SAME—IMPLICATIONS.

That which is necessarily implied in a statute, or must be included in it in order to make the terms actually used have effect, according to their nature and ordinary meaning, is as much a part of it as if it had been declared in express terms.

15. INTOXICATING LIQUORS—LICENSES—POWERS OF TOWN.

Tested by these well-settled rules of interpretation and construction, section 35, c. 40, p. 88, of the Acts of 1891, the declared and manifest object of which was the provision of a complete system of law for the government of the town of Point Pleasant, as shown by its title and enactments, reading as follows, "The council shall prescribe, by ordinance, the manner in which licenses of all kinds shall be applied for and granted, and it shall require the payment of the taxes thereon before delivery to the person applying therefor," vests in the council of said town sole power to grant or refuse state as well as municipal licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors.

16. SAME.

The language of said section is not ambiguous, but, if it were, it could mean nothing else, when read in the light of section 40, p. 90, of the same act, showing knowledge on the part of the Legislature of an alleged previous amendment made to the charter of said town purporting to confer such authority upon the council in express term.

17. STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION.

In seeking the meaning and intent of a statute, regard must be had to its subject-matter and all the surrounding circumstances known to the Legislature.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, Statutes, § 291.]

18. SAME—PRESUMPTIONS.

The Legislature is presumed to have had full knowledge of the subject-matter of statutes passed by it.

19. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—LEGISLATIVE POWERS.

The province of the Legislature is to make and repeal laws, not to determine what is, or has been, the law, for that is judicial action within the exclusive province of the courts.

20. STATUTES — CONSTRUCTION — PRESUMPTIONS.

Courts will not presume that the Legislature, in referring to all the amendments made to the charter of a town, did not take notice of one of them, because, since the passage of the act, making such reference, its validity has been denied, for it was not within the domain of legislative action and power to pass upon the question of its validity.

McWhorter and Miller, JJ., dissenting.
(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error to Circuit Court, Mason County.

John Harden was convicted of an illegal sale of liquors, and brings error. Reversed.

L. C. Somerville, W. R. Gunn, John L. Whitten, Henry M. Russell, J. S. Spencer, and McHohan, McClintic & Mathews, for plaintiff in error. The Attorney General, L. S. Echols, Lace Marcum, and Rankin Wiley, for the State.

POFFENBARGER, J. Whether the defendant, John Harden, had a valid license to sell, at retail, spirituous liquors, wine, porter, ale, beer and drinks of a like nature, at the time he made the sale of liquor charged in the indictment against him as having been unlawfully made, is the sole question presented by this record. That he made a sale of liquor in the town of Point Pleasant, Mason county, W. Va., within one year next preceding the finding of the indictment, is fully proven and not contested. Whether his license was valid or not must be determined by the application, to the provisions of the charter of the town of Point Pleasant, which the defendant insists conferred upon the council of said town sole authority and power to grant such licenses for such sales within the corporate limits of said town, of principles of law and settled rules of interpretation. The question is purely a legal one. It is in no sense a moral question or a question of public policy. It is to be determined solely by legal tests, and not by the personal views, opinions, or preferences of anybody assuming to speak for the general public. It is a question of what the Legislature had the power to say and what it did say, as determined by rules of law. In construing statutes, courts have nothing to do with, and cannot consider, matters of public policy, moral justice, or expediency, except in so far as the Legislature, by some language used in the statute, has evinced an intention to pursue or advance some particular policy. "Statutes cannot be declared invalid on the ground that they are unwise, or unjust, or unreasonable or immoral, or because opposed to public policy, or the spirit of the Constitution. Unless a statute violates some express provision of the Constitution, it must be held to be valid. These principles are supported by numerous authorities, some of which are referred to in the margin." Lewis' Suth. Stat. Const. § 85, referring to probably 75 or 100 decisions, including Dewey v. United States, 178 U. S. 510, 20 Sup. Ct. 981, 44 L. Ed. 1170, in which Mr. Justice Harlan said, in reference to the duty of the court: "Our province is to declare what the law is, and not, under the guise of interpretation or under the influence of what may be surmised to be the policy of the government, so to depart from sound rules of construction as in effect to adjudge that to be law which Congress has not enacted as such." And further: "Of course, our duty is to give effect to the will of Congress touching this matter; but we must ascertain that will from the words Congress has chosen to employ, interpreting such words according to their ordinary meaning, as well as in the light of all the circumstances that may fairly be regarded as having been within the knowledge of the legislative branch of the government at the time it acted on the subject." In Brewer v. Blougher, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 178, 10 L. Ed. 408, Chief Justice Taney said: "The expediency and moral tendency of this new law of inheritance is a question for the Legislature of Maryland, and not for this court." Nor is the court at liberty to inquire into the motives of the legislators in voting for a law or to impeach the law on the ground of fraud or corruption, either at the suit of a private person or the state. Lewis' Suth. Stat. Const. § 496; Slack v. Jacob, 8 W. Va. 612. It is conclusively presumed that the Legislature has acted from pure motives and had wisdom enough to preclude their having been imposed upon or deluded into unwise legislation. From these rules and principles no court can depart without violation of law, in deference to public clamor or for any other purpose. Though every man in the state should demand of the court that it annul a law or refuse to sustain it, because, in the estimation of the public, it is an unwise law, or an immoral law, the court could not comply with the demand. Their application must be made to the Legislature, the only tribunal having power to grant such relief. What I have said here, by way of preface to this opinion, is not intended as a reflection upon, or a criticism of, any of my associates, whose judgment has constrained them to differ from me, as to the conclusion and judgment in this case, or the grounds thereof. What I have thus said has been superinduced by the wide public interest manifested in cases arising under the liquor laws of this state, of which the court takes judicial notice, to the end that the public may the better understand what the province of the court is and what it is not, and to show that the courts, in disposing of cases, can no more lean to the one side than to the other, from considerations of fear, or out of deference to public opinion, or by way of conforming to personal views and opinions concerning public policy and expediency, in disposing of any case.

A preliminary but vital question in the case is whether the Legislature has power to confer upon municipal corporations sole and exclusive power to grant or refuse licenses for the sale at retail of spirituous liquors within their corporate limits. That it may do so, and, to that extent, deprive county courts of their jurisdiction in respect to such sales or traffic, has been expressly decided by this court in Ward & Co. v. County Court, 51 W. Va. 102, 41 S. E. 154, and Wilson v. Ross, 40 W. Va. 278, 21 S. E. 868; and in Moundsville v. Fountain, 27 W. Va. 182, Judge Green, speaking for this court, expressed the opinion that the Legislature is not restrained, by the Constitution, from taking the jurisdiction out of the hands of a county court and vesting it in a municipal corporation. What was said in Moundsville v. Fountain is probably an obiter dictum, but the other two cases have expressly and unequivocally enunciated the doctrine as a matter of positive and direct adjudication; that question being in each of the cases necessarily and inevitably involved. Ward v. County Court declares, in point 2 of the syllabus: "The provision of chapter 44, p. 144, Acts 1899, that the council of the city of Grafton shall have exclusive power to grant liquor licenses within it, is not repugnant to section 24, art. 8, of the Constitution, or any other clause therein." Wilson v. Ross asserts the same proposition in the following terms: "The act of February 24, 1869, amending the charter of the town of Ceredo, confers upon the council of that town the sole power to grant, or not grant, a state license for the sale of intoxicating liquors within the limits of said town. Such act is not repugnant to the Constitution of the state (see section 46 of article 6, and section 24 of article 8, of the state Constitution), and such sole power to grant such license or not is recognized by section 11 of chapter 32 of the Code as vested in the municipal authorities of such town."

While it is undoubtedly within the power of this court to overrule its own erroneous decisions and declare them never to have been law, except for the purpose of the particular cases in which they were rendered, and though it is sometimes done, such action is never taken until after the court has become fully convinced of their unsoundness. Nothing produced in the argument of this case impresses upon my mind any serious question as to the correctness of the views and conclusions expressed by the court in the cases referred to. The argument against them is all predicated upon that portion of section 24 of article 8 of the Constitution which reads as follows [Code 1906, p. lxxiv]: "The county courts, through their clerks, shall have the custody of all deeds and other papers presented for record in their counties, and the same shall be preserved therein, or otherwise disposed of, as now is, or may be prescribed by law. * * * They shall also, under such regulations as may be prescribed by law, have the superintendence and administration of the internal police and fiscal affairs of their counties. Including the establishment and regulation of roads, ways, bridges, public landings, ferries and mills, with authority to lay and disburse the county levies. Provided, that no license for the sale of intoxicating liquors in any incorporated city, town or village, shall be granted without the consent of the municipal authorities thereof, first had and obtained." If this provision stood alone, unlimited and unqualified by anything else in the Constitution relating to the sale of intoxicating liquors, the contention for exclusive jurisdiction in the county court, beyond the reach of legislative powers, would be plausible; but it does not stand alone and unqualified. Section 46 of article 6 [Code 1906, p. lxi], relating to the powers of the Legislature under the Constitution, says: "Laws may be passed regulating or prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors within the limits of this state." Section 24 of article 8 does not expressly say that the county courts shall have sole and exclusive power to grant or refuse licenses for such sales. In order to so hold and declare, the court would be bound to say that the matter of granting or refusing licenses belongs to the internal police and fiscal affairs of the counties, and, ordinarily, this might be true; but it was competent for the people, in adopting the Constitution, to say that, for certain purposes, among which is the matter of jurisdiction to regulate or prohibit, it shall not be deemed a part of the internal police and fiscal affairs of a county, but a part of the police and fiscal powers of the state, and left under the control of the Legislature. Section 46 of article 6 seems plainly to have been intended to effect this result, and, in the absence of any constitutional provision to the contrary, it would be so. At the time of the adoption of the Constitution, many, no doubt most, of the county courts of the state, possessed and were exercising, under the statute then in force, power to grant or refuse licenses. It was apparent, therefore, to the framers of the Constitution and the people, that, until the Legislature should see fit to exercise this power, under section 46 of article 6, the county courts would continue, under the then existing law, so to exercise jurisdiction, respecting the granting or refusing of licenses. There was a possibility that the Legislature might never see fit to remove this jurisdiction from the county courts and vest it elsewhere. In view of these considerations, the framers of the Constitution and the people deemed it wise to impose a limitation upon the powers of both the Legislature and the county courts, for the protection of municipal corporations, by ordaining the provision "that no license for the sale of intoxicating liquors in any incorporated city, town or village, shall be granted without the consent of the municipal authorities thereof, first had and obtained." A Constitution, for the most part, may be construed as a great compact or agreement, entered into by all the people of the state, for and on behalf of themselves and those who shall come after them, until such time as it is abolished, changed, or modified.

An elementary rule of construction, applicable to every kind of written instruments, is that all parts of the instrument under consideration shall be considered, and every portion, paragraph, clause, and word given effect, if it be susceptible of such construction, and, whether it be so susceptible or not, all of its parts must be considered, and no court is warranted in expunging or declaring meaningless or ineffective any word, phrase, or clause, except in the case of irreconcilable conflict and repugnance. It is equally as well settled by authority, and consonant with reason and common sense, that no mere inplication, not necessary, in the sense that it is so plain that the contrary thereof cannot be supposed, can ever be permitted to overcome, break down, or cut out, as meaningless or irreconcilable, an express provision of a Constitution or any other instrument. The language of section 46 of article 6 is plain, positive, and unqualified. It says laws may be passed regulating or prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors within the limits of this state. There is no qualification or limitation as to the mode of regulation. That is left, by the language of this section, to the discretion of the Legislature. No other express provision of the Constitution seems to qualify or restrain it in any manner or to any extent, except the proviso which has been quoted from section 24 of article 8. Whether that is a limitation upon the power reserved by section 46 of article 6, we do not undertake to determine, because it is unnecessary. No such question arises in the case. But, if it is, it does not by any express terms say that jurisdiction for the granting or refusing of licenses is irrevocably vested in the county courts. It suffices the purposes of that proviso to say that, when the county courts, by virtue of laws passed by the Legislature, have the power to grant licenses, they shall not license the sale of liquors in any incorporated city, town, or village without the consent of the municipal authorities thereof first had and obtained. This gives that proviso effect, a broad effect, operative on both county courts and the Legislature, and that is all the rule of construction requires of the court. There is no authority or justification in any rule of interpretation for carrying it beyond this, so far as to cut down the word "regulating" in section 46 of article 6.

That part of section 24, art. 8, which says the county court, under such regulations as may be prescribed by law, shall have the superintendence and administration of the internal police and fiscal affairs of the counties, may also have effect, a broad sweeping effect, without cutting down or impairing the language of section 46 of article 6. Until the Legislature otherwise ordains, the matter of licenses may be, and probably is, in a legal sense, a part of the internal police and fiscal affairs of the counties. Said section 46 says, not that the Legislature shall, but that it may, pass laws regulating or prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors within the limits of the state. This is broad enough to authorize the Legislature to confer such power upon the county court. It would be one mode of regulating the traffic, but not the only one conceivable. It was apparent to the framers of the Constitution that this might be the mode selected by the Legislature, and, in that event, the county courts would have the superintendence and supervision of the traffic in liquors to the extent aforesaid. That, in a practical sense, the people could vest any particular power in the county court permanently or temporarily, absolutely or conditionally, is plain. That they had the power, in adopting the Constitution, to accomplish this, is beyond question. The Constitution is the paramount law, and the people of the state were the authors of it. Their power to do anything they saw fit that did not infringe upon, or fall under the condemnation of, some provision of the Constitution of the United States, was absolutely without limit. In framing the Constitution and adopting it, they used language which, according to its literal interpretation, reserves to the Legislature unlimited power over the liquor traffic. Effectual regulation might require that the superintendence and administration of the liquor traffic be wholly withdrawn from the county courts and placed elsewhere. It was a matter which so impressed itself upon the authors of the Constitution that they felt called upon to deal with it, and provide for its regulation, by a special clause in the Constitution. If they deemed it a part of the police and fiscal affairs of the counties, they may have foreseen the necessity, at some time, of power in the Legislature to withdraw it from the county courts and commit it to some other tribunal or officer, and they used in the Constitution language of sufficient breadth, and apt phraseology, to accomplish this result, and language which cannot be made to have any other effect without qualifying or restraining it by a mere unnecessary implication, arising from language used in another part of the Constitution.

Courts are bound, in construing a Constitution, statute, or other instrument, to presume that the authors of the instrument had some purpose in inserting every clause found in it, and every word of the clause, and intended it to have some effect. If we say section 46 of article 6 only reserves to the Legislature the power to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors and to prescribe regulations for the government of county courts in granting or refusing licenses, we deny to so much of that clause as relates to regulation any purpose whatever. It was wholly unnecessary and vainly and futilely inserted in the Constitution, if it meant no more than this, for section 24 of article 8 made the superintendence and administration of the county courts subject to "such regulations as may be prescribed by law." Unless we say, therefore, that the power to regulate reserved to the Legislature by section 46 of article 6 meant something more than this, we must say that it means nothing, and that we are not at liberty to say, as will be shown by abundant authority hereinafter cited.

The power to regulate the traffic in liquor is, I repeat, a part of the sovereign power of the state, in the absence of some constitutional provision eliminating it therefrom and vesting it elsewhere. Such powers are not generally cut off, except by express provisions, and never by any implication, nor less it be a necessary one. There must be something in the Constitution so plainly effecting this separation or delegation of power that the contrary cannot be reasonably supposed. Every presumption is against it. This court, in Dillon v. County Court of Braxton Co., 55 S. E. 382, declared, in reference to the power of taxation, that: "It is so high and extraordinary in character that it is presumed to remain in the Legislature until the contrary is shown by express provision or the equivalent thereof. * * * Hence it cannot be maintained that the people, in adopting the Constitution, recognized a legislative power of this kind in these local tribunals, which they signified their intention to leave in their hands by not expressly divesting them. No clause in the Constitution, either in express terms or by necessary implication, denies to the lawmaking body the exercise of this species of legislative power, which must reside in it, if it has not been taken away." This same rule must be applicable to a subject deemed by the people to be so important as to require a special provision, respecting it, in the organic law of the state.

The rule of contemporaneous construction also sustains the decisions of this court in Wilson v. Ross and Ward v. County Court, and the dictum in Moundsville v. Fountain. At the date of the adoption of the Constitution in 1872, and long before that time, certain municipal corporations of this state had the sole and exclusive power, under the statute, to grant or refuse license. This is asserted by Judge Green in Moundsville v. Fountain, and the act of the Legislature passed November 28, 1863 (Laws 1863, p. 144, c. 113) recognizes that state of affairs. Section 3 (page 145) of that act says: "Where the council of a city or town is, by its charter or any law of this state, authorized to grant or refuse licenses for any particular purpose, no license issued under this act shall be deemed to authorize any person to do any act, or carry on any business, calling or profession within the corporate limits of such city or town without having obtained license therefor as required by the by-laws or ordinances of such city or town, but all licenses granted under such by-laws or ordinances shall be assessed with and pay to the state the same taxes as other licenses of like kind, in addition to any tax payable thereon to such city or town." Section 4 of that act says: "Licenses to keep a hotel or tavern; or to sell drinks or refreshments at a public theatre; or to sell at retail spirituous liquors, wines, porter, ale, beer, or any drink of like nature; or to keep for public use or resort a bowling alley or saloon, billiard table or table of like kind, shall be issued only when authorized by resolution of the board of supervisors of the county, except where the council of a city or town are authorized, as aforesaid, to grant such licenses, in which case they shall be issued only when authorized by such council." Chapter 32 of the Code of 1868 recognizes the same condition of things. These laws, conferring upon certain municipal corporations sole and exclusive power to grant or refuse licenses for the sale at retail of spirituous liquors, were in force at the adoption of the Constitution. Nothing in the Constitution expressly repeals them. On the contrary, the Constitution itself provides as follows: "Such parts of the common law, and of the laws of this state as are in force when this article goes into operation, and are not repugnant thereto, shall be and continue the law of the state until altered or repealed by the Legislature." Article 8, § 21 [Code 1906, p. lxxlii]. These statutory provisions, recognizing such powers in municipal corporations, have remained in the Code and acts of the Legislature from 1863 down to the present time, and some of these powers were held long before 1863, as in the case of the city of Wheeling. This fact signifies that the Legislature has construed the Constitution, from the very date of the adoption of that instrument down to the present time, as authorizing it to confer upon municipal corporations the power in question, and the courts and people of the state have acquiesced in that construction for more than 40 years, and even longer.

Now, the rule declared by an authority of no less renown than John Marshall, Chief Justice of the United States, in the great case of McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 316, 421, 4 L. Ed. 579, is that this acquiescence is so potent on the question of the construction of a Constitution that courts will give heed to it and adopt it, unless it appears to be plainly wrong. After having said that the power to incorporate a national bank "being considered merely as a means, to be employed only for the purpose of carrying into execution the given powers, there could be no motive for particularly mentioning it," he continued as follows: "The propriety of this remark would seem to be generally acknowledged by the universal acquiescence in the construction which has been uniformly put on the third section of the fourth article of the Constitution. The power to 'make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States' is not more comprehensive, than the power 'to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution' the powers of the government. Yet all admit the constitutionality of a territorial government, which is a corporate body." The same rule had been laid down, some 16 years before, by Mr. Justice Patterson, of the same court, in Stuart v. Laird, 1 Cranch (U. S.) 299, 2 L. Ed. 115, in the following terms: "Another reason for reversal is that the judges of the Supreme Court have no right to sit as circuit judges, not being appointed as such, or, in other words, that they ought to have distinct commissions for that purpose. To this objection, which is of recent date, it is sufficient to observe that practice and acquiescence under it for a period of several years, commencing with the organization of the judicial system, affords an irresistible answer, and has indeed fixed the construction. It is a contemporary interpretation of the most forcible nature. This practical exposition is too strong and obstinate to be shaken or controlled. Of course, the question is at rest, and ought not now to be disturbed." In Holmes v. Hunt, 122 Mass. 505, 23 Am. Rep. 381, the learned Chief Justice Gray said, concerning the constitutionality of the provisions of a certain statute, that it had been substantially re-enacted, upon each revision of the statutes of the commonwealth since 1817, a period of 60 years, and continued as follows: "They have been constantly applied in practice, and repeatedly expounded by this court, without a doubt of their validity being suggested, for nearly 60 years. After so long a practical construction and acquiescence by the Legislature, by the courts, and by all parties to judicial proceedings, it would require a very clear case to warrant the court in setting them aside as unconstitutional." See, also, Packard v. Richardson, 17 Mass. 122, 9 Am. Dec. 123; Commonwealth v. Parker, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 550; Cooley's Cons. Lim. 69; Fulington v. Williams, 98 Ga. 807, 27 S. E. 183; State v. Holcomb, 46 Neb. 88, 64 N. W. 437; Wallace v. Bradshaw, 54 N. J. Law, 175, 23 Atl. 759.

That certain municipal corporations in the state had sole and exclusive power to grant and refuse licenses at the date of the drafting of the Constitution, and its adoption by the people, together with the absence of any express provision in the Constitution which purports to take away such sole and exclusive power, and the presence of a clause in the Constitution continuing in force all laws, operative at the date of its adoption, argues conclusively that there was no intention, on the part of the people, to put into the hands of county courts jurisdiction to grant licenses within the municipal corporations which then had such sole and exclusive jurisdiction. Hence it is thus made manifest that section 24 of article 8 of the Constitution was not intended to confer upon county courts sole and exclusive jurisdiction throughout all the counties of the state to grant or refuse licenses; and it never had, nor could have had, the application, force, and effect claimed for it by those who regard it as having lodged that jurisdiction irrevocably in the county courts. Thus, it appears that the framers of the Constitution themselves construed their own product as this court and the Legislature have since construed it.

No doubt all this reasoning and authority would have been set forth by the able judges who prepared the opinions in Wilson v. Ross and Ward & Co. v. County Court, had they deemed it necessary. It is not to be assumed, by members of the legal profession or the public in general, that courts, in delivering opinions, set forth in every instance all the reasons that can be assigned for their conclusions, and they are not required to do so. Unfortunately, however, it has happened, in respect to these decisions, that, upon the assumption that all the reasoning was set forth in the opinions that could be given, the decisions themselves have been repeatedly called in question, and I have here discussed the matter at considerable length for the purpose of disabusing the public mind of the impression that the conclusion reached in them is unsound, or dubious in its foundation.

The remaining question is whether the Legislature, having the power, as has been shown, to confer upon municipal corporations sole and exclusive authority to grant licenses for the sale at retail of spirituous liquors, has exercised that power in respect to the town of Point Pleasant. The claim that it has done so is based upon two grounds, one of which is constituted by the provisions of chapter 40, p. 72, of the Acts of 1891. The other is an alleged amendment, made to the charter of the town of Point Pleasant, by the circuit court of Mason county, by an order entered in its chancery order book, on the 9th day of May, 1883, which amendment the court made, or attempted to make, under and by virtue of chapter 78, p. 112, of the Acts of 1877, providing for the amendment of the charters of municipal corporations containing a population of less than 2,000, which act has since been incorporated into chapter 47 of the Code as section 47a [Code 1906, p. 810, § 1895]. The material parts of the order read as follows: "It is adjudged, ordered and decreed that the charter of said town of Point Pleasant be amended as follows, to wit: 'The council of said town of Point Pleasant shall have the sole power to grant all licenses within the corporate limits of said town.' Said amendment shall go into effect from and after this day." As the authority claimed by the town is based, by this court, upon the act of 1891, what I intend to say, concerning the amendment, will be postponed, until after an examination and analysis of the provisions of the act of 1891.

The town of Point Pleasant was not incorporated by any circuit court under the provisions of chapter 47 of the Code, but by a special act of the General Assembly of Virginia, passed on the 19th day of December, 1794. This act of incorporation was amended and re-enacted by an act of the General Assembly of Virginia, passed on the 30th day of March, 1860. Acts 1859-60, p. 368, c. 201. The sections of the act, necessary to be considered upon this inquiry, read as follows:

"Sec. 35. The council shall prescribe, by ordinance, the manner in which licenses of all kinds shall be applied for and granted, and it shall require the payment of the taxes thereon before delivery to the person applying therefor.

"Sec. 36. The provisions of the twenty-ninth section of chapter 32 of the Code of West Virginia, relating to state licenses, shall be deemed applicable to licenses of a similar character to those therein mentioned, when granted by or under authority of the council of said town. Licenses for the keeping of dogs shall also expire on the thirtieth day of April next after they are granted, and all other licenses may be for such time as the council shall determine."

"Sec. 40. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed; but this act shall not be construed to repeal, change, or modify any previous act not inconsistent with this act authorizing said town to contract debts, or to borrow money, or to take away any of the powers conferred upon said town, or upon the mayor or council or any of the officers thereof, conferred by general law, or by any amendment of its charter heretofore made by the circuit court of Mason county, except so far as the same may be inconsistent with the powers hereby conferred."

From the language used by the Legislature in the provisions of said act, chapter 40, considered and analyzed under, and in the light of, the rules of interpretation and construction observed and enforced by the courts of the land, the intention of the Legislature, concerning power in the council of the town of Point Pleasant to grant or refuse licenses, for state as well as for municipal purposes, must be ascertained; and, when so ascertained, it must have force and effect, no matter what views the court may entertain as to the wisdom, expediency, or morality of the statute. We are not at liberty to resort to mere surmise or conjecture as to what the Legislature intended. Except to a limited extent, and in a qualified sense, we cannot look outside of, or beyond, the language used in the act, and, in so far as it is allowable, to look beyond the terms of the act, nothing can be considered or allowed to affect the question except those matters to which the language of the statute refers in some manner. While there are presumptions which the court must keep in mind and enforce, where there is necessity for it, and where the language of the statute is such as to make them applicable, and though things not expressly mentioned, but deemed to have been within the knowledge of the Legislature, and to have been influential in the selection of the terms used by that body, may be regarded, nevertheless, everything considered, upon the inquiry for the legislative intention, must have some substantial connection with the terms used. If it be something that is not expressly mentioned, it must be manifest that, by reason of its connection with the subject-matter of the statute or its purpose and object, it entered into the deliberations of the Legislature in the passage of the act.

In determining what the language of a contract, statute, or other instrument means, it is absolutely necessary to bear in mind the subject-matter of the instrument, and equally important to have regard to the purpose intended to be accomplished and effected concerning the thing to which the instrument relates. To illustrate, if the paper be a contract, the first inquiry is whether it relates to land, horses, cattle, or some other subject. If it appears to relate to land, the next inquiry is the identity of the land, or rather the ascertainment of what particular land it relates to. Then we look to see whether the language of the contract purports to be a lease or a conveyance of it, and, if it be a lease, we must find, from the terms of the contract, the purpose of the lease, the use to which the land is to be put. In most instances, the instrument is described as a deed, lease, or contract, as the case may be, and that necessarily has weight in determining what it is, if the other terms are uncertain in their meaning. All this is nothing more than mere common sense, formulated into rules, and it applies to statutes just as much as to ordinary instruments evidencing contracts between man and man.

The title of every statute sets forth its object and purpose and discloses its subject-matter. The title of the act now constituting the charter of the town of Point Pleasant, read in the light of the two previous acts which it amends and re-enacts, shows that the subject-matter is the municipal corporation known as the town of Point Pleasant. It also shows what purpose was intended with reference to that corporation. It says the purpose is not to deal with some particular powers of that corporation, by amending, repealing, or altering the provisions of the previous acts, but to "designate the limits of said town * * * and to prescribe and define the powers and duties of the authorities thereof." It was not intended to deal specifically with that charter, but generally, comprehensively, and completely, so that, instead of looking to chapter 44 of the acts of the General Assembly of Virginia, passed on the 19th day of December, 1794, and chapter 201, p. 368, passed by said General Assembly on the 30th day of March, 1860, and chapter 47 of the Code of West Virginia, to ascertain the limits and powers and duties of the corporation, it should be necessary in the future to look only into chapter 40, p. 72, of the Acts of 1891. The rules of construction, applicable to a statute having such a purpose as this, differ from those applicable to a statute dealing specially, and in a limited sense, with its subject-matter. It becomes a substitute for all other statutes previously enacted, relating to the same subject-matter, in so far as the provisions of the previous statutes are inconsistent with its terms. By reason of its scope and purpose, it becomes, to the full extent of the express terms used, and necessarily implied, the exclusive rule and law upon that subject, and for that reason any provision of any previous statute which condicts with it is repealed by implication, and this is mere matter of intention, arising by inference from the character of the act.

The rule that statutes relating to the same subject are to be construed together and harmonized, if possible, has no application in construing an act intended to be complete in itself. Lewis' Suth. Stat. Con. § 447. Hamilton v. Rathbone, 175 U. S. 414, 20 Sup. Ct. 155, 44 L. Ed. 219, in which Mr. Justice Brown said: "Where the meaning of the Revised Statutes is plain, it [the court] cannot recur to the original statutes to see if errors were committed in revising them." And, again: "The whole doctrine applicable to the subject may be summed up in the single observation that prior acts may be resorted to to solve, but not to create, an ambiguity." And further: "The main object of the revision was to incorporate all the existing statutes in a single volume, that a person desiring to know the written law upon any subject might learn it by an examination of that volume, without the necessity of referring to prior statutes on the subject." Am. & Eng. Ency. Law, vol. 26, p. 731, says: "Where the later of two acts covers the whole subject-matter of the earlier one, not purporting to amend it, and plainly shows that it was intended to be a substitute for the earlier act, such later act will operate as a repeal of the earlier one, though the two are not repugnant." For this, numerous cases are cited, among which is Dist. of Columbia v. Hutton, 143 U. S. 18, 12 Sup. Ct. 369, 36 L. Ed. 60, fully sustaining the text, as well as the proposition that the old and new statutes are not regarded as laws in pari materia. The court said: "The powers which are conferred are organic powers. We look to the act itself for their extent and limitations. It is not one act in a series of legislation, and to be made to fit into the provisions of the prior legislation. A subsequent statute revising the whole subject-matter of a former one, and evidently intended as a substitute for it, though it contains no express words to that effect, must on principles of law, as well as in reason and common sense, operate a repeal of the former law." Herron v. Carson, 26 W. Va. 62. This is reiterated in exactly the same terms in State v. Mines, 38 W. Va. 125, 18 S. E. 470. In the opinion in the latter case, Judge Brannon said: "Where the later statute makes full and complete provision touching the subject common to both, and it is evident that the Legislature intended to review the legislation on that subject, and that the later act should be deemed a full and complete provision on the subject, the former statute is at an end." In United States v. Claffin, 97 U. S. 546, 24 L. Ed. 1082, 1085, the rule was declared in the following terms: "Whenever a new statute covers the whole subject-matter of an old one, and adds offenses, varying the procedure, the latter operates by way of substitution, and not cumulatively. The former is therefore impliedly repealed." That case related to the construction of a criminal statute, but the rule is applicable to all statutes. In Eckloff v. District of Columbia, 135 U. S. 240, 10 Sup. Ct. 752, 34 L. Ed. 120, and in District of Columbia v. Hutton, 143 U. S. 18, 12 Sup. Ct. 369, 36 L. Ed. 60, it was applied to an act of Congress, relating to the powers and duties of the commissioners of the District of Columbia, with reference to the appointment and maintenance of the police force. In the former case, Mr. Justice Brewer said: "The court below placed its decision on what we conceive to be the true significance of the act of 1878. As said by that court, it is to be regarded as an organic act, intended to dispose of the whole question of a government for this District. It is, as it were, a Constitution of the District. It is declared by its title to be an act to provide 'a permanent form of government for the District.' The word 'permanent' is suggestive. It implies that prior systems had been temporary and provisional. As permanent it is complete in itself. It is the system of government. The powers which are conferred are organic powers. We look to the act itself for their extent and limitations. It is not one act in a series of legislation, and to be made to fit into the provisions of the prior legislation; but is a single complete act, the outcome of previous experiments, and the final judgment of Congress as to the system of government which should obtain. It is the Constitution of the District, and its grants of power are to be taken as new and independent grants, expressing in themselves both their extent and limitations. Such was the view taken by the court below, and such we believe is the true view to be taken of the statute." In the latter case, involving the same act of Congress, this was reiterated and approved. The decisions of our own court, in which the rule was enforced, involved statutes relating to civil, not criminal, matters. See, in addition to the authorities cited for the rule, Norris v. Crocker, 13 How. (U. S.) 429, 14 L. Ed. 210; Michell v. Brown, 1 Ell. & Ell. 267; Ex parte Baker, 2 Hurl. & N. 219; Parry v. Croydon Gas Co., 15 C. B. (N. S.) 568. It is a rule by which to test a statute as to the legislative intention, and just as clearly applicable, when the question is whether new and additional matter has been incorporated, as when it is whether old matter has been eliminated. Under it, the elimination of old matter is effected by implication. The incorporation of new matter cuts out all inconsistent old matter, without express declaration of intention to do so. Before the passage of chapter 40, p. 72, of the Acts of 1891, the charter of Point Pleasant (chapter 201, p. 368, Acts Gen. Assem. 1859-60) limited the powers of the council, respecting licenses, to municipal licenses. Chapter 40, p. 72, of the Acts of 1891, omitted that section of the act of 1860, and substituted for it the language of sections 35 and 36 of the act of 1891. The new language, not the old, therefore, determines the legislative intention respecting that matter. The old section is thus impliedly repealed under this rule, if inconsistent with the new, as well as expressly repealed by the first clause of section 40 of the act of 1891.

To what has been said concerning the object and purpose of chapter 40 of the Acts of 1891, as disclosed by its title, it is to be added that the same intention is further evidenced by the provisions of the act, covering almost every conceivable subject of municipal power. Section 1 (page 73) constitutes certain inhabitants of the state a body politic and corporate under the name of the town of Point Pleasant. Section 2 defines the territorial limits of the town. Section 3 (page 74) divides the territory into wards. Section 4 gives power to change the boundaries of the wards and increase them in number, to not more than five. Section 5 names the officers, prescribes their qualifications, and provides for their election. Section 6 (page 75) provides for the holding of election, prescribes the qualifications of voters and trial of election contests. Section 7 fixes the terms of office. Section 8 prescribes the oaths of office. Section 9 requires the council to prescribe the powers and define the duties of its appointed officers, except in so far as they are prescribed and defined in the act, and to fix the compensation of such officers. Section 10 (page 76) relates to the general powers of the council. Section 11 (page 78) gives authority to remove elected and appointed officers and fill vacancies. Section 12 prescribes rules for meetings and procedure of the council. Section 13 (page 79) prescribes the duties of the clerk and how the records shall be kept. Section 14 lays down a rule for keeping the minutes and taking the yeas and nays. Section 15 (page 80) prescribes the duties of the mayor and fixes his salary. Section 16 relates to proceedings and enforcement of ordinances. Section 17 (page 81) provides for the enforcement of judgments. Section 18 prescribes the duties of the jailer. Section 19 (page 82) provides for the keeping of a docket by the mayor. Section 20 provides for appeals in certain classes of cases from judgments in town cases. Section 21 prescribes the mode of trial of such appeals. Section 22 prescribes the judgment in certain classes of cases, and provides for enforcement thereof. Section 23 (page 83) provides for appeals in other cases. Section 24 relates to the duties of the marshal. Section 25 (page 84) provides for arrests and trial for violation of ordinances. Section 26 prescribes how settlements shall be made by the marshal, and fixes his compensation. Section 27 (page 85) gives remedies against the marshal. Section 28 provides for deputy marshals, and makes the marshal chief of police. Section 29 prescribes the duties of the assessor. Section 30 (page 86) relates to finances and expenditures. Section 31 imposes a penalty for non-payment of taxes within the time specified. Section 32 gives a lien on real estate for taxes. Section 33 (page 87) relates to the tax duplicate. Section 34 prescribes the duties of the treasurer. Section 35 (page 88) relates to the granting of licenses. Section 36 relates to the duration of licenses. Section 37 (page 89) provides for condemnation proceedings for public purposes. Section 38 relates to pavements. Section 39 (page 90) relates to the status of the then officers and ordinances of the town. Section 40 repeals all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with said act, but preserves to the town the benefit of all previous acts, provisions of general law, and amendments previously made by the circuit court of Mason county, except so far as the same may be inconsistent with the powers conferred by said act. And section 41 requires the council to provide voting places in the several wards for holding an election on a certain day. A clause in section 10 relating to the general powers of the council provides that it shall have power to prevent "the desecration of the Sabbath Day, profane swearing, the illegal sales of intoxicating liquors, drinks, mixtures and preparations." As this clause does not purport either to give or withhold power to grant or refuse licenses, but only to give power to prevent illegal sales of intoxicating liquors, drinks, mixtures, and preparations, no consideration need be given it. It does not say how sales shall be legalized, or who shall legalize them, but only that the council may prevent illegal sales.

While chapter 40 of the Acts of 1891 is thus manifestly a complete act, covering the whole subject-matter of the corporate powers of the town of Point Pleasant, constituting the organic law of the corporation, as said by the Supreme Court of the United States, in reference to the act of Congress relating to the District of Columbia, both impliedly and expressly repealing all previous inconsistent legislation, whether general or special, it was not ordained in the passage of this act that no previously existing powers, consistent with the powers conferred by it, should not be held or exercised by the town of Point Pleasant. It was the intention, disclosed by express declaration of the Legislature, that powers conferred by such previous legislation, consistent with the powers conferred by chapter 40, p. 72, of the Acts of 1891, should thereafter be held and exercised by the town. In several instances, general statutes are expressly adopted by chapter 40. For instance, the mode of appealing from judgments of the mayor, except in cases specially provided for, shall be allowed as in similar cases before justices. Section 20 adopts the provisions of chapter 162 of the Code, relating to recognizances in criminal cases. Section 21 says the circuit court, on appeal from judgments of the mayor in the cases specially provided for, "shall proceed to try the same in its order, as appeals from justices of the peace are tried." Section 25 says the marshal and his sureties shall be liable to all the fines, penalties, and forfeitures that a constable is liable to, for any dereliction of duty in office, to be recovered in the same manner, and in the same courts, that such fines, penalties, and forfeitures are recovered against constables. Section 32 provides that, if any real estate within said town be returned delinquent for the nonpayment of taxes due thereon, a copy of such delinquent list may be certified by the council to the auditor, and the same may be sold for the town taxes and interest and commissions thereon, in the same manner, at the same time, and by the same officer, as real estate is sold for nonpayment of state taxes. These instances will serve to illustrate what is meant by saying this complete and comprehensive charter of the town of Point Pleasant has adopted and made parts of it many of the general laws of the state.

In addition to adoptions by express reference and declaration, as in the instances just specified, there is a general adoption in the peculiar clause found in the repealing section (section 40) which declares "that this act shall not be construed * * * to take away any of the powers conferred upon said town, or upon the mayor or council or any of the officers thereof, conferred by general law, or by any amendment of its charter heretofore made by the circuit court of Mason county, except so far as the same may be inconsistent with the powers hereby conferred." Viewed in the light of the subject-matter and purpose of the act, as disclosed by its title and its provisions, the reasonable and fair construction of this clause is, not that it is a proviso, saving clause, or exception, but an adoption of all such special and general provisions of pre-existing law, conferring powers upon said corporation as are not inconsistent with the provisions of the act. It is not in the form of a proviso. It is introduced by the conjunction "but," and not the word "provided." Its language is not limited, and does not relate, to the saving or validation of acts done under previous laws, but to the powers which the corporation should have authority to exercise in the future. Even if it had been preceded by the word "provided," or its equivalent, its office and purpose would be determined, not by its form, but by the intention of the Legislature as gathered from the whole instrument. In Stanley v. Colt, 72 U. S. 119, 18 L. Ed. 502, Mr. Justice Nelson said: "It is true that the word 'proviso' is an appropriate one to constitute a common-law condition in a deed or will; but this is not the fixed and invariable meaning attached to it by the law in these instruments. On the contrary, it gives way to the intent of the parties as gathered from an examination of the whole instrument, and has frequently been thus explained and applied as expressing simply a covenant or limitation in trust." And the court declared the doctrine in the syllabus of the case in these terms: "The word 'proviso' has frequently been applied as expressing simply a covenant or limitation in trust." In Georgia Railroad & Banking Co. v. Smith, 128 U. S. 238, 22 Sup. Ct. 47, 32 L. Ed. 377, the same court declared as follows: "The general purpose of a proviso is to except the clause covered by it from provisions of the statute, or to qualify a portion of the statute. But it is often used as a conjunction to an independent paragraph." In Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. v. Manning, 186 U. S. 238, 22 Sup. Ct. 881, 48 L. Ed. 1144, the same doctrine was declared and applied. The distinction and principle are not unknown to this court. In Ches. & O. Ry. Co. v. Pack, 6 W. Va. 397, 403, Judge Hoffman said: "The proviso might, without very serious change of grammatical arrangement, be regarded, not as a part of the section re-enacted, but as an independent section following it."

In view of the clear purpose of the Legislature, as shown by the title and provisions of the statute under consideration, I have no hesitancy in saying that the object and intent of the clause found in section 40 was, not to continue in force previously existing laws, conferring, or purporting to confer, powers upon the council of the town, not inconsistent with the provisions of the act, but to make them operative and effective as new laws, by virtue of that act, and not by virtue of the statutes in which they originally appeared. I do not regard this conclusion as conflicting with the following rule laid down in State v. Mines, 38 W. Va. 125, 18 S. E. 470: "When a statute is amended and re-enacted with the words, 'so as to read as follows,' or words of like effect, those parts of the re-enactment embraced in the former law are not considered as repealed and re-enacted, but as law all along continuously from their original enactment." In respect to the clause now under consideration, that rule does not apply. It does not repeat the words of the general and special laws adopted, and it is not an act merely amending a part of the statute or statutes. Let it be observed, too, that the rule quoted does not say, as matter of fact and strict law, that the old law is not declared or affirmed anew, born again, but only that it is "considered" as having been in force uninterruptedly, so as to make it work out certain results as to past transactions. Here, we look at it from a different point of view, its future effect, in respect to which there is no necessity for the interposition of a fiction, and fictions can only be resorted to when necessary to work out justice and equity, never to defeat it. This statute is broader in its scope than the one on which the rule is predicated, covering a whole subject. If we say the language of the clause, "this act shall not be construed * * * to take away any of the powers conferred upon said town, or upon the mayor or council or any of the officers thereof, conferred by general law, or by any amendment of its charter heretofore made by the circuit court of Mason county, except so far as the same may be inconsistent with the powers hereby conferred," means no more than that these powers shall be saved and continued in force by exception, we render it wholly useless and meaningless, for section 40 would then stand precisely as if the Legislature had stopped after saying, "all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed." Under no rule, known to the courts, does a statute, to which there is appended such a repealing clause, do away with any pre-existing statute or law not inconsistent with it. Without a word added, the town would still have had the benefit of all powers conferred by any previous law, whether to borrow money, contract debts, or do anything else, not inconsistent with the powers specially conferred by the act. We are bound, therefore, to say that the Legislature intended something more than a mere continuation of statutes and amendments on their old footings. What could it have intended different from that, other than a redeclaration, reaffirmance, and adoption of previous laws, as new provisions or parts of the new act? Nothing else has been suggested or can be conceived, and we are bound to say that the Legislature intended this clause to have some effect. "In the construction of a statute, every part of it must be viewed in connection with the whole, so as to make its parts harmonious, if practicable, and give a sensible and intelligent effect to each. It is not to be presumed that the Legislature intended any part of the statute to be without meaning." Bank v. County Court, 36 W. Va. 341, 15 S. E. 78; Lewis' Suth. Stat. Cons. § 491, p. 919. "It is presumed, as well on the ground of good faith as on the ground that the Legislature would not do a vain thing, that it intends its acts and every part of them to be valid and capable of being carried into effect." Id. § 497, p. 926. "The intention of the lawmaker, if plainly expressed, must have the force of law, though it may be in the form of a proviso; the intention expressed is paramount to the form." Id. § 352, p. 674.

Besides general laws expressly adopted, others may be found to have been adopted by necessary implication. For illustration, section 32, relating to the sale of real estate for nonpayment of municipal taxes, may be taken. It does not require, in express terms, the recordation of the delinquent list in the office of the clerk of the county court. That it shall be so recorded has been judicially declared by this court, on the theory that the duty to do so is necessarily implied in the requirement that the land shall be sold in the same manner, at the same time, and by the same officer, that real estate is sold for the nonpayment of state taxes. Hogan v. Piggott, 56 S. E. 189. If the Legislature, in passing chapter 40 of the Acts of 1891, had said nothing concerning the powers of the council of the town of Point Pleasant, respecting the granting or refusal of licenses, it would probably be clear that, by necessary implication, or by the terms of chapter 47 of the Code, the extent of its powers relating to that subject, and the mode of exercising them, would be prescribed and governed by that chapter. But it was not silent. It acted. What it intended, therefore, must be ascertained from the terms it used respecting the powers of the council as to such licenses. One question is whether or not it legislated on that subject, and that depends upon the meaning of the terms it used. If it did legislate on that subject, its intention must likewise be determined from the language it has used in the sections relating thereto. From the very nature and object of the act, assuming to prescribe and define the powers and duties of the authorities of the town, all of its powers and duties, so that it should be necessary only to look into the provisions of that act, including provisions expressly and impliedly adopted from other statutes, for such powers and duties, the absence of any express provision at all on so important a subject as this would be strange and unexpected. It would be contradictory of express terms and the general purport of the statute. It would be in the nature of a legislative freak, if we are at liberty to assume that there could be such a thing. In view of the presumption so raised that the Legislature did not intend to define the powers of the corporation, respecting this matter, as well as every other one that could arise, it must be assumed that the language of sections 35 and 36 of the act was intended to express the legislative will on that subject, and to constitute, together with such general provisions of law as are made applicable to the subject, by necessary implication, all the provisions of the charter of the town relating to it. Why should the Legislature, in direct contradiction of its expressed purpose, and its manifest effort, to define the powers of said corporation, all of them, fail to act on this one? Is the court at liberty to assume such stupidity on the part of the lawmaking body of the state? The Legislature spoke on the subject, and we are bound to say, not only that it intended something by the language it used, but also that it intended its language to be the sole and exclusive rule and declaration of its intention, as to the powers of the council, respecting licenses.

That the power to grant or refuse licenses was a subject of deliberation by the Legislature, at the time of the passage of the act in question, is disclosed not only by the terms of the act, but also by the Journals of both branches of the Legislature. As originally introduced, the bill contained 43 sections, of which sections 35, 36, 37, and 38 related to the matter of licenses. Sections 35 and 36 read as follows:

"Sec. 35. The council shall also have power to grant; refuse or revoke licenses, to owners or keepers of hacks, carts or wagons, drays, and of every other description of wheeled carriage kept or used for hire in said town; to levy and collect a tax thereon, and to subject the same to such regulation as the interest or convenience of the inhabitants of said town in the opinion of the council, shall require; to grant, refuse and revoke licenses to theatrical exhibitions, public shows, musical performances, and all performances by which admission is obtained by the payment of money or other rewards; and for keeping dogs within the town, and for anything else for which a state license is now or may hereafter be required; and to levy and collect taxes on the same; and to grant, revoke and refuse any license to sell or offer for sale, and to prohibit the sale or offering for sale, of any brandy, whiskey, rum, gin, wine, porter, ale, or beer, or any other spirituous, vinous or malt liquors, or any intoxicating liquor, drink or mixture or preparation whatever, within said town or within one mile of the corporate limits thereof, and shall require a tax thereon of not less than one hundred dollars nor more than two hundred dollars, and to enforce the authority hereby granted by reasonable fines and penalties.

"Sec. 36. When any such license is granted by the council to sell or offer for sale, brandy, whiskey, rum, gin, wine, porter, ale or beer, or any other spirituous, vinous or malt liquors, or any intoxicating liquor, drink or mixture, it shall take from the person so licensed a bond, with approved security, in a penalty of not less than three thousand dollars, payable to the state of West Virginia, and conditioned as prescribed in section twenty-two, of chapter thirty-two, of the Code of West Virginia. The council may provide for the punishment of such person for the violation of any of the conditions of said bond, and suits may be brought and maintained against such person and his sureties on such bond, for the same objects, by the same persons, in the same manner and with like effect, as upon a bond taken under the section mentioned; and also, for any fines and costs that may be imposed by the mayor for any offense against the town, under its ordinances, involving a breach of the conditions of such bond, and the council may revoke any such license for a breach of any of the conditions of such bond, or for other good cause shown, but the person holding the license must first have reasonable notice of the time and place of hearing and adjudicating in the matter, as well as the cause alleged, and he shall be entitled to be heard, in person or by counsel, in opposition to said revocation."

The bill passed the Senate, after amendment by inserting, before the words "and to grant, revoke and refuse any license to sell," the words "shall have the sole power." It was so passed by a vote of nineteen yeas and no nays. After it went to the House, it was referred to the Judiciary committee, which reported it back with the following recommendation: "Strike out all section 35 from and after the word 'same,' in line 18 of engrossed bill, and insert the following: 'But no license to sell, offer or expose for sale any brandy, whiskey, rum, gin, porter, ale or beer, or any other spirituous, vinous or malt liquor, or any intoxicating liquor, drink, mixture or preparation thereof, within said town or within one mile of the corporate limits thereof, shall be authorized or granted except as provided in chapter 32 of the Code of West Virginia; and where any such license is granted as aforesaid, with the assent of the corporate authorities of said town, the same may be revoked by said town authorities, for good cause shown after reasonable notice of the intention to do so to the person holding said license. And the corporate authorities of said town may prescribe by ordinance the amount of town taxes to be paid upon every such license, but not less in any case than one hundred dollars. The corporate authorities shall also have power to require and take from every person to whom any such license is granted, a bond with good security, in the penalty of not less than one thousand dollars, conditioned as prescribed in section 18 of chapter 32 of the Code, and the town shall have the same remedy on said bond as is prescribed in said section.' Strike out all of section 36. And recommended that the bill pass as amended." When the bill was taken up on second reading, with the amendments proposed by the committee, the amendments proposed were, by unanimous consent, withdrawn. Then sections 35 and 36 of the bill were wholly stricken out, leaving 41 sections, instead of 43, and making sections 37 and 38 of the original bill 35 and 36 of it as so amended. It was then passed to its third reading and afterwards passed in that form, and the amendment was agreed to by the Senate.

As so passed, it contains sections 35, 36, and 40 as they now appear in chapter 40 of the Acts of 1891. These sections have been quoted. Sections 35 and 36 relate specifically to the matter of licenses. They do not adopt in express terms, by reference or otherwise, any general law on the subject, applicable to county courts or municipal corporations. They do not say or imply, by any terms used, that the licenses thereby referred to are municipal licenses. They do not say or imply

Chapter 47 of the Code. But, inasmuch as it was not all stricken out, we must determine what the remaining portion of it means, and that can only be done by the application of well-settled rules of construction. The remaining language is not ambiguous. It is merely general. It gives power by implication, rather than in express words; but the implication is an absolutely necessary one, for, without it, the terms used would be meaningless and ineffective, as has been shown. While the House struck out two sections, leaving comprehensive terms relating to the subject-matter thereof, it did not so change the title of the bill as to make its object the amendment of certain sections of the old charter act and make it a partial, incomplete law. It did not, by reference or otherwise, incorporate anything as a substitute for the matter stricken out. What reasons impelled the several members to vote for the bill in that form, or what actuated them in changing its form, the court cannot inquire. What they or any of them said on the occasion is not admissible. 28 Am. & Eng. Ency. Law, 638; United States v. Trans-Miss. Ass'n, 166 U. S. 318, 17 Sup. Ct. 540, 41 L. Ed. 1007; Am. Net. & T. Co. v. Worthington, 141 U. S. 473, 12 Sup. Ct. 55, 35 L. Ed. 821. Nor can we assume, or allow it to be proved, that anything was put into or taken out of the bill, by fraud, trickery, or imposition. Slack v. Jacob, 8 W. Va. 612. We must take the language as it is and determine what it means.

That the striking out of sections 35 and 36 of the original bill, containing the Senate amendment, is insufficient, in view of the character and purpose of the bill, and what was left in it, relating to the granting of licenses, to show that the Legislature did not intend what the remaining words import, seems manifest from the disposition made of a similar question by this court in Coal & Coke Co. v. Tax Commissioner, 59 W. Va. 605, 630, 631, 53 S. E. 928. In that case, the words "including chattels real," found in the bill as it passed the House, were stricken out of one clause by the Senate. This was relied upon, by counsel for the coal company, as conclusive evidence that it was not intended to put chattels real on the tax list at all, and certainly not those owned by corporations. In reply to that contention, this court said, through Judge Brannon: "Why, then, did not the Legislature strike out 'chattels real' from section 61? Why did it not strike from section 80, cl. 'a,' the words 'including chattels real,' thus charging individuals and firms not incorporated with them? Why did it still later in the consideration of the bill insert, in section 108, charging taxes, a clause reading: '(pp) The value of all chattels real of every person, firm or incorporated company'? This last most explicit language flatly says that corporations shall be taxed for chattels real." It was held that chattels real, belonging to corporations, were taxable under the statute, notwithstanding a clause of a section said in explicit terms, after referring to clauses naming every other species of property, and omitting chattels real, that the property mentioned in them should constitute all the property on which any such corporation should be liable to pay taxes. The court very properly, in that case, as in all others, gave force and effect to the plain, explicit, and positive terms of the statute as it was finally passed, notwithstanding the circumstance that some similar language had been stricken out of the bill in its progress through the Legislature. If the language had been ambiguous, susceptible of two or more different meanings, or applications, without doing violence to its terms, the circumstance of the elimination of certain language, while the bill was pending, might be sufficient to determine which meaning or application was intended. That was not the condition of the language of the tax statute in the case just referred to, nor of the language in section 35 of chapter 40 of the Acts of 1891, which we have under consideration. It is plain and explicit and positive. The only criticism that can be made upon it is that it expresses the legislative intention in an awkward and unusual form, a matter of no consequence whatever, so long as the intention plainly appears, as it does. "The intention expressed is paramount to form" and "must have the force of law." Lewis' Suth. Stat. Cons. § 452; Onesapeake & Pot. Tel. Co. v. Manning, 186 U. S. 239, 22 Sup. Ct. 881, 46 L. Ed. 1144.

If the language used were ambiguous, so as to give room for construction or interpretation, by reference to extrinsic circumstances or facts, the same conclusion would result from a view and analysis of the language used in section 35, read in the light of the clause in section 40, relating to the amendments to the charter of the town by the circuit court of Mason county. Among these amendments was the one made on the 9th day of May, 1883, which has been quoted and purported to confer upon the council sole power to grant all licenses within the corporate limits of the town. The language of that clause is broad enough to include all amendments so made. It is presumed that the Legislature has knowledge of the subject-matter of its action. The spectacle of a Legislature, passing laws concerning a subject or thing, about the facts of which it did not have knowledge, would be strange, if not absurd. It would be repugnant to common reason, just as much so as in the case of two men, making a contract, unless the contrary affirmatively appears. Therefore the courts say that the words of a statute are to be interpreted in the light of the subject-matter. Brewer v. Blougher, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 178, 196, 10 L. Ed. 408; United States v. Caldwell, 86 U. S. 264, 22 L. Ed. 114; Am. & Eng. Ency. Law, 604. The charter of the town of Point Pleasant, at the time the Legislature acted upon it, in passing chapter 40 of the Acts of 1891, appeared to have been amended by the circuit court of Mason county so as to confer this power. The act thus shows that the Legislature knew the amendment had been made. It was not its province to determine whether any of those amendments were valid or not. That is not the business of Legislatures. They have no power to determine such questions. They are judicial questions and cognizable only in a judicial forum. The Legislature therefore did not, because it could not, assume or declare expressly, or otherwise, that the amendment in question was not a valid one; in other words, that this amendment is not included in the clause of section 40, because, in the opinion of the Legislature, it was not an amendment. Courts cannot assume that a Legislature has meddled with something that, in common parlance, "is none of its business." That must be shown, before it can be considered. "The Legislature cannot authoritatively declare what the law is or has been. That is a judicial function and pertains to the court." Lewis' Suth. Stat. Cons. § 358, p. 688; Ogden v. Blackledge, 2 Cranch (U. S.) 272, 2 L. Ed. 276; South Ottawa v. Perkins, 94 U. S. 260, 24 L. Ed. 154; In re Hanley's Estate, 15 Utah, 212, 49 Pac. 829, 62 Am. St. Rep. 926, 931; Ratcliffe v. Anderson, 31 Grat. (Va.) 105, 81 Am. Rep. 716. "It is always competent to change an existing law by a declaratory statute, and, where the statute is only to operate upon future cases, it is no objection to its validity that it assumes the law to have been in the past what it is now declared that it shall be in the future. But the legislative action cannot be made to retroact upon past controversies, and to reverse decisions which the courts, in the exercise of their undoubted authority, have made, for this would not only be the exercise of judicial power, but it would be its exercise in the most objectionable and offensive form, since the Legislature would, in effect, sit as a court of review, to which parties might appeal when dissatisfied with the rulings of the courts." Cooley's Con. Lim. 11. It is not to be assumed, therefore, that the Legislature, having no power to determine whether the amendment made by the circuit court was valid or invalid, assumed that it was invalid, and therefore did not include it in its reference generally to the amendments made by the circuit court. The declaration that nothing in the act shall be construed to take away power conferred by any amendment made by the circuit court, not inconsistent with this act, is the same in meaning as if it had been that the council shall have the powers conferred by all the amendments, not inconsistent with this act, made by the circuit court. It reaches all the amendments, not merely one of them. Though negative in form, it is affirmative in meaning and effect. Can the words "any amendment" be limited to one amendment? If so, which one? The impossibility of applying them to any one in particular proves that they extend to all. That body knew, is presumed to have known, that there was attached to the charter of the town a paper purporting to be an amendment, conferring just such power as the language contained in section 35 of the act necessarily implies. The existence of that ostensible, if not valid, amendment, was a circumstance known to the Legislature, when it used language in section 35 which purports, by necessary implication, to confer the very power which the amendment purported to give. This shows, by legislative terms, the opinion of the Legislature that the town already had that power. Courts may take cognizance of facts known to the Legislature, which tend to throw light upon the question of intent. This is settled beyond all question. Platt v. Union Pacific Ry. Co., 99 U. S. 48, 25 L. Ed. 424; Church v. United States, 143 U. S. 457, 12 Sup. Ct. 511, 36 L. Ed. 226; Railway Co. v. United States, 91 U. S. 72, 23 L. Ed. 224; The Delaware, 161 U. S. 472, 16 Sup. Ct. 516, 40 L. Ed. 771; Amer. Net. & T. Co. v. Worthington, 141 U. S. 468, 12 Sup. Ct. 55, 35 L. Ed. 821. They may consider all the surrounding circumstances and history of the times. See, in addition to cases just cited, Daniel v. Simms, 49 W. Va. 554, 39 S. E. 690; C. & O. Ry. Co. v. Deep Water Ry. Co., 57 W. Va. 641, 50 S. E. 890. Here we need not look beyond the language of the statute itself, to ascertain that the Legislature knew amendments had been made by the circuit court to the charter of the town of Point Pleasant. It declared its knowledge of them in the act. One of them is disclosed by the record. It is not only a circumstance known to the Legislature, but a part of the subject-matter of the statute. This evidence of belief, on the part of the Legislature, that the town had, by virtue of the amendment, sole power to grant licenses, accompanied by the declaration of a rule of action for the council, predicated on the assumption of such power and referable to no other conceivable hypothesis, makes the legislative intention to grant such power so plain that nothing can be urged against it but mere conjecture and surmise.

Two of my associates fully concur with me in the view that section 35 of chapter 40 of the Acts of 1891, read in the light of section 40, confers upon the town council, the power in question, and we reverse the judgment of the circuit court, predicated upon the theory of a want of such power in the council. I am prepared to go further, and say that, if section 35 were not in the statute, the power claimed by the town of Point Pleasant would be sustained by section 40 alone, of chapter 40 of the Acts of 1891. It is plain, as has been pointed out, that the clause in that section relating to the amendments made by the circuit court of Mason county is not a saving clause nor an exception. It is an independent provision intended to add to the preceding sections of the act. I have shown that, unless it is so regarded, it is a futile and vain expression, effecting no purpose, and performing no function whatever, and we are not permitted, by the rules of law, to place such a construction upon it. The Legislature treated and regarded the amendments made by the circuit court, not some of them, but all of them, for it refers to all of them, as valid and conferring powers. The language used in the clause assumes that these amendments conferred powers, for it says nothing in the act shall be deemed to take away the powers conferred by them. How could there be anything to take away, in respect to this amendment, if it conferred no power, or was not regarded as conferring power? In saying power conferred by the amendment should not be taken away, the Legislature, by necessary implication, said the amendment had conferred power. The language used by the Legislature, I repeat, assumes that the amendment conferred power, whether it did or not, and deals with it as an amendment conferring power. It calls it an amendment. If it conferred any power, it could have been none other than the very power in question. In assuming that it did confer such power and declaring that nothing in the act should be construed to take it away, the Legislature clearly and positively expressed its will that the town council should have such power in the future, whether it had had it in the past or not. It is a question of intention, and, when the intention is apparent, it must be given effect without any regard to the form in which it is expressed. If the amendment was invalid, and not law, and not embodied in any act of the Legislature or Code, that circumstance is immaterial. The Legislature had the power to incorporate it into the act, and, upon its identification, wherever found, it became a part of the act.

In Delaplane v. Crenshaw, 15 Grat. (Va.) 457, one question was whether a certain alleged custom or usage, relating to the inspection of flour, had been incorporated into the statute, concerning the same subject. The law provided for an inspection of flour, which inspection consisted partly in boring small holes in the heads of the barrels and making a draft of flour from each hole, to be inspected. In early days, when the production of flour was not large, the draft flour thus taken out amounted to but little, and it was the practice of the inspectors to keep it, as well as receive compensation in money for the inspection. Later, when the production of flour became large, the draft flour was a matter of consequence. In the statement of the case, it is shown that at the time of the decision the inspector had received, in draft flour, about 1,500 barrels from one firm. In view of the importance of the matter, an action was brought to determine whether he was entitled to it. One of his contentions was the intention of the Legislature, in revising the inspection statute and reducing the rate of compensation, to sanction this usage, by incorporating it into the statute. It never had been law, nor had it ever been reduced to writing in any form. Judge Lee, in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "But it is contended that if the custom cannot operate proprio vigore to vest the right claimed in the inspector, yet that it has been sufficiently recognized by statute, and thus has received the legislative sanction. Certainly, if it has been recognized either expressly or by necessary implication, it would thereby receive vitality, and the right claimed could well be asserted as conferred by the statute." But, upon investigation, he found that the statute had not, by any terms used, or in any manner, recognized, mentioned, or referred to the custom.

The language of the statute under consideration here is clearly within the reasoning of Judge Lee. The statute mentions the amendment. In March, 1815, Congress passed an act entitled "An act to vest more effectually in the state courts, and the District Courts of the United States, jurisdiction" in the cases therein mentioned. It will be observed that the purpose of the act, as indicated by its title, was to deal with a matter of jurisdiction in the state courts and the District Courts of the United States. No reference is made in the title to the Circuit Courts of the United States, and the jurisdiction intended to be conferred was not a jurisdiction which the Circuit Courts had under any other statute. Notwithstanding this, the fourth section of the act declared "that the District Court of the United States shall have cognizance, concurrent with the courts and magistrates of all states, and the Circuit Courts of the United States, of all suits at common law, where the United States, or any officer thereof, under the authority of any act of Congress, shall sue, although the debt, claim, or matter in dispute, shall not amount to $100.00." Chief Justice Marshall said: "The jurisdiction of the District Courts, then, over suits brought by the Postmaster General for debts and balances due the general post office, is unquestionable. Has the Circuit Court jurisdiction? The language of the act is that the District Court shall have cognizance concurrent with the courts and magistrates of the several states, and the Circuit Courts of the United States, of all suits, etc. What is the meaning and purport of the words 'concurrent with' the Circuit Courts of the United States? Are they entirely senseless? Are they to be excluded from the clause in which the Legislature has inserted them, or are they to be taken into view, and allowed the effect of which they are capable? The words are certainly not senseless. They have a plain and obvious meaning. And it is, we think, a rule, that words which have a meaning are not to be entirely disregarded in construing a statute. We cannot understand this clause as if these words were excluded from it. They, perhaps, manifest the opinion of the Legislature that the jurisdiction was in the Circuit Courts, but ought, we think, to be construed to give it, if it did not previously exist. Any other construction would destroy the effect of those words. The District Court cannot take cognizance concurrent with the Circuit Courts, unless the Circuit Courts can take cognizance of the same suits. For one body to do a thing concurrently with another is to act in conjunction with that other. The phrase may imply that power was previously given to that other; but if, in fact, it had not been given, the words are capable of imparting it. If they are susceptible of this construction, they ought to receive it, because they will otherwise be totally inoperative, or will contradict the other parts of the sentence, which show plainly the intention that the District Court shall have cognizance of the subject and shall take it to the same extent with the Circuit Courts. It has been said, and perhaps truly, that this section was not framed with the intention of vesting jurisdiction in the Circuit Courts. The title of the act, and the language of the sentence, are supposed to concur in sustaining this proposition. The title speaks only of state and district courts. But it is well settled that the title cannot restrain the enacting clause. It is true that the language of the section indicates the opinion that jurisdiction existed in the Circuit Courts, rather than an intention to give it; and a mistaken opinion of the Legislature concerning the law does not make law. But if this mistake is manifested in words competent to make the law in future, we know of no principle which can deny them this effect. The Legislature may pass a declaratory act, which, though inoperative on the past, may act in future. This law expresses the sense of the Legislature on the existing law, as plainly as a declaratory act, and expresses it in terms capable of conferring the jurisdiction. We think, therefore, that in a case plainly within the judicial power of the federal courts, as prescribed in the Constitution, and plainly within the general policy of the Legislature, the words ought to receive this construction." Postmaster General v. Early, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 136, 6 L. Ed. 577.

In South Ottawa v. Perkins, 94 U. S. 260, 24 L. Ed. 151, Mr. Justice Bradley said, in speaking of an act of the Legislature of Illinois which referred to a previous unconstitutional act as being in force: "The Legislature could not thus, in 1869, give validity to a void act as an act passed in 1857, which was not constitutionally passed in that year, for that would be an evasion of the Constitution. It could at most give it vitality as a new act from the date of the act of 1869. But this it does not profess to do. It only adopts its provisions for the purposes of the act then passed." Unlike the statute we are construing, the new statute, discussed by Mr. Justice Bradley, simply referred to the provisions of the unconstitutional statute as having been "in force February 18, 1857." It did not purport by its terms to adopt that statute, nor to express legislative will as to its future status. If it had, it is plain from the language used by the justice that it would have been operative from the date of the passage of the act of 1869, therein incorporating it.

The doctrine of Postmaster General v. Early was stated with approval by Mr. Justice Strong in United States v. Clafin, 97 U. S. 546, 24 L. Ed. 1082-83. It is to be observed, with reference to the statute construed in Postmaster General v. Early, that it used no word stating in a formal manner that the Circuit Courts shall have jurisdiction. It says the District Courts shall have concurrent jurisdiction with the Circuit Courts, merely assuming that the Circuit Courts already had jurisdiction, and not saying that they should have. This is true of the statute we are considering, in so far as it relates to the amendments made by the Circuit Court; but, while it does not say in so many words the amendment shall be law in the future, it makes the amendment a part of the statute. It incorporates it into the statute. Can we say the Legislature had no purpose in doing that? The rules hereinbefore stated forbid this. Shall we say the Legislature thus adopted it to have effect in future, if the courts should determine that it originally was valid, and to have no effect if they should say it was originally invalid? This interpretation might do, if the clause in question were a mere proviso or saving clause, relating to past acts, done under the amendment; but I have shown, I think, conclusively, that it is not, but is, on the contrary, a new and independent clause, adding to what precedes it, and not merely limiting or qualifying it after the fashion of the proviso or exception. Let it be remembered that this conclusion would render the clause noneffective. If valid, it would remain so without the aid of this clause. If invalid, this clause, so construed, would still leave it invalid. How could we reconcile this view of conditional adoption with the doctrine laid down in Postmaster General v. Early? It would be absolutely impossible to do so. Let it be remembered, too, that the doctrine of that case is not mere obiter, but matter of express and solemn decision and application of the principle. How could we reconcile it with the expression of opinion of Judge Lee in Dela-plane v. Crenshaw, an obiter dictum, it is true, but one pregnant with reason and emanating from one of the ablest jurists of his time? How shall we wipe out this doctrine in the face of its recognition and approval by the Supreme Court of the United States in comparatively recent cases?

Though the authorities cited would be amply sufficient to justify the position I have taken, they are by no means the only authorities upon that question. Allison v. Corker, 67 N. J. Law, 596, 52 Atl. 362, 60 L. R. A. 564, propounds the doctrine that, if a document of any kind be incorporated into a statute by any reference sufficient to identify it, it becomes as much a part of it, and as effective as a part of it, as if it were copied into it with positive and affirmative declarations of legislative will. In that case, the question was whether an unconstitutional statute had been validated by a statute subsequently passed. The court said: "For the purposes of this case, it may be conceded that the unconstitutional provisions referred to were inseparable from the legislative intent, so that in each case the entire statute was unconstitutional. The question raised, therefore, is fairly presented. The argument is that an unconstitutional statute is a nullity. Granting this, it does not follow that it may not be imported into valid legislation by appropriate reference. It is entirely within the legislative power to give effect to documents without their full recital. Statutes validating agreements of lease, merger, or consolidation of railroad corporations are usually cast in that form. * * * The matter is one purely of identification. Surely nothing can be more definite than a reference to a document that has been regularly promulgated as a public statute." The act in question in that case was an act concerning public roads and lights and creating boards for the control and management of the same. In providing for the election of road commissioners, the statute undertook to limit the right of franchise to the freeholders of the respective townships. The Supreme Court said that, as the qualification of voters was fixed by the Constitution, and the right of franchise extended to all persons who could bring themselves within the constitutional qualifications, and the right to vote was not limited to freeholders, the statute was for that reason unconstitutional and void. In 1896, an act was passed, not incorporating the whole of that statute, nor saying that, from and after the taking effect of the act of 1896, the unconstitutional act of March, 1893, should, as amended by the act of 1896, thereafter have effect, but merely amending the objectionable sections in the act of 1893. In Allison v. Corker, it was held that, although the act of 1893 may have been wholly void because of the unconstitutionality of the provisions of certain sections, the elimination of these objections by the act of 1896 validated the whole of the act of 1893, although the other portions of that act were not reenacted, incorporated into the new statute, nor expressly adopted by reference. The court simply held that the intention of the Legislature to put the act into future force was plainly manifested by the striking from the void statute, of that which had made it void, although it did not use express language, or the legislative terms usually employed for that purpose. In other words, the act of 1896 did not expressly declare that the whole of the act of 1893 should thereafter have the force of law, or should be deemed to have been in effect since the 1st of March, 1893, and continue to be law, but simply amended sections of it, and put them in force, and the court said this sufficiently manifested intention to put the whole act into effect.

How much stronger is the present case? Section 40 of chapter 40 of the Acts of 1891 assumes that the amendments made by the circuit court of Mason county vested power in the town council, and says nothing in this act shall be construed to take away those powers. Add to this reasonable and common-sense view the consideration that, if the purpose of this clause was not the adoption of these amendments, it could not have had any purpose, and could not be in any sense or degree effective, and thus apply the well-settled and universal rule of construction. To this add the further consideration that the purpose of the act was the provision of a new and complete system of government for the town of Point Pleasant, and the method of executing that purpose was not the building, upon former laws as a substructure, of a mere superstructure, but the laying of new foundations, and the building from the ground up of a new and complete structure, using only such of the old materials as were deemed suitable, so that the work consisted of construction and erection, not mere alteration or remodeling, and, in all substantial respects, of the process of inclusion, not exclusion, nor of the double process of inclusion and exclusion; and the position I have taken, so well sustained by the principles adverted to, becomes immensely strengthened by another well-settled rule of interpretation.

In my opinion, it is immaterial that the amendment, admittedly void for the purposes of this part of the opinion, was in the form of a court decree, and not of a statute. Void deeds and contracts, often validated by statutes, are never in statutory form. The custom in question in Delaplane v. Crenshaw, cited, was not even reduced to writing; nor was there any memorandum of the supposed circuit court jurisdiction, assumed in the statute, under consideration in Postmaster Gen. v. Early, cited. It was a mere figment of the legislative mind. In Chappell v. United States, 81 Fed. 764, 26 C. C. A. 600, an act of Congress, declaring the state laws should govern the practice in the federal courts sitting in the several states, was under consideration, and the fact that the laws so adopted were not federal laws, but laws of a different jurisdiction, was regarded as immaterial. A statute of New York, adopting certain provisions of an unofficial book, known as the "Revised Statutes," and not found in the official Revised Statutes, was sustained, and the adopted matter held to be a part of it. Will of Kavanaugh, 125 N. Y. 418, 26 N. E.

470. Nor has section 30 of article 6 of the Constitution anything to do with the case. This is not a case of revival of a repealed statute, or amendment of an existing one, by reference to its title or otherwise. Allison v. Corker, cited; State v. Cain, 8 W. Va. 720.

In view of the conclusion to which a majority of the members of the court have come, sustaining the Harden license on the provisions of the act of 1891, I see no necessity for any discussion of the validity of the amendment made by the circuit court in 1883. The validity of no act done under that amendment between 1883 and 1891 is in question. The act of 1891 is clearly a substitute for all the laws, relating to the powers of the council of the town of Point Pleasant, that were in force and effect at the date of the passage of that act. To that act, and such other laws, general and special, as have been adopted by it, we must look in ascertaining what powers the town has, and not elsewhere. But, in view of the argument and opinion expressed by Judge Miller in a dissenting opinion, I feel constrained to say something on the subject, lest my silence should be taken, by the profession, as a concurrence in the views expressed by him, or as indicating a lack, on my part, of any good reason for not concurring. I do not want to be regarded as having been silent from mere obstinacy. Nor do I wish to feel the necessity in any way of explaining my attitude, on any future occasion, requiring action on this matter, should one arise.

The constitutionality of chapter 47 of the Code, passed by the Legislature in obedience to, and by way of execution of, section 39 of article 6 of the Constitution, requiring that body to provide, by general laws, for the incorporation of cities, towns, or villages, containing a population of less than 2,000, or for amending the charters of such cities, towns, and villages, has been declared by this court. In Re Town of Union Mines, 39 W. Va. 179, 19 S. E. 398, the court held as follows: "Chapter 47 of the Code, in relation to the incorporation of cities, towns, and villages, in so far as it confers on the circuit court functions in their nature judicial and administrative, although in furtherance of the legislative department of the state government, is constitutional and valid." The same declaration has been made in exactly the same language in Elder v. Incorporators of Central City, 40 W. Va. 222, 21 S. E. 738. In both of these cases, this court declined appellate jurisdiction over proceedings in the circuit courts for the incorporation of cities, towns, and villages, under the provisions of chapter 47 of the Code, on the theory and express holding that the action of the circuit court was only quasi judicial, or that, if it was not quasi judicial, it was an administrative function, the conference of which upon circuit courts was expressly authorized by the Constitution. In the former case, Judge Dent said: "In discharging these functions, the circuit court does not act under the judicial branch of the government and is not subject to its supervision, except by mandamus or prohibition in a proper case, but acts as a part of the legislative branch of government under the express authority of the Constitution, and is subject to its supervision and control only, however, by impeachment or amendment or repeal of the law. Hence its action in discharging these legislative judicial functions cannot be reviewed by this court by a writ of error or other ordinary appellate writ, notwithstanding their judicial character." The second point of the syllabus in that case declared the same doctrine in these words: "The circuit court, in the discharge of such functions, acts as a subordinate branch or tribunal of the legislative, not of the judicial, department, and is not subject to the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Appeals of this state." This part of the syllabus is not repeated in Elder v. Central City, cited, nor is the language of the opinion of the court to exactly the same effect. Judge Holt says, by way of conclusion: "But the majority of the court being of opinion that the matter is only administrative, and that this court has no jurisdiction in a matter merely quasi judicial, the writ of error must be dismissed as improvidently awarded." Notwithstanding the declination of appellate jurisdiction in these two cases, they seem to decide whether or not the statute, purporting to confer jurisdiction upon the circuit court, was constitutional. Under that statute, the circuit court had, in each case, exercised jurisdiction. If the statute did not confer jurisdiction, because unconstitutional, in so far as it authorized, or attempted to authorize, action in the matter of incorporation by the circuit courts, then the circuit courts had acted without jurisdiction, and their want of jurisdiction itself and alone may have conferred appellate jurisdiction on the Supreme Court. Freer v. Davis, 51 W. Va. 1, 43 S. E. 164, 59 L. R. A. 556, 94 Am. St. Rep. 895; Clark v. County Court, 55 W. Va. 278, 47 S. E. 162. In this last case, Judge Miller said: "Where the subject-matter in controversy is sufficient, and the bar of the statute has not intervened, the right of a party to a void judgment or decree, to have the same reviewed and reversed, if prejudiced thereby, is unquestioned." However this may be, even though these declarations, tested by strict law, be mere dicta, I think the reasoning for the conclusion is well, clearly, and correctly, but tersely, stated by Judge Holt in Elder v. Central City. "He says: 'The statute itself erects the local body of citizens into a municipal corporation upon their bringing themselves within its provisions and upon complying with its terms, all of which are specific and fixed therein (see Thomp. Corp. § 110 et seq.); and whether the facts thus required exist in the particular case, the circuit court, after due notice to all concerned and an opportunity to be heard against the application, ascertains and determines. This is, at least, an administrative or quasi judicial function, which the circuit court may be authorized to perform. See latter clause of section 12, art. 8, Const." In saying the statute itself erects the local body of citizens into a municipal corporation, upon bringing themselves within its provisions, and upon complying with its terms, Judge Holt not only adhered to the language and spirit of the statute, but stated what is characteristic of many grants, rights, and powers made by the Legislature and conferred by the common law. His meaning is that the grant of the right to be a corporation, and to have corporate powers is complete and final so far as the Legislature is concerned; there remaining nothing to be done by it. It is a grant of a right to such people as are able to bring themselves within the conditions annexed to it, and as shall actually do so. It is not a grant without conditions. It is not a self-executing statute, it is true, but it is a grant to the people, to become effective upon their bringing themselves within its terms and conditions, without any further action on the part of the Legislature.

How broad is the application of this principle when we come to think about it! The laws of descent and distribution, the laws providing for the alienation of property by deed and will, the laws providing for the incorporation of private joint-stock companies, about the constitutionality of which there can be no possible question, involve this same principle. No person can inherit or take, under the statutes of descent and distribution, until he comes within the conditions annexed to the grant of the right of inheritance. Can we say that these statutes are self-executing, and have already vested rights to property in persons who are not yet born? As to these persons, as well as to those who are now in being, the rule declared by law exists. The only difference is that those who are now in being are within the conditions of the rule, while those who are not yet born have not come within its conditions. As to the former, the right has become concrete, absolute, and unconditional; as to the latter, it exists conditionally and in the abstract. It is a law, however, in each case, prescribed by the power of the state. It is a rule of action, actually in operation, vesting rights in persons now living, and determining in advance the rights of those who shall hereafter come into being. Take the statute providing for the incorporation of private corporations. Almost any sort of a corporation can be organized under the general laws; but they do not exist until after organization, and, in the organization of them, the Legislature does not participate. It has fully and completely performed its function by prescribing the rule and laying down the conditions to be complied with by those who desire to avail themselves of the right which the Legislature has given to be a corporation. They must, in order to vest themselves with corporate powers, enter into an agreement, the form and substance of which is prescribed by the statute; they must sign that agreement and acknowledge it; they must deliver it to the Secretary of State, together with a certain amount of money, and he then issues the certificate of incorporation. Nobody pretends that the Secretary of State organizes the corporation or grants the power to be a corporation, or exercises any legislative power whatever. His issuance of the certificate is but the performance of one of the conditions upon which the Legislature has said, in advance, the right to be a corporation shall be dependent. Now that statute says any number of persons not less than five may form a corporation in that way. Such persons as see fit to organize corporations only avail themselves, by organizing it, of a right granted to any other equal number of persons to do the same thing. As the organization of a private corporation is always a matter of agreement, and there is nothing to settle between the parties who organize it, that they cannot settle among themselves, there was no necessity for the interposition of any third party to settle differences among them. As it must be a matter of agreement, there can be no differences to settle. It is a matter of agreement or no corporation. This is not true in the case of the incorporation of municipal corporations. If those desiring the formation of such a corporation had to wait until every man in the territory proposed to be incorporated should agree to it, very few corporations of that kind would ever be formed. That was apparent to the Legislature. Hence, the necessity for a provision to meet this exigency, differing from the provision made in the case of private corporations. But this does not betoken or argue that the principle underlying the grant of the right to be a municipal corporation differs from the principle on which the grant of the right to be a private corporation operates. It is simply a difference in the mode prescribed for taking the benefit of the grant. It is simply the requirement of compliance with an additional condition, annexed to the grant, because, from the very nature of the thing granted, it was necessary to prescribe a further condition, in order to make the grant effective and fruitful.

Now, what does the statute say? Simply that the inhabitants of any territory in any county, not less than one-quarter of one square mile in extent, and numbering not less than 100 persons, may, by pursuing a certain course, convert themselves into a body politic and corporate, for the benefit of the public, and, incidentally, themselves and such other persons as may see fit to reside in the same territory along with them, whether born or yet to be born, so long as the corporation shall continue to exist. The various steps by which this is accomplished, the enumeration of the conditions to be complied with, to enable these people to obtain the benefit of the grant, hardly need to be fully set forth. They are required to cause a census to be taken, showing the population of the territory, a survey and map to be made, notice to be given of the intention to make application to the circuit court for the certificate of incorporation, and an election to be held, to determine whether it is the wish of a majority of the qualified voters of the territory to take advantage of the right of local self-government by means of a municipal corporation. Whether these things have been done in a given case are mere matters of fact, but it was apparent to the Legislature that there might be disagreement as to the state of facts, and attempts on the part of the minority to override the will of the majority, by means of fraud or trickery. Therefore it was necessary to authorize some person or tribunal, in addition to issuing a certificate, to settle any such disagreements, and to ascertain, in an authoritative manner, what the facts are, whether the population of the territory is sufficient, whether a fair expression of the will of the voters has been taken, and what that will is. Is not this investigation and determination such in character as is peculiar to courts, rather than to Legislatures or executive officers? Is it strange, then, that the Legislature should have chosen, for this purpose, that tribunal which the experience of all ages and all people has fixed and developed as the most appropriate and best qualified one for determining such questions and performing such functions, namely, a court of general jurisdiction? Now, as the matters to be determined by the court are not those of rights between man and man, such as property rights and relative rights of personal status, the determination of them may not, and probably is not, judicial in the full sense of the term; but, as has been said by Judge Holt, the function is in the nature of a judicial one, a quasi judicial function and jurisdiction. However that may be, the thing ultimately determined by the court is not whether the people of that territory have a right to be a corporation. That, the Legislature has said to all the people of the state, who are within the conditions annexed. The thing determined by the court is whether the people desiring to form such a corporation have put themselves within the conditions which the Legislature has said shall be complied with, before the grant shall become effective, just as it determines whether a man is within the conditions which the law says make him an heir to property. That, in awarding the certificate, the court performs a mere ministerial function, not in any sense legislative, after having incidentally determined, judicially or quasi judicially, that the conditions have been complied with, just as the Secretary of State issues a certificate of incorporation to a joint-stock company, after having ascertained that the applicants for that certificate have performed the conditions, which the Legislature has said they should perform, as a means of availing themselves of the right granted, seems so clear to me that I do not see how any person could doubt it.

In view of the peculiar nature of a municipal corporation, and the respects in which it differs from a private corporation, the Legislature saw fit to impose another condition, not wholly dependent upon the will of those desiring to form the corporation, nor within their power to perform. That was couched in these terms: "The circuit court may, at its discretion, by an order entered of record, direct the clerk of said court to issue a certificate of the incorporation of such city, town or village"—in substantial agreement with a form prescribed by the statute. This may authorize the withholding of the certificate after all the other conditions have been complied with. Whether it does or not we are not in condition now to decide, for the question is not before the court. But, assuming that it does, what of it? Is this power to grant it or withhold it, in the discretion of the court, legislative power? Not by any means. It is a mere matter of approval or disapproval on a view of the whole situation, after having heard the parties pro and con, annexed to the grant as another condition. It is not full, nor unlimited discretion over the subject-matter. It gives no authority to issue the certificate, if the other conditions have not been performed. It is a discretion to refuse only, not to grant. Legislative discretion and power includes both. Suppose a philanthropist, in donating $100,000 to some city or town, for the erection of a library, on condition that the city or town contribute to the fund an additional $100,000, and agree to maintain the library, and on the further condition that some person agreed upon between him and the authorities of the town, or named by him alone, shall be of opinion that, under all the circumstances, it is advisable for the philanthropist to make that particular donation. Suppose the third party says no. Does he withhold the gift or defeat the donation? By no means. The donation is defeated under a clause in the offer or grant of the donation, by a contingency which has arisen, and which was anticipated and intended to defeat it, if it arose. Its defeat was predestined and foreordained from the inception of the transaction. Suppose the third party gives his approval, and the gift is effectuated. Now, who made that gift? Did the third party make it, or he out of whose coffers the $100,000 came? The answer to this question is so self-evident and apparent as to make it almost useless to say the grant was made by the latter, and that he merely loaded it down with a condition. So here, the grant is made by the state, although the approval of the circuit court was made a condition upon which it should become effective. Now, what the nature or extent of this discretion is, it is unnecessary to discuss; but it may be suggested that it was apparent to the Legislature that there might be a doubt in the mind of the court as to whether some of the conditions to be performed by the citizens had been complied with. Whether, for instance, a fair expression of the will of the people had been taken; the court being powerless to order another election. Whether the requisite territory was included; there being no authority in the court to order a new survey. Whether the census was fraudulent or true; no authority having been given to order the taking of a new census. It may be also that it occurred to the Legislature that there might be communities in which, owing to the illiterate or vicious character of the inhabitants, contrary to the normal conditions, prevailing in the state, in which the power of local self-government would be dangerous, rather than beneficial, and ought not to be had. The Legislature may well have assumed that, contrary to the usual conditions prevailing, under which the circuit court would have no hesitancy, and ought not to have any hesitancy, in complying with the expressed will of the majority. In granting a certificate of incorporation, there might be abnormal conditions in certain communities, due to the presence of a large and vicious population, inhabiting the particular territory, temporarily, in which the right of local self-government would be abused and prostituted to improper ends and purposes, injurious to the public, and in which the application, though having the form of a proper one, should not have been made in good faith. Would not this make the effectuation of the grant depend upon a question of fact or law to be determined by the circuit court, even under this clause of the statute, and not upon the arbitrary will of the court? Is it not the duty and province of courts to construe statutes and enforce them according to the legislative intention, viewing them in the light of the subject-matter and the legislative policy disclosed by the terms and purposes of the statutes? Would the rules of construction be violated or strained by saying the Legislature never intended to bestow the right under such circumstances? This construction would eliminate the element of arbitrariness on the part of the court. The court would thus declare, not its will, but the will of the Legislature. But, suppose it were dependent upon the arbitrary will of the judge of the court, would it be any the less a condition? Any man in the state has a right to operate a ferry if he puts himself within the conditions annexed by the law giving the right. Yet the courts may, in their discretion, say he shall not exercise that right—that the conditions do not warrant it, and that it therefore refuses the permission. Is that the exercise of legislative power? Not at all. The proceeding commences in the county court, and may be continued, by appellate process, into the Supreme Court, and yet the thing sought is nothing more than a right conditionally granted by a legislative act, and the condition is approval by the court, on a view of all the facts and circumstances. Ferry Co. v. Russell, 52 W. Va. 356, 43 S. E. 107; Williamson v. Hays, 25 W. Va. 609. The broad discretion vested in the county court is given in these words, "to determine whether the ferry ought to be established or not." In Ferry Co. v. Russell, Judge Brannon, speaking for this court, said: "The evidence does not show that the travel will support three [ferries]. It shows that it will not. * * * Another element in the question is that Russell had a ferry granted by authority and it is property, and the report and evidence show that it will be injured by the proposed ferry. You say that his property cannot bar the public need I say so too. It cannot bar it, but it goes into the scales." Where did the court get this? Not from any express words of the statute. It is merely the dictate of reason and common sense, which the court rightly assumed the Legislature intended to make a part of the statute, and to have weight with the court in determining whether the ferry ought to be established. It is found in the statute by construction. What rule of law forbids a like exposition and enforcement of chapter 47 of the Code? If it be so construed, how does it confer any legislative power on the court?

All discretion is not legislative discretion. Every man in the exercise of his private powers and rights exercises discretion. In doing so, he neither becomes a judge nor a law-maker. Many discretionary powers are vested in the executive officers of the state. All the courts possess and exercise discretionary powers. How often has it been said by this court that certain actions of the circuit courts were within their sound discretion, and therefore not reviewable? How often do we find matters left, by the Legislature, within the discretion of the Governor, the auditor, and other executive officers? Discretion does not belong peculiarly to any department of the government. On the contrary, it is essential to the due and effective execution of the powers of each of the three great departments. There are many instances in which the Governor has before him transactions which possess all the forms and appearances of judicial proceedings. In the execution of his power to remove subordinate officers, for cause or without cause, he often brings them before him on a specification of charges and hears evidence in some form. The hearing of interested parties, before acting in respect to any particular matter, is characteristic of the Legislature, of the courts, and of the executive. The hearing given by the Governor in such a case, however, is not a judicial hearing, and, in removing a man from office, he does not act judicially. The function is purely an executive one. The investigation and hearing, given, as a preliminary step, although judicial in form, and although quasi judicial in nature, is a mere incident of the exercise of the executive power to remove. Does the Legislature act judicially, when it gives a hearing before a committee for the purpose of obtaining information and procuring formal recommendations, concerning the subject-matter of a proposed law? Not at all. Take the case of a county court, sitting as a board of canvassers, and performing a purely ministerial function, in the ascertainment of the true returns and declaration of the result of the election. This court, in Brazle v. Commissioners, 25 W. Va. 213, declared that, in the performance of this ministerial duty, the commissioners incidentally perform a judicial function, but that function was so purely subordinate as not to change the character of the ministerial power to which it was incident.

Moreover, the separation of the executive, legislative, and judicial powers of the state, enjoined by the Constitution, is not such an absolute separation as to make these powers independent. They are co-ordinate, working together, and carrying into effect conjointly the sovereign power of the state. Though touching one another at all points, and knitted together just as are all parts of the human body, each performing its peculiar function, all three must be in constant operation and be to some extent united. Lewis' Suth. Stat. Cons. § 2, says: "This separation is deemed to be of the greatest importance, absolutely essential to the existence of a just and free government. This is not, however, such a separation as to make these departments wholly independent, but only so that one department shall not exercise the power nor perform the functions of another. They are mutually dependent, and could not subsist without the aid and co-operation of each other. Under the Constitution, the Legislature is empowered to make laws. It has that power exclusively. The executive has the power to carry them by all executive acts into effect, and the judiciary has the exclusive power to expound them as the law of the land between suitors in the administration of justice. The Legislature can do no executive acts, but it can legislate to regulate the executive office, prescribe laws to the executive which that department, and every grade of its officers, must obey. The Legislature cannot decide cases, but it can pass laws which will furnish the basis of decisions, and the courts are bound to obey them. The functions of each branch are as distinct as the stomach and lungs in our bodies. They are intended to co-operate, not to be antagonistic. They are functions in the same system. When each functionary does its appropriate work, no interference or conflict is possible." Story, in his work on the Constitution, at section 525, says: "When we speak of a separation of the three great departments of the government, and maintain that that separation is indispensable to public liberty, we are to understand this maxim in a limited sense. It is not meant to affirm that they must be kept wholly and entirely separate and distinct, and have no common link of connection or dependence, the one upon the other, in the slightest degree. The true meaning is that the whole power of one of these departments should not be exercised by the same hands which possess the whole power of either of the other departments, and that such exercise of the whole would subvert the principles of a free Constitution. This has been shown with great clearness and accuracy by the author of the Federalist." In Wheeling Bridge & Terminal Railway Co. v. Paull, 39 W. Va. 142, 19 S. E. 551, this court expressed the same idea in the following terms: "But the Constitution, within itself, after the declaration of this general doctrine, proceeds to make many laps of the various departments, so as to make them mutually dependent upon and supporting each other; thus welding them into an harmonious whole, or three distinct departments in one, for the preservation, at the smallest expense possible, of the largest freedom of individual rights consistent with the general welfare. Were it practicable to keep these three departments wholly distinct, the increase of the necessary offices and officers would be so great, and the expense thereof so burdensome, as to render the cost of the administration of the government unbearable, especially to the citizen taxpayer who must contribute, and yet not share in the distribution of the taxes. So that, while we find that the Constitution, as much as possible, keeps the heads of the three departments comparatively distinct and independent of each other, yet, as we move down the scale, these several powers become interwoven with each other, until we find the common council of every village exercising legislative, executive, and judicial functions, indiscriminately, by authority of the same Constitution which declares that these functions shall be kept distinct."

In view of this interpretation of the declaration of the Constitution that the three departments of government shall be kept separate, what does it signify that there is a scintilla of legislation in the function performed by the circuit court in granting a certificate of incorporation, if, indeed, there be one? It is not an exercise of the whole of legislative power, respecting the organization of municipal corporations. The grant of the right, by the Legislature, to the people to be a corporation is the principal element in the erection of a body politic and corporate. The function performed by the court is of minor and secondary importance, and would be wholly ineffective and futile, but for the grant made to the people by the Legislature. Moreover, the court has no power of initiation. The statute gives it no power to impose, upon people who have not asked for it, the organization of a corporation. Furthermore, it has no discretion to grant, but only to refuse, the certificate. Can this be the exercise of the whole legislative power over the subject? But I do not concede that there is even a scintilla of legislation in the function performed by the circuit court. It simply hears the interested parties, those who come forward professing to represent a majority of the voters of the community, demanding, as against the minority, a right which the Legislature has given, and the remonstrances of the minority, asserting that the conditions upon which the Legislature declared the right should vest, do not exist. The latter may show, among other things, that the survey, census, and election were fraudulent. They may show, in addition to this, or without this, that the whole population of the community, with the exception of one man, are mere tenants of that one man under a lease which will expire in two years or less time, and that the sole purpose of the applicants for incorporation is the burdening of that one man's property with taxation, and that the affairs of the proposed corporation, after it shall have been organized, will be so manipulated by these people as to give themselves the benefit of the taxation, through the filling of useless lucrative offices, provided, and otherwise. To meet such a case of bad faith and abuse of the law, accidental and unusual in its circumstances, and putting the application beyond the purpose of the statute, the Legislature might well have said that the circuit court should have power to refuse the certificate of incorporation, in its discretion, and, because of the impossibility of laying down all the abnormal conditions which may be found to exist in the numerous communities of the whole state, we may well say that the Legislature necessarily employed the phrase "in its discretion," intending that the court should regard the survey, census, and expression of popular will, as making out a prima facie case, to meet conditions ordinarily found throughout the state, but to be overthrown by proof of abnormal or extraordinary conditions prevailing in a given community. This makes the function performed by the court a mere judicial determination of questions of fact, and declaration of law, according to legislative intention expressed in the statute.

What, then, does the certificate of incorporation amount to? Not the grant of the right to be a corporation. Merely a declaration, ministerial or judicial, that the conditions, annexed by the Legislature to the grant, have been found by the court to have been performed, in so far as any duty was devolved by the act upon the inhabitants of the territory, and to have existed, in so far as they were conditions not within the control, or dependent upon the will, of the inhabitants. Is it not the duty of the court to give effect to a statute, by such construction as will make it constitutional, when it is possible to do so? Cannot the words "in the discretion of the court," being general, and necessarily so, owing to the impossibility of naming every possible exigency and condition with which the court may be confronted on these applications for incorporation, be so construed as to leave not even a modicum of legislation in its action? If necessary to do so, in order to effect such an elimination, can we not say that the Legislature intended, in the absence of the disclosure of some peculiar circumstance, showing abnormal conditions, that the court, upon an application showing the requisite territory and population and expression of the will of the voters so clearly as to leave no doubt, is bound to grant the certificate of incorporation; and that its discretion to refuse amounts to nothing more than the power of declaring judicially that the prima facie case, made by such showing, has been overcome by proof of peculiar circumstances, intended by the Legislature to overthrow it? That no mode of review has been provided is wholly unimportant. Is not the action of a justice in rendering a judgment for less than $15, and of a circuit court in rendering one for less than $50, judicial action? No appeal lies in either case. No doubt, scores of other illustrations could be given. Nor does it argue anything that a right of review is given in ferry cases.

It is plain, in respect to the organization of municipal corporations, that the Legislature devolves upon courts only the duty of settling questions of fact and declaring the law thereon—just what it does in cases of pure judicial cognizance. An illustration of the application of the same principle is found in the statute enforcing the power of eminent domain. The appropriation of private property to public use is made by the assertion and exercise of the power of the Legislature, not the power of the courts nor of the persons or corporations to whom the property is turned over for public use. The power of the court is interposed for no other purpose than to determine judicially whether the applicant has put himself within the conditions, annexed by the Legislature, to the grant of the right to one man to take and use the property of another for the particular purpose in question. It must be a public use or purpose. What is a public use is a question left ordinarily to the determination of the court. It cannot be taken except upon payment of just compensation. What is just compensation is left to judicial determination. In this case, the court has no power of initiation. It makes no grant of any right. It creates nothing, ordains nothing. It merely determines questions of law and fact arising in the execution and carrying into effect of the grant made by the Legislature. Its order, declaring that the use for which the property is sought is a public use, and that the compensation ascertained is a just compensation and has been paid, is logically and substantially nothing more than a certificate to the effect that the conditions annexed to the grant have been performed or exist. Of course, the same questions do not arise in the two cases for there is a dissimilarity in the subject-matter; but is it not plain that the principle in each case is exactly the same?

Take, as another illustration, the appointment of trustees to hold the title to property belonging to religious congregations. Under section 47 of article 6 of the Constitution [Code 1906, p. lxiii], declaring that no charter of incorporation shall be granted to any church or religious denomination, but that provision may be made by general laws for securing the title to church property, and for the sale and transfer thereof, so that it may be sold, used, or transferred for the purposes of such church or religious denomination, the Legislature passed chapter 57 of the Code [Code 1906, p. 1074], providing for the appointment of trustees by the circuit courts, to take and hold the legal title to such property. The object of this statute was to enable religious congregations and denominations to have a means of preserving a record of the legal title to their property, and to have that title vested in somebody, so that the property might be protected by all proper actions and legal proceedings in the name of the trustees, and conveyances thereof made, as other property is protected and handled. It was made for the benefit of religious congregations. It was a grant by the Legislature of a right to them. It was the execution by the Legislature of its sovereign power, vested by the Constitution, to regulate the holding of real property by religious denominations. It does not force upon them the duty of appointing trustees, and so fixing in them the legal title. It extends the right to do so. It is a grant of a right by the Legislature to religious denominations and congregations. They must be such bodies so as to come within the conditions prescribed by the statute, and an application must be made for appointment of trustees. Now this jurisdiction to appoint such trustees, as well as trustees for secret orders, colleges, academies, high schools, sons of temperance, orphan asylums, children's homes, and other benevolent associations, is exercised by the circuit courts throughout the state, and has been since the adoption of the Constitution and even before. The circuit court is, by this statute, made a mere ministerial agency through which such institutions may claim the right granted to them by the Legislature. It is difficult to see any element of judicial power in them. There may be none. The duty appears to be purely ministerial, and it is vested in a court of general jurisdiction. In some instances, the exercise of this power calls for action quasi judicial in its nature. There may be controversies to settle as to whether the institution is of the kind mentioned in the statute, whether the person appearing on behalf of it has been authorized to make the application, and whether the persons designated by him for appointment are persons whom the congregation desires to have appointed. While the determination of such controversies is judicial in form and judicial in nature, it is only quasi judicial in truth and in law, because it arises in the performance of a ministerial function by the court.

Take, as another illustration, the provisions made for the sale of lands of infants, on the theory that their interests will be subserved thereby. Nobody proceeds against the land, and nobody has a debt against it or any right to put it to sale. It is not in any sense the ordinary adversary judicial proceeding. The proceeding is merely the means by which an infant exercises the right given him by the statute to make an irrevocable and binding contract of sale of his real estate, when his condition and that of his estate are such that the sale will conserve his best interest. Whether it will or not is a judicial question, referred by the statute to the court, and the court is charged with the further duty of seeing that the requirements of the law, looking to the preservation of the proceeds, are complied with. Many courts designate the function as the execution of a legislative power. Ammons v. Ammons, 50 W. Va. 390, 40 S. E. 490; Bright v. Boyd, 1 Story (U. S.) 478, Fed. Cas. No. 1,875. This is not any more judicial perhaps than is the action of the court in condemnation proceedings or in the appointment of trustees. All these instances, and others that could be pointed out, show, however, that the work of the courts is not confined strictly and absolutely to matters of pure and unadulterated judicial action in ordinary adversary proceedings. Purely ministerial functions are cast by the Legislature on the courts, and in doing so the Legislature does not overleap any of the bounds set by the Constitution. Ministerial power belongs alike to the executive, legislative, and judicial branches. To say that the Legislature shall not confer upon the circuit court any ministerial powers, not incident to the exercise of its judicial powers, would be equivalent to erecting or declaring a fourth department of the government for the officers of which the Constitution has made no provision. It does not say the sovereign powers of the state shall be divided into four departments, viz., the executive, legislative, judicial, and ministerial, but only three.

I do not think the general principles declared by the cases, cited by Judge Miller, as tending to cast doubt upon the constitutionality of so much of chapter 47 of the Code as confers power upon the circuit courts, are in conflict with the views here expressed; but the application of some of these general principles, made by the courts in Norwalk Ry. Co.'s Appeals, 69 Conn. 576, 37 Atl. 1080, 38 Atl. 708, 39 L. R. A. 794, and in Re North Milwaukee, 93 Wis. 616, 67 N. W. 1033, 33 L. R. A. 638, may not be applicable here as persuasive authority, because the terms of the two statutes construed in those cases were essentially different from the language of our statute. However, I think those decisions are unsound. The question decided in the former case was stated, by the judge who delivered the opinion of the court, in the following terms: "The act of 1893 confers upon city councils certain powers in establishing regulations for the location, construction, and operation of street railways, and requires a council, if requested by a railway company, to take some action within 60 days, and to notify the company in writing of its action. Whenever a council fails to give such written notice, the act of 1895 confers the same powers upon the 'superior court or any judge thereof,' to be exercised on application of a railway company, and calls this application an 'appeal.' The power so conferred on the court is described in the act of 1893 as the power to approve and adopt a location and lay out a street railway, with such modifications therein as shall seem proper, in respect to the streets to be occupied, the location of the same as to grade and to the center line of the streets, and changes to be made in the street, the kind and quality of the track to be used, the motive power to be used, and the method of applying the same." The part of the statute which that court held void reads as follows: "And whenever such warden and burgesses, mayor and common council, or selectmen shall, under the provisions of section 2 of chapter 169 [page 308] of the Public Acts of 1893, be deemed to have refused to approve and accept any plan presented by any street-railway company, said street-railway company shall have a like right of appeal therefrom to said superior court, or any judge thereof; and said court or judge shall have the same powers with reference to said plan and the acceptance or modification thereof that said principal authorities would have had under the provisions of said act, and may make all such orders with reference thereto as may be deemed equitable." The powers that the principal authorities had under the statute were as follows: To "accept and adopt such plan [the plan proposed by the railway company] or make such modifications therein, as to them shall seem proper." All this had to be read in the light of another clause of the statute, which said: "No such company shall construct a railway, lay down tracks, or change its motive power except in accordance with a plan approved by the authorities aforesaid." The court said: "The meaning of the act of 1893, relating to street railways, is uncertain in several particulars; but there can be no doubt that it confers on municipal authorities, in addition to certain executive powers, the power of establishing regulations and conditions (within the limitations prescribed) which shall control all the street railways in the state, in the location, construction, and operation of railways. There can be no doubt that making such regulations is essentially and distinctively a legislative function. It is also certain that the judicial power does not include the exercise of such a legislative function, and that the duty of making such regulations cannot be imposed upon the superior court, because it involves the exercise of legislative power by the court, and because a power in the Legislature to impose such duties is inconsistent with the existence of an independent and separate judicial department of government." It is to be observed here that the statute did not expressly give the right to the railway company to occupy the streets otherwise than conditionally. It seemed to make that right dependent solely upon the will of the council of the town. It said: "No such company shall construct such railway, lay down tracks, or change its motive power except in accordance with the plan approved by the authorities aforesaid"—meaning the corporate authorities of the town. On the refusal of permission to occupy or to alter the mode or extent of the occupation of the streets, authority was given the court to prescribe the manner and extent of the occupation or alteration. Here is where the superior court found fault with the statute and discovered what it held to be an attempted conference of legislative power upon the judiciary. It seems to me that the court might well have found the intention of the Legislature, as disclosed by the two provisions of the statute, to grant to the railway companies the right to make these alterations, by agreement with the council, if possible, and, if not, then upon compliance with such reasonable conditions as the court should find and determine to be equitable and just under the circumstances of the case. The alterations were to be made in the public highways, over which the Legislature has absolute power and control with reference to their use. The Legislature might have given the right to make such alterations as the railway companies should see fit to make, not inconsistent with the reasonable use of the highways for other purposes, independently of any action or wish of the council. Having the power to grant such absolute right, why could it not grant the same right to a limited extent, by the imposition of such restraints and restrictions, as a court might deem equitable under the circumstances? Does not the whole include every part?

The rule of conduct for the court was prescribed in the statute in these words: "May make all such orders with reference thereto as may be deemed equitable." Is not the ascertainment and determination of what is equitable more of a judicial than legislative function?

A very similar authority and power is conferred upon the courts of this state in reference to railroad crossings. Where one railroad company, desiring to lay its track across the track of another, is unable to agree upon the mode and manner of effecting the crossing, a suit in equity may be prosecuted in the circuit court for the determination of what? Not whether there is a right to cross. That, the Legislature has solemnly ordained. It is for the purpose of determining what, under the peculiar circumstances of the situation, is equitable and just between the parties, as to how the crossing shall be made, and amounts to a restriction of the grant, by the imposition of such conditions as are just and equitable under the circumstances, the ascertainment of which belongs more properly to the judiciary than to any other branch of the government. Is it anything more than is done by the statute enforcing the power of eminent domain? The fitness of a court, for determining what is a public use, and what is just compensation for property taken, was so apparent that it did not occur to the framers of the Constitution that there was necessity for authorizing the Legislature to make such a reference to it. It was merely assumed that such a reference would be the natural disposition of it, for the proviso, not the body of the section, requires the compensation to be fixed by a jury of 12 freeholders, if demanded by either of the parties. In the Norwalk Case, one member of the court dissented and filed a vigorous opinion, which seems to me to show that the decision is against the great weight of authority as well as reason. He says: "It was undoubtedly competent for the General Assembly to grant this franchise, and to guard against its improper exercise by giving the city supervisory powers. It was equally within its appropriate domain to grant an appeal to some suitable tribunal for any unreasonable conditions which the city might impose. * * * I think, however, that the appeal to Judge Hall may fairly be regarded as a judicial proceeding calling for the exercise of judicial power. He was bound to dispose of it in accordance with the fundamental rules of law. * * * A difference of opinion between a municipal corporation and private corporation as to what is a reasonable use of a legislative franchise affecting the public highways, which difference must be settled before the franchise can be used at all, seems to me to present a case which it is eminently proper to place within the jurisdiction of a court. * * * Had the General Assembly authorized a railway company, whose plan of construction, though duly submitted to the city authorities, had neither been approved nor disapproved, to apply to the superior court for a mandamus to compel them to act, there could have been no objection to such a remedy." This view as to legislative power has been expressed by this court in Armstrong v. County Court, 54 W. Va. 502, 46 S. E. 131. A conclusion exactly the opposite of that announced by a majority of the court in the Norwalk Case was declared in Zanesville v. Zanesville Telegraph & Telephone Co., 64 Ohio, 67, 59 N. E. 781, 52 L. R. A. 150, 83 Am. St. Rep. 725, mentioned by Judge Miller in construing a very similar statute. The sixth and seventh points of the syllabus, conforming exactly with the views I have hereinbefore expressed, read as follows: "Telephone companies, organized under the laws of this state, have the right, by virtue of sections 3454, 3461-1, and 3471 of the Revised Statutes, to construct their lines along the streets and public ways of municipal corporations, in accordance with the order of the probate court, made in pursuance of section 3461, directing in what mode the lines shall be so constructed, when the municipal authorities and the company fail to agree, or the former unreasonably delay to enter into an agreement with the company. The power to make such order, as provided in section 3461, is not inappropriately conferred on the probate court, and that court has complete jurisdiction of a proceeding instituted therein in conformity with that section. The provision is not obnoxious to the Constitution of the state, on the ground that the power it confers is distinctively legislative or administrative, but is constitutional and valid." The statute in that case said: "And if they cannot agree, or the municipal authorities unreasonably delay to enter into any agreement, the probate court of the county, in a proceeding instituted for the purpose, shall direct in what mode such telegraph line shall be constructed along such street, alley, or public way, so as not to incommode the public in the use of the same." In reaching this conclusion the court quoted and applied from the opinion of Judge Selden, in Cooper's Case, 22 N. Y. 84, the following, which seems to me to assert the true principle: "It is certainly clear, as a general rule, that whenever the law confers a right and authorizes an application to a court of justice to enforce that right, the proceedings upon such an application are to be regarded as of a judicial nature." Proceeding, the Ohio court says: "It is competent for the state, through its legislative department, to grant to telephone and telegraph companies organized under its authority the right to construct their lines in the streets of municipalities, and in the present instance the grant was so made. The inability or failure of the council to come to an agreement with the company in regard to the mode of using the streets for that purpose practically amounts to a denial of the company's right, the remedy for the enforcement of which is that provided by section 3461 Rev. St. The administration of that remedy does not involve the exercise of any continuing supervisory powers over the municipal or telephone corporation, nor the adoption or execution of administrative regulations for the government of either, but consists of an order made by the court in the usual manner of legal proceedings, after a hearing of the allegations and evidence of parties who are brought before the court by proper process."

The Milwaukee Case holds unconstitutional a statute very similar to ours, providing for the incorporation of municipal corporations conferring upon the court power in the following terms. "If the court after such hearing shall be satisfied of the correctness of any such survey or re-survey and census, that all the requirements of the statute have been complied with, * * * it shall make an order declaring that such territory, the boundaries of which shall therein be set forth by courses and distances, and which may be enlarged or diminished by such court from the boundaries specified in such application, as justice may require, shall be an incorporated village by the name specified in such application, or by such other name as the court shall deem proper, if the electors thereof shall assent thereto as hereinafter provided." Judge Miller very well says this case is contrary to the weight of authority. It would be a useless consumption of time and waste of energy to point out and enumerate the numerous decisions which stand against it. They propound the doctrine which I have stated, and the vice of that decision lies in its departure from those principles. All the other cases cited by Judge Miller on this question affirm the principles I have stated. Hence it becomes unnecessary to analyze them. The Norwalk and Milwaukee Cases are plainly exceptional, stray, isolated, sporadic, and indefensible decisions, such as may be found occasionally standing against a host of well-considered cases, enunciating almost any proposition of law. I say this with the utmost deference to the learned judges who delivered the opinions in those cases, feeling it to be my duty not to attempt to distinguish where there is no distinction, nor to attempt to reconcile where reconciliation is impossible. Such attempts always tend to unsettle the law, and mislead.

I have discussed, analyzed, and illustrated this general principle, sustained by the great weight of authority throughout this country, at this great length, because it is the principle by which the validity of the legislative act, under which the circuit court of Mason county acted, in amending the charter of the town of Point Pleasant, must be tested. If the Legislature granted the power to the town of Point Pleasant, as well as to all other municipal corporations in the state, and not merely to the circuit court, authority to grant the power on behalf of the Legislature, then it stands upon the same footing as the power conferred upon the court in respect to the organization of municipal corporations. If it did, it was the legislative grant of power to the corporation that effected the amendment, not the action of the court, just as in the case of the organization of such corporations, and the function performed by the court was a mere judicial function, or a ministerial function, involving judicial action as an incident thereof. The act provides for alteration, change, or amendment of the charter of any city, town, or village containing a population of less than 2,000, on the application of any five or more freeholders thereof, filed, in the form of a petition, in the circuit court of the county, stating clearly the object of the petitioners, and setting forth accurately the proposed amendments, as well as any other facts necessary to enable the court to decide whether the alteration, change, or amendment shall be made as proposed. Upon the filing of the petition, the court is to enter an order in the chancery order book, stating the object of the petitioners, a copy of which order, attested by the clerk, must be posted at the front door of the courthouse and published in a newspaper, if one be published in the city, town, or village, and, if not, it shall be posted at four public places in the city, town, or village. Provision is then made for remonstrance by any of the freeholders of the city, town, or village, and for the taking of depositions and affidavits to enable the court to decide whether or not the prayer of the petitioners shall be granted. The court is vested with full power to reject the prayer of the petitioners, and if no answer is filed the court may, upon the petition alone, grant the relief prayed for or the object sought to be obtained, and have such orders entered, certificates made, and other acts done as may be necessary to enable it to decide the case fairly upon its merits. Section 5 (page 113) reads as follows: "If the court grants the amendment or amendments prayed for, it or they shall be written out in full in proper form; shall be signed by the judge of said court, and attested by the clerk, and recorded in the chancery order book of the court, and, if not inconsistent with the laws of this state, shall become part or parts of the charter of such city, town or village."

It is difficult to conceive any language better calculated to give, by way of amendment, the broadest powers that the Legislature could give, consistently with existing laws. The amendment is not confined, by the language of the statute, to any particular kind or class. It gives power to alter, change, or amend the charter. A later section assumes that the court may grant, not one amendment, but amendments. Another section implies that the object of the petition may be something other than the enlargement or diminution of the boundaries. In order to give it any effect, we must say the statute was intended to give power of amendment in respect to something other than the addition of territory, or change the boundary lines, because chapter 47, in section 48 thereof, had already made ample provision for that, and the act of 1877 did not expressly repeal it, and it has since been carried along in that chapter as a part of it. That section 48 of chapter 47, antedating the act of 1877, and the Acts of 1877, were intended to operate together and to be harmonized, is made plain by the incorporation of the act of 1877 into chapter 47 as section 47a thereof. It is not limited to the matter of amendment respecting boundaries. Its scope is defined by section 5, p. 113, of the act of 1877, which says that the amendment or amendments so made shall become part or parts of the charter, if not inconsistent with the laws of this state. What does the letter of this language of the statute import? Plainly that a municipal corporation of the class named has the right to amend its charter, so as to give itself any power, no matter what, that the Legislature itself could give, provided it be not inconsistent with some law of the state. To this extent, it is a wholesale grant of power to municipal corporations of that class. It is not a grant to the court of power to amend, any more than the grant of a right to be a corporation is a grant of power to the court. The court is not authorized to take the initiative. It cannot move in the matter except upon the application of five or more freeholders of the corporation. It has no discretion to grant, but only to refuse. It sits to determine, among other things, whether the amendment asked for is inconsistent with the laws of the state. Is not that one of the functions of a judicial tribunal? It is the only tribunal authorized by the law to determine what is, and what is not, law. If it is not inconsistent with law, that the petitioners are prima facie entitled to the relief asked may be the correct view to take, but this may be overthrown by the action of the remonstrants, in showing it to be against the will of a majority of the voters or freeholders, or in disclosing some peculiar condition, making the power asked oppressive, unjust, or demoralizing to the community, just as in the case of an application for a certificate of incorporation. Courts must construe statutes so as to make them effective, if possible. They cannot fold their arms and say a statute is void, merely because they do not readily, and at first blush, see what the Legislature intended. They must seek out the intention and carry it into effect as far as possible. Does it require any imagination to see that this discretion is the same kind as that conferred in reference to original incorporation? Are there not normal and abnormal conditions to be considered here, as there? Cannot a court distinguish between them?

Is the grant of the right of amendment and alteration, so made to municipal corporations, upon the conditions annexed to the grant, unconstitutional because it is a wholesale grant, because the powers so granted are not enumerated and specifically defined? Is a power of attorney void, on the ground of uncertainty or otherwise, because it gives to the attorney the power to do all things which the principal himself could do? Practically all powers of attorney are drawn in that form. Is not that certain which can be made certain?

When the Legislature says that a municipal corporation may have, by way of amendment to its charter, any power and all powers, not inconsistent with law, where is the element of uncertainty in the grant? There is a right of election, for it is not to be assumed that any one corporation would want, or could exercise, all powers, not inconsistent with general laws; but this does not make the grant uncertain. If one man sell to another any or all of the horses in a certain field, as the vendee may elect, or of a certain breed or color in such field, at a certain price per head, the contract would be an absolutely good one. So here, the powers granted are designated and defined in a general way. They are all the powers, not inconsistent with general laws, which the Legislature could grant to a corporation, if it could legislate specially for such corporation, and the corporations may, upon election, and compliance with the conditions annexed, take any of them they desire. This is the proposition decided by the Mississippi cases, cited in Judge Miller's opinion. And Judge Miller very truly and properly says the Mississippi case did not involve the question of imposing legislative duties upon the court. If there was any legislative duty, or delegation of legislative powers in it, the duty was imposed upon, or the delegation made to, the Governor or the Attorney General, executive officers, representing the executive department, and the Constitution as emphatically inhibits such delegation to the executive department as it does to the judicial department. It says the three departments shall be separate. It is plain, therefore, that there was no delegation of legislative power, either to the judicial or the executive department. There was no such delegation at all. It was a legislative grant of power, upon condition, made direct to the corporations or the people, which is not important. And the only function performed by the Governor or Attorney General was a mere ministerial one, involving the incidental exercise of discretion, a matter which belongs to all three of the departments. The Mississippi case not only sustains the position that there is no delegation of legislative power involved, but the further position that the wholesale grant of powers so made by the statute is not void for uncertainty or for want of enumeration, specification, and minute definition of each power so granted. The provision of the Mississippi Constitution was, in substance, the same as that of our Constitution. It did not reserve, independently of legislative action, to the people of any community the right to incorporate and take unto themselves all such corporate powers as were not inconsistent with general law, as does the California Constitution, which has been sustained as valid by repeated decisions of that state. It authorized the Legislature to pass general laws for the incorporation of municipalities and the amendment of their charters, just as our Constitution does. The Legislature, in passing this general law, imposed upon the Attorney General and Governor the duty which our statute, made for the purpose of carrying into effect the same kind of a constitutional provision, has imposed upon the circuit courts. If the Mississippi court had seen in this statute an attempted devolution, upon the executive department, of legislative power, it would have declared the statute void for that reason. It sustained the statute because there was no such devolution, and ours must be sustained, so far as that matter is concerned, because there is no such devolution. It sustained the statute, notwithstanding it made a wholesale grant of powers, because it was not in violation of any principle of law of which the court had any knowledge, and ours must be sustained for the same reason. It cannot be overthrown for some supposed reason which the court cannot define or state. The wisdom of such action on the part of the Legislature is not a question for judicial determination. Courts have nothing to do with the wisdom or policy of legislative action, as has been shown by authorities cited at the outset of this opinion. Such legislation may be unwise and impolitic, but it cannot be overthrown by the courts for that reason. "The courts have no right to set aside, arrest or nullify a law passed in relation to a subject within the scope of legislative authority, on the ground that it conflicts with their notions of natural right, absolute justice, or sound morality." Slack v. Jacob, 8 W. Va. 612, Syl., point 5.

Something has already been said concerning the intention of the Legislature in making this conditional grant of power to municipal corporations by way of amendment to their charters. Judge Miller assumes that the amendment must not be inconsistent with chapter 47 of the Code. He says so. His argument is that chapter 47 of the Code is a law of the state, which is true, and as the amendment, in order to be effective and valid, must not be inconsistent with the laws of this state, it must not be inconsistent with chapter 47. This view, it seems to me, ignores or overlooks the important consideration that the statute granting these amendments is a part of chapter 47, which makes it impossible for any such amendment to be inconsistent with that chapter. In other words, chapter 47, embodying as a part of it the act of 1877, confers, proprio vigore, certain powers upon municipal corporations, constitutes the charter of these corporations, and then says it (chapter 47), viewed as the charter of the corporation, may be altered, changed, or amended, in any respect and to any extent, not inconsistent with the laws of the state. In other words, it says chapter 47 itself, being the charter of every corporation organized under it, may be altered, changed, or amended in any manner, not inconsistent with law. What else is there but chapter 47 to change, alter, or amend? Nothing. If it cannot be altered, changed, or amended, then the provision allowing amendment becomes a dead letter. Courts cannot kill statutes in any such manner. How can any amendment be inconsistent with the provisions of a chapter which gives such power to amend? When a corporation is organized under chapter 47, the provisions of that chapter constitute its charter, and that charter says the corporation may have any power, not inconsistent with the general law, which the corporation may see fit to claim or elect to take, by way of alteration, change, or amendment of its charter—its charter, chapter 47 itself, the only charter it has. This was not true of the town of Point Pleasant at the date of the amendment of its charter, because it had not been incorporated under chapter 47. It was chartered by special act of the Legislature in 1794, and its charter was amended by special act of the Legislature in 1860; but the additional powers given to corporations of its class by chapter 47 were conferred upon it by that chapter. But this act of 1877 was applicable to said town in 1877 and 1883, because it then belonged to the same constitutional class of corporations, having less than 2,000 population. To say this statute, granting amendments to the charters of municipal corporations of that class, contemplates no amendment inconsistent with chapter 47, makes it, I repeat, a nullity. It would be impossible to amend it in respect to the number of its officers or their powers and duties, or terms of office, for any change in any respect would be inconsistent with that chapter, except in a few instances in which it authorizes specific changes, such as increasing the number of wards and number of councilmen, consistently with the growth of the town. The alteration might be in respect to powers to pave streets, pave sidewalks, put in sewers, and a vast number of other things not bearing any relation to the liquor traffic. It is an important statute, the principle of which must be upheld in some form to enable the Legislature to execute a power and duty enjoined upon it by the Constitution. In dealing with it, the court must not regard it as subserving some particular purpose or interest.

Judge Miller's conclusion, that the amendment must not be inconsistent with chapter 47, is predicated largely on the clause in the certificate of incorporation, prescribed by section 9 of chapter 47 of the Code, reading as follows: "And it appearing to the satisfaction of the court, that all of the provisions of chapter forty-seven of the Code of West Virginia have been complied with by the applicants for said incorporation, and said city (town or village) is duly authorized within the corporate limits aforesaid to exercise all the corporate powers conferred by the said chapter from and after the date of this certificate." That relates to an unamended charter. On the organization of a corporation, under chapter 47, it takes the powers enumerated and defined in that chapter. That chapter is, in one sense, the town's charter, and, in another, a general law under which other corporations may be organized. All corporations so organized have those powers, and no others. Their powers are uniform. They are all put on the same footing exactly. In the absence of any amendments, each has the powers enumerated, defined, and granted by that chapter. But that chapter, as amended by the act of 1877, gives to each of these corporations, on its organization, certain powers, and the additional power to claim and take by election other powers, additional powers, and to eliminate, by change and alteration, some of the powers given by chapter 47, and the principle of the amendment is the same as the principle under which the organization is effected in the first instance. It stands upon a grant of power direct from the Legislature to the corporation or the people thereof, to become effective upon the performance of certain conditions. These other additional and different powers do not go to the corporation at the inception of its existence. It was competent for the Legislature to have given them all in the first instance if it had seen fit to do so, and, while the court may see no particular reason why it should not have authorized them in the first instance, as did the Legislature of Mississippi, it is the province of the Legislature, and not of the court, to say whether it shall be so done or not. As the Legislature has said that a corporation shall begin its existence with certain specific and clearly defined powers, and make such changes thereafter as it may see fit to make, provided these changes do not contravene any of the general laws of the state, the courts must allow the statute to operate according to the intention of the Legislature. It was a mere matter of expediency and public policy with which the courts have nothing to do.

The argument of Judge Miller seems to rest also upon the idea that the Constitution, by implication or otherwise, requires all municipal corporations of less than 2,000 population to have uniform charters. I have found nothing in the Constitution which expressly says so, nor is there anything in it, or the circumstances under which it was adopted, from which such an implication can arise. At the date of the adoption of the Constitution, there were numerous towns and villages in the state, falling in that class, holding charters granted by special acts of the Legislature and widely differing in the powers conferred. All these charters were continued in force. Not one of them was annulled. The Constitution therefore recognized and sanctioned, by implication, lack of uniformity in the charters of such corporations, section 39 of article 6, forbidding the passage of special laws for the incorporation of cities, towns, or villages, or amending the charter of any city, town, or village, containing a population of less than 2,000, and enjoining upon the Legislature the duty of providing, by general laws, for these and all other purposes, for which provision can be so made, does not say that the general law shall be uniform in operation as well as general. The requirement that the law be general does not imply that it be uniform in its operation and effect in the full sense of the terms. State v. County Court of Braxton Co., 55 S. E. 382. But, if it did, is not this statute, conditionally granting amendments, uniform in its operation? It makes exactly the same grant to every corporation in the state falling within that class. It makes a conditional grant to each and every one of them, the right to change its charter in any respect not inconsistent with the laws of the state. It does not force this change upon any corporation. It makes it a matter of election with the corporation, or rather the freeholders. In so far as the act is carried into effect by the action of the Legislature, it is both general and uniform. It stands on exactly the same footing in this respect as the provisions of chapter 47, giving the right to incorporate. Those provisions extend to the inhabitants of every one-quarter of one square mile of territory in the state, having a population of not less than 100 persons, the right to be a body politic and corporate; and these provisions are not defeated for want of uniformity or generality, because the inhabitants of some of these territories, having the requisite population, see fit to incorporate, and others do not. Viewed in the abstract, it is both general and uniform, as is every other general law, such, for instance, as the law of inheritance. Viewed in the concrete, it is uniform and capable of becoming general, just as other general laws, operating prospectively. The purpose and object of the clause of the Constitution, above referred to, has been declared by this court to be something other than the requirement of uniformity in charters. Judge Holt said, in Elder v. Central City, 40 W. Va. 222, 21 S. E. 738: "In 1872, the organization of many parts of the state into municipal corporations, for the purpose of local self-government, had become a matter of frequent and urgent necessity. The framers of the Constitution thought that this need in the great majority of cases could be met more efficiently and impartially by a general law than by a great multitude of special enactments." He regarded it as a mere matter of convenience, saving time, expense, and trouble. Ordinarily, the Legislature is in session only 45 days out of 730, and, to compel the people of a community to wait two years for an act of incorporation would have been unreasonably burdensome. It would occasion not only delay and expense, but uncertainty, owing to the great rush of matters pressed upon the Legislature in this short session, by reason of which many meritorious bills fail for want of time to consider them. Moreover, the people wanted the Legislature relieved from the useless burden of labor and consumption of time, formerly bestowed upon these charter bills, to the end that that body might have more time for the consideration of general laws and such special laws as were necessary for which general laws could not be substituted. In the case of Town of Union Mines, 89 W. Va. 179, 19 S. E. 398, Judge Dent, speaking for the court, said: "But the Constitution, to relieve the Legislature from being hampered with this inquiry in every case, requires the Legislature to enact a general law for the incorporation of all cities, towns, and villages of less than 2,000 inhabitants." If every amendment made by the Legislature by general law had to be carried into the charter of every corporation of that class, this plain object of the constitutional provision under consideration would be defeated, for every proposed amendment would then bring to the Legislature the representatives of every municipal corporation in the state belonging to the class named, and give them the right to be heard, for it would become part of the charter of every such corporation. Instead of minimizing the work of the Legislature and simplifying its mode of dealing with these corporations, it would complicate the matter and add to the legislative burdens. Such a construction of the provision would defeat the very thing this court has declared to have been its purpose. It would make the provision a felo de se. In view of these important considerations, amply justifying and vehemently calling for the insertion of this clause in the Constitution, ought the court to add on a lot more of mere fanciful suggestions of reasons, and give weight to them in the construction of that clause, so as to make it mean what it plainly does not mean, when viewed in the light of conditions which were recognized and sanctioned by it and the framers of the Constitution in which it is found, and such in character as to defeat what has been declared to be its object? If lack of uniformity in municipal corporations of this class was regarded by the people as an evil which they desired to eradicate, is it not strange that, having the power to annul all the special charters then existing, differing from one another even more than one star differs from another, they did not do so, but, on the contrary, expressly declared that all these laws in force at the adoption of the Constitution should remain in force until altered by the Legislature? Matters of this kind, bearing on the question of intention, are not fancies, conjectures, or surmises. They are stubborn facts, not to be offset, nor the inferences arising from them overcome, by groundless suggestions of other considerations.

To me, therefore, it is perfectly clear that, by the amendment in question, the council of the town of Point Pleasant acquired the sole power to grant or refuse licenses of all kinds, unless the exercise of that power would have been inconsistent with some law of the state other than any provision of the Constitution to which attention has been directed, and other than chapter 47 of the Code. Whether it is or not, I have no occasion to inquire, since my declared purpose in writing on this branch of the case is now fully accomplished, namely, the statement of reasons for neither concurring in certain views expressed by Judge Miller, nor allowing them to pass unchallenged. Whether the amendment made by the circuit court in 1883 is inconsistent with any law of the state is not a constitutional question, but one of legislative intention to be ascertained from a view of the statutes.

As chapter 40 of the Acts of 1891 clearly vested in the council of the town of Point Pleasant sole power to grant licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors, the license granted by it to the defendant Harden was valid. In holding it invalid, the circuit court of Mason county erred, and as the validity of his license is the only question in the case, this conclusion not only reverses the judgment and sets aside the verdict, but finally disposes of the case, under the operation of a rule lately declared by this court in Ruffner Bros. v. Insurance Co., 53 S. E. 943, and other cases.

McWHORTER and MILLER, JJ., dissent, reserving the right to file opinions.

(15 N. C. 56)

BOWSER et al. v. WESCOTT.*

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Sept. 17, 1907.)

1. PUBLIC LANDS—LANDS OF STATE—ENTRY—PROTEST—NATURE OF PROCEEDINGS.

A protest against an entry on land alleged to belong to the state as authorized by Revisal 1905, § 1709 et seq., is not a civil action to try title to land, but is a special proceeding under the entry laws to ascertain if the entryman, so far as the protestant only is concerned, is entitled to enter the land described in the entry.

2. SAME—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Revisal 1905, § 1709, provides that, if any person shall claim title to or interest in land covered by an entry, he shall, within the time of advertisement provided in the previous section, file his protest in writing with the entry taker against the issuing of a warrant thereon, whereupon the claimant on notice by the clerk shall appear at the next term of the superior court, and show cause why his entry shall not be declared inoperative and void. Held that, where a protest is filed under such section, the burden of proof is on the entryman to show that the land was unappropriated and subject to entry as against the protestant at the time his entry was made.

*See note at end of case.

Walker and Hoke, JJ., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Dare County; W. R. Allen, Judge.

Protest by Crissie Bowser and another against an entry made by George T. Wescott on land alleged to belong to the state under Revisal 1905, § 1709 et seq. From a judgment in favor of the entryman, protestants appeal. Reversed.

D. M. Stringfield and Ward & Grimes, for appellants. W. M. Bond, for appellee.

BROWN, J. It is contended by the learned counsel for the enterer that there are admissions in the record that the protestants have no title to the land entered, and that under the ruling in Johnson v. Wescott, 139 N. C. 29, 51 S. E. 784, the protest should be dismissed and the enterer permitted to take out his grant. We fail to find any such admission in the record. It is admitted that the protestants on the trial failed to connect themselves by evidence with the possession of Ben Etheridge, Barbara Frost, or Ned Bowser; but that is far from being an admission of record that protestants have no title or possession of the land in controversy, and that it is open to entry. The evidence tends to prove that protestants are in actual possession of the land and were at the time the entry was made; that there was a field cultivated on it in 1871; that Barbara Frost cleared the land and was in actual possession of it for 25 years; that Ben Etheridge moved on the land 30 years ago; and that Ned Bowser had been cutting all over the land for the same length of time. There is other evidence which it is unnecessary to discuss in the view we take of the case. Further reflection convinces us that we should adhere to our decision in Walker v. Carpenter (at last term) 144 N. C. —, 57 S. E. 461, by which the burden of proof is placed upon the enterer to show at least so far as the protestant is concerned that the land is unappropriated and open to entry. The question had never been presented before, nor anything analogous to it that we can find. We therefore cannot "travel with ease along the highway of precedent," and must be guided by what we think is a proper construction of the statute and the evident intent of the General Assembly in enacting it. It is a source of satisfaction to feel that if we are in error that body will doubtless correct it in due season.

In the first place, let it be understood that we do not intend to reverse the ordinary rule of proof in an action to try title to land, as this is not a civil action within the meaning of the statute. It is a simple proceeding under the entry laws to ascertain if the enterer, so far as the protestant only is concerned, has a right to enter the land described in the entry. It is well to note the history of the protest section of the entry laws as indicating the purpose of the General Assembly to relieve what was possibly a hardship upon many landowners of the state, for it is fundamental that a statute should be so construed, if reasonably possible, as to give effect to the remedy intended. Prior to the amendment to the entry laws, when the protest proceedings were introduced, an entry could not be protested. The first enterer, by paying the small stipend required by the statute, after survey, secured his grant from the state, and became the prima facie owner of the land. The person who contested his right had to bring suit to vacate and set aside the grant, or, if sued himself, after the grant had been put in evidence, had still to assume the burden of making out an indefeasible title. And this is the law now where the grant has been issued and legal proceedings commenced. Thus it was in the power of land speculators to enter lands generally without the least investigation of the ownership, and, by paying a mere pittance for their grants, to put the apparent owners and possessors of the lands to proof of their title. If they failed upon some slight technicality, these enterprising land hunters acquired title. This condition of the law continued from the earliest times up to 1883, when for the first time the right to protest an entry was given, and provision made for establishing in the superior court the rights of the enterer before grant issued. Section 2765 of the Code.

We are unable to find any trace of such proceeding in the legislation of the state prior to that time. When the state had large bodies of public lands open to entry, the old law worked no great hardship, for the location of those lands was well known; but now that the state owns practically no bodies of land that are open to entry, only timber hunters, and not the state, are benefited by adhering to it. By incurring the trifling cost of an entry, and without incurring any expense whatever of investigating titles, the enterer was enabled, not only to put the owner of land to the great expense and burden of demonstrating the title in court, but to avail himself of any defect which lapse of time, death of witnesses, or lost deeds and records may occasion. To remedy this great hardship must have been the purpose of the General Assembly in adopting the provisions of the Code of 1883. What else could have been the prompting motive for such legislation? If we still place upon the protestant the burden to make out his title in order to defeat a simple entry, it seems to us we defeat the only purpose of the act, for the protestant then is in no better position in contesting an entry than he would be in seeking to vacate and set aside a grant. A grant is the solemn deed of the state under its great seal, and he who attacks it and seeks to vacate it, should assume the burden of proof, for the presumption is that the sovereign owns the land she undertakes to convey. But, while it is presumed the state once owned the lands within its borders, there is no presumption that it remains vacant and is open to entry. Laying an entry is the act of the enterer, and not the act of the state, and there is no presumption that the lands he appropriates are open to entry. "So far as the state is concerned, it is a matter of indifference who appropriates the land, provided it to be paid for." Ashley v. Sumner, 57 N. C. 123. "It is not material to the state what vacant land is granted; but such entries are not allowed to interfere with the rights of other citizens." Pearson, C. J., in McDiarmid v. McMillan, 58 N. C. 31. We quote these extracts for the purpose of showing the state's indifference to entries of land, while, on the contrary, the interests of the citizen possibly gave him a very lively interest in them. It was therefore we think in the interests of the citizens who own and occupy land that the act of 1883 was enacted to the end that the right to make the entry may be established before a grant is issued. This act was repealed by the next General Assembly and the old law restored. Chapter 132, p. 199, Acts 1885. But we find that the General Assembly of 1891 repealed the repealing act, leaving the law as enacted in the Code of 1883, and as it now appears in the Revisal of 1905. We can see no reason for restoring the act of 1883 unless it was in some measure intended to protect a bona fide claimant and possessor of land against the hardships entailed by indiscriminate entries and to compel careful investigation before making entries. If we still place the onus probandi on the protestant in his contest with the enterer, the act of 1883 might as well not have been restored.

It is contended that we are compelling the enterer to prove a negative, to produce proof exclusively within the knowledge of the protestant and practically to perform an impossibility by showing that no one has any interest in the land entered. The first proposition is discussed in Walker v. Carpenter, and we will not repeat here what is there said. In that case we attempted to analyze the statute and to show that by its terms the claimant must establish on the trial his right to enter the land. With due deference for the opinions of others, we think it would be to entirely destroy the beneficial purpose of the act to hold that this requirement can be fulfilled by putting in evidence a simple entry, the ex parte act of the one who offers it.

Neither are we compelling the enterer to produce proof exclusively within some one else's knowledge or to perform an impossibility. The notice required by the act is intended to inform the neighborhood that the enterer claims a right to enter a certain piece of land, the boundaries of which are given.

If no one protests against such right, the grant issues as a matter of course, if the statute in other respects has been complied with. If a protest is filed, then the enterer must make good his right as against the protestant only, and not against all the world. If, in response to the notice, only one person protests, the law presumes that the enterer has infringed upon the rights of no one else. Under our present registration act, which bears the name of our learned Brother, Mr. Justice Connor, it is as possible for the enterer to run out the adjoining boundary of the protestant and to investigate his title deeds as it is for the protestant to do it himself. Without the registration law of 1885 we would be compelled to admit the force of the contention. Since then the record of title to land is an open book, free to the examination of all, and we suspect this consideration had something to do with the passage of the act of 1891. We think there is a marked distinction between this case and the cases cited in behalf of the enterer. McCormick v. Monroe, 46 N. C. 13, and Board of Education v. Makely, 139 N. C. 31, 51 S. E. 784. The former was decided 30 years before the act we are construing was passed, and is entirely consistent with what is hereinbefore said in respect to the burden of proof when a grant is attacked. The case further holds that, where there is an exception in a grant, the onus of proof lies upon the party who would take advantage of the exception, in which ruling we fully concur. The Makely Case was likewise an attack upon a grant issued by the state, and the decision is in full accord with what we have herein said in respect to grants. In our opinion the ex parte act of an individual is not to be invested with that presumption of rightfulness which attends the act of the state, and there is nothing in either case which militates against this view, as we read them. We can say the same of McNamee v. Alexander, 109 N. C. 242, 13 S. E. 777, in which this court refused to enjoin the Secretary of State from issuing a grant upon the ground that the plaintiff had a complete remedy given by section 2786 of the Code, now section 1748 of the Revisal of 1905. In conclusion we will say that in adhering to our former opinion we are not laying down a rule of proof of our own invention, but are giving effect to legislation which has never been construed before. The effect of the decision can only be to make those who undertake to enter land more particular in making a preliminary investigation of the title to the land they seek to appropriate.

New trial.

WALKER, J. (dissenting). The case shows that the protestants, who are the nominal, and, as I think, the real and substantial, plaintiffs in the record, failed to show that they had any title to or interest in the land, or to prove any facts upon which they could base a claim thereto. The presiding judge ruled, first, that the protestants must show title or interest in order to get a standing in court; and, second, that they must take the burden of proving that the land was not the subject of entry. It is impossible for me to perceive why both rulings were not correct. The first is plainly in accordance with the very words and requirements of the statute, for it is expressly provided therein, as a condition precedent to the right to file and maintain a protest, that the protestants shall have, or at least claim, title to or interest in the land covered by the entry, and this requirement is introduced by strict words of condition. "If any person shall claim title to or an interest in the land covered by the entry, he shall file his protest in writing." Revisal 1905, § 1709. The protestants have therefore failed to show themselves qualified to contest the right of the defendant under his entry. In their protest they assert that they are the owners of the land, but there was no evidence of this fact in the case, although they attempted to establish it. The claim of the protestant must, of course, be bona fide, and the evidence must in some way connect him with the title or interest. The case might well end here, I think, with an affirmance of the judgment, as to my mind at least nothing is clearer than that by the explicit language of the statute the protestant must have an interest in the controversy and for a very good reason. The state is concerned only to protect those who have acquired vested rights or interests in her lands, and, where no such private interest exists, her policy is, and ever has been, to encourage the entry of lands, so that they may be cultivated, improved, and enhanced in value, and thereby increase its wealth and prosperity. It surely was not intended to promote a litigious or vexatious spirit among the people by permitting any interloper, who may imagine that he has a grievance against his neighbor, to attack the validity of his entry. The state does not seek to encourage litigation of that kind. Its well-settled policy has been the reverse of it. "Interest reipublicæ, ut sit finis litium."

The onus of proof was properly placed upon the protestant by the court. It has, perhaps, been truly said in regard to the burden of proof that there is no one rule, or set of harmonious rules, which furnish a sure and universal test for the solution of any given case, and that there is not and cannot be any general solvent for all cases. But certain general principles have been recognized as affording sufficient aid in determining upon whom should rest the burden of proof, in view of the particular nature of the case under consideration. Some of the more important ones may be thus enumerated: (1) He who alleges an affirmative must take the burden of proving it. Millsaps v. McCormick, 71 N. C. 531; Edmonston v. Shelton, 49 N. C. 451; Hinson v. King, 50 N. C. 393; Coving- ton v. Leak, 65 N. C. 594. (2) He who asserts the existence of a fact essential to his success must establish it, even though it may be alleged in a negative form. Willett v. Rich, 142 Mass. 356, 7 N. E. 776, 56 Am. Rep. 684; Nash v. Hall, 4 Ind. 444. (3) When a fact is peculiarly within the knowledge of a party, or the evidence which will show it is more available to him, or he has more means of knowledge concerning the fact to be established than the other party, he must assume the burden of proving it. State v. Privett, 49 N. C. 103; Cook v. Guirkin, 119 N. C. 17, 25 S. E. 715, and cases cited. And this is said to be true even if the proposition involved be negative instead of affirmative. Robinson v. Robinson, 51 Ill. App. 317. (4) Where the burden of proof is may be determined by considering which of the parties would succeed if no evidence was offered and by the effect of striking from the record the allegation to be proved. The onus is on the party who under such a test would fail. 16 Cyc. p. 932; Porter v. Sill, 63 Miss. 357; Martin v. Macey, 4 Ky. Law Rep. 625. (5) The burden of proof is on the party alleging a breach of duty or the commission of a wrong, even though it involves a negative, so it has been said. Baird v. Brown, 28 La. Ann. 842. The foregoing rules are supported by Stephen's Digest of Evidence (May's Ed. of 1886) pp. 143, 144, 145, 146, and notes. There are, of course, other rules to the same effect which might also be considered, but those mentioned will suffice it seems to me in this case to determine upon whom is the burden of proof.

The affirmative of an allegation is not always determined by its form. Here the protestants allege that the entry is void, because the lands were not the subject of entry. The allegation would be precisely the same if he had said that the entry was not valid and thus expressed the idea negatively. But this does not destroy its affirmative character, no more than the same kind of change in the form of an allegation that a deed or other instrument is void. The statute says that, when the protest is filed, a notice shall issue to the enterer to show cause, not why his entry is valid, or why he should have a grant, as the court virtually construes it, but "why his entry shall not be declared inoperative and void." This language clearly implies that the law regards it as prima facie valid if the formalities required by the statute have been observed, as was the case here, because the law will never presume a wrong, and, upon the bare entry without any proof whatever, adjudge that the enterer has violated the law by laying his entry on land not vacant or otherwise not subject to entry; nor will it "declare" an act, which is apparently valid, to be void without some proof of its invalidity. It proceeds upon proof, and not upon mere conjecture, and gratuitously imputes evil to no man. It presumes innocence of wrong, until there is evidence to the contrary, and it will assume that an entry which has not the appearance of any wrong, but which, on the contrary, has been shown to have been made according to the prescribed forms of the law, is rightful, and for this and other sufficient reasons it requires, not that it shall be validated by proof from the enterer, but that he should show cause why it should not be invalidated by proof from the protestant. Is there any precedent in the books for a court to declare, or to decree (which is in effect the same thing), an act which is apparently valid to be void, without at least some proof of its invalidity? If there is, it reverses the very elementary principle of all judicial procedure.

I am unable to see any practical difference between this case and McCormick v. Monroe, 46 N. C. 13, and Board of Education v. Makely, 139 N. C. 31, 51 S. E. 784. In the last case, at page 35 of 139 N. C., at page 786 of 51 S. E., we said: "This is not an action to recover the realty, but is brought for the avowed purpose of removing a cloud from the plaintiffs' alleged title, and for that purpose to have vacated and canceled the grant issued by the State to the defendant. Plaintiffs are, therefore, as we have said, the actors, and they allege the affirmative of the issue to be the truth of the matter." The opinion of Pearson, J., in McCormick v. Monroe, seems to have a direct bearing upon this important question. In that case the defendant, in attacking a grant, relied upon an exception in it, upon the ground that the land described in the exception had previously been entered and granted. The learned judge said: "The only question is: Upon whom does the onus lie? Clearly upon the defendant." And again: "This is but an instance of the familiar rule that the affirmative must be proved." A reading of that opinion will show that practically the same question was involved as we have in this case. He further says: "Another view of the subject may be taken. Suppose no part of the land had been previously granted. If the onus be on the plaintiff (the enterer and grantee), he can never recover one acre of it, yet it is admitted that he is entitled to 250 acres of it. * * * It is settled that, where the land is the subject of entry, the grant is voidable (if attacked directly for fraud, irregularity, etc.). Where the land is not the subject of entry, the grant is void, and may be so treated in ejectment or trespass." But the burden is always upon the party who attempts to assail it, as Judge Pearson demonstrates, by applying one of the cardinal maxims of the law, and he attaches no importance to the fact that a grant had actually issued upon the entry. It is the fact, upon which the attack is based, to wit, a previous entry or grant, that must be established by him who affirms the invalidity of the subsequent grant, or who would except any part of the land from the operation of the grant or from its general description by reason of the existence of that fact. This opinion of Judge Pearson has been approved. Gudger v. Hensley, 82 N. C. 481; King v. Wells, 94 N. C. 344; Dugger v. McKesson, 100 N. C. 11, 6 S. E. 746; Midgett v. Wharton, 102 N. C. 14, 8 S. E. 778, Manufacturing Co. v. Frey, 112 N. C. 161, 16 S. E. 902. Many other cases might be cited illustrating and enforcing the same rule, but those we have selected will suffice to show that when a party attacks an entry or grant because the land described in it has been previously entered or granted, or because it is, for any other reason, not the subject of entry, he must prove it, or fail in his suit. There is no presumption that land has been previously entered or granted. If there is any presumption at all in such cases, it is precisely the other way, namely, that it has not been. It is for this reason, among others, that we unanimously decided in Board of Education v. Makely, 139 N. C. 31, 51 S. E. 784, that where the plaintiff claimed that a grant was void and should be canceled because it conveyed swamp land, which was not the subject of entry, the burden was upon him to show it; and that case was not ejectment, but the suit was brought by the board of education, acting for and representing the state in its sovereign capacity, to set aside the grant. The two cases may perhaps be distinguished by reason of a slight difference in their facts, but the principle underlying them cannot be. It has always been understood that, where a grant is assailed because it was based upon an entry which in its turn was laid upon land not vacant, the burden is upon the party assailing the grant; and the decision in this case, it seems to me, shakes the foundation of all the law upon this question which has heretofore been considered as settled. In Whitney v. Morrow, 50 Wis. 197, 6 N. W. 494, the right of the plaintiff to recover depended upon the question whether the land had been entered or occupied in 1828, and the court said that, in the absence of proof, it could not be held that it had been so occupied, and as the existence of that fact was essential to the plaintiffs' success they should have proved it, under the general rule "that the obligation of proving any fact lies upon the party who substantially asserts the affirmative of the issue." That case seems to furnish a clear and striking analogy to the one we now have in hand.

The second of the principles above stated, that he who asserts the existence of a fact essential to his success must prove it, is clearly applicable to this case, as the pivotal fact asserted here is, that the land was not vacant and this rendered the entry void. The same may be said of all the above remaining rules. It must be remembered that the statute requires the protestant to show that he has a title or interest; and whether he has or not is peculiarly and necessarily within his own knowledge, and the evidence to establish that fact is more available to him than to his adversary. The plaintiffs actually allege in the protest that they are the owners of the land.

As to the fourth of the rules enumerated, it may be said that, if no evidence is offered in the case, the protestant must fail, as the entry being regular in form, under the statute, there is no presumption against it, and, there being no proof of the fact that the land was not vacant, there is nothing upon which a judgment for the protestant can be based. Finally, the law never presumes a wrong, but its maxim is that all acts are taken to have been rightly and regularly done. "Omnia præsuntur rite esse acta." Under this maxim the formal requisites of the statute having been complied with, the enterer will not be presumed to have committed the wrong of having entered land which was not vacant. The entry of land under such circumstances would be not only a legal but a moral wrong, and the law never imputes wrong, and surely never convicts of it, until some proof is forthcoming from the accuser. The enterer therefore has made out a prima facie case, which must stand until overthrown by proof coming from the protestants.

But the crucial test in this case is that the law will not require an impossibility of any one. "Lex non cogit ad impossibilia." It does not seek to compel a man to do that which it must know he cannot possibly perform. Broom's Legal Maxims (6th Am. Ed.) p. 184. How can the enterer show that the land was vacant or had not been entered? The protestant can easily show that he has acquired the title by entry and grant, or in some other way, or even that it had been entered by another than himself, if that were sufficient under the statute; but the enterer would be compelled to survey every entry and grant recorded in the register's office, and even then he would not have exhausted all the proof of this requisite fact, for the state's title to the land may have been acquired by another, or lost by it, in some other manner. How can it be successfully denied that to do this is practically impossible? Again, if we compare the ability of the two litigants to adduce evidence in the case, we find that the protestant's greatly exceeds that of the enterer. He is required to show only his own title to, or interest in, the land covered by the entry, and every man is conclusively presumed to be prepared with proof of that kind, because his interest is surely enlisted on that side. The law therefore charges him with knowledge of his own title and of all the facts which could tend to establish it. Every reason that can be suggested would seem to demonstrate that the protestant is the party who must assume the burden of proof in such a case as this one.

The provision of the statute that the enterer shall set forth the lines or boundaries of adjoining tracts in his entry should count for nothing, for the land may be so located as to be sufficiently described under the statute, by natural boundaries, and, besides, the proximity of land which has already been granted to the tract in question has no tendency in law to show that the latter was not vacant when entered. Nor can I attach any importance to the argument that the enterer is the actor, for the reason that he asserts his right to enter the land. The conclusive answer is that he has already entered it, and the protestant seeks, in this proceeding, to have "the entry declared inoperative and void," to use the language of the statute. He is therefore the aggressor, or the one who affirms the invalidity of the entry, and he should by every rule of law and justice be required to prove it. In McNamee v. Alexander, 109 N. C. 246, 18 S. E. 777, this court, in a similar suit to vacate an entry, placed the burden of proof upon the plaintiff who attacked it.

It is indeed strange that we should disagree as to whether the enterer showed any title to or interest in the land in dispute. "It was admitted that the protestants could not connect themselves with the possession of Ben Etheridge, Barbara Frost, or Neal Benson, so far as it had been shown." Indeed, no possession was shown which operated to ripen a title in any one, whether protestants connected themselves with the possession or not. It must be borne in mind that here the only attempt was to show title by possession under color. How then can the Connor act of legislation apply? Would an investigation of the books show who had been in possession? And right here let us inquire why the burden should be put upon the enterer, even if the books did disclose the title. Is it not much easier for the protestant to carry the burden, as he is perfectly familiar with his own title?

And, again, the proof of title may be mixed, depending partly upon grants or deeds and partly upon possession, estoppel, and other elements which go to make up a good title. When the enterer lays his entry, he acquires an equitable title to, or at least an interest in or right to, the land (Plemmons v. Fore, 37 N. C. 312), which is sometimes denominated an inchoate right or equity, and which may be assigned and which is regarded as a valuable one and protected by the law as much so as any other vested right or estate (Bryan v. Hodges, 107 N. C. 492, 12 S. E. 430), and which according to ordinary rules can only be defeated by showing a better right in another. Even a subsequent enterer and grantee must take the burden of showing a superior right as against a prior entry, even when no grant has issued thereon. It is a great mistake to suppose that the title to all the public lands of the state have passed out of it by entry and grant or in any other way. The reports of the Secretary of State, which are public documents and of which we take judicial notice, will show the contrary. State v. Railroad, 141 N. C. 846, 54 S. E. 294. The presumption, therefore, that any lands entered are vacant, still prevails, and we can find no case in which it has even been intimated that this presumption has ceased to operate, and we know of no reason why it should not now have its full force.

I concurred in the able dissenting opinion of Justice Hoke filed in Walker v. Carpenter, 144 N. C. —, 57 S. E. 461, and for the reasons therein so clearly and forcefully stated, as well as for those herein set forth by me, I am unable to agree with the majority of the court. The great importance of the question involved, and the effect of the ruling in this case upon prior decisions of this court, is my only reason for having said anything about it. That the policy of the state, which has heretofore been enforced, will be defeated by this decision, seems to me clear, and the entry of the public lands seriously embarrassed, if not prevented.

HOKE, J., concurs in the dissenting opinion of WALKER, J.

NOTE.

Grants of Public Lands.

I. ENTRY AND SURVEY.

[a] (U. S. 1815) Act April, 1783, c. 2, opening the land office and fixing the price of land at £10 for each 100 acres, and authorizing any citizen to enter a claim for any lands, provided such claim does not exceed 5,000 acres, does not prohibit a person from making several entries amounting in the whole to more than 5,000 acres, nor from purchasing the rights acquired by entries or from uniting several entries in one survey and patent.—Polk v. Wendal, 13 U. S. (9 Cranch) 87, 3 L. Ed. 665.

[b] (N. C. 1802) Lands lying in one county cannot be entered in another county.—Avery v. Strother, 1 N. C. 558.

[c] (N. C. 1806) The books of an entry taker are not notice of an entry having been made.—Merrill v. Sloan, 5 N. C. 121.

[d] (N. C. 1817) No cases in relation to the entry of vacant land are affected by the act of 1779, except those which arose from the discontinuance of land offices. In all other cases the first enterer must prevail.—McNeil v. Lewis, 4 N. C. 517.

[e] (N. C. 1820) By statute of 1777, every citizen of the state, or who should become such, was authorized to enter lands of the state; but the statute required them to subscribe the oath of allegiance before making the entry. Held, that an entry by one who had not taken such oath was invalid, and not rendered valid by his subsequently taking the oath.—Thompson v. England, 8 N. C. 137.

[f] (N. C. 1820) So, where A., being entitled to land by occupancy, but not entitled to enter the same by reason of his not having taken the oath, procured B. to enter the land on his claim, who did so, and obtained a grant to himself, on a bill filed by A., after having become a citizen of the state by taking the oath of allegiance, it was held that the transaction was an evasion of the law, and a fraud upon the state, and that the bill must be dismissed.—Thompson v. England, 8 N. C. 137.

[g] (N. C. 1820) A deputy surveyor cannot survey land entered by himself; and if he does so, and another deputy fraudulently makes out a plot from his field book, and obtains a grant to himself of the land, the former will not be entitled to call upon the latter for a conveyance of the legal title to himself.—Avery v. Walker, 8 N. C. 140.

[h] (N. C. 1827) A grantee cannot survey his own entry.—Greenlee v. Tate, 12 N. C. 300.

[i] (N. C. 1842) An entry upon vacant public land creates an equity which, upon payment of the purchase money in due season, entitled the person entering to a grant, in preference to a person who has entered, and paid the price in the meantime.—Plemmons v. Fore, 37 N. C. 312.

[j] (N. C. 1843) The act of assembly of 1842, giving until 1845 to complete the title, by paying the price, under lapsed entries made since 1836, will not give such entries a preference over those made subsequently to such lapse, upon which the price is paid within the time allowed by the statute.—Bryson v. Dobson, 38 N. C. 138.

[k] (N. C. 1845) An entry taker cannot appoint a deputy, nor can the acts of one in the capacity of a deputy be rendered valid by the subsequent acquiescence of the entry taker in what he has done.—Maxwell v. Wallace, 38 N. C. 593.

[l] (N. C. 1847) Where a father made an entry of land in his own name, and afterwards directed the entry in his son's name, and in the meantime another entry was made, it was held that the son was not entitled to have a grant to the second enterer prior to his own set aside.—Russ v. Hawes, 40 N. C. 18.

[m] (N. C. 1849) One who makes an entry, and has it surveyed, cannot afterwards shift its location to the detriment of a subsequent enterer.—Munroe v. McCormick, 41 N. C. 85.

[n] (N. C. 1849) Where B. made an entry of land prior to a conflicting entry made by A., and before B. discovered that the land he entered, including a rock quarry, was vacant, he had agreed to purchase part of a tract of land which A. claimed, and which was supposed to include the rock quarry, but in the agreement the rock quarry was reserved to A., it was held that this formed no reason in equity why B. should not enter the rock quarry, when he found it to be vacant.—Allen v. Gilreath, 41 N. C. 252.

[o] (N. C. 1858) A prior entry, which is vague, acquires no priority, as against other enterers, until it is made certain by a survey.—Currie v. Gibson, 57 N. C. 25.

[p] (N. C. 1858) A person who makes a vague and indefinite entry of land, which he ascertains does not cover the land aimed at, cannot shift the entry to another piece of land which was entered before such attempted transfer, especially if he has notice of the prior entry.—Ashley v. Sumner, 57 N. C. 121.

[q] (N. C. 1859) A prior entry of vacant land, not acted on, but abandoned, under a misapprehension of its efficacy, although known to a subsequent enterer, who complies with the law and gets a grant from the state, can, in no degree, help out a still later entry and grant, for such abandoned entry becomes null and void after the time prescribed for its effectuation has expired.—Stanly v. Biddle, 57 N. C. 383.

[r] (N. C. 1859) There is no policy of the state which requires that an entry shall have lapsed before another can be made.—Stanly v. Biddle, 57 N. C. 383.

[s] (N. C. 1860) In locating a pre-emption right, under Act 1850, § 7, in respect to Cherokee land, one entitled to locate under the agent's certificate is not bound to respect the advantage or convenience of one who has an improvement in the vicinity, and who also has a certificate of a pre-emption right, obtained however subsequently to the other.—Barnett v. Woods, 58 N. C. 423.

[t] (N. C. 1875) Battle's Revisal, c. 41, § 2, permitting nonresidents to enter and take out grants for vacant land of the estate, provided they "comply with the laws of the state in relation to such entries," construed to require the enterer to become a resident within the time prescribed for perfecting the entry.—Mockridge v. Howerton, 72 N. C. 221.

[u] (N. C. 1877) No estate or interest in land is acquired by an entry, only a right of preference. So, where A. and B. enter land jointly, and afterwards B. declines to take out a grant from the state, and A. takes out one in his own name, paying the purchase money therefor, held, that B. has no estate in the land.—Hall v. Hollifield, 76 N. C. 476.

[v] (N. C. 1877) A grant issued pursuant to an entry in the name or for the benefit of a nonresident is voidable at the suit of the state.—Wilson v. Western North Carolina Land Co., 77 N. C. 445.

[w] (N. C. 1877) A grant taken out upon an entry made by a nonresident, by a person capable of taking and holding under the laws of the state, is valid.—Wilson v. Western North Carolina Land Co., 77 N. C. 445.

[x] (N. C. 1887) Plaintiff claimed land under a grant from the state. Entry on the land was made in one county, and the survey and other proceedings necessary to the issue of the grant were had in that county, and the grant described the land as situated therein. The land, however, was wholly situated in another county. Held, that the entry, and other proceedings in connection with it, and the grant under it, were void, as not complying with the provisions of Code, §§ 2751, 2788, prescribing what lands shall be the subject of entry, in what way entries shall be made, and appointing an entry taker for each county.—Harris v. Norman, 96 N. C. 59, 2 S. E. 72.

[y] (N. C. 1887) Code, § 2784, which provides that where a claimant makes an entry on land in one county near the county line, not knowing exactly where the line is, the entry shall extend to and include adjoining lands situated across the line in an adjoining county, and all grants issued or entries made for such lands, when the money has been paid into the state treasury, shall be valid, as against any entries thereafter made or grants issued, does not apply where the land is wholly situated in an adjoining county.—Harris v. Norman, 96 N. C. 59, 2 S. E. 72.

[z] (N. C. 1888) Under Code, § 2765, providing that public lands may be entered by the claimant producing to the entry taker a writing describing the land, a copy of which the entry taker shall enter in a book, an entry of land placed in the entry taker's book without his authority, by a claimant of the land, is of no validity.—Pearson v. Powell, 100 N. C. 86, 6 S. E. 188.

[aa] (N. C. 1890) An entry of land creates an equity in it, which, upon the payment of the prescribed purchase money to the state, within the time limited by the law (Code, § 2765; Rev. St. c. 42, § 11; Acts 1809, c. 771), will entitle the enterer to a grant.—Bryan v. Hodges, 107 N. C. 492, 12 S. E. 430.

II. LANDS SUBJECT TO GRANT OR ENTRY.

[a] (U. S. 1827) The act of North Carolina of 1783, for the relief of officers and soldiers in the continental line, provided that certain bounties of lands shall be granted to them, and that a certain quantity of land should be granted to each head of a family, and to every single man of 21 years or upwards, provided no such land should include any salt creeks or salt springs which are hereby reserved as public property, together with 604 acres of the adjoining lands, for the common use and benefit of the inhabitants of that county, and not subject to future appropriations. Held, that the commissioners appointed by the act in behalf of the state "to examine and superintend the laying of the land in one or more tracts granted to the officers and soldiers had implied power to survey and reserve a salt creek, and, having done so, the land was not subject to entry or survey as vacant land.—Edwards v. Darby, 25 U. S. (12 Wheat.) 206, 6 L. Ed. 603.

[b] (N. C. 1822) Lands covered by navigable waters are not subject to entry under the act of 1777.—Tatum v. Sawyer, 9 N. C. 226.

[c] (N. C. 1846) At common law, land covered by water was the subject of grant, except where the tide regularly ebbed and flowed.—Hatfield v. Grimstead, 29 N. C. 139.

[d] (N. C. 1858) Land lying between the high and low water lines of the tides of the ocean or a navigable stream is not subject to private appropriation, under the acts authorizing the entry and grant of lands by the state.—Ward v. Willis, 51 N. C. 183, 72 Am. Dec. 570.

[e] (N. C. 1858) All the unappropriated swamp lands in this state were, by the acts of 1825 and 1836, vested "in the Literary Board"; and the provision for entering and taking possession spoken of by the act of 1850 applies only to such lands as may have been forfeited for nonregistration of the grants by which they were held under the act of 1836, or for the nonpayment of taxes under the act of 1842.—White v. Perry, 51 N. C. 198.

[f] (N. C. 1867) Though confiscated, the lands granted by the crown in 1745 to Henry McCulloch were not in 1822 vacant and unappropriated lands in the sense of Rev. Code, c. 42, § 1, providing that no land is the subject of entry and grant except "vacant and unappropriated lands."—Hoover v. Thomas, 61 N. C. 184.

[g] (N. C. 1882) Lands once granted by the state to individual citizens do not become "vacant lands," within the meaning of Battle's Revisal, c. 41, § 1, providing for entry of state lands, where the state subsequently acquires title to them, but abandons the actual use to which they were put.—State v. Bevers, 86 N. C. 588.

[h] (N. C. 1886) Land covered by navigable water is not the subject of entry and grant.—Hodges v. Williams, 95 N. C. 331, 59 Am. Rep. 242.

III. VALIDITY OF GRANT.

[a] (N. C. 1834) A grant can only be repealed at the suit of the state or of a prior grantee.—Crow v. Holland, 15 N. C. 417; Featherston v. Mills, Id. 596.

[b] (N. C. 1835) Under Acts 1777, 1783 (Rev. St. cc. 114, 185), requiring grants to be recorded in the secretary's office, slight immaterial mistakes in the recording of a grant will not void it.—Den v. Pugh, 18 N. C. 210.

[c] (N. C. 1838) Under the act of 1794, a grant from a state, conveying more than 640 acres of land, is good.—Mendenhall v. Cassella, 20 N. C. 43.

[d] (N. C. 1839) If a grant covers in part land not liable to entry, or which has been previously granted, it will be good for the land comprehended in it which had not been granted and was liable to entry.—Hough v. Dumas, 20 N. C. 473.

[e] (N. C. 1848) A patent described the land by metes and bounds, which upon calculation included 8,699 acres, and after such description were the following words: "Including within its bounds 5,699 acres of land which is excepted in this grant." Held, that the exception, being vague and uncertain, must be inoperative and cannot restrain the general terms of the grant according to the description in the patent.—Waugh v. Richardson, 30 N. C. 470.

[f] (N. C. 1849) There being no statute prescribing the time within which grants must be issued, where the entry money has been paid, a person who pays the entry money may take out his grant when he chooses, subject to this risk that if another person enters the same land without notice of the prior entry, and first obtains his grant, this shall be preferred.—Krou v. Long, 41 N. C. 259.

[g] (N. C. 1861) Parties claiming under a junior grant cannot impeach an elder one directly, much less collaterally.—Holland's Heirs v. Crow, 34 N. C. 275.

[h] (N. C. 1852) A grant founded on an entry, made on land subject to entry, cannot be collaterally impeached for defects in the entry, or irregularity in any preliminary proceeding.—Stannire v. Powell, 35 N. C. 312.

[i] (N. C. 1862) But when the law forbids the entry of the vacant land in a particular tract of country, a grant for a part of such land is absolutely void; and that may be shown in ejectment.—Stannire v. Powell, 35 N. C. 312.

[j] (N. C. 1853) A grant for vacant land, issued on the certificate of commissioners authorized by law to act in the premises, cannot be impeached collaterally for fraud, mistake, or irregularity, in the proceedings before the commissioners.—Lovinggood v. Burgess, 44 N. C. 407.

[k] (N. C. 1854) A. made an entry which lost its priority by lapse of time, and B. made an entry of the same land which lapsed in like manner. Held that, under the act of 1850, both entries stood on the same footing, and that A., having obtained a grant after B.'s entry had lapsed, was entitled to the land.—Horton v. Cook, 54 N. C. 270.

[l] (N. C. 1856) The acts of 1783, 1819, 1836, and others, in reference to the sale of lands lying in the county of Cherokee, prior to the act of 1852, confer only a special authority upon the officers therein named, so that in order to give validity to a grant issued under these statutes, it must be shown to be strictly within their provisions.—Harshaw v. Taylor, 48 N. C. 513.

IV. EVIDENCE.

[a] (U. S. 1811) In ejectment, no evidence other than of an entry under a grant from the state of North Carolina can be received to impeach the validity of the state grant.—Polk v. Hill, Fed. Cas. No. 11,249 [1 Brunner, Col. Cas. 126].

[b] (N. C. 1835) Under Acts 1777, 1783 (Rev. St. cc. 114, 185), requiring grants to be recorded in the secretary's office, the burden of showing the recordation is on the one who makes the objection, and not on the grantee.—Den v. Pugh, 18 N. C. 210.

[c] (N. C. 1849) After a possession from 1802 to 1822, and from 1827 to 1845, it was held that a grant from the state could be presumed, notwithstanding the interruption of the possession for five years.—Reed v. Earnhart, 32 N. C. 516.

[d] (N. C. 1850) Where there was a continued possession of land for 47 years, though the one in possession had, during that time, declared that he did not believe there was a grant, and attempted to procure a grant from the state, it was held that the evidence should go to the jury whether a grant had been made, and that a grant could be presumed, notwithstanding the admissions of the one in possession.—Bullard v. Barksdale, 33 N. C. 461.

[e] (N. C. 1853) An agreement made by a junior grantee, in a grant from the state, in relation to his possession of a part of his land, covered by an older grant, with the widow of the elder grantee, who continued in possession, is evidence that she had an interest in the land, and therefore the right to make an agreement; and at all events, the junior grantee, and all claiming under him, are estopped from calling the matter in question.—Bryson v. Slagle, 44 N. C. 449.

[f] (N. C. 1887) Where it appears by the evidence of a long series of conveyances, and supplemental oral testimony, that the successive grantees from whom plaintiffs deduced their title had exercised control in the character of owners over certain marsh and beach lands, held, that such evidence is sufficient to submit the question to the jury as to whether the title to the lands had been divested out of the state.—Baum v. Currituck Shooting Club, 96 N. C. 310, 2 S. E. 673.

[g] (N. C. 1887) In order to establish the presumption that the original title of the state to real estate has become divested by the issue of a grant, it is not necessary to show that the successive occupants were in privy of estate.—Davidson v. Arledge, 97 N. C. 172, 2 S. E. 378.

[h] (N. C. 1888) Where defendant claims under a grant, in 1796, of 59,000 acres, evidence is admissible that a large number of persons have settled on the land, to show that the lands were not vacant, and subject to entry, in 1881, when plaintiff's grant was issued.—Dugger v. McKesson, 100 N. C. 1, 6 S. E. 746.

[i] (N. C. 1893) Where a patent sets out the boundaries of a grant of land, and contains an exception that "within which bounds there hath been heretofore granted 22,360 acres," the exception is not void for uncertainty, when it can be made certain by a showing what land was included in the first grant.—Eastern Carolina Land, Lumber & Mfg. Co. v. Frey, 112 N. C. 153, 16 S. E. 902, distinguishing Waugh v. Richardson (1848) 30 N. C. 470.

V. RELIEF TO CLAIMANTS.

[a] (U. S. 1885) That a grant of state land in North Carolina was founded upon "a fraudulent entry, and obtained by false and fraudulent practices," cannot be availed of in an action of ejectment brought by a senior grantee to vacate such grant.—Oliver v. Pullam (C. C.) 24 Fed. 127.

[b] (N. C. 1806) In a bill in equity to compel defendant to convey the tract of land procured from the state in fraud of complainant's prior entry, on the question whether defendant had notice of the prior entry, proof that the surveyor who surveyed the land for defendant had notice of such prior entry is insufficient to show that defendant had such notice; the rule that notice to an agent is notice to his principal not applying to the case of surveys of entries of public lands made by public surveyors in the discharge of their duties.—Merrill v. Sloan, 5 N. C. 121.

[c] (N. C. 1818) A scire facias to repeal a patent should set out particularly the patent of the plaintiff, or his title derived from a patent, with its boundaries and location; also a copy of the patent, with its boundaries, granted to the defendant, or the person under whom he claims, with all their correct names, and also how the two patents conflict; and it should also aver the reasons why the defendant's patent should be canceled. If the defendant denies any of the plaintiff's allegations, issues upon those allegations and denials must be found by a jury; otherwise, the court will not give judgment.—Holland's Heirs v. Crow, 27 N. C. 448.

[d] (N. C. 1834) A junior patentee cannot maintain a scire facias to repeal an elder patent, though his entry was prior to that of the patentee in the elder patent.—Featherston v. Mills, 15 N. C. 596.

[e] (N. C. 1837) Under the act of 1798, authorizing an entry and grant of such lands "as have not been before granted," a grantee of lands already granted to another cannot maintain proceedings to repeal the prior grant, though his entry was first, and as the record showed that the lands were already granted, he took no right, enabling him to question the validity of the prior grant.—O'Kelly v. Clayton, 19 N. C. 246.

[f] (N. C. 1839) Under the act of 1798, a grantee may proceed to vacate a subsequent grant fraudulently obtained, with knowledge of his previous grant, though the subsequent grant covers a part only of the land included in his grant.—Hoyt v. Rich, 20 N. C. 673.

[g] (N. C. 1849) The proviso in Acts 1842, c. 35, saving the rights of junior entries "for which the purchase money may have been paid," is to be construed as not preferring a lapsed entry before a junior entry, subsisting at the passing of the act, on which the purchase money was afterwards duly paid, and a grant obtained in due time.—Buchanan v. Fitzgerald, 41 N. C. 121.

[h] (N. C. 1851) On a petition to vacate a junior grant by several persons, of whom one only has any existing title to the premises, the misjoinder is no bar to a judgment vacating a grant.—Holland's Heirs v. Crow, 34 N. C. 275.

[i] (N. C. 1851) The relators have a right to this remedy whether they prove any actual damage or not; the subsequent grant being, per se, a cloud upon the owner's title.—Holland's Heirs v. Crow, 34 N. C. 275.

[j] (N. C. 1856) A board of commissioners for the allowance of pre-emption rights having decided against the complainant, he brought his bill, alleging that the decision was founded on "gross perjury"; that the board were mistaken in their views of law, were mistaken as to the facts, etc. Held, that the allegations of the complainant were not sufficiently explicit to entitle him to relief, even in a court of law, by granting a new trial; and the court doubted whether it had jurisdiction to grant relief in any case against a decision of a board of commissioners, by injunction.—Burgess v. Lovengood, 55 N. C. 457.

[k] (N. C. 1856) An allegation that a certificate for a pre-emption right was obtained from commissioners by perjury, without specifying such perjury, and by mistake of the commissioners both in law and fact, is not sufficient to authorize a court of equity to interfere with the action of the commissioners.—Burgess v. Lovengood, 55 N. C. 457.

[l] (N. C. 1860) Where a person, having made an improvement, and complied with the act of assembly, allowing a pre-emption right, got a certificate of purchase and had a survey made, but was excluded from it by a grant made to an inhabitant of another state, under a mistaken construction of the act by the state's agent, it was held that he had an equity to have a conveyance from such grantee for the part of his survey covered by such erroneous grant.—Barnett v. Woods, 58 N. C. 428.

[m] (N. C. 1887) Plaintiff claimed land under a grant from the state. Entry on the land was made in one county, and the survey and other proceedings necessary to the issue of the grant were had in that county, and the grant described the lands as situated therein. The land, however, was wholly situated in another county, and was at the time of the supposed entry and grant. Held, that it was not necessary to declare the grant void, in an action for that purpose, for the grant when presented in evidence would appear invalid on its face, and would therefore be inadmissible as evidence of title.—Harris v. Norman, 86 N. C. 59, 2 S. E. 72.

[n] (N. C. 1888) An injunction will not be granted to one making a junior entry on land to restrain one making a senior entry from receiving, and the secretary of state from issuing, a grant, where the application is based solely upon alleged void irregularities in the senior entry.—Bram v. Houck, 101 N. C. 627, 8 S. E. 365.

[o] (N. C. 1891) The claimant of title to several contiguous tracts of land cannot enjoin the Secretary of State from issuing grants thereto upon void entries, on the ground that they will prove a cloud upon his title, because he is not entitled to such relief unless in rightful possession, in which case his remedy at law is adequate, as under Code, § 1277, by recording surveys of their outer lines, so as to exhibit their outer boundaries as if the whole territory were one tract, his possession of one is possession of all, enabling him to redress an invasion of any of them; in addition to which he may under Code, § 2786, bring an action in the superior court of the county in which the land lies, to repeal and vacate grants issued "against law," or obtained "by false suggestion, surprise, or fraud."—McNamee v. Coke, 109 N. C. 242, 13 S. E. 777.

(145 N. C. 81)

TURNAGE et ux. v. JOYNER et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Sept. 17, 1907.)

1. JUDGMENT—RES JUDICATA—DEFAULT JUDGMENT.

A judgment is none the less available on the question of res judicata because it is a default judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, § 1164.]

2. SAME—JUDGMENT IN EJECTMENT.

A judgment in ejectment for plaintiff, the purchaser at a sale under a power in a mortgage, against the mortgagor, the complaint alleging plaintiff was the owner in fee simple, is res judicata on the question of title, in an action by the mortgagor against such purchaser to have it decreed that the sale was void because the purchaser bought as agent for the mortgagee; equitable defenses being available in ejectment.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, § 1241.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Pitt County; Neal, Judge.

Action by M. R. Turnage and wife against Jacob Joyner and others. Judgment for defendants. Plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

L. I. Moore, for appellants. Jarvis & Blow and Skinner & Whedbee, for appellees.

CLARK, C. J. W. G. Lang, mortgagee, sold the land now in controversy under a power of sale in a mortgage executed to him by M. R. Turnage and wife, plaintiffs herein. It was duly advertised and sold. The regularity of the proceedings is not questioned. J. A. Lang was purchaser of the land at said sale February 8, 1897. Soon thereafter J. A. Lang brought an action against Turnage and wife to recover said land, and in his complaint alleged that he was "the owner in fee simple" of the land (describing it), and that Turnage and wife held possession, asking judgment to recover it and damages for the detention. The defendants filed no answer, and judgment by default final was entered at March term, 1897, of the superior court for that county, and the writ of possession issued, under which J. A. Lang was put in possession April 19, 1897. J. A. Lang conveyed to W. G. Lang March 23, 1897, and the land has been in his possession, or in the defendant's claiming under him, ever since. This action was begun January 28, 1905; the plaintiff averring that J. A. Lang bought at the mortgage sale as agent for his father, the mortgagee, claiming that hence the sale was void, and asking that the defendants be decreed trustees of the plaintiffs, and for an account of rents and profits. The answer denies that J. A. Lang bought as agent for his father, and sets up as further defense the judgment between J. A. Lang and the defendants at March term, 1897, as an estoppel; that the claim is, furthermore, a stale claim by reason of the delay for nearly eight years to assert it; and also pleaded the seven-year statute of limitations. At the close of the evidence the court intimated an opinion that the plaintiffs were estopped and could not recover, whereupon they took a nonsuit and appealed.

In the former proceeding of ejectment the judgment determined only the possession, and did not prevent another action, if it went against the plaintiff; for it did not pass upon the title. Under the present system a judgment in an action for the recovery of land is conclusive of "all matters presented by the pleadings or which may be properly predicated upon them." Tyler v. Capehart, 125 N. C. 64, 34 S. E. 108. The complaint in the former action, between these parties at March term of the superior court, alleged that the plaintiff therein, J. A. Lang, was the "owner, in fee simple" of the premises, that they were withheld by the defendant, and asked to recover possession. This put the title in issue. Certainly J. A. Lang was not seeking to recover possession as mortgagee; for he was not mortgagee, but was asserting his title as purchaser. The judgment by default final was as conclusive of his allegation of ownership in fee as if there had been an issue framed and the fact found by a jury thereon. It was held in Johnson v. Pate, 90 N. C. 334, that a "judgment rendered upon demurrer is as conclusive, by way of estoppel, as a verdict finding the facts confessed would have been." That case also holds that in an action to recover realty, if title is averred, the judgment is as conclusive thereof as if it were an action for personal property. To the same purport are many other cases: Davis v. Higgins, 87 N. C. 298; Cowles v. Fer- guson, 90 N. C. 313; Bickett v. Nash, 101 N. C. 583, 8 S. E. 350; Allen v. Sallinger, 103 N. C. 14, 8 S. E. 913; Falls v. Gamble, 66 N. C. 462. This last case holds that if, under the present system, the plaintiff does not wish the judgment to be conclusive of the title, he must restrict his allegations to a right to the possession. Falls v. Gamble is cited with approval. Isler v. Harrison, 71 N. C. 64; Yates v. Yates, 81 N. C. 401. In Tuttle v. Harrill, 85 N. C. 461, Ruffin, J., says, speaking of the estoppel by judgment there pleaded: "That was an action at law, it is true, being for the possession of the land upon the strict legal title of the then plaintiff (now defendant). Still, constituted as our courts now are, it was open to the defendant in the action to set up any equitable defenses he might have, and, if able to show a perfect equitable right in himself (such as he seeks to assert in his present action) to defeat a recovery upon the legal title of the plaintiff, it was his folly not to have asserted this claim, and he must be concluded by the judgment rendered in the cause." That case is exactly "on all fours" with this. It has been cited and approved on this point. Davis v. Higgins, 87 N. C. 300; Anderson v. Rainey, 100 N. C. 337, 5 S. E. 182; Case Mfg. Co. v. Moore et al., 144 N. C. —, 57 S. E. 213. In effect, it practically overrules what was said by the same learned judge in Wittkowski v. Watkins, 84 N. C. 456; but it is in accord, as above shown, with the other rulings of this court, which are reaffirmed by us.

It is not necessary to pass upon the other two defenses set up; but we are inclined to think they are both valid. Even if the purchase had been by J. A. Lang, as agent for the mortgagee in point of fact, though nominally for himself, such purchase was not void, but merely voidable, and the conduct of plaintiffs in leaving the country, asserting no claim or right for eight years, until lands rose in value, would seem an abandonment of claim. There are certainly no surrounding circumstances, such as nonage, intimidation, oppression, and the like, which should induce a court of equity to overlook the lapse of time. Nor are we prepared to say that the lapse of seven years, after the ouster by judgment and an adversary holding thereunder and under the subsequent deed of J. A. Lang to W. G. Lang, is not full protection. The decree and deed are both color of title certainly, and the holding was adverse from the execution of the writ of possession in April, 1897. However, it is not necessary to pass upon either of these points, and we are not to be understood as doing so.

We hold that the judge properly decided that the former judgment between these parties was an estoppel as to the land in controversy in this action.

Affirmed.

(145 N. C. 71)

FISHEL v. BROWNING et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Sept. 17, 1907.)

1. DOWER—RIGHTS OF WIDOW PENDING ASSIGNMENT—POSSESSION OF LANDS.

Until allotment of dower, the widow has no right to retain possession of her deceased husband's lands against the heir or those claiming under him.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 17, Dower, § 198.]

2. COVENANTS—SEISIN—BREACH.

Where an intestate's land was sold by his administrator to pay debts without any assignment of dower, and the purchaser thereafter conveyed the land to plaintiff, the possession of the widow and heirs of the intestate was not a breach of the purchaser's covenant of seisin which is applicable to title and not to possession.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Covenants, §§ 104-109.]

3. SAME—COVENANT OF WARRANTY—QUIET ENJOYMENT.

A covenant of warranty in a deed is subject to the same construction as a covenant for quiet enjoyment, and is broken only by an eviction or disturbance of possession by a paramount title.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Covenants, §§ 157-163.]

4. SAME—WARRANTY AGAINST ALL CLAIMS AND DEMANDS.

A covenant of warranty of quiet enjoyment in a deed against the claims of any and all persons whatsoever was confined to "all lawful claims and demands," and did not constitute a contract to indemnify plaintiff against claims of trespassers.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Covenants, § 132.]

5. SAME—INCUMBRANCES.

Where prior to an assignment of dower intestate's land was sold by his administrator to pay debts, the widow's outstanding inchoate dower right constituted a breach of covenant against incumbrances contained in a purchaser's deed of the land so purchased to plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Covenants, §§ 111-129.]

6. SAME—MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

In an action for breach of covenant against incumbrances consisting of a widow's unassigned dower right, plaintiff, not having suffered any actual injury nor paid anything to remove incumbrances, could only recover nominal damages.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Covenants, § 239.]

7. SAME.

Certain of intestate's land having been sold by his administrator to pay debts prior to an assignment of dower to intestate's widow, the purchaser conveyed the land to plaintiff with a covenant against incumbrances. Plaintiff was denied possession by intestate's widow and heirs, but recovered possession against them in an action in which it was held that they were trespassers. Held, that plaintiff could not recover on his covenant against incumbrances the amount paid for counsel fees in his suit to recover possession and interest on the purchase money during the time he was out of possession.

Appeal from Superior Court, Warren County; Lyon, Judge.

Action by D. A. Fishel against E. B. Browning and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

The plaintiff alleges: That the feme defendant, being the owner of the land described in the complaint, with the written assent of her husband, the male defendant, for a full and valuable consideration, conveyed said land to him by deed bearing date July 6, 1904. The said deed contains the following covenants: "And the said Howard Browning and wife covenant to and with the said D. A. Fishel, his heirs and assigns, that they are seized of said premises in fee, and have right to convey the same in fee simple, as it was conveyed to them; that the same are free from all incumbrances and that they will warrant and defend the said title to the same against the claims of all persons whatsoever." That upon the delivery of said deed to them, and in accordance with their contract with defendants, plaintiff undertook to enter upon the said land, when he was "met by the widow and heirs of one Louis Baker, who were in possession and who forbade his entrance and disputed his right and title to the same, which fact was at once reported to defendants." The feme defendant acquired title to said land by virtue of a sale, and deed pursuant thereto made by the administrator of Louis Baker, deceased, for the purpose of making assets to pay debts. The heirs of said Baker resisted the recovery by plaintiff of said land in an action brought by him, and by independent proceeding, as well as by motion in the original cause, alleging that no process was served upon them. The widow resisted recovery, alleging that she was entitled to have dower allotted in said land. That the litigation for the recovery of the land continued two years, plaintiff being finally successful. That plaintiff expended on account of said litigation $287 in cost and counsel fees. That the interest on the purchase money during the said litigation was $102, no part of which defendants have paid, although requested to do so. Plaintiff further alleges that the bargain, contract, and covenant of the defendant E. P. Browning set forth in said deed, to sell and deliver said lands to him and to warrant and defend the title thereto, was broken by her failure to deliver possession thereof to plaintiff; that thereby plaintiff suffered loss, and was endangered and forced and compelled to incur the expense and outlay above set out; and that the defendant E. P. Browning is liable to him therefore as the measure of his damages by reason of the breach of the said contract and covenant in failing to deliver said lands to plaintiff and in failing to defend the title. He demands judgment for the sum of $389 and interest. Defendants demurred to the complaint, and assigned as grounds therefor, first, that said action is for alleged damages due by reason of a false covenant of warranty of title, and the plaintiff does not allege in said complaint, as a breach of contract, an ouster or eviction by paramount legal title; second, that the complaint, upon its face, discloses that the defendant's wife,

E. P. Browning, had a good and sufficient title to the property, and that the plaintiff got such title in fee by the deed of the defendant, and that the plaintiff recovered possession of the property under their said deed; third, that the complaint shows that the plaintiff was entitled under his deed from the defendant to the possession of the property, the interest of the tenant in dower (the dower not having been allotted) being subordinate to that of the heirs; fourth, that the complaint shows that the dower had not been allotted, and the tenant in dower therefore had no right to hold possession against the title of the purchaser, the plaintiff. From a judgment sustaining the demurrer plaintiff appealed.

T. T. Hicks and Tasker Polk, for appellant. Walter A. Montgomery and John H. Kerr, for appellees.

CONNOR, J. (after stating the case as above). The deed set forth in the complaint contains several covenants: (1) The covenant of seisin and right to convey. (2) Covenant against incumbrances. (3) General warranty, which is, under our decisions, a covenant for quiet enjoyment. It is not clear that the plaintiff intends to allege a breach of the covenant of seisin. Giving, however, the language of the complaint a liberal construction, for the purpose of discovering such allegation, we are of the opinion that, for the purposes of this appeal, the feme defendant was seised of the land, that she had title thereto with right of entry subject to the incumbrance of the right of dower in the widow of Louis Baker. It is conceded that, with this exception, she had the title of Baker. Whatever controversy the heirs made in regard to the validity of the proceeding by the administrator and the sale made thereunder is conceded to have been without foundation. It is further conceded that the widow was entitled to have her dower allotted in the land, and that no allotment was made. It has always been held by this court that until allotment the widow has no right to retain possession of her deceased husband's lands against the heir or those claiming under him. In Spencer v. Weston's Heirs, 18 N. C. 213, Daniel, J., said: "The widow has no right of dower until it has been assigned to her. * * * It is not until her dower has been duly assigned that a widow acquires a vested estate for life, which will entitle her to maintain ejectment. On recovering at law, the sheriff delivers the demandant possession of her dower by metes and bounds." Webb v. Boyle, 63 N. C. 271. In State v. Thompson, 130 N. C. 680, 41 S. E. 486, defendant was indicted for forcible entry and detainer. It appearing that the prosecutrix was in possession, after the death of her husband, no dower having been assigned, Furches, C. J., said: "She was not the owner of the land from her own evidence, which tends to show, and we will assume did show, that the land she lived on belonged to her husband before his death and descended to his heirs, as no will is alleged or shown. She was entitled to dower, but this land had not been assigned or allotted to her. And the fact that she was his widow and entitled to dower gave her no right to any part of the land." Whether in this state, in the absence of any statute, she is entitled, under chapter 7, Magna Charta, to her quarantine, is not presented on this record, for the same reason assigned in Spencer v. Weston's Heirs, supra, that it does not appear that the mansion house was situate on the land in controversy. 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. 148. We are of the opinion, therefore, that the possession of the heirs and widow of Baker was not a breach of the covenant of seisin, or "the right to convey in fee simple as the same was conveyed to them." The covenant of seisin refers to the title, and not the possession. Rawle on Cov. 60, 61.

Passing, for the present, the next covenant, we find in the deed the usual covenant of warranty, which, as said by Taylor, C. J., in Herrin v. McEntyre, 8 N. C. 410, is subject to the same construction as a covenant for quiet enjoyment. This is common learning with us. What, then, are the plaintiff's rights, treating the covenant as one for quiet enjoyment, sometimes called "the sweeping covenant"? Howell v. Richards, 11 East 833. A breach of this covenant occurs when there is an eviction or disturbance of the possession by title paramount. Usually the action is based upon an eviction, either actual or constructive, of the covenantee after he has entered upon or been put into possession by his covenantor. Where title passed by deeds, operating by livery of seisin, the breach could not otherwise occur because the transfer of actual possession was essential to perfecting the conveyance. After the enactment of the statute of uses, when title passed by virtue of the declaration of the use and the transfer of the possession by operation of the statute, it frequently happened that transfers of title occurred when some person other than the bargainor was in the actual occupation of the land. We are not concerned, in this discussion, with the effect of the statutes against champerty passed to prevent speculation in disputed titles. In such cases where the bargainee, whose entry was barred by an adverse occupant, called upon his bargainor, who had given him a covenant of quiet enjoyment, to make good his covenant or pay damages for its breach, he was met with the answer that he had suffered no eviction, and therefore had no right of action. The law was so held by a number of courts. Parker, C. J., said: "No entry having been made by the grantee, under his deed, an eviction could not have taken place." Chappell v. Bull, 17 Mass. 220. Several other courts adopted this view. In Grist v. Hodges, 14 N. C. 198, the question, for the first time, came before this court. Ruffin, J., said:

"The existence of an incumbrance, or the mere recovery in a possessory action, under which the bargainee has not actually been disturbed, are held for technical reasons not to be breaches of a covenant for quiet possession, or, in other words, of our warranties. But that is a very different case from this, in which the bargainee never, in fact, was in possession, but was kept out by the possession of another, under better title existing at the time of the sale and deed and ever since. * * * The existence of a better title, with an actual possession, is of itself a breach of the covenant. It is manifestly just that it should be so considered, for otherwise the covenantee would have no redress, but by making himself a trespasser by an actual entry, which the law requires of nobody." The learned justice places his conclusion upon the ground that, as between the bargainor and bargainee, the statute of uses immediately, upon the execution of the deed, carries the possession to the bargainee." As between the parties, the bargainee is, on strict legal principles, in. If however, there be in reality an adverse possession, he can be so only for an instant, because "the implication against the truth will be no further than is necessary to make the title effectual for its purposes." The bargainee will be taken to have been evicted eo instanti the possession by operation of the statute takes place. Thus, by a refinement, substantial justice is done. In Shattuck v. Lamb, 85 N. Y. 499, 22 Am. Rep. 656, the question is ably discussed, and the same conclusion reached by Earl, C. He reviews all of the cases. Dwight, C., dissented, saying that many cases in the various states follow. Grist v. Hodges "in which the theory is stated with admirable force," quoting the language of Mr. Rawle. Peters v. Bowman, 98 U. S. 56, 25 L. Ed. 91.

The defendants insist that, conceding the eviction upon the authority of Grist v. Hodges, supra, there was no superior or paramount title in the evictors, that the right to sue arises only upon an eviction under paramount title. The plaintiff says that, conceding the general rule, his covenant is not confined to an eviction under paramount title, but extends to "the claims of all persons whatsoever," thus protecting him against damage by reason of an eviction by trespassers. This question appears to have been much mooted, and the early English authorities contradictory. The learned counsel for the plaintiff calls to our attention the form of the covenant of general warranty given by Mr. Washburn, which is confined to "all lawful claims and demands," etc., whereas, he says the covenant for quiet enjoyment includes indemnity against "the claims of any and all persons whatsoever." Mr. Rawle says: "There were several old authorities which held that a covenant thus absolutely expressed extended to all interruptions and disturbances whatsoever, whether lawful or tortious; and, although authority was not wanting in opposition to this doctrine, the law seems not to have been settled until the case of Hayes v. Bickerstaff, 4 Vaughan, 118. That case decided that the covenant, however generally expressed, must be understood as applying merely to the acts of those claiming by title. In the first place, it would be unreasonable that a man should covenant against tortious acts of strangers which he could not see or prevent; secondly, the law gives a remedy against the wrongdoer; thirdly, the covenantee might thus have a double remedy, and receive a double compensation; and, fourthly, it would enable him to injure the covenantor by colluding with a stranger to make a tortious entry." Rawle on Covenants, 147. Certain exceptions to the rule are stated; but, as none of them apply to this appeal, it is not necessary to discuss them. In Platt on Covenants, 3 Law Lib. 312, a form is given, said to be in general use, concluding, as in this record: "Or any other person or persons whomsoever." The author says: "A general covenant for quiet enjoyment was, in earlier times, holden to extend to tortious evictions or interruptions, but this doctrine was never fully acquiesced in; and a different rule is now established, so that at present, when we speak of a covenant providing against the acts of all men, it is to be understood of all men claiming by title, for the law will not adjudge that the wrongful acts of strangers are covenanted against. Hence, if one who has no right ousts or disseises a purchaser, he shall not have an action against the vendor; the reason being that the law has already furnished the means of redress by giving the injured party an action of trespass against the wrongdoer." So Lord Ellenborough, C. J., in Nash v. Palmer, 1 Barn. & Cres. 29, says: "The rule has been correctly stated that, where a man covenants to indemnify against all persons, this is but a covenant to indemnify against lawful title." Wotton v. Hele, 2 Saund. pt. 2, 177. "The covenant for quiet enjoyment is the same as the covenant of warranty in all its practical effects. It is an assurance to the grantee that his enjoyment of the land conveyed shall not be disturbed by lawful means, but does not attempt to protect him against mere disturbances by trespassers." Hopkins, Real Prop. 448; Underwood v. Birchard, 47 Vt. 305. While the precise question has not, so far as our investigations go, been before this court, we find the general principle recognized as in Midgett v. Brooks, 34 N. C. 145, 55 Am. Dec. 405. Nash, J., says: "The words in the deed we are considering, upon their face, import a promise or agreement on the part of the vendor that Midgett shall enjoy the premises free from disturbance from any one claiming by title paramount; and that is a covenant for quiet enjoyment." We therefore conclude that, while there was an eviction within the terms of the covenant, the plaintiff's action, upon their covenant, fails because it appears, from the facts set forth in the complaint, that the evictors had no title. They were mere trespassers. This is shown by the result of plaintiff's action brought to eject them.

There is, however, in the deed a covenant against incumbrances. The learned counsel for defendants concede that the dower right of the widow, independent of her wrongful possession, was an incumbrance upon the title which constituted a breach of the covenant. It is well settled that the right of dower is such an incumbrance upon the land as works a breach of the covenant. Gore v Townsend, 105 N. C. 228, 11 S. E. 160, 8 L. R. A. 443; 1 Jones on Conveyances, § 867. The difficulty with which plaintiff is confronted in this action is that he does not claim, or show, any damage sustained by reason of such incumbrance, but expressly excludes any such claim by alleging that his measure of damage is the amount paid by way of counsel fees and cost and the interest on the entire purchase money. This certainly cannot be correct. As said by Mr. Rawle, the rule which has been adopted as to the measure of damages for breach of this covenant is very simple. If the incumbrance is contingent in its character, and if nothing has been paid by the plaintiff towards removing or extinguishing it, and if it has inflicted no actual injury upon him, he can obtain but nominal damages, as he is not allowed to recover a certain compensation for running the risk of an uncertain injury. Rawle on Cov. 129; Hale on Dam. 369. Until dower was allotted, the widow has no right to interfere with plaintiff's possession. As she never had dower allotted he sustained no damage by reason of the existence of her right to do so. It may be that for the purpose of relieving his estate from the uncertain extent of the incumbrance the plaintiff may have filed a petition against the widow for the allotment of her dower. The heir could do so after the expiration of three months from the death of her husband. Revisal 1905, § 3088. Whether, without doing so, the plaintiff could sue upon the covenant, alleging that, by reason of the incumbrance, the market value of his title was depreciated in a sum either certain or capable of being made so, is not presented upon this appeal, because there is no such allegation. The complaint is drawn upon the theory that counsel fees actually paid and interest on the entire purchase money constitute the measure of damages for the breach of covenant against an incumbrance which could, in no possible event, have affected more than one-third in value of the land during the life of the widow. Issue was joined upon the demurrer. His honor was clearly correct in holding that plaintiff was not entitled to recover upon the complaint. It may be that, by an amendment of the complaint, he would have been entitled to at least nominal damages. His honor would have permitted such amendment if so requested, but, as plaintiff elected to stand by his complaint as drawn, and as, for the reasons we have pointed out, he is not entitled to maintain his action, we can only affirm the judgment. It is well understood that, if the facts set forth in the complaint show a remediable legal wrong the action shall not be dismissed because of the relief demanded. Here, however, while the plaintiff shows that he held defendants' deed containing a covenant against incumbrances, and that a contingent incumbrance was in existence, he further shows that prior to the bringing of his action the possibility of damage by reason of such incumbrance came to an end by the death of the widow. He says: "Plaintiff avers that the bargain, contract, and covenant * * * was broken by her failure to deliver possession thereof to plaintiff," and that "thereby plaintiff suffered loss, and was endamaged and forced and compelled to incur the expense and outlay above set out, and that the defendant E. P. Browning is liable to him therefor as the measure of his damages by reason of the breach of the said contract and covenant in failing to deliver said lands to plaintiff and in failing to defend the title." This language, under the most liberal construction does not aver any damage by reason of the breach of the covenant against incumbrance.

Upon a careful consideration of the complaint, we concur with his honor in sustaining the demurrer.

Affirmed.

(78 S. C. 171)

SANDERS et al. v. BELUE et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Sept. 16, 1907.)

1. OFFICERS—PUBLIC OFFICERS—DEFINITION.

Apart from the statute, the distinction between a public officer and an employé is that the former is charged with duties involving an exercise of some part of the sovereign power in the performance of which the public is concerned, and which are continuing and not occasional, while one merely performing duties required of him by persons employing him under an express contract or otherwise, though the employer is a public officer and the employment be a public work or business, is a mere employé.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent Dig. vol. 37, Officers, § 1.]

2. PAUPERS—POOR LAW OFFICERS—POORHOUSE SUPERINTENDENT.

Civ. Code 1902, § 785, provides that the county board of commissioners shall have general supervision of the county poorhouse; and section 786 declares that the board shall be empowered to appoint a superintendent, with such assistance as may be needed to provide means for the employment of the inmates. Act 1901 (23 St. at Large, p. 754) declares that the term "public officer" shall include all officers of the state previously commissioned, the trustees of the various colleges of the state, members of the various state boards, dispensary constables, and other persons whose duties are defined by law. Held, that a poorhouse superintendent appointed by a county board of commissioners was a public officer.

3. INJUNCTION—INTERFERENCE WITH OFFICER—ADEQUATE REMEDY AT LAW.

Injunction will not lie to restrain an incumbent of the office of poorhouse superintendent from interfering with any successor duly appointed by a county board of commissioners; the appointee having an adequate remedy by quo warranto.

4. PAUPERS—POORHOUSE SUPERINTENDENT—TERM OF OFFICE.

Under Civ Code 1902, § 786, empowering the county board of commissioners to appoint a poorhouse superintendent, but failing to fix the term of such superintendent's office, such term is coextensive with the term of the board.

5. OFFICERS—REMOVAL.

Const. art. 3, § 27, providing that officers shall be removed from office for incapacity, misconduct, or neglect of duties in such manner as may be provided by law, with no mode of trial or removal as provided in Constitution, does not abrogate the general rule that an appointive officer may be removed at the pleasure of the appointing power; his term of office not having been fixed by law.

6. SAME—IMPLIED REMOVAL.

Where the power to remove an appointive officer at the pleasure of the appointing power exists, the appointment of another person to hold the office operates as a removal of the incumbent from the time he receives notice of the new appointment.

7. PAUPERS—POORHOUSE SUPERINTENDENT—REMOVAL.

The custom of a retiring county board of commissioners to elect a superintendent of a poorhouse and farm for a period extending beyond their own term could not prevent the new board of commissioners from appointing a new superintendent to displace the appointee of the old board for a term coextensive with the term of office of the new board.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Union County; D. E. Hydrick, Judge.

Suit by Joseph Sanders and others against J. F. Belue and others. From an order refusing a temporary injunction, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

J. A. Sawyer, for appellants. Townsend & Townsend, for respondents.

WOODS, J. The county board of commissioners of Union county on January 7, 1907, appointed the plaintiff S. G. Howell superintendent of the poorhouse and farm. The preceding county board of commissioners on October 15, 1906, had undertaken to appoint the defendant J. Fincher Belue superintendent for the term of one year from that date. Claiming the right to hold the position under this appointment until October 15, 1907, the defendant Belue refused to surrender to Howell the property in his charge as superintendent. Thereupon Howell and two of the county board of commissioners, Joseph Sanders and W. Fowler Bobo, brought this action to restrain the defendant Belue from interfering with Howell in taking possession of the property of the poorhouse and farm and discharging his duties as superintendent. Judge Aldrich refused the application for temporary injunction, and plaintiffs appeal.

If the superintendent of the county poorhouse and farm is an officer, then it is conceded the plaintiff Fowler has an adequate remedy at law by quo warranto, and there would be no ground to ask for equitable relief by injunction. The only statutory provisions bearing on the question, except the statutory definition of a public officer, are these sections of the Civil Code of 1902:

"Sec. 785. The county board of commissioners shall have general supervision over the paupers and the poorhouse and farm of the county, and the said board shall provide all necessary buildings for the accommodation of the poor of the county, with sufficient tillable land to give employment to all paupers able to work, and said buildings and lands shall be designated as the poorhouse and farm of the county.

"Sec. 786. Said board shall be empowered to make all necessary rules and regulations for the government of the county poorhouse and farm, to appoint a superintendent, with such assistants as may be needed, to provide means for the employment as may be best suited to the inmates of the poorhouse, to see that every pauper able to work is employed, and to appoint one or more physicians to the poorhouse, who shall furnish medical aid to the indigent sick."

Accepting any or all of the many definitions of public office which have been laid down by jurists, it is still often difficult to say whether a particular position is an office or a mere employment. United States v. Hartwell, 73 U. S. 385, 18 L. Ed. 830; United States v. Germaine, 99 U. S. 508, 25 L. Ed. 482; Ellason v. Coleman, 86 N. C. 235; State v. Hocker (Fla.) 63 Am. St. Rep. 181, note; Opinion of Justices, 3 Me. 481; 23 Am. & Eng. Enc. 322; McCornick v. Thatcher, 8 Utah, 294, 30 Pac. 1091, 17 L. R. A. 243, note. Laying aside for the moment the statutory definition of a public officer, we venture to think an examination of these and other authorities will lead to the approval of the following definitions as sufficiently expressing the generally accepted distinction between a public officer and an employé: One who is charged by law with duties involving an exercise of some part of the sovereign power, either small or great, in the performance of which the public is concerned, and which are continuing, and not occasional or intermittent, is a public officer. Conversely, one who merely performs the duties required of him by persons employing him under an express contract or otherwise, though such persons be themselves public officers, and though the employment be in or about a public work or business, is a mere employé. The position of superintendent of the poorhouse and farm is created by statute law, and not by the county board of commissioners. The person to be appointed to the position is designated by statute a "superintendent," and that term itself connotes the assumption of responsibility and the exercise of discretion in the details of the management of the poorhouse and farm, though subject to the general supervision of the county board of commissioners. The care for the indigent is universally recognized as falling within the sovereign power of the state, and hence the superintendent, in managing the details of the institution provided by the state for the indigent and helpless, exercises a part of the sovereign power. The public is evidently concerned in the performance of these duties; and it is equally evident the duties are not intermittent or occasional, but continuing throughout every moment from appointment to removal or resignation. The position, therefore, comes within all the terms of the generally accepted definitions of a public officer, as distinguished from an employe.

Act 1901 (23 St. at Large, p. 754) contains this definition of a public officer: "The term 'public officers' shall be construed to mean all officers of the state that have heretofore been commissioned, and trustees of the various colleges of the state, members of the various state boards, dispensary constables, and other persons whose duties are defined by law." The literal meaning of the words "other persons whose duties are defined by law" could hardly have been intended; for the duties of guardians, administrators, and other trustees are defined by law, and yet it could scarcely have been the intention to include such persons in the definition of public officers. The intention probably was to include in the definition all persons whose public duties are defined by law. But, taking the definition either in this sense or according to its literal meaning, it includes the superintendent of the poorhouse and farm. The thought will hardly be entertained for a moment that the defining of the duties necessary to make one a public officer necessarily means setting them out with such precision as to leave no room for the exercise of discretion in details of management. If this were so, very few county officers would fall within the definition. The Century Dictionary gives this meaning to the word "define," when used in connection with the duties of a public officer: "To fix, establish, or prescribe authoritatively." When the statute empowers the county board of commissioners to appoint a superintendent of the county poorhouse and farm, it is only a change of language and not of meaning to say it empowers them to appoint a person whose duties shall be to superintend the poorhouse and farm. This is defining the public duties of a person so appointed; for to superintend means to have charge and direction of. The statute, in placing upon the person appointed the duties of superintending a public institution subject to the supervision of the county board of commissioners, defines his duties with about as much accuracy as the nature of the office will admit. The statutory definition of a public officer, as well as that which was generally accepted before the statute was passed, takes in the superintendent of the poorhouse and farm.

While it follows from this conclusion the judgment must be affirmed, the remedy of the plaintiff being by quo warranto, and not by injunction, yet the substantive question of the right of the two claimants to the office is of public interest, and should be settled without putting the parties to the delay and expense of protracted litigation. Const. art. 1, § 11, provides: "No person shall be elected or appointed to office in this state for life or during good behavior, but the terms of all officers shall be for some specified period except notaries public and officers in the militia." It will be observed this section does not require that the term of every officer shall be fixed by direct legislative enactment. The specified period may be inferred from the nature of the office and the duties of the officer. For example, when an inferior office is created, the tenure may be implied to be the same as that of the superior office to which the inferior is an adjunct. Such an implication is especially strong when the inferior officer is charged with minor matters; the general supervision and responsibility devolving on the superior officer. The statute does not in terms fix any specified period during which an appointment to the office of superintendent of the poorhouse and farm continues. But the same is also true of the offices of deputy clerk and deputy sheriff, the appointments to which continue during the pleasure of the clerk or of the sheriff making the appointment. Yet it has never been doubted, so far as we are aware, that the term of a deputy sheriff or deputy clerk ends by operation of law with the term of the sheriff or clerk by whom he was appointed. The clerk and sheriff being charged with general responsibility for the conduct of their respective offices, it is so plain that a deputy appointed by a predecessor should not hold over it was deemed unnecessary to say that the term of the deputy should end with the term of the clerk or sheriff who appointed him. So it is with the office of superintendent of the poorhouse and farm. The county board of commissioners are by law made responsible for the general supervision of the poorhouse and farm of the county, and it was never intended that the subordinate officer appointed by them for the superintendence of the institution should have a longer term than those by whom he was appointed. The statutory scheme of general supervision by the board and subordinate supervision by the superintendent repels the idea of one board having the power to impose a superintendent on a succeeding board. To sustain the power which the retiring board attempted to exercise in this case would lead to practical absurdity. If they could fix the term of the office by appointment for one year beyond their own term, they could fix it for ten years.

But it would not help the defendant Belue for the court to hold the tenure of his office not limited by legislative intentment to the term of the board making the appointment; for the absolute power of removal at pleasure is incident to the power of appointment, unless the law provides duration of the official term or mode of removal. Ex parte Hennen, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 259, 10 L. Ed. 138; 3 Rose's Notes, 824; 1 Supp. Rose's Notes, 811; Keim v. United States, 177 U. S. 290, 20 Sup. Ct. 574, 44 L. Ed. 774; 23 Am. & Eng. Enc. 410. It is also well settled that, where the power to remove at pleasure exists, the appointment of another person operates as a removal of the incumbent from the time he receives notice of the appointment. Ex parte Hennen, supra; Blake v. United States, 108 U. S. 227, 26 L. Ed. 466; Commonwealth v. Slifer, 25 Pa. 23, 64 Am. Dec. 680. Section 27, art. 3, of the Constitution, does not make any different rule of law. It provides: "Officers shall be removed for incapacity, misconduct or neglect of duty, in such manner as may be provided by law, when no mode of trial or removal is provided in this Constitution." The requirement that officers shall be removed for incapacity, official misconduct, or neglect of duty in such manner as may be provided by law by no means implies abrogation of the general rule of law above stated that an appointed officer may be removed at the pleasure of the officer who appointed him. The affidavits tending to show that for some years the retiring county board of commissioners have been accustomed to elect a superintendent of the poorhouse and farm for a period extending beyond their own term cannot have the effect of changing the law. Nor can the court take account of the charge that Belue, though recognized as an excellent officer, was turned out of office in fulfillment of campaign promises. However unworthy and unjust such action may be, the account for it must be rendered, not to the court, but to the people at the ballot box. While the defendant Belue has no right whatever to the office of superintendent of the poorhouse and farm of Union county, the remedy of the plaintiff Howell is by quo warranto, and not injunction.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

(78 S. C. 169)

GREENWOOD GRANITE & CONST. CO. v.
WARE SHOALS MFG. CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Sept. 16, 1907.)

1. REFERENCE—COMPULSORY REFERENCE—NATURE OF ACTION.

Where the statement of a cause of action involved allegations of a partnership relation, a complication of parties, and necessitated an examination of a long account, and the statement of another cause of action raised issues with reference to an agency, trust, and accounting, and the answer tendered issues as to a partnership and equitable issues concerning the foreclosure of a chattel mortgage, it was a proper case for a compulsory reference as authorized by Code Civ. Proc. 1902, § 293.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 42, Reference, § 6.]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Greenwood County; James Aldrich, Judge.

Action by the Greenwood Granite & Construction Company against the Ware Shoals Manufacturing Company. From an order transferring the cause to the equity calendar, and referring it to a master to take and report testimony, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Sheppards, Grier & Park, for appellant.
Dial & Todd, for respondent.

WOODS, J. This is an appeal from the order of Hon. James Aldrich, holding the cause should be tried on the equity side of the court, and accordingly transferring it from calendar 1 to calendar 2, and referring it to the master to take and report testimony.

Section 274, Code Civ. Proc. 1902, provides: "An issue of fact in an action for the recovery of money only, or of specific, real or personal property, must be tried by a jury, unless a jury trial be waived, as provided in section 238, or a reference be ordered." By section 293, the court is authorized to order a reference without consent "(1) where the trial of an issue of fact shall require the examination of a long account on either side; in which case the referee may be directed to hear and decide the whole issue, or to report upon any specific question of fact involved therein; or (2) where the taking of an account shall be necessary for the information of the court, before judgment, or for carrying a judgment or order into effect." The circuit decree thus states the nature of the issues: "In the issues of the first cause of action there are allegations of a partnership relation and a complication of parties. In the issues of several other causes of action there is shown to be the necessity of examining a long account of the cost of certain work and for estimating a certain percentage thereon, as well as the examining of long complicated accounts in reference to payments. In one of the causes of action the issues involve the relation between the parties of agency, trust, and accounting. In the issues made by the counterclaims set up in the answer and the reply of the plaintiff thereto are involved the partnership relation and the equitable issues of the foreclosure of a chattel mortgage, and it also seems necessary to examine long and complicated accounts on both sides. A careful examination of this case convinces me that the issues are peculiarly involved, and the necessity exists for the taking and examining long and complicated accounts. I am satisfied that a trial of the issues by jury would be almost impracticable, and, in addition to the equitable issues presented, and by reason of the necessity of the examination of long and complicated accounts, the remedy at law is greatly embarrassed and inadequate, and therefore, in order to properly ascertain the truth and do exact and substantial justice between the parties, the trial should be had on the equity side of this court." Inspection of the pleadings shows beyond all doubt the correctness of the conclusion of the circuit court. The power of the circuit court to transfer such a cause to calendar 2 and make an order of reference is fully sustained by authority. Devereux v. McCrady, 46 S. C. 143, 24 S. E. 77; Green v. McCarter, 64 S. C. 290, 42 S. E. 157; Price v. Middleton, 75 S. C. 105, 55 S. E. 156.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

(78 S. C. 249)

ROCHESTER et al. v. BULL.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Sept. 24, 1907.)

1. HIGHWAYS—AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENT—NEGLIGENCE OF DRIVER—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In an action for injuries to plaintiff's wife resulting from plaintiff's mule becoming frightened at defendant's automobile, which was stopped, with the engine running, near a bridge to permit plaintiff to pass, evidence held to require submission of the question of the negligence of defendant's chauffeur to the jury.

2. TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—CONSTRUCTION AS A WHOLE.

Where the court had previously charged that a person would not be liable unless his negligence was the proximate cause of the injury, an instruction that, if negligence of defendant's agent caused the injury, the principal would be liable, was not erroneous for failure to charge that such liability would occur only for injuries which were proximately caused by the agent's negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, §§ 703-718.]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT—ACTS OF SERVANT—LIABILITY OF MASTER.

Acts of a servant within the scope of his duties are those of the master, and the master's liability for his servant's acts is the same as if he had been acting himself.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Master and Servant, § 1217.]

4. TRIAL—SPECIFIC INSTRUCTIONS—REQUESTS.

Defendant cannot object that the instructions given were general principles of law where no specific instructions were requested.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, § 628.]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Greenville County; Ernest Gary, Judge.

Action by Thomas M. Rochester and another against J. A. Bull. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Haynesworth & Patterson, for appellants. Blythe & Blythe, for respondent.

POPE, C. J. This action was brought by the plaintiffs, Thomas M. Rochester and his wife, Caroline Rochester, to recover damages of the defendant, J. A. Bull, for injuries alleged to have been caused by his negligence. The facts are as follows: On August 30, 1904, the plaintiffs were going along the road leading from the city of Greenville, in the direction of Chick Springs, in a wagon drawn by a mule. As they drew near to the bridge leading across Richland creek, on coming around a sharp curve about 75 yards from the foot of the bridge, the automobile of the defendant was seen approaching, it being then just about to run off of the bridge. The plaintiff Thomas Rochester at once signaled the driver of the machine to stop. The road at this point is down a comparatively steep grade, and is narrow. On the left-hand side approaching the bridge is a high bank, while on the other side is a steep bluff leading down to the creek. The automobile, in compliance with the signal of the plaintiff, was run into a cut-out in the bank on the left-hand side, and the forward motion of the machine stopped. The motor, however, was permitted to continue running, and, according to the testimony of the plaintiffs, gave forth much noise and caused the whole machine to vibrate. The plaintiffs continued their approach; the mule becoming more or less frightened as he neared the machine. When he was almost opposite it, he became uncontrollable, and ran over to the extreme right of the road, where he struck a telephone pole, throwing the plaintiffs from the wagon, and, according to the allegations of the complaint, injuring Mrs. Rochester. At the conclusion of plaintiffs' testimony, defendant made a motion for a nonsuit, on the ground that there was absolutely no evidence showing negligence on his part. Judge Ernest Gary refused the motion, and, the case being submitted to the jury, a verdict of $475 was returned for the plaintiffs. The defendant now comes to this court for relief.

The exceptions first raise the point as to whether or not it was error to deny the nonsuit. It is too well settled to require the citation of authority that, where there is a scintilla of evidence going to sustain a cause, a nonsuit cannot be granted. The question, therefore, resolves itself into whether or not there was any evidence in the case now before us. We think it is a fact of which courts will take judicial notice that automobiles on highways, especially where they are infrequent, have a tendency to frighten animals. The duty, therefore, devolves upon the drivers of such machines to exercise due care to prevent accidents. The amount of care necessary varies with the various circumstances. Acts which in a given case might be negligence in another might be due care. Therefore it is almost absolutely necessary that what action amounts to due care must be a question of fact. From the evidence, it would seem that the present case is one in which much care was required. The character of the ground, the exposed situation of the plaintiffs, and their little children, the fright of the mule on the present and prior occasions, the noise of the machine, were all circumstances going to call for the exercise of much care, such care as a prudent person would exercise. Whether the defendant in the present case exercised such care is not so absolutely evident that it may be decided as a matter of law. It is a question peculiarly within the province of the jury, and the nonsuit was therefore properly refused.

The circuit judge at the close of his charge told the jury that, if negligence of the agent in charge of the automobile caused the injury, the principal would be liable. The defendant alleges error in his failing to qualify this language so as to make the principal liable only for such injuries as were caused proximately by the agent's negligence. This exception cannot be sustained. The court had previously charged that a person would not be liable, unless his negligence was the proximate cause of the injury. Now, if a person would only be liable for the proximate results of his acts when he acted himself, it would seem a queer conclusion, one which a person of ordinary reason would not draw, that, when he acted through an agent, he would be held liable for all injuries, whether proximate or not. The proposition is familiar to the ordinary mind that the acts of an agent within the scope of his duties are those of the master and the master's liability for his agent's acts are the same as if he had been acting himself. The court certainly stated correct propositions of law. True they were general principles, but, if the defendant wished anything more specific, he should have requested it.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

(78 S. C. 222)

MONTAGUE et al. v. HOOD.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Sept. 24, 1907.)

LANDLORD AND TENANT—RECOVERY OF POSSESSION BY LANDLORD.

Defendant having entered lands under a lease from plaintiff's vendor, and not having surrendered, but remained in possession, after termination of the lease, plaintiff's remedy is not by injunction to prevent alleged repeated trespasses but the statutory remedy against a tenant at will or holding over.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 32, Landlord and Tenant, § 1180.]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Berkeley County; R. O. Purdy, Judge.

Action by R. L. Montague and another against James R. Hood. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

The decree of the trial court is as follows:

"This suit was instituted for the purpose of obtaining a permanent injunction against the defendant to prevent alleged repeated trespasses by him upon the premises referred to in the complaint. The defendant lived about three miles from the premises, but had been renting the places for several years, subletting portions of the premises to parties in actual occupancy. While this state of things existed, the premises were optioned to the plaintiffs, and the options were closed by a deed of conveyance on the 29th day of March, 1905, but as a matter of fact the transaction had been finally closed prior to that date. On January 30, 1905, Mr. W. H. Warley, who had charge of the property for himself and the other owners of it, addressed a letter to the defendant as follows: 'I beg to notify you that Mt. Hope and Oakland plantations have been sold to Mr. R. L. Montague. You will please turn the property over to Mr. Montague upon presentation of this letter and will appreciate your facilitating him in any way that you can. From my conversation with Mr. Montague I think you can arrange to rent the property from him.' Mr. Tucker took this letter and presented it to Mr. Hood at his residence about the 1st or 2d of February. What took place at that time is conflicting; Mr. Tucker giving one version, and Mr. Hood and others giving a different version. Mr. Tucker contends that the result of the interview with Mr. Hood was the recognition of the right of Mr. Warley to sell the property, and also a recognition of the right of the purchasers to the possession, and says that he was authorized by Mr. Hood to submit an offer of $400 as a rent for the property for the year 1905. Mr. Tucker wrote Mr. Hood saying that they had decided to rent it to Mr. Rogers. Mr. Hood consulted Messrs. Dennis & Mann, his attorneys, and they wrote to know if they could not arrange for Mr. Hood to plant the places for the year 1905, and concluded by expressing the hope that some arrangements could be made without being forced into the courts. This was on the 20th of February. Upon receiving a negative answer, containing also a recital of the position taken by the plaintiffs, Messrs. Dennis & Mann notified the plaintiffs on March 8th that they had advised Mr. Hood not to surrender the premises. On April 6th this action was commenced and a temporary injunction was obtained. A motion was made to set aside this injunction, but Judge Memminger, after carefully going over the situation as presented to him, declined to grant the order. The testimony having been taken before a referee, the case is submitted to me for adjudication.

"An injunction cannot be used as a means to obtain possession of property. Pelzer v. Hughes, 27 S. C. 408, 3 S. E. 781. But it is now settled that, in order to prevent a multiplicity of suits and the annoyance consequent upon repeated trespasses, this means may be resorted to. McClellan v. Taylor, 54 S. C. 438, 32 S. E. 527; Alderman v. Wilson, 69 S. C. 156, 48 S. E. 85. The question naturally arises in this case as to what was the true status of the parties at the time of the sale made by Mr. Warley to the plaintiffs, and naturally, in connection therewith, whether the defendant was a trespasser. If the defendant was a trespasser annoying the plaintiffs in the possession of the premises, then the plaintiffs would have a right to enjoin him from the repetition of such acts, but if he was in possession of the premises as a tenant, either at will, or holding over, or as rightfully a tenant under a contract, then this remedy cannot be applied for in the first two cases, there would be a statutory remedy, and in the latter case the defendant would be entitled to the premises. Mr. Warley notified the defendant, in writing, in November, 1904, that the verbal contract of lease for five years had expired, and that he could not rent to him for the year 1905 on the same terms, but that he would do nothing until the defendant could see him, and Mr. Warley says that the defendant did see him, and that the result of the conference was that the defendant was advised that the places were under option, and that the option might be closed at any time, and any planting for the year 1905 would be subject to the rights of the purchasers. There is a lack of agreement as to all of these matters from the defendant's standpoint. Be that as it may, on January 30, 1905, Mr. Warley and the plaintiffs recognized the defendant as being then in possession of the premises, and the letter addressed to the defendant is sufficient evidence of that fact, for it requests the defendant to turn over the premises to the purchasers. If he delivered the premises to the plaintiffs and recognized their rights, then he had no right upon the premises after that. That there was something said between the parties about renting the premises is manifest, and that some arrangement was sought to be made in an amicable manner with the purchasers is also manifest. One cannot escape this conclusion from reading the letter written by Mr. Tucker to the defendant, and from reading the letter of Messrs. Dennis & Mann. The first is a statement made from the plaintiff's standpoint, and the latter is a statement made from the defendant's standpoint. That the defendant had not given up the premises is evidenced by the fact that he took counsel with Messrs. Dennis & Mann, and it showed that he was then ready to enter into a treaty for the place for the year 1905, but with the reservation that he hoped this could be done without resorting to the courts. This treaty did not result in such an arrangement, and as a matter of fact the defendant did not surrender the premises to the plaintiffs; or to Mr. Rogers, their agent, and the plaintiffs, from the testimony, were not in possession and control of the premises at the time of the commencement of this action. Such being the case, the plaintiffs were not entitled to the order of injunction, and the same should be dissolved. Having reached this conclusion, a reference, under the Code, to ascertain the damages, if any, follows, as a matter of course. Hill v. Thomas, 19 S. C. 235; Mauldin v. City of Greenville, 64 S. C. 444, 42 S. E. 202; Lewis v. Jones, 65 S. C. 157, 43 S. E. 525.

"It is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the temporary injunction heretofore granted herein be, and the same is hereby, dissolved, and that the complaint herein be, and the same is hereby, dismissed, with costs, and that the defendant be, and he is hereby, given leave to enter up judgment herein accordingly. It is further ordered, adjudged, and decreed that it be referred to H. W. Harvey, Esq., master of this court, to ascertain and report what damages, if any, have been sustained by reason of the said injunction, and to report the same to the court, and that at least four days' notice of the reference or references held hereunder, be given to all parties in interest in the case, or their attorney, and to the sureties named in the bonds or undertakings executed in this case.

"I think it due to Mr. Warley to say that I am satisfied that in his dealings with the plaintiffs he had entirely overlooked the fact that he had signed the written option which was afterwards produced by the defendant; but as the defendant was in the actual possession of the premises at the time of the commencement of this action, the result must be the same, whether he was holding over under the previous years' renting, or whether he was holding under the terms of the contract, and, even if he entered into a written lease for each year previous to that time, that was entirely consistent upon the terms of the contract, for it provided for a separate agreement for each year, independent of the general contract which he held. This contract was binding upon Mr. Warley, although signed only by him. 1 Chitty, Contracts (Ed. 1874) 453."

Huger Sinkler and B. A. Hagood, for appellant. M. Rutledge Rivers, for respondent.

POPE, O. J. After a careful consideration of the testimony set forth by the record in this case, this court is satisfied that the decree of the circuit judge is correct, and therefore adopts it as the opinion of this court.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

(107 Va. 811)

SPITLER et al. v. GUY.*SAME v. HUTCHESON et al.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Sept. 17, 1907.)

MANDAMUS—SUBJECTS OF RELIEF—OTHER ADEQUATE REMEDY.

Code Va. 1904, § 86, provides that any five qualified voters of an election district, 15 days previous to the regular days of registration, may post a notice of the names of persons alleged to be improperly registered; that on the day of registration the registrar shall hear testimony as to the right of persons named in the notice on the registration books, and that, if he be satisfied that any person is not a qualified voter, he may strike his name from the books; and that from such decision any person may appeal, as provided in section 83a. Section 83a provides that any person denied registration shall have the right to appeal to the circuit court, and that a judgment in favor of him shall entitle him to registration, and that from a judgment against him a writ of error shall lie to the Supreme Court of Appeals. Held to provide an adequate remedy to strike the names of persons illegally registered from registration books; and hence mandamus would not lie for that purpose.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 33, Mandamus, §§ 8, 21.]

Two petitions for writs of mandamus by J. W. Spidler and another, one against R. M. Guy and the other against J. A. Hutcheson, registrars, to compel them to erase the names of certain persons alleged to have been illegally registered from the registration books of their respective precincts. F. M. Merriken and another, representing themselves as registered and duly qualified voters, filed their petition, and were permitted to come into the proceeding and make defense. Writs denied.

Turner K. Hackman and Thos. Whitehead, for petitioners. Patrick & Gordon, Timberlake & Nelson, H. H. Wayt, Charles Curry, and F. B. Kennedy for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This day came again the parties by counsel, and the court, having maturely considered the transcript of the record of the petition aforesaid and arguments of counsel, is of opinion that the petitioners have an adequate remedy by virtue of sections 86 and 83a of the Code of Virginia of 1904, and upon the authority of Eubank v. Boughton, 98 Va. 499, 36 S. E. 529, the prayer of the petitioners for a writ of mandamus is denied, and it is ordered that the respondents recover of the petitioners their costs in this behalf expended.

Writs denied.

(129 Ga. 204)

WRIGHTSVILLE & T. R. CO. v. GORNTO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 9, 1907.)

1. DEATH—ACTION FOR—DAMAGES—EVIDENCE.

In a suit to recover the value of a life alleged to have been destroyed by the negligence of the defendant, it is proper to prove what was the occupation of the deceased and the amount of money which he usually made each year in his business, in order to illustrate his earning capacity.

58 S.E.—49

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Death, § 88.]

2. ERROR, WRIT OF—PRESUMPTIONS.

Where the trial judge in his charge informs the jury that the contentions of the parties made during the trial are so and so, it will, in the absence of a certificate by him to the contrary, be presumed that his statement of such contentions was correct.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 3753.]

3. TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—MATTERS OF LAW.

If the court correctly instructs the jury as to the law applicable to the issues involved in the case, mere failure to "affirmatively" state the contentions of the parties as shown by the pleadings is not cause for a new trial.

4. SAME—REQUESTS IN WRITING—NECESSITY—RAILROADS—ACCIDENT AT CROSSING.

Where, in a suit to recover damages for the homicide of a person killed upon a public railroad crossing by a train of the defendant company, the court charges the jury that if they believe that the railroad company was negligent, and that the deceased by ordinary care and diligence could have avoided the consequences of such negligence, the plaintiff cannot recover, it is not error to fail to charge that the deceased was under the duty of exercising ordinary and reasonable care and diligence before entering upon the railroad crossing, when such instruction is not requested in writing by the defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, § 648.]

5. ERROR, WRIT OF—ASSIGNMENT OF ERROR.

There is no merit in an assignment of error that the court failed to charge the jury a certain principle of law applicable to the case, when it appears that this principle was correctly given in charge to the jury.

6. RAILROADS—ACCIDENT AT CROSSING—INSTRUCTIONS.

In a case of the character indicated in the fourth headnote, it is not error to instruct the jury that, if they find that at the time of the occurrence in question the train of the defendant company was not running on schedule time, they can take that circumstance into consideration in determining whether or not the deceased had reason to apprehend danger at such time.

7. TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where the trial judge begins his instructions as to the law applicable to a particular issue in the case with the language, "Now in this case I charge you that the plaintiff would not be entitled to recover unless," etc., the use, in such connection, of the words "in this case" is not calculated to mislead the jury into believing that the only issue in the case is the one here referred to by the court, when in the same connection and in other portions of the charge the jury is correctly instructed as to other issues.

8. SAME—NEGLIGENCE—COMPARATIVE NEGLIGENCE—INSTRUCTIONS.

Upon the trial of an action of the character heretofore indicated, the court, in different portions of its charge, having read to the jury sections 2322 and 3830 of the Civil Code of 1895, subsequently instructed them: "If the deceased and the agents of the defendant company were both at fault, and the deceased may have in some way contributed to the injury which resulted in his death, but could not by the use of ordinary care and diligence have avoided the consequences caused by the negligence of the defendant, the plaintiff may recover, even if you find that the deceased was negligent, but the amount of damages would be diminished in proportion to the amount of default attributable to the negligence of the deceased." Held: (a) That the charge did not instruct a recovery for the plaintiff, even though the negligence of the deceased and that of the defendant company were equal, or that of the company was less than that of the deceased; and (b) that, in view of the instructions given as above stated, the failure to charge that, if the negligence of the deceased and that of the company were equal, the plaintiff could not recover, was not cause for a new trial, no request having been made to charge on the subject of equality of negligence.

9. RAILROADS—ACCIDENT AT CROSSING—EVIDENCE.

The motion for a nonsuit was properly overruled, the verdict was amply supported by the evidence, and the court did not err in overruling the motion for a new trial.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Johnson County; B. T. Rawlings, Judge.

Action by Elizabeth Gornto against the Wrightsville & Tennille Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Elizabeth Gornto brought an action for damages against the Wrightsville & Tennille Railroad Company for the alleged wrongful homicide of her husband, William C. Gornto. The petition alleged that the plaintiff's husband was traveling in a wagon, drawn by a mule which he was driving, along a public thoroughfare within the city of Wrightsville, and while crossing defendant's railroad track, on and over a public crossing in such city, a passenger train of the defendant company ran into his wagon, threw him out, and killed him, and that he was without fault. The specific acts of negligence alleged were that the train was run over the crossing, which was on a public street of the city and constantly used by travelers, at a rapid and unusual rate of speed; that the engineer in charge of the train failed to give the signals required by law for public crossings; and that he failed to check and keep checking the speed of the train, as required by law, in approaching said crossing. The earning capacity and life expectancy of the deceased were set out. The defendant denied the acts of negligence charged, denied that plaintiff's husband was without fault, and alleged that he "was then and there at fault and negligent, and guilty of such contributory negligence as [would] defeat any right to recover in said case," and "that, if the said William C. Gornto had then and there acted with that degree of care and caution which the law imposed upon him, he would have been able to avoid any and all injury to him, and the results of any act of negligence upon the part of the defendant's agents and employees." At the close of the evidence for the plaintiff the defendant moved for a nonsuit, which was refused, and the defendant excepted pendente lite. There was a verdict for plaintiff. The defendant moved for a new trial, which motion was overruled, and the defendant excepted, assigning error upon each of the rulings stated.

Daley & Bussey, for plaintiff in error. Jas. K. Hines and J. K. Jordan, for defendant in error.

FISH, C. J. (after stating the facts as above). 1. A witness for the plaintiff testified that he knew the deceased, who was a good farmer and cultivated about a two-horse farm, renting one of the farms most of the time and cultivating the other one-horse farm for himself, and making from $600 to $700 a year, and in good crop years about $1,000. The defendant objected to this admission of evidence on the ground of irrelevancy, and that speculative earnings of farms, according to good or bad years, could not illustrate the earning capacity of the deceased. Clearly the objections were not well taken. It was proper to show that the deceased was a farmer and the amount he usually made in his business, in order to illustrate his earning capacity.

2. In several of the grounds of the motion for a new trial complaint is made that the court erred in informing the jury that the plaintiff contended such and such to be true. It appears that the court was not referring to contentions set out in the petition, but evidently referred to contentions which arose during the trial, and which were made in rebuttal to contentions made by the defendant. Where the judge in his charge informs the jury that the contentions made by the parties during the trial are so and so, it will, in the absence of a certificate by him to the contrary, be presumed that his statement of such contentions was correct. Robinson v. State, 109 Ga. 506, 34 S. E. 1017 (5). See, also, Wilson v. Atlanta & Charlotte Ry. Co., 82 Ga. 383, 9 S. E. 1076 (2).

3. Complaint was made that "the court erred in failing to affirmatively state to the jury a material contention under the defendant's plea, to wit: 'Answering further to plaintiff's cause of action, defendant says that the said William C. Gornto, the person for whose death the suit was brought, was not without fault or negligence on his part killed, but was then and there at fault and negligent, and guilty of such contributory negligence as will defeat any right to recover in said case.'" As will be seen, the complaint is that the court did not affirmatively state this contention to the jury in the language of the defendant's plea. If the court, as it did in this case, correctly instructs the jury as to the law applicable to the issues involved, mere failure to formally state the contentions of the parties as shown by the pleadings is not cause for a new trial. See, in this connection, Central R. Co. v. McKinney, 118 Ga. 535, 45 S. E. 430 (1).

4. Another ground of the motion was that the court erred in failing to charge the jury "that the deceased, Wm. C. Gornto, was under the duty of exercising ordinary and reasonable care and diligence for his own protection at and before entering upon the railroad crossing, and, that, if they found from the evidence that he so failed, it would be a question for them to find as to whether or not it amounted to negligence on his part and would operate to defeat a recovery." There was no merit in this ground, as the court did charge: "If the deceased could have avoided, by the exercise of ordinary care and diligence, the consequence of the railroad company's negligence, if you believe the railroad company was negligent, the plaintiff could not recover." The court several times in the charge repeated the substance of this instruction; and, if the defendant desired more specific instructions to the effect that the deceased should have exercised ordinary care and diligence at or before entering upon the railroad crossing, a timely and appropriate written request should have been made therefor.

5. Nor was there any merit in the assignment of error that the court, after instructing the jury as to the presumption of negligence arising against the defendant upon proof of the homicide as alleged, failed to charge that, if the defendant should show that it exercised all ordinary and reasonable care and diligence at the time of the casualty, the plaintiff could not recover. The court specifically instructed the jury that such presumption would be rebutted if the defendant showed that it exercised ordinary and reasonable care and diligence on the occasion in question.

6. The court instructed the jury: "If you find that the train of the defendant company at the time was not running on schedule time, you may take that into consideration in determining whether or not he [the deceased] had reason to apprehend danger at the time of the occurrence." This was alleged to be error, "because unsupported by the pleadings and contrary to law, and as imposing a more stringent rule against defendant than fixed by law." The criticism upon this charge we do not consider just. If the train was not on schedule time, surely this fact was a circumstance which the jury might properly consider in determining whether the husband of the plaintiff, in approaching the crossing, had reason to apprehend danger.

7. Complaint was also made of the following instruction to the jury: "Now in this case I charge you the plaintiff would not be entitled to recover unless it should appear that the deceased by ordinary care could not have avoided the consequences of the defendant's negligence, after such negligence had become apparent to the deceased, or if he had reason to apprehend that there was danger." The only exception to this charge referred to in the brief of counsel for plaintiff in error is: "Because the issue therein submitted was calculated to mislead the jury into believing it the only issue to be considered, as the court used in stating the charge excepted to the words 'In this case.' * * * By using these words, the jury were restricted in the determination of the case to the sole issue charged in connection with the words 'in this case,' etc." In our opinion, this exception was not well taken, when other parts of the charge are considered in connection with the instruction which we are now considering. In the sentence next preceding the charge here excepted to, the court instructed the jury that, while a widow may sue for the homicide of her husband, whatever would have been a good defense to an action brought by him for the injury, had he lived, would be a good defense to an action brought by her; and then the court proceeded, in the charge excepted to, to give, in effect, one of the instances in which the widow could not recover. Subsequently the court, in its instructions, gave the jury another instance in which the widow could not recover, viz.: If neither the deceased nor the railroad company were negligent; that is, if the injury was the result of a mere accident. And in another part of the charge the jury was instructed that "if a person shall recover damages from a railroad company for injury to himself or his property, where the same is done by his consent or is caused by his own negligence." The charge was full and fair on all the issues in the case, and that portion thereof with which we are now dealing, when considered in connection with the whole charge, was not calculated to mislead the jury into believing that the only issue to be considered was whether or not the husband of the plaintiff could, by the use of ordinary care and diligence, have avoided the consequences of the defendant's negligence.

8. The court instructed the jury: "If the deceased and the agents of the defendant company were both at fault, and the deceased may have in some way contributed to the injury which resulted in his death, but could not by the use of ordinary care and diligence have avoided the consequences caused by the negligence of the defendant, the plaintiff may recover, even if you find that the deceased was negligent; but the amount of the damages would be diminished in proportion to the amount of default attributable to the negligence of the deceased. In other words, if you believe that the railroad company was negligent and that the deceased was negligent, but the deceased could not have avoided the consequences of the defendant's negligence by the exercise of ordinary and reasonable care and diligence, if you believe that to be the truth of the transaction, then I charge you the plaintiff in this case would be entitled to recover, but the amount of the recovery would be reduced by the amount of negligence attributable to the deceased, William Gornto." This charge was excepted to, "on the grounds that it instructs a recovery for the plaintiff in this case, provided both parties were negligent, regardless of the degrees of negligence attributable to them, respectively; fails to require a finding of greater

4. SAME—POWERS—BORROWING MONEY.

A municipal corporation may borrow money to be used for the purposes of government, or for such other purposes as may be authorized by the Constitution and laws, when the power to borrow is delegated in the charter.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 36, Municipal Corporations, § 11,019.]

5. TAXATION—PROPERTY SUBJECT—MUNICIPAL BONDS.

Bonds issued by a municipal corporation as evidence of a loan made to it are instrumentalities of the government which creates the municipal corporation. Laws providing for the collection of taxes will not be so construed as to authorize the collection of a tax upon such instrumentalities of government, unless there is in the law clear language declaring that such was the intent of the lawmaking power.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 45, Taxation, § 300.]

6. SAME—STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION.

General terms and expressions in the Constitution, or in the statutes providing for the collection of taxes, are never allowed their full literal import, if the effect of such construction is to require that to be done which the law does not authorize, or to violate a fundamental principle upon which the government is founded and operated.

7. SAME—"PROPERTY."

The word "property," in that clause of the Constitution of this state which declares "All taxation shall be uniform upon the same class of subjects, and ad valorem on all property subject to be taxed within the territorial limits of the authority levying the tax," properly construed, does not require the taxing of public property or any of the lawful instrumentalities of government.

8. SAME—PUBLIC BONDS.

There is not, in the tax law of this state, any terms which expressly declare that the bonds of the state, or its various political subdivisions, are subject to tax, nor any language in such laws which clearly indicates that it was the intention of the General Assembly to subject these instrumentalities of government to taxation, either by the state or any county thereof.

9. SAME.

Bonds issued by a municipal corporation of this state in the hands of a resident of the state are not taxable by this state or any county thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 45, Taxation, § 300.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Morgan County; H. G. Lewis, Judge.

Action by L. T. Penick, tax collector, against F. C. Foster, executor. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Penick, as tax collector of Morgan county, brought an equitable petition against Foster, as executor, alleging that the defendant had recently received, in payment of the principal and interest on 10 municipal bonds of the city of Atlanta, of $1,000 each, bearing interest at 8 per cent. per annum, the sum of $27,600. The bonds were purchased by the testator of the defendant and deposited in a bank in the city of New York in the year 1880, then being of the value of $10,000. The plaintiff has, in accordance with the law, assessed this property as the property of the testator of the defendant, for the years 1880 to 1904, inclusive, and issued tax executions against the executor for each of these years; the aggregate amount of such executions being $9,512.27. The plaintiff knows of no other property of the testator of the defendant except the money above referred to. The executor is under no bond, is insolvent, and denies the right of the county of Morgan and the state of Georgia to tax the bonds, and refuses to pay the taxes. Unless the executor is restrained from distributing the funds among the legatees of the estate without paying the taxes, the plaintiff, as a tax officer, will be without a legal remedy, and will be forced to resort to a multiplicity of suits against the legatees. The prayer is that a receiver be appointed to take charge of the funds and pay them out under an order of court, and that the executor be enjoined from paying out any of the funds under the will of the testator until he has fully paid off and discharged the tax executions, and for general relief. The defendant, in his answer, alleges that the bonds were purchased by his testator of the fiscal agent of the city of Atlanta in the city of New York, and that they remained in the city of New York until paid off, on February 7, 1905; and the right of the county of Morgan and state of Georgia to tax the bonds is denied. It is alleged that the defendant, before he had any notice of the granting of the restraining order, or of the filing of the petition, distributed the funds in his hands among the legatees under the will of his testator. It is alleged that, shortly after he deposited the bonds in the bank in the city of New York, his testator died in the state of Maine; that the defendant qualified as executor on August 2, 1880, and had no knowledge of the depositing of the bonds, and never acquired any knowledge of the same until two or three weeks before he collected the amount of the bonds; that he had no knowledge that the assets of his testator included these bonds, and there was nothing among his papers indicating the same. The defendant pleads the statute of limitations of four years, as well as the statute of limitations of seven years, against the collection of the taxes against the bonds. At the hearing the judge refused to grant the injunction prayed for, and stated in his order that the injunction was refused solely upon the ground that the bonds were not taxable by the state and county. The plaintiff excepted.

George & Anderson, for plaintiff in error. Saml. H. Sibley, for defendant in error.

COBB, P. J. (after stating the facts as above). This case was heard on a petition and answer; both being verified by affidavits. There was no other evidence before the judge. The pleadings raised an issue of fact as to whether the funds in controversy were still in the hands of the executor, or had been distributed among the legatees. The order of the judge shows that he did not determine this issue of fact. He refused the injunction for the reason that he was of the opinion that the bonds were not taxable by the state and county, and the decision of this question of law is at the foundation of his judgment. Under such circumstances, the question for review by this court is whether the judge has correctly decided the question of law upon which he based the judgment refusing the injunction. See, in this connection, High Shoals Mfg. Co. v. Penick, 127 Ga. 504, 56 S. E. 648 (3); Hill v. Wadley Southern Railway Co., 128 Ga. 705, 57 S. E. 795. The single question therefore to be determined is whether bonds issued by a municipality of this state are taxable in the hands of a citizen and resident of this state and county.

A county is a mere political division of the state. For convenience the state delegates to certain officers within the county the right to exercise certain powers of sovereignty. A municipality is also a mere political subdivision of the state. It is a public corporation having for its object the administration of a portion of the powers of government delegated to it for that purpose. Civ. Code 1895, § 1833. They are mere creatures of the law-making power, and may be created and abolished at its will. The extent to which they shall be permitted to exercise the powers of government is, under the Constitution, left largely to the discretion of the General Assembly. Within the limits of their charter they may exercise the powers of sovereignty. "The right of taxation is a sovereign right, inalienable, indestructible, is the life of the state, and rightfully belongs to the people in all republican governments." Civ. Code 1895, § 5796. This right may be exercised by the state directly, subject to the limitations in the Constitution; and this right may be exercised by the counties and municipalities of the state to the extent that such power is delegated to these political subdivisions, and within the limits fixed by the Constitution or laws passed in pursuance thereof. The government, whether it be the state or one of its political subdivisions, is dependent, for the due exercise of its powers, on certain instrumentalities needful and proper in the matter with which it is dealing. Credit is absolutely indispensable to any government, whether it exists in the form of a state government or in the form of the government of one of the political subdivisions of the state. It becomes necessary, in the life of a state, as well as of its political subdivisions, to be able to establish credit in order to carry on successfully and properly the governmental functions. One of the most usual and ordinary methods of using the credit of a government is by the issue of securities and placing them in the markets of the world for sale. The state can borrow money in this way within the limitations of the Constitution. The counties may do likewise, and so may municipal corporations. A municipal corporation may not, however, borrow money for any purpose other than the purposes of government, unless such power is expressly delegated in its charter, and such delegation of power is consistent with the provisions of the Constitution. Hence, whenever a municipal corporation makes a loan of money, it is either to use the money for the purpose of carrying on the functions of government, or to effectuate an enterprise which the General Assembly has, by law passed in pursuance of the Constitution, authorized it to engage in. Every loan made by a municipal corporation is therefore in the exercise of the governmental powers and to effectuate the governmental object. If a municipal corporation issues, in conformity to law, a negotiable instrument in order to raise money to effectuate a governmental purpose, the paper issued by it is an instrumentality of government. It is the means resorted to by the governmental officers to effectuate the powers of government.

In McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, 4 L. Ed. 579, it was held that Congress had the power to incorporate a bank as a proper means of exercising the powers of government given by the Constitution, and that, as such bank was an instrumentality of the federal government, a state in which a branch was located could not levy a tax thereon without violating the Constitution. In Weston v. Charleston, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 449, 7 L. Ed. 481, it was held that a tax imposed by the law of a state on notes issued on loans made to the United States was unconstitutional. In Dobbins v. Erie County, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 435, 10 L. Ed. 1022, it was held that a tax imposed upon the office of a captain of a United States revenue cutter, which had the effect to diminish the compensation which he would receive as fixed by Congress, was unauthorized by law. In Banks v. Mayor, 74 U. S. 16,<sup>1</sup> it was held that certificates of indebtedness, issued by the United States to creditors of the government for supplies furnished for carrying on war, were beyond the taxing power of the state. In Van Brocklin v. Tennessee, 117 U. S. 151, 6 Sup. Ct. 670, 29 L. Ed. 845, land purchased by the United States at a sale for direct taxes, and afterwards sold, was held not to be taxable so long as it was owned by the United States. See, also, in this connection, Burrough on Taxation, 120. It is also well settled that the United States government cannot tax the governmental instrumentalities of the different states. Burrough on Taxation, 505. In Collector v. Day, 78 U. S. 113, 20 L. Ed. 122, it was held that Congress had no power to impose a tax upon the salary of a judicial officer of a state. In Pollock v. Farmers' Loan Co., 157 U. S. 429, 15 Sup. Ct. 673, 39 L. Ed. 759, it was held that a tax upon rents or income derived from the interest on bonds issued by a municipal corporation is a tax upon the powers of the state and its instrumentalities to borrow money. In United States v. Railroad Co., 84 U. S. 322, 21 L. Ed. 597, a municipal corporation is held to be a portion of the sovereign power of the state, and not subject to taxation by Congress upon its municipal revenues. It may be safely asserted that nothing is better settled than that securities issued by the government are as much the instrumentalities of the government as other means adopted by it to perform its functions. It is immaterial whether the security be issued by the state, or by a county, or by a municipality. It is, in all cases, an instrumentality of the government. It is issued for the purpose of effectuating those objects for which governments exist. In City Council v. Dunbar, 50 Ga. 387, Judge McCay says: "It is a question of some doubt whether a state can tax its own bonds. At any rate, it is a matter of serious question whether it is right to do so. If a state contracts to pay a fixed interest on its bonds, it is rather a loose compliance with that contract to tax the bond 1 or 2 per cent. We will not say a state cannot tax its own bonds." In that case it was held that a municipal corporation could not levy a tax on bonds issued by the state, unless there was clear language in the charter of the city conferring that power. In Miller v. Wilson, 60 Ga. 505, it was held that a general tax act of the state would not be so construed as to authorize the assessment and levy of a tax upon state bonds, unless there was clear language declaring that such was the legislative intent. Hence, where the act contains, as descriptive of the property subject to taxation, only the words, "the taxable property of this state," the act would be construed not to embrace state bonds owned by a citizen and resident of this state. It is to be noted, in passing, that both of the decisions just referred to were rendered in cases arising prior to the adoption of the Constitution of 1877. That instrument declares: "All taxation shall be uniform upon the same class of subjects, and ad valorem on all property subject to be taxed within the territorial limits of the authority levying the tax." Civ. Code 1895, § 5883. This provision of the Constitution has been so construed as to declare that all property within the limits of the state is subject to taxation, except such as the Constitution expressly authorizes the General Assembly to exempt from taxation. Georgia Railroad Co. v. Wright, 125 Ga. 589, 54 S. E. 52. The Constitution expressly authorizes the exemption of public property. Civ. Code 1895, § 5884.

<sup>1</sup> 19 L. Ed. 57.

Let it be conceded, for the purposes of this case, that the state, either directly or through its counties and municipalities, may tax public securities in the hands of individuals. The question then arises whether the words "all property subject to be taxed," in the Constitution, embraces bonds issued by the state or its political subdivisions. If it does, there is no power to exempt them from taxation. If it does not, the question as to whether they shall be so subjected is a matter left to the discretion of the General Assembly. If a municipal bond is property which the Constitution taxes of its own force, and the General Assembly has no authority to exempt the same from taxation, then a county bond is likewise taxable, and, for a similar reason, a state bond itself. If the Constitution, by virtue of its own terms, makes such bonds subject to tax, then no other legislation is necessary to provide for the collection of the tax than that which has been enacted for the purpose of collecting taxes upon other property of a similar character. If the tax acts provide machinery ample in its nature to collect taxes on notes and choses in action, such machinery will be ample for the purpose of collecting taxes upon choses in action issued by the state or one of its political subdivisions. Atlanta National Building & Loan Ass'n v. Stewart, 109 Ga. 80, 35 S. E. 73. If the Constitution, of its own force, requires the state to collect the taxes upon municipal bonds, by parity of reasoning it requires a county or municipality to collect taxes upon state bonds. If it does not require a municipality to collect the taxes on its own bonds, then it would not require the state to collect the taxes upon the bonds of its municipalities.

In Mayor of Macon v. Jones, 67 Ga. 489, it was held that the grant of a power in a charter of a municipality "to tax all property, real and personal, within the corporate limits of the city," would not be construed to include the taxing of its own bonds, in the absence of express authority for that purpose. It is to be noted that this case was decided after the Constitution of 1877 was adopted. If a municipal bond is "property," within the meaning of that term as used in the Constitution, and is made subject to taxation by the terms of the Constitution itself, such bond is subject to taxation in the hands of a resident of the municipality issuing it, as well as elsewhere in the state. The ruling in the case could not have been made except upon the theory that a municipal bond was not required to be taxed under the Constitution. The language of the decision indicates that the court was of opinion that this is a matter left to the discretion of the General Assembly. In Murray v. Charleston, 96 U. S. 432, 24 L. Ed. 700, it was held that a municipal corporation, when it borrows money and promises to repay it with interest, cannot, by its own ordinances, under the guise of taxation, relieve itself from performing to the lender all that it has expressly promised to its creditors. An ordinance of the city of Charleston, which authorized the retention of a part of the interest as taxes, was held to be invalid; but the court recognized the fact that after the interest was paid to the holder of the bond, and came into his possession, the money in his possession was subject to taxation in common with other similar property. There is, in the Constitution of Louisiana, language similar to that which appears

In our present Constitution in reference to what property shall be subject to taxation. In the case of State of Louisiana v. Board of Assessors, 35 La. Ann. 651, it was held that the words "all property" were not to be construed as requiring a tax by the state upon bonds issued by one of its municipalities, Fenner, J., after reaching this conclusion, says: "Nor can it be successfully opposed to this view that the words, 'all property shall be taxed,' are too clear and unambiguous to leave room for construction. On the contrary, such general terms and expressions are constantly subjected to construction, and it may be said that they are never allowed their full literal import. To do so would be to extend their intent to subjects which the state has clearly no power to tax, such as bonds of the United States, and other means and instruments for the exercise of the powers delegated to the federal government; and to other subjects, such as the salaries of judges, public property (although this is expressly exempted), and the like, which, though it is within the power of the state to tax, are yet considered on fundamental principles to be nontaxable." It is true that two judges dissented in this case but in a later case (State v. Board of Assessors, 111 La. 982, 36 South. 91) the conclusions reached in the earlier case were adopted by a unanimous court. The following language, taken from a most valuable work, is in point at this stage of the discussion: "It is well settled, as a general rule, that public property and the various instrumentalities of government, whether, in England and her colonies, appertaining to the crown, or, in the United States, to the federal government, the various states, or the political subdivisions of the state, are not subject to taxation. This immunity is in almost all jurisdictions confirmed by some express constitutional or statutory grant of exemption, but it is by no means dependent thereon, for it rests upon the most fundamental principles of government, being necessary in order that the functions of government be not duly impeded, and that the government be not forced into the inconsistency of taxing itself in order to raise money to pay over to itself, which money could be raised only by other taxation; and the express exemptions are considered to be inserted in the tax laws only from abundant caution, and because the assessment of taxes is made by local officers, who, though skilled in the valuation of property, are presumably unlearned in legal distinctions." 12 Am. & Eng. Enc. L. (2d. Ed.) 367 et seq.

There is nothing in the various tax acts, from 1880 down to the present time, which, either in express terms, or by necessary implication, indicates that it was the purpose of the General Assembly to levy a tax for state and county purposes upon the bonds of the state, or any of its political subdivisions. Such general terms as "taxable property" appear in these acts, and these terms have been interpreted, as we have seen, not to embrace state bonds, and not to embrace the bonds of a municipality owned by a citizen residing in that municipality. See, in this connection, the opinion of the Honorable Jno. C. Hart, Attorney General, of February 26, 1903. The conclusion reached by us therefore is that the municipality being a mere political subdivision of the state, to which is delegated a certain portion of the powers of government, a bond issued by it is merely a governmental instrumentality; that it is not taxable by the force of the Constitution itself, and, if taxable at all, it is only so when the General Assembly, either in express terms, or in such language that no other conclusion can be reached than that such was the intention of that body. A municipal corporation occupying, for many purposes, the same position as the state, so far as the taxing of its instrumentalities are concerned, it is not within the operation of a tax law unless expressly named, or there is clear language indicating such an intent. See, in this connection, Butler v. Merritt, 113 Ga. 233, 38 S. E. 751, and cases cited.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(2 Ga. App. 521)

MOSELEY v. DINKINS. (No. 393.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 3, 1907.)

ERROR, WRIT OF—REVIEW.

The errors of law complained of being wholly immaterial as affecting the merits of the case, and the verdict being amply supported by the facts and approved by the trial judge, this court will not interfere.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3948-3950.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Swainsboro; Frank Mitchell, Judge.

Action between W. M. Moseley and Elizabeth Dinkins. From the judgment, Moseley brings error. Affirmed.

Saffold & Larsen, for plaintiff in error.
Henry R. Daniel, for defendant in error.

HILL, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

(2 Ga. App. 526)

UNITED STATES FIDELITY & GUARANTY CO. v. DAVIS. (No. 418.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 3, 1907.)

1. GUARDIAN AND WARD—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE—RETURN OF GUARDIAN.

The return of a guardian made under oath to the ordinary charging himself with having received assets of the estate is prima facie evidence both against him and his sureties, and, unless met by proof of a legal disposition of the assets so admitted to have been received, is sufficient to show a devastavit.

2. SAME—BOND—COMPLIANCE WITH STATUTE.

A guardian's bond containing the conditions that the "guardian shall well and truly maintain, and clothe and educate said orphans according to their circumstances, and shall take good and lawful care of their persons and property according to the laws of this state, and shall annually make a just and true return of all his actings and doings herein unto said ordinary, and pay over all assets that may remain in his hands when said guardianship shall legally terminate" and payable to the "ordinary, his successors and assigns," is a good statutory bond, and is in substantial compliance with the provisions of section 2528 of the Civil Code of 1895. Under the conditions of this bond as controlled by the law of this state, the guardian was not authorized, without the approval of the ordinary, to apply the corpus of the estate to the maintenance and education of his wards.

8. SAME—ACTION AGAINST SURETY—DEMAND—NECESSITY.

Where the guardian is dead and his estate unrepresented, suit may be instituted on his bond against the sureties alone at the instance of his ward, or a new guardian, or any other person interested. In such case it is not necessary to make a demand on the surety before suit, for its liability is proved by the breach of the bond by its principal, the guardian, for whose legal discharge of duty it became surety.

4. ERROR, WRIT OF—REVIEW.

No material error of law was committed, and the evidence fully supports the verdict.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court, Floyd County; Harper Hamilton, Judge.

Action by J. P. Davis, as ordinary, for the use of one Treadaway, guardian, against the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Denny & Harris and R. T. Fouché, for plaintiff in error. F. W. Copeland and W. M. Henry, for defendant in error.

HILL, C. J. Davis, as ordinary of Floyd county, brought suit for the use of Treadaway, guardian of the three named minor children of one Mark Smith, against the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company, security on the bond of J. A. Carroll, deceased, guardian of said minor children. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, and, to the judgment of the court denying its motion for a new trial, error is assigned by the defendant.

The case made by the plaintiff, briefly stated, is as follows: The appointment and qualification of J. A. Carroll as guardian of said three minor children November 15, 1899. The execution of the bond sued on with the defendant as the only security. Exemplifications of returns made by Carroll as such guardian to the ordinary duly sworn to, dated and filed November 11, 1902, showing in his hands as such guardian the sum of $328.97 in cash. The death of said Carroll September 14, 1903, in Floyd county intestate, without assets and insolvent, leaving a widow and four minor children. The setting apart as a year's support to the widow and four minor children all the property left by deceased appraised at from $250 to $300. That the estate of Carroll was without any representation. It was also shown that neither one of the minor children had received any property from the guardian coming into his hands from the estate of their father. The defendant introduced no evidence and practically admitted the case made by plaintiff, but denied his right to recover under the facts shown and the law: (1) Because there was no evidence showing a devastavit, the returns of the guardian made in November, 1902, being insufficient for that purpose when he died in March, 1903; that this return only showed a receipt by the guardian of the money sued for and in his possession November, 1902, but did not show the condition of his accounts as guardian at the date of his death in March, 1903. (2) Because the instrument sued on was a voluntary, and not a statutory, bond, and could not be sued on as a statutory bond. The bond was made payable to Davis as ordinary, his successors and assigns, "and no negotiable or assignable instrument can be made a statutory obligation"; the statute requiring a guardian bond to be "payable to the ordinary and his successors in office," and that the condition of a statutory guardian's bond is "for the faithful discharge of his duty as guardian," and the conditions of the bond sued on are: The "guardian shall well and truly maintain, and clothe and educate said orphans according to their circumstances, and shall take good and lawful care of their persons and property according to the laws of the state, and shall annually make a just and true return of all his actings and doings herein, unto said ordinary, and pay over all assets that may remain in his hands when said guardianship shall legally terminate." (3) That under the conditions of this bond, the guardian was authorized to apply the corpus to the maintenance of his wards, that a compliance with the special conditions stated in the bond would satisfy it, and the burden was on the plaintiff to show that such conditions had not been complied with, which had not been done, but, on the contrary, the evidence for the plaintiff showed that the wards had lived with and been maintained by the guardian. (4) That, under the facts of this case, a demand was a condition precedent to plaintiff's right to recover, and, as the guardian was dead, an administrator of his estate was necessary in order that such demand could have been made. These are the positions covered by the able counsel in his argument and brief.

1. The evidence clearly proved a devastavit by the guardian. His returns as such guardian, filed November, 1902, were prima facie evidence against him and his surety as to the amount in his hands appearing therefrom. 2 Brandt on Suretyship (2d Ed.) § 622; Dowling v. Feeley, 72 Ga. 558 (3); Bailey v. McAlpin, 122 Ga. 632, 50 S. E. 388 (15). It is insisted that while the returns might show the condition of the guardian's account at the date when made, to wit, November, 1902, this did not show its condition in 1903, the date of the guardian's death. This proof was supplemented by the positive and uncontroverted testimony that neither one of the wards had received any part of their funds which this guardian admitted he had in his hands in November, 1902. When it is shown that the guardian had at any time during the trust received assets belonging to his wards, the burden is upon him or his surety to show that a legal disposition of such assets had been made. Freeman v. Brewster, 93 Ga. 648, 21 S. E. 165 (3). If the guardian had made any legal disposition of the fund in his hands in November, 1902, prior to his death in March, 1903, the fact was easily susceptible of proof. He could not have paid to the minors any part of it, or expended any part of it in their maintenance beyond the interest and income without the approval of the ordinary. Civ. Code 1895, §§ 2541, 2542; Dowling v. Feeley, 72 Ga. 558 (2).

2. The bond in this case was a sufficient compliance with section 2528, Civ. Code 1895. This section provides that a guardian shall "give bond with good and sufficient security, to be approved by the ordinary, in double the amount of the supposed value of the property of the ward for the faithful discharge of his duty as guardian; such bond shall be payable to the ordinary and his successor. A substantial compliance as to all matters of form shall be sufficient." The condition as stated in the statute is "for the faithful discharge of his duty as guardian." The condition in the bond sued on sets out with particularity the duties of the guardian as comprehensively included in the general phrase of the statute. In this bond the obligations of the guardian are that he "shall well and truly maintain, and clothe and educate said orphans according to their circumstances, and shall take good and lawful care of their persons and property according to the laws of the state, and shall annually make a just and true return of all of his actings and doings herein unto said ordinary, and to pay over all assets that may remain in his hands when said guardianship shall legally terminate." Surely all these things are embraced in the general condition, "faithful discharge of his duty as guardian." The language of this bond, while somewhat fuller than the language of the statute, means no more or no less. We are not impressed with the argument that the condition of this bond permitted the guardian to expend the corpus in the maintenance of his wards. This clause must be construed as qualified by the right of the guardian under the law to use only the interest or income for that purpose without the approval of the ordinary. In this case it is also immaterial that the bond is payable to the ordinary, his successors and assigns. The suit is by the ordinary, the original obligee in the bond. The policy of the law as to all bonds required by statute, and especially as to bonds of guardians, administrators, and like trustees, is to disregard mere formalities, and to require only substantial compliance to secure all statutory remedies to persons injured by their breach. Civ. Code 1895, § 2535; Pol. Code 1895, § 263.

3. Under the law as it now stands in this state, when "the guardian is dead and his estate unrepresented," suit may be brought on the guardian's bond against his sureties alone. Civ. Code 1895, § 2535. Prior to the act of 1820, suit could not be brought against the surety on the bond until a judgment had been obtained against the guardian. Prince's Digest, p. 44. Under that act both might be joined in the same action, but no suit could be brought against the surety in the first instance, unless the guardian was without the limits of the state. But, as stated, the present Code gives the right to sue the surety alone when the "guardian is dead and his estate unrepresented." In such case, no demand is necessary, as there is no one upon whom a demand could be made. The right to sue the surety is based on a breach of the bond by the guardian. When the evidence shows a devastavit by the guardian, a breach of the bond is shown, and the liability of the surety is established. In this case, the devastavit by the guardian was proved. The guardian died intestate and insolvent, and his estate was unrepresented. There was nothing to administer, as all the property he died possessed of had been set apart to his widow as a year's support, a right superior to that of these wards or their new guardian. The only possible recourse to the wards was their guardian's bond executed for the express purpose of protecting them in just such an extremity.

We think, under the undisputed facts and the law, no other verdict could have been justly rendered, and that the judgment refusing the new trial should be affirmed.

Affirmed.

(2 Ga. App. 530)

HARDY v. HARDY. (No. 434.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 3, 1907.)

1. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE—CERTIORARI—EXCEPTIONS TO ANSWER.

Exceptions to the answer of the magistrate to a writ of certiorari, timely made in writing, and specifically pointing out the defects in said answer, should be sustained, where it appears that the omissions of the answer are of matters essential and material to a proper decision of the case by the reviewing court.

The return of the magistrate to the writ of certiorari should include all the proceedings in the cause.

2. ARBITRATION AND AWARD—REPEAL OF ARBITRATORS.

An unsworn verbal report made to the court by three persons selected by the parties to pending litigation to settle the matters therein in controversy between them cannot legally be made the judgment of the court, where it appears that there was no order of the court referring the case to the three persons, and that said report was simply the opinion of the three persons formed without hearing evidence, or giving the party against whom the report was made an opportunity of being heard, or of contesting the truth of such report.

3. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE—JUDGMENT.

A judgment of a justice of the peace in a suit on an open account, not verified by the plaintiff, or proved by evidence, is unauthorized, and should be set aside on certiorari.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Jasper County; H. G. Lewis, Judge.

Action by W. G. Hardy against A. J. Hardy. Judgment for defendant was affirmed on certiorari, and he brings error. Reversed.

A. Y. Clement, for plaintiff in error. Doyle Campbell, for defendant in error.

HILL, C. J. W. G. Hardy sued Mrs. A. J. Hardy upon an open account in the justice court. On the day set for the trial, neither party being represented by counsel, they agreed to submit the matter in controversy to three arbitrators who were to make an investigation of the facts and make a report to the court, which report was to be made the judgment of the court. The three arbitrators so called, without hearing any evidence, after a personal examination of the matters in controversy upon which the account was based, made a verbal report to the court, which report was made the judgment of the court. This report was made without giving either party any notice thereof or without any opportunity to be heard. Thereupon the defendant, against whom the report was made and judgment was entered, petitioned the superior court for writ of certiorari, which was granted. This petition set forth the following assignments of error: "(1) The court erred in rendering judgment against petitioner, because after said case was submitted to arbitration by agreement of parties as hereinbefore set out, said case being withdrawn from court for that purpose, said court had no jurisdiction to render judgment therein. (2) The court erred in rendering judgment against petitioner because, after agreement of withdrawal and submission to arbitration in the presence of the presiding magistrate, petitioner, having filed no plea, did not file one after said agreement, the purpose and effect of said agreement being to transfer said case from said court to said arbitrators chosen for adjudication, and consequently said court had no jurisdiction at the time it rendered said judgment, and petitioner was deprived of an opportunity to defend, and has not had her day in court. (3) The court erred in rendering judgment because the presiding magistrate was from an adjoining district, it not appearing that M. P. Stone, notary public and ex officio justice of the peace, was not present and was disqualified to sit; said presiding magistrate sitting in said case without the knowledge or consent of petitioner, and after consent to arbitration as aforesaid and petitioner had left the court grounds. (4) The court erred in rendering said judgment because there was no evidence or testimony under oath whatever upon which to base the judgment. (5) The court erred in rendering said judgment upon the unsworn statement of said three unsworn arbitrators who themselves had not heard one syllable of the evidence and based their opinion solely upon rumor and their personal knowledge. (6) The court erred in making the said unsworn statement of said unsworn arbitrators the judgment of the court. (7) The court erred in making the opinion of said arbitrators the judgment of the court, because they had not determined and passed upon matters in controversy according to law, of which fact the court was cognizant, defendant not having any of her rights to a fair and impartial trial before said arbitrators." The judge of the superior court granted the writ, and the presiding magistrate made the following answer: "Replying specifically to the allegations in said petition, respondent says (1) that M. P. Stone asked me to preside in the case, he being disqualified, and I was present on the day of the trial, and, when court was opened before the case was called, Mr. Gordon Hardy and Mr. Will Smith prevailed with Mrs. A. J. Hardy and W. G. Hardy to pick three men from the crowd present to go out to Mrs. Hardy's house, and estimate what lumber had not been used on the house and to report back to court, and also damage on any lumber used on house, if any. The men were Jin. Pope, William Lloyd, and Walter Evans. W. G. Hardy agreed to take back all lumber unused at the price she was to pay for it delivered at the house, and also whatever damages they said to give credit for it, and Mrs. Hardy agreed to the proposition and agreed to acknowledge to judgment to the balance, and they came back and reported to the court the lumber unused, but not any damages on house, and it was deducted and judgment entered up for the balance and costs." Before the call of the certiorari in the superior court, the plaintiff in certiorari filed written exceptions to the answer, on the ground that it was "insufficient and did not reply specifically to the allegations in the petition; that said answer did not deny or admit the material allegations in paragraphs 2, 3, and 4 of the petition—paragraph 2 alleging that the said judgment complained of was rendered by a notary public and ex officio justice of the peace of an adjoining district, and without knowledge or consent of petitioner, after the verbal agreement to submit the case to arbitration, and after petitioner relying upon said agreement had gone home; paragraph 3 alleging that petitioner had not filed any plea to said suit in court because she regarded the arbitrators as the tribunal to pass upon the matters in controversy, and had gone home, and she expected said arbitrators to notify her when and where they would hear evidence and determine the matter, and she did not know that they were going to report the matter to court without evidence, but thought they would hear her evidence and determine the matter out of court and give due notice to all parties; paragraph 4 alleging that neither party was represented by counsel, that submission to arbitration was in parol, that said arbitrators were not sworn, no evidence or sworn testimony was submitted to them, and petitioner was not notified when and where said arbitrators would hear evidence and pass upon the matters in controversy, and that said arbitrators made a verbal report to the court without having heard any evidence, said statement or report not having been under oath, whereupon judgment was rendered against petitioner by the presiding justice; that petitioner was not notified by the arbitrators nor by the court, and had no opportunity to present her case to the arbitrators or to the court." Petitioner further excepted to the answer, on the ground that said answer did not embrace nor was there sent up with it any copy or copies of the proceedings had in the case. On hearing the exceptions, the court overruled the same, and rendered a judgment that the certiorari be not sustained, and also rendered final judgment against the plaintiff in certiorari.

1. We think the answer of the magistrate was incomplete in the particulars specified by the exceptions. The allegations of the petition as contained in paragraphs 2, 3, and 4 were material to the proper decision of the plaintiff's case, and she was entitled to a specific answer fully verifying those allegations. The allegations in a certiorari ought either to be fully answered or assumed as true for the purpose of the decision, and, if the answers filed are not full, they should be made so. Civ. Code 1895, § 4647; Marchman v. Todd, 15 Ga. 25. We think, also, that the return of the magistrate was incomplete, in that it failed to certify and send up any of the proceedings in the case. Civ. Code 1895, § 4637.

2. It is manifest that the so-called arbitration was in no sense statutory. If, under the facts stated and verified by the answer of the magistrate, the selection of the three men to make a report on the matter in controversy between the parties could be considered as a common-law submission of such matters to arbitration, surely a verbal report, made without having heard any evidence and unsupported even by the verification of the arbitrators themselves, was wholly insufficient upon which to base a judgment against the defendant. Under an arbitration at common law, the award is binding on the party submitting, but the award in such case can only be made the foundation of an action, and is not entitled to be made a judgment of the court. Crane v. Barry, 47 Ga. 478; Sisson v. Pittman, 113 Ga. 163, 38 S. E. 315. There is no order of the court in this case submitting the matters in controversy, and the judgment is based upon the unsworn statement of three men selected by the parties who arrive at their conclusion without evidence and without giving the parties an opportunity to be heard. The account sued on seems not to have been verified by the plaintiff in the justice court. The alleged agreement by the defendant, plaintiff in certiorari, that she would "acknowledge the judgment" the report of the three men selected, appears to have been made in the personal and not in the judicial presence of the justice, and was not therefore binding upon her as an admission made on the trial of the case in judicio.

We conclude that the justice erred in entering up judgment against the defendant, and that the judge of the superior court erred in not sustaining the certiorari and setting aside the judgment and remanding the case to the justice court to be tried according to some legal procedure.

Judgment reversed.

(2 Ga. App. 534)

GRIFFIN v. STATE. (No. 538.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 3, 1907.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW — CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

While the guilt of a defendant charged with crime may be inferred from circumstances satisfactorily proved which are inconsistent with innocence, the circumstances relied upon must be affirmatively established and legally proved.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 1259-1261.]

2. GAMING—EVIDENCE.

Evidence that the defendant was present at a game of cards, and ran upon the approach of officers armed with pistols, is not (in the absence of evidence that such defendant either played or bet for money, had in his hands or near him either cards or money) sufficient to establish the guilt of such defendant beyond a reasonable doubt, within the meaning of section 984, Pen. Code 1895. Neither presence nor flight, nor both together, without more, is conclusive of guilt.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 24, Gaming, §§ 291-298.]

3. CRIMINAL LAW—EVIDENCE.

The belief of a witness cannot supply the place of substantive material facts.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 1036.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Ben Hill County; U. V. Whipple, Judge.

Tom Griffin was convicted of gambling, and brings error. Reversed.

E. W. Ryman, for plaintiff in error. W. F. George, Sol. Gen., E. D. Graham, Sol. Gen., and A. J. McDonald, County Sol., for the State.

RUSSELL, J. The defendant was accused of gaming. The evidence showed that he was in company with others, some of whom were undoubtedly engaged in playing and betting at cards for money. Upon the approach of the chief of police of Fitzgerald and an assistant, who presented a pistol and called to the negroes "to hold up," the defendant incontinently fled, and the chief of police tore the defendant's shirt in the struggle to retain the prisoner. The defendant was convicted. A fact can be proved by circumstantial evidence as well as by direct proof. Gaming is one of those offenses which ordinarily must be proved by circumstantial evidence, if at all; and so well is the taste of some of our African citizens for petty gambling known that a nocturnal gathering in a secluded spot where the tableau is presented of several negroes seated or squatted around a quilt on which are cards and money raises a violent suspicion of guilt against any one of the number who may be in proximity to the quilt, the cards, or the money. But the law does not authorize conviction upon suspicion, no matter how violent, nor relax the rule laid in section 984 of the Penal Code of 1895 for the mere reason that gambling is detestable, that gamblers should be punished, and that proof of guilt is hard to obtain. The same rule applies to gaming as to all other offenses. "To warrant a conviction on circumstantial evidence, the proven facts must not only be consistent with the hypothesis of guilt, but must exclude every other reasonable hypothesis save that of the guilt of the accused." Circumstances which authorize a mere conjecture of guilt are not sufficient to warrant a conviction, and the evidence, when entirely circumstantial, should connect the defendant with the criminal act. The only facts positively proved in this case were that the defendant was present where gambling was going on, and that he ran when accosted to the accompaniment of a pistol. True, one of the witnesses for the state testified that: "All of them seemed to be engaged in a game of cards. The cards had been dealt around, and all of the men looked like had cards, either in his hands or in front of him on the quilt, and most, if not all, had money in front of them." But, upon cross-examination, the same witness testified, as did the only other witness for the state, in effect: "I cannot swear positively that the defendant had cards in his hands or money in front of him, or that he was actually playing and betting in the game." The witness' entire knowledge with reference to the defendant's connection with the game, if he had any, is summed up in the statement following: That "he saw the others in a circle around the quilt." The gratuitous statement that he appeared to be engaged in the game was only an expression of opinion on the part of the witness prejudicial to the defendant, and not proper evidence to be considered by the jury. As pointed out in Mimbs v. State (Ga. App.) 58 S. E. 499, the word "seem" may be opinionative or positive according to the context.

Admitting that gambling was going on in the hallway and that the defendant was present, it seems to us that the defendant should have been connected with the gambling in some way, that the state should have proved, not that others had cards, but that this defendant handled some card in the game, not that others had money, but that this defendant had some interest, present or prospective, in some portion, at least, of the money seen by the officers. While the main witness for the state testified that they all seemed to be engaged in the game, he positively declined to swear that "the defendant had cards in his hand or money in front of him." If the witness did not pretend to know these facts, how could the jury know them? And, if the jury did not know at least this much, how could they infer participation and guilty presence?

Nor do we think the circumstances of flight, under the facts disclosed in the record, adds any very great weight to the evidence of guilt. Proof of flight is at best only equivocal evidence and subject to explanation. We think this defendant's flight, whether he was guilty or innocent, is easily explained when we consider the fact that the gathering (whether this defendant was one of the illegal participants or not) was suddenly surprised by an unexpected visitor who had noiselessly reached the top of the stairway, shouted for attention, and presented to their astonished eyes a gleaming revolver. Had the defendant been ever so innocent, it would have been hard for him to resist the contagious impulse, which overwhelmed those who were guilty, to fly because they fled. In Harmon v. State, 120 Ga. 197, 47 S. E. 547, it was held that "evidence that the defendant and three others were lying on the ground in a secluded spot with money before them, that each had cards in his hands, and that, upon being discovered, all attempted to escape, was sufficient to sustain a verdict that the defendant was playing and betting at a game played with cards for money." And it has been decided by this court in Hicks v. State, 1 Ga. App. 722, 57 S. E. 958, following the decision in Pacetti v. State, 82 Ga. 297, 7 S. E. 967, that inculpatory facts will authorize convictions of gaming. But in all cases the facts must be connected with the defendant. If this defendant had been shown to have been in possession of cards, as was shown in the Harmon Case, or the keeper of the room embellished with gaming devices and accessories, as shown in the Pacetti and Hicks Cases, the verdict of guilty would have been authorized. But mere presence or flight to avoid arrest, or both together, are not inconsistent with innocence.

Judgment reversed.

(2 Ga. App. 516)

GEORGIA SOUTHERN & FLORIDA RY.
CO. v. GREER. (No. 349.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 8, 1907.)
1. CARRIERS—FREIGHT SHIPMENT—LIMITING LIABILITY.

Where a shipper signs a contract limiting the liability of the common carrier, said contract reciting that it was made in consideration of a reduced rate of freight, such recital is prima facie true, and the burden is upon the shipper to prove the contrary. The burden was not successfully carried in this case.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 9, Carriers, § 724.]

2. SAME—LIVE STOCK SHIPMENT.

A carrier of live stock can, by special contract, be released from liability for injuries to such stock arising from named causes, and can as to these, and all other incidents of transportation, by such contract stipulate liability only in the event of damages and loss by the gross negligence of its servants.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 9, Carriers, § 934.]

3. SAME—PRESUMPTION OF NEGLIGENCE.

Even where there was a special contract shown limiting the liability of the carrier of live stock where the plaintiff proved that the stock was lost or injured while in the possession of the carrier, the law would raise a presumption of negligence against the carrier, which must be rebutted by proof showing the exercise of that degree of diligence required by the contract.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 9, Carriers, § 957.]

4. SAME—EVIDENCE.

Where it appears that the cars in which the stock was carried were suitable, that the track was in good condition, that the equipments and appliances of the train were adequate, and that there was no fault or negligence in any respect on the part of the carrier in handling the stock or in the running and management of the train, and the exercise by the servants of the carrier of that degree of care demanded by the terms of its contract and required by the nature of the stock, any presumption of negligence would be fully rebutted, and the carrier would not be liable for loss or damage to the stock while in transportation.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 9, Carriers, § 960.]

5. SAME—INJURY TO STOCK.

The evidence in this case clearly showed that the death of the stock was due to the negligent manner in which it was loaded by the shipper. The verdict against the carrier must be set aside, as without evidence to support it.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Turner County;
W. N. Spence, Judge.

Action by W. A. Greer against the Georgia Southern & Florida Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

Hall & Hall and R. C. Jordan, for plaintiff in error. H. C. McKenzie, T. R. Perry, and J. H. Tipton, for defendant in error.

HILL, O. J. This was a suit for $90, the alleged value of nine head of cattle which the defendant undertook to transport for the plaintiff from Dakota, Ga., to Cleveland, Fla. The specific allegations were that the plaintiff delivered to the defendant, a common carrier, at Dakota, Ga., 200 head of cattle, in good order, to be transported to Cleveland, Fla.; that, when said cattle arrived at the point of destination, there were only 191, and that 9 had been lost or destroyed while in the possession of the defendant, and they were worth at the point of destination in the market $10 a head. There is no allegation of any specific negligence by the carrier, but only the general allegation of negligence. The defendant answered, denying all the material allegations of the petition. The jury found a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for the full amount, and defendant's motion for a new trial was overruled. The evidence for the plaintiff, briefly stated, made the following case: The 200 head of cattle were delivered to the defendant by the plaintiff at Dakota under a through bill of lading issued by the defendant covering the shipment of said cattle from said point of delivery to Cleveland, Fla., and, when the cattle arrived at Cleveland, Fla., there were 191 delivered to the consignee. The plaintiff relied for a recovery upon the presumption of liability which arises against the carrier under the statute of this state. Civ. Code 1895, § 2264. In cases of loss, the presumption of law is against the common carrier, and no excuse avails him, unless such loss was occasioned by the act of God, or the public enemy of the state. The defendant introduced in evidence a live-stock contract of shipment entered into between it and the plaintiff, whereby the plaintiff agreed to release the defendant from liability in case of loss or injury to the stock by reason of a number of named causes, to wit, "in consequence of overloading, heat, suffocation, fright, viciousness, and from all other damages incidental to railroad transportation which shall not be established to have been caused by the gross negligence or delinquency of any of the officers or agents of the said railway, having the stock in charge, and the owner or shipper is to look to the company on whose line damage occurred for compensation for such damage." It was recited in this contract that the consideration therefor to the plaintiff was a reduced rate of freight. The plaintiff admitted the execution of this contract by him, but stated that he had not asked for a reduced rate and had received none. Besides the explicit recitals in the contract signed by the plaintiff that the rate of freight was a reduced rate, there was written in said contract the letters, "Rel," which meant that the contract was a release shipment. These letters were also written across the bill of lading issued the plaintiff by the defendant, which indicated that it was a release bill of lading, and in all such contracts, according to the evidence, there is a material difference in the rate charged, being less than when the shipment is made at the carrier's risk. The plaintiff further testified that he had been shipping cattle for 10 or 12 years and always under the release contract similar to the one he signed in the present case.

1. When a shipper signs a contract containing stipulations limiting the liability of the carrier, and reciting that such limitation was made because of a reduced rate of freight, the burden is upon him to show that the consideration therefor and therein recited was not true, and that, as matter of fact, he had received no consideration for such limitation. This burden was not successfully carried by the plaintiff in this case; but the evidence clearly established the making by him of this special contract in question and the giving of a reduced rate of freight as the consideration for said contract.

2. The special contract was therefore valid under the laws of this state, and the plaintiff was bound by its terms. Civ. Code 1895, § 2276; Cooper v. R. & G. R. Co., 110 Ga. 662, 36 S. E. 240; Georgia R. v. Spears, 66 Ga. 485, 42 Am. Rep. 81.

3. But the rule of presumption against the carrier, notwithstanding said special contract, still arose, and the burden was upon the company to rebut this presumption; but the contract diminished the onerous character of this burden, for under its terms the carrier was required to exercise only slight diligence, and was only liable for gross negligence. Columbus R. Co. v. Kennedy, 78 Ga. 653, 3 S. E. 267; Cooper v. R. & G. R. Co., 110 Ga. 663, 36 S. E. 240.

4. As before stated, the plaintiff did not show by his evidence any specific negligence against the defendant, but only relied upon the presumption against the carrier. Did the defendant, under the evidence in this case, meet and overcome this presumption up to the degree of diligence required of it under the terms of the special contract? Under the special contract, the railroad company was only liable for the gross negligence of its servants in connection with said shipment. The evidence introduced by the defendant was, in our opinion, entirely sufficient to rebut the presumption of negligence. It appeared from this evidence that the cars in which the stock were transported were suitable for the purpose; that the track was in good condition; that the equipment and appliances of the train were adequate; that there was no collision, no sudden jerking of the cars, and no delay in transportation; and that the agents of the carrier exercised all proper care in handling the stock. In addition to this evidence, which certainly largely tended to relieve the carrier of the presumption of negligence, the facts further presented by a very large preponderance of the testimony at least show a cause for the loss of the cattle in the carelessness of the plaintiff himself. The cattle at the point of shipment were loaded on the cars by the shipper; he being responsible for the manner in which the loading was done. The cars into which the cattle were loaded were 42 feet long. In one car there were crowded 56 head, and in another 57 head, and in the third 87 head of cattle. The shipper said that this was, considering the size and condition of the cattle, not overcrowded. The testimony of his witnesses did not fully support this statement, and the overwhelming testimony of the defendant's witnesses was that the cattle were greatly overcrowded on these three cars. Besides this evidence, the physical condition of the cattle when the train reached Valdosta, Ga., showed much suffering, apparently from suffocation, due to the crowded condition of the cars, and when the train reached Jasper, Fla., this physical condition induced the agents of the company, in order to relieve the cattle, to unload two of the cars and re-load the cattle into three cars.

5. We think that the conclusion is irresistible from all the evidence in this case that the death of the cattle for which suit was brought could only have been reasonably attributed to the manner in which they were loaded, and that the defendant fully exercised, in connection with the transportation of the cattle, that degree of care which the terms of his contract with the plaintiff required. The learned judge of the trial court submitted the issues made by the pleadings and evidence fairly, fully, and aptly to the jury. We are constrained to believe that the verdict was based upon the idea that the defendant had not rebutted the presumption of liability against it under the general law, and that the special contract, limiting such liability and which was clearly proved, was not considered by them. Even under the general law, certain exceptions have grown up in favor of common carriers in the case of live-stock carriage, arising from the nature of the property transported. Cooper v. Railroad Co., supra; 5 Amer. & Eng. Enc. of L. (2d Ed.) 443. The cattle that died in this case while in transportation had no physical marks indicating injuries resulting from any violence. The evidence showed that the servants of the carrier exercised that degree of care which the nature of the property required, and, if the facts did not in our opinion point out as the cause of the death physical injury due to overcrowding by the shipper, the only rational theory under the evidence would be that they died from some natural disease superinduced and aggravated by the crowded condition, and not from any want of vigilance and care by the servants of the defendant.

We think the verdict should be set aside, because without any evidence to support it. Judgment reversed.

(2 Ga. App. 521)

BOWEN v. E. A. WAXELBAUM & BRO.
(No. 404.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 3, 1907.)

1. CONTRACTS—FRAUD—ELEMENTS—INJURY.

Fraud in the promisor, without injury to the promisee, is not sufficient to invalidate a contract, and constitutes no defense.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 11, Contracts, § 424.]

2. BILLS AND NOTES—FRAUD.

A debtor who gives his note to a creditor for a valid subsisting debt, induced to do so by certain statements of the creditor, cannot set up as a defense to said note that such statements were false and fraudulent, without also alleging and proving injury and damage.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 7, Bills and Notes, § 233.]

3. ACCORD AND SATISFACTION—EXECUTION—NECESSITY.

"An agreement by a creditor to receive less than the amount of his debt cannot be pleaded as an accord and satisfaction, unless it be actually executed by the payment of the money, or the giving of additional security, or the substitution of another debtor, or some other new consideration."

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 1, Accord and Satisfaction, §§ 60-65.]

4. EVIDENCE—PAROL EVIDENCE CONTRADICTING WRITTEN INSTRUMENT—NOTE.

Parol evidence being inadmissible to add to, take from, or vary a written contract, an answer to a suit on a promissory note that the payee at the time the note was executed verbally promised to take less than the face of the note in payment thereof constituted no defense.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 20, Evidence, § 2048.]

5. TRIAL—DIRECTION OF VERDICT.

The pleas having been properly stricken, except as to attorney's fees, there was no error in directing a verdict for the plaintiffs for principal and interest of the note, and submitting the issue relating to attorney's fees to the jury. The verdict on this issue was fully supported by the evidence.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Statesboro; J. F. Brannen, Judge.

Action by E. A. Waxelbaum & Bro. against M. J. Bowen. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

A. M. Deal and Fred T. Lanier, for plaintiff in error. Johnston & Cone and Harde-man & Jones, for defendant in error.

HILL, C. J. This was a suit on a promissory note made by the defendant under seal and payable to the order of the plaintiffs.

The defendant filed the following answer: "(1) Defendant admits the execution of the note sued on, and that plaintiff is the legal owner and holder of the same. (2) Defendant alleges that on June 19, 1905, there was held at Savannah, Ga., a meeting of defendant's creditors; that plaintiff was present at said meeting, and at that time defendant owed plaintiff $202 on an open account. Defendant shows that at the date of said meeting he was insolvent; that at said meeting he made his creditors a proposition to pay 50 cents on the dollar in full settlement of what he owed them, and advised said creditors that, unless some compromise as that was made, that he, defendant, would be forced into a court of bankruptcy. (3) Defendant showed that in consideration of his not going into bankruptcy, and the further consideration of his insolvency, that plaintiff agreed to accept $101 in settlement of the $202 which defendant then owed plaintiff. (4) Defendant shows that, after the above terms had been agreed upon between him and plaintiff, that plaintiff told defendant that he would fill out a note for $202, and desired defendant to sign said note, but that immediately upon his signing the same that he, plaintiff, would turn over said note to J. W. Olliff for defendant. Plaintiff claimed that he would abide by his former agreement to take $101 in settlement of his former claim; but said that he only wanted the note to show what amount had been compromised, and that he would then and there deliver said note to the defendant or to J. W. Olliff for defendant. (5) Defendant, relying on the statement of the plaintiff that he would turn said note over to J. W. Olliff, signed said note. (6) Defendant shows that after he signed the note sued on that plaintiff, in violation of his contract, refused to deliver to defendant or to J. W. Olliff said note, or to accept $101 in settlement of his claim as he agreed to do before, and at the time of signing the same. (7) Defendant alleges that said note was procured by fraud; that the deceptions used and the misrepresentations made were used and made for the purpose of cheating defendant, and that the same deceived, misled, and actually defrauded defendant; that he would not have signed said note except upon the agreement of plaintiff to accept the $101 in settlement of what defendant owed plaintiff, and his agreement to deliver said note to defendant then and there. (8) Defendant shows that, at the time said note was signed, he was ready to perform his part of the contract with plaintiff; that he was ready then to pay plaintiff the $101 in settlement of plaintiff's claim against defendant, that he offered to pay plaintiff said $101 before the filing of this suit, and that he now tenders the $101 into court."

Defendant amended this plea by adding thereto the following: "Defendant shows that the note sued on was gotten possession of by the plaintiffs through fraud, and the signing of the note was induced by the fraud of the plaintiffs, said fraud consisting as follows: The plaintiff told defendant to sign the note for the full amount of the account for $202, and that the plaintiffs would deliver the note for defendant to J. W. Olliff and accept 50 per cent. of the same in settlement of the note. Defendant shows that the omission to recite in the note the fact that it would be settled for 50 per cent. of its face value was due to the fraud of the plaintiffs as above set out. Defendant shows that at the time said note was executed he was only due the plaintiffs $101, and would not have executed the note but for the fraud of the plaintiff as heretofore set out, to wit, that he would turn the note over to J. W. Olliff for defendant, and accept $101 in settlement of same." Defendant also amended by denying the allegation of paragraph 4 of the plaintiffs, relative to the claim of attorney's fees, and says that the notice required by law before suit for attorney's fees, contracted to be paid in notes, was not given.

On the trial of the case the plaintiffs demurred to the plea and answer, except as to paragraph 4 and as to the paragraph in reference to attorney's fees, and the court sustained the demurrer, and struck all said pleas and answer, and error is assigned to this judgment of the court. The court thereupon directed a verdict for the plaintiffs for the principal and interest sued for, and submitted to the jury the issue of fact made relating to attorney's fees, which issue of fact the jury found in favor of the plaintiffs. The defendant also filed a motion for a new trial, alleging error in the judgment of the court in sustaining the demurrer filed to his answer and pleas, and in directing a verdict for the plaintiffs, and on the general grounds, which motion was overruled, and defendant excepted.

1. The defendant's plea is that the note is void because fraudulently obtained, and it charges the fraud to consist in certain promises made by the plaintiffs to induce him to give the note. The plea admits that at the time he gave the note he owed the plaintiff on account the exact amount of the note, and the plea fails to show how the defendant was injured or damaged by his written promise to pay what he in fact owed. The defendant was under no duty to execute the note, but he was under a duty to pay the debt, and, unless his written promise deprived him of some legal right, or in some way injured him, he has no right to complain. He does not allege how the giving of the note injured or damaged him. Admitting that the plaintiffs did make the promises set out in the plea, they constituted no fraud in any legal or equitable sense. A sufficient defense cannot be predicated upon fraud, unless such fraud results in some injury. Both fraud and injury must exist to invalidate a written contract. The principle of damnum absque injuria applies. Austell v. Rice, 5 Ga. 472; Strickland v. Parlin & Orendorf Company, 118 Ga. 213 (4), 44 S. E. 997.

2. The facts alleged in the answer are not sufficient to show accord and satisfaction. Most favorably considered for the defendant, these facts simply showed a promise or agreement by his creditor to accept an amount less than his debt. This agreement was not executed by the payment of the money, or the giving of additional security or some other new consideration. Civ. Code 1895, § 3735.

3. The answer was also in direct conflict with the elemental principle of law that the terms of a written contract cannot be varied by a contemporaneous parol agreement. The note was for $202; and an alleged agreement with the plaintiffs to accept less could not be shown. Civ. Code 1895, § 3675 (1); Patterson v. Ramspeck, 81 Ga. 808, 10 S. E. 390.

4. After the plea was stricken, the case was undefended except as to the issue relating to the attorneys' fees. The court thereupon properly directed a verdict in favor of the plaintiffs for the principal and interest of the note, and submitted to the jury the issue as to the attorney's fees. The verdict in favor of the plaintiff on this issue is fully supported by the evidence.

Judgment affirmed.

(2 Ga. App. 530)

U. S. HIRSCH & CO. v. DOZIER LUMBER CO. (No. 372.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 3, 1907.)

1. NEW TRIAL—PROCEEDINGS TO PROCURE BRIEF OF EVIDENCE.

The brief of the evidence in this case is not a compliance with the mandatory requirements of sections 5484 and 5488 of the Civil Code of 1895. There is apparently an attempt to abbreviate the oral testimony from the stenographic report, but many "immaterial questions and answers and parts thereof" are not stricken. The documentary testimony, consisting of statements of accounts and numerous letters between the parties, is given in full, with no attempt to brief the same. Hathcock v. McGouirk, 119 Ga. 973, 47 S. E. 563; Wall v. Mercer, 119 Ga. 346, 46 S. E. 420; George v. State, 123 Ga. 504, 51 S. E. 504; Smith v. State, 118 Ga. 83, 44 S. E. 827; and numerous decisions by the Supreme Court.

2. SAME.

The trend of legislation in this state is to insure the hearing of cases by reviewing courts on the merits; but the statutory requirements that in motions for new trial there "shall be a condensed and succinct brief of the material portions of the oral testimony" and "the substance of all material portions of documentary evidence" have never been modified.

3. WRIT OF ERROR—BRIEF OF EVIDENCE—COMPLIANCE WITH STATUTE—NECESSITY.

A compliance with the statute as to a brief of the evidence is an essential condition precedent to the determination of any assignment of error depending on a consideration of the evidence. Bowe v. Gress Lumber Co., 86 Ga. 18, 12 S. E. 177; Jones v. State, 125 Ga. 49, 53 S. E. 583; 13 Enc. Dig. Ga. Rep. (Michie) 240.

4. SAME.

Proper briefs of evidence, restricted to an elucidation of the issues involved and pertinent to the errors assigned, are of incalculable benefit in securing correct decisions, and in affording relief to overworked courts. This much the statute demands, and the courts have the right to require, of counsel.

5. SAME—DETERMINATION AND DISPOSITION OF CAUSE—AFFIRMANCE.

No question being presented for decision which can be determined without reference to the evidence, the judgment of the court refusing a new trial must be affirmed.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Savannah; T. M. Norwood, Judge.

Action between C. S. Hirsch & Co. and the Dozier Lumber Company. From the judgment, Hirsch & Co. bring error. Affirmed.

Osborne & Lawrence, for plaintiffs in error. Geo. W. Owens, for defendant in error.

HILL, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

(2 Ga. App. 455)

WEAVER v. DAVIS et al. (Nos. 288, 289.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. May 16, 1907.)

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—EXCEPTIONS—ABSENCE FROM STATE.

As a general principle, statutes of limitation are subject to no exceptions, unless such exceptions be expressed.

(a) Notwithstanding this general rule, the courts will imply judicial exceptions from "in-vincible necessity," where it is legally impossible for the plaintiff to sue within the time limited.

(b) The absence or the removal of the defendant from the state is a statutory, and not a judicial, exception.

(c) The limitation statute of March 16, 1869 (Laws 1869, p. 133), wherein all causes of action which accrued prior to June 1, 1865, were required to be sued prior to January 1, 1870, contained no exception saving from its operation suits against defendants who had removed beyond the limits of the state, and no such exception can be implied as to actions falling within its terms.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 33, Limitation of Actions, §§ 13, 440.]

Russell, J., dissenting.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Newton County; L. S. Roan, Judge.

Actions by Julia Davis and others against J. S. Weaver. Judgment for defendant in the county court was reversed on certiorari, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

Cornwell & Gunn, Greene F. Johnson, and J. D. Kilpatrick, for plaintiff in error. Rogers & Knox, for defendant in error.

POWELL, J. On February 5, 1862, Weaver executed his two promissory notes, payable to Nancy Weaver or bearer, due 12 months after date, for $175 each. The notes afterwards became the property of the plaintiffs. In 1866 Weaver left the state of Georgia, and went to the state of Texas, and has never returned to reside in this state. In 1905 Weaver became entitled, by will, to a legacy of the value of some $3,000 in the hands of an executor in this state; and the plaintiffs sued out an attachment and garnishment. The declaration in attachment set out the facts stated above. The defendant resisted the action, by demurrer, asserting that the cause of action having accrued prior to June 1, 1865, the same became barred on January 1, 1870, by virtue of the fourth section of the limitation statute of March 16, 1869. Laws 1869, p. 133. The county judge sustained the demurrer. The plaintiffs brought certiorari. In the superior court the certiorari was sustained, and the judgment of the county court reversed. To this judgment of the superior court the defendant excepted, and brings error to this court.

The statute of March 16, 1869, was drastic in terms. It was broad and sweeping. In substance, it provided that all suits upon causes of action which accrued prior to June 1, 1865, should be brought by January 1, 1870, and not thereafter. No exceptions were made, save only cases against certain fiduciaries for fraudulent conduct. No reference was made in the act to any of the ordinary exceptions to the running of limitation appearing then, as now, in the Code. It is contended by the plaintiff in error that it was not the intention of the Legislature to repeal, or to render unavailing, the provision then existing in the Code and now contained in Civ. Code 1895, § 3783, viz.: "If the defendant in any of the cases herein named shall remove from the state, the time of his absence from the state, and until he returns to reside, shall not be counted or estimated in his favor." At first blush, this view seemed to us to be tenable, but, after a thorough examination of the decisions which have been rendered in relation to this act (and the Supreme Court had the statute before them for consideration very frequently during the decade immediately following its passage), we have reached the conclusion that the county judge was correct, and that the statute is subject to no exceptions other than those contained therein, save only that class of exceptions applicable from necessity to all limitation laws and known as "judicial exceptions." His honor, Samuel H. Sibley, judge of the county court of Greene county, presided at the trial of the cause, and filed with his judgment sustaining the demurrer an opinion. This eminent young jurist has gone into the question so carefully, and has collated and distinguished the authorities so well, that we are content to incorporate his opinion herein, with only a few additional remarks. Judge Sibley's opinion is as follows.

"The note sued upon is not under seal, is dated February 5, 1862, and is due one year thereafter. In February, 1863, limitation began to run, until suspended by the Legislature of 1864. In 1866 the defendant removed to Texas, and has since resided there. Under the act of 1855 and the Code provisions since, this removal suspended the statute of limitation, even after the repeal of the suspending statutes passed during the war; and made an attachment of the debtor's effects in this state possible at any time prior to the expiration of the limitation period after his return to reside in this state. Whitman v. McClure, 51 Ga. 590. The attachment in this case, though sued out 45 years after the maturity of the debt and the accrual of the cause of action thereon, would be in time, unless barred by the provision of the act of 1869. That act, stated generally, provides that actions not barred in March, 1869, on notes maturing prior to June 1, 1865, should be brought by January 1, 1870, or the right of the party plaintiff, and all right of action for its enforcement, should be forever barred. In its last section the act provides that causes of action accruing since June 1, 1865, should be 'controlled and governed by the limitation laws as set forth in the revised code of Georgia.' It does not appear in the pleadings whether at all times since the removal of the defendant from the state he has had property here capable of attachment; nor is that question material. The note is the cause of action, even where the special remedy by attachment is pursued; and it must be concluded that this is an action on a note 'accruing prior to June 1, 1865,' and within the provisions of the act of 1869, and not within the 'limitation laws as set forth in the Code.'

"Is the act of 1869 a statute whose only purpose was to make a uniform and short period of limitation, equal to 9 months and 15 days, for the classes of action dealt with by it, in substitution of the varying and longer periods named in the Code, leaving all other provisions of the limitation laws, and especially the 'exceptions and disabilities,' applicable to this new period so prescribed? Or was it intended to be, for the classes of actions covered by it, generally described as 'ante bellum claims,' the exhaustive and only limitation law, without other exceptions than stated in its face? As an original proposition, I think the latter was its purpose; that it was intended to meet a situation unprecedented, and to compose and set at rest all contention dating beyond that period, that saw not only political, but financial revolution, that had altered all conditions and disturbed all calculations, removed from life probably nine tenths both of parties and witnesses to disputes, and made imperative a complete readjustment of all business affairs—that it was intended to be as near a statute of bankruptcy as the state could enact. Constitutional considerations, however, have made this purpose not free from embarrassment, and have produced interpretations of the statute by our Supreme Court, perhaps not free from contradiction. In Hobbs v. Cody, 45 Ga. 478, it was held that a ward arriving at majority in September, 1869, was not barred in August, 1870, from suing her guardian for her estate, received in 1860. This case has been cited in Lake v. Hardee, 57 Ga. 459, 467, as authority for the proposition that the act of 1869 did not run during a plaintiff's minority. It really ruled that the plaintiff's right of action against her guardian did not accrue until maturity gave her the right to demand possession of her estate. It has been pointed out, too, that the suit was for the estate as it was in 1869, and not for a devastavit prior to June, 1865, and so not within the act of 1869. Jordan v. Ticknor, 62 Ga. 129. Compare Windsor v. Bell, 61 Ga. 671 (2).

"In Adams v. Davis, 47 Ga. 339, the question was whether a suit, validly begun within the period named by the act of 1869, could be renewed within six months of its dismissal after January 1, 1870, by reason of the exception to that effect found in section 2881 of the Code of 1868. That section is in title 7, c. 9, art. 9 of that Code, which article is entitled, 'Limitations of actions on contracts.' The article is subdivided into three sections: 'Periods of Limitations,' 'Exceptions and Disabilities,' and 'New Promise.' Section 2881 is one of the paragraphs of the second section named. The question was squarely made whether the act of 1869 merely substituted the first of these sections as to the period of limitation, or whether it was as to the actions covered by it the sole law on the subject of limitation. A majority of the court reached the latter conclusion, on reasoning that would eliminate the whole of the statutory provisions contained in the second and third sections of the article of the Code in question. This conclusion was followed by the same majority in the cases of Macon R. R. v. Bass, and McConnell v. Fain, 52 Ga. 13, and affirmed by a full court in Goss v. Roberts, 54 Ga. 494. The reasoning is repeated and enforced, and the conclusion followed again in Reese v. Tollerson, 70 Ga. 443. Meanwhile, in Seminary v. Atwood, 50 Ga. 382, the question arose whether the 12 months' exemption from suit of the debtor's administrator was an excuse for not suing by January 1, 1870, but it was not decided. In this case attention is given to the constitutional phase involved, as to giving a plaintiff a reasonable time to assert his right against the debtor. At the previous term in the case of George v. Gardner, 49 Ga. 441, it had been held that the 9 months and 15 days allowed by the act was, in ordinary cases, reasonable, and that the statute was constitutional. In Simmons v. Moseley, 55 Ga. 35, where the maker of a note due before June, 1865, had moved to Texas and died, a suit against a Georgia administrator who became subject to suit was held barred. It was stated that the case was within 'the letter of the statute'—that is, the suit had not been filed by January 1, 1870—and it was further stated that, if there was an implied exception because of the death and want of representation of the debtor, the spirit of the statute would still bar it. [The suit was not brought until more than 9 months and 15 days after the judicial exception brought about by the death of the debtor had ended.] In Jordan v. Ticknor, 62 Ga. 123, it was stated that, section 2875 of the Code of 1868 (section 2926 of the Code of 1873) being one of the 'exceptions and disabilities' referred to above, its provisions saved a minor from the operation of the act of 1869 during his minority, being unrepealed by that act. The suit was nevertheless held barred. In both of these cases it was held that the act barred the suit. The recognition of exceptions and disabilities therefore, did not in any way alter the result reached and the judgment rendered, and the expressions of opinion in that respect might be treated as obiter. In the former case the removal to Texas did not figure at all in the case. The debtor was dead before 1865. In Edwards v. Ross, 58 Ga. 147, lunacy and nonresidence of the debtor existed, but it is not even asserted that they would have tolled the act of 1869. In this, as in other cases, however, 9 months and 15 days had elapsed since the removal of impediment to suit, and the suit was held in any case to be barred. It will therefore be seen that there has been no judicial opinion, even obiter, expressed to the effect that removal from the state of the debtor would save a claim from this act. * * *

"The recognition of exceptions in favor of infants and unrepresented estates, and the exemption of administrators from suit for 12 months, has been obiter, except in the case of Lake v. Hardee, 57 Ga. 460 (6). It was held there, in the headnote, that the cause of action 'did not accrue until majority or the appointment of a guardian.' This language, whether good law or not, would not amount to a holding that all the exceptions and disabilities of the Code applied to the act of 1869, nor even that that in reference to minors applied; but it was the simple construction of the word 'accruing' in the act. The expression in the opinion that the act of 1869 did not run against minors, for which Hobbs v. Cody, 45 Ga. 478, is cited as authority, is utterly unjustified by the case cited, which did not involve a liability to which the act was applicable at all. See Jordan v. Ticknor, 62 Ga. 129. But, if the cases in 55 Ga. 35, 57 Ga. 460, and 62 Ga. 123, supra, are authority that the exceptions of the Code there dealt with were of force as against the act of 1869, and therefore the exception as to nonresidence is by analogy to be held of force, it must be replied that it has with greater positiveness been held that the exception as to renewal in six months was not of force; and the same analogy would exclude the exception as to removal from the state. The latter point having been ruled by a unanimous court in Goss v. Roberts, 54 Ga. 494, and that decision never having been reviewed or overruled, any conflict in the principle of that decision and that of the other decisions referred to must result in adherence to the earlier ruling.

"The constitutional requirement that a limitation statute should give a plaintiff a reasonable time to enforce his right might necessitate the recognition of some exceptions to the requirement that suits should be commenced by January 1, 1870. This seems to have influenced the court in some of the expressions recognizing such exceptions. There was no such reason for giving a plaintiff a second chance under the renewal exception; and it was denied. It may be equally said that, in the case of removal from the state, naturally and logically the action follows the debtor to his new home. Georgia is under no constitutional or other obligation to afford any remedy against the removed debtor in her courts. The remedy here by attachment might constitutionally be abolished altogether. To refuse to preserve the right to sue a removed debtor, as against the ordinary statute of limitations, in ordinary circumstances, was never considered an anomaly, either in England or in Georgia. Bishop v. Sanford, 15 Ga. 1. In the extraordinary circumstances engendered by the war, there was certainly no constitutional or other legal necessity or propriety in recognizing such an exception to the limitations prescribed. There is less hardship in requiring the creditor to follow his debtor to his new residence to enforce his debt than in requiring the debtor to answer nearly a half century afterwards, when even the common law would presume payment in 20 years. The act of 1869 was pre-eminently intended as a 'statute of repose.' Its object was not only to protect defendants from their ancient misfortunes, but also, as a matter of public policy, to protect our courts from controversies over these old, uncertain, perhaps inequitable demands of other days. If the want of a defendant to be proceeded against in Georgia is to hold off the act of 1869, there is no reason why 50 years hence an administrator upon some estate of a long-deceased nonresident debtor might not be appointed, and the property administered to such claims. There being no authority to the contrary, and no constitutional difficulty to be encountered, I conclude that a plaintiff, himself under no disability, and having in March, 1869, an unimpeded right to sue his debtor resident in another state in the courts of that state, lost his remedies in the Georgia courts by a failure to enforce his debt by action taken prior to January 1, 1870."

We will only add that it is a general rule that limitation laws are subject to no exceptions, unless expressly provided. Notwithstanding this rule, a limited class of exceptions not provided by statute, but arising out of invincible necessity, are universally recognized. 19 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) 212 et seq. Exceptions of this latter class arise where such a state of affairs exists as to render it legally impossible for the plaintiff to sue within the time limited. Of this class are those cases wherein the plaintiff is prevented from exercising his remedy by a paramount power, as injunction or other process of a court, direct or indirect legislative action, the death of either of the parties, the abolition of a city's charter (as to suits by its creditors), the existence of a state of war, nonexistence of a court wherein the suit may be brought. Absence of the defendant from the state or beyond the seas has never been regarded, either at common law or in American jurisprudence, as such an exception. An examination of the authorities cited by the defendant in error will show that, while the Supreme Court in these cases recognized the judicial exceptions as applicable to the statute of 1869, it has never, except in certain mere statements, obiter, recognized any other exceptions.

Judgment reversed.

RUSSELL, J., dissents.

(2 Ga. App. 493)

DE LOACH MILL MFG. CO. v. TUTWEIL-
ER COAL, COKE & IRON CO. (No. 16.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 3, 1907.)

1. SALES—WARRANTIES—EXPRESS WARRANTY—STATEMENTS CONSTITUTING WARRANTY—EXCLUSION OF IMPLIED WARRANTIES.

An express warranty may be created as a part of a contract of sale by the use of such terms of description of the article sold as preclude any danger of mistaking or confusing that article with any other. An express warranty is exclusive of all warranties arising by implication.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 43, Sales, §§ 727-730, 760.]

2. SAME—IMPLIED WARRANTY—FITNESS FOR PURPOSE INTENDED.

Where a manufacturer sells iron as "standard Alabama No. 1 soft and Alabama foundry No. 2 pig iron," and the purchaser relies upon the description, there is an express warranty only that the articles sold shall be equal to the description. There is no implied warranty in such case that the brands of iron thus purchased shall be reasonably suited for any particular purpose. The description in the invoice by which the iron was bought and sold is equivalent to an express warranty that the goods purchased are what they are described to be, and it is immaterial whether the purchaser knew the purpose for which the buyer intended to use the iron, or whether, in fact, the iron was suitable for the purpose intended by the buyer, provided the seller furnished the article described; the buyer in such case having preferred an express warranty to those implied by law in the absence of express warranty.

3. ERROR, WRIT OF—REVIEW—DISCRETION OF COURT—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—EXPERIMENTS.

The admission of evidence of experiments is largely in the discretion of the trial court, and this discretion, unless manifestly abused, will not be controlled. For evidence of experiments to be admissible, there must be substantial similarity as to the essential and material facts affecting the comparison. If the comparison be predicated upon substantially different facts, the evidence will not be only irrelevant, but tend to confuse the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 3849; vol. 20, Evidence, § 439.]

4. SALES—WARRANTIES—IMPLIED—WAIVER.

An implied warranty may be deemed to have been waived where the article or commodity purchased (after full opportunity for examination, discovery of its defects, and rejection) is accepted and used.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 43, Sales, § 818.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Atlanta; H. M. Reid, Judge.

Action by the Tutweiler Coal, Coke & Iron Company against the De Loach Mill Manufacturing Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Jas. K. Hines and J. K. Jordan, for plaintiff in error. Du Bignon & Alston, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. The bill of exceptions calls for a review of the judgment of the lower court in striking the fourth and fifth paragraphs of the defendant's answer and in refusing a new trial. The paragraphs which were stricken (exceptions being taken pendente lite) were as follows: "(4) For further plea in this behalf, this defendant says that on February 6, 1904, this defendant purchased from the plaintiff, through its agents and brokers, Rogers, Brown & Co., 125 tons of standard Alabama No. 2 foundry pig iron, at the price of $10 per ton of 2,240 pounds f. o. b. cars furnace, Birmingham, Ala., and on the same day this defendant purchased from plaintiff, through its said agents and brokers, 125 tons of standard Alabama No. 1 soft pig iron, at the price of $10.50 per ton, 2,240 pounds, f. o. b. furnace Birmingham, Ala. The amount mentioned in plaintiff's petition was made and contracted by defendant solely for and on account of said iron so sold and to be delivered to it by plaintiff, and without any other consideration therefor. Said goods were purchased by defendant, as plaintiff then well knew, for the purpose of being manufactured by this defendant at the foundry into various castings used by this defendant in machines made and manufactured by it in its factory in the city of Atlanta, and plaintiff, as a part of the contract of sale and consideration of said account, impliedly warranted and represented that said goods were fit, proper, and reasonably suited for such purposes. Defendant accepted and purchased said goods for the purpose of manufacturing the same into castings for machines, so made and manufactured by it at its said factory, trusting in said representations and warranty for plaintiff, as plaintiff well knew. Said iron was not fit for said purpose, and was not reasonably suited therefor, the same being dirty iron and containing too little silicon and too much graphitic carbon, and the said iron has always been and is altogether useless and worthless to this defendant. (5) For further plea in this behalf, this defendant says that it began using said iron in its said foundry in making said castings on or about May 15, 1904. The output of its foundry was 13 tons per diem. The necessary cost and expense to this defendant of making each day's output was $100. By reason of said iron so sold and delivered by plaintiff to defendant, and so used by it in its foundry in making castings as aforesaid, being dirty, nor fit and reasonably suited for the purpose of being moulded into said castings, the defendant buying said iron from the plaintiff for the said purpose, and the plaintiff well knowing that the defendant purchased it for said purpose, one-third of said output was absolutely worthless and a total waste in the foundry, whereby this defendant sustained a daily loss of $33.33⅓ for the period of 30 days, making a total loss to this defendant of $1,000. This defendant was put to this necessary expense and loss in attempting to use said iron for the purpose aforesaid, and for the purpose for which the same was bought, and before this defendant knew that the defects in said castings were due to the inferior castings of said iron. Said loss and damage to this defendant arise naturally and according to the usual course of things from the failure of the plaintiff to deliver to this defendant the iron which it purchased from the plaintiff, and was such as the parties contemplated when such contract was made as the probable result of its breach. Said loss and expense in attempting to use said iron and in converting the same into castings was due solely and directly to said breach of plaintiff's contract to furnish to this defendant standard Alabama No. 2 foundry pig iron and standard Alabama No. 1 soft pig iron reasonably suited for the purpose aforesaid, for which this defendant purchased the same. This defendant recoups said loss and damage against the account of the plaintiff sued on in this case."

The effect of the judge's ruling in striking paragraph 4 was a holding that the contract was one of express warranty, and therefore excluded any implied warranty. The fifth paragraph was stricken, because, in the judgment of the court, the defendant's damages, if any, were not to be measured by the rule which defendant was endeavoring to apply, if, indeed, they were not too remote for recovery at all. We have no difficulty in sustaining the judgment of the lower court in striking paragraph 4 of the answer. Alabama iron No. 1 soft, and Alabama No. 2 foundry, are as apt terms of description for two grades of iron, as distinctive and as well understood by those engaged in the iron business—as the different grades of cotton are known by those engaged in the cotton business. If a term is well known as conveying the idea of identity and individuality of characteristics, quality, and use, and is understood by buyer and seller as such (while this understanding is not always necessary) it may import a warranty. Words of description do not always import an express warranty, but they do when (as in the contract in this case) they have reference to an article of property whose features and qualities are so well known to those engaged in the business of producing or selling such article that it cannot be mistaken for any other thing. As we have heretofore remarked in the Crankshaw Case,<sup>1</sup> it is often difficult to determine the line of demarcation between implied conditions and such descriptions as will constitute an express warranty and thereby exclude the warranty implied by law. The determination of the question depends often on the fullness and particularity of the description.

If one contracts for quinine, we have an article whose appearance, taste, and effects identify it and distinguish it from other articles, but an implied warranty would exist that the quinine was reasonably suited for the purposes intended; but, if I contract for Powers & Weightman's quinine, the express warranty on the part of the seller that the quinine shall be of a particular manufacture or brand excludes any other warranty. In our opinion the rule excluding all implied warranties (where there is any express warranty) is illogical, and sometimes works injustice, but it is the settled rule in this state and nearly all of the states of the Union. In Johnson v. Latimer, 71 Ga. 470 (2), the court ruled that "it is only in the absence of an express warranty that resort can be had to an implied warranty, and, where there was an express warranty, the court could refuse to charge on the subject of implied warranty."

If the defendant had purchased 175 tons of iron, the law would have implied that it was merchantable and reasonably suited for all the purposes for which it was intended. Section 3555, Civ. Code 1895. But, when the buyer specified that he wanted standard Alabama No. 1 soft pig iron, and standard Alabama No. 2 foundry pig iron, the seller expressly warranted that the iron to be delivered would be those two grades of iron, and no other, and the presence of the express warranty excluded any implied warranty whatsoever. The very particularity of description created an express warranty. The buyer relied upon his own judgment exclusively as to the purposes to which the particular iron selected was fit, and relieved the seller of any concern or responsibility, except that he should furnish the exact kind and grade of iron selected by the buyer, identified in the manner indicated by the descriptive term used and the custom of the iron trade. Americus Grocery Co. v. Brackett, 119 Ga. 489, 46 S. E. 657. It may be insisted that the fact that in the exercise of the right of choice we have purchased Powers & Weightman's quinine, or No. 2 corn or Alabama No. 2 foundry pig iron, should not relieve the seller from furnishing quinine that will cure or corn that will make good white meal, or iron that will make good castings. The question is: Did we buy an article whose identity was so well established by description that it could not be mistaken for anything else, and were we furnished with that article? Standard Alabama No. 1 soft pig iron and standard Alabama No. 2 foundry pig iron was what the seller contracted to deliver and the purchaser to pay for. Standard Alabama No. 1 soft pig iron is determined by fracture and inspection. The only question, then, that could arise was: Was the iron that the De Loach mills received standard No. 1 and foundry No. 2?

The court was right in striking the fourth paragraph of the answer, and we think the fifth paragraph would go with it; for, even if the damages sought are not too remote, the measure of damages which could be accepted would be the difference between the contract price of the iron ordered and the market price of the iron delivered when it was delivered at Atlanta.

In view of the defendant's admissions, it is profitless to discuss any of the grounds of error insisted upon in the motion, except those which pertain to the admission or exclusion of evidence which would illustrate the issue as to whether the iron ordered was that purchased. Under the admissions of the defendant, the verdict rendered was inevitable, unless the defendant proved that the iron delivered was not standard Alabama No. 1, and standard Alabama No. 2 foundry, and this it failed to do. The admission to entitle to open and conclude is contained in paragraph 3 of defendant's amended answer, and is as follows: "This defendant admits the purchase of the iron for the recovery of the price of which this suit is brought from the plaintiff at the price set out in said petition, its delivery to this defendant, the making of the account sued on, that the plaintiff is the holder and owner thereof, that said account is past due, and that plaintiff is entitled to recover the amount sued for, unless the defendant makes good its defense set out in said answer."

There was only one question left in the case. Was the iron delivered standard Alabama No. 1 soft pig iron and standard Alabama No. 2 foundry pig iron? The defendant having assumed the burden of proof, unless it showed that the iron delivered was not standard Alabama No. 1 soft pig iron and standard Alabama No. 2 foundry pig iron, the plaintiff was entitled to recover the unpaid balance of the purchase price in full. If the defendant was not furnished the grades of iron it bought, and proved that fact, then it would be entitled to recoup as damages the difference between the market value at the time and place of delivery and the price paid. The defendant failed to show that the iron was not that it bought, and hence the question of damages could not arise.

In the first and second grounds of the amendment to the motion it is insisted that the court erred in refusing to let a witness testify that standard Alabama No. 1 and standard Alabama No. 2 iron had been used in the same way as the iron bought from plaintiff and made good castings, and that the iron bought from defendants did not make good castings. This testimony was addressed to the point in issue, whether the iron delivered was the iron bought, and, had we been presiding, we think we should have allowed the testimony. But we are not prepared to hold that the judge erred in rejecting this testimony of experiment, especially in view of the admission of a prima facie case by the defendant, and the further fact that the defendant had used all of the iron in its business. The admission of evidence of experiment, as held by this court in Hudson v. Atlanta & West Point R. R. Co., 58 S. E.

500, is a matter peculiarly within the discretion of the trial judge, and this discretion will not be interfered with, unless it be apparent that it has been abused.

In our view of this case a discussion of the remaining grounds of the motion would be profitless. The errors assigned would not warrant a new trial. The verdict was right, and should not be set aside. Under the admissions of the defendant, a verdict in favor of the plaintiff was inevitable. The turning point in the case was whether the contract of sale included an express warranty or did not. Upon this subject, see Henderson Elevator Co. v. Milling Co., 126 Ga. 279, 55 S. E. 50; Miller v. Moore, 83 Ga. 684 (1), 10 S. E. 360, 6 L. R. A. 374, 20 Am. St. Rep. 329; Biddle on Warranties, § 111; Bradford v. Manly, 13 Mass. 144, 7 Am. Dec. 122; Seltz v. Brewers' Refrigerating Mach. Co., 141 U. S. 510, 12 Sup. Ct. 46, 35 L. Ed. 837; Borrekins v. Bevan, 3 Rawle (Pa.) 37, 23 Am. Dec. 85; Henshaw v. Robins, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 83, 43 Am. Dec. 367; Hawkins v. Pemberton, 51 N. Y. 198, 10 Am. Rep. 595, and citations; White v. Miller, 71 N. Y. 129, 27 Am. Rep. 13. And in the well-considered case of Dounce v. Dow, 64 N. Y. 411, the facts are practically the same as in this case.

Even if the trial court had been in error in holding that the implied warranty of suitability was excluded by the express warranty, still the judge did not err in refusing a new trial, because all implied warranties could well be deemed to have been waived by the defendant, who, instead of rejecting the iron, used it after full opportunity to examine it and ascertain whether it was merchantable, and suited for the purposes intended or not. Henderson v. Milling Co., supra.

Judgment affirmed.

(145 N. C. 92)

STRICKLAND et al. v. T. M. PERKINS & CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Sept. 25, 1907.)

APPEAL—REVIEW—CONCLUSIVENESS OF VERDICT—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

Where there is any evidence to go to the jury, and no error of law appears in the conduct of the case, the judgment below must be affirmed.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 3923.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Franklin County; Cooke, Judge.

Action by D. C. Strickland and others against T. M. Perkins & Co. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. H. Ruffin, F. S. Spruill, and Armistead Jones & Son, for appellant. W. H. Yarborough, Jr., and T. W. Bickett, for appellees.

WALKER, J. The only question in this case is, it seems to us, after a most careful examination of the record, substantially and essentially one of fact. The learned judge who presided at the trial presented the questions at issue fairly to the jury, giving each party the full benefit of every principle of law applicable to his contention upon the evidence. Let us see if this is not true. The defendant, who is a pork packer, contracted to sell, by and through its agent and broker, W. B. Green, and to deliver to the plaintiffs, 10,000 pounds of dried salt ribs at the price of $8.20 per 100 pounds, and, in the execution of this contract, defendants actually delivered only 4,013 pounds at or about the time of the purchase. The plaintiffs paid at the time of the purchase the full price of the goods, which was $820 for the entire quantity agreed to be delivered, and brought this suit to recover the price of the salt ribs which were not delivered and for which he had paid. The defendants allege, and there was evidence tending to show, that they delivered the lot of ribs of 10,000 pounds to their broker, W. B. Green, and that it was thereafter agreed between him and the plaintiffs that the ribs should be delivered to them at such times and in such quantities as called for, and for this purpose they were stored by the broker in the warehouse. There was also evidence to the contrary; the plaintiffs contending, and introducing evidence to show, that the sale and delivery were to take effect as a completed transaction presently, or at the time of the purchase, and that they never received the goods according to the stipulations of the contract, and, in order to establish their contention, they relied partly upon the testimony of the defendants' witnesses. The court was fair, at least to the defendants, in submitting the case to the jury, giving them the benefit of every conceivable ground upon which they could defeat the plaintiffs' claim or recovery upon the evidence, and presenting the case to the jury in its every phase. It appears to us, upon a close scrutiny of the testimony, that even the evidence introduced by the defendants was sufficient to sustain the verdict of the jury, as we have discovered some expressions which fell from their witnesses and which give countenance to the plaintiffs' theory. It is a familiar rule in an appellate court that where there is any evidence to go to the jury, and no error in law appears in the conduct of the case, there is nothing to do but affirm the judgment below, so far as the application of the law to the case is concerned. We have not been able to see any departure from the principles applicable to cases of this kind, although we have diligently searched for the same, as counsel were earnest and zealous in arguing that error had been committed. The matter resolves itself into this: That the defendants have, upon the evidence, and with a charge which presented their contention to the jury in the most favorable aspect for them, failed to convince the triors of the fact that their view of the case was the correct one, and that is all.

There is no question of subsequent approval or ratification of an agent's acts in this case, and no serious question is presented as to the extent or limitation of the powers of a special agent within the rules laid down in Brittain v. Westhall, 135 N. C. 496, 47 S. E. 616, and Id., 137 N. C. 34, 49 S. E. 54, and Briggs v. Insurance Co., 88 N. C. 143, which cases were cited by the defendants at the bar. Those cases and Williams v. Whiting, 92 N. C. 691, which was also relied on, have no application, as the jury were against the defendants upon the bald question of fact, as to whether the sale of the ribs was made directly and immediately to the plaintiffs through the broker or whether, after the defendants had sold them to the plaintiffs, there was a new agreement between the broker and themselves as to the delivery.

No good purpose would be served by examining the various objections to evidence in detail. When they are properly analyzed and considered, with reference to the material matters at issue in the case and the main question involved, they will be found to be clearly without merit; and, indeed, we think they are in themselves untenable when viewed separate and apart from the real issue.

The case was ably and ingeniously argued by the counsel for the defendants and they presented many plausible reasons for their contentions, but, when the case is stripped of all superfluous matter, it will be found that there is no real ground upon which they can succeed.

We affirm the judgment of the court below.
No error.

(145 N. C. 37)

ALLEN-FLEMING CO. v. SOUTHERN RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Sept. 11, 1907.)

1. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE—ISSUING PROCESS TO ANOTHER COUNTY—FOREIGN CORPORATIONS.

Notwithstanding Revisal 1905, § 1447, providing that no process shall be issued by a justice to any county other than his own, unless a bona fide defendant reside in and a bona fide defendant reside out of, his county, he may, though no defendant reside in the county, acquire jurisdiction of a foreign corporation by service on it outside his county, pursuant to section 1448, providing that when an action, of which a justice has jurisdiction, is brought against a foreign corporation, required to maintain a process agent in the state, the summons, certified in a prescribed manner, to be under the hand of such justice, may be issued to the sheriff of the county in which such process agent resides, and such sheriff shall serve it.

2. CORPORATIONS—ACTIONS AGAINST—VENUE.

By express provision of Revisal 1905, § 423, an action against a foreign corporation may be brought in the county in which the cause of action arose, or where plaintiff resides.

3. RAILROAD—ACTIONS AGAINST—VENUE.

By express provision of Revisal 1905, § 424, any action against a railroad may be tried in the county where the cause of action arose, or where plaintiff then resided.

4. VENUE—ACTION BROUGHT IN WRONG COUNTY—REMEDY—DISMISSAL.

A defendant may not have an action dismissed because brought in the wrong county; Revisal 1905, § 423, providing that, though it is so brought, it may be tried therein, unless defendant demand a change of venue.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 48, Venue, §§ 28, 30.]

5. SAME—PARTIES ENTITLED TO COMPLAIN.

A defendant as to whom the venue of an action is proper cannot complain as to the propriety of the venue as to another defendant.

6. PARTIES—MISJOINDER—MODE OF OBJECTION.

A defendant can object to misjoinder of another defendant only by demurrer to the complaint.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, Parties, § 150.]

7. CARRIERS—CONNECTING CARRIERS—DELAY IN TRANSPORTATION—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Where, in the course of carriage of goods by connecting carriers, there is an unreasonable delay, the initial carrier has the burden of showing delivery, without such delay, to the next carrier.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 9, Carriers, §§ 835, 842.]

8. JUSTICES OF THE PEACE—APPEARANCE—SPECIAL APPEARANCE.

Defendant does not make a special appearance in a justice court by merely making such appearance before the commissioner in taking a deposition.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 31, Justices of the Peace, §§ 266-268.]

9. APPEARANCE—GENERAL APPEARANCE—APPEAL.

Defendant, not having theretofore entered a special appearance to the justice court where the action was brought, could not, after judgment there, enter a special appearance by his appeal to the superior court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Warren County; Lyon, Judge.

Action by the Allen-Fleming Company against the Southern Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

F. H. Busbee & Son and W. B. Rodman, for appellant. T. M. Pittman and J. H. Kerr, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. This was an action begun before a justice of the peace in Warren county against the Southern Railroad Company and Seaboard Air Line Railroad Company for the penalty for unreasonable delay in transportation of goods shipped January 22, 1907, from High Point, N. C., on line of former road, and delivered to the consignee, the plaintiff, at Warrenton, a station on the last-named road February 14, 1907. The summons was issued March 9, 1907, returnable April 8, 1907, and duly served in the manner required by law upon both companies. The summons, duly certified as required by Revisal 1905, § 1448, was served upon the agent of the Southern Railroad Company at Henderson, in Vance county, March 11, 1907. The Southern Railroad Company made no appearance at the trial before the justice, though it did appear at the taking of a deposition, and entered a special appearance as to that. At the trial before the justice June 3, 1907, judgment was rendered in favor of the Seaboard Air Line Railroad Company and against the Southern Railroad Company. On June 8th, the latter served notice of appeal as follows: "The Southern Railroad Company enters a special appearance and appeals from the judgment," on the ground, recited in the notice, that "the justice had no jurisdiction of the action, that the parties were improperly joined, and that the judgment was contrary to the law and the facts." On the trial in the superior court a jury was waived, and the judge found the facts that the shipment was received by Southern Railroad at High Point January 22, 1907, that it arrived at Durham, a station on that road, January 25, 1907, but was not delivered to the Seaboard Air Line Railroad Company at that point till February 7, 1907, which the court held an unreasonable delay of nine days, and rendered judgment accordingly. The Southern Railroad Company, the sole defendant in the superior court, moved to dismiss for want of jurisdiction, because the Seaboard Air Line Railroad was not a resident of Warren county, the court having held that it had its principal office in Raleigh, Wake county, and that the Southern was a nonresident corporation, without any part of its track, or any local agent, in Warren county, and that the justice could not issue this summons to another county. It made a motion to dismiss on above ground, and asked to enter a special appearance. The court refused the motion to dismiss, and entered judgment for $32.50.

The sole point presented is that the justice did not acquire jurisdiction by service of summons upon the defendant, the Southern Railroad Company, in another county.

The defendant relies upon Revisal 1905, § 1447: "No process shall be issued by any justice of the peace to any county other than his own, unless one or more bona fide defendants shall reside in, and also one or more bona fide defendants shall reside outside of, his county." But this does not apply to foreign corporations. The next section (1448) is entitled, "Service on foreign corporations," and provides: "Wherever any action, of which a justice of the peace has jurisdiction, shall be brought against a foreign corporation, which corporation is required to maintain a process agent in this state, the summons may be issued to the sheriff of the county in which such process agent resides, and when certified under the seal of his office by the clerk of the superior court of the county in which the justice issuing such summons resides to be under the hand of such justice, the sheriff of the county to which such summons shall be issued shall serve the same as in other cases and make due return thereof"; and there is a further provision that, in such cases, the summons must be served 20 days before return day. This section governs this case. The justice had jurisdiction of the cause of action, the certificate was made by the clerk as required, service was made upon an agent of Southern Railroad Company, a foreign corporation, at Henderson, upon whom process against it could be served, and service was made more than 20 days before the return day of the summons. Section 1448 is specially provided for service of justice's summons upon a foreign corporation beyond the limits of the justice's county. Service of summons upon the Seaboard Air Line Railroad Company was properly made on its local agent (Revisal 1905, § 440), and there is no provision for removal to another county in an action before a justice of the peace. Besides, it made no objection; neither does the venue of an action against it concern the Southern Railroad Company.

In the superior court it is true that an action for a penalty must ordinarily be tried in a county where some part of the cause of action arose. Revisal 1905, § 420. But, as to foreign corporations, the action can be brought either in such county, or in any county in which it does business or has property or where plaintiff resides. Revisal 1905, § 423. The penalty if an action is brought in the wrong county is not dismissal, but removal to the proper county if asked in apt time. Revisal 1905, § 425. And there is this express proviso in section 424 that, "In all actions against railroads, the action may be tried either in the county where the cause of action arose, or in an adjoining county, or where plaintiff then resided." Whether joining the Seaboard Air Line Railroad Company made it merely a superfluous party, of which the Southern Railroad Company could not complain, or was ground for a demurrer requiring, if made, a division of the action, or was a proper joinder, making it a matter of proof as to which defendant was liable for the delay, is a matter not before us, as there was no demurrer, and, besides, the Seaboard Air Line Railroad Company was eliminated from the action by the justice's judgment. Certainly the Southern Railway being the initial railroad, the burden is upon it to show delivery without unreasonable delay to the next company. Meredith v. Railroad, 137 N. C. 478, 50 S. E. 1. As to the Southern Railroad Company, a justice of the peace in Warren could issue summons against it in favor of a plaintiff in that county (it being a foreign corporation) to be served in another county, under the express terms of section 1448, whose requirements were strictly complied with.

The appellant could have appeared specially before the justice and have moved to dismiss, and, if that were denied, it could have preserved its point by an exception filed and proceeded to trial. But, after being duly served with process, it entered no special appearance in that court. Its special appearance before the commissioner in taking the deposition merely saved a point which it could have made, but did not, at the trial before the justice. It could not appeal by a special appearance. This has been fully discussed and distinctly held. Clark v. Mfg. Co., 110 N. C. 111, 14 S. E. 518; Finlayson v. Accident Ass'n, 109 N. C. 198, 13 S. E. 739; Gulford Co. v. Georgia Co., 109 N. C. 310, 13 S. E. 861; Plemmons v. Improvement Co., 108 N. C. 614, 13 S. E. 188; and, more recently, Scott v. Life Ass'n, 137 N. C. 515, 50 S. E. 221. The defendant, not having taken the exception in the justice's court, could not, after judgment there, enter a special appearance by his appeal nor in the superior court. In deference to the request of defendant's counsel, however, we have passed upon the exception to service of summons, as if made in apt time.

Affirmed.

(145 N. C. 85)

MIDYETTE v. GRUBBS et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Sept. 25, 1907.)

1. PROPERTY—REALTY—STANDING TIMBER.

Standing timber is realty, and a contract for the sale thereof affects realty.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 40, Property, § 4.]

2. LOGS AND LOGGING—SALE OF STANDING TIMBER—CONTRACTS—CONSTRUCTION.

A conveyance of standing timber to be removed within a definite time creates a qualified fee in such timber, with the condition that the title to the timber not cut within the time shall revert to the grantor.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 33, Logs and Logging, §§ 6-11.]

3. DESCENT AND DISTRIBUTION—REAL PROPERTY—STANDING TIMBER.

A conveyance of standing timber to be removed within a specified time creates a determinable fee in realty which passes on the death of the grantee to his heirs, subject to the dower interest of the widow; both being determinable as to timber not removed within the time specified.

Appeal from Superior Court, Northampton County; Lyon, Judge.

Action by one Midyette, administrator of W. F. Grubbs, deceased, against one Grubbs and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed.

It appears: That W. F. Grubbs died on or about June, 1907, intestate, and domiciled in said county of Northampton. The plaintiff is the duly qualified and acting administrator of his estate, and the defendants are his widow and child and only heir at law. That at the time of his death said W. F. Grubbs was the owner of certain standing timber, in said county, under and by virtue of three deeds, bearing date in the year 1905, which conveyed to said intestate all the timber, except the oak, standing and growing upon certain lands, properly described and bounded, which would measure 10 inches across the stump at the time of cutting, etc., to him and his heirs and assigns forever, with the right to enter on said lands, build tram roads, etc., and cut and remove said timber at any time, as to the first deed, within eight years from the date, with privilege of two more on certain specified conditions; and, as to the second and third deeds, "at any time within five years from the date with the privilege of five more, on certain specified conditions." That the intestate having died holding the interest conveyed to him by said instruments and before the time limited for the removal of the timber had expired, the plaintiff, his duly qualified administrator, brought this action against his widow and heir at law, claiming that the timber standing and growing on said land embraced in the deeds was personal property, and his claim was resisted by the widow and heir at law, claiming that same was realty and as such belonged to defendants. The court being of the opinion that, under and by virtue of the terms of the three deeds, the timber then standing and growing upon the lands therein described was personalty, gave judgment for plaintiff, and defendants excepted and appealed.

Winborne & Lawrence and S. J. Calvert, for appellants. Peebles & Harris and W. C. Bowen, for appellee.

HOKE, J. (after stating the facts as above). There are courts which hold that in deeds and contracts for the sale of standing timber which evidently contemplate an immediate severance of the timber, or severance within a reasonable time, but conferring no beneficial interest in the soil for the purpose of further growth, such timber shall be considered as personalty, and the validity and effect of contracts concerning it shall be construed and treated in most respects as affecting that kind of property. 2 Page on Contracts, p. 992; Ewell on Fixtures (2d Ed.) 45; Id. 12; McClintock's Appeal, 71 Pa. 365; Huff v. McCauley, 53 Pa. 206, 91 Am. Dec. 203; Marshall v. Green, 1 C. P. Div. 39. In Page on Contracts, pp. 991, 992, the author, after saying that growing trees other than trees in a nursery are held in most jurisdictions to be realty, and that a contract for the sale of growing timber as such to be removed by the vendee is within the clause of the statute of frauds, requiring contracts concerning land to be in writing, states the doctrine maintained by the courts above referred to as follows: "Some American courts follow the rule which, after much vacillation, was finally adopted by the English courts, that if the parties in contracting contemplate the sale of growing trees solely as chattels, and do not intend that they shall remain attached to the realty for an indefinite or unreasonable time, and do not intend that they shall derive a benefit from allowing them to remain attached to the realty, the contract is not within this clause of the statute. Some jurisdictions hold that, if the contract for the sale of growing trees contemplates an immediate severance of them from the soil, they are to be treated as personalty, and hence not within this clause of the statute; while, if they are to be removed at the discretion of the vendee, they are realty, and within the statute." And the English rule to which reference is made is thus stated by Lord Coleridge, in the case of Marshall v. Green, 1 C. P. Div. 39, and, quoting from Sergeant Williams in Saunders' Reports of the case of Duppa v. Mayo: "The principle of these decisions appears to be this: That, wherever at the time of the contract it is contemplated that the purchaser should derive a benefit from the further growth of the thing sold from further vegetation and from the nutriment to be afforded by the land, the contract is to be considered as for an interest in land; but, where the process of vegetation is over, or the parties agree that the thing sold shall be immediately withdrawn from the land, the land is to be considered as a mere warehouse of the thing sold, and the contract is for goods." Some of the decisions have gone so far as to hold that, although the time limited for the removal of the timber may have expired, if the vendee afterwards enters and cuts and removes the timber, the vendor might sue him and recover damages for breaking the close by action in the nature of trespass quare clausum fregit, but he could not recover the value of the timber.

The views announced in these decisions have not prevailed with us. On the contrary, this court has uniformly held that standing or growing timber is realty, and that deeds and contracts concerning it are governed by the laws applicable to that kind of property. Brittain v. McKay, 23 N. C. 285, 35 Am. Dec. 738; Whitted v. Smith, 47 N. C. 39; Ward v. Gay, 137 N. C. 397, 49 S. E. 884. In some of our former decisions there was intimation given that in contracts of this kind, where the growing timber was absolutely conveyed and the time of removal was limited to a definite number of years, that the effect of such a contract was to create a lease, but in Bunch's Case, 134 N. C. 116, 46 S. E. 24, decided intimation was given that such a construction of the contract was not the correct one, and in Hawkins' Case, 139 N. C. 160, 51 S. E. 852, the court decided that such an instrument was not a lease, but "conveyed a present estate of absolute ownership in the timber, defeasible as to all timber not removed within the time required by the terms of the deed." Hawkins' Case, 139 N. C. 162, 51 S. E. 853. This case has been approved in several recent decisions of the court. Mining Co. v. Cotton Mills, 143 N. C. 307, 55 S. E. 700; Ives v. Railroad, 142 N. C. 131, 55 S. E. 74; Lumber Co. v. Corey, 140 N. C. 466, 53 S. E. 300. As said by Walker, J., in Ives' Case: "It may now be taken as settled that growing trees are a part of the realty; and a contract to sell and convey them or any interest in or concerning them must be reduced to writing." These authorities also clearly establish that, on the expiration of the time stated in such a contract within which the timber may be removed, all right in the vendee shall cease and determine, and the estate in so much of the standing timber as has not by that time been severed shall revert to the vendor, and both positions are upheld in numerous and well-considered cases in other jurisdictions. MacComber v. Railroad, 108 Mich. 491, 66 N. W. 376; Williams v. Flood, 63 Mich. 493, 30 N. W. 93; Lumber Co. v. Hines, 93 Minn. 505, 101 N. W. 959; Strasson v. Montgomery, 32 Wis. 52. Our decisions then having established the principle that standing timber is realty, "as much a part of the realty as the soil itself" (Douglas, J., in Lumber Co. v. Hines, supra); second, that deeds and contracts concerning it must be construed as effecting realty; and, further, that in instruments conveying the growing timber, to be removed within a definite time, the title to all timber not severed within the time shall revert to the vendor—we hold that the deeds now under consideration, which conveyed to the intestate, to him and his heirs and assigns, all the standing timber on certain described tracts of land which should measure 10 inches when cut, and to be removed within 10 years, created an estate in such timber in fee, not pure and simple, but qualified and debased by the provision that in case the trees should not be severed within the time the title to same should revert, and rendered the estate a qualified or base or determinable fee. Some anomaly may be suggested as a result of this position, more apparent, however, than real, and arising chiefly from the fact that the property changed its nature by the act of final and complete appropriation. But these difficulties are inherent from the nature of the property, and would exist in any construction that would be placed on such a contract, and we think that the instrument should be construed as of the time when it takes effect and the interest is created, and in reference to the property in its then condition, and so construing these deeds, they convey a determinable fee in realty.

It is objected that the estate could in no event be a fee, in that it lacks one of the essential requirements of such estates that it might by possibility endure forever, whereas this estate must at any event terminate within 10 years. Such a possibility is generally held to be an essential feature of an estate in fee, and, if applied in strictness to these instruments, the requirement might be met by the fact that the interest conveyed includes the right of absolute appropriation by severance. But such a requirement, by authority, has not been universally held to be essential. Thus my Lord Coke in Liford's Case, 2 Coke's Report, p. 91, says: "A man may have an estate in lands as long as a tree shall grow, because a man may have an inheritance in the tree itself." Dr. Minor, speaking of this and like estates, makes this comment: "By parity of reason, leaving authority out of view, it would seem that an estate limited to A. and his heirs, until Z. should return from abroad, was of like character with that just described, and that both might be properly denominated descendible freeholds; the estate, in the case last stated, passing to the heirs of A., if he dies before Z. returns, and, upon Z.'s death without returning, ceasing altogether. So, in like manner, a limitation to A. and his heirs, as long as a tree shall grow, would seem to be not properly an estate of inheritance, not even a base fee (since it cannot by possibility continue forever), but only a descendible freehold, inuring after A.'s death to his heirs, by the effect of the special limitation, until the tree falls, and then coming to its appointed end. Adverse authorities, however, are too numerous and strong to admit of this construction, and both the cases supposed are to be deemed estates of inheritance; that is, according to the ordinary nomenclature, bare or qualified fees, and according to the more rigorous analysis of Plowden and Preston, determinable fees. Walsingham's Case, 2 Plowd. 557; 1 Prest. Est. 432, 441"; 2 Minor's Institutes, pp. 98, 99. The estate, then, conveyed by these deeds, being in the nature of determinable fee in realty, is subject to the laws of devolution and transfer applicable to such estates, and, on the death of the intestate, it follows that the estate passed to his heirs, subject to the dower interest of his widow; the dower, however, partaking of the same infirmity which attaches to the estate from which it is derived. Pearson's Lectures, p. 130; 2 Minor's Institutes, p. 87-129; Hopkins on Real Property, p. 88. In reference to such estates this last author says: "Dower attaches to determinable estates, but is defeated by the happenings of the event which terminates the estate. If this occurs before the husband's death, dower never becomes consummate; if after his death, the enjoyment of the land assigned as dower is out off."

This statement of the doctrine must be taken with the limitation in this state that it only applies when the estate of the first taker is determined by an event entirely collateral, and does not apply to a fee determinable on the death of the first taker, and passing a substitute estate by way of executory devise. 4 Kent, Commentaries, p. 49, where the author says: "So dower will be defeated by the operation of collateral limitations as in the case of an estate to a man and his heirs so long as a tree shall stand, and in case of a grant of land to A. and his heirs till the building of St. Paul's Church is finished and the contingency happens. Whether dower will be defeated by a collateral limitation by way of shifting use or executory devise is hitherto an unsettled and vexed question, largely discussed in the book." The query here suggested by the learned author has been resolved with us in favor of the widow's dower in a decision of much learning by Ashe, J., in the case of Pollard v. Slaughter, 92 N. C. 72, 53 Am. Rep. 402, and other courts of the highest authority have taken the same view. Northcutt v. Whipp, 51 Ky. 65-73. We are referred to Ewell on Fixtures (2d Ed.) p. 45, note 12, where a large number of cases are cited as tending to show that these deeds present a case of constructive severance and the interest created should be considered as personalty. The author here classes growing trees with fixtures, and lays down the doctrine as claimed. A reference to these authorities, however, will show that they refer chiefly to fixtures proper, or to growing crops, about which there has been great diversity in the decisions arising in many instances from different statutory regulations, or they were cases in jurisdiction which hold, as those referred to in the outset, that contracts for sale of standing timber, when an immediate severance is contemplated, create an interest in personalty, a principle which we have endeavored to show has not obtained with us. Even in jurisdictions where this doctrine prevails, it is held not to obtain when a beneficial interest in the soil is conferred for the purpose of future growth; and in the present case the contract passes the trees to be taken off in 10 years and measuring 10 inches when cut, thus passing a beneficial use of the soil for the purposes of growth, so that, in any event, the estate created by these deeds would be held to be realty.

We are of opinion, therefore, and so hold, that on the death of the intestate the estate created by the deeds devolved upon his heir subject to the right of dower in his widow, both interests determinable as to all timber not removed within the time specified in the deeds. There is error.

Judgment reversed.

(145 N. C. 95)

DAVIS v. ATLANTIC COAST LINE R. CO.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Sept. 25, 1907.)

1. DAMAGES—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In an action by a fireman for personal injuries sustained in being compelled to jump from his engine because of an impending collision, defendant's negligence was admitted, and the only issue was as to the quantum of damages. Held, that plaintiff could show the speed of the engine at the time of jumping, to prove the violence of his fall.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Damages, § 479.]

2. SAME.

In an action by a fireman for personal injuries sustained in being compelled to jump from his engine because of an impending collision, defendant's negligence was admitted, and the only issue was as to the damages. Held, that plaintiff could show the badly wrecked condition of the engine, that a number of cars were derailed, and the general effect of the collision.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Damages, § 479.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Halifax County; Lyon, Judge.

Action by James Davis against the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Day, Bell & Dunn and Murray Allen, for appellant. Daniel, Travis & Kitchin, for appellee.

BROWN, J. The defendant admitted the negligence and its liability for damages, and excepted to the introduction of certain evidence admitted by the court upon that issue.

It appears that the plaintiff was a fireman on defendant's engine and sustained personal injuries, claimed to be of a severe character, in being compelled to jump from his engine immediately preceding a collision with another train on defendant's track. The court permitted plaintiff to prove the speed at which the engine was running when the plaintiff jumped, to which defendant excepted. We can see no error in this, as it tends to prove that the plaintiff was compelled to jump under circumstances calculated to cause injury. It tended to corroborate the testimony of the plaintiff that he had in reality suffered an injury, and was not feigning one. The defendant offered evidence of two physicians, to the effect that they had examined the plaintiff, and that in their opinion he had sustained no substantial injury, and was feigning. The exact question was decided in New York by the City Court of Brooklyn before Clement, C. J., and Osborne, J., in 1891. Gillespie v. Railroad (City Ct.) 16 N. Y. Supp. 850. The court says: "We think that the plaintiff had the right to prove the speed of the car. Such proof would have a tendency to show the violence of the fall of the plaintiff." His honor permitted evidence to be given over defendant's objection as to the effect of and circumstances attending the collision. It is contended by defendant's counsel that as this happened after plaintiff jumped, and after his alleged injury was sustained, the evidence should have been rejected as immaterial, and as calculated to unduly excite and prejudice the jury against the defendant. It is unnecessary for us to attempt to lay down here any rule governing trial judges as to how far it is proper to go into the circumstances attending an injury when the issue of damage is solely before the court. We agree with the learned counsel for the defendant that it would be highly improper to admit immaterial and unnecessary evidence, which can throw no possible light upon the issue before the jury, and which is calculated only to prejudice and inflame their minds.

We find no evidence in the record, and none has been pointed out to us in brief or argument, calculated to prejudice a jury, or to make them swerve from the path of impartial duty. No one was killed, maimed, or hurt, so far as we can discover, except the plaintiff. The objectionable evidence offered related solely to the condition of the engine from which plaintiff had jumped after the collision had taken place, and also tended to prove that 17 cars were derailed, and that 1 box car was on top of the engine as it lay in the ditch. The collision occurred because plaintiff's engine ran into and telescoped a freight train which was preceding it on the track. The conditions given in evidence were such as any one would be likely to suppose would naturally result from such a collision, and had no tendency to unduly inflame the jury or divert their minds from the only issue they were called upon to decide. In this particular case the badly wrecked engine tended to prove that it was running at a rapid speed, and, as we have said before, that tended to corroborate the plaintiff as to the bona fides of his injury by proving that he was compelled, in order to save his life, to jump under circumstances calculated to produce great bodily harm. As the exceptions to the charge are not presented in the brief and were not pressed on the argument, we will not discuss them, except to say that they cannot be sustained.

No error.

(145 N. C. 98)

SMITH v. NORFOLK & S. R. CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Sept. 25, 1907.)

1. APPEAL—REVIEW—IMMATERIAL QUESTIONS.

Where a nonsuit should have been entered, exceptions to the instructions and to the refusal to give requested instructions will not be considered on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 4035-4036.]

2. COLLISION—ACTIONS AT LAW—RULES OF ADMIRALTY COURTS—APPLICABILITY.

The rules of the courts of admiralty do not apply to an action at law in the state courts for negligence causing injury to a vessel in a collision with another, but the rights of the parties are ascertained by the rules controlling actions for negligence wherein contributory negligence is available as a defense.

3. NEGLIGENCE—PROXIMATE CAUSE.

Where both parties were negligent, the liability is placed on the one whose negligence was the proximate cause of the injury, and, when fixed on one, it is because of his negligence and the absence of any intervening negligence on the part of the other contributing to the injury.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, Negligence, §§ 74, 75.]

4. SAME.

Where an injury is the result of a sequence of negligent acts, and the original wrong becomes injurious only in consequence of the intervention of some distinct wrongful act, the injury is imputed to the last wrong as the proximate cause.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, Negligence, §§ 76-79.]

5. COLLISION—ACTIONS AT LAW—NEGLIGENCE—EVIDENCE.

In an action at law for injuries to one steamer in a collision with another in a fog, held, that the proximate cause of the injury was the act of the officer of plaintiff's vessel in changing her course, though defendant's vessel was going faster than the rules allowed, under the act of Congress providing that every vessel shall in a fog go at a moderate speed.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 10, Collision, §§ 170-174.]

6. SAME—"MODERATE SPEED."

The phrase "moderate speed," in the act of Congress providing that every vessel shall in a fog go at a "moderate speed," having careful regard to the existing circumstances, means that a vessel should, when in a fog, so reduce her speed that other vessels free from blame may not be injured.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 10, Collision, § 170.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Craven County; Neal, Judge.

Action by M. B. Smith against the Norfolk & Southern Railroad Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed, with directions to enter judgment of dismissal.

Eliminating nautical terms and irrelevant matter, the plaintiff's evidence makes the following case: The steamer Neuse, belonging to, and controlled by, the defendant company, on the morning of August 25, 1905, while making her regular run up the Neuse river to New Bern, encountered a fog near Otter Creek buoy. Her course was N. N. W. She was in shoal water. Her regular speed was from 12 to 13 miles an hour. Shoal water speed, at which she was running at the time she entered the fog, was 8 miles an hour. She was properly equipped, and in charge of a competent officer, who had been her first officer 14 years. When the steamer entered the fog, he was, and at all times remained, in his proper position, in charge of the watch in the pilot house, at the window on the port side of the wheel, blowing fog signals. He began blowing before he entered the fog. The steamer Blanche, belonging to plaintiff, on the same morning, at about 6:10 o'clock, left New Bern, going down the Neuse river to points on Bay river. Her course was S. S. E.  $\frac{1}{4}$ . She was properly equipped and in charge of a competent officer. She encountered the fog, and began to blow her fog signal. Her regular speed was seven miles an hour, which she maintained after entering the fog, until she reached Johnson's Point, when she took a southeast course. The officers in charge of the two steamers each heard the fog signals of the other. The officer of the Blanche says that his usual course is to pass Johnson's Point and keep on down to Hampton Shoal Buoy; the course being S. S. E.  $\frac{1}{4}$ . On the day of the collision, before passing Johnson's Point, he "starboarded and went to the port"—thought it would put her out of the way of the Neuse and get off shoal water. The change had the effect to put the Blanche across the course of the Neuse. The plaintiff introduced the officer of the Neuse, who testified: That he heard the fog signals of the Blanche on his port bow. That he was going N. N. W. That the signals of the Blanche were always on the port bow. "The first glimpse of her I could not understand. Her position ranged across our bow, and I blew four short whistles, and struck four bells to back, blowing the whistles with the right and striking the bells with the left hand. \* \* \* Q. Up to the time she appeared her whistles always sounded on your port bow? A. Yes, sir. Q. If she had been proceeding on a proper course, down the channel, what would that course have been? A. Going down the main channel about S. S. E." There was plenty of water and plenty of room "for the Blanche to have proceeded port to port. \* \* \* Q. If the Blanche had fulfilled her duty, will you state whether or not there would have been a collision? A. I don't think there would. There was room for her to have passed on her starboard side. \* \* \* The boat which has the other on her own starboard hand shall keep out of the way, and of the other vessel, to navigate with caution, if necessary, if she thought there was danger of collision. \* \* \* Q. State whether, up to the time you saw the Blanche appearing out of the fog and crossing your bow, there was anything in the situation which showed that she was going to attempt to cross your bow. A. No. The whistle sounded on the port bow all the time. Q. Up to the time the Blanche appeared in the fog, will you state whether or not there was anything from the sound of the whistle, or the location, which would indicate that there would be any danger in passing, if each vessel was properly navigated? A. No, sir. Q. When was it you first ascertained that there was danger of collision? A. When I sighted her. Q. Was there anything at that time which you could have done to avoid the collision? A. Nothing in my judgment more than I did." After testifying that he was running at 8 miles an hour, being shoal water speed, he was asked: "Had you reduced the speed at all on account of fog? A. No, sir; we never reduce speed. It is done from the engine room." He says that he could not rightly tell how fast he was moving when he struck the Blanche; that he should judge about 3 or 3½ miles—reduced speed by backing. "Q. Suppose you had been going up at three miles an hour, and had backed, your boat would have been stopped without sinking the Blanche, wouldn't it? A. It is a mathematical calculation." It was in evidence that, when the officer of the Neuse first saw the Blanche, she was about 50 yards distant from him, about the length of his boat. The defendant introduced no evidence, but moved for judgment of nonsuit. Motion denied, and defendant excepted. The following issues were submitted to the jury: (1) Was the plaintiff injured by the negligence of the defendant, as alleged in the complaint? (2) If so, did plaintiff by his own negligence contribute to the injury. (3) Notwithstanding the plaintiff's contributory negligence, could the defendant, by the exercise of the rule of the prudent person, have avoided the injury? The defendant excepted to the third issue. The jury, under the instructions of the court, answered the first issue "Yes." By consent the second issue was answered "Yes." The jury answered the third issue "Yes." There was judgment upon the verdict for \$2,000. Defendant excepted and appealed.

Simmons, Ward & Allen and H. H. Little, for appellant. W. W. Clark, for appellee.

CONNOR, J. (after stating the facts as above). As, in our opinion, the defendant was entitled to judgment of nonsuit upon the motion made at the close of the testimony, it is unnecessary to discuss or pass upon the exceptions to the instructions given, and the refusal to give others requested by defendant. The action being prosecuted in the state courts for alleged negligence, the rules obtaining in courts of admiralty in such cases do not apply. The rights and liabilities of the parties are to be ascertained by resorting to the principles, which control in actions for alleged negligence, wherein contributory negligence is set up as a defense. Fuller, C. J., in Belden v. Chase, 150 U. S. 674, 14 Sup. Ct. 264, 37 L. Ed. 1218, says: "At common law the general rule is that, if both vessels are culpable in respect of faults operating directly and immediately to produce the collision, neither can recover damages so caused. In order to maintain his action, the plaintiff was obliged to establish the negligence of the defendant, and that such negligence was the sole cause of the injury, or, in other words, he could not recover, though defendant was negligent, if it appeared that his own negligence directly contributed to the result complained of." 25 Am. & Eng. Enc. 1025. The motion for judgment of nonsuit involved two propositions: First, that there was no evidence of negligence on the part of the Neuse; second, that, if there was negligence, the admitted contributory negligence on the part of the Blanche intervened and became the proximate cause of the injury, thus preventing a recovery. This is undoubtedly true, unless the plaintiff can maintain a third proposition—that defendant, having knowledge of plaintiff's negligence, failed to use ordinary care to prevent the injury. Barrows on Neg. 35. "It is sometimes said to be the rule that a plaintiff may recover notwithstanding the fact that his own negligence exposed him to the risk of injury, if the defendant, after becoming aware of plaintiff's danger, failed to use ordinary care to avoid injuring him." Beach, Cont. Neg. § 54. It being established that defendant was negligent—that is, guilty of a breach of duty—and that plaintiff was also negligent, the law fixed the liability upon the one whose negligence was the proximate cause of the injury. If fixed upon the defendant, it is because of his negligence and the absence of any intervening negligence, on the part of plaintiff, contributing to the injury. Where the injury is the result of a sequence of negligent acts, or omissions, the rule is thus stated by Judge Cooley: "If the original wrong only becomes injurious in consequence of the intervention of some distinct wrongful act or omission of another, the injury shall be imputed to the last wrong as the proximate cause, and not to that which was remote." Cooley on Torts, 70, cited with approval in Clark v. Railroad, 109 N. C. 430, 14 S. E. 43, 14 L. R. A. 749; Pickett's Case, 117 N. C. 616, 23 S. E. 264, 30 L. R. A. 257, 53 Am St. Rep. 611.

In Farmer v. Railroad, 88 N. C. 564, it is said: "Where an injury results from negligence, and the act of the plaintiff is directly connected and concurrent with that of the defendant, the plaintiff's negligence is the proximate cause of the injury, and will bar his recovery in an action for damages; but, where the negligent act of the plaintiff precedes that of the defendant, it is the remote cause, and the defendant will be liable if the injury could have been avoided by the exercise of reasonable care." These and other decisions, holding this doctrine, are based upon the case of Davies v. Mann, 10 M. & W. (Exch.) 546. In all of the cases the liability is put upon the party whose negligence is the proximate cause of the injury. Upon the undisputed evidence in this case, we think it very doubtful whether there is any evidence of negligence on the part of the officer of the Neuse; but, passing that question, it is clear that the admitted negligence of the Blanche was last in order of sequence, and, as the learned counsel properly conceded, contributed to the injury. The answer to the second issue put an end to the controversy. The officer of the Neuse, introduced by plaintiff, says that, before entering into the fog, he blew fog signals and continued to do so until he saw the Blanche; that he was on the watch in the pilot house; that his course was N. N. W.; that he heard the fog signals of the Blanche; that they were always on the port bow, clearly showing her position; that nothing occurred to indicate that she would change her course or her position, her course being S. S. E.  $\frac{1}{2}$ ; that she had plenty of room to pass, and that the first intimation he had of danger was when, 50 yards distant, he saw her cross his course; that he immediately blew the proper signals, rang the bells, reversed his engine, backed his boat; that he did everything in his power to avoid the collision. Conceding that, at the moment he saw the Blanche, he was going faster than the rules allowed, is it not apparent that, but for the erratic course of the Blanche, he could and would have proceeded with perfect safety to both boats? The case comes clearly within the principle of Pickett's Case and numerous other authorities.

But the learned counsel for plaintiff calls attention to the rules established by Congress to prevent collisions. "Every vessel shall in a fog go at a moderate speed, having careful regard to the existing circumstances and conditions." He insists that the term "moderate speed" has been defined to be such a speed as will enable the boat to stop within a distance at which he could see another boat. In The Umbria, 166 U. S. 404, 17 Sup. Ct. 610, 41 L. Ed. 1053, Judge Brown, after a very exhaustive discussion of the authorities on the subject, says: "The general consensus of opinion in this country is to the effect that a steamer is bound to use only such precaution as will enable her to stop in time to avoid a collision, after the approaching vessel comes in sight, provided such approaching vessel is herself going at the moderate speed required by law." In other words, the steamer should so reduce her speed, when in a fog, that steamers which are free from blame or negligence may not be injured. The learned justice proceeds to say that in a dense fog this rule might require both vessels to come to a standstill. In a lighter fog it might authorize them to keep their engines in sufficient motion to preserve their steerage way; the true principle being that they must use due diligence, the standard of which, in the light of the rules, being measured by "existing circumstances and conditions." The distinction between the measure of duty to avoid injury imposed upon a locomotive engineer, passing a public crossing and running on the track where there is no such crossing, is pointed out by Smith, C. J., in Parker v. Railroad, 86 N. C. 221. In the former the public have an equal right with the train. The engineer must anticipate that persons will be using the crossing and lower his speed, so that he may have his engine under such control that he can stop before coming in contact with a person on the crossing. Persons using the crossing must, however, use ordinary care to avoid injury. This speed in towns is usually fixed by ordinance, and in many cases its violation is declared to be as matter of law the proximate cause of the injury. It is unnecessary to discuss the distinction made in that class of cases and the one before us. There was nothing in the conditions by which the Blanche was surrounded to cause her to change her course. The undisputed evidence is that "she had plenty of room and water" to pass the Neuse in safety. Her officer elected to change the course, the effect of which change was to throw her across the course of the Neuse at a point which rendered it impossible to prevent collision. The Neuse, with a regular speed of 12 miles, was running at the shoal water speed of 8 miles. There is nothing in the evidence showing that her surroundings required any further reduction to prevent injury to a steamer herself free from negligence, or to indicate that the only steamer of whose presence in the river she had any notice was off her course until too late to prevent the injury. Whatever may have been said by this court in regard to "continuing negligence," the facts in this record do not come within the doctrine of any case wherein that expression is used. Measured by the well-settled principles of the common law, we find no evidence upon which to base the third issue. We are of the opinion that, by a shorter route, the same result would have been reached by granting the motion for judgment of nonsuit. In refusing the motion there was error. Let this be certified to the superior court of Craven, to the end that judgment be entered dismissing the action.

Error.

(145 N. C. 128)

WILLIAMS v. MUTUAL RESERVE FUND LIFE ASS'N.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 3, 1907.)

1. INSURANCE—CONTRACTS—WHAT LAW GOVERNS.

A policy of a New York corporation on the life of a citizen of North Carolina, which was signed in 1884 in New York, and which stipulates that the place of the contract is New York, is a New York contract, prior to Act 1893, p. 302, c. 2999, § 8 (Revisal 1905, § 4806), providing that contracts of insurance taken within the state shall be subject to the laws thereof.

2. SAME—FOREIGN CORPORATIONS—REGULATIONS.

Neither a resident of Virginia who is an assignee of a policy issued by a New York corporation to a citizen of North Carolina, which stipulates that it is a New York contract, nor his cause of action thereon, is within Revisal 1905, § 4747, providing that the appointment by a foreign insurance corporation of the insurance commissioner as attorney shall be irrevocable as long as any liability of the corporation remains outstanding in the state, notwithstanding the right secured to every citizen of any of the states to sue in the courts of another state.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 23, Insurance, § 1573.]

3. CORPORATIONS—FOREIGN CORPORATIONS—CARRYING ON BUSINESS WITHIN STATE.

The Legislature has the power to prescribe the terms on which foreign corporations may come into the state, and may pass statutes for the protection of its own citizens doing business with them, as against the objection that such statutes discriminate against nonresidents.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 12, Corporations, §§ 2505-2527.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Martin County; Long, Judge.

Action by H. G. Williams, administrator, against the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed, with directions to dismiss.

On April 19, 1884, defendant, a New York corporation, issued to A. W. Satterthwaite, of Yatesville, Beaufort county, in this state, a policy of insurance upon his life for $6,000, payable to insured or his legal representatives. The policy contained the usual stipulations in regard to payment of assessments. There is nothing in the policy to indicate at what place the application was made, or where the policy was delivered, other than the statement of insured's residence. The policy was signed in New York. The tenth clause is as follows: "The entire contract contained in this certificate and said application, taken together, shall be governed by, subject to, and construed only according to the constitution, by-laws, and regulation of said association and the laws of the state of New York, the place of this contract being expressly agreed to be the home office of said association in the city of New York." On November 27, 1895, the said A. W. Satterthwaite, having paid the assessments to that date, assigned the policy to the plaintiff, a citizen and resident of the state of Virginia, who thereafter paid such assessments as were made on said policy until June 1, 1901, when the defendant company declared the contract of insurance forfeited on account of plaintiff's refusal to pay increased assessments demanded of him. The assessments paid by plaintiff amount to some $4,000. Plaintiff, on the 7th day of June, 1906, instituted this action in the superior court of Martin county for the purpose of recovering the assessments paid by him, remitting and forgiving all sums in excess of $1,999.99, etc. Summons was served on James R. Young, Esq., Commissioner of Insurance for the state of North Carolina. Defendant, by its counsel, at June term, 1906, of said court, made a special appearance, and lodged a motion to set aside and vacate the service of summons on the Commissioner of Insurance. The court, upon this motion, found the following facts: On May 19, 1899, defendant company revoked the power of attorney theretofore made to the Commissioner of Insurance. At the date of the policy, at the date of the assignment, and at all times since the plaintiff was and is now a citizen and resident of the state of Virginia. Defendant is a corporation, chartered, organized, and having its principal place of business in New York City. The court denied the motion, and defendant duly excepted. Defendant, thereupon, demurred to the complaint. Demurrer was overruled. Defendant excepted and appealed.

J. W. Hinsdale and Gilliam & Gilliam, for appellant. R. O. Everett, for appellee.

CONNOR, J. (after stating the facts as above). The record presents a number of interesting questions, some of which are difficult of solution. In the view which we take of the appeal, it is unnecessary to discuss or decide them. The appeal must be disposed of upon the defendant's exception to the refusal of his honor, Judge Ward, to set aside the service of summons on the Insurance Commissioner and dismiss the action. It will be noted that, prior to Act 1893, p. 302, c. 299, § 8 (Revisal 1905, § 4806), there was no statute in this state preventing a foreign insurance company and the insured from fixing, by agreement, the place of the contract. By that statute it is provided that "all contracts of insurance, application for which is taken within this state, shall be deemed to have been made within this state and subject to the laws thereof." That, in the absence of such a statute, the parties may agree upon the place of the contract, is well settled. 22 Am. & Eng. Enc. 1325. Therefore the policy, by its express terms, is made a New York contract. This brings us to the consideration of the effect upon plaintiff's right to bring the defendant into court by serving summons on the Commissioner of Insurance after the revocation of the power of attorney. Act 1899, p. 176, c. 54, § 62, subsec. 3 (Revisal 1905, § 4747), requires every foreign insurance company before it shall be admitted to do business in this state to file in the office of the Insurance Commissioner "an instrument appointing him and his successor its true and lawful attorney, upon whom all lawful process in any action against it may be served," and further providing that "the authority thereof shall continue in force irrevocable as long as any liability of the company remains outstanding in this state."

The defendant, conceding the full force of this provision in the statute, as construed by this court in Biggs v. Insurance Co., 128 N. C. 5, 37 S. E. 955, and Moore v. Ins. Co., 129 N. C. 33, 39 S. E. 637, insists that, as against the plaintiff, a resident and citizen of the state of Virginia, suing upon a New York contract, the limitation upon the power of the company to revoke the power of attorney does not apply. The point has been ruled in accordance with defendant's contention in Hunter v. Ins. Co., 184 N. Y. 136, 76 N. E. 1072. Mr. Justice Hiscock, discussing the language of our statute, says: "Statutes requiring the execution of some such agreement by foreign corporations as is invoked against the defendant here have always been regarded as primarily designed for the protection of the citizens of the state enacting the legislation and who might acquire rights under contracts executed with them, or for their benefit, while they were such citizens." The learned justice, speaking of citizens of other states, says: "They are not of the class for whose protection it was originally executed. They have not acquired any rights upon the faith of it." The contract of insurance being a New York contract, the plaintiff a resident of Virginia, we do not think that he, or his cause of action, comes within either the language or spirit of the portion of the statute which limits the power of the company to revoke its power of attorney. This view is not in conflict with the right secured to every citizen of any of the states to sue in the courts of this state upon any cause of action he may have against defendant, whether a resident of this state or not, provided he finds the defendant in the state and has valid service of process. The Legislature of this state has the undoubted power to prescribe the terms upon which foreign corporations may come into the state and to pass statutes for the protection of its own citizens doing business with it. This is no discrimination against residents of other states. It is a question of procedure always subject to legislative control, provided it does not violate any constitutional rights of the citizen. Except for the purpose stated in the statute, the defendant had a right, at any time, to withdraw from the state and cancel its power of attorney to the commissioner. Plaintiff is not within the restrictive language of the statute in that respect. The court erred in refusing the motion. This will be certified to the superior court of Martin, to the end that the defendant may have judgment in accordance with its motion, and the action be dismissed.

Reversed.

(78 S. C. 296)

STATE ex rel. LYON, Atty. Gen., v. RIDDOCK et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Sept. 28, 1907.)

COURTS — SUPREME COURT — ORIGINAL JURISDICTION — SUBJECT-MATTER.

The Supreme Court has original jurisdiction of the subject-matter of a suit by the state on the relation of the Attorney General to restrain persons from using premises as a place for the sale of intoxicating liquors not tested and found pure as provided by law.

Suit by the state, on the relation of J. Fraser Lyon, Attorney General, against E. J. Riddock and another, partners doing business as Riddock & Byrnes, and others. Decree entered as prayed for.

Lyon, Atty. Gen., and De Bruhl, Asst. Atty. Gen., for petitioner. T. Moultrie Mordecai, for respondents.

GARY, A. J. On hearing the complaint and affidavits in the above-stated case, it is ordered that the respondents, E. J. Riddock, William Byrnes, E. W. Blitch, and Charleston Consolidated Railway, Gas & Electric Company, show cause before the Supreme Court at Columbia, S. C., on the 28th day of September, 1907, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon, or as soon thereafter as counsel can be heard, why an injunction should not be issued restraining you and each of you from selling or dispensing in any manner alcoholic liquors and beverages not having been tested and found pure and free from poisonous and deleterious matters, as provided by law, upon the property belonging to the Charleston Consolidated Railway, Gas & Electric Company, located on the Isle of Palms, in the county of Charleston, and used as a hotel, pavilion, and general pleasure resort, and commonly known as the "Isle of Palms"; that you also show cause why an injunction should not be issued restraining you from permitting persons to resort to the premises herein described for the purpose of drinking alcoholic liquors or beverages. And it is further ordered that the said respondents, their agents, and servants be in the meantime restrained and are hereby forbidden to suffer or commit any of said acts until the further order of this court. It is further ordered that the respondents shall in the meantime have the right to apply to me upon giving the Attorney General four days' notice to set aside the restraining portion of this order. It is further ordered that this original order be exhibited to the respondents, and that copies of the petition, affidavits, and of this order be served upon them.

PER CURIAM. This cause coming on to be heard, the respondents made a special appearance and motion to dismiss. After hearing argument, it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed by the court that this court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter and parties hereto, and the motion of the respondents is overruled. It having been ordered by the court that the respondents should answer to the rule on the merits, counsel for respondents having stated to the court that under advice of counsel respondents would not answer, the Attorney General then moving for a writ of perpetual injunction against the respondents, now, on motion of the Attorney General, it is ordered that the respondents, E. J. Riddock, Wm. Byrnes, E. W. Blitch, and Charleston Consolidated Railway, Gas & Electric Company, and their officers, agents, servants, successors, and assigns, be, and they are hereby, perpetually restrained and enjoined from using, or permitting to be used, the said premises described in the petition herein, being certain property on the Isle of Palms, in the county of Charleston, in this state, commonly known as the "Isle of Palms," being a hotel and general pleasure resort, and having therein a pavilion and an apartment designated "clubroom," as a place where alcoholic liquors and beverages, not having been tested and found to be pure and free from poisonous and deleterious matters are sold, or dispensed in any manner, and from keeping, using, and maintaining, or permitting to be used, kept or maintained, the said premises above described as a place where persons are permitted to resort for the purpose of drinking alcoholic liquors and beverages. It is further ordered that this original order be exhibited to each of the respondents, and that certified copies thereof be served upon respondents. It is further ordered that a certified copy of this order be filed with the clerk of court of Charleston county.

(18 S. C. 178)

FRANCIS et al. v. FRANCIS et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Sept. 17, 1907.)

1. MORTGAGES—ABSOLUTE CONVEYANCES.

Whether a conveyance of land with an agreement to reconvey on payment of a debt constitutes a mortgage or a conditional sale depends largely on whether the debt continued or was discharged by the conveyance.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 35, Mortgages, § 5.]

2. SAME—CONSTRUCTION.

An agreement to reconvey land on condition that, if the grantor or his heirs should pay the grantee $140, with interest at 7 per cent. per annum, with any amount that the grantor might be indebted to the grantee, on or before January 1, 1875, etc., showed the continued existence of a debt to be paid as the condition of reconveyance, and warranted the inference that the deed and agreement to reconvey constituted a mortgage as between the original parties from the time they were executed.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 35, Mortgages, § 108.]

3. SAME—RECORD—NOTICE.

Whether a deed, with a contract to reconvey on payment of a debt, constituted a mortgage or was of the nature of a mortgage, it was an instrument required to be recorded, so as to affect rights of subsequent creditors or purchasers, by Civ. Code 1902, § 2456; and, having been duly recorded, subsequent purchasers were charged with notice of the equities of the grantor and his heirs to redeem or compel performance of the contract to reconvey.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 35, Mortgages, § 393.]

4. SUBROGATION—MORTGAGEES IN POSSESSION—CONVEYANCE OF LAND.

Grantees of a mortgage in possession, though affected with record notice of the rights of the mortgagor's heirs to redeem, are subrogated to all the rights of their grantor.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, Subrogation, § 38.]

5. SAME—MORTGAGEE IN POSSESSION—RIGHT TO REDEEM.

Act 1791 provided that no mortgagee should maintain any possessory action for the real estate mortgaged, even after default, provided that nothing therein contained should extend to any suit or action pending, nor when the mortgagor should be out of possession, etc. Held that, where mortgagees took possession after the repeal of the proviso of such act by Act Dec. 18, 1879 (17 St. at Large, p. 19), the fact that the mortgage was executed before such repeal did not affect the right, if any, of the heirs of the mortgagor to redeem.

Woods, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Clarendon County; D. E. Hydrick, Judge.

Suit by Aaron Francis and others against John Francis and others. From a decree dismissing the complaint, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Wilson & Du Rant, for appellants. Lee & Moise, for respondents.

JONES, J. The plaintiffs, as part of the heirs at law of Anthony Francis, deceased, brought this action against the other heirs at law and C. O. Witte, Arthur Lynah, and Edward H. Sparkman for the partition of a certain tract of land, which they allege said Anthony Francis owned at the time of his death, a portion of which is in the possession of the said C. O. Witte, Arthur Lynah, and Edward H. Sparkman, in which they claim some interest as trustees. The defendants C. O. Witte, Arthur Lynah, and Edward H. Sparkman, as trustees, answered, denying the allegations of the complaint, except that they were in possession, alleged ownership of the premises described in fee simple, pleaded the statute of limitations, and, further answering, set up the defense of purchasers from C. E. Salinas and others for value without notice of any existing equities in favor of the late Anthony Francis, or of his heirs at law, in or to said premises, and that their grantors, C. E. Salinas and others, were likewise purchasers for value without notice of the said existing equities. The pleadings having raised the issue of title, trial was begun before a jury. It appears that the tract of land in question was conveyed to Anthony Francis by deed dated December 5, 1872, and it was conveyed by Francis to Louis Loyns by deed absolute in form, dated December 30, 1873; that the said Francis was in possession until his death in 1876, and his heirs at law until 1883 or 1884, when Louis Loyns went into possession. The land in question was mortgaged by Louis Loyns to A. J. Salinas & Sons January 29, 1891, was sold under foreclosure proceedings to C. Edward Salinas March 7, 1892, and was conveyed by deed of trust dated January 13, 1906, to C. O. Witte, Arthur Lynah, and Edward H. Sparkman, trustees. Plaintiff offered in evidence bond for title by Loyns to Francis, bearing same date as conveyance to Loyns, and sought to show that these papers were intended as a mortgage, and also offered testimony to show admissions by Loyns of payment before he took possession and during the lifetime of Francis. This testimony was received subject to objection, and was afterwards ruled out as incompetent under the pleadings, and this ruling is the basis of the second, third, and fourth exceptions. At the close of plaintiff's testimony defendant's attorney moved for a direction of verdict "on the ground that, the heirs of Anthony Francis having shown title out of their ancestor and traced title into the defendants Witte, Sparkman, and Lynah, they occupied the position of mortgagees in possession and cannot be disturbed, unless it could be shown that the mortgage was paid before the original mortgagee went into possession of the land." The court having held that the declarations of Louis Loyns, said to have been made in 1875, as to payment of the debt due Loyns before possession was taken by him, are not competent or admissible against defendants C. O. Witte, Arthur Lynah, and Edward Sparkman, under the pleadings in this action, concluded there was no competent evidence to submit to the jury, and dismissed the complaint, from which plaintiffs appeal.

The first exception makes the point that the court erred in deciding that defendants Witte, Lynah, and Sparkman occupied the position of mortgagees in possession. The ruling is correct, if the deed of Francis to Loyns and the collateral agreement to reconvey by Loyns to Francis constitute a mortgage, and if Witte, Lynah, and Sparkman are subject to the equities existing between the original parties. Whether such a transaction is a mortgage or a conditional sale must be determined by the intent of the parties, as clearly established by the attending facts and circumstances. The most general test is whether the debt continued or was discharged by the conveyance. Watkins v. Williams, 123 N. C. 170, 31 S. E. 388; Keithly v. Wood, 151 Ill. 566, 38 N. E. 149, 42 Am. St. Rep. 265; 1 Jones on Mortgages, § 267; Pom. Eq. Jur § 1195. The agreement to reconvey in this case was upon condition that "if the said Anthony Francis, or his heirs, shall well and truly pay me the above sum of $140, with interest at 7 per cent. per annum, with any amount that the said Anthony Francis may be indebted to me by open account or otherwise on or before the 1st day of January, 1875, then and in that case to reconvey to him the said tract of land described above." This recital shows the continued existence of a debt to be paid as a condition of reconveyance, and, independent of the parol testimony submitted, warranted the view that the deed and agreement to reconvey constituted a mortgage as between the original parties at the time for their execution. Being a mortgage or in the nature of a mortgage, the instruments were such as are required to be recorded, so as to affect the rights of subsequent creditors or purchasers, under section 2456, vol. 1, Civ. Code 1902; and having been duly recorded, the respondents in a proper case made might be held affected with notice of whatever equity Francis and his heirs at law may have to redeem or compel performance of contract to reconvey, subject, of course, to any proper defense.

Assuming, then, that respondents are in possession affected with notice, they would be subrogated to all the rights of their grantor, Loyns, as mortgagees in possession. Loyns took possession of the land in 1884 or 1885, after the repeal of the proviso of the act of 1791 by statute of December 18, 1879 (17 St. at Large, p. 19), and the fact that the mortgage was executed before said repeal would not operate to prevent the right, if any, of the heirs of Francis to redeem. Sims v. Steadman, 62 S. C. 304, 40 S. E. 677. A mortgagee in lawful possession is entitled to retain possession against the mortgagor until it is shown under proper pleadings and proof that the debt has been paid. Cooke, Adm'r, v. Cooper, 18 Or. 142, 22 Pac. 945, 7 L. R. A. 273, 17 Am. St. Rep. 709, and cases cited in note at page 276 of 7 L. R. A.; Kelso v. Norton, 65 Kan. 778, 70 Pac. 896, 93 Am. St. Rep. 308. The complaint, however, contains no allegations that the papers in question constitute a mortgage, nor that said mortgage had been paid, nor that the conditions of the contract to reconvey had been performed, nor that respondents are in possession with notice of appellants' equity; and the court was not called upon to consider whether any amendment to the complaint could or should be made to this end. The action being for partition, and under the issue of paramount title in respondents, the appellants having shown lawful possession in respondents, it was not error to dismiss the complaint. Shiver v. Arthur, 54 S. C. 194, 32 S. E. 310; Miller v. Price, 66 S. C. 85, 44 S. E. 584.

In view of the character of the action as disclosed by the pleadings, it must also follow that no error was committed in excluding the testimony sought to be introduced, and in holding that there was no competent testimony to sustain the action.

The judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

WOODS, J. (dissenting). I am unable to resist the conclusion that in the opinion of the court too much importance is attached to the form of the action. The deed from Francis to Loyns and the obligation of Loyns to reconvey, taken together, constituted a mortgage, or at least a contract in the nature of a mortgage. These papers having been duly recorded, all subsequent purchasers from Loyns were charged with notice of them and their legal effect. If the debt was paid before Loyns, the original mortgagee, took possession, then there was no debt and no mortgage when Salinas and his grantees, Witte, Lynah, and Sparkman, took possession, and they could not hold as mortgagees in possession against the plaintiffs. Evidence of payment in full of the mortgage debt to Loyns was therefore competent to show there was no mortgage, and hence no mortgagees in possession. One of the witnesses testified Francis, the mortgagor, and Loyns, the mortgagee, had made a full settlement; Loyns saying to Francis: "That is all right. Come back Monday and get your papers." If the mortgage was paid, then the plaintiffs as heirs of the mortgagor out of possession were entitled to recover the possession from the defendants unlawfully holding possession under a mortgage no longer having any existence. The fact that the mortgage consisted of two papers, the deed to the mortgage absolute in form and the separate agreement of the mortgagee to reconvey, instead of the usual single paper in form an absolute conveyance with the condition of becoming a nullity on payment, should make no difference. McCreary v. Coggeshall, 74 S. C. 55, 53 S. E. 978, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 433.

For these reasons, I think the evidence as to the payment of the debt to Loyns was competent, and the circuit judge was in error in directing a verdict for the defendants.

(78 S. C. 200)

BROOKE v. LAURENS MILLING CO.
(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Sept. 18, 1907.)

1. SALES—QUALITY—INSPECTION—DECISION OF INSPECTOR.

Where a contract for the sale of No. 2 white corn provided that a certain public elevator grade should be accepted as final, the buyer was absolutely bound to accept corn tendered under the contract which had been inspected and passed as "standard No. 2 white" by the public elevator, when the grading was done in the exercise of an honest judgment.

2. SAME—ACCEPTANCE—INFERIORITY OF QUALITY—WAIVER.

Where defendant accepted certain corn delivered under a contract of sale, he thereby waived the right to claim that the corn was inferior in quality; the inferiority, if any, being obvious, and not latent.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 43, Sales, § 460.]

3. SAME—BREACH OF CONTRACT—RE-SALE.

Where a contract for the sale of corn provided that in case of the buyer's breach the seller might sell the corn for the buyer's account, the seller, on the buyer's breach, though entitled to sell the corn without waiting for the time agreed on for delivery of all the installments under the contract to arrive, could not recover the difference between the contract price and the market price on the day or days appointed for performance.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 43, Sales, § 924.]

4. SAME—PRIOR SALE—MARKET PRICE.

Where, on defendant's breach of a contract to purchase certain corn from plaintiff, plaintiff immediately sold the corn before the time fixed for acceptance under the contract, neither the amount realized at such resale nor the market price on the day of the sale was material in an action by plaintiff for defendant's breach of contract.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 43, Sales, § 924.]

5. SAME—GUARANTY OF PRICE.

Where a contract for the sale of corn provided that, in case of the buyer's breach, the seller should sell the corn for the buyer's account, such contract, if construed to authorize a sale on the buyer's breach before the delivery date, did not operate as an implied guaranty by the seller of the market price on the day of such resale.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Laurens County; R. O. Purdy, Judge.

Action by George W. Brooke against the Laurens Milling Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Dial & Todd and F. P. McGowan, for appellant. Simpson, Cooper & Babb, for respondent.

WOODS, J. The plaintiff and defendant in January, 1904, made a contract in writing, by which it was agreed plaintiff should sell and deliver to defendant, at specified times, "9,600 bushels bulk No. 2 white corn." and defendant should pay for the corn in specific installments. The contract was in these words: "This witnesseth that George W. Brooke, of Atlanta, Ga., has this day sold to Laurens Milling Co., of Laurens, S. C., 9,600 bushels bulk No. 2 white corn, at — per bushel delivered at Laurens, S. C. Said corn to be stored with the Steel Elevator and Storage Co., of West Nashville, Tenn., and carrying charges of 1 cent per bushel per month, or fraction of a month, are to be paid by said Laurens Milling Co. In addition to the above price, beginning April 1st, 1904. Delivery is to be made within 15 days after receipt by said Brooke of order therefor by said Laurens Milling Co., provided, however, that if failure to deliver within the usual time is occasioned by failure of the railroads to furnish cars therefor, or transport same, shall not be chargeable to said Brooke. Title to said corn shall pass on delivery hereunder. West Nashville Public Elevator weights and grades to be accepted as final. Said Laurens Milling Co. has paid to said Brooke a margin of 10 cents per bushel on said corn by notes of $960.00, June 1st, 1904; July 1st, 1904, payable at the ——— of ———, which amount of said notes is to be deducted from the last invoice when the grain is shipped, or to such amount as will balance the account, and it is agreed if said Laurens Milling Company does not order out said corn as per these terms of contract, said Brooke may at his option sell said grain for account of said Laurens Milling Co. Shipments to be made as per memorandum on back of this sheet." Indorsed on it was the following memorandum:

2,400 bus. No. 2 white corn to be shipped March...68%	1 car March 1st.
	1 " " 15th	.....68%
	1 " " 20th.
2,400 bus. No. 2 white corn to be shipped April...69%	1 car April 1st.
	1 " " 15th	.....69%
	1 " " 20th.
2,400 bus. No. 2 white corn to be shipped May....70%	1 car May 1st.
	1 " " 15th	.....70%
2,400 bus. No. 2 white corn to be shipped June...71%	1 car June 1st.
	1 " " 15th	.....71%
	1 " " 20th.

The defendant accepted and paid for two car loads of the corn, but refused to accept two other car loads which reached Laurens, the designated place of delivery, on the ground that it was not up to grade; and notified the plaintiff not to ship the remainder. Thereupon the plaintiff sold the corn, and brought this action for the difference between the contract price and the price realized on the resale. The substance of the defense is contained in this sentence of the answer: "That, instead of shipping the corn of the quality stipulated in the contract, the plaintiff fraudulently shipped corn to the defendant that was damaged, musty, and mildewed and very inferior in all respects to No. 2 white corn, and was unfit for use, and this defendant could not use the same in its business, and upon the arrival of this corn at Laurens the defendant declined to receive the same, and immediately so notified the plaintiff on the ——— day of ———, 1904, and demanded of the plaintiff the return of the notes given by the defendant to the plaintiff under the said contract, which demand has never been complied with." Evidence was adduced tending to prove the rejected corn was heated and inferior to No. 2 grade when it reached Laurens, and there was also evidence of its liability to become heated and damaged in transportation from Nashville, the place of shipment.

The provision of the contract on which an important question made by the appeal hinges is this: "West Nashville public elevator weights and grades to be accepted as final." There is no ambiguity or obscurity in this language. The grade No. 2 white corn provided for in the contract is a grade of universal trade recognition. It seems perfectly clear the West Nashville public elevator was not empowered to make a new standard of corn grading. The general trade grading was to be the standard, but the West Nashville public elevator was to inspect the corn tendered for the parties, and decide whether it was up to date trade standard of No. 2 white. The plaintiff produced certificates from M. L. Coggins, grain inspector at the West Nashville public elevator, that he had inspected each of the car loads of corn, and that all of them contained "corn grade No. 2 white"; and Coggins confirmed these certificates by his testimony as a witness. The circuit judge submitted in his charge as one of the issues decisive of the case, whether in the opinion of the jury, as formed from the evidence, the corn was or was not in fact of No. 2 grade when loaded at Nashville. This we think was error, because the parties themselves had agreed in the contract that the grading of the elevator company should be final. In such case the true rule as fixed by authority, from which we can find no dissent, is that the decision of the arbitrator whom the parties have agreed is conclusive when reached in the exercise of his honest judgment. This rule was applied to the decision of arbitrators appointed by the parties in Rounds v. Aiken Mfg. Co., 58 S. C. 290, 36 S. E. 714, and earlier cases in this state; to the decision of an engineer under a contract to dig a well in Omaha v. Hammond, 94 U. S. 98, 24 L. Ed. 70; to that of a meat inspector under contract to deliver meat of a certain grade in Nofsinger v. Ring, 71 Mo. 149, 36 Am. Rep. 456; to that of architects and engineers under contracts for the construction of buildings or railroads in Sweeney v. U. S., 109 U. S. 618, 3 Sup. Ct. 344, 290, 27 L. Ed. 1053; Chicago, etc., R. R. Co. v. Price, 138 U. S. 185, 11 Sup. Ct. 290, 34 L. Ed. 917; Kennedy v. Poor, 151 Pa. 472, 25 Atl. 119; McAlpine v. Trustees, 101 Wis. 468, 78 N. W. 173; Kilgore v. N. W. T. Baptist Ass'n, 89 Tex. 465, 35 S. W. 145; Seim v. Krause, 13 S. D. 530, 83 N. W. 583; East Tenn., etc., Ry. Co. v. Central L. & M. Mfg. Co., 95 Tenn. 538, 32 S. W. 635; Thompson v. Bradbury, 5 Idaho, 760, 51 Pac. 758; Hot Springs Co. v. Maher, 48 Ark. 522, 3 S. W. 639. The reason for holding the award of the arbitrator selected by the parties final, when reached in the exercise of his honest judgment, seems to be at least as strong as the reason for giving such effect to the return of commissioners in partition. In stating the principle applicable to the returns of commissioners the court says in Aldrich v. Aldrich, 75 S. C. 374, 55 S. E. 888: "Even if it should be conceded that a preponderance of the evidence outside the report of the commissioners on the lands given Mrs. Richardson and Mrs. Duncan was too high, it was proper to sustain the valuation made by the commissioners, unless the court was satisfied the valuation was so grossly incorrect and unequal as to warrant an inference that the commissioners acted from unfair and improper motive. It is a matter of common knowledge that men of experience may differ as to the value of lands. So long, therefore, as the valuation by commissioners may be accounted for on this ground, it should be sustained; and it is not sufficient to overthrow a valuation by commissioners merely to show that in the opinion of other honest and experienced men the true value is higher or lower than that made by commissioners under oath." There is no doubt under the authorities proof may be made of gross inferiority of the work done, or material used, or goods delivered, or of gross over or under valuation, because such proof tends to show that the arbiter agreed on did not exercise his honest judgment, or must have come to a different conclusion. Nevertheless the issue always remains the same—did the arbiter exercise his honest judgment, not whether the jury or the witnesses would have come to a different conclusion in the exercise of their judgment. To give the finding of the arbiter selected by the parties less force would be to deny the right of the parties to contract. If, therefore, the inspector at the West Nashville public elevator inspected the corn, and in the exercise of his honest judgment graded it No. 2 white, the plaintiff was entitled to recover, and it was immaterial that the jury might have been of the opinion that the judgment of the inspector was not sound and the corn was not, in fact, up to the grade No. 2 white.

The plaintiff demurred to the two counterclaims set up in the answer, on the ground that the allegations were not sufficient to constitute counterclaims, and the demurrer was overruled. The first counterclaim is as follows: "That the defendant received and used part of the corn shipped to it by the plaintiff, and paid the plaintiff therefor the price stipulated in the contract, but the same was found to be of a very inferior quality, and not No. 2 corn, and was worth much less than the corn the plaintiff contracted to deliver to the defendant, to wit, the sum of $297.50." By acceptance of the goods, the defendant waived the right to allege inferiority of quality which was obvious to him. Woods v. Cramer, 34 S. C. 516, 13 S. E. 660; Vanderhorst v. McTaggart, 2 Bay (S. C.) 498; Mitchell v. McBee, 1 McM. (S. C.) 267, 36 Am. Dec. 264. And there is no allegation that the inferiority was latent. In Ellison v. Johnson, 74 S. C. 202, 54 S. E. 202, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1151, the question here made was not discussed nor involved. The point there was the measure of damages for breach of warranty in the sale of a quality of flour.

Nothing was decided as to the effect of the acceptance of defective goods when the defects were not latent, and the goods open to examination as the corn was in this case. The demurrer to this counterclaim should have been sustained. On the same point there was error in the charge as set out in the twelfth exception.

In the complaint plaintiff alleges that when defendant notified him that it would not accept the remainder of the purchase, 6,286 bushels, he resold it as authorized by the contract at a net loss of  $3\frac{1}{4}$  cents a bushel, aggregating \$204.29. By the second counterclaim, the defendant alleges this sale was made at three cents a bushel less than the market price at Laurens on the day of the sale, and asks judgment for \$188.58 on this ground. To determine whether this counterclaim was subject to demurrer, it is necessary to state the rights of the plaintiff under this clause of the contract: "And it is agreed if said Laurens Milling Company does not order out said corn as per these terms of contract, said Brooke may at his option, resell said grain for account of said Laurens Milling Co." If the defendant, without such legal excuse as would release him from the contract, notified plaintiff the remainder of the corn would not be accepted, this gave plaintiff the right to consider the contract breached and to sue for damages immediately, without waiting for the time agreed on for the delivery of all the installments to arrive. Payne v. Melton, 67 S. C. 235, 45 S. E. 154; Ellison v. Johnson, supra; Hochster v. De La Tour, 22 L. J. Q. B. 455, 6 Eng. Rul. Cases, 576; Roper v. Johnson, 23 Eng. Rul. Cases, 545, and note; Roehm v. Horst, 178 U. S. 1, 20 Sup. Ct. 780, 44 L. Ed. 953; 24 Cyc. 1124; 94 Am. St. Rep. 120, note.

The damages in such case are to be estimated as of the date when the contract was to be performed, not the date of the repudiation. The rule is thus stated in Roper v. Johnson, supra: "The general rule as to damages for the breach of a contract is that the plaintiff is to be compensated for the difference of his position from what it would have been if the contract had been performed. In the ordinary case of a contract to deliver marketable goods on a given day, the measure of damages would be the difference between the contract price and the market price on that day. Now, although the plaintiff may treat the refusal of the defendant to accept or deliver the goods before the day for performance as a breach, it by no means follows that the damages are to be the difference between the contract price and the market price on the day of the breach. It appears to me that what is laid down by Cockburn, C. J., in Frost v. Knight, in the Exchequer Chamber, L. R. 7 Ex. 111, involves the very distinction which I am endeavoring to lay down, viz., that the election to take advantage of the repudiation of the contract goes only to the question of breach, and not to the question of damages; and that, when you come to estimate the damages, it must be by the difference between the contract price and the market price at the day or days appointed for performance, and not at the time of breach." After full discussion the Supreme Court of the United States adopted this view in Roehm v. Horst, supra, and it is now generally accepted in this country. Evidently, if the trial takes place before the time for performance has arrived, there is difficulty in estimating with precision the loss of the plaintiff on the day of performance yet in the future. The difference in the market price on the day of performance and the price fixed in the contract is not available as a measure, because it is impossible to know the future market price. In the case last cited Chief Justice Fuller thus states the principle on which the damages in such circumstances are to be estimated: "As to the question of damages, if the question is not premature, the rule is applicable that plaintiff is entitled to compensation based, as far as possible, on the ascertainment of what he would have suffered by the continued breach of the other party down to the time of complete performance, less any abatement by reason of circumstances of which he ought to have availed himself." This difficulty, however, is not present here, because the time fixed by the contract for delivery had arrived before the trial. If the time of delivery arrives before the trial, the general rule that the measure of damages is the difference between the contract price and the market price at the time the goods ought to have been accepted by the purchaser is applicable. This is the rule here. The plaintiff, it is true, had the option to resell the corn for defendant's account; but, according to the principle laid down in the numerous cases above cited, he could not charge the defendant with a loss on a resale made before the time specified in the contract for delivery. The contract only gave the plaintiff the option to substitute for the market price on the day appointed for performance the price realized by a resale on that day. Therefore, while the plaintiff under his option could hold the corn and resell it at the time fixed for acceptance or not, as he saw fit, the defendant was in no wise bound by the result of a resale made before the day fixed for performance. The resale by the plaintiff was of no effect, and his option to resell on the arrival of the day fixed for performance of the contract by defendant remains unexercised. The measure of the damages, therefore, would be the difference between the market price of the corn on the day the contract contemplated the acceptance of the corn by the defendant and the price which the defendant contracted to pay.

The second counterclaim is for the difference between the price of 6,286 bushels of corn realized by the resale, made before the time for delivery, and the market value on the day of the resale. If the defendant breached the contract and threw the corn on the plaintiff's hands, then, as we have seen, he is liable for the contract price less the market value of the corn on the day it was to be delivered. The plaintiff having sold the 6,286 bushels before the time fixed for acceptance, neither the amount realized at this resale nor the market price on the day of resale enter into the case. For these reasons, the demurrer to the second counterclaim also should have been sustained.

The complaint alleges in effect a breach of the contract by defendant in refusing to pay for so much of the corn as was shipped and accepted, in refusing to accept and pay for so much of the corn as was shipped to defendant and refused after it reached Laurens, and in notifying plaintiff by letter it would refuse to receive or pay for the 6,286 bushels unshipped. As to the alleged breach in refusing to take the 6,286 bushels unshipped corn, the complaint incorrectly alleges the defendant's liability to be the difference between the contract price and the amount realized on resale made before the time for delivery had arrived, instead of the true measure of liability, namely, the difference between the contract price and the market value on the day the corn was to be accepted. But, as there was no objection made to the complaint by demurrer or otherwise, this mistake has not been considered. It is proper to say, if defendant meant by his second counterclaim to admit that the agreement contemplated an option to the plaintiff to resell the 6,286 bushels at once on its notice that it would refuse to accept, the counterclaim would still be demurrable; for, if the resale is to be considered to have been made according to the contract, then under the contract it was "for account of Laurens Milling Company," and this altogether negated the idea that the plaintiff was to guarantee the market price.

Of course, these conclusions as to the complaint and the counterclaims are announced without prejudice to the parties to move to amend the complaint or counterclaims as they may be advised in accordance with the principles we have stated. No specific reference to the exceptions to the charge are deemed necessary, as in the discussion we have endeavored to cover them all. Under the principles we have announced, the exceptions as to the exclusion and admission of testimony are overruled.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the circuit court be reversed, and the cause remanded to that court for a new trial.

(78 S. C. 323)

ELMS v. SOUTHERN POWER CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 5, 1907.)

CORPORATIONS—FOREIGN—VENUE OF ACTIONS.
Though, under Civ. Code 1902, § 1793, a foreign corporation may become domesticated, and a domestic corporation is resident in any county where it maintains an agent and conducts business, and under Code Civ. Proc. 1902, § 146, must be sued where it resides, under Code Civ. Proc. § 423, plaintiff may elect in which county to sue a foreign corporation, and where plaintiff sued defendant in a county where it does not appear to have an agent or conduct business, alleging defendant to be a foreign corporation, and it appeared and, answering, admitted it was a foreign corporation, the court acquired jurisdiction, which could not be overthrown by showing defendant had become domesticated.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 12, Corporations, § 2801.]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Lancaster County; C. G. Dantzler, Judge.

Action by John W. Elms against the Southern Power Company. From an order transferring the cause to another county, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

J. Harry Foster, for appellant. Morrison & Whitlock, Russell G. Lucas, and W. O. Hough, for respondent.

JONES, J. This appeal is from an order of Judge Dantzler transferring the cause for trial to Chester county on the ground that the court of common pleas for Lancaster county had no jurisdiction to try the same. The action was commenced in the common pleas for Lancaster county to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have resulted to plaintiff in Chester county from the concurrent negligence of the defendant Southern Power Company and James P. Rosemon. Service was made on defendants in Chester county, and defendants appeared and made joint answer to the merits. The case was docketed for trial in Lancaster county and continued for one term. At next term the defendant made a motion that the action be transferred for trial to Chester county, and, if that request be refused, to transfer to Greenville county, upon showing by affidavit that defendant Rosemon was a resident of Greenville county and that defendant Southern Power Company was a domestic corporation, having complied with chapter 44 of the Civil Code of 1902.

There is no evidence that the defendant company maintains an agent and conducts its corporate business in Lancaster, but, on the contrary, it appears that it maintains an agent and conducts its business in Chester county where the injury occurred and the service was made. Section 1793, Civ. Code 1902, provides: "When a foreign corporation complies with the provisions of this chapter, it shall ipso facto become a domestic corporation. It may sue and be sued in the courts of this state, and shall be subjected to the jurisdiction of this state as fully as if it were originally created under the laws of the state of South Carolina." If, for the purposes of this action, the defendant Southern Power Company must be treated as a domestic corporation, then upon the showing made Chester county is the proper place for trial as to that defendant. In the absence of a statute confining residence to a particular county, a domestic corporation is resident in any county in the state where it maintains an agent and conducts its corporate business, and under section 146, Code Proc. 1902, must be sued in the county where it resides. McGrath v. Insurance Co., 74 S. C. 70, 54 S. E. 218; Nixon & Danforth v. Insurance Co., 74 S. C. 439, 54 S. E. 857. On the other hand, if the defendant company must be treated as a foreign corporation in this action, the plaintiff, under section 423 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1902, may elect in which county to sue, and the appearance and answer of defendant in the court of common pleas for Lancaster county, where the suit was brought, would give that court complete jurisdiction. We are of the opinion that, for purposes of jurisdiction in this suit, the defendant company must be treated as a foreign corporation.

The complaint alleges "that the Southern Power Company now is and was at the times hereinafter stated a corporation duly created and existing under the laws of the state of New Jersey, and as such entitled to sue and be sued in the courts of this state; that said defendant has real estate and other property situated in Lancaster county, said state." The answer expressly admits the truth of this allegation. It thus appears as a verity by the record that plaintiff has elected to sue the defendant company as a foreign corporation, and the defendant has elected to defend in that capacity. Thus, upon the record made, the common pleas for Lancaster county had full jurisdiction, which could not be overthrown by merely showing that such foreign corporation had become domesticated by compliance with the statute. By such domestication the foreign corporation is subject to the jurisdiction of the courts of this state in local matters not affecting federal jurisdiction, as if originally a domestic corporation; but nevertheless it still and also has distinct entity as a foreign corporation and liable to be sued as such, and with right to defend as such, in the courts of this state. Calvert v. Southern Ry. Co., 64 S. C. 139, 36 S. E. 750, 41 S. E. 963; Wilson v. Southern Ry. Co., 64 S. C. 162, 36 S. E. 701, 41 S. E. 971. The common pleas for Lancaster county, having acquired jurisdiction over defendant as a foreign corporation, has jurisdiction to hear and determine the controversy, and it was error to remove the cause to Chester county for want of jurisdiction.

There being no exception in behalf of defendant Rosemon alleging error in not removing the cause to Greenville county because of his residence in that county, we do not consider that phase of the question.

The judgment of the circuit court is reversed.

GARY, J. I concur in the result, as this question of jurisdiction related to the person and was waived by answering to the merits.

(78 S. C. 211)

WARE SHOALS MFG. CO. v. JONES,
Comptroller General.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Sept. 21, 1907.)

1. COURTS—SUPREME COURT—ORIGINAL JURISDICTION—INJUNCTION—LICENSE TAXES.

Under Const. 1895, art. 5, § 4, conferring jurisdiction on the Supreme Court to issue writs of injunction, such court has power to restrain the collection of an illegal tax, notwithstanding Civ. Code 1902, § 412, providing that the collection of taxes shall not be stayed or prevented by injunction, etc., where the Legislature has not provided another adequate remedy for protection of the taxpayer.

2. TAXATION—INJUNCTION—LICENSE TAXES—CONTEST—REMEDY.

Civ. Code 1902, § 413, giving a taxpayer the right to pay taxes under protest and sue a county treasurer for taxes supposed to have been illegally paid, does not provide an adequate remedy against alleged illegal license taxes imposed on a corporation by the license tax act of 1904 (24 St. at Large, p. 462), as amended by the act of 1905 (24 St. at Large, p. 827), which taxes are not under the control of any county treasurer, but are assessed on the books of the state Comptroller General and are payable directly into the state treasury.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 45, Taxation, § 1231.]

3. STATES—SUITS AGAINST STATE—SUITS AGAINST STATE OFFICERS.

A suit to restrain the Comptroller General from proceeding to collect a license tax provided by the license tax act of 1904 (24 St. at Large, p. 462), as amended by the act of 1905 (24 St. at Large, p. 827), against petitioner, a corporation, because of the alleged unconstitutionality of such statute was not a suit against the state.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, States, § 181.]

4. CORPORATIONS—CHARTERS—ALTERATION—IMPLIED POWER.

Where the state issues a charter to a corporation under general laws expressly reserving to the state the power to alter the charter at pleasure, no contract on the part of the state not to alter such charter by the imposition of license taxes can be implied.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 12, Corporations, §§ 119-121.]

5. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—CORPORATIONS—CHARTER POWERS—OBLIGATION OF CONTRACT.

Const. art. 9, § 2, provides that no corporate charter shall be granted, changed, or amended by special law, except in cases of certain charitable, etc., corporations; but that the General Assembly shall provide by general laws for amending existing charters and for organizing all subsequent corporations, and any such law so passed, as well as all charters existing or subsequently created, shall be subject to future repeal or alteration. Held, that the Legislature had unlimited power to alter corporate charters, so that the imposition of a license tax on a corporation organized under the general law subsequent to such constitution by the license tax act of 1904 (24 St. at Large, p. 462), as amended by the act of 1905 (24 St. at Large, p. 827), did not constitute an impairment of the state's contract obligation to the corporation.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 10, Constitutional Law, § 406.]

6. LICENSES—CORPORATIONS—LICENSE TAXES—PUBLIC POLICY.

The issuance or denial of corporate charters being entirely within the discretion of the state, the imposition of a license tax on corporations as a condition to their right to do business within the state is not contrary to public policy.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 32, Licenses, § 47.]

7. SAME—NONUNIFORMITY—CLASSIFICATION.

The license tax act of 1904 (24 St. at Large, p. 462), as amended by the act of 1905 (24 St. at Large, p. 827), imposing a license tax on corporations, is not void for inequality, because it does not apply to individuals in the same line of business; the Legislature being entitled to classify corporations and individuals differently in the imposition of taxes.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 32, Licenses, § 8.]

8. SAME—CORPORATION TAX—GRADUATION—VALIDITY.

The license tax act of 1904 (24 St. at Large, p. 462), as amended by the act of 1905 (24 St. at Large, p. 827), imposing an annual license tax on corporations of one-half of one mill on each dollar of their capital stock paid in and outstanding, was not void because the tax was uniform, and not graduated under Const. art. 8, § 6, authorizing the corporate authorities of cities and towns to collect license or privilege taxes so graduated as to secure a just imposition of the tax on the classes subject thereto; such provision being applicable only to licenses imposed by municipal corporations, and not to franchises granted by the state.

9. TAXATION—TAXING POWER—PRESUMPTION.

The supreme taxing power of the state is vested in the Legislature, and the presumption is that the attempted exercise of such right is valid and constitutional.

Original application by the Ware Shoals Manufacturing Company for an injunction restraining A. W. Jones, as Comptroller General of the state of South Carolina, from proceeding to assess and collect a license tax against petitioner. Writ denied. Petition dismissed.

Dial & Todd, for petitioner. J. Fraser Lyon, Atty. Gen., for the State.

POPE, C. J. This is an application by the petitioner to this court in its original jurisdiction for a writ of injunction against the respondent, as Comptroller General, whereby he shall be perpetually enjoined from proceeding under an act of the General Assembly, the license act of 1904 (24 St. at Large, p. 462), amended in 1905 (24 St. at Large, p. 827), to assess and charge against petitioner a tax of one-half of one mill upon each dollar of its capital stock paid in and outstanding, amounting to the sum of $500, and, upon the refusal of the petitioner to pay said tax within the times stated in the act, to proceed to collect the same as directed therein. A rule to show cause why the injunction prayed for should not be granted was issued on March 29, 1907, directed to the respondent, and in the meantime restraining him from all further proceedings against the petitioner under said license act. The petition alleges, in brief, that the act in question is unconstitutional, null, and void, and that the respondent is proceeding entirely without authority of law.

In considering the cause made, we are met at the outset with preliminary questions of grave importance. The first of these is as to whether or not this court has jurisdiction to hear the matter, and, in case it find the act unconstitutional, as alleged, it can then go forward and grant the injunction prayed for. Section 412 of the Civil Code of 1902 provides: "The collection of taxes shall not be stayed or prevented by an injunction, writ or order issued by a court or a judge thereof." The Constitution of 1895 (article 5, § 4) gives the Supreme Court power to issue writs or orders of injunction, mandamus, etc. A provision practically identical with this was contained in article 4, § 4, of the Constitution of 1868. The inquiry, then, is: Can the Legislature, in the light of this constitutional grant of power, prevent the court from issuing an injunction restraining the collection of taxes. The question has been exhaustively considered in the three cases of State v. Treasurer, 4 S. C. 520, State v. Gaillard, 11 S. C. 310, and Chamblee v. Tribble, 23 S. C. 70; the court holding that such action on the part of the Legislature was valid. In the recent case of Western Union Tel. Co. v. Winnisboro, 71 S. C. 234, 50 S. E. 870, the holding in these cases was affirmed. In all of the above-named litigations, however, the petitioner had an adequate remedy at law; section 413 of the Code of 1902 giving the taxpayer the right to pay under protest and bring suit against the county treasurer for the recovery of taxes supposed to have been illegally paid. It can readily be seen, however, that the remedy provided by this section would not in all cases be adequate. Suppose, for example, a municipal corporation should exact a license tax of fruit venders or barbers so exorbitant as to be absolutely prohibitive of such pursuits, will it be contended that this court has no power to enjoin its collection? The remedy proposed of paying under protest and bringing a suit to recover would in such conceivable cases be absolutely no remedy at all. Or take the present case, where it is alleged that the suit cannot be maintained because it would in effect be a suit against the state, if this fact be found to be as alleged, then there is no remedy if the power to enjoin be denied, for once the taxes are paid they are beyond the reach of the party paying. In conferring the power upon the court to issue the writs in question, the only reasonable conception is that the constitutional convention intended to grant it jurisdiction to issue the writ in such cases as it had previously exercised the power. It was well established prior to the adoption of the Constitution of 1868 that the court by the writ of prohibition could enjoin the collection of taxes. Carter v. Burger, 1 McM. 418; Hibernian Society v. Addison, 2 S. C. 499. Therefore, when the act of the Legislature above quoted was sought to be put into effect, a diversity of judicial opinion appears. A consideration of the three leading opinions on the subject will show that, even where there is an adequate remedy provided at law, the judges are exactly divided as to whether or not the Legislature had the power to prevent the issuance of the writs in question; such justices as McIver, Moses, and McGowan being of the view that such action was illegal. The power of the court when there is no adequate remedy seems not to have occurred to the minds of the learned judges who wrote the opinions above referred to. Therefore, whatever might be the law in cases where there is an adequate remedy, we shall endeavor to show that, where there is no adequate remedy, the court may stay the collection of taxes by prohibition or injunction. We propose to pursue the inquiry untrammelled by any implication seemingly arising from the discussions above referred to.

It is one of the fundamental principles of law that for every wrong or injury there must be an adequate remedy. At the common law the remedies obtainable were in many cases far from adequate. In order to supply this need the system of equity, with its great adaptability, came into existence, and where the common law was inadequate the litigant had his remedy in that court. This, of course, took place only when the law by its generality and hardness, so to speak, was unable to give justice. Among the powers thus acquired was the right in certain cases to issue the preventative writ of injunction. In our state, with the development of the equity system, the number of instances in which the writ was applicable and would issue as a remedy increased, so that at the time of the adoption of our Constitution of 1868 its usefulness in South Carolina was even more extended than in England. As was said above, one purpose for which its power was exercised was the restraining of the collection of illegal taxes. This power the Constitution left remaining in the equity court. Looking then to the principle, at least one of the great principles, upon which our government is founded, namely, that each of the three departments must remain forever separate and distinct, we are of the opinion that, where there is no legal adequate remedy, it is beyond the power of the Legislature to say that the collection of taxes shall not be enjoined by any writ or other order of any court or judge thereof. When the Legislature does provide an adequate remedy, a court of equity, upon one of its own fundamental principles, namely, that where there is an adequate remedy at law equity will not interfere, loses jurisdiction. This is no new scheme or principle. It is the very mode by which our modern law court has become so imbedded with many of the beneficial remedies formerly cognizable only by a court of equity. In holding section 412, above quoted, constitutional, we think the act was regarded as practically reiterating the maxim that where there is a legal remedy resort cannot be had to a court of equity. In this view the opinions above referred to are sound.

This being our view of the law, the next step is to ascertain whether or not the petitioner here has an adequate legal remedy. Section 413 of the Civil Code of 1902 provides, in substance, that, where a tax is charged upon the books of the county treasurer, if the person against whom they are charged deem them illegal, he shall nevertheless pay them under protest, and within 30 days may bring an action against the county treasurer for recovery of the same, and, if it be decided that the taxes so paid should be returned, then the Comptroller General shall issue his warrant for the refunding of the taxes so paid. It will be noticed that this act refers only to taxes charged upon the county treasurer's books, and permits suit to be brought only against the county treasurer. In the case here under consideration, the taxes are charged upon the Comptroller General's books, and never come under the control of any county treasurer. They are payable to the state Treasurer. It is evident, then, if we strictly construe the language of the act above referred to, that the present case is not embraced therein. Shall we so construe it? Of course, it is understood that the Legislature in passing the act could not foresee all the possible contingencies, and hence could not use language broad enough to cover all cases that might arise. When the act was passed, the Legislature doubtless had in contemplation only the ordinary county and state taxes. The license tax here under consideration was not in existence. Therefore it could not have been the intention to make provision for such a case. Then, too, this court has formerly declared that this statute from its nature must be strictly construed. Bank v. Cromer, 35 S. C. 227, 14 S. E. 493. It in effect takes away, in the sense above indicated, a power previously exercised by a court of equity and by the Constitution conferred upon that court. Therefore it will be taken for granted that the Legislature meant only what it said, namely, that the act was to apply only to taxes collected by county treasurers. Then, too, there is the fact that the state Treasurer is an officer of the state, and the act does not give permission to sue state officers as would be necessary to a suit in case it be held that suing the Treasurer would in effect be suing the state. An extended discussion of this question is not, we think, necessary to the determination of the case. It seems to be well settled that such a suit would in effect be against the state. Lowry v. Thompson, 25 S. C. 417, 1 S. E. 141, and cases cited. Under this holding, however, the present case, being against the Comptroller General, would not it be a suit against the state? We think not. The doctrine is well established by a line of cases beginning with Osborn v. Bank of United States, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 738, 6 L. Ed. 204, that a court will restrain a state officer from executing an unconstitutional statute of the state, when to execute it would violate rights and privileges of the complainant which had been guaranteed by the Constitution and would work irreparable damage and injury to him. The principle is discussed at length and reaffirmed in the comparatively recent case of Pennoyer v. McCannagh, 140 U. S. 1, 11 Sup. Ct. 699, 35 L. Ed. 363. The distinction seems to be based on the fact that an officer, while attempting to execute an unconstitutional law, is not acting by any authority of the state, and therefore in that identical act is not to be regarded as a state officer. For example, if the tax in question is unlawful, then the Comptroller General in collecting it is not acting for the state, for it would be a contradiction to say that the acts for the state in exacting a tax were not authorized by state law. On the other hand, if even an illegal tax, or an illegal deed, as in Lowry v. Thompson, supra, be in the hands of a state officer, holding it for the benefit of the state, the officer's custody of the money or paper is the state's custody, and the liability for it the state's liability. As we have endeavored to show above, the remedy before the act in question was by prohibition or injunction, and, until that remedy is specifically taken away by the establishment of an adequate legal remedy, this court may issue these writs. Under the common law, no other remedy was regarded as adequate, and in this case, one not having been provided by statute, we are forced to the conclusion that the petitioner has no adequate remedy at law if the act requiring the tax is null and void.

This brings us then to the question of the constitutionality of the act. The statute, after requiring corporations to make certain annual reports to the Comptroller General, provides: "Every corporation organized under the laws of this state to do business for profit, other than railroad companies, express companies, street railway companies, navigation companies, water works companies, power companies, light companies, telephone companies, telegraph companies, parlor, dining and sleeping car companies, shall upon filing the report required of them in section one, pay to the state treasurer on or before the first day of April in each year, an annual license fee of one half of one mill upon each dollar paid in the capital stock of said corporations, said license fee shall not be less than five dollars in any case." Petitioner contends that, as its charter was issued under the laws of 1893, the act of 1904 was in effect a violation of the contract existing between itself and the state. This contention we think cannot be sustained. There is no express language in the charter held by the petitioner by which the state contracts not to alter any of the provisions therein contained. Even if we concede the proposition that the state may so contract, yet, where it does not do so, but, on the contrary, issues the charter under general laws expressly reserving to the state the power to alter the charter at pleasure, it seems clear that such a contract cannot be implied. The charter here in question was issued subsequent to the Constitution of 1895, and was therefore issued in contemplation of any provision contained therein. Article 9, § 2, of that instrument provides: "That no charter shall be granted, changed or amended by special law, except in case of such charitable, educational, penal or reformatory corporations as may be under the control of the state, or may be provided for in this constitution, but the General Assembly shall provide by general laws for changing or amending existing charters, and for the organization of all corporations hereafter to be created, and any such law so passed, as well as all charters now existing or hereafter created, shall be subject to future repeal or alteration. * * *" This language, it would seem, gives the Legislature almost unlimited power in this respect. And it cannot be said that the power so conferred is repugnant to the Constitution of the United States, as violative of the obligation of a contract, for the reason that every contract made between the state and a corporation has in view this section of the Constitution. Nor can this provision be said to be against public policy, for the issuing of such charters is entirely within the discretion of the state. It has a right to refuse them altogether, should it seem necessary and proper. Unlimited franchises and special privileges are not always beneficial to a commonwealth. Therefore, if it says to persons wishing to incorporate themselves and to enjoy the benefits of such incorporation that the incorporation is upon condition that whenever the public welfare demands it such change may be made in the contract as to it seems proper, the organization has no right to complain if such change is made. Yet we must not lose sight of the fact that when incorporated the organization becomes in a certain sense individualistic, and is therefore entitled to all of the protective laws of the commonwealth. Its property cannot arbitrarily be taken from it, nor can it be unjustly discriminated against. This is one of the grounds upon which the petitioner would have the act of 1904 declared null and void. He seeks to show that, while the tax here in question applies to corporations, it does not apply to individuals who are in the same line of business. Granting the contention to be true, we do not think it necessarily follows that such a classification is arbitrary or unjust. No one will deny that there are many advantages incident to corporate bodies which are enjoyed by individual dealers. Assured duration of life, the centralization and combination of large capital stocks, usually far surpassing that invested by individuals, and numerous other benefits conferred by the incorporation, all serve logically to place corporations in a class to themselves. Now, were the Legislature to undertake to say that certain corporations should pay the license tax here in question, while others of the same class were excepted, we think this would be justly termed a discrimination. Where, however, all corporations of like kind are put in one class and subjected to common burdens, we think it cannot be said that such action is discriminatory or arbitrary. A similar question was considered at length in the case of Simmons v. Telegraph Co., 63 S. C. 430, 41 S. E. 522<sup>1</sup>, where the court said: "Legislation is not unequal nor discriminatory in the sense of the equality clause of the Constitution, merely because it is special or limited to a particular class. The decisions of the United States Supreme Court establish that the Legislature has power to make a classification of persons or property for public purposes, provided such classification is not arbitrary and bears reasonable relation to the purpose to be accomplished, and that the equality clause is not violated, when all within the designated class are treated alike."

Petitioner, relying on article 8, § 6, of the Constitution, alleges that the tax levied by the act in question is uniform, and not graduated, and is therefore void. A consideration of that section will show that it is intended to apply to licenses imposed by municipal corporations and refers in no way whatever to franchises granted by the state. We do not think, however, that, even were the section applicable, it would be any ground upon which to hold the act void. The object of the graduation is to make such taxes as far as possible uniform. A just imposition is the end in view. Now, it will readily be conceded that, had the Legislature seen fit, instead of imposing a tax of one-half of a mill on the capital stock of its corporations, to impose a definite amount, say $500, or a like amount, as a privilege of doing business in the state, its power would not have been questioned. The former plan, we presume, seemed more equitable and just. Instead of making an arbitrary classification of corporations having various amounts of capital stock, the Legislature saw fit to require each to pay a certain amount upon its stock. This method causes a corporation to pay for the privilege it enjoys as measured by its capital stock. As compared with other corporations it pays no more nor no less than it is entitled to pay. In this view, capital stock is merely a measure by which the amount to be charged for the franchise is to be ascertained. The imposition made by the act cannot in a true sense be said to be a tax on the capital invested. The amount so directed to be paid is for the privilege of carrying on business in the state. Apart from this privilege tax, of course, property in the state is subject to the regular levies for county and state purposes. It seems so evident that a state has a right to make such exactions from its domestic corporations, its own creatures, that no one would question its exercise. Certainly such an exercise involves no double taxation, for the privilege is clearly one thing, and the property is another. That the state has a right to tax such privileges has been held in a line of cases beginning almost with the foundation of our republic. The general rule, as laid down by Judge Cooley in his work on Taxation, is as follows: "Every person within the state owing temporary or permanent allegiance to it, all property of every description within the state and entitled to the protection of its laws, every private franchise, privilege, business, or occupation, is subject to be taxed by the state, in return for benefits received and anticipated from state government and protection."

The supreme taxing power of the state is vested in the Legislature. The presumption is that it will always exercise that power with due regard to the Constitution of the state and of the United States, and it is only where its acts are clearly unconstitutional that this court will set them aside. Again, any doubt must always be resolved in favor of the constitutionality of its action. With these principles in mind, we do not hesitate to say that the act here before the court is constitutional, and the petition must be dismissed.

The judgment of this court is that the motion be denied, and the petition dismissed.

(78 S. C. 264)

STATE v. POPE

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. April Term, 1907. On Rehearing, Sept. 27, 1907.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—RULINGS ON MOTIONS FOR CONTINUANCES—REVIEW.

Motions for continuance in a criminal case for the absence of witnesses are addressed to the discretion of the trial court, and its rulings will not be disturbed, unless the discretion has been abused.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, § 3045.]

2. SAME—ABSENCE OF WITNESSES—MATERIALITY OF TESTIMONY.

Circuit court rule 27 declares that no motion for a continuance for the absence of witnesses shall be granted without the oath of a party or his counsel that the witness is material. On a motion for a continuance, accused in his affidavit averred that it was impossible for him to state what an absent witness would testify to and his counsel made no affidavit. Held, that the court properly denied the application, on the ground that the materiality of the testimony was not shown.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 1355.]

3. WITNESSES—RIGHT OF ACCUSED TO COMPULSORY PROCESS FOR WITNESSES—CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS.

Const. art. 1, § 18, giving to accused compulsory process for witnesses in his favor, is sufficiently complied with where accused was awarded compulsory process, under which a witness was bound over under recognizance to appear, and where a bench warrant was subsequently issued for the arrest of the witness.

4. SAME.

Const. art. 1, § 18, giving to accused compulsory process for witnesses "in his favor," does not require the court to issue compulsory process for any one the accused may designate as a witness, but there must be a showing that the person wanted is a witness in favor of accused, and that his testimony will be material.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 50, Witnesses, § 5.]

Pope, C. J., and Gary, A. J., dissenting.

Appeal from General Sessions Circuit Court of Hampton County; Geo. W. Gage, Judge.

J. Henry Pope, Jr., was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Affirmed.

John S. Reynolds and W. S. Smith, for appellant. Solicitor James E. Davis and W. S. Tillinghast, for the State.

JONES, J. At the October term, 1906, of the court of general sessions for Hampton county, the appellant was adjudged guilty of manslaughter and sentenced. At the call of the case, a motion for continuance of the term was made in behalf of the defendant, upon the ground that a material witness, Dr. M. L. Peeples, was absent after having been duly bound over according to law. The witness was bound over on the 22d of October, the day on which the term began, and was in attendance on the court for some time, but left after having been warned not to leave by defendant's attorney. It does not appear precisely when the witness left, or when defendant's attorneys were informed that he intended to leave or had left, but on October 25th Judge Gage, on the application of defendant's attorneys, issued a bench warrant directing the sheriff to arrest the witness and bring him to the bar of the court. The record fails to disclose the cause of the absence of the witness, or the reason why the sheriff failed to arrest him. After issuing the bench warrant, Judge Gage ordered the trial of the case to proceed over the protest of defendant's counsel; but it does not appear whether the trial was had on the 25th, 26th, or 27th of October. It appears that the court ruled that the solicitor having agreed to accept what the witness would swear to the trial must proceed. The appellant urges two exceptions for reversal: (1) error in refusing a continuance when it appeared that the witness had been regularly bound over as an expert witness; it being impossible for the defendant to put in the shape of an affidavit what the witness would testify to if present. (2) Error in forcing defendant to trial in the absence of said witness who was duly bound over and for whom bench warrant had been issued, but had not been served or return made thereon by the sheriff, thereby depriving defendant of his constitutional right to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor. Motions for continuance on account of the absence of witnesses are addressed to the discretion of the trial court, and the court will not interfere unless a clear case of abuse of discretion is shown. State v. Murphy, 48 S. C. 5, 25 S. E. 43; State v. Smith, 56 S. C. 378, 34 S. E. 657. The discretion of the court in this case was not abused nor was it controlled by any erroneous view of the law. In fact, the court acted in conformity with rule 27 of the circuit court, declaring that no motion for continuance beyond the term on account of the absence of a witness shall be granted without the oath of the party, his counsel, or agent, to the effect (1) that the witness is material; (2) that the motion is not intended for delay, but is made solely because he cannot go safely to trial without such testimony; (3) that he has used due diligence to procure the testimony of the witness, or such other circumstances as will satisfy the court that his motion is not intended for delay; and (4), in addition to the foregoing, the affidavit must set forth what facts he believes the witness, if present, would testify to and the grounds of such belief.

No such affidavit was presented to the court notwithstanding the offer of the solicitor to accept what the witness would swear to. It is stated in the exception that it was impossible for defendant to state what the expert witness would testify to if present. Matters of fact stated only in an exception cannot be considered by the court; but, if this statement were properly in the record, it would not avail, for it is to be presumed that, if the defendant could not make the statement required by the rule of court, his counsel surely could have done so. Under the circumstances, it may fairly be assumed that the circuit court was not satisfied that the testimony of the absent witness was material. In the case of State v. Way, 88 S. C. 833, 17 S. E. 39, it was held not reversible error to refuse to continue a case on the ground of the absence of witnesses subpoenaed to appear, even though the prosecuting attorney refused to admit that they would testify what was expected of them. In State v. Box, 66 S. C. 402, 44 S. E. 969, a bench warrant had been issued for the arrest of the absent witnesses. Three of the witnesses were brought into court the next morning, but the warrant had not been executed as to the others. One of the exceptions alleged error in forcing defendant to trial when sufficient time had not been allowed the sheriff to execute the bench warrant. This court held there was no abuse of discretion, and the court emphasized the fact that rule 27, referred to above, sets down what course the accused should pursue to obtain a continuance.

Under article 1, § 13, of the Constitution, and section 45 of the Criminal Code of 1902, it is true that in all criminal prosecutions the accused shall have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses "in his favor." This right was so far accorded the appellant as that compulsory process was awarded him under which a witness was bound over under recognizance to appear, and on his application a bench warrant was afterwards issued for the arrest of the witness, so that the real point of the complaint is not that compulsory process was denied the accused, but that, such process having been granted whenever sought, the court declined to continue the case for the term on the showing made, which we have shown was not such as justice and the rule of the court required, it not appearing that the witness was material.

The judgment of the circuit court is affirmed by an equal division of the court.

WOODS, J. I concur in affirming the judgment on the ground that there was nothing before the court to show the materiality of the absent witness. The Constitution gives the accused the right "to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor." Obviously this does not mean the court is bound to issue compulsory process for anybody the defendant may designate as a witness. Much less does it mean that the cause must be continued for the absence of any one who may be designated as a witness for defendant. There must be a showing that the person wanted is really a witness "in favor" of the defendant, and that his testimony would be material to the defendant's cause.

POPE, C. J. I dissent. The Constitution provides that compulsory process shall be made to obtain witnesses. This was not given. Rule of court must yield to the Constitution.

GARY, A. J. (dissenting). Section 13, art. 1, of the Constitution, provides that the accused shall have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and this provision is mandatory. This right is not exhausted because a witness at one time was arrested and bound over to attend court, but continues until the accused is placed upon his trial, unless waived or forfeited by his conduct, of which there is no evidence whatever in this case, nor does the record show that the ruling of his honor the presiding judge was based upon such ground. As long as this right continues, the accused cannot be forced to trial, even though the Solicitor may be willing to accept as testimony what the witness would swear if present.

For these reasons, I dissent.

On Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. Judgment of the circuit court affirmed, for reasons stated in the opinions of Associate Justices JONES and WOODS, heretofore filed.

JONES and WOODS, JJ., and GARY, KLUGH, DANTZLER, PRINCE, MEMMINGER, HYDRICK, and WILSON, Circuit Judges, concur. POPE, J., and GARY, A. J., dissent.

(129 Ga. 302)

EDWARDS v. HALE

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 15, 1907.)

PARTNERSHIP—EVIDENCE TO ESTABLISH.

The evidence, though conflicting, amply authorized the verdict, and no sufficient reason has been shown for reversing the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 38; Partnership, § 76.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Banks County; C. H. Brand, Judge.

Action by Hugh Edwards against J. P. Hale. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Edwards filed his petition against Hale, alleging that the defendant was indebted to him in the sum of $250 on account of the breach of a partnership agreement; that they entered into an oral agreement to form a partnership under the name of "John P. Hale, Proprietor"; that Hale was to furnish the capital to start the business; that both were to rent a house, and Edwards was to conduct the business and take out a reasonable amount for his support, and the profits and losses were to be borne equally; that the plaintiff went to work in good faith and built up a good business, which was increasing daily; that there was no time especially agreed on as to how long the partnership should continue, but it was understood that it was not to be terminated without three months' notice; and that, notwithstanding such agreement, the defendant, without any notice to petitioner, took charge of the business and refused to allow him to participate therein, and deprived him of all his rights as a partner. The petition concludes in the following language: "Your petitioner further shows that, being turned out of the business without any notice, he was out of employment and lost his time and profits for three months, which he was entitled to, all to the value of said $250, which the said defendant is justly indebted to petitioner." The defendant filed an answer in which he denied all liability. At the trial the plaintiff testified that the agreement was as set forth in the petition. The testimony of the defendant was to the effect that there was no partnership whatever; that the plaintiff was simply employed to conduct the business, and was to be paid for his services one-half of the profits; that he had no interest in the business, and was not liable in any way for the losses; that for a sufficient cause he was discharged; and that all that was due him, under the terms of the agreement, had been tendered to him, which he had refused to receive. The trial resulted in a verdict for the defendant, and the plaintiff assigns error upon the refusal of the judge to grant a new trial.

W. W. Stark, for plaintiff in error. H. H. Perry, for defendant in error.

58 S.E.—52

COBB, P. J. (after stating the facts as above). The controlling issue was partnership or no partnership. The evidence upon this subject was conflicting. It is contended by counsel for plaintiff in error, in his brief, that the evidence was sufficient to authorize a finding either way. It is therefore only necessary to determine whether any error of law had been committed which would authorize a reversal of the judgment. Error is assigned upon the following charge of the court: "If there be no agreement as to the time of the continuance, the partnership is at will, and may be dissolved at any time by any partner giving the other three months' notice; and if this be the truth of the case, if the defendant dissolved it without this notice, then the plaintiff can recover what the profits would amount to for said three months, and no more, and the burden is upon the plaintiff to show what these profits would amount to." Error is assigned upon this charge, for the reason that it limited the plaintiff's recovery to the profits that might have been made during the three months following the wrongful dissolution of the partnership, and placed the burden upon the plaintiff of showing what his damages would be. As will be seen from the statement of facts, the plaintiff distinctly alleges that his damages were the loss of profits during the three months, and hence there was no error in the judge limiting the plaintiff's recovery in the manner in which it had been limited in his petition. Neither was there any error in instructing the jury that the burden was upon the plaintiff to prove his damages. He must furnish some basis upon which the jury could estimate the damages resulting to him from the breach of the partnership agreement. It may be that under the petition the plaintiff would have been entitled to recover nominal damages for the breach of the contract, even though there was no evidence as to any actual damages sustained; but it is well settled that in an action upon a contract a new trial will not be ordered merely for the purpose of allowing a plaintiff to recover nominal damages. Roberts v. Glass, 112 Ga. 459, 37 S. E. 704; Bloom v. Americus Grocery Co., 116 Ga. 794, 43 S. E. 54.

Error is also assigned upon the following charge: "In order to constitute a partnership by joint interest in the profits and losses, the partners must share in all losses sustained by the partnership. The word 'loss' in this section [section 2629] means something more than the mere failure to realize profits." The error assigned upon this charge is that it precludes the jury from finding for the plaintiff profits which had been added to the business, and that the court did not define the term "losses." So far as the latter assignment of error is concerned, it is sufficient to say that, if any definition of this term used in the Code section had been desired, it should have been the subject of a proper written request. The first criticism is not well taken, for the reason that the court, in the charge referred to, was not undertaking to determine how an accounting should be had to determine the profits and losses of the business, but simply defining what was a partnership under the law.

The only other assignment of error is an objection to the testimony of a certain witness as to the statement of the father of the defendant in the absence of both the plaintiff and defendant. The judge, in a note to the motion for a new trial, says that this evidence was admitted for the purposes of impeachment. Even if this evidence was improperly admitted, for the reason that it sought to impeach the witness upon a matter which was immaterial, the error was, under all the circumstances, not of such grave nature as to require a reversal of the judgment.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 292.)

FORD v. CLARK.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 14, 1907.)

1. JUDGMENT—MOTION TO VACATE—FRAUD.

A judgment, founded on a verdict obtained by fraud practiced on the defendant and the court, may be set aside, and the original case reinstated, in a court of law, with proper pleadings, and with all the parties at interest as parties to the motion; the motion being made at the term of the court at which the verdict and judgment were entered, and the movant showing that he was not in laches, had a meritorious defense, and announcing ready for an instant trial.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, §§ 712, 713.]

2. SAME—EVIDENCE.

The motion to vacate the verdict and judgment and to reinstate the case met the requirements of the foregoing rule, and was supported by the evidence, and the discretion of the trial judge in vacating the verdict and judgment and reinstating the case was not abused.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, §§ 712, 713.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Colquitt County; R. G. Mitchell, Judge.

Action by J. J. Ford, administrator, against W. S. Clark. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Ford, as administrator of Graves, instituted his action of ejectment against W. S. Clark, returnable to the April term, 1906, of Colquitt superior court. At the next term a verdict was rendered in favor of plaintiff, and a judgment entered thereon. During the same term, the defendant filed his motion to vacate and set aside the verdict and judgment, alleging that previously to the institution of the suit he had deposited his title deed to the premises in dispute with the counsel for the plaintiff in the ejectment suit. As soon as he was served with a copy of the petition, he applied to plaintiff's counsel for his deeds, for the purpose of preparing his answer to the action of ejectment, when counsel for plaintiff informed him that it was unnecessary to file any answer to the case; that he, as attorney for the plaintiff, would withdraw the suit; and that the same would never go to trial. Relying upon this statement, movant did not file an answer to the suit. He avers that he had a meritorious defense to the ejectment suit, and sets out facts showing a good prescriptive title to the land embraced in the suit. He alleges that he had no knowledge that counsel for the plaintiff had violated his promise to dismiss the suit until the term of court at which judgment was taken, and after the plaintiff's counsel, without notice to him, had taken a verdict and judgment against him. He offered to file his answer instant and announced ready for trial on the merits of the ejectment suit. When this petition was presented to the judge, he granted a rule nisi directed to Ford, as administrator, requiring him to show cause instant why the verdict and judgment should not be set aside and the defendant allowed to file his answer as prayed. Due and legal service of the order and petition were acknowledged by counsel for plaintiff in the ejectment suit. The plaintiff moved to dismiss the proceeding, on the ground that it was a motion to set aside a verdict and judgment, not predicated upon a defect appearing upon the face of the record. The court overruled this motion to dismiss, and the plaintiff excepted. After hearing the evidence, the court granted the motion to set aside the verdict and judgment, and this judgment also is assigned as error.

W. C. McCall, for plaintiff in error. Edwin L. Bryan, for defendant in error.

EVANS, J. (after stating the facts as above). 1. There is no doubt that the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction may be set aside, by the court which rendered it, for fraud and irregularity. Mobley v. Mobley, 9 Ga. 247. An examination of previous adjudications of this court discloses some apparent conflict as to the proper procedure. In Dugan v. McGlann, 60 Ga. 353, it was said that a judgment may be vacated for fraud, accident, or mistake, unmixed with the negligence or fraud of the complaining party, by decree in chancery, or in a court of law with appropriate pleadings, but cannot be set aside on either of those grounds on motion. It has been repeatedly held by this court that a motion to set aside a judgment must be based on some defect which appears on the face of the record. Regopoulos v. State, 116 Ga. 596, 42 S. E. 1014, and citations. But not all motions to set aside judgments are necessarily based on matter appearing on the face of the record. For example, any judgment or verdict entered up in consequence of perjury may be set aside "upon motion and notice to the adverse party." Civ. Code 1895, § 5366. Here we find clear recognition of the right to set aside a judgment, on motion, for a defect not apparent on the record. In Mobley v. Mobley, 9 Ga. 247, there was a motion made in the court of ordinary to set aside a judgment granting letters of dismission to an administrator, on the ground of fraud. Objection was made to the evidence offered to prove the fraud alleged, on the ground "that fraudulent acts, however flagrant, could not be given in evidence" in a motion to set aside a judgment. In the course of the discussion of this point, Nisbet, J., said: "Fraud in procuring a judgment is ground for its reversal, both in law and equity. It is an irregularity which vacates it. It may be inquired into by the court which rendered the judgment." At common law a motion to set aside a judgment could be predicated upon any irregularity in the judgment, whether appearing in the face of the record or not. Judge McCay said, in Fannin v. Durdin, 54 Ga. 479, that the provisions of our Code were merely declaratory of the common law; but his remarks were said to be obiter dicta in the Case of Regopoulos, supra. Be that as it may, we find that, as early as the case of Mobley v. Mobley, cited from 9 Ga. 247, it was considered proper procedure to vacate a judgment procured by fraud to file a petition addressed to the court wherein the judgment was rendered, distinctly alleging the specific fraud and praying a rule against all the parties interested, to show cause why the judgment should not be set aside. When the rule was served, the court, on the day therein appointed, would proceed to hear evidence relating to the alleged fraud. This practice was approved in Turner v. Jordan, 67 Ga. 604. In the late case of Union Compress Co. v. Leffler, 122 Ga. 640, 50 S. E. 483, it was held: "In a proper proceeding by petition, with rule nisi or process, and service upon the necessary parties, the courts of this state may exercise the jurisdiction, which obtained at common law, to set aside judgments for irregularities not appearing on the face of the record." See, also, Ayer v. James, 120 Ga. 578, 48 S. E. 154. Whether such proceeding be technically a motion to set aside a judgment, or denominated by other appropriate name, it is certainly a proceeding in a court of law, and it would be immaterial to the parties haled into court whether they were cited to appear by a rule issued by the judge, or process in the name of the judge, issued by the clerk.

2. The movant submitted evidence to sustain the truth of the grounds of his motion. He proved that he had a meritorious defense to the ejectment suit, viz., a good prescriptive title. His motion was made at the trial term of the ejectment suit, and he offered instantly to plead and announced ready for trial. The plaintiff in ejectment would not have been delayed, for he could not have had a trial at an earlier term of the court. The movant was diligent, in that he moved instantly upon knowledge that the plaintiff had taken judgment against him in violation of his promise to dismiss the suit. An application to vacate a verdict and judgment is addressed to the sound discretion of the judge, and the court did not err under the evidence submitted in setting aside the verdict and judgment, and reinstating the case.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 319)

SORRELLS v. MATTHEWS.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 15, 1907.)

PARENT AND CHILD—WRONG TO CHILD—ACTION BY PARENT.

A father cannot maintain a suit for a wrong done to his minor child, unless he has incurred a direct pecuniary injury therefrom, by reason of loss of service or expenses necessarily consequent thereon. It follows that, if a teacher of a public school is liable to any one for expelling a pupil therefrom, an action therefor will not lie in favor of the father of the pupil, when he has thereby suffered no direct pecuniary loss.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Randolph County; Moses Wright, Judge.

Action by J. M. Sorrells against C. R. Matthews. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

J. M. Sorrells brought an action against C. R. Matthews, teacher of a public school, for damages in the sum of $300, for expelling the plaintiff's children from the school. The petition was dismissed at the trial term, on a motion in the nature of a general demurrer, and the plaintiff excepted. The substance of the petition was: The defendant contracted with the board of education of Randolph county to teach a public school at Benevolence in that county, for six months, beginning December 1, 1905. He also agreed with the trustees of the Benevolence Academy "to carry on, in conjunction with said public school, a school in said Benevolence Academy extending two months longer than said public school term, and in which other branches were taught than those taught in the public school; and under an arrangement of some sort between the trustees, or between him and said trustees, it was arranged to pay his salary for this extra time by levying an assessment on every pupil who entered said school, regardless of whether entered for the whole or only the public term, at the rate of from five to seven dollars." The plaintiff had three children of school age entitled to enter said public school. The school was opened by the defendant in October or November, 1905, and at the beginning of the public term thereof, when the plaintiff had the right to enter his children, he entered them in said public school, notifying the defendant, at the time, that they were being entered for the public department, and for the public term only, and for the purpose of receiving such advantages alone as the public school afforded. Soon after the children were thus entered, the chairman of the board of trustees of said academy demanded of plaintiff $16, for the assessment levied by said board of trustees on each pupil. The plaintiff "declined to pay the same, and the demand was several times afterwards made on [him] by some member of said local board of trustees, which [he] as often refused to pay." The chairman of the board of trustees then notified the plaintiff that, unless said sum was paid, his children would be sent home. The plaintiff not having paid the amount so illegally exacted, the defendant, about December 18, 1905, "publicly and in the presence of said school, for no other cause or reason than petitioner had refused to yield to said illegal exaction, dismissed, expelled, and sent petitioner's said children home, and afterwards refused to receive them or to teach them in said public school, unless he would pay the assessment imposed upon him by the board of trustees of said academy." The defendant, in expelling plaintiff's children, acted with full knowledge that neither the trustees nor he had any right to make such assessments and to refuse to receive them back in school, and "the acts of said Matthews in said matter were arbitrary, wilful, and malicious." In order to have his children restored to the school, it was necessary for the plaintiff to mandamus the county board of education, and by this means the children were put back in the school on January 18, 1906. The plaintiff, "by reason of the loss of time from said school by his said children and the expense of having to pay attorney's fees, * * * was injured, and by the wrong and humiliation put upon his unoffending children [he] was humiliated and his feelings greatly wounded. Besides this the action of said Matthews put him in the attitude of one who refused to pay his obligations, and the acts of said Matthews were willfully and maliciously designed to put him in that false light before the public, and by such acts petitioner says that he has been injured and damaged in the sum aforesaid."

W. C. Worrell and M. O. Edwards, for plaintiff in error. Powell & Pottle, for defendant in error.

FISH, C. J. (after stating the facts as above). One ground of the motion to dismiss the petition was that it set forth no right of action in the plaintiff. In our opinion this ground was well taken, and therefore the necessity of dealing with any other question raised by the record is obviated. In no case can a father maintain an action for a wrong done to his minor child, unless the father has incurred some direct pecuniary injury therefrom, in consequence of loss of service, or expense necessarily consequent thereon. Bell v. Wooten, 53 Ga. 684; Central Railroad Co. v. Brinson, 64 Ga. 475; Frazier v. Georgia Railroad Co., 101 Ga. 70, 28 S. E. 684; Hurst v. Goodwin, 114 Ga. 586, 40 S. E. 764, 88 Am. St. Rep. 43. Civ. Code 1895, § 8816, providing that "every person may recover for torts committed to himself, or his wife, or his child, or his ward, or his servant," is merely declaratory of the common law. Frazier v. Georgia Railroad Co., 101 Ga. 70, 28 S. E. 684. At common law the parent's right to recover for a tort to his minor child is, by legal fiction, predicated upon the relation of master and servant. Frazier v. Georgia Railroad Co., 101 Ga. 70, 28 S. E. 684, and cases cited. In Spear v. Cummings, 23 Pick. (Mass.) 224, 34 Am. Dec. 53, it was held that "the teacher of a town school is not liable to any action by a parent, for refusing to instruct his children." This ruling was put upon the ground that there is no privity of contract between the parent and the teacher; the latter being responsible on his contract only to the town by which he is employed and paid. In Sherman v. Charlestown, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 161, Shaw, C. J., referring to the case just cited, in which he also delivered the opinion, said that the court were of opinion, among other reasons, that the action was misconceived, "because the father is not the person injured and entitled to recover damages in his own right." In Stephenson v. Hall, 14 Barb. (N. Y.) 222, it was held that an action will not lie in behalf of a parent, against the town superintendents of public schools, for expelling and excluding the plaintiff's minor child from the common schools, nor for damages sustained by the parent in bringing an appeal to the state superintendent of common schools, to get such child reinstated in the schools. In the opinion in that case, Allen, J., used this language: "Can it be said that the plaintiff has an interest as well as a right to have his daughter in the school, that by reason of the education she was receiving she was being prepared to render herself more useful, and that her services during her minority would thus become more valuable to her parent? This would be carrying the doctrine much too far, in my opinion, in order to sustain an action of this kind, an action clearly not to be favored, unless in support of an undoubted principle of law." In Donahoe v. Richards, 38 Me. 376, it was held that the parent of a child expelled from a public school by order of the superintending school committee can maintain no action against the members of the committee for such expulsion. In delivering the opinion, Appleton, J., said: "In this case, there is no act done by which the ability of the child to render service is diminished. The school is for her benefit and instruction. The education is given to her; and, if wrongfully deprived thereof, the loss of such deprivation falls on her. The wrong committed, the injury done, is done to her alone, and, if her rights have been violated, she alone is entitled to compensation." So, in Boyd v. Blaisdell, 15 Ind. 73, where the plaintiff sued the school trustees of a township for refusing admission to his children into a district school in such township, it was held that the plaintiff could not maintain the action, as the parent can only sue for such injuries to his child as occasion loss of service. For all other injuries the child must sue.

All the cases cited, holding that a parent cannot recover for the expulsion of his child from a public school, were not put upon the common-law doctrine (Hall v. Hollander, 4 Barn. & Cress. 660, 5 East, 45; Flemington v. Smithers, 2 Carr. & Payne, 292-578; Fraser v. Georgia Railroad Co., 101 Ga. 70, 28 S. E. 684, and citations) that a parent cannot maintain an action for an injury to his child which does not result in loss of service, or cause expense to the parent. We have been able to find only one reported case out of harmony with this rule, viz., Roe v. Deming, 21 Ohio St. 666, where it was held: "The father of a child entitled to the benefits of the public school of the subdistrict of his residence may maintain an action against the teacher of the school and the local directors of the subdistrict for damages for wrongfully expelling the child from the school." There was no further opinion rendered, and no authority cited. We do not agree to the soundness of this dictum. Counsel for plaintiff in error cites the case of Board of Education of Cartersville v. Purse, 101 Ga. 422, 28 S. E. 896, 41 L. R. A. 593, 65 Am. St. Rep. 312, admitting, however, that "the Purse Case did not decide the question involved here, but [contending] the analogous line of reasoning would establish the soundness of our contention." In that case it was held that a board of education having the charge and control of a system of free schools established by law and supported by taxation has the right to suspend from attendance upon school children whose parent, in undertaking to interfere with the discipline of a teacher over one of the children, enters the schoolroom of such teacher, during school hours, and, in the presence of the assembled pupils, is guilty of conduct toward such teacher which is subversive of the discipline of the school. The line of reasoning in the opinion in that case, delivered by Mr. Justice Cobb, led to the conclusion that "it would be contrary to the policy of our law, based as it is upon the common law, to bestow upon the child in the matter of its education any right independent of the parent." From this, counsel argues that it follows that, when a child is wrongfully expelled from a public school, the right of action for such expulsion is in the parent, and not in the child. But the very opinion upon which counsel relies recognizes that there is a right of action in a child for his wanton and malicious expulsion or exclusion from a public school, in which he has been lawfully entered by his parent, and authorities to this effect are there cited. On page 444 of 101 Ga., page 904 of 28 S. E. (41 L. R. A. 593, 65 Am. St. Rep. 312), the learned justice said: "While it is the act of the parent or guardian which places the child in the school and puts him in a position where he can obtain the benefits of the system, this does not prevent a duty from arising on the part of the school authorities towards the child to abstain from unlawful conduct which would deprive the child of the benefit which the act of the parent has secured to him. The moment the child is placed in school this duty arises. A breach of this duty will be a tort for which the child can recover in a proper action against the person wantonly and maliciously depriving him of the benefits which he would receive from the school. * * * Out of this breach of duty damage arises to the parent, as well as to the child. The parent therefore has the right to appeal to the courts to compel the child to be admitted or reinstated, as the case may be, and also to appeal to the courts by his action for damages for the amount which he would be required to expend in the education of his child. This child would also have a right against the individual thus wantonly and maliciously depriving him of the benefit which is secured to him by the law in the event the parent sees proper to enter him in the school." The same learned justice, in the opinion rendered in Hurst v. Goodwin, 114 Ga. 585, 40 S. E. 764, 88 Am. St. Rep. 43, said: "It does not, however, follow that the right of action for injuries of every character to a minor child is in the father alone. If the injury is one from which the father does not sustain any damage—that is, which does not destroy or impair the ability of the child to render services to the father—there is no right of action in the father for the wrong done the child." In the case with which we are dealing, if, under the facts alleged, a right of action existed, it was in the children, not in the father, and it is their right, not his, which he is seeking to exercise in his own behalf. He makes no claim for money expended in the education of his children, in consequence of their expulsion from the public school. Indeed, his petition indicates that he spent no money for this purpose, as it shows that they were only out of the school about a month, during which time he was trying to get them reinstated therein. There is no allegation that he was put to any other expense by reason of their being expelled from the school. It is true that it is alleged that by reason of his having to pay attorney's fees he was injured, but what he paid such fees for is not alleged, nor the amount which he paid, nor that they were reasonable, nor whether the fees referred to were in the present case or in some other. Of course, in no event could he recover any attorney's fees for which he became liable in a case in which he sets out no cause of action.

The petition was properly dismissed upon the demurrer.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 248)

ADAMS et al. v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 13, 1907.)

CRIMINAL LAW — CONFESSIONS — ADMISSIONS BEFORE CORONER'S JURY.

Where the body of a man apparently murdered was found by the roadside, and two persons were arrested and placed in jail charged with the murder, and were subsequently taken thence in custody before the coroner's jury summoned to hold an inquest on the body, and, without being informed that they were not compelled to testify, were sworn and examined as witnesses, not on their motion, but on that of the coroner or the jury, in regard to the homicide and their connection with it, on a subsequent trial under an indictment charging them with murder, confessions or inculpatory statements elicited on their examination before the coroner's jury were not admissible against them.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 1185.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Haralson County; Price Edwards, Judge.

B. G. Adams and Hillard Lee were convicted of murder, and bring error. Reversed.

Griffith & Matthews, for plaintiffs in error. W. K. Fielder, Sol. Gen., and Jno. C. Hart, Atty. Gen., for the State.

LUMPKIN, J. B. G. Adams and Hillard Lee were jointly indicted for the murder of Reece Jones. They were found guilty and sentenced to life imprisonment. They made a motion for a new trial, which was overruled, and they excepted. The motion contained, besides the general grounds, numerous others which were added by amendment. Most of these require no discussion further than to say that they are without merit. As to others, if there were some slight inaccuracies of expression in detached portions of the charge, when taken in connection with the entire charge, they will scarcely require a new trial. In one part of the charge the presiding judge used the expression: "Yet if the evidence was not strong enough to exclude every reasonable hypothesis of murder or the claim of murder," etc. In a case depending upon circumstantial evidence it is every other reasonable hypothesis save that of the guilt of the accused which must be excluded, not "every reasonable hypothesis of murder or the claim of murder." Such an inadvertence in expression will doubtless not occur again.

One ground of the motion for a new trial requires a reversal. It appears that the body of the deceased was found beside the public road, and evidence of a circumstantial character was introduced to show that he was killed by the defendant. After the body was found, an inquest was held. The defendants had been arrested and placed in jail, charged with the murder of the deceased. They were taken from jail in custody of the sheriff and sworn and examined as witnesses before the coroner's jury. They were not informed that they were not compelled to testify, and were examined after all parties had been excluded from the room where the inquest was being held. On their trial in the superior court under the indictment, two members of the coroner's jury were allowed, over objection, to testify to what the defendants had sworn as witnesses at the inquest, including certain inculpatory statements. The ruling just stated was erroneous. Pen. Code 1895, § 1006, declares that: "To make a confession admissible, it must have been made voluntarily, without being induced by another, by the slightest hope of benefit or remotest fear of injury." Among the powers of a coroner's jury is that of declaring whether the person upon whose body the inquest is held came to his death by murder; and, if so, who were the principals and who were the accessories. Pen. Code 1895, § 1262. If the inquest discloses facts which lead or may lead to the prosecution of any person for the homicide, the coroner shall issue a warrant for the arrest of the person suspected of the homicide, returnable as other warrants. Pen. Code 1895, § 1264. "In all criminal trials, the prisoner shall have the right to make to the court and jury such statement in the case as he may deem proper in his defense. It shall not be under oath, and shall have such force only as the jury may think right to give it." Pen. Code 1895, § 1010. In a court of inquiry the defendant is permitted to make his own statement of the transaction, not under oath, if he desires so to do. Pen. Code 1895, § 910. The spirit of the law is that one accused of crime shall not be required to be put under oath, and thus to be placed in the dilemma of either being required to testify as a witness against himself, or being subject to the penalties of false swearing. His right to speak, not under oath, is a statutory privilege, and it is not lawful to require him to be sworn as a witness against himself. Where a coroner's jury has been summoned to hold an inquest over the body of a deceased person who appears to have been murdered, and another has been arrested and is held in custody, accused of the crime, he is not formally upon trial, but substantially he is so, and the crime for which he has been arrested, as well as his connection with it, is the subject of investigation. For the coroner, or other officer representing the state to bring him forward as a witness under such circumstances, require him to be sworn, and demand of him under oath to testify as to his own guilt or innocence, is in violation of the spirit, if not the letter, of the statute. If he should decline to be sworn at all, or to answer questions, he must know that the effect would be disastrous to him. It is not a case where one may lawfully be called as a witness generally, but where, if certain questions are put to him, he may claim his privilege. It is a case where the accused ought not to be sworn at all. It may be that there is nothing in the fact of an arrest alone which will make a voluntary confession of a party under arrest inadmissible; or, if one voluntarily makes a confession or inculpatory statement before a magistrate, this alone may not render it inadmissible; or, as suggested above, where it is lawful to swear a person as a witness, so that the general examination of him is proper, but if the witness is asked certain questions he may claim his privilege, the administration of an oath may not alone render a confession voluntarily made inadmissible on a subsequent trial. But we think there can be no doubt that, where it is unlawful to require the accused to be sworn as a witness, to do so, and to draw out of him, by questions, confessions, or inculpatory statements under oath is improper, and such statements are not admissible against him, if he is subsequently tried for the offense involved.

In Cicero v. State, 54 Ga. 156, it was said: "A magistrate has no right to examine a defendant for the purpose of obtaining from him contradictory statements." Before a confession is admissible in evidence, it must appear prima facie that it was freely and voluntarily made. If the contrary appears, it is inadmissible. If the evidence for the state makes out a prima facie case for the admission of such a confession, the court is not bound, before admitting it, to hear evidence on behalf of the accused, tending to show coercion or improper inducement in its procurement. If the evidence for the state shows the confession to be admissible, it will be admitted. If the defendant desires to introduce evidence to show that there was improper inducement which caused the confession to be made, he can do so, and it will then be for the jury to determine, under all the evidence, whether or not the confession was free and voluntary. Irby v. State, 95 Ga. 467, 20 S. E. 218; Dawson v. State, 59 Ga. 333; Smith v. State, 88 Ga. 627, 15 S. E. 675. As to inculpatory statements, or even statements seeking to place the crime upon another, see Fuller v. State, 109 Ga. 809, 35 S. E. 298. In Inman v. State, 72 Ga. 269, no question was raised as to the admissibility of evidence, but exception was taken to the charge of the court as to the credit to be given to sworn statements of a person as a witness before a coroner's jury, when subsequently introduced in evidence (apparently without objection) on his trial for murder. Counsel for the state in the present case relied on the case of Woolfolk v. State, 81 Ga. 551 (6), 562, 8 S. E. 724. It will be observed that there the court dealt with two matters together: First, that testimony was allowed in relation to the coroner's requiring the defendant, during the progress of the inquest, to remove his clothing, whereby certain blood stains were disclosed on his person; and, second, certain statements of the defendant which were made during the investigation. The first point was the one principally considered. In regard to the second point, it was stated, in the opinion (page 562 of 81 Ga. and page 728 of 8 S. E.) that: "So far as this record discloses, the statements made by the defendant were perfectly voluntary and not under oath." This distinguishes the Woolfolk Case from that now under consideration. In Green v. State, 124 Ga. 344, 52 S. E. 431, it was held that the objection to showing the statement which the defendant had made at the coroner's inquest was without merit, where the record did not disclose any evidence of compulsion, or that the statement proved by such testimony was not freely and voluntarily made. In the opinion (page 346 of 124 Ga., and page 432 of 52 S. E.) it was stated that: "There was no error in admitting the testimony complained of in the first ground of the amendment to the motion for a new trial; it not appearing from the record that the accused was under oath when she made her statement during the coroner's inquest." A sentence in the opinion should perhaps be mentioned, lest it might be subject to be misunderstood hereafter. It was said that: "As it does not appear from the record in the case at bar that the incriminating statement of the accused was not voluntarily made, and the burden being upon her to show such fact, if it was a fact (Eberhart v. State, 47 Ga. 599), her failure so to do renders her objection to the testimony without merit." It was not intended by this to conflict with the rulings in Irby v. State and Dawson v. State, supra. In the Eberhart Case, one ground of the motion for a new trial was because the court erred in allowing the confessions of the defendant and of one Spann to go to the jury without a preliminary examination, and without proof that they were freely and voluntarily made. In a note to this ground, the court stated that during the examination of the same witness on the trial of Spann, on the preceding day, in regard to the same confessions, he had thoroughly examined the witnesses as to the character of such confessions, and had fully satisfied himself that they were freely and voluntarily made, without the slightest hope of benefit or the remotest fear of injury; that during the trial of the prisoner no objection was made by counsel on this ground, and the attention of the court was not called to the fact. In the opinion the failure to object was emphasized. It was said that: "We incline to think that, if objected to, it would have been the duty of the state to show the circumstances under which they were made, that the court might see if they were voluntary. * * * If they are given in and not objected to, it is too late after verdict to say that there was not a sufficient inquiry into the circumstances." The language of the seventh headnote is too broad, standing alone. It must be construed in the light of the question before the court.

In many cases it has been held, where a person, under arrest accused of a crime connected with the death of the person on whose body the inquest is held, is called as a witness before the jury, not of his own motion or volition, that sworn confessions so obtained are not considered voluntary, and cannot be used against the witness in a subsequent prosecution of him. Different courts have assigned different reasons for this exclusion, and have advanced different theories on the subject. Some have based it upon the letter or spirit of statutes. Others, without regard to statutes, have declared that confessions so obtained are not voluntary. In Wharton's Crim. Ev. (9th Ed.) § 664, after stating that a confession, though made under oath, if not procured or induced by compulsion or undue influence, is admissible, it is added: "And, as we will presently see, when the defendant is in custody under charge of crime, and is then sworn and questioned by the examining magistrate, his answers thus compelled cannot afterwards be put in evidence against him." In section 668, it is said: "But the testimony of the accused party, taken as such, is not admissible, when such accused party is put on his oath and sworn, and examined, not on his own motion, but on the motion of the prosecution. This rule is founded upon the unreliable as well as the inquisitorial character of such statements; and therefore where a man, having been arrested by a constable, without a warrant, upon suspicion of having committed murder, was compelled to answer under oath as a witness at the coroner's inquest, it was held that the statements thus made by him were not admissible against him on his trial for the murder. The same rule obtains where the defendant is compelled to answer under oath questions by the committing magistrate." See, also, 1 Greenleaf on Ev. § 225. An elaborate discussion of the subject and of leading cases on both sides will be found in 1 Wigmore on Ev. §§ 842-852, and note to section 852. See, also, 1 Bish. Crim. Proc. (4th Ed.) §§ 1255, 1256. In Hendrickson v. People, 10 N. Y. 13, 61 Am. Dec. 721, it was held that, on a trial for murder, statements made by a person as a witness at a coroner's inquest upon the body of the deceased, before the witness had been charged with the murder, and before it was ascertained that a murder had been committed, were admissible in evidence against him. Selden and Allen, JJ., dissented. In the opinion numerous decisions were discussed. In People v. McMahon, 15 N. Y. 384, the prisoner had been arrested by a constable, without a warrant, on suspicion of being the murderer of his wife. The constable took him before the coroner, who was holding an inquest on the body of the murdered woman.

The coroner swore him and examined him as a witness. It was held that his evidence thus given before the coroner was not admissible on the prisoner's trial for the murder. The opinion was prepared by Selden, J., who had formerly filed a dissenting opinion in the Hendrickson Case. It was learned and interesting, but much that was said extended beyond the ruling actually made, and it has given rise to no little discussion since. In Teachout v. People, 41 N. Y. 7, the two preceding cases were considered, and it was held that: "Statements made by the prisoner, under oath, at a coroner's inquest upon the body, are admissible against him upon his trial for the murder, although he knew, at the time he was sworn, that it was suspected the deceased was poisoned, and that he himself would probably be arrested for the crime, and was informed by the coroner that rumors implicated him, and that he had a right to refuse to testify." A distinction was made between one who was merely suspected of the crime, and one who had been arrested and stood before the coroner's jury as substantially a party charged with the crime, and who was subjected to examination on oath. In People v. Mondon, 103 N. Y. 211, 8 N. E. 496, 57 Am. Rep. 709, this distinction was again recognized. In People v. Chapleau, 121 N. Y. 286, 24 N. E. 469, the person who had been arrested, charged with the crime of murder, desired to go before the coroner's jury and make a statement, and, after being duly informed that his depositions might be used against him, elected to be sworn, and asked to be allowed to testify. It was held that, under the then existing statute, his statement was admissible in evidence against him on a subsequent trial for murder. In that case the preceding rulings were treated as harmonious, which has called forth from Prof. Wigmore a somewhat satirical comment. 1 Wig. Ev. § 852, note 1, supra. See, also, Wilson v. State, 110 Ala. 1, 20 South. 415, 55 Am. St. Rep. 17; State v. Clifford, 86 Iowa, 550, 53 N. W. 299, 41 Am. St. Rep. 518 and note; Farkas v. State, 60 Miss. 347; State v. O'Brien, 18 Mont. 1, 43 Pac. 1091, 44 Pac. 399; State v. Broughton, 7 Ired. (N. C.) 96, 45 Am. Dec. 507.

The case of Davis v. State, 122 Ga. 564, 50 S. E. 376, is readily distinguishable from the one at bar. There, on an investigation before a grand jury, founded on an indictment against certain parties, another person was examined as a witness. Apparently there was some suspicion of his being connected with the crime, but in the report it does not appear that he was under arrest. He was warned of his privilege not to testify to anything tending to criminate him. He nevertheless voluntarily answered a question. It was held admissible, when he was afterwards indicted and tried, to prove what he said and his manner while testifying.

If there were any irregularities in regard to one of the jurors, or in regard to certain expressions in the charge, as claimed, they will probably not occur again.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 246)

BROWN v. BROWN.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 12, 1907.)

1. DIVORCE—CRUEL TREATMENT.

Cruel treatment, as a ground for divorce, is "the willful infliction of pain, bodily or mental, upon the complaining party, such as reasonably justifies an apprehension of danger to life, limb or health. * * * The intention to wound is a necessary element of the cruel treatment for which a divorce is allowed."

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 17, Divorce, § 62.]

2. SAME.

Where acts of cruelty have been condoned by subsequent cohabitation, such acts will not be revived as a ground for divorce, except by fresh acts of cruelty.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 17, Divorce, §§ 185, 188.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Turner County; W. N. Spence, Judge.

Action by Sarah Brown against W. O. Brown. Judgment of nonsuit, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Sarah Brown filed her libel for divorce against her husband, W. O. Brown, on the ground of cruel treatment. In support of her allegations, the libellant testified: "I and the defendant, W. O. Brown, have both been residents of Wilcox county three years before the filing of suit. I married W. O. Brown on the 16th day of July, 1908, and lived with him until the 19th day of May, 1905, at which time we separated. During the time that we lived together I performed, on my part, all the duties incident to the marital relation. During the time that we lived together W. O. Brown was strong and healthy and able to work, and could have secured remunerative work, but he worked very little, and failed to provide reasonable food and clothing and other necessities of life for me during the continuance of marital relation. He cursed at me several times, and on two occasions prior to our separation he threatened to strike and whip me. The first time was a year or more before our separation. I was in the house, and he was on the outside, when he, while in the yard, said he would whip me, and he then came into the room, but did not strike me, and said nothing more. He said while out in the yard he was going to whip me and leave the country. By reason of his threat towards me I was apprehensive that he would strike me, but he didn't do so. I continued to live with W. O. Brown as his wife, notwithstanding his treatment of me, believing that he would reform his conduct; but, becoming convinced that there would be no reformation, I separated from him on May 19, 1905, and have not since lived with him as his wife. W. O. Brown had no property when the libel for divorce was filed, nor did I." At the conclusion of her testimony, the court granted a nonsuit, and she sued out a bill of exceptions complaining of the judgment of nonsuit.

Hal Lawson, for plaintiff in error. T. O. Wells, for defendant in error.

EVANS, J. (after stating the facts as above). In the case of Ring v. Ring, 118 Ga. 183, 44 S. E. 861, 62 L. R. A. 878, Candler, J., after a very lucid discussion and analysis of the prior adjudications of this court, defined cruel treatment, within the meaning of Civ. Code 1896, § 2427, which provides that such treatment, to be a ground for divorce, shall be "the willful infliction of pain, bodily or mental, upon the complaining party, such as reasonably justifies an apprehension of danger to life, limb or health. * * * The intention to wound is a necessary element of the cruel treatment for which a divorce is allowed." The majority of the court concurred in this exposition of the meaning of the term "cruel treatment," as used in our divorce statute. While the writer was upon the superior court bench, he observed a tendency to extend and apply this ground for divorce to many trivial circumstances happening in the domestic relation as sufficient to dissolve the marital tie. Slight disagreements, and words inspired by transitory temper, were never intended by the statute as cause for setting aside a marriage contract. The testimony of the plaintiff shows her husband was not a very industrious man, and he may not have provided her with what she considered a reasonable support. About a year before the separation he cursed libellant, and threatened to whip her. That she considered this threat to be a mere exhibition of temper, and that no bodily harm was apprehended, is shown by her remaining with him for a year thereafter. No immediate provocation was given for the separation, and when the libellant formulated her grounds for divorce she seized upon a sally of temper, which had been condoned by a year's cohabitation. Condonation is a conditional forgiveness of all antecedent acts of cruelty, and such acts as may have been condoned will not be revived except by fresh acts of cruelty. Odom v. Odom, 36 Ga. 286. What constitutes cruel treatment in the meaning of the law is a question of law for the court. Gholston v. Gholston, 81 Ga. 628. So important to society and the moral tone of a community is the preservation of the relation voluntarily entered into by husband and wife that judges should not permit a severance of that relation where the testimony fails to show that the complaining party is not entitled to a divorce under any ground recognized by law. Indeed, the statute makes it the duty of the judge to see that the grounds are legal, and sustained by proof. Civ. Code 1895, § 2455. In this case the testimony did not make a case of cruel treatment, as defined in Ring v. Ring, and a nonsuit was properly granted.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 314)

J. A. FAY & EAGAN CO. v. T. J. DUDLEY & SONS.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 15, 1907.)

1. SALE—WARRANTY.

When a known, described, and definite article is ordered of a manufacturer, although it be stated by the purchaser that it is required for a particular purpose, yet if a known, described, and definite thing, which is of the kind and quality called for by the order, be actually supplied, there is no warranty that it shall answer the particular purpose intended by the buyer.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 43, Sales, § 773.]

2. SAME—RETENTION OF ARTICLE SOLD.

When the written contract for the sale of an article provides that the retention of the article for a given time after the date of shipment shall constitute a trial and acceptance, and be a conclusive admission of the truth of all warranties, the mere fact that within the time stipulated notice of dissatisfaction has been given to the seller, but notwithstanding the article has been retained, will not have the effect to relieve the buyer from the force of the terms of the written contract.

3. SAME—NEW CONTRACT—CONSIDERATION.

The alleged new agreement between the plaintiff and defendant in reference to the machine was entirely lacking in consideration, and could not be the basis of any liability on the part of the plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 43, Sales, § 259.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Muscogee County; W. A. Little, Judge.

Action by J. A. Fay & Eagan Company against T. J. Dudley & Sons. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

J. A. Fay & Eagan Company, a corporation, brought suit against Dudley & Sons, a partnership, upon an account. The bill of particulars was as follows: "T. J. Dudley & Sons, to J. A. Fay & Eagan Co., Dr. June 28, 1901. Shop No. 58,289. One No. 6 latest improved tenoner, with double upper and lower tenoning heads and bits, upper and lower cope heads and bits, left off but with copy spindles, T X L pulleys 16" diameter, net $800.00 f. o. b. Columbus. 1901, August 28th. By cash, $400.00. Bal. due Oct. 28th, 1901, $400.00."

An amendment to the petition alleged that the machine referred to in the bill of particulars was sold and delivered under the terms of a written contract, a copy of which is exhibited. The contract is as follows: "Columbus, Ga., March 16, 1901. J. A. Fay & Eagan Co., Wood Working Machinery, Cincinnati, Ohio. Subject to strikes, accidents, or other delays beyond your control, deliver f. o. b.

Columbus, Ga., April 7th, 1901, one latest improved double end tenoner—No. 6 double upper and lower tenoning head bits, upper and lower cope heads and bits left off, but with cope spindles. One second-hand Buck blind stile mortise and borer, with bits to mortise and bore 5/16" mortise and hole, and to be suitable for small stationary slats, if necessary, as small as 5/8"x3/32" mortise. One Fay No. 3 saw mandrel, pulley between bearings and mandrel turned to 1" where saw goes. (No extension device necessary.) One second-hand Fay sash sticker with boring attachment (second-hand list No. 920) with boring but and set of knives, mandrel 1" to suit head you have; you to send a wire to confirm this diameter. For which agree to pay nine hundred and seventy-eight dollars with exchange. The purchaser agrees to make settlement within thirty days after date of shipment, and to then evidence all payments due at a later date, by notes bearing date of shipment and interest. In case payment is divided to be made as follows: $490 cash on arrival. $488 in four months with 6 per cent. interest. Title to machine to remain with us till paid for; you to sign agreement to this effect. It is agreed that title to the property mentioned above shall remain in the consignor until fully paid for in cash; and that this contract is not modified or added to by any agreement not expressly stated herein; and that a retention of the property forwarded, after thirty days from date of shipment, shall constitute a trial and acceptance, be a conclusive admission of the truth of all representations made by or for the consignor, and void all its contracts of warranty express or implied. It is further agreed that the purchaser shall keep the property fully insured for the benefit of the J. A. Fay & Eagan Company"—signed by the parties.

The defendants filed an answer in which they denied all liability. The answer also alleged that the defendants were in need of a machine of the character described in the contract, and the plaintiff sold the machine and warranted it to be the latest improved double-headed tenoner and suited for the purposes intended, such purpose being the manufacture of doors, sash, blinds, and furniture, and this was known to the plaintiff. Plaintiff guaranteed that the machine would do the work required, that it was properly constructed, and that it would last for many years. The price agreed on was $800; one-half to be paid on arrival, and the balance in four months, with interest, and the title to remain in the plaintiff until paid for. On June 28, 1901, the machine was shipped to the defendants, and upon its arrival $400 was paid to the plaintiff, and the machine installed in the shops of the defendants. In doing so, they relied upon the warranty and representations of plaintiff that the machine was as represented. After a thorough trial and test it was discovered that it was not as represented, was not properly constructed, and would not do the work, nor was it suitable for the purposes intended. Plaintiff was at once notified of the defects, and defendants offered to return the same upon repayment of the amounts that had been paid. Relying upon the representations, the defendants installed the machine and intended to use it, and in consequence thereof have been compelled to pay out various sums of money for freight and other expenses, amounting, in the aggregate, to more than $500. Defendants have repeatedly offered to return the machine, and still offer to do so. It is alleged that the defendants have been damaged in the sum set forth in the pleadings, and it is prayed that this amount be recouped and judgment in their favor be rendered. In an amendment to the answer it is alleged that the machine was received about July 20, 1901, and as soon as it was placed in position it was discovered that the heads of the tenon machine were cracked, and notice in writing was given to the plaintiff to this effect, and after this defect was repaired, the machine was put in operation, and it failed to do the work for which it was intended. Defendants made every effort to induce plaintiff to repair the machine, the defects of which were specifically pointed out, and repeatedly offered to return the machine upon the repayment of the money which had been advanced, and plaintiff promised that it would make the necessary changes. Finally, in December, 1902, plaintiff and defendants agreed that the defendants should return the machine to plaintiff, who would put it in perfect order, supply such new parts as were necessary, the plaintiff to pay the freight both ways, and that on the return of the machine the defendants were to set it up and operate it, and after a test of 30 days, if the machine was all right, the defendants were to pay the plaintiff the balance of $400; otherwise, the defendants would not accept the machine. In pursuance of this agreement on or about January 10, 1903, the machine was shipped to plaintiff, who, after keeping it about three months, returned it to the defendants. The defendants installed it and attempted to operate it, when it was ascertained that it would not do the work for which it was intended. The defects in the machine are pointed out in the answer, and it is alleged that the plaintiff was notified that the machine was not satisfactory and did not comply with the terms of the agreement, and that the defendants would neither accept it nor pay for it. The trial resulted in a verdict for the defendants. The plaintiff made a motion for a new trial, which being overruled, it excepted.

Goethius & Chappell, for plaintiff in error. J. H. Martin and A. W. Cozart, for defendants in error.

COBB, P. J. (after stating the facts as above). 1. The contract was in writing.

There is no claim that the contract, as it appears in the writing, was the result of any fraud, accident, or mistake. It was free from ambiguity. The parties must therefore stand or fall by the terms of that instrument. It was an agreement to sell a machine of a certain description and a certain character. In a contract for the sale of goods, words of description of the subject-matter of the sale are ordinarily to be regarded as simply a warranty that the goods delivered shall be of the character described in the contract. Henderson Elevator Co. v. North Ga. Mill Co., 126 Ga. 279, 55 S. E. 50. Hence there was a warranty, on the part of the sellers, that the machine delivered would be of the kind and character described in the contract. There was nothing in the contract warranting that the machine would do a particular work, or work of a given character. The mere silence of the contract on this question would not be sufficient to open the door to parol evidence. In Seitz v. Brewers' Refrigerating Mach. Co., 141 U. S. 510, 12 Sup. Ct. 46, 35 L. Ed. 837, it was held that where a known, described, and definite article is ordered of a manufacturer, although it be stated by the purchaser to be required for a particular purpose, yet, if the known, described, and definite thing be actually supplied, there is no warranty that it will answer the particular purpose intended by the buyer. In that case the contract was an agreement to sell "a No. 2 size refrigerating machine, as constructed by the said party of the first part." The defendant attempted to set up, as a defense, that prior to the execution of the contract the agent of the plaintiff had represented that the machine would cool 150,000 cubic feet to 40 degrees Fahrenheit, and it was held that this could not be considered, for the reason that it violated the terms of the written contract, that the contract described the machine, that there was nothing in the description in reference to the work it would do, and that that which was attempted to be proved as a representation of the plaintiff was itself a new description of the machine and in conflict with the terms of the instrument. In the present case, the contract being for the sale and delivery of a machine manufactured by the plaintiff and described in the contract, if a machine of that character was delivered, the plaintiff complied with its part of the contract, and the defendants would be compelled to perform their part. It was therefore error to admit in evidence the representations as to the work that would be done by the machine, made by the agent at the time that negotiations were pending and before the written contract was entered into.

2. The contract provided that the retention of the property, "after thirty days from date of shipment, shall constitute a trial and acceptance, be a conclusive admission of the truth of all representations made by or for the consignor, and void all contracts of warranty, express or implied." There was no provision in the contract that notice from the defendants to the plaintiffs that they were dissatisfied with the machine, and that the machine did not comply with the terms of the contract, should interfere with the distinct agreement above referred to, resulting from the mere retention of the machine. It may be that this was a very unreasonable stipulation, but the parties have made their own contract, and they must abide by its terms. If the defendant retained the machine during the time referred to in the above stipulation in the contract, such retention amounted to an admission that the representations made by or for the plaintiff were true and avoided all warranties. Unreasonable stipulations of a similar character to the one now under consideration appear in numerous contracts; but it has been uniformly held that the parties must abide by the terms of their contract in the absence of fraud, accident, or mistake. See, in this connection, International Harvester Co. v. Dillon, 128 Ga. 872, 55 S. E. 1034; McCormick Harvesting Machine Co. v. Allison, 116 Ga. 445, 42 S. E. 778.

3. But it is said that, even though the defendants would not be allowed to enter any of their defenses to the original contract, there has been a new agreement, and that the plaintiff has not complied with the terms of the new agreement, and that the damages resulting to the defendants from its failure so to comply are subject to be set off against the plaintiff's demand for the balance due on the purchase money of the machine. Under this alleged new agreement, the defendants were to return the machine to the plaintiff, who was to make certain changes therein, and then ship the same back to the defendants, the plaintiff to pay the freight each way, and then, if the machine was satisfactory, the balance of the purchase money was to be paid. The plaintiff was not to receive one cent in addition to the original purchase price of the machine, but was to go to the expense of making repairs and pay the freight both ways. There was no consideration for this agreement. It was purely a voluntary undertaking on the part of the plaintiff. At the time when it was made, the plaintiff was in a position where it could have demanded the balance due on the purchase money, and the defendants, under the new agreement, were under obligation to do no more than what they would be already compelled to do; that is, to pay the balance of the purchase money.

We will not undertake to deal with all the assignments of error on the different instructions of the judge, as it will sufficiently appear, from what has been said, in what particulars we deem the instructions appropriate as well as those we deem erroneous.

A new trial should have been granted.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 309)

STERLING v. PARK.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 15, 1907.)

DEED—DELIVERY—PARTIES.

One who signs, seals, and delivers a deed, though not named therein as a grantor, is still bound as a grantor, and the deed is operative as a conveyance of his estate.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 16, Deeds, § 61.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Troup County; R. W. Freeman, Judge.

Action by R. E. Park against M. L. Sterling. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant brings error. Affirmed.

F. M. Longley, for plaintiff in error. Hatton Lovejoy and Frank Harwell, for defendant in error.

EVANS, J. The various assignments of error raise but one question: Is it essential that a person who signs, seals, and delivers a deed should be mentioned in the body of the deed, to be bound by it, and to make it an operative conveyance of his estate in the land? The case in hand was a complaint for land, and one of the plaintiff's muniments of title was a deed in which M. C. Huntley was named as grantor, and R. E. Park as grantee, and which purported to convey, for a valuable consideration, a described lot of land in fee simple. The deed was signed and sealed by M. C. Huntley, W. H. Huntley, and the defendant. Neither W. H. Huntley nor the defendant was named in it as grantor. At the time the deed was executed, the title to the land was in M. C. Huntley for life, with remainder to the others who signed the deed. The plaintiff's contention is that the deed is operative and effective as a conveyance of the estate which each maker, signer, had in the land; while, on the other hand, the defendant contends that, as she was not named in the deed as grantor, it is not an operative conveyance of her estate in remainder.

The point in the case has been before many courts of last resort; and there is much contrariety of opinion on the subject. We believe the rule to be that one who signs, seals, and delivers a deed, in which he is not named as grantor, is nevertheless bound by these acts as a grantor. We think an examination into the origin and reason of the contrary doctrine will demonstrate the correctness of our conclusion. At common law a deed is defined to be a writing, sealed and delivered by the parties. Coke's Lit. 171; 2 Bl. Com. 295. Lord Coke said: "There have been eight formall or orderly parts of a deed of feofment, viz.: (1) The premises of the deed implied by Littleton; (2) the habendum, whereof Littleton here speaketh; (3) the tenendum, mentioned by Littleton; (4) the reddendum; (5) the clause of warrantie; (6) the in cuius rei testimonium, comprehending the sealing; (7) the date of the deed, containing the day, the month, the yeare and stlle of the King, or the yeare of our Lord; lastly, the clause of his testibus. * * * The office of the premises of the deed is twofold. First, rightly to name the feofor and the feoffee; and, secondly, to comprehend the certaintie of the lands or tenements to be conveyed by the feofment either by expresse words or which may by reference be reduced to a certaintie." 1 Coke's Inst. 6a. Signing was not necessary to make a deed valid as such, at common law, and Sir William Blackstone says that "it was held in all our books that sealing alone was sufficient to authenticate a deed; and so the common form of attesting deeds 'sealed and delivered' continues to this day notwithstanding St. 29 Car. II, c. 8," which requires deeds to be signed by the maker. 2 Blackstone, Com. 307. Not only could any seal be used, but "a stick or any such like thing which doth make a print." Shep. Touch. 57. "In Temes de la Leys v. 'Falt', reference is made to a charter of Edward III, of which the last two lines run in the English translation thus:

"And in witness that it was sooth
He bit the wax with his foretooth."

Norton on Deeds, 6.

Thus will be seen, from the conditions prevailing at common law, the prime importance of the grantor's name appearing in the body of the deed was to identify the deed as the act of a particular grantor. Without signature, and executed with a seal indented by the prick of a pin, or imprint of a tooth, the deed could not disclose the identity of the grantor, except by mention of his name in the grant. From the very necessity of the case grew the rule that the name of the grantor should appear in connection with apt words indicating that the deed was his grant. But even at common law a deed could be made in a very informal manner. Says Lord Coke: "I have tearmed the said parts of the deed formall or orderly parts, for that they be not of the essence of a deed of feofment; for if such a deed be without premises, habendum, tenendum, the clause of in cuius rei testimonium, the date, and the clause of his testibus, yet the deed is good. For if a man by deede gives lands to another, and to his heires, without more saying, this is good, if he put his seale to the deede, deliver it and make llevry accordingly." 1 Coke's Inst. 7a. Thus it would seem that the requirement of a deed made before the statute of frauds was, not that the grantor's name should appear in formal context, but, if the writing should identify the grantor, the deed would be considered his grant. Let us also recall the old common-law distinction (obsolete in this state) between deeds poll and indentures. The former are those made by one person only. To the latter two or more persons are parties. The case of Scudamore v. Vandensene (1579) cited in 2 Coke's Inst. 573, is grounded upon this principle. It was there held that a person could not take any immediate benefit under an indenture, or sue on any covenant contained therein, unless he was named as a party thereto. The statement of Lord Coke, in that case, that no grant can be made to a person not a party to the deed, was never true except of grants of immediate interest. Norton on Deeds, 24. And was never applied to deeds poll, but was limited to deeds inter partes. Norton on Deeds, 24; Cooker v. Child, 2 Levinz, 74.

The question first came up in America in the Massachusetts Supreme Court in 1812, in the case of Catlin v. Ware, 9 Mass. 218, 6 Am. Dec. 56. It was there held that a conveyance by a husband to which the signature and seal of the wife was affixed, but her name not being otherwise mentioned in the deed, did not bar the wife's right of dower. The conclusion of the court was rested on the reason that a deed cannot bind a party sealing it unless it contains words expressive of an intention to be bound. Other courts have followed the Massachusetts court, either upon the authority of Catlin v. Ware, or the reason upon which the decision was placed. Peabody v. Hewett, 52 Me. 83, 83 Am. Dec. 496; Purcell v. Goshorn, 17 Ohio, 105, 49 Am. Dec. 448; Harrison v. Simons, 55 Ala. 510; Stone v. Sledge, 87 Tex. 49, 26 S. W. 1068, 47 Am. St. Rep. 65; Adams v. Medsker, 25 W. Va. 127; Cox v. Wells, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 410, 43 Am. Dec. 98; Agricultural Bank v. Rice, 4 How. (U. S.) 225, 11 L. Ed. 949. Most of these decisions were based upon the ground that a wife could not relinquish her right of dower unless the conveyance contained apt words expressive of such intent. But the weakness of the reasoning, in our judgment, is the clinging to an ancient rule of the common law which grew out of the environment and civilization of the sixteenth century, when such conditions do not exist in our own civilization. As was very pertinently said by Woodbury, J., in Elliott v. Sleeper, 2 N. H. 525, decided as early as 1823: "Here, however, a deed must by statute be attested; and since seals have ceased to be distinguished by peculiar devices, and education has become more generally diffused, signing would seem to be proper and indispensable. When a deed is signed, the utility of naming the grantor in the premises or any part of the body of the instrument appears in a great measure superseded; for 'know,' says Perkins, section 36, 'that the name of the grantor is not put in the deed to any other intent but to make certainty by the grantor.' Bacon's Ab. 'Grant' C. This certainty is attained whenever the person signs, seals, acknowledges, and delivers an instrument as his deed, though no mention whatever be made of him in the body of it, because he can perform these acts for no other possible purpose than to make the deed his own. In a deed poll, like that under consideration, where only the grantor speaks or signs or covenants, there is still less danger of mistake and uncertainty concerning the party bound than in deeds indented." In agreement with the New Hampshire case are Armstrong v. Stovall, 26 Miss. 275, Ingoldsby v. Juan, 12 Cal. 564, and Hrounska v. Janke, 66 Wis. 252, 28 N. W. 166. Text-writers now very generally discard as unsound the proposition that the grantor should be named as such in the deed, and approve those cases which hold that the conveyance is operative when signed by the grantor, though his name be omitted from the body of the instrument. 3 Washburn on Real Prop. 2120; 1 Devlin on Deeds, § 204.

The requisites of a deed, under the Code, are that it must be in writing, signed by the maker, attested by at least two witnesses, and delivered to the purchaser, or some one for him, and be made on a valuable or good consideration. No prescribed form is essential to the validity of a deed, and the instrument will be deemed sufficient if it make known the transaction. Civ. Code 1895, §§ 3599, 3602. We think that the deed under discussion measures up to these statutory essentials, and is effective as a conveyance of the defendant and her co-remainderman, though their names are not mentioned in the body of the instrument. See, in this connection, Ball v. Wallace, 32 Ga. 170.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 300)

CLAXTON v. LOVETT et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 15, 1907.)

1. BILLS AND NOTES—DEFENSES—COVERTURE—DURESS.

In an action against two defendants on a promissory note, in which one of them pleaded that she was a married woman, and that her undertaking was that of a surety for her husband's debt, and also that the note was signed under duress, brought about by the conduct of her codefendant, it was necessary, to maintain the defense, that evidence should be adduced establishing the marriage relation between the defendants, and also that the acts constituting the duress were committed by the codefendant.

2. SAME.

The evidence in the present case did not disclose, with sufficient certainty, either that the defendants were married, or that the duress was brought about by the codefendant.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Johnson County; B. L. Rawlings, Judge.

Action by L. J. Claxton, executor of W. G. Sammons, against Lizzie Lovett and R. T. Lovett. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

L. J. Claxton, an executor of the estate of W. G. Sammons, deceased, brought suit against Mrs. Lizzie Lovett, as principal, and R. T. Lovett, as security, on a promissory note, for stated amounts of principal, interest, and attorney's fees. Mrs. Lovett filed an answer, denying the indebtedness, and alleging that she was not the principal on the note, but that her husband, R. T. Lovett, was the principal, and she was security, and that none of the amount so borrowed was ever received by her or used by her in any way whatever; and also alleging that she signed the note as security under duress. On the trial, Mrs. Lovett testified that she "never got any money from Mr. W. G. Sammons." Hershal Lovett testified that he had heard "papa" tell Mr. Sammons that, if he could get $1,000, he thought he could pull through, and his papa told him that he had loaned it to him; that he heard papa tell mama he wanted her to come into the room and sign the note he was going to give Mr. Sammons; that he did not see his mother sign the note, and could not swear that the note in evidence was the note his father had reference to. Lou Anna Lovett testified that she did not see this thousand dollar transaction; that she heard her father and mother discussing it; that about two or three days before the signing of the paper her father came home drinking, and came into the room where her mother was, and told her that he wanted her to sign the paper, so that he could get a thousand dollars to help out in the mercantile business; that she did not want to sign it, and he used an oath and told her she would sign it, and about that time he got mad with her mother and drew out his pistol; that he first choked her, and she told him that, if he did not stop, she would call Hershal; and that she did call Hershal, and her father went out of the room. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the defendant. The plaintiff made a motion for a new trial, which was overruled, and the plaintiff excepted.

J. L. Kent, J. K. Jordan, and Jas. K. Hines, for plaintiff in error. Wm. Faircloth and W. R. Daley, for defendants in error.

COBB, P. J. The record discloses a suit on a promissory note, signed by two persons bearing the same surname. It is indicated, by the petition, that the principal is a married woman. From her answer it appears that she is a married woman, and that the apparent surety is her husband. Her defense is that she is not the principal, but really the surety, and that the debt was the obligation of her husband; and, in addition to this, that she signed the paper under duress brought about by the conduct of her husband. At the trial, she testified that she had received none of the money which was the consideration of the note. She did not testify that her codefendant was her husband, or even that she was a married woman. Two witnesses are introduced who bear the same surname as that of the defendant. They each testify to transactions in reference to a note or debt between persons who are described as "papa" and "mama" and "father" and "mother"; but there is absolutely not a word in the testimony of either of the witnesses which shows that the persons referred to in the testimony in the manner above indicated are the defendants in the case or in any way connected therewith. The only thing to connect the transactions referred to in the testimony with the transactions mentioned in the pleading is the fact that the defendants and the witnesses all bear the same surname. In order for Mrs. Lovett to sustain her defense, it was absolutely necessary that she should establish by evidence that she was a married woman, that R. T. Lovett, her codefendant, was her husband, or that her codefendant, R. T. Lovett, committed the acts which constituted the duress which brought about the signing of the note. The evidence entirely failing to connect the transactions therein referred to with the transactions mentioned in the pleading, we have no alternative but to reverse the judgment refusing to grant a new trial.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 234)

HARRISON v. HARRISON.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 14, 1907.)

APPEAL—REVIEW—EVIDENCE—NEW TRIAL—SUCCESSIVE VERDICTS.

No error of law was complained of. While the evidence is not altogether satisfactory, still it has been the basis of two verdicts in favor of the plaintiff, and the second verdict has met with the approval of the trial judge; and, as there is at least some slight evidence upon which the finding may be supported, the judgment refusing to grant a second new trial will not be disturbed.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 3951.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Hancock County; H. M. Holden, Judge.

Action by M. L. Harrison against N. D. Harrison, administrator of Emma S. Harrison. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Wm. H. Burwell, for plaintiff in error. R. H. Lewis, for defendant in error.

COBB, P. J. Mrs. M. L. Harrison brought suit against N. D. Harrison, as administrator of Emma S. Harrison, on an account for services rendered the intestate of the defendant in caring for her for four years prior to the date of her death; the amount of the claim being $576. The defendant filed an answer, in which he denied all liability on the part of the estate. The case was tried, and resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff for $480 principal and $50.40 interest. A motion for a new trial was made by the defendant, which was granted, and this judgment was affirmed. Harrison v. Harrison, 124 Ga. 783, 52 S. E. 813. The case was tried a second time, and resulted in a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $480 principal and $114.80 interest. The defendant filed a motion for a new trial, which the court overruled, and the defendant excepted.

The plaintiff was a sister-in-law of the intestate of the defendant, and they, with the other members of the family, lived together. The deceased was afflicted and in feeble health, and required a great deal of attention from the other members of the household. While the evidence is conflicting as to which member of the household rendered the greatest service to the deceased in nursing and caring for her, there was evidence to sustain a finding that the plaintiff was considerate and attentive, and performed, from day to day, those irksome and necessary duties required in providing for the comfort and happiness of an afflicted person. There was no evidence whatever of any express agreement between the plaintiff and the deceased that compensation should be paid for the services thus rendered; and the case, therefore, depends upon whether the circumstances were such that it would necessarily be inferred that it was in contemplation of each party that there should be compensation for the services. The evidence relating to this question is not altogether satisfactory; but, when the character of the services rendered and the time required each day for this service is taken into consideration, the jury might infer that the service was of such an exacting character that it was not rendered on the one hand, or received on the other, purely from motives of natural love and affection. In Murrell v. Studstill, 104 Ga. 604, 30 S. E. 750, the character of the service rendered is recognized as a proper subject for consideration in determining whether, under all of the circumstances, compensation was intended. This was more strikingly recognized in the case of Phinazee v. Bunn, 123 Ga. 230, 51 S. E. 300. In that case the services were rendered by a daughter to her father, but they were of the most exacting and irksome character. It is true that in that case there was also some evidence of a declaration by the father indicating his intention to compensate. While we are not altogether satisfied with the verdict as rendered, and we might not have rendered such verdict if we had been members of the jury, still, as there was some slight evidence to support the finding, and two verdicts have been rendered in the case, and the verdict now under consideration has met with the approval of the trial judge, we will not reverse his judgment refusing to grant a new trial.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 241)

HARRIS et al. v. EQUITABLE SECURITIES CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 12, 1907.)

1. JUDGMENT—RES JUDICATA—MATTERS DETERMINED—EVIDENCE.

Where a judgment is pleaded as an estoppel, the burden is upon the party relying upon the estoppel to sustain the plea by showing that the particular matter in controversy was necessarily or actually determined in the former litigation; and, if it appear from the record introduced in support of the plea that several issues were involved in such litigation, and the verdict and judgment do not clearly show that this particular issue was then decided, before such plea can be sustained, this uncertainty must be removed by extrinsic evidence showing that such matter was then decided in accordance with the contention of the party relying upon the plea.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, § 1822.]

2. SAME.

The case of Linton v. Harris, 78 Ga. 265, 3 S. E. 278, distinguished from the present case. (Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Jackson County; C. H. Brand, Judge.

Action by the Equitable Securities Company against C. L. Harris and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Affirmed.

W. W. Stark, for plaintiffs in error. Robt. S. Howard, Jno. L. Lye, and Chas. A. Reid, for defendant in error.

FISH, C. J. 1. The Equitable Securities Company sued C. L. Harris, administrator of the estate of J. L. Harris, Sr., deceased, C. L. Harris, and J. L. Harris, Jr., on several promissory notes given by the decedent and the defendants to plaintiff for the purchase price of certain described land, praying for a general judgment with special lien on the land. The defendant filed several pleas. Among them were (1) that plaintiff could not make defendants a good title to the land, in pursuance of its bond so to do, by reason of an outstanding paramount title in a given third person; (2) payment; (3) that the land and notes in question were the assets of the equitable mortgage company, which were in the hands of its receiver, who had no authority to convey them to plaintiff. On the trial there was a general verdict, viz.: "We, the jury, find for the defendants." A general judgment was entered in accordance with the verdict. Subsequently the same plaintiff brought an action against the same defendants and four others to recover the same land for the purchase price of which the notes sued on in the former case were given by defendants in that case to the plaintiff. The defendants filed several pleas, among them being estoppel by judgment in the former case, defendants setting up as a defense that the verdict and judgment in that case were to the effect that the notes in question had been paid. On the trial of the last case, the only evidence introduced by defendants was a copy of the pleadings, verdict, and judgment in the former case. Even without reference to the evidence submitted by plaintiff, which was uncontradicted, and which strongly tended to show that no evidence was submitted on the former trial in support of either the plea of payment or that of paramount outstanding title, a verdict against the plea of estoppel by judgment was demanded, and the court did not err in directing such a verdict. Draper v. Medlock, 122 Ga. 284, 50 S. E. 113, 69 L. R. A. 483, and citations. See, also, Callaway v. Irvin, 123 Ga. 344, 51 S. E. 477; Irvin v. Spratlin, 127 Ga. 240, 55 S. E. 1037.

2. The case of Linton v. Harris, 78 Ga. 265, 3 S. E. 278, relied on by the plaintiffs in error, is not in conflict with the above ruling. That was also an action of ejectment, which necessarily involved the question of the plaintiff's title to the premises in dispute, and the defendant pleaded estoppel by a former judgment in his favor, rendered in a suit of a different character against him, wherein the real plaintiff, at the time of the trial, was the same person who subsequently brought the ejectment suit. But there was no uncertainty whatever as to the plea upon which the general verdict in the former litigation in favor of the defendant was based, as it clearly appeared that the defense in former suit was placed squarely upon the question whether such plaintiff had title to the very premises which he subsequently sued to recover from the same defendant, that this defense was fully litigated upon the trial, and hence that "the sole question of title arising in the latter action [was] the same as that which was adjudicated in the former."

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 280)

CULBREATH v. MARTIN.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 14, 1907.)
VENDOR AND PURCHASER—BONA FIDE PURCHASER.

In a contest between the donee under a deed of gift, and a bona fide purchaser for value from the executor of the donor, under a power of sale in the will, who takes without notice of the prior voluntary deed, preference is to be given to the latter, and the title acquired by him is superior to the rights of the volunteer under the prior conveyance.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 48, Vendor and Purchaser, §§ 533, 594.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Richmond County; H. C. Hammond, Judge.

Action by Fannie Culbreath against Robert Martin. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

In 1905 Fannie Culbreath brought an action against Robert Martin to recover possession of a described tract of land. The defendant, in his answer, denied title in the plaintiff. The plaintiff relied upon a deed from Grace Kennedy to Fannie Culbreath, dated April 25, 1892. It appeared that the grantee was the adopted daughter of the grantor, and that she was a minor at the date of the death of her grantor, which occurred in 1899. The consideration of the deed was $1 and natural love and affection. The deed had been recorded during the lifetime of the grantor. Further than this fact there was no evidence of delivery. The defendant claimed under a deed from Bryan Cumming, as executor of Grace Porter, formerly Grace Kennedy. This deed was made in pursuance of a power of sale in the will, and upon a valuable consideration. Neither the executor nor Martin, his vendee, had any actual notice of the deed under which the plaintiff claims at the time of the sale by the executor. The plaintiff was never in possession, but Grace Kennedy remained in possession either by herself or by her tenants during her lifetime, and the property was thereafter taken into possession by the executor. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the defendant, and the plaintiff assigns error upon the judgment refusing to grant a new trial.

F. W. Capers, for plaintiff in error. Bryan Cumming, for defendant in error.

COBB, P. J. (after stating the facts as above). It is the settled law of this state that a bona fide purchaser for value is entitled to prevail over the holder of a voluntary conveyance of a previous date, though the same be duly recorded, unless the former took with actual notice of the existence of the previous deed. Finch v. Woods, 113 Ga. 996, 39 S. E. 418; Scott v. Atlas Ass'n, 114 Ga. 134, 39 S. E. 942. In Whittington v. Wright, 9 Ga. 23, it was said that a conflict between the equities of a bona fide purchaser and a volunteer can only arise when both parties claim under the same grantor. In that case one party was a purchaser for value and the other was a volunteer, but they did not derive title from the same source. In Bell v. McCawley, 29 Ga. 356, it was said that the rule above referred to applies only to cases where two conflicting titles are derived from the same source. In Russell v. Kearney, 27 Ga. 96, it is said that the doctrine applies only where both conveyances are made by the same person. It is to be noted in all of these decisions that the court was dealing with cases where it was held that the doctrine was not applicable, and the judges, speaking for the court, used the different expressions, "from the same grantor," "from the same source," and "from the same person." There is nothing in any of them which constitutes an authoritative ruling that the doctrine is applicable only in those cases where both the plaintiff and defendant claim each under deeds in which the grantor is the same. The use of the expression, "the same source," in one of the opinions, indicates that it was in the mind of the judge that the doctrine might be applicable in cases where the parties claim under a common source of title. Civ. Code 1895, § 3530, declares: "Every voluntary deed or conveyance, made by any person, shall be void as against a subsequent bona fide purchaser for value without notice of such conveyance." While this section of the Code was evidently taken from the decisions above referred to and other decisions of this court, there is nothing in the section that indicates that the rule there laid down is to be limited to cases where both the plaintiff and defendant each claim under a deed from the same person. In the present case the plaintiff claimed under a deed from Grace Kennedy. The defendant claimed under a deed from the executor of Grace Kennedy. The purchaser from the executor was a bona fide purchaser for value, without notice of the voluntary deed executed by Grace Kennedy.

The controlling question is therefore whether the purchaser for value from the executor, without notice of the prior voluntary deed of the testatrix, is entitled to occupy the same position as if he had bought, under similar circumstances, from Grace Kennedy. This identical question seems never to have been decided by this court. In Crozier v. Bryant, 7 Ky. 174, Chief Justice Boyle says: "A gift may be void as to a purchaser, but he must be a purchaser who can derive his title from the donor." This language would indicate that it was not necessary to the application of the doctrine now under discussion that it should appear that both the plaintiff and defendant had each a deed from the same person, but that the doctrine would be applicable in any case where one party claimed under a deed of gift and the other party was a purchaser for value who could derive his title, either directly or indirectly, from the donor in the deed of gift. In that decision, however, the court was dealing with a case where the parties did not each derive title from the donor, and therefore what was said by the judge was merely obiter, as is true in the cases in our own reports above referred to. The reason on which the rule would seem to be founded is that where the owner of property has made a deed of gift, but there is nothing about the possession or otherwise to indicate to a prospective purchaser that there is any other claim to the property other than that of the donor, one who purchases for value should be protected on account of the apparent ownership, notwithstanding the actual legal title had passed under the prior voluntary conveyance. In other words, unless there is something which amounted to actual notice to the prospective purchaser that his vendor had parted with the title to a volunteer, a bona fide purchaser for value would be protected as against such volunteer. If he finds his vendor in possession, with all rights of ownership apparently vested in him, as against a volunteer he is authorized to deal with him as the owner; and this is true notwithstanding the deed of gift may have been at that time actually recorded. Fleming v. Townsend, 6 Ga. 103, 50 Am. Dec. 318. Would not the reason which is at the foundation of the rule apply with equal force to a case where the purchaser for value is one who buys from the one who stands in the shoes of the donor and who conveys the donor's interest, and that only? That is, ought not a purchaser for value from an executor selling under a power of sale in a will stand upon the same footing in reference to a prior voluntary deed of the testatrix as he would if his title was derived directly from the testatrix during her lifetime? The registry act of 1837 (Acts 1837, p. 91) provided that, "in all cases where two or more deeds shall hereafter be executed by the same person or persons, conveying the same premises to different persons, the one recorded within twelve months from the time of execution (if the feoffee had no notice of a prior deed, unrecorded at the time of the execution of the deed to him or her) shall have preference." Cobb's Digest of Laws, p. 175, § 44. In Ellis v. Smith, 10 Ga. 253, it was held that under this act a purchaser at a sheriff's sale, who has his deed first recorded, would gain the same preference over an unrecorded deed as if he had bought directly from the debtor himself. In the opinion Judge Lumpkin says: "The effect of a sale by the law, in this respect, is just the same as if made by the individual whose agent or trustee the officer becomes to make the transfer. All the defendant's estate is sold. The purchaser takes his place. The mischief of an unrecorded deed is the same to him as to a private purchaser." In Tucker v. Harris, 18 Ga. 1, 58 Am. Dec. 488, it was held that a purchaser at an administrator's sale who has his deed first recorded will gain the same preference over an unrecorded deed as if he had bought of the intestate in his lifetime. Judge Lumpkin, in the opinion, after referring to the case of Ellis v. Smith, says: "The rule and the reasoning in that case apply with full force to a purchaser at an administrator's sale." The registry act, as it now appears in the Code, is, in the particular above referred to, in the following language: "The record may be made at any time, but such deed loses its priority over a subsequent recorded deed from the same vendor, taken without notice of the existence of the first." Civ. Code 1895, § 3618. It has been held, since this section became the law, that a deed from the sheriff, duly recorded, is entitled to priority over an unrecorded deed from the defendant in execution, though made before the rendition of the judgment under which the sheriff sold, if the purchaser at his sale had no notice of the older deed. McCandless v. Inland Acid Co., 108 Ga. 618, 34 S. E. 142. See, also, Ousley v. Bailey, 111 Ga. 783, 36 S. E. 750; Maddox v. Arthur, 122 Ga. 674, 50 S. E. 668 (2). The original registry act uses the expression, "the same person or persons." The Code uses the expression, "the same vendor." Still, in each instance, it was held that a deed made by one authorized by law to sell the property of another, either during his lifetime or after his death, was entitled to preference, if taken without notice of a prior unrecorded deed. See, in this connection, Henderson v. Armstrong, 128 Ga. —, 58 S. E. 624. The very same reasons which would determine a contest between a duly recorded deed subsequent in date to a prior unrecorded deed would be sufficient to determine a contest between a bona fide purchaser for value and a donee under a prior voluntary deed. But it is said that the executor had no authority to sell property which did not belong to his testator. Neither has an administrator authority to sell property that does not belong to his intestate on account of a deed having been made during his lifetime. Nor has a sheriff authority to sell as the property of the defendant in execution that of which he was not the owner on the day of judgment. Still, if any of these officers or persons attempt to sell, and the purchaser is a bona fide purchaser without notice, the law protects the purchaser, even at the expense of the real owner, who, in the one case, has been negligent in reference to the duty imposed upon him under the registry law, and, in the other instance, negligent in so conducting himself as that those who dealt with his donor would be misled by those circumstances which made the donor the apparent owner. There was no error in refusing to grant a new trial.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 271)

THOMAS v. HERRINGTON.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 14, 1907.)

INJUNCTION—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE—PRESERVATION OF STATUS.

When, on the hearing of an application for injunction, it appears from the evidence that there has been an agreement between the parties by which the plaintiff was given the privilege of using the timber, for turpentine purposes, upon certain lands of the defendant, but there is a conflict of the evidence as to the quantity of land covered by the contract, and the evidence is conflicting on other material questions, and the judge has granted an injunction at the instance of the plaintiff, and has refused an injunction at the instance of the defendant, the judgment will be affirmed, with direction that the order of the judge be so modified as to grant an injunction to the defendant upon the same terms on which the injunction was granted to the plaintiff, so that the status may be preserved until the final hearing.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 27, Injunction, §§ 305-306.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Jeff Davis County; L. A. Parker, Judge.

Action by J. L. Herrington against Mike Thomas. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant brings error. Affirmed with directions.

Herrington brought an equitable petition against Thomas, alleging that the plaintiff bought from the defendant the right to box the timber suitable for turpentine purposes, for a period of 4 years, upon a tract of land containing 340 acres, and paid therefor the sum of $100; that he failed to take a lease, but attempted to do so; that, neither of the parties knowing how to draw a lease, the writing which they signed failed to accomplish the purpose; that he afterwards demanded a lease from the defendant, and that the defendant refused to give it; that he commenced to exercise the privilege claimed, and boxed and otherwise used the timber upon the land, and, in order to protect the timber from forest fires and preserve the same from destruction, he placed several employes in the woods to weed and rake the grass and straw; that, unless this precaution is taken, the timber is liable to be destroyed and irreparable damage result to one interested in using the same for turpentine purposes; and that the defendant intimidated and threatened his employes and drove them from the land. The prayer is for an injunction to restrain the defendant from interfering with the laborers of plaintiff, and that the defendant be required, by decree, to execute the lease in accordance with the agreement of the parties. Upon this petition, the judge granted a rule nisi and a restraining order. The defendant answered that he had never agreed to execute a lease to all of the timber on all of the tract of land, but he did agree to permit the defendant to work the boxes then cut, and also to cut and use all the timber suitable for turpentine purposes in an old field, consisting of 30 acres, lying on the north side of the tract, the sum to be paid for this privilege being $100; that the plaintiff asked for the turpentine privileges only to the extent just referred to, and the defendant agreed to nothing more; that it was distinctly understood that the plaintiff was not to touch a tree outside of the 30 acres, except to work the old boxes then in existence; that the defendant is a Greek, and could neither read nor write the English language, and is entirely ignorant in reference to transactions of the character of the one entered into; that the plaintiff presented him with a paper, which he represented contained the agreement in the terms as understood by the defendant, and the defendant agreed that his name might be placed thereon upon these terms; that he does not know where this paper is; that, if it contains any provisions other than those above referred to, it was obtained by fraud; that the plaintiff, instead of simply working the old boxes and the timber on the 30 acres, without any lawful warrant or authority is beginning to cut new boxes on the land outside of the 30-acre tract, and this conduct has already damaged the defendant in the sum of $500. He prays judgment against the plaintiff for the damages already done, and for an injunction to restrain the plaintiff from using or interfering with the timber, except to use the old boxes and the timber on the 30-acre tract. At the hearing evidence was introduced by each party tending to establish the allegations in their pleadings. The writing referred to does not appear in the record. The judge, after considering the pleadings and evidence, passed an order enjoining the defendant from interfering with the plaintiff, or his employes, in working or otherwise using the timber on the land in controversy, provided that the plaintiff, within 10 days, give a bond to indemnify the defendant against loss in the event of his recovery in the case, and refused to grant the injunction prayed for by the defendant.

F. Willis Dart, for plaintiff in error. W. W. Bennett, for defendant in error.

COBB, P. J. (after stating the facts as above). The petition of the plaintiff was, in effect, an application for a decree of specific performance of a contract for the sale of an interest in timber, the application being based upon the fact that the entire purchase money had been paid. It is conceded that there was a transaction between the parties in reference to the purchase of an interest in timber. They are widely at variance with relation to the subject-matter of the contract.

The pleadings make a clear-cut issue on this point, and the evidence at the hearing shows that conflict of which the pleadings were but a forewarning. The case made out by the plaintiff, while not, in all particulars, the same as that disclosed in the case of Huxford v. Southern Pine Co., 124 Ga. 181, 52 S. E. 439, is in some respects similar thereto. The case does not fall within the timber cutter's act, for the plaintiff is not the owner of the land seeking to enjoin a timber cutter, but he is a turpentine operator claiming the right to use the timber for turpentine purposes, and alleging that this right has been interfered with by the owner of the land, in violation of the terms of the agreement. While the case is not strong on the question of irreparable damages, there is some evidence indicating that, if he is not allowed to take care of the timber that he desires to use for turpentine purposes, a loss will result to him which is incapable of being estimated in money. We cannot say that the judge abused his discretion in granting the injunction prayed for by the plaintiff, nor imposing the terms upon the plaintiff which provided for the giving of a bond to indemnify the defendant against loss in the event the injunction was wrongfully sued out; but, having reached this conclusion, we think, under the evidence, that he should have also granted the injunction at the instance of the defendant, and have enjoined the plaintiff from doing anything more than using the timber on the 30-acre tract and utilizing the old boxes on the remainder of the tract. The status should have been preserved until a jury could pass upon the conflicting issues. In cases of a similar character an injunction at the instance of each party has been held to be a proper direction to give the case so as to preserve the rights of each party. See Johnson v. Hall, 83 Ga. 281, 9 S. E. 783; Wells v. Rountree, 117 Ga. 839, 45 S. E. 215; Collinsville Granite Company v. Phillips, 123 Ga. 833, 51 S. E. 666 (29).

The judgment will be affirmed, with direction that the order of the judge be so modified as to grant the injunction prayed by the defendant, upon his giving a bond in the same amount as that required of the plaintiff, to indemnify the plaintiff against loss in the event it should appear at the final hearing that the injunction was wrongfully sued out.

Judgment affirmed, with direction. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 279)

WIDINCAMP v. JAMES.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 14, 1907.)

1. EXECUTION—CLAIM OF THIRD PERSON—DISMISSAL OF LEVY—REINSTATEMENT.

When, in a claim case, the levy has been dismissed for the want of prosecution, and the case thereafter reinstated by the judge, it was not permissible for the claimant to make up an issue in the claim case and have it determined whether the case was properly reinstated. If, for any reason, the order of reinstatement was irregular or erroneous, a formal motion should be made to review the order reinstating the case.

2. SAME—ISSUES.

In a claim case the sole issue is whether the property is subject or not subject. Southern Mining Co. v. Brown, 107 Ga. 269, 33 S. E. 731; Ray v. Atlanta Banking Co., 110 Ga. 305, 35 S. E. 117. And the verdict in such a case should be so phrased as to determine this issue with definiteness.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 21, Execution, § 570.]

3. SAME—VERDICT.

A verdict in a claim case, which contains merely a finding for the plaintiff of a given sum of money, does not determine definitely the issue as to whether the property levied on is subject or not subject.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Tattnall County; B. T. Rawlings, Judge.

Claim case between Madison James and E. Widincamp. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

W. T. Burkhalter, for plaintiff in error. C. L. Morgan, for defendant in error.

COBB, P. J. Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 255)

ALEXANDER v. THOMPSON.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 13, 1907.)

EJECTMENT—INSTRUCTIONS.

The misinstruction excepted to required a new trial.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Campbell County; L. S. Roan, Judge.

Action by Simon Alexander against J. M.

Thompson. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

Jos. W. & Jno. D. Humphries, for plaintiff in error. J. F. Gollightly, for defendant in error.

FISH, C. J. Simon Alexander brought an equitable petition against J. M. Thompson to have established as the true line dividing certain lands of the petitioner and lands of the defendant a line alleged to have been agreed upon by them, and to recover all of the land lying west of such line in possession of the defendant. There was a verdict for the defendant; and the case is here for review, upon the exception to overruling of the plaintiff's motion for a new trial.

The contention of the petitioner was that the county surveyor, at the instance of petitioner and defendant, had run a given line on the east side of petitioner's land and dividing it from the land of defendant, which surveyed line the parties had agreed was the true line between their lands, and that defendant was in possession of a strip of land on the west side of this line which belonged to petitioner. The defendant contended that he had never made any such agreement; that the line claimed by petitioner was not the true line, but an old hedge-row, which extended for more than one-half of the distance between the lands of petitioner and defendant, and a line which would correspond with and be a continuation of the line upon which the old hedge-row was situated was the true line; and that such hedge-row had been recognized as the true line for 25 or 30 years by the coterminous landowners, they having, respectively, cultivated up to such hedge-row.

The court charged the jury in effect that if they should determine that the hedge-row line, as contended for by defendant, was the true line, then the plaintiff could not recover. The plaintiff claims that this charge was erroneous, for the reason that it appeared from the evidence that the old hedge-row was west of the surveyed line, claimed by plaintiff as the true line; that the suit was for the recovery of all of the land in possession of the defendant west of this last-mentioned line; that the hedge-row line was west of the surveyed line, and there was evidence that the defendant was in possession of some of the land west of such hedge-row line; and, such being the case, the plaintiff was, in any event, entitled to recover such portion of the premises sued for as lay west of the hedge-row line from the defendant. We are of opinion that the exception to this charge was well taken. There was evidence from which the jury could have found that the defendant was in possession of a small piece of land west of the hedge-row line; and, where an action is brought for an entire tract of land, the plaintiff may recover a portion thereof, if he shows title to the same, and the verdict specifies with certainty such portion as is found to be the property of the plaintiff. McCullough v. East Tenn., Va. & Ga. Ry. Co., 106 Ga. 275, 32 S. E. 97. As there was evidence which should have authorized the jury to find for the plaintiff all of the land which the defendant was in possession of lying west of the hedge-row line, it was error for the court to instruct the jury that, if they found that line to be the true line, the plaintiff could not recover. Hogg v. Gammon, 127 Ga. 293, 56 S. E. 404.

There was no merit in the other ground of the motion for a new trial, complaining of a charge which was a quotation from a Code section, which was pertinent to the issue on trial.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 307)

HICKS et al. v. PORTWOOD et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 15, 1907.)

1. INJUNCTION — APPLICATION — HEARING — AFFIDAVITS.

In an interlocutory hearing of an application for an injunction, affidavits which do not state the court in which the case is pending or the case in which they are to be used, or otherwise show affirmatively that they are made to be used in that particular case, are inadmissible in evidence.

2. WRIT OF ERROR—DISCRETION OF COURT—REVIEW.

A motion to postpone the hearing of an application for an interlocutory injunction, after the hearing is begun and some evidence has been introduced, upon the ground that the evidence of the applicant has been ruled out on account of the defective way in which the affidavits were prepared, is a matter addressed to the sound discretion of the court; and the Supreme Court will not control this discretion in any case, unless a manifest abuse of discretion appears. No abuse of discretion appears in the present case.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 3837.]

3. SAME.

No sufficient reason has been shown for reversing the judgment.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Polk County; Price Edwards, Judge.

Action by Nancy Hicks and others against John Portwood and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs bring error. Affirmed.

Nancy Hicks and others brought an equitable petition against John Portwood and another, alleging that they were the heirs at law of John Hicks, who died seised and possessed of two described lots of land; that there was no administration on his estate; that John Portwood was in possession; that they claimed title to the same, and were entitled to recover the land and mesne profits; that they were informed that Portwood had sold the timber thereon to his codefendant, Williams, who was about to move a sawmill upon the land and cut all of the timber thereon. The prayer was for the recovery of the land and mesne profits, and for an injunction to prevent the defendants from cutting the timber. The petition was verified by the affidavit of one of the plaintiffs. The judge granted the restraining order, and set the case down for a hearing as to the application for an injunction. At the hearing the defendants showed, for cause against the granting of the injunction, a demurrer and an answer. The answer denied title in the plaintiffs, and the defendants alleged that they were in possession under Mrs. Annie Portwood, who was the real owner of the property. When the case came on for a hearing before the judge, an order was passed making Mrs. Portwood a party defendant, and the plaintiffs then proceeded to introduce testimony. Two affidavits were tendered in evidence, which were admitted. These affidavits tended simply to establish that there was no administration upon the estate of John Hicks, and to lay the foundation for the introduction of parol evidence as to the contents of certain deeds. They related in no way to the merits of the controversy. The plaintiffs then tendered in evidence the affidavits of three of the plaintiffs. Objection was made to these affidavits, upon the ground that there was no statement of the case nor any reference to the case in the body of the affidavits, and nothing to indicate that they were to be used in any pending litigation. The judge intimated that he would sustain the objection, whereupon one of the counsel for the plaintiffs testified that he had written the affidavits himself; that each of the witnesses understood that they were to be used as evidence in the case; that he had attached the affidavits to his brief in which the case was stated; that he did not notice that the case was not stated in each of the affidavits, but the brief was attached to the affidavits and all were fastened together. The judge, in a note to the bill of exceptions, says: "The 'brief' referred to purported to be a law brief being a memoranda of legal authorities in pencil writing, and was not attached to the affidavits and was no part thereof." One of the counsel stated that none of the clients were present; that they lived 15 or 20 miles from where the hearing was being had, but that the affidavits could be re-executed, or new ones made, if the court would postpone the case until the following morning at 8 o'clock. The court declined to postpone the case, ruled out the affidavits, and entered a judgment dissolving the restraining order and refusing the injunction. Error is assigned upon these rulings.

J. S. James and H. W. Nalley, for plaintiffs in error. Mundy & Mundy, for defendants in error.

COBB, P. J. (after stating the facts as above). 1. The rule is now well settled that an affidavit intended to be used in a legal investigation must be entitled in the cause in which it is intended to be used, or otherwise show upon its face that it is connected therewith. Hill v. McBurney Oil Co., 112 Ga. 788, 88 S. E. 42, 52 L. R. A. 398; Brucker v. O'Connor, 115 Ga. 95 (2), 41 S. E. 245. The mere fact that an affidavit may be attached to another paper in which the case is stated would not, in all cases, make the affidavit admissible, unless the paper was of such a character as that it would necessarily be inferred that the attention of the witness was called to the paper, or it was a necessary or proper exhibit to the affidavit. But, without reference to this question, it appears from the note of the judge on the bill of exceptions that the affidavits were not attached to the brief of counsel in which the case was stated. There was no error in excluding the affidavits offered as evidence.

2. Whether the hearing of the case should have been postponed, even for a day, in order to allow the defects in the affidavits to be cured, was a matter addressed to the sound discretion of the judge; and there is nothing in the record to indicate that the refusal to postpone was, under the circumstances, an abuse of discretion.

3. When the affidavits were ruled out, so far as the merits of the case were concerned, it stood upon the verified petition and the verified answer, and the averments of fact in these two pieces of pleading were conflicting. The case therefore falls within the well-settled rule that, where the evidence is conflicting, a judgment granting or refusing an injunction will not be interfered with.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 305)

TALLULAH FALLS RY. CO. v. HARRIS.
(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 15, 1907.)

CARRIERS—INJURY TO PASSENGER—EVIDENCE.

The evidence, though conflicting on material issues, was amply sufficient to warrant the verdict, and no sufficient reason has been shown for reversing the judgment refusing to grant a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 9, Carriers, §§ 1307-1314.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Habersham County; J. J. Kimsey, Judge.

Action by H. H. Harris against the Tallulah Falls Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Harris sued the Tallulah Falls Railway Company for damages, alleging that he was a passenger upon one of its trains, and, when the train reached the terminus of the road, he started to alight, and the train suddenly started at a rapid rate, and was jerked in such a way as to cause the passengers alighting to lose their balance, and the plaintiff, seeing his danger, endeavored to recover himself, but, being burdened with luggage, he could not do so, and lost his balance, and he was thrown violently to the ground, receiving the injuries set forth in detail in the petition.

The defendant filed an answer, denying all liability. At the trial the plaintiff testified that it was dark when the train reached the station at which he was to alight, and, when the station was announced, the conductor came with his lantern, and the passengers prepared to alight; that he was near the middle of the coach, which was "pretty full," and he got up and started out with his baggage in his hand, which was a very heavy valise, weighing 15 or 20 pounds; that he walked out and down the steps to the last step, and was just making the step to the ground when he discovered that the train was moving; that he thought he would go back, and not attempt to alight, but he found that he could not do that; that just about that time the train seemed to "jump right back," and threw him forward, and he fell to the ground; that the train, being in motion, kept him from recovering himself, and he thought that if he endeavored to recover himself, he would fall right down under the car; that he thought first of throwing himself back; that he just turned loose at the time that there seemed to come a quick motion of the train backwards; that the jerk prevented him from getting back on the train; that he could have got back if the train had been perfectly still; that the train was moving slowly when he first noticed the motion, but, when he decided to turn loose, the sudden jerk occurred which pitched him out a considerable distance from the train. The evidence on the part of the defendant tended to establish that the train stood perfectly still for a sufficient length of time for all of the passengers to alight. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendant assigns error upon the refusal of the judge to grant a new trial.

J. J. Bowden and Pope B. Erwin, for plaintiff in error. J. C. Edwards and Robt. McMillan, for defendant in error.

COBB, P. J. (after stating the facts as above). Whether it is negligence or not, in a particular case, for a passenger to attempt to alight from a moving train, must depend upon the circumstances of danger attending the act, and the special justification which the person leaving the train had for doing so. Ordinarily, in cases of this kind, the question of what is or what is not negligence is one for the jury; and, unless the danger is obviously great—as where the train is moving at a high rate of speed—the court cannot hold that leaving the train is as a matter of law such negligence as should preclude a recovery. Suber v. G., O. & N. Ry. Co., 96 Ga. 42, 23 S. E. 387. In this case the question as to the defendant's negligence and the plaintiff's diligence were peculiarly for solution by the jury. The evidence, though conflicting on material issues, fully warranted the verdict. The original motion for a new trial contains only the general grounds. In the amended motion there is an elaboration of these grounds. There is one assignment of error upon an extract from the charge of the court. The substance of this charge was that if a passenger was attempting to alight from a train, and the same suddenly started, and he received injuries as a consequence, there would be a presumption of negligence against the company, and that the burden would be upon it to establish some defense by a preponderance of evidence. The assignment of error upon this charge was that the controlling question in the case was as to whether the train stopped at the station a sufficient length of time to allow the passengers to alight in safety, and this charge took this question entirely from the consideration of the jury. We do not think the charge was subject to the criticism made upon it. It was merely dealing with the question as to the circumstances under which the presumption of negligence would arise against the company, and there was nothing in it to intimate to the jury that the company would be liable in the event that the jury should be satisfied that the company was not negligent so far as the time given the passengers to alight was concerned. No sufficient reason has been shown for reversing the judgment.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 275)

RICHARDS v. McHAN et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 14, 1907.)

1. HABEAS CORPUS—CUSTODY OF INFANT—CONTRACT.

Prima facie the right of custody of an infant is in the father; and, when it is insisted that the father has relinquished this right by contract, the terms of the contract, to have this effect, should be definite and certain, and the proof to establish the contract should be clear and satisfactory. Under this rule, the evidence in this case was not sufficient to authorize a finding that the father had relinquished by contract his right of custody of the infant, concerning the possession of which this controversy is waged.

2. SAME—WRIT OF ERROR—REVIEW—DISCRETION OF COURT.

Upon the issue as to the fitness or unfitness of the father for the custody, control, and care of the infant, the evidence was such as to allow the exercise of its discretionary power by the court below, and this court will not disturb its judgment; no abuse of discretion being made to appear.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 25, Habeas Corpus, § 114.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; J. L. Pendleton, Judge.

Habeas corpus by J. B. Richards, Jr., against Catherine McHan and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Richards filed his petition for habeas corpus to obtain the custody and possession of an infant son. The defendants were the maternal grandparents of the child; the mother being dead. The petition alleges that the plaintiff is the father of the child, and that "petitioner has not parted with said child willingly, nor relinquished nor given up nor forfeited his right to said child by any reason known to the law, or by any other mode." Mr. McHan, the grandfather of the child, filed a general denial to the plaintiff's petition. Mrs. McHan, in addition to her denial of the facts alleged in the petition, further averred "that the child referred to is an infant 16 months old; that said child and its care and custody was given to this defendant under a solemn agreement which plaintiff made with her at the deathbed of her daughter (the mother of the child) then dying, by which plaintiff relinquished entirely any and all rights to the custody and control or care of said child in any way, and placed the same under the entire care, dominion, control, and custody of this defendant as long as she lives, and said agreement has been carried out from that day to this." This defendant also averred that the plaintiff is not a fit person to be intrusted with the care and custody of said infant, because of his drunkenness and immorality, and that respondent is able and willing to take charge of the child, and her circumstances and environments make her a fit person to have the care and custody of such infant. The evidence for the respondents tended to show that at the time of making the alleged contract, while the mother of the child was in a dying condition, she said to her father, one of the respondents: "I give you little Mack. I want you to have him. Pa will stand back of little Mack." To her mother, the other respondent, she said: "Mamma, I give you my baby [the child in question]. I want you to have it." Or to her father: "Pa, you must have little Mack. You must stand back of him." And to her mother: "Mamma, take my baby and raise it the best you can. I am going to leave it." To her husband, the plaintiff, she said: "John, don't you never take my baby away from my mother while she lives"—to which her husband replied: "Aurora, I know your wishes; and they shall be carried out." There is no evidence of any reply by the respondents, or of any conversation between plaintiff and respondents at that or any other time, whereby the former agreed to relinquish his parental rights. Upon the death of the child's mother, the respondents assumed control of the infant, then only 11 days old, and have been in possession of him ever since. The evidence introduced by the respondents upon the other issue was very voluminous, and in parts in conflict with that introduced by the plaintiff. The court awarded the child to the grandmother, one of the respondents. The plaintiff excepted.

Chambers & Smith, W. R. Daley, and Peeples & Jordan, for plaintiff in error. Smith, Hammond & Smith, for defendants in error.

BECK, J. (after stating the facts as above).

1. We agree with counsel for the plaintiff in error that the evidence entirely fails to show any contract upon the part of the plaintiff for the surrender or relinquishment of his right to the care and custody of the infant for the possession of which the habeas corpus proceedings were instituted. Where such a contract is claimed and relied on a clear and strong case must be made and the terms of the contract must be definite and certain. Looney v. Martin, 123 Ga. 209, 51 S. E. 304. Tested by this rule, the contract relied on was not established by the evidence; and, when all that was said and done, which is here insisted upon as constituting the alleged contract, is considered, we find all the essentials of a valid binding contract to be wanting.

2. But the conclusion readily reached that the evidence in the case did not authorize the court to award the child to the respondent upon the ground of an established contract between the plaintiff and the grandparents or either of them, we have still to consider whether the evidence as to the unfitness of the plaintiff was such as to authorize the judgment complained of; and, if it was, we will assume, of course, that the judgment was based upon that, and not upon the untenable ground that the contract was established. In awarding the child to the respondent, and in refusing to order him delivered into the custody of his father, the judge was in the exercise of a very wide discretion, with which he is vested by law. It is not an unlimited discretion, and a transgression of those limits would amount to an abuse of discretion which a reviewing court would correct; but, before this court would be authorized to interfere with the decision of the lower court in the exercise of its discretion, it must appear that in the exercise thereof there was a patent and flagrant abuse of the discretionary power. Prima facie the right of control and custody of a child until majority remains in the father. Civ. Code 1895, § 2502. And, in order to divest him of this right upon the ground of unfitness for the trust, the proof brought to show the alleged unfitness should be clear and convincing. "A clear and strong case" must be made to sustain an objection to the father's right. Commonwealth v. Briggs, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 205. This was determined in a contest on habeas corpus between the mother and father, who had separated. The discretion to be exercised by the courts in such contests is not arbitrary. The rights of the father on the one hand, and the permanent interest and welfare of the infant on the other, are both to be regarded, but the right of the father is paramount, and should not be disregarded except for grave cause. The breaking of the tie that binds them to each other can never be justified without the most solid and substantial reasons, established by plain proof. In any form of proceeding, the sundering of such ties should always be approached by courts 'with great caution and with a deep sense of responsibility.' Miller v. Wallace, 76 Ga. 479, 2 Am. St. Rep. 48. And elsewhere in the opinion the learned justice discusses, defines, and points out the limitations of the rules of discretion as applicable to habeas corpus cases. That opinion we commend as containing sound and wholesome doctrine for application when in habeas corpus proceedings courts are asked to break the tie that binds a father to his child, and to place one man's offspring in the care and custody of another. But, after all due weight is given to what is said in that case and the authorities cited, as to the limitations upon the discretionary power of the judge in habeas corpus proceedings, the fact still remains that his discretion is wide, and the limits within which its free exercise is allowed are broad. And the mere fact that a reviewing court, upon the consideration of the evidence in the record, might feel that a preponderance, even a great preponderance, of the evidence was in favor of the party to whom the judgment in the habeas corpus court was adverse, would not authorize the former court for that reason to disturb the judgment rendered, inasmuch as the latter, and not the former, is the tribunal, clothed with discretionary power. In a case like the one at bar we have to decide whether the evidence was such in its range, or because of conflicts therein, as to allow an exercise of discretion. An affirmative answer to that question requires that the judgment be affirmed.

It is unnecessary, as it would not be helpful to any one, to set forth, even in the most compact form, a statement of the facts in the case. It is enough to say that there were many facts testified to by witnesses, which, taken collectively and considered together with all the deductions that might be legitimately drawn therefrom, compel the conclusion that the court below cannot be held to have clearly transgressed the limits of his discretionary power, with the exercise of which he is charged by the law, in finding that the custody of his infant son should be denied to this applicant. It might be well urged by the plaintiff in error that, even if the evidence authorized the conclusion that the plaintiff's conduct was on a former occasion such as to indicate his unfitness to have the custody and care of his son, there is the testimony of many witnesses to show that for several months prior to the institution of these proceedings he had lived an exemplary life, and that his conduct had been above reproach. But, however strongly this might appeal to us if we were the trial court, we must still recognize the fact that all of this was addressed to the sound discretion of another tribunal, which, under the evidence that authorized it, having found that the plaintiff by his conduct had divested himself of the character of one fit to have the control of the child, was not bound to find that he had been rehabilitated by evidence of good conduct during the period intervening between the time of the commission of those acts relied on to show his unfitness and the time of the trial which resulted in the judgment complained of. In holding that the judge did not abuse his discretion, it is not to be understood that we adjudicate that the father has forfeited for all time his right to the custody and control of his child. If in the future it should appear that the good conduct of the father, which had only continued a limited time when the trial took place, has continued for such a length of time that it would be reasonable to assume that the errors of the past would not probably again occur, or if there is any other change in the circumstances which show with reasonable certainty that the welfare of the child will be safeguarded under the father's custody, the judgment now rendered will not prevent the father from making an application for the custody of the child.

It was strongly urged in argument before us that "in every case, regardless of the character of the parties, the welfare of the child is the controlling and important fact." Having placed our decision, affirming the judgment, upon the ground that no abuse of discretion by the court below is shown, we think it unnecessary to discuss the doctrine just stated. We are content with saying that the doctrine as stated above requires important qualifications before becoming acceptable. Certainly, where the father is one of the parties to such a case, before the principle just stated becomes active, the father's prima facie right to the possession and control of the child should be shown to have been forfeited or at least very radically impaired.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 291)

CLARK v. KNOWLES.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 14, 1907.)

1. EJECTMENT—PLEADING—DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY.

"It is essential to the maintenance of an action of ejectment that the premises [sought to be recovered] be described with such certainty as that, in the event of a recovery by the plaintiff, a writ of possession issued upon the judgment and describing the premises as laid in the declaration shall so identify the premises sued for as that the sheriff, in the execution of the writ, can deliver the possession in accordance with its mandate." Harwell v. Foster, 97 Ga. 264, 22 S. E. 994. See, also, Turner v. Rives, 75 Ga. 606; McCullough v. East Tenn., Va. & Ga. Ry. Co., 106 Ga. 275, 32 S. E. 97.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 17, Ejectment, §§ 158-164.]

2. SAME—SUFFICIENCY.

Accordingly, where in a suit to recover land the petition described the premises sued for "as about fifty acres on the west side of or in the northwest corner of lot of land number five hundred and twenty-four in the eighth district of" a designated county, such petition was properly dismissed upon demurrer, on the ground that it contained no sufficient description of the premises sued for.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 17, Ejectment, §§ 158-164.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Colquitt County; R. G. Mitchell, Judge.

Action by T. J. Clark against L. A. Knowles. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

T. H. Parker and W. C. McCall, for plaintiff in error. J. A. Wilkes, for defendant in error.

FISH, C. J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 289)

MURRAY et al. v. McGUIRE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 14, 1907.)

DEEDS—CANCELLATION—RIGHT OF ACTION—PERSONS ENTITLED.

A petition by the sole heirs at law of the maker of a deed to cancel the deed is properly dismissed where it appears therefrom that the grantor left a will devising the same land, which will has been offered for probate, and a caveat thereto filed by the heirs at law, and the issue thereby made is still pending and undetermined in the court of ordinary.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Glynn County; T. A. Parker, Judge.

Action by Lucretia Murray and others against John J. McGuire. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs bring error. Affirmed.

Lucretia Murray and Charles T. Murray filed their petition in Glynn superior court against John J. McGuire, praying the cancellation of a certain deed. The salient features of the petition are that the plaintiffs are the widow and son, respectively, of John Murray, late of Glynn county, deceased, and are his sole heirs at law. The defendant is his nephew. It is alleged that the defendant claims that John Murray on May 17, 1900, signed, sealed, and delivered to him, upon an alleged consideration of $1,000, a deed to a described lot of land. The deed was recorded on June 21, 1900. It is further alleged that no actual consideration passed, and that the deed was never in fact signed, sealed, and delivered; but, if it was signed and delivered by him, it was void, because at the time of its execution John Murray was an imbecile and non compos mentis. It is charged that, in pursuance of a scheme to acquire the property of John Murray, the defendant in September, 1903, procured him to make an alleged will, by the terms of which the plaintiff Charles T. Murray was bequeathed a nominal sum, and the plaintiff Lucretia Murray a life estate in his realty, with remainder to the defendant. John Murray died on November 18, 1905. The alleged will had been filed in the court of ordinary of Glynn county for probate, and the plaintiffs had filed thereto in that court a caveat on the grounds of undue influence and want of capacity in the deceased to make a will, which caveat is now pending in that court. The plaintiffs were in possession of the land described in the deed at the time of its alleged execution, and have since been continuously in its possession. Copies of the deed and will are attached to the petition, and from the copy of the will it appears that plaintiff Lucretia Murray and the defendant are the nominated executors. The petition prayed that the deed be delivered up for cancellation, and for general relief. When the case was called for trial, the defendant made an oral motion to dismiss the petition, on the ground that no cause of action was therein set out. This motion was sustained, and the plaintiffs bring error.

D. W. Krauss and F. H. Harris, for plaintiff in error. Bennet & Conyers, for defendants in error.

EVANS, J. (after stating the facts as above). The plaintiffs sue as heirs at law of John Murray. Yet their petition discloses that he left a last will and testament, which has been offered for probate, and a caveat thereto filed, which is still pending and undetermined in the court of ordinary. If the will be admitted to probate, the land therein devised would pass under the will, and the plaintiffs, as distributees of John Murray, would have no interest in it. The will purports to convey the same land described in the deed. The petition is silent as to the person who offered the will for probate, but most probably it was offered by the defendant, because he was one of the nominated executors and the devisee of the testator's entire estate in remainder, and the only person interested in the estate, except the plaintiffs, who are objecting to the probate of the will. If the will is probated upon the application of the defendant, it may be that he would be put to his election to claim under the will or the deed. Civ. Code 1895, § 4013. If the will be probated, the maximum interest in the land which the widow can claim thereunder would be only a life estate, and a subsequent controversy may arise between herself and the defendant as to the validity of the deed sought to be canceled in this proceeding. In this controversy her co-plaintiff would have no interest; and her right to prosecute the suit would be, not as a distributee, but as a legatee under the will, or as a dowress. Hence the plaintiffs, as heirs at law, cannot maintain this proceeding to cancel the deed until it is determined that the decedent from whom they claim to derive their title died intestate. This issue cannot be collaterally tried in the superior court in the present proceeding. The court of ordinary has exclusive and original jurisdiction in the matter of the probate of wills. Civ. Code 1895, § 4232. Where a will has been proved in common form, the judgment of probate cannot be collaterally impeached in the superior court by any pleading attempting to raise the issue of devisavit vel non. Maund v. Maund, 94 Ga. 479, 20 S. E. 360; Langston v. Marks, 68 Ga. 435. The superior court has no power to set aside a will which has been admitted to record. Tudor v. James, 53 Ga. 302. For a stronger reason, the superior court is without jurisdiction to interfere with the court of ordinary in the probate of a will, in order to determine whether the person under whom the plaintiffs claim died testate or intestate.

As no cause of action was set out in the petition, the defendant could take advantage of the point by a motion in the nature of a general demurrer. Crew v. Hutcheson, 115 Ga. 534, 42 S. E. 16; O'Shields v. Ga. Pacific Ry. Co., 83 Ga. 621, 10 S. E. 268, 6 L. R. A. 152.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 326)

ROBINSON v. STATE

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 16, 1907.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW — INSTRUCTIONS — NEW TRIAL.

A verbal inaccuracy occurring in a charge, and immediately thereafter corrected, furnishes no ground for a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 1994, 1995.]

2. HOMICIDE—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where the only issue presented by the evidence was that of murder or justifiable homicide, the presiding judge correctly omitted to charge on the subject of voluntary manslaughter.

3. SAME—MALICE.

If the fact of a voluntary homicide is shown, unaccompanied by any circumstances of excuse or extenuation, malice is presumed.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 26, Homicide, § 268.]

4. CRIMINAL LAW — INSTRUCTIONS — ASSUMPTION OF FACTS.

Where the evidence showed without controversy or conflict that the deceased was shot by the accused, and the latter in his statement admitted that such was the fact, but sought to justify the act, there was no error in charging that, if the jury had a reasonable doubt as to whether the accused acted, when he shot, under circumstances calculated to excite the fears of a reasonable man, he should be acquitted. Such a charge was not open to objection on the ground that it contained an expression on the part of the court that the fact that the shooting of the deceased by the accused had been proved.

5. SAME—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—EXHIBITS.

Affidavits, attached as exhibits to a bill of exceptions after the certificate of the presiding judge, and not identified by his signature thereon, cannot be considered as evidence; and a ground of a motion for a new trial which is dependent upon such evidence cannot be considered.

6. SAME—STATEMENT OF ACCUSED.

Whether the presiding judge will permit counsel for the accused to call the attention of the latter, while making his statement or at its close, to some subject claimed to be pertinent to the case, and as to which he has made no statement, or whether the court will after wards allow the accused to make a second statement touching such subject, are matters which must rest in the discretion of the judge. In the present case it cannot be said that such discretion was abused.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

HOMICIDE—MALICE.

The ruling stated in the third headnote is a correct statement of law, but it is not applicable to the facts of this case. The evidence offered by the state to prove the homicide showed that the fatal shots were fired under such circumstances as rendered it proper to submit the question to the jury whether the defendant acted under the fears of a reasonable man that a felony was about to be committed upon his person. If the defendant shot the deceased, induced by such fears, there could be no malice; and under the ruling in the case of Mann v. State, 124 Ga. 760, 53 S. E. 324, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 934, the court should not have charged that malice was presumed upon proof of the killing.

(Per Atkinson, J., dissenting.)

Error from Superior Court, Polk County; Price Edwards, Judge.

Ed Robinson was convicted of murder, and brings error. Affirmed.

Janes & Hutchens and Wm. Janes, for plaintiff in error. W. K. Felder, Sol. Gen., and Jno. O. Hart, Atty. Gen., for the State.

LUMPKIN, J. 1. Ed Robinson was indicted and convicted of the offense of murder. His motion for a new trial was overruled, and he excepted. The motion and amended motion contained 21 grounds. Most of them present no question which it is necessary to discuss, and as to them it will suffice to say that none of them require a new trial. Only a few need be specially mentioned. In some of them there may have been slight verbal inaccuracies, or inapt expressions. Thus, at one time, in defining malice, the presiding judge said: "It is a deliberate intention unlawfully to take away human life, whether it springs from hatred, ill will, revenge, ambition, or drunkenness even, if such should be the case." But he at once corrected himself and informed the jury that there was no question of drunkenness arising under the evidence.

2. There was no evidence requiring a charge on the subject of manslaughter. The evidence showed that the man killed and a woman had been living together in unlawful cohabitation, but had separated. On the night of the homicide he went to the door of her house and knocked. When first asked who he was, he gave a false name, but subsequently gave his own name, and called the woman to the door. When she unlocked it, he pushed it open and entered the room, saying several times, "Strike a match." The defendant was in the room, and in bed at the time, though it was claimed that he was occupying a different bed from that in which the woman slept. Upon the deceased calling for a match, the accused fired twice with a pistol, killing him. There was no evidence that the deceased had any weapon. There was some evidence, introduced by the defendant, that the deceased had previously made threats as to what he would do if he caught any man in the room with the woman, and that the threats had been communicated to the defendant. The issue presented was murder or justifiable homicide. Presumably the presiding judge charged correctly on that issue, including the doctrine of reasonable fears. But there is nothing in the evidence which made it erroneous not to charge the law in regard to voluntary manslaughter.

3. The court charged as follows: "When a homicide or killing is shown, the law presumes malice. So, if you find from the testimony that, beyond a reasonable doubt, the defendant, Ed Robinson, in the county of Polk, on the day named in the bill of indictment, or at any other time before the finding of the bill of indictment in this case, did unlawfully, willfully, and of his malice aforethought kill and murder Charlie Hollifield, by shooting him, the said Charlie Hollifield, with a certain pistol, as charged in the bill of indictment, and nothing further appears in the case, it would be your duty to find the defendant guilty." At other parts of his charge he also referred to the presumption of malice from the commission of the homicide. Under the facts presented by the evidence, there was no error in the charge. The case is controlled by that of Mann v. State, 124 Ga. 760, 53 S. E. 324, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 934. In that case Mr. Justice Evans said: "In the first instance, when the fact of a voluntary homicide is shown, unaccompanied by any circumstances of excuse or extenuation, malice is presumed, and the court may so charge. Also, where the homicide is established by evidence, some of which excludes any inference of alleviation, while mitigation may be inferred from some of the circumstances, it is proper to instruct the jury that the law presumes malice from the proof of the killing, unless the evidence shows alleviation or justification, and leave it to the jury to decide the issue of fact as to whether the killing was with or without extenuating circumstances. As was said by Simmons, J., in Vann's Case [83 Ga. 44, 9 S. E. 945]: 'If the proof that shows the killing itself discloses that it was done without malice, of course, the presumption does not exist; but, if the accompanying proof does not, then the burden is thrown upon the defendant to show that it was done without malice.' It is not incumbent on the accused to prove an absence of malice, where the evidence for the prosecution shows facts which will excuse the homicide or reduce its grade." The evidence was not such as to render this charge erroneous. It may be presumed that the general law of the case was charged, including the doctrine of reasonable doubt.

4. Error was alleged because in one part of the charge the judge said: "If you have a reasonable doubt as to whether the defendant, Ed Robinson, acted, when he shot, under circumstances calculated to excite the fears of a reasonable man," etc. The objection to this charge was that it was an expression on the part of the court that the fact of the shooting of the deceased by the defendant had been proved. All the evidence showed without controversy that the deceased was shot by the accused, and the latter in his statement also admitted that such was the fact, but sought to justify the act by asserting that the deceased had something in his hand and was advancing upon the accused, that when he went into the room he threatened to kill any one who might be there, and that the accused was frightened. Under the circumstances, the charge furnished no ground for a new trial.

5. One ground of the motion for a new trial was to the effect that one of the jurors who tried the defendant had been a member of the coroner's jury who held the inquest over the body of the deceased, that a verdict was then rendered which charged the defendant with the murder, that the juror answered the questions on the voir dire in such manner as to qualify himself, and that neither the defendant nor his counsel had any knowledge or mode of ascertaining, until after the trial, that such juror had been a member of the coroner's jury. In the bill of exceptions it was recited that the defendant introduced, in support of his motion, certain affidavits in regard to the juror. The names of the affiants were stated, and it was added that the affidavits were "copied and hereto attached and made a part of the record, marked Exhibits A, B, C, D, and E." It was then alleged that certain counter affidavits were introduced on behalf of the state; the names of the affiants being given, and it being recited that they were attached to the bill of exceptions and marked Exhibits F, G, and H. After the certificate of the judge, and the acknowledgment of service by counsel, there appear, attached to the bill of exceptions, affidavits which are marked with letters from A to H consecutively; but none of these are identified by the judge's signature upon them. According to the often-repeated rulings of this court, this is not a sufficient identification to authorize such attached papers to be considered by us. What precedes the certificate of the judge as a part of the bill of exceptions is identified by it. What follows the certificate, purporting to be exhibits referred to in the body of the bill of exceptions, must be specially identified by the judge's signature. Merely to attach affidavits or other papers to a bill of exceptions after the judge's signature does not verify or identify such papers as having been attached at the time when the bill of exceptions was signed, or as being proper exhibits thereto, unless the judge places his signature upon them as being the exhibits referred to in the bill. The ground of the motion for a new trial which was dependent on this evidence cannot be considered.

6. The motion for a new trial stated that the court erred in refusing to allow defendant's counsel to call his attention to an important matter necessary to his defense, while the defendant was making his statement; the court saying: "Let him make such statement as he sees fit." Also, that, pending the opening argument of the state's counsel, defendant's counsel stated to the court that there was one matter about which the defendant wished to make a statement, that he (counsel) had called his client's attention to it, and that the accused wished to make a further statement, which the court declined to allow. The presiding judge may, in his discretion, permit counsel to call the attention of the defendant, while making his statement, or at its close, to some subject pertinent to the case as to which he has made no statement. In the present case, however, it does not appear what the subject-matter referred to was, or what it was desired the defendant should make an additional statement about. Matters of this character, including the allowance of an additional statement after the first, must rest to a considerable extent in the discretion of the presiding judge. We cannot say that such discretion was abused. See Echols v. State, 109 Ga. 508, 34 S. E. 1038; Walker v. State, 116 Ga. 540, 42 S. E. 787, 67 L. R. A. 426; Brown v. State, 58 Ga. 212; Dixon v. State, 116 Ga. 186, 42 S. E. 357; Cochran v. State, 113 Ga. 741, 39 S. E. 337.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur, except ATKINSON, J., who dissents.

(129 Ga. 349)

CENTRAL OF GEORGIA RY. CO. v. RAY.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 16, 1907.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT—MACHINERY IN USE—ORDINARY DILIGENCE.

A railroad company, relatively to its employees, is bound to exercise ordinary care in furnishing machinery equal in kind to that in general use and reasonably adapted to the uses to which it is put; and its liability in this respect is limited to a failure to discharge this duty. It is therefore erroneous to charge the jury that if they believe that the engine which killed the plaintiff's husband, for whose homicide the plaintiff sues for damages, was of the kind in general use and reasonably suited for the business for which it was in use, then it would be for them to determine whether or not, "in having one of that character," the railroad company had exercised ordinary care and diligence.

2. DEATH—DAMAGES—INSTRUCTIONS.

The judge may refer, in his charge on the subject of estimating damages for the value of a life, to the decrease in the earning capacity which naturally results from advancing age, probable loss of employment, and inability to constantly labor and secure continuous work. Juries are presumed to be as cognizant of the common phenomena of human experience as the judge; and, if their attention is specially desired to be directed thereto, a timely written request should be made.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Death, § 145.]

3. TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS.

The other attacks on excerpts from the charge relate more to the form of expression than to a misapprehension of the correct rules of law; and, as the attention of the trial judge has been called thereto, they probably will receive due consideration on the next trial.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

MASTER AND SERVANT—MACHINERY IN USE.

In respect to the character of the machinery employed by the railroad company, the whole duty of the company to the plaintiff's husband was not necessarily discharged by employing an engine and tender "equal in kind to that in general use and reasonably adapted to the uses" in which they were employed. The qualification to the charge mentioned in the first head-note did not authorize a reversal of the judgment.

(Per Atkinson, J., dissenting.)

Error from Superior Court, Bibb County; W. H. Felton, Jr., Judge.

Action by Emma Ray against the Central of Georgia Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

Mrs. Emma Ray brought her action for damages against the Central of Georgia Railway Company for the negligent killing of her husband, and the jury returned a verdict in her favor. Her petition alleged that her husband was, at the time he was killed, in the employment of the railway company, and engaged in work with an engine used at the time in switching cars in the yards of the company at Macon, Ga. It was his duty to go with the engine and change the switches, that the engines might pass from one track to another in moving cars in the yard. While engaged in changing a switch, that the engine with which he was at work might change to another track, and just as he had straightened himself up and partially turned around, he was struck by another engine of the company, thrown upon the track, and killed. The nature of the work required that it should be done hurriedly. The switch was what is known as a "ground switch," and was worked by a lever which was kept in place by a heavy weight; and, in order to change it, it was necessary that the deceased should place himself in a stooping position, lift the lever and weight attached from the ground, and throw it to the opposite side of the switch. The switch in question was located within about 10 inches of where an engine passing on the next track would extend. At the time he was engaged in this work his back was to the engine, which was approaching him from the rear, and he did not and could not have discovered the approach of the engine before he was struck by it. He was or should have been in plain view, if proper lookout had been kept by persons in charge of this engine; and, if proper care had been used, his position of danger could have been discovered by those in charge of the engine, whose duty it was to have discovered him and stopped in time to prevent the injury, or at least to have given him warning of its approach. No bell was rung or whistle sounded to give her husband notice of the engine's approach, and at the time her husband was killed the engine was being run at from 10 to 15 miles an hour, which was a dangerous rate of speed at that place, and in violation of a valid municipal ordinance of the city of Macon, which made it unlawful to run an engine at this place at a greater rate of speed than 5 miles an hour, and by reason of the violation of this ordinance her husband was run down and killed. The deceased was entirely free from fault, and his death was caused entirely by the negligence of the agents and employes of the railroad company in placing the switch so near the track, and in running upon him without any warning whatsoever, and in violation of the city ordinance. The earning capacity and expectancy of deceased were also set forth.

By an amendment the plaintiff alleged that the engine which struck the deceased was so constructed that it was impossible for the employes running the engine backwards to keep a lookout or observe the track, because the tender was so high and wide that it completely obstructed and shut out the view of the track from those in charge of the engine, and made it impossible for them to see any one upon the track in the rear of the tender, when the engine was run backwards. The engine which struck her husband was being run backwards, and no proper lookout was kept on the rear of the engine to give warning of its approach, or give notice to those in charge of the same of its close proximity to persons on the track. At the time deceased was killed several engines of defendant were being run in that portion of the yard, and the employes engaged in work in this yard were compelled to be constantly upon the tracks of the company in this yard. This switch was negligently placed by the defendant so near the main line or lead track in the yards as to make it dangerous to the employes of the company who were required to work therein, for the reason that employes engaged at that switch were always in danger of being struck by engines and cars of the company running along the adjacent track; and this switch was unnecessarily and negligently placed in this dangerous position, and maintained there, in utter disregard to the safety of its employes who were called upon to discharge their duties in this yard. It was the duty of the company to furnish the deceased a safe place in which to work, and in placing this switch in such dangerous proximity to this track the company failed in this duty. The company, knowing of the dangerous position of the switch, and that the deceased would be called upon, in the discharge of his duties, to work at this switch, owed him the duty of giving him warning of the approach of its engine at that time and place. This switch was so placed that by reason of a curve in the track at that place the view was obstructed by cars standing in the yard, making it impossible to discover an approaching train until it was within a very few feet of the switch. The defendant denied the alleged negligence; and to the verdict and judgment in the plaintiff's favor it filed a motion for a new trial, which was overruled, and it excepted.

Wimberly & Jordan and Jno. I. & J. E. Hall, for plaintiff in error. Jno. R. Cooper, Jos. H. Hall, and Warren Roberts, for defendant in error.

EVANS, J. (after stating the facts as above). In the amendment to the petition it was alleged that the engine which killed the plaintiff's husband was so constructed that it was impossible for the employes running the engine backwards to keep a lookout, or observe the track, because the tender was so high and wide that it completely obstructed and shut out the view of the track from those in charge of the engine, and made it impossible for them to see any one upon the track in the rear of the tender, when the engine was being run backwards. From the instruction given on this feature of the plaintiff's case it is quite evident that the trial judge construed (and properly so) this allegation as an averment that the engine was not adjusted to the work of switching cars, where the engine was generally employed in moving both backward and forward, and the employment of an engine so constructed might be considered by the jury on the issue of the exercise of ordinary care by the defendant in the operation of an engine so constructed. The court charged: "Relatively to that question as to the construction of the engine, if the jury believe that the engine was of the kind in general use and reasonably suited to the business for which it was in use, then it would be for you to determine whether or not, in having one of that character, they had exercised ordinary care and reasonable care and diligence." This charge is alleged to be erroneous, because, if the jury should believe that the engine was of a kind in general use and reasonably suited to the business for which it was in use, they should not have been instructed that they might infer that the mere having an engine of this description was a failure to exercise ordinary care in the selection of one of this type. We think the charge is open to the criticisms made of it. A railroad company, relatively to its employes, is bound to exercise ordinary care in furnishing machinery equal in kind to that in general use and reasonably adapted to the uses to which it is put. Alabama Midland Ry. Co. v. Guilford, 119 Ga. 523, 46 S. E. 655; Reed v. M., K. & T. Ry. Co., 94 Mo. App. 371, 68 S. W. 364. Its liability in this respect is limited to a failure to discharge this legal duty. Atlanta, etc., Air Line Ry. Co. v. Ray, 70 Ga. 674. This instruction was calculated to harm the defendant. The plaintiff charged the defendant with negligence (1) in selecting and using this type of engine, and (2) in operating it without lookouts. The defendant contended in reply that it had selected a type of engine such as was in general use and reasonably suited to the use to which it was put, and that the plaintiff's husband knew it operated this engine without lookouts or warnings, and that his death resulted because he was at a place where it was not his duty to be and from his own failure to exercise ordinary care for his safety. The jury may have believed, under the evidence and the instruction of the court, that the defendant was not negligent in the operation of the engine; yet they were told in effect that, even if the engine was of standard type and was reasonably suited to the use to which it was put, still they might find the defendant negligent "in having one of that character."

2. Complaint is made of an omission of the court, when charging on the subject of damages, to call the attention of the jury to the decrease in the earning capacity which naturally results from advancing age, probable loss of employment, and inability to labor and to secure work. In the process of reaching a correct result from the evidence, juries may take into consideration such universal experiences in human life as criteria in weighing the evidence in the particular case. The judge may refer in his charge to such matters as the plaintiff in error complains he omitted in this case. Fla. C. R. Co. v. Burney, 98 Ga. 1, 26 S. E. 730. The jury are presumed to be as cognizant of these common phenomena of human experience as the judge; and, if their attention is especially desired to be directed thereto, a timely written request should be made.

3. The attack on the other charges complained of relates more to the form of expression than to a misapprehension of the correct rules of law, and on the next trial the judge in all probability will so adjust his expressions as to relieve them of the criticism made in the assignments of error.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur, except ATKINSON, J., who dissents.

(129 Ga. 258.)

EDALGO, Town Collector, et al. v. SOUTHERN RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 13, 1907.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—PLEADING—UNCONSTITUTIONALITY OF STATUTE.

An allegation that a given statute is unconstitutional, in that it violates the constitutional provision which prohibits the passage of a special law in any case for which provision has been made by an existing general law, which fails to point out the general law which is claimed to cover the same subject as such statute, presents no question for decision by this court.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 10, Constitutional Law, § 44.]

2. SCHOOLS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS—CREATION—REPEAL OF STATUTE.

The act approved August 22, 1905, creating the Jenkinsburg public school district (Acts 1905, p. 473), was repealed by the general act providing for the creation of local tax district schools, approved August 23, 1905 (Acts 1905, p. 425), as amended by the act approved August 21, 1906 (Acts 1906, p. 61).

3. STATUTES—AMENDMENTS.

An act dealing with a single subject-matter, but with two phases of the same, which is held valid as to one phase, but inoperative as to the other, may be amended by an act relieving the defects applicable to the one portion, so as, in the single act, to complete the scheme of the original act.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, Statutes, § 202.]

4. SAME—REPEALS BY IMPLICATION—LOCAL TAX DISTRICT SCHOOLS.

The act approved August 23, 1905 (Acts 1905, p. 425), as amended by the act approved August 21, 1906 (Acts 1906, p. 61), providing for the creation of local tax district schools, and popularly known as the "McMichael School Law," is not unconstitutional or otherwise invalid for any of the objections urged against it in the present case.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, Statutes, §§ 209, 210.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Butts County;
E. J. Reagan, Judge.

Action by the Southern Railway Company to enjoin J. S. Edalgo, town collector, and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants bring error. Affirmed.

This was an application by the Southern Railway Company to enjoin the tax receiver and collector of Jenkinsburg public school district and the sheriff of Butts county from proceeding to collect two tax executions for school tax alleged to be due by the railway company to the authorities of said district, one for the year 1905, and the other for the year 1906. The judge granted an injunction, and the defendants excepted. The case was submitted to the judge upon the petition, a demurrer thereto, and the answer. The petition and answer were each verified, and they disclosed no issue of fact. The case turns entirely on questions of law growing out of the undisputed facts, and these arise out of certain legislative enactments. Jenkinsburg public school district was incorporated under an act approved August 22, 1905. Acts 1905, p. 473. The district, as laid out, embraced territory lying in each of the counties of Butts and Henry. The town of Jenkinsburg, in Butts county, had been incorporated prior thereto. See Acts 1889, p. 876. The school district embraced territory not included in the town, for the town was wholly in Butts county. The act incorporating the school district provided for an election to ratify the act and to select school trustees, who were to discharge certain duties in the event the act was ratified; such election to be ordered immediately after the approval of the act. The trustees were authorized to levy a tax for school purposes, and to elect a tax receiver and collector. The trustees were authorized to provide a digest, upon which the receiver and collector was to enter all property in the district subject to taxation in the manner prescribed in the act. There was no distinct mention of railroad property in the act, but it used the broad terms above referred to. The election was held and the act ratified, as contemplated by the act. The act was amended by an act approved August 21, 1906. Acts 1906, p. 470. The amending act contained a voluminous preamble reciting compliance with the details of the original act, and provided all the minute details in a scheme for the assessment and collection of taxes upon all classes of property, the property of railroad companies being specifically mentioned, and this, as well as all other property, was to be returned to the receiver and collector of the district. The executions now in question were issued after the date of the amending act. The original act was approved one day before the general act for the creation of local tax school districts; the latter act being approved August 23, 1905. Acts 1905, p. 425. The amending act was approved on August 21, 1906, the same day when the act amending the general act was approved. Acts 1906, pp. 61, 470.

The original Jenkinsburg district school act is attacked by the plaintiff and declared to be invalid for the following reasons, among others: (a) The act creates a school district embracing territory lying in two counties. (b) The local district school act was repealed by the general act approved the following day. (c) The local act is a special law in a case for which provision has been made by an existing general law. The amendment to the district school act is also attacked for various reasons. The defendants are at issue with the plaintiff on the questions of law raised by the petition, and they also attack the general acts and allege that they are invalid. The general act of 1905 is alleged to be unconstitutional for the following reasons: (a) It contains matter not indicated in the title. (b) It seeks to repeal and amend special acts not distinctly described. (c) It grants donations to chartered schools. (d) It seeks to give sectarian schools a portion of the public school fund. (e) The system for the district school, as to the amount of tax, collection of the same, and in other material particulars, is different from that provided when the whole county adopts the act, thus violating the provision of the Constitution that all taxation shall be uniform. (f) It provides for tuition against nonresident pupils, when the Constitution declares all public schools shall be free to all of the children of the state. (g) It authorizes the county board of education to increase the territory of a municipality for school purposes without submitting the question to a vote of the people of the new territory. (h) It seeks to disregard school districts in existence when the Constitution was adopted. (i) It lacks uniformity, in that, when new territory for school purposes is added to municipalities, the government of the school differs according to the population of the municipality.

(j) It provides for the removal of a school trustee by the board of education, where there is a provision in Pen. Code, § 291, for the removal of officers. (k) It vests the power of impeachment in the county board of education, when the Constitution vests the power solely in the Senate. The act of 1906, amending the general act, is also attacked and alleged to be invalid for the following reasons: (a) The amending act is subject to the same criticisms as made upon the original act in the foregoing subdivisions lettered (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), (f), (g), and (h). (b) The original act was void, and there was nothing to amend. (c) It provides a method for summoning a defaulting taxpayer before the county tax receiver, and no method of summoning a defaulter before the comptroller general.

Moore, Gordon & Branch and J. D. Kilpatrick, for plaintiffs in error. N. E. & W. A. Harris and McDaniel, Alston & Black, for defendant in error.

COBB, P. J. (after stating the facts as above). 1. The Jenkinsburg school district act was approved August 22, 1905 (Acts 1905, p. 473), which was one day before the general act for the laying out school districts was approved; and hence it cannot be said to be a special law in a case where provision had been made by an existing general law, so far as that general law is concerned. But there was, on August 22, 1905, a general law which made provision for the subject-matter dealt with by the Jenkinsburg act. That general law is contained in Pol. Code 1895, § 1353 et seq. It is there declared that each and every county shall compose one school district. The case, on its face, is therefore squarely within the ruling in Sellers v. Cox, 127 Ga. 246, 56 S. E. 284. But this point is not made with sufficient certainty in the petition for us to rest the case on that ruling. The petition avers that the local school act is a special law in a case where provision has been made by an existing general law, but it does not specify the general school law in the Code as that law. This was indispensable to raise the constitutional question. Sayer v. Brown, 119 Ga. 539, 46 S. E. 649 (5).

2. The Constitution of 1877 contained the following provision: "Authority may be granted to counties upon the recommendation of two grand juries, and to municipal corporations upon the recommendation of the corporate authority, to establish and maintain public schools in their respective limits, by local taxation; but no such local laws shall take effect until the same shall have been submitted to a vote of the qualified voters in each county or municipal corporation, and approved by a two-thirds vote of persons qualified to vote at such election; and the General Assembly may prescribe who shall vote on such question." Civ. Code 1895, § 5908. This provision clearly limited local school districts, so far as the taxing power was concerned, to two classes—counties and municipalities. The General Assembly had no authority to create other school districts and confer upon them taxing power. Barber v. Alexander, 120 Ga. 30, 47 S. E. 580. The constitutional provision above quoted was, in 1903, so amended as to read as follows: "Authority may be granted to counties, militia districts, school districts, and to municipal corporations, upon the recommendation of the corporate authority, to establish and maintain public schools in their respective limits by local taxation; but no such laws shall take effect until the same shall have been submitted to a vote of the qualified voters in each county, militia district, school district, or municipal corporation, and approved by two-thirds majority of persons voting at such election, and the General Assembly may prescribe who shall vote on such questions." This amendment adds two new classes of school districts—militia districts and school districts. The first are well-known and well-defined political divisions of the state. They are subdivisions of a county. Every militia district is wholly in one county. A militia district partly in two or more counties is unknown to the law, and would be an impossibility under our present system of political division. The school district is a new creation. It is an innovation. How must it be classified—as belonging to political divisions such as counties and militia districts, or with municipalities? A municipality may be located in two or more counties; but, whenever this has happened, confusion and inconvenience have inevitably resulted. It is to be noted that in the enumeration school districts follow counties and militia districts and precede municipal corporations. Is it not more reasonable that the people intended that their new political division, school districts, should be of the nature of the militia districts—that is, wholly within the limits of one county—than that they should take on the characteristics of the municipal corporation and be subject to all the confusion and inconvenience necessarily attending a political division rent asunder by a county line? It is by no means free from serious doubt that a school district can be laid out so as to embrace territory situated in two or more counties. But we will not rule the present case on this point, and our utterances on this subject are merely to call attention to the grave doubts that arise as to the power of the General Assembly to create school districts the territory of which is located in different counties.

It is to be noted that the general local tax school act of 1905 had a provision for such school districts, but this clause was stricken by the amending act of 1906. The Constitution declares: "There shall be a thorough system of common schools for the education of children in the elementary branches of an English education only, as nearly uniform as practicable, the expenses of which shall be provided for by taxation, or otherwise. The school shall be free to all children of the state, but separate schools shall be provided for the white and colored races." Civ. Code 1895, § 5906. The uniformity required is that which is practicable, taking into consideration the object to be accomplished, that the instrumentalities are to be provided in local subdivisions of the state, and also the exception of existing local systems from the new scheme. While absolute uniformity is impracticable, and this the Constitution recognizes, still that uniformity is the constitutional desideratum must not be lost sight of, and an utter disregard of all effort at uniformity will not be tolerated. The general act of 1905, as amended by the act of 1906, provides a system where the school district is recognized as merely a subdivision of the county. No school district, located partly in two or more counties, is contemplated. Local school systems in municipalities are recognized, and provision is made for the enlargement of the territory of municipalities for school purposes, as well as the management of such systems. The act authorizes local taxation for school purposes in three political subdivisions of the state—counties, school districts created within a given county, and municipalities. The municipality is left where it always has been—a political subdivision of the state, whose extent and limits are determined by its charter or laws amendatory thereof, either general or special in their nature. The location of the municipality as to county lines is immaterial. It may be in one county only. It may be in two or more counties. But as a municipality of whatever grade or class, no matter where located, it is entitled to the rights of local taxation for school purposes upon compliance with the Constitution and the laws. The school district, under the uniform plan called for by the act, must be a subdivision of a county. The act as amended was intended to be exhaustive, and there is no exception stated therein as to school districts such as are not wholly situated within one of the counties of this state. The act declares: "That within thirty days after the passage of this act, or as soon thereafter as practicable, it shall be the duty of the county board of education of each county in Georgia to lay off the county into school districts, the lines of which shall be clearly and positively defined by boundaries, such as creeks, public roads, land lots, district lines, or county lines." Acts 1906, p. 66. If this language is not broad enough to clearly indicate a legislative intent to abolish all school districts other than those provided for in the act, all doubts as to such intent vanish when we consider the following language, which appears in the same section of the act: "The county board of education, in laying off the county, shall disregard any school districts embracing territory not included in incorporated towns heretofore created by special act of the Legislature."

Was the local act creating the Jenkinsburg school district repealed by the later general act? Repeals by implication are not favored. It has been by some doubted whether there could be such a repeal under the present Constitution. Montgomery v. Board, 74 Ga. 42-44. But it is now settled that there can be a repeal by implication. However, before such a repeal will result, the later statute must be clearly repugnant to a former statute and so irresistibly inconsistent therewith that the two cannot stand together, or it must be clear, from the terms of the later statute, that there was a legislative intent to cover the subject-matter of the former statute and have the later statute operate as a substitute therefor. The intention to repeal must be clear and unmistakable. Johnson v. Sou. Ass'n, 97 Ga. 622, 25 S. E. 358. Ordinarily a general law will not have the effect to repeal a prior local law, unless the local law be specially named or necessarily embraced in the terms used in the general law. Still, where the legislative intent to repeal is clear and manifest, a repeal of the local law will result. Pausch v. Guerrard, 67 Ga. 319. See, also, Crovatt v. Mason, 101 Ga. 252, 28 S. E. 891; Western & Atlantic R. Co. v. Atlanta, 113 Ga. 554, 38 S. E. 996, 54 L. R. A. 294. A repeal of a prior local law by a subsequent general law will not result from mere implication. But such a repeal always results when the legislative intent to repeal is clear and manifest. There can be no doubt that the General Assembly intended the act of 1905, as amended by the act of 1906, to be exhaustive of the subject of the creation and location of school districts, and that all school districts embracing territory not included within the limits of municipalities created prior thereto should be abolished. The Jenkinsburg school district, while embracing the territory of the incorporated town of Jenkinsburg, ignored the municipality, and not only embraced territory not included therein, but actually extended into another county. Such a school district has no right to live under the provisions of the subsequent general law. The Jenkinsburg school district act was repealed by the general law of later date.

3. It is contended, however, that no repeal of the local act was effected, for the reason that the general law was itself invalid. It is said that the general act of 1905 was void, and hence the amending act of 1906 is also void, for the reason that there was no law of which it was amendatory. The general act of 1905 dealt with one subject-matter—local taxation for school purposes. Two phases of this subject-matter were attempted to be dealt with—local taxation by counties, and local taxation by school districts. That portion relating to taxation by counties was held to be complete and operative. Georgia R. Co. v. Hutchinson, 125 Ga. 762, 54 S. E.

725. That portion relating to local taxation by school districts was held to be inoperative. Brown v. Sou. Ry. Co., 125 Ga. 772, 54 S. E. 729. The entire act was not held to be void. It was therefore competent for the General Assembly to amend the act by relieving it of the infirmity which affected only one portion thereof, and thus by amendment complete the scheme attempted in the original act. It is true that the title of the amending act, in reciting the title of the original act, inserted the words "districts or," preceding the word "counties"; but the title of the original act is correctly quoted in the body of the amending act, and the act of which it is amendatory is so clearly shown in other ways that this error in the title will not affect the validity of the amending act.

4. It remains now to consider the numerous objections raised to the validity of the general act. The defects in the original act, so far as it related to the school districts, which were pointed out in the case of Brown v. Railway Co., supra, were cured by the amending act of 1906. The school district system is therefore to date from the passage of that act. If it was a valid act, the prior local act creating the Jenkinsburg school district was repealed. The acts amending the general act and the local act were approved on the same day—August 21, 1906. For the purposes of this case it is not necessary to determine whether there is any presumption as to which first took effect. If the amendatory local act was first approved, it was immediately repealed by the subsequent general act. If the general act was first approved, the amendatory local act dealt with a subject covered by an existing general law. The objections raised to the original general act need not now be considered, unless the defects therein pointed out also appear in the amended act. It is the act as amended that is now the law, no matter what may have been the defects in the original act from which it sprang. It is alleged that the general act is void, because it contains matter not indicated in the title. What is such matter not being pointed out, no question is presented for decision by this assignment of error. The objection to the act is that it violates that portion of the Constitution (Civ. Code 1895, § 5779) which declares that no law or section of the Code shall be repealed or amended unless the act making such amendment or effecting such repeal distinctly describes the act to be amended or repealed. This provision of the Constitution has reference to repeals and amendments expressly made, and has no application to repeals by implication. Swift v. Van Dyke, 98 Ga. 725, 26 S. E. 59. The uniformity rule of the Constitution in reference to taxation and the collection of taxes is not infringed by the act merely for the reason that the scheme of taxation as to amount and method of collection is different when taxes are levied and collected for district schools from what it is when collected for county schools. The Constitution declares that the public schools shall be free to all the children of this state. When a system is provided where any child may be admitted free to a school in the territory where such child is domiciled, the mandate of the Constitution is satisfied. If a child desires to enter a school in any other territory, it is permissible to charge such child tuition for the privilege. The right of the school authorities to charge tuition for children who are nonresidents of the territory where the school is located has never been and cannot be seriously doubted. Irvin v. Gregory, 86 Ga. 605, 13 S. E. 120.

There are a number of other objections made to the general act, such as that school districts can be made up of municipalities and adjacent territory without an election on the subject of taxation; that the school system antedating the Constitution is to be affected; that donations and gratuities are granted to chartered schools; that sectarian schools are allowed to participate in the public school fund; that the provision for the removal of school trustees violates the provision of the Constitution vesting the sole power of impeachment in the Senate, as well as section 291 of the Penal Code, providing for the indictment of certain officers; and that the act does not operate uniformly over the entire state. These and other objections have been made to the general act, and insisted on in the brief of counsel; and we call attention to them simply to show that they have been under consideration and have been found untenable. We do not consider any of the objections urged against the general act of 1906, as amended by the act of 1906, well taken. The general act is a valid law, of uniform operation throughout the state, and had the effect to repeal all laws, general and special, which are so inconsistent with it that the prior laws and the new law cannot stand together. Such is the case with the Jenkinsburg school district act, and it was therefore repealed. The word "now," in the second line of the fourth section of the amended act of 1906, as that section appears in the recital of the act of 1905 as amended in Acts 1906, p. 69, is manifestly a clerical error. The word "not" appears in the third section of the act of 1905. Acts 1905, p. 427. The act of 1906 provides for striking out the third section of the act of 1905, and substituting a section "to be numbered 4," which contains the word "not." Acts 1906, p. 63.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 333.)

CICERO et al. v. SCAIFFE et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 15, 1907.)

1. COSTS—DISMISSAL—FAILURE OF PLAINTIFF TO PAY—ACTION AGAINST PLAINTIFF.

When the case of a plaintiff has been dismissed, nonsuited, or discontinued, he cannot as plaintiff, renew the suit without paying the costs or filing a pauper affidavit as to his inability to do so; but, if he is sued by the opposite party in a matter relating to the controversy in the former suit, he may, as defendant, file any defense which is appropriate to the suit, without reference to whether the costs of the former suit brought by him have been paid.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 13, Costa, § 1049.]

2. INJUNCTION—PARTIES ENTITLED TO—WANT OF INTEREST.

There was no equity in the petition, and this was a sufficient reason for the judge to refuse to grant the injunction or appoint a receiver.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Mitchell County; W. N. Spence, Judge.

Action by Dan and Charlotte Cicero against W. L. Scaife and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs bring error. Affirmed.

Dan and Charlotte Cicero brought an equitable petition against W. L. Scaife, Mary M. Scaife, and one McLeod, constable, alleging that Charlotte Cicero was the owner and in possession of two cows and calves and two steers, which were described in a possessory warrant proceeding sued out against petitioners by W. L. Scaife as agent for Mary M. Scaife; that prior to the issuance of the possessory warrant she had sold and delivered the cattle to Dasher, and if the cattle were taken from her possession she would be liable in damages to Dasher as warrantor of the title to the cattle; that W. L. Scaife, as agent for Mary Scaife, had brought suit in a justice's court against Dan Cicero on a note, payable to Scaife, agent, for the recovery of the alleged purchase money of the cattle; that the trial resulted in a verdict in favor of the defendant, which was affirmed on certiorari; that thereafter Scaife, as agent, brought an action of trover against Dan Cicero, and that this action was dismissed. It appears, from an exhibit attached to the petition, that it was dismissed for the reason that no title was shown in Scaife, but that title was in another party. Subsequently to all these proceedings a possessory warrant was sued out, the cattle seized, and are now in the possession of the constable, and the expense of feeding them will in a short time amount to more than their value. Scaife, agent, threatens to institute further proceedings against the plaintiffs. It is alleged that the identical question involved in the possessory warrant proceeding was involved and adjudicated in the other proceedings referred to, and the prayer of the petition is that the cattle be restored to Dasher or plaintiffs, that a receiver be appointed, and that Scaife, agent, be enjoined from prosecuting the possessory warrant case and instituting other proceedings. By amendment Charlotte Cicero alleged, that while she had contracted to sell and deliver the cattle to Dasher before the possessory warrant was sued out, as soon as said warrant was sued out Dasher refused to accept the cattle, and immediately notified plaintiffs that he would not take them, and that they have never been delivered to him, being simply in the possession of plaintiffs, who were croppers on the land owned by him. The defendants filed demurrers, both general and special, and also filed an answer, in which they denied title or legally acquired possession of the cattle in the plaintiffs, and also denied that the issue involved in the possessory warrant case was at all involved in the other suits. The answer averred that Mary M. Scaife was the owner of the cattle and entitled to the possession, and had been wrongfully deprived of the possession by the plaintiffs, and denied that it was the intention of defendants to institute any unwarranted proceedings against the plaintiffs. When the application for an injunction came on for a hearing, the plaintiffs moved to strike the answer, because the costs in the trover case referred to in the petition had not been paid. The judge overruled this motion, and the plaintiffs excepted. After hearing the evidence the judge passed an order refusing to grant the injunction prayed for, or to appoint a receiver; and the plaintiffs excepted.

Ernest M. Davis, for plaintiffs in error.
Sam. S. Bennet, for defendants in error.

COBB, P. J. (after stating the facts as above). 1. When a case has been terminated by a nonsuit, dismissal, or discontinuance, before the plaintiff can renew his suit, he must either pay the costs or file an affidavit as to his inability to pay them. Civ. Code 1895, § 5043; Acts 1901, p. 80. The rule laid down in the Code section and the act just cited is applicable only where the plaintiff in the former suit seeks, as plaintiff, to bring a new suit on the same cause of action. It has no application whatever in a case where the defendant, either as a matter of defense or by way of cross-action, sets up facts involved in the former suit in which he was the plaintiff, which had been nonsuited, dismissed, or discontinued. He cannot come into court voluntarily as plaintiff with a renewal of the suit, without paying the costs of the former suit or making the affidavit of inability to do so; but, when brought into court as a defendant, he may in his answer set up any matter which is pleadable as a defense, or by way of cross-action, that may be appropriate to such suit against him. Hence there was no error in overruling the motion to strike the answer on the ground that the costs of the trover suit, in which the defendant in the present suit was the plaintiff, had not been paid.

2. The original petition showed upon its face that the plaintiffs were not the owners of the property in controversy, and hence they were not in position to bring a suit which involved title and ownership. The mere fact that it appeared that one of the plaintiffs was formerly the owner, and that she would be bound on her warranty of the title to her purchaser, did not constitute a sufficient reason for the interposition of a court of equity in her behalf. If the facts set up in the petition were sufficient to authorize the equitable relief prayed for, they would be sufficient to defeat any action that might be brought against her for the breach of her warranty. By amendment it was in effect alleged that the sale of the property set out in the original petition had been rescinded before the suit was filed, and that one of the plaintiffs was the real owner. This amendment was properly allowed, but the admission made in the original petition could be, and was, used as evidence against her. It is contended that the issue involved in the possessory warrant case is the same as that which was involved in the other suits. This is not correct. The only question involved in the possessory warrant proceeding is one of possession, and the question of title is not involved.

It is contended that the question of title was adjudicated in the former case. Even if this was true, such an adjudication would not necessarily bar a possessory warrant proceeding. It is legally possible for one to be entitled to the immediate possession of personalty as against another, although the other may have the legal title to the property. The person to whom the possession of property is awarded in a possessory warrant proceeding is required by law to give bond to have the property forthcoming to answer any suit that may be brought against him by his adversary within four years. Civ. Code 1895, § 4802. The very purpose of this statute is to protect the holder of the legal title in the event his adversary is the one to whom the law allows the immediate possession, notwithstanding the outstanding legal title. Of course, the question of title was directly involved in the trover suit, but it appears that this case was not tried on its merits. The question of title may have been incidentally involved in the trial on the note. The claim of Scalfe is that he is entitled to the present possession of the property, and that he has been deprived of it under circumstances where the law will allow him to recover it in a summary manner by possessory warrant. This is the only question involved; and this question was not at all involved in either of the other proceedings, in any view of the matter. If upon the trial of the possessory warrant proceeding the property should be awarded to Scalfe, he will be required to give the bond required by the statute, which will protect the plaintiff, who alleges that she was the owner of the property. The mere fact that the property was in the possession of the constable while the possessory warrant proceeding was pending, and there was expense involved in keeping the animals, does not afford any reason for equitable relief. It certainly would be wise and just to allow a bond to be given by the defendant in a possessory warrant proceeding for the forthcoming of the property; but the statute does not allow this. Injustice may result from this defect in the law; but this gives no ground for equitable relief. See, in this connection, Sumner v. Bell, 118 Ga. 240, 44 S. E. 973. There was no equity in the petition, and the judge did not err in refusing to grant the injunction, or to appoint a receiver.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 286)

IVEY et al. v. CITY OF ROME et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 14, 1907.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—ANNEXATION OF TERRITORY—ELECTION—JUDICIAL INTERFERENCE.

When the General Assembly provides for an election to determine the question as to whether the territory of one municipality shall be annexed to the territory of another municipality, and no provision is made in the law for judicial interference, and there is no general law authorizing such interference, and the authority to interfere cannot be derived from the common law, a court of equity has no power or jurisdiction over the matter, and all questions arising out of the matter must be determined alone by the tribunal constituted by the General Assembly for that purpose.

2. JUDGES—POWERS IN VACATION—DISMISSAL—POWERS OF JUDGE IN VACATION.

The judge of the superior court has no authority to sustain a demurrer to an equitable petition, or motion to dismiss the same for want of equity, in vacation, prior to the term to which the case is returnable.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 29, Judges, § 112.]

3. WRIT OF ERROR—REVERSAL.

As the petition in the present case is clearly subject to dismissal, the judgment will be reversed, with direction that the order of dismissal be entered in term time.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 4589, 4591.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Floyd County; Moses Wright, Judge.

Action by J. E. Ivey and others against the city of Rome and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs bring error. Reversed, with directions.

See 55 S. E. 1034.

Ivey and others, as taxpayers of the town of East Rome, filed an equitable petition against the city of Rome and certain individuals, who were the mayor and councilmen of that city, alleging that in 1906 the General Assembly passed an act authorizing an election to be held in East Rome to determine whether that town should be annexed to the city of Rome; that the election was held, and the result was reported to be in favor of annexation by a vote of 65 to 63; that before reporting the result the managers recounted the vote, and this count resulted in 65 votes for and 64 votes against annexation; that 128 persons had voted at the election; that the managers removed 2 ballots against annexation from the box, and excluded them from the final count; that every vote for annexation was included in the count. Other irregularities in the count were set forth in the petition. It is alleged that the true result was a tie. The prayer of the petition was that the authorities of the city of Rome be restrained from declaring the result, and that at the final hearing a decree be entered that the scheme of annexation had been defeated. When this petition was presented to the judge, he declined to grant the restraining order, and merely issued a rule calling upon the defendants to show cause why the prayers of the petition should not be granted. By amendment to the petition certain irregularities in the proceedings of the mayor and council of the city of Rome were set forth. At the hearing, which was in vacation, and prior to the return term of the writ, the defendants moved to dismiss the entire proceeding, upon the ground that the court had no jurisdiction to entertain the same. The court sustained this motion, and dismissed the case. The plaintiffs excepted.

Henry Walker, for plaintiffs in error. Jno. W. & G. E. Maddox, for defendants in error.

COBB, P. J. (after stating the facts as above). 1. The bill of exceptions and record in this case were filed in the office of the clerk of the Supreme Court during the October term, 1906, and were by the clerk entered upon the docket of that term as a fast writ of error. The case was reached in its order, and argument was had; and when the court took the case under consideration it reached the conclusion that it was improperly docketed as a fast writ of error, and by order the case was transferred to the docket of the present term. Ivey v. Rome, 126 Ga. 806, 55 S. E. 1084. Further argument was had during the present term, and the case is now ripe for decision. By an act approved August 20, 1906 (Acts 1906, p. 1010), the charter of the city of Rome was so amended as to extend its corporate limits to include all of the territory then lying in the corporate limits of East Rome. It was provided that this act should not become effective until the same was approved by a majority of the voters of East Rome who registered and qualified themselves to vote according to certain provisions of the act. The manner in which the election should be held was also prescribed, and it was provided the managers of the election should file a report of the result of the same, together with the tally sheets and ballots, with the mayor and council of the city of Rome at their next regular meeting after the election, and if, upon examination of the report, it should appear that a majority of the persons voting at the election voted in favor of annexation, the mayor and council of the city of Rome should by resolution declare the territory of the town of East Rome annexed to the city of Rome from and after the 1st day of January, 1907, and it was declared to be the duty of the mayor to issue a proclamation to that effect. The act does not provide for any contest of the election. The duty is imposed upon the managers to hold the election, ascertain the result, and report the same to the authorities of the city of Rome, and, in the event that the report showed that a majority of the voters had voted in favor of annexation, the duty was imposed upon the city authorities to so declare by resolution, and it was the duty of the mayor, after such resolution was passed, to make proclamation to that effect. The petition seeks to raise questions as to the effect of irregularities in the manner of conducting the election, counting the vote, and declaring the result. In other words, it is sought by the petitioners to have a court of equity hear and determine a contest of this election. The judge of the superior court in the first instance, and the judge and jury of 12 men in the second instance, are called upon to determine questions which, under the act of the General Assembly, were to be determined by the managers of the election in the manner prescribed in the act. The general rule is that, where the lawmaking power provides for an election to determine any question which it is legitimate and proper to submit to a popular vote, and no provision is made in the law for judicial interference, and there is no general law authorizing such interference, and the right to interfere cannot be derived from the common law, neither a court of law nor a court of equity has any power or jurisdiction over the matter, and all questions arising out of such election must be determined alone by the tribunal constituted by the lawmaking power for that purpose. The courts are powerless to interfere, unless the Legislature should see proper to confer such power on them. Caldwell v. Barrett, 73 Ga. 604; Skrine v. Jackson, 73 Ga. 377; Ogburn v. Elmore, 121 Ga. 72, 48 S. E. 702. The petition set forth no cause of action whatever, and was subject to dismissal for this reason.

2. No formal demurrer to the petition seems to have been filed, but a motion was made to dismiss the same, upon the ground that there was no equity therein. This was, in effect, a demurrer to the petition. The motion was made, and an order was passed sustaining the same, in vacation, and before the return term of the case. The case was subject to dismissal, but the judge was without authority to sustain the demurrer to the petition, or the motion to dismiss the same for want of equity, in vacation, preceding the first term of the case. This seems to be well settled. Johnson v. Cravey, 120 Ga. 1047, 48 S. E. 424; Stewart v. Stewart, 89 Ga. 133, 15 S. E. 23; Old Hickory

Dist. Co. v. Bleyer, 74 Ga. 201. But it is said that the petition was so palpably without merit that the judge had authority to strike it from the files of the court. It is unquestionably within the power of the judge to strike any proceeding from the files of the court, when it is apparent that the same is not within the jurisdiction of his court; but this power to strike must be exercised at the time when the judge is authorized, under the law, to exercise the powers of a judge in reference to the case. He has no more power to strike the case from the files of the docket in vacation than he would have to sustain a demurrer or a motion to dismiss; the effect and consequence of these proceedings being the same. The judge reached the right result, but at the wrong time. The judgment must be reversed, but direction will be given that the order dismissing the case be entered in term time.

Judgment reversed, with direction. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 290)

TOWN OF EAST ROME v. CITY OF ROME
et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 14, 1907.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — ACTIONS AGAINST.

A municipal corporation can be sued only in the corporate name set forth in the charter. Town of Dexter v. Gay, 115 Ga. 765, 42 S. E. 94; Augusta Sou. Ry. Co. v. Tennille, 119 Ga. 804, 47 S. E. 179.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 36, Municipal Corporations, § 2198.]

2. SAME.

When the General Assembly, by an act incorporating a town, declares that it shall be "known and called the town of East Rome," and that the corporate name of said town shall be "the mayor and council of the town of East Rome," by which name it may sue and be sued, such a town can sue and be sued only in the name last referred to; and a suit brought in the name of "the town of East Rome" should be dismissed on demurrer. Town of Dexter v. Gay, supra; Acts 1882-83, p. 411.

3. PLEADING—AMENDMENTS.

A suit of the character above indicated, not being brought in the name of a natural person, a corporation, or a partnership, was a mere nullity; and there was nothing in the petition in such a suit to support an amendment of any character whatever. Western & Atlantic R. Co. v. Dalton Marble Works, 122 Ga. 774, 50 S. E. 978, and cases cited.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 36, Municipal Corporations, § 2198.]

4. DISMISSAL—TIME OF ENTRY.

The petition was not amendable, as there was nothing to amend by, and the suit was a nullity; but the court should not have dismissed the same in vacation, before the return term, and the judgment will be reversed, with direction that the order of dismissal be entered in term. Ivey v. Rome (Ga.) 58 S. E. 852.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Floyd County; Moses Wright, Judge.

Action by the town of East Rome against the city of Rome and others. From a judgment of dismissal, plaintiff brings error. Reversed, with directions.

Henry Walker, for plaintiff in error. Jno. W. & G. E. Maddox, for defendants in error.

COBB, P. J. Judgment reversed, with direction. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 825)

ASKEW v. THOMPSON.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 15, 1907.)

1. PLEADING—AMENDMENT—NEW CAUSE OF ACTION.

The demurrer to the amendment to the petition on the ground that it sought to add a new cause of action was properly overruled.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 39, Pleading, §§ 686-709.]

2. MORTGAGES—PAROL EVIDENCE TO EXPLAIN DEED.

A deed absolute in form may be shown by parol evidence to have been intended as security only, where the grantee has not taken possession of the property. Accordingly, the amendment to the petition was not demurrable on the ground that it was an effort to vary the written terms of an absolute deed.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 35, Mortgages, § 98.]

3. PLEADING—DEMURRER.

A ground of demurrer which does not present for decision any distinct question is not properly taken.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 39, Pleading, §§ 475, 476.]

4. TENDER—PLEADING—SUFFICIENCY.

The petition set forth a cause of action, and the special demurrers not specifically dealt with in the foregoing notes were sufficiently met by amendment.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 45, Tender, § 69.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Calhoun County; W. N. Spence, Judge.

Action by Elizabeth Thompson against Benjamin H. Askew. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

In May, 1906, Elizabeth Thompson brought an equitable petition against Benjamin H. Askew, the substance of which, so far as material to the consideration of the points made in the record before us, was as follows: On January 25, 1889, petitioner conveyed to defendant certain described realty; a copy of the instrument of conveyance being attached to the petition as an exhibit. This copy showed the conveyance to have been an unconditional warranty deed for the expressed consideration of $500. According to the allegation of the second paragraph of the petition "said deed was made and delivered to said Askew upon the express contract and agreement, then and there made, that said Askew would reconvey said land to said petitioner at any time during her natural life, upon her repayment to him of the sum of $500, with interest thereon from the date of said deed." The third paragraph alleged: "Petitioner has remained in possession of said land ever since the date of the making of said deed, receiving rents and profits therefrom, claiming it as her own, with the acquiescence, knowledge, and consent of said B. H. Askew, subject only to the payment to him of said indebtedness." The fourth paragraph alleged: "On the 4th day of October, 1905, said Elizabeth Thompson tendered to said B. H. Askew the full amount of the principal and interest due upon said indebtedness and demanded from him a deed of reconveyance of said property, and, although not denying his contract and agreement, he has neglected, failed and refused to" reconvey the property to petitioner. Continuing tender of the $500, with interest thereon from the date of the deed, was alleged. The petition was demurred to generally and specially. The grounds of special demurrer were: (a) That the petition failed to set out a cause of action "with sufficient clearness and fullness to apprise defendant of the real nature of [plaintiff's] complaint, but is too general, vague, uncertain, and indefinite"; (b) that it failed "to set forth with fullness and clearness the contract therein referred to," and "to explain why and for what purpose [plaintiff] executed the deed, * * * what consideration, if anything, she received, or any other reason moving her to execute" the same; (c) no certain sum was alleged to have been tendered, and no proper tender was alleged; (d) the contract set forth was not alleged to have been in writing, and no sufficient consideration to support same was set up; (e) the alleged contract was wanting in mutuality and was unilateral. The plaintiff amended the petition by adding to the third paragraph thereof the following allegation: "Said $500 being an indebtedness which was due by said Elizabeth Thompson to B. H. Askew, by reason of a loan made by him to her, said deed being made merely to secure said indebtedness." This amendment was allowed over the objections of the defendant "(1) that the same was an attempt to vary by parol the written terms of said deed, and (2) that said amendment not only varied, but made a new cause of action." The case is before this court on writ of error sued out by defendant, complaining of the allowance of the amendment to the petition and of the overruling of the demurrer.

W. C. Worrell and Pope & Bennett, for plaintiff in error. C. L. Glessner, and J. R. Pottle, for defendant in error.

FISH, C. J. (after stating the facts as above). 1. In the original petition the plaintiff alleged an obligation on the part of the defendant to reconvey the land covered by her deed to him "upon her repayment to him of the sum of $500, with interest thereon from the date of the deed"; that she had remained in possession of the land ever since she conveyed it to defendant, receiving the rents and profits thereof, with his knowledge and consent, subject only to the payment to him of "said indebtedness"; and that she had tendered to him "the full amount of the principal and interest due upon said indebtedness." The original petition clearly indicated that the sum of $500 was an indebtedness which the plaintiff owed to the defendant, and that upon its payment the defendant had agreed to reconvey the land to the plaintiff. This being true, the clear inference was that the deed was given as security for the indebtedness. The amendment merely added an explanation as to how the indebtedness of $500 arose; that is, by reason of a loan made by defendant to plaintiff, which the deed was executed to secure. The cause of action set out in the original petition was the alleged right of the plaintiff to have the land reconveyed to her by the defendant, by reason of his contract so to do, upon the payment by her to him of a given amount of indebtedness, which she owed him. If he agreed, when she conveyed the land to him, to reconvey it to her upon "her repayment to him" of a given amount, a strong inference arose, as we have said, that her conveyance was executed as security for the debt. The amendment merely explained how the indebtedness arose. The amendment, therefore, did not change or vary the nature of the suit, nor introduce a new cause of action. City of Columbus v. Anglin, 120 Ga. 785 (5), 789-794, 48 S. E. 318; Central Railway Co. v. Hunter, 128 Ga. 600, 58 S. E. 154.

2. Nor should the amendment have been disallowed on the ground that "the same was an attempt to vary by parol the written terms of said deed." As we have seen, the plaintiff never gave up the possession of the land she conveyed to the defendant, but has ever remained in possession since the execution of such conveyance. Civ. Code 1895, § 2725, provides: "A deed or bill of sale, absolute on its face and accompanied with possession of the property, shall not be proved (at the instance of the parties) by parol evidence to be a mortgage only, unless fraud in its procurement is the issue to be tried." The clear implication of this language is that a deed absolute on its face, when not accompanied by possession in the grantee, may be proved by parol to be a mortgage only. Denton v. Shields, 120 Ga. 1076, 48 S. E. 423. In Hester v. Gairdner, 128 Ga. 531, 58 S. E. 165, it was held: "Where a deed in the form of a warranty deed was given to secure an indebtedness, and no bond to reconvey was made, and there was nothing in the written contract to fix the amount of indebtedness secured, but the deed expressed a certain amount as a consideration thereof, in a suit by the grantee against the grantor or his administrator, seeking a general judgment and also to establish a lien on the property, it was competent to show by parol evidence that the deed was given to secure an indebtedness already existing to the amount expressed as a consideration, and also to secure future advances to be made." The conveyance made by the plaintiff, though in form an absolute deed, could be shown by parol evidence to be a security deed only, as the grantee never had possession of the premises conveyed. The plaintiff in error cites Waters v. Waters, 124 Ga. 349, 52 S. E. 425. There the plaintiff sought to ingraft upon a deed of bargain and sale (which she had waited too long to set aside on the ground of fraud) a parol agreement, made contemporaneously with its execution, to the effect that she was to be allowed to remain in possession and control of the deeded premises during her life. The deed being an unconditional conveyance passing title to the entire fee, without any hint of a reservation of a life estate, the court held that the deed would have to be reformed before the plaintiff could assert any interest in the land. In the present case there is no attempt to vary the terms of the deed, or to limit its operation as a legal conveyance passing the entire fee, but the plaintiff is simply asserting her equity of redemption.

3. The ground of demurrer, that the petition as a whole was "too general, vague, uncertain, and indefinite," was itself "too general, vague, uncertain, and indefinite" to raise any question for decision by the court. Dawson v. Equitable Mortgage Co., 109 Ga. 389, 34 S. E. 668; Mathis v. Fordham, 114 Ga. 369 (4), 40 S. E. 324. The demurrer should have specified wherein the petition was not sufficiently full and explicit.

4. The special demurrers, that the contract was not fully and clearly set out, was wanting in mutuality, the purpose for which the deed was executed was not explained, nor the consideration which plaintiff received for executing the deed alleged, were all fully met by the amendment allowed to the petition. Nor was there any merit in the special demurrer that the petition failed to show that any certain sum was tendered, or that any other proper tender was made. The petition, in effect, alleged that the plaintiff was indebted to the defendant in the sum of $500, with interest thereon from January 25, 1889, and that she, on October 4, 1906, tendered to defendant "the full amount of the principal and interest due upon said indebtedness." A continuing tender and offer to pay the amount of such indebtedness into court was also set forth. It was not essential, in order that the defendant might be put on notice of what he was expected to meet, that the plaintiff should allege how much, in dollars and cents, she tendered to him on the day named. The petition set forth, with sufficient clearness and particularity, a cause of action, and the court properly overruled the demurrers.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 296)

McGARRY et al. v. SEIZ et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 15, 1907.)

1. APPEAL—REVIEW—RECORD—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

Where an amendment to a petition is offered and disallowed by the court, it does not constitute a part of the record; and, in order for this court to review the ruling of the court below in rejecting such offered amendment, it should be set out in the bill of exceptions or annexed thereto as an exhibit properly authenticated.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 2347.]

2. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY—CONTRACTOR'S BOND—LIABILITY OF SURETY—PLEADING.

The original petition set forth no cause of action, and was properly dismissed on demurrer. (Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; J. T. Pendleton, Judge.

Action by Mary McGarry and S. J. McGarry against E. C. Seiz and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs bring error. Affirmed.

Mrs. Mary McGarry and S. J. McGarry filed a petition against E. C. Seiz and the Aetna Indemnity Company, alleging that Mrs. McGarry was the owner of a described lot of land and entered into a contract with Seiz to erect a dwelling thereon for the sum of $7,350; that pursuant to the contract Seiz gave bond, with the Aetna Indemnity Company as surety, in which it was provided that the contract with Seiz should be carried out and completed. The penalty in the bond was $8,000. A copy of the same is attached to the petition as an exhibit. It is alleged that the plaintiffs have fully complied with all the requirements of the contract and the bond. On December 20, 1905, Randall Bros., materialmen, filed a lien on the property against the plaintiffs and Seiz for lumber and material furnished; the amount of the claim being $1,497.72. The claim of lien was duly recorded. On April 5, 1906, Randall Bros. brought suit to foreclose their lien against Seiz and Mrs. McGarry, which is now pending. There being doubt as to the validity of the claim, the plaintiffs have interposed a defense, and required Randall Bros. to make out their case. The Aetna Indemnity Company has been notified of the claim of lien of Randall Bros., and also informed that it would be held responsible for any expenses and attorney's fees that would be incurred by reason of their neglect to pay the lien. Notwithstanding, the indemnity company has failed and refused to pay. The plaintiffs have, in compliance with the terms of the bond, retained the last payment due the contractor, which amounts to $677, which they are ready to pay over to whoever is entitled thereto. They have requested the indemnity company to give authority to pay the same over, and this has been refused. In the event the lien is valid, the plaintiffs will owe Randall Bros. $820.72, with interest and costs. The indemnity company has been obstinate and litigious, and plaintiffs ask that they be allowed to recover attorney's fees for the prosecution of this suit. The prayer is for judgment against Seiz and the indemnity company for the amount of the lien claimed by Randall Bros., together with all costs and expenses, including attorney's fees. The bond exhibited recites that Seiz has entered into a contract with Mrs. McGarry for the erection of a dwelling, and the condition of the bond is that Seiz shall faithfully perform his contract according to its terms, covenants, and conditions, except as provided in the bond. It is provided that the indemnity company shall be informed in writing of any act on the part of Seiz, his agents or employees, which may involve a loss for which the company would be responsible, immediately after the act shall come to the knowledge of Mrs. McGarry or her duly authorized representative, and that a registered letter mailed to the president of the company shall be the notice required. It is also provided that the company shall not be liable on the bond to any one except Mrs. McGarry; but it is also agreed that she, in estimating her damages, "may include the claims of mechanics and materialmen arising out of the performance of the contract," and paid by her, only when the same are, under the laws of the state, valid liens against the property. It is also provided that, if any suit at law or in equity is brought against the company to recover on the bond, "the same must be instituted within six months after the completion of the work specified in the contract." Each of the defendants filed demurrers, both general and special. The plaintiffs offered an amendment to the petition, which the court refused to allow. This amendment appears in the transcript of the record, but it is not set forth in the bill of exceptions, or attached thereto as an exhibit. The demurrers were sustained, and the plaintiffs assigned error upon the judgment disallowing the amendment, as well as upon the judgment sustaining the demurrers.

Thos. F. Corrigan, for plaintiffs in error.
Dodd & Dodd, for defendants in error.

COBB, P. J. (after stating the facts as above). 1. An amendment was offered by the plaintiffs at the hearing of the demurrers, as appears by a recital in the order of the judge disallowing the same. It does not appear, however, to have been filed. Under such circumstances it did not become a part of the record in the case, and therefore cannot come to this court in the transcript of the record under the certificate of the clerk. It should have been embodied in the bill of exceptions, or attached thereto as an exhibit, properly authenticated. Sibley v. Mutual Ass'n, 87 Ga. 738, 13 S. E. 838; Sayer v. Brown, 119 Ga. 539 (2), 46 S. E. 649; In McCall v. Herring, 116 Ga. 235, 42 S. E. 488, the amendment to the plea had been duly and regularly filed, and had therefore become a part of the record, and was properly brought to this court in the transcript of the record under the certificate of the clerk, notwithstanding that, after the same had been filed, it was stricken upon the ground that it constituted no defense.

2. As we cannot consider the amendment to the petition for the reasons above referred to the only question to be determined is whether the original petition set forth a cause of action. The suit was against the principal and the surety upon the bond. The purpose for which the bond was entered into was to indemnify Mrs. McGarry against loss growing out of the failure on the part of the contractor, who was to erect for her the dwelling, to comply with the terms and stipulations of his contract. While it was distinctly provided that the surety should not be liable under the bond to any one except Mrs. McGarry, the obligee, it was agreed that Mrs. McGarry, in ascertaining her damages, might include the claims of mechanics and materialmen paid by her, provided such claims were valid liens against the property under the law of the state. It was therefore necessary, in order to charge the surety on account of the payment by her of a claim of a materialman, that it must appear that she had paid the claim, and that the claim of the materialman was, under the law of this state, a valid lien upon the property. It appears from the allegations of the petition that she has not paid any of the claim asserted by Randall Bros. It is not alleged that the claim of Randall Bros. is a valid lien under the laws of this state. A suit in which she denies that their claim is a valid lien under the laws of Georgia is now pending. It does not appear, from the petition, that she has yet been damaged by the claim of lien. She has paid nothing.

But it is said the bond also provides that the surety will not be liable unless suit is brought thereon "within six months after the completion of the work" provided for in the contract, and that the work has been completed, and that she certainly must have the right to bring the suit within six months, notwithstanding no payment has been made to the materialman. She has entered into a contract by which she agrees that the surety will not be liable to her unless her claim for damages is asserted by suit within six months from the time the work is completed. She has also entered into a contract that the surety shall not be liable on account of claims of materialmen unless such claims are valid liens under the laws of the state. She must be held to the terms of her contract, there being nothing in the undertakings therein which would be contrary to public policy. The surety had a right to contract with her that its liability should be subject to reasonable conditions, and the conditions above referred to are not in any sense unreasonable as to the character of the claim for which the surety should be liable or the time in which the suit should be brought. See, in this connection, Massachusetts Life Ass'n v. Robinson, 104 Ga. 272, 30 S. E. 918, 42 L. R. A. 261, and citations. In order to hold the surety liable, she must determine, at her peril, whether the claim of the materialman asserted against her constituted a valid lien under the laws of this state. If it does, she may pay the same and bring suit for indemnity within six months from the time the work is completed. If it does not, she may decline to pay the same and defend against such claim. There is nothing in the terms of the contract which either expressly or impliedly provides that the validity of the lien shall be first determined by a judgment of the courts. If she paid the claim, and it thereafter developed that the same was not a valid lien under the laws of the state, there is no liability under the bond. If she paid the claim, and it was a valid lien under the laws of the state, the surety would be liable, provided the other conditions of the bond are complied with, and suit to recover the amount so paid is filed within six months from the time that the work is completed. The petition set forth no cause of action, and was properly dismissed on demurrer.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 329)

WARREN v. ASH et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 15, 1907.)

1. LOGS AND LOGGING—SALE OF STANDING TIMBER—CONSTRUCTION OF CONVEYANCE.

The conveyance of the timber from the plaintiffs to the persons under whom the defendant claims passed an estate in the growing trees, determinable upon the grantees' failure to cut and remove the timber within a reasonable time, not less than five years.

2. SAME—ASSIGNMENT OF CONVEYANCE.

A grantor who has conveyed timber to another, to be cut in a reasonable time, is not concerned with the validity or formality of execution of his grantee's assignment of title thereto to a third person, made before the grantee's estate therein has terminated.

3. SAME—REVESTING OF TITLE.

Standing timber is part of the realty; and the owner of the soil, who has by deed conveyed the timber, is not divested with the title by a mere verbal declaration of the owner of the timber that he surrendered it to the owner of the soil. Such verbal declaration would not work an estoppel, when the owner of the soil had not acted thereon.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 40, Property, § 4.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Decatur County; W. N. Spence, Judge.

Action by R. P. Ash and others against S. J. Warren. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant brings error. Affirmed, with directions.

The plaintiffs, on June 24, 1904, sold to Smith, Sims & Morea, a shingle mill and certain standing timber, and executed to the purchasers the following instrument: "Georgia, Decatur County. This indenture, made and entered into this 29th day of June, 1904, between R. P. Ash, T. H. Wilson, and Mrs. Rosa Ash, parties of the first part, and J. H. Sims, J. F. M. Smith, and G. W. Morea, parties of the second part, sheweth: That the said parties of the first part has this day sold to the parties of the second part a certain millhouse known as the 'Ash shingle mill' and located on lot of land number 192 in the 27th district, being one boiler and engine, and one shingle mill, cut-off saw, all the piping and other fixtures belonging to said mill, one log cart, and four oxen, also all the said timber measuring ten inches at the stump and upwards, on lots of land number 191, 192, 150 acres of lot No. 169, all in the 27th district of said county and state, for the sum of nineteen hundred dollars. I have taken their four promissory notes bearing even date with these presents, and due as follows: One for $500.00, due October 1st, next; one for $500.00, due Feby. 1st, 1905; one for $500.00, due May 1st, 1905; one for $400.00, due August 1st, 1905—all said notes bearing interest from date at the rate of eight per cent, per annum. It is further agreed that the notes given for said property shall first go to the payment of two certain mortgages held by the Bainbridge State Bank—one given by R. P. Ash, and one given by R. P. Ash and T. H. Wilson. It is agreed that the parties of the second part is to have a lease on the mill site as it now stands for five years from said date. If the said parties of the second part shall want to use sawmill site longer than five years, they are to pay rent for same. It is further agreed that the parties of the first part transfer the contract to the siding to the parties of the second part free of charge. It is further agreed that the parties of the second part shall have the right to build roads and trams for the purpose of hauling said timber to said mill; and it is agreed to the parties of the second part shall have the right to sell or transfer all of said lease privileges to any other parties, with all the rights and privileges herein granted. [Executed by the parties.]" The purchasers operated the mill for two years after their purchase, when they removed the mill and sold the houses erected on the mill site. On February 13, 1907, J. F. M. Smith, one of the purchasers, transferred in writing the foregoing timber lease to S. J. Warren. The plaintiff's sought to enjoin Warren from cutting any of the timber on the described lots of land. On the interlocutory hearing the plaintiffs submitted affidavits that one of the firm of Smith, Sims & Morea, when he was moving the shingle mill, stated to one of the plaintiffs that he had cut all of the timber conveyed by the lease and that he surrendered the premises to the plaintiffs. The defendant submitted the affidavits of every member of the firm denying that they had abandoned the timber, or had so stated to any one. The court granted an injunction, and the defendant excepted.

R. G. Hartsfield and J. D. Talbert, for plaintiff in error. Bower & Bower, for defendants in error.

EVANS, J. (after stating the facts as above). The transaction between the plaintiffs and Smith, Sims & Morea was a sale of a shingle mill and the timber on certain described land, with certain privileges in aid of a contemplated manufacture of the timber. The writing clearly reflects the intention of the parties to have been that the trees were to be cut and removed from the land within a reasonable time from the date of the conveyance. Therefore the estate which the purchaser acquired in the trees was a fee, determinable on a failure to cut and remove the timber within a reasonable time. McRae v. Stillwell, 111 Ga. 65, 36 S. E. 604, 55 L. R. A. 513. The plaintiffs stipulated in their conveyance that the purchasers of the timber and mill should have a lease of the mill site for five years, and longer if necessary; but they were to pay a reasonable rental after five years. This stipulation affords a clear inference that the parties estimated a reasonable time within which to cut and remove the timber would not be less than five years. Under this conveyance the purchasers acquired an estate in the trees, and not a mere license to cut the timber from the land.

The grantees, by moving their mill, did not forfeit their estate in such of the trees as were purchased that remained standing on the land. Forfeiture of title to the trees would have resulted only from failure to cut and remove them within a reasonable time. Growing timber is realty, and title to realty is transferred by writing, and not by parol declarations. The verbal statement of the purchasers, at the time of the removal of their mill, that they had abandoned and surrendered their interests under the lease, was not effectual to revest the title in the timber. Holder v. Scarborough, 119 Ga. 256, 46 S. E. 93. Besides, such statement would not work an estoppel, when the plaintiffs had not acted thereon, or done anything to their detriment. From what passed between the parties, according to the plaintiffs' version, there was nothing said which would afford an inference that the parties agreed that a reasonable time had expired.

Objection is made that the timber lease was not legally assigned to the defendant, because only one of the grantees signed the transfer. It did not concern the plaintiff whether all of the grantees joined in an assignment of the lease to the defendant. At the trial two of the grantees testified that previously to the assignment they had sold their interest to Smith, who assigned the lease to the defendant. The three named grantees took as tenants in common, and the transfer was at least effective to convey the legal title from the party who signed it, and it was immaterial to the plaintiffs whether the two grantees who did not sign the transfer were legally bound thereby. The petition was filed within five years after the plaintiffs' conveyance. The defendant, therefore, was not a trespasser as to the timber covered by the lease; and it is immaterial to the plaintiffs whether he was cutting the timber as a licensee or as a purchaser from their grantees. Morgan v. Perkins, 94 Ga. 353, 21 S. E. 574; Gaston v. Gainesville R. Co., 120 Ga. 516, 48 S. E. 188.

There was evidence submitted that the defendant was cutting timber of less size than that conveyed in the lease. As to such timber the defendant had no authority under his purchase, or as a licensee from the grantees in the original lease. There was also evidence that this timber under 10 inches at the date of the conveyance was necessary to keep up the plantation, and that the trespass was a continuing one. The judge did not err in enjoining the defendant from cutting any timber not embraced in the original lease, but did err in enjoining him from cutting such as was so conveyed. The injunction should, therefore, be so modified as to embrace only the timber not 10 inches or above at the date of the lease.

Judgment affirmed, with direction. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 296)

JOINER v. STATE.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 15, 1907.)

1. HOMICIDE — INSTRUCTIONS — INVOLUNTARY MANSLAUGHTER.

When, in the trial of a person indicted for murder, there is evidence from which the jury can find that the homicide resulted from a blow inflicted by the accused with an instrument which would not ordinarily produce death, and with which the accused, having hastily seized and picked up the same, without sufficient provocation, struck and killed the deceased, it is error requiring the granting of a new trial for the judge to fail to charge the law relating to the subject of involuntary manslaughter in the commission of an unlawful act. Farmer v. State, 112 Ga. 80, 37 S. E. 120; Jordan v. State, 124 Ga. 780, 53 S. E. 331; Dorsey v. State, 126 Ga. 633, 55 S. E. 479.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 26, Homicide, § 658.]

2. SAME.—WRIT OF ERROR.—HARMLESS ERROR.—ERRONEOUS INSTRUCTIONS.

Under the evidence as it appears in the record, a charge upon the subject of voluntary manslaughter should not have been given; but inasmuch as the jury did not convict the defendant of that grade of homicide, but returned a verdict finding him guilty of the offense of murder, the error of the court in charging the jury upon the subject of voluntary manslaughter was necessarily harmless to the accused, and constitutes no ground for a reversal of the judgment of the court below. Joiner v. State, 105 Ga. 643, 31 S. E. 556.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 28, Homicide, § 720.]

3. CRIMINAL LAW—INSTRUCTIONS.

It was not error requiring the granting of a new trial for the court to fail to instruct the jury "as to their duty to reconcile the evidence, if in their power to do so, and the rule of law applicable to the reconciling of evidence, and to their power as to believing the witnesses or disbelieving them in cases where the evidence was irreconcilable"; no written request having been made for a charge upon that subject, and it appearing that the judge charged the jury that they were "the sole and exclusive judges of the evidence in the case."

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 2007.]

4. SAME.

No material error, other than that dealt with in the first headnote, is made to appear in any of the grounds of the motion for a new trial.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Dodge County; J. H. Martin, Judge.

Pete Joiner was convicted of murder, and he brings error. Reversed.

D. M. Roberts & Son, C. W. Griffin, and W. M. Morrison, for plaintiff in error. E. D. Graham, Sol. Gen., and Jno. C. Hart, Atty. Gen., for the State.

BECK, J. Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 230)

CORDELE SASH, DOOR & LUMBER CO. v. WILSON LUMBER CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 14, 1907.)

1. ERROR, WRIT OF—RECORD—PRESENTATION AND RESERVATION OF GROUNDS OF REVIEW.

A ground of a motion for a new trial, assigning error upon the admission of documentary evidence, will not be considered, unless the evidence objected to be set forth, either literally or in substance, in the motion itself, or attached thereto as an exhibit. A mere reference in the motion to another part of the record where the evidence may be found will not suffice. Hicks v. Webb, 127 Ga. 170, 58 S. E. 307. In the present case error is assigned upon the admission in evidence of an original amendment, with an exhibit attached thereto, filed by the defendant to an answer in a former suit between the same parties. In the motion for a new trial the evidence is referred to as follows: "Said amendment being incorporated in the brief of evidence in full, and forming pages 6-A, 6-B, 6-C, 6-D, 6-E, 6-F, 6-G, of said evidence." The substance of the amendment is properly set forth; but the only reference to the exhibit is: "Exhibit A, a checking of certain lumber by Mr. Wilder." What was contained in the body of the amendment tended to sustain the defendant's answer in the present case, and was, therefore, not hurtful to defendant. The only harm that could possibly result to the defendant from the admission of the evidence came from the exhibit, which was merely referred to as stated above.

2. TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—MATTER NOT WITHIN ISSUES.

Instructions of the court to the jury should be confined to the issues made by the pleadings in the case. Martin v. Nichols, 127 Ga. 705, 58 S. E. 995. Therefore a failure of the court in its charge to present to the jury a contention of one of the parties not pertinent to any issue made by the pleadings is not cause for a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, § 587.]

3. SAME.

Mere failure of the court, in instructing the jury, to give the definitions of such words as "delivery" and "delivered" is not cause for a new trial. Holmes v. Clisby, 121 Ga. 241 (7), 48 S. E. 934, 104 Am. St. Rep. 103.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, § 489.]

4. ERROR, WRIT OF—DETERMINATION AND DISPOSITION OF CAUSE—REVERSAL ON CONDITION.

Plaintiff's petition alleged that the property for the value of which the action was brought was converted by defendant on April 14, 1902. The evidence tended to support this allegation. The case was tried September 18, 1906, and the verdict in behalf of the plaintiff was for a given sum, with 4½ years' interest thereon. Held, that there was no evidence to authorize a verdict finding interest for more than 4 years, 5 months, and 4 days; and a new trial is ordered, unless the defendant in error, within 10 days after the filing of the remittitur, shall write off from the amount of interest as found in the verdict an amount equal to the interest on the principal sum found in the verdict for 1 month and 4 days at 7 per cent. per annum. In the event this is done, a new trial is refused.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 4467.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Crisp County; Z. A. Littlejohn, Judge.

Action between the Cordele Sash, Door & Lumber Company and the Wilson Lumber Company. From the judgment, the Cordele Sash, Door & Lumber Company brings error. Affirmed, on condition.

Hill & Royal, for plaintiff in error. W. H. Dorris and Whipple & McKenzie, for defendant in error.

FISH, C. J. Judgment affirmed, on condition. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 242)

MCDONALD v. SOWELL, Sheriff.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 12, 1907.)

SHERIFFS AND CONSTABLES—COLLECTION OF ILLEGAL FINE—RECOVERY BY RULE.

A fine paid by one who was convicted under an indictment which was void, for the reason that it charged no offense against the laws of the state, cannot be recovered by rule against the sheriff who collected the same.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Henry County; E. J. Reagan, Judge.

Action by C. D. McDonald against A. C. Sowell, sheriff. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

McDonald filed a petition against Sowell, as sheriff, alleging that the petitioner was tried on an indictment charging him with a misdemeanor; that the indictment contained two counts; that in one count he was charged with selling liquor without a license, and in the other with taking orders for the sale of liquor in territory where the sale of liquor was prohibited by law; that at the trial the jury rendered a verdict of guilty on the second count, and petitioner was sentenced to pay a fine of $200; that he paid this sum to the sheriff "against his will, and only because he was compelled to do so" under the sentence of the court; and that the court had no jurisdiction to try the petitioner, for the reason that the acts charged in the second count constituted no offense under the laws of this state. The petition then set forth various reasons why certain laws regulating the sale of liquor in the county where the indictment was found, and certain ordinances of the town in which the order was taken, were invalid, as being in contravention of a named paragraph of the Constitution of this state. The prayer was for a rule against the sheriff, requiring him to show cause why he should not pay to petitioner the sum paid by him as a fine. Upon this petition the judge granted a rule nisi. Amendments to the petition were filed, alleging that the sheriff collected the fine as an officer of the court, and that no question was raised at the trial as to the constitutionality of the acts and ordinances referred to in the petition. By demurrer it was set up that the sheriff was not subject to rule under the circumstances set out in the petition, and that the petition set forth no cause of action. The demurrer was sustained, and the petitioner excepted.

G. W. Bryan, for plaintiff in error. O. H. B. Bloodworth and W. P. Bloodworth, for defendant in error.

COBB, P. J. (after stating the facts as above). If the acts charged in an indictment constitute no offense under the laws of the state, the judgment may be arrested upon a motion made during the term at which the verdict was rendered, or the prisoner may be discharged upon a writ of habeas corpus, provided no question as to the validity of the indictment was adjudicated at the trial. McDonald v. State, 128 Ga. 536, 55 S. E. 235, and citations. The verdict and judgment in such a case is an absolute nullity. If, under such a judgment, a person is imprisoned, the imprisonment is unlawful, and he is entitled to a discharge, which will be granted by an appeal to any court having authority to issue the writ of habeas corpus. The person who holds him in custody is a wrongdoer. Good faith on the part of the officer may protect him from an action or an indictment for false imprisonment. Civ. Code 1895, § 3852; Blocher v. Clark, 126 Ga. 489, 54 S. E. 1022, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 268. But his act is none the less wrongful; and, when the officer is called in question in reference thereto, he must show circumstances which would indicate good faith on his part. If the sentence of the court is such as to require the payment of a fine, and the indictment upon which the sentence is based is void, the sentence confers no authority upon the officer to demand the payment of the fine. If he collects the fine, he does not do so as an officer of the court. He is as much a wrongdoer in collecting the fine as he would be in imprisoning a person convicted, if the sentence of the court called for imprisonment. He does not collect the fine by virtue of his office, although it may be that he collects it under color of his office, for the reason that there is no law authorizing or empowering him to collect the fine under such circumstances.

Sheriffs are subject to rule for contempt only in reference to matters connected with the discharge of those duties which the law imposes upon them in their official capacity. They are liable to be ruled for money which "they may have collected by virtue of their office." Civ. Code 1895, §§ 4770, 4771. The harsh and summary remedy of rule for contempt, which may be followed by imprisonment or other penalties, is allowed only in those cases where the sheriff has failed to discharge some official duty which the law imposes upon him. If the individual who is sheriff does an act which the law does not authorize him as an officer to perform, and as a consequence of the act another is injured, the sheriff is liable in an appropriate action brought against him as an individual, but is generally not amenable to the penalties which are imposed upon him for acts performed in his official character. We do not think, where a sheriff collects money under a void process, that he is liable to rule at the instance of the party from whom he collected it, although he may be, in some instances, liable as an individual, and possibly upon his official bond. See, in this connection, Pol. Code 1895, § 256, par. 4. This view does not conflict with the ruling in Matter of Flournoy, 1 Ga. 606. In that case the accused had been convicted upon a valid indictment, and a fine had been imposed and collected by the Attorney General. The Attorney General had not appropriated it in the manner prescribed by law before a pardon was granted. It was held that the effect of the pardon was to remit the fine, and that the accused could, by rule against the Attorney General, recover the amount in his hands. In that case the Attorney General had collected the fine under authority of law, by virtue of his office. The effect of the pardon was to restore it to the accused. The case of Parrot v. Wilson, 51 Ga. 255, is to be distinguished upon similar reasons.

Whether the petitioner could, in an action at law against the sheriff as an individual, recover the amount of the fine paid, is a question not involved in the present case, and which we will not now undertake to determine. The solution of this question would depend, to a large extent, as to whether the payment of the fine under the circumstances was voluntary within the meaning of Civ. Code 1895, § 3723. That section declares that the payment of taxes and other claims, made through ignorance of the law, where the facts are all known, and there is no misplaced confidence, and no artifice, deception, or fraudulent practice used by the other party, is deemed voluntary, and cannot be recovered back, unless made under an urgent and immediate necessity therefor, or to release person or property from detention, or to prevent an immediate seizure of person or property. It may be that the payment of a fine under the circumstances indicated in the petition would be merely a payment under a mistake of law; and there are authorities which hold that, where this is the case, the fine cannot be recovered. 19 Cyc. 558. In Bailey v. Paullina, 69 Iowa, 463, 29 N. W. 418, it was held that where a party was convicted under a void ordinance, and paid the fine without protest under the belief that the judgment was valid, the fine could not be recovered, even though he was in custody at the time he paid the same. See, also, Houtz v. Board of Comm., 11 Wyo. 152, 70 Pac. 840.

We have not undertaken to pass upon the question as to whether the laws attacked in the petition are invalid for the reasons therein set forth. For the purposes of this case, we have dealt with the judgment as if it were void.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 377)

COBB v. WRIGHTSVILLE & T. R. CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 8, 1907.)

1. DEED—CONSTRUCTION—NATURE OF ESTATE.

Where the granting clause of a deed set out a grant to a woman, "her heirs and assigns," and the habendum clause was "to have and to hold * * * unto the said [woman], her heirs and assigns, forever, in fee simple, and after her death to such child or children as she may have by [a named man], share and share alike," such deed created a life estate in the woman, with remainder to such children as she might have by the man named.

2. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS — ACCRUAL OF CAUSE OF ACTION—TRESPASS.

Where, in an action of trespass, it was alleged that a railroad company wrongfully took a strip of land belonging to the plaintiff, constructed their railroad on it, and held it as a right of way, and that such right of way divided the plaintiff's land into two parts and thus lessened its value, this was a complete act of trespass of a permanent nature, causing at once all the damage both from the taking of the strip and from the dividing of the other land of the plaintiff into two parts, and the statute of limitations began to run against the action from the time when the land was taken and the road constructed. If the plaintiff was a minor, it was suspended until her arrival at the age of 21 years.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 33, Limitation of Actions, §§ 303, 304, 390-398.]

3. TRESPASS—RECOVERY OF MESNE PROFITS.

This is not an action to recover land, with mesne profits, which are recoverable in one action under the law of this state.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trespass, § 140.]

4. SAME—PLEADING—RIGHT OF ACTION.

Where a woman claimed the land involved in the suit as remainderman under the deed set out in the first note above, and alleged that she was the daughter of the woman named as grantee for life, but failed to allege that she was the daughter of the man whose children the remaindermen were also to be, she set out no right to recover for trespass upon the land, and her petition was demurrable.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Johnson County; B. T. Rawlings, Judge.

Action by Zenorah Cobb against the Wrightsville & Tennille Railroad Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Mrs. Cobb brought suit against the Wrightsville & Tennille Railroad Company, alleging as follows: The defendant has injured and damaged her in the sum of $2,000. She is the owner of certain described land. Without her knowledge or consent, about the year 1885, the defendant took possession of a strip of land extending across her tract, constructed its railroad thereon, and has continuously used and occupied it since as a right of way, and is now in possession of such strip of land, 120 feet wide by 1,125 yards long. This strip is of the value of $500, and of the yearly value for use of $100. The construction of the railroad over her land injured and damaged it in the sum of $500, by cutting it up in "ill shape and otherwise destroying the value of said land." Plaintiff's title arose under a deed which conveyed the land to her mother for life, with remainder to her. The life tenant, Mary A. Crawford, died in 1884. Plaintiff was born in 1878, and is now 25 years of age. Since the company illegally took possession of the land she has had no representative who was authorized to grant to the defendant authority to construct a railroad over it, and therefore the construction and possession was illegal and a trespass, and it has so continued. She prayed damages against the defendant for illegal occupancy of the land, for its yearly value for 19 years, for the damage to her other land, for the value of the land so occupied, and for such other and further relief as the exigencies of this cause may demand. Attached to the petition as an exhibit, setting out the plaintiff's title, was a deed dated December 17, 1881. In it William T. Crawford was named as the party of the first part and Mary A. Crawford as the party of the second part. The consideration expressed was $61. The granting clause was: "Unto said Mary A. Crawford, her heirs and assigns." The habendum clause was as follows: "To have and to hold the aforesaid bargained premises unto the said Mary A. Crawford, her heirs and assigns, forever, in fee simple, and after her death to such child or children as she may have by the said W. T. Crawford, share and share alike. And the said William T. Crawford to the same will, and his heirs, executors, and administrators shall, the said property to the said Mary A. Crawford, her heirs, executors, and administrators, forever warrant and defend against the lawful claim or claims of all persons whatsoever." The defendant demurred to the petition on the ground that it set forth no cause of action; that it showed no title or interest in the plaintiff, under the allegations and exhibit attached, but under the deed the title was in Mary A. Crawford; that the action was barred by the statute of limitations, not having been filed within four years of the alleged trespass, or within four years after the removal of plaintiff's disabilities; that any cause of action for illegal occupancy would be barred in four years; that the petition set up distinct and inconsistent causes of action, which could not be joined, and also inconsistent prayers, and that the prayers seek to recover twice for the same alleged injury. The demurrer was sustained and plaintiff excepted.

W. R. Daley, T. L. Griner, and J. S. Adams, for plaintiff in error. Daley & Bussey, for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. (after stating the facts as above). 1. Since the adoption of the original Code, taking effect in 1863, the strictness of the old rule as to repugnant clauses in a deed has been much modified. Substance, rather than technical nicety in the location of clauses, is controlling. The intention of the parties is the cardinal rule of construction. If it be clear, and sufficient words be used to arrive at the intention, and it contravenes no rule of law, it is to be enforced, and is not to be sacrificed to arbitrary rules of construction. Civ. Code 1895, § 3673. "If two clauses in a deed be utterly inconsistent, the former must prevail, but the intention of the parties, from the whole instrument, should, if possible, be ascertained and carried into effect." Civ. Code 1895, § 3607. The modern trend of decisions is in this direction. 13 Cyc. 618. Here the granting clause of the deed was to "Mary A. Crawford, her heirs and assigns." The habendum clause was "to have and to hold * * * unto the said Mary A. Crawford, her heirs and assigns, forever, in fee simple, and after her death to such child or children as she may have by the said W. T. Crawford, share and share alike." Construing the whole deed together, we think it was clearly the intention of the maker to create a life estate in Mary A. Crawford, with remainder to such child or children as she might have by W. T. Crawford. Thurmond v. Thurmond, 88 Ga. 182, 14 S. E. 198; Rollins v. Davis, 96 Ga. 107, 23 S. E. 392; Henderson v. Sawyer, 99 Ga. 234, 25 S. E. 312; Huie v. McDaniel, 105 Ga. 319, 31 S. E. 189; Colhinsville Granite Co. v. Phillips, 123 Ga. 830 (6), 838, 51 S. E. 668.

2, 3. "A nuisance, permanent and continuing in its character, the destruction or damage being at once complete upon the completion of the act by which the nuisance is created, gives but one right of action, which accrues immediately upon the creation of the nuisance and against which the statute of limitations begins, from that time, to run. * * * Where a nuisance is not permanent in its character, but is one which can and should be abated by the person erecting or maintaining it, every continuance of the nuisance is a fresh nuisance, for which a fresh action will lie." City Council of Augusta v. Lombard, 101 Ga. 727, 28 S. E. 994, and cases cited; Parks v. Ingram, 22 N. H. 283, 55 Am. Dec. 153. Where a structure, though permanent in character, is not necessarily and of itself a permanent and continuing nuisance, but becomes so in consequence of some supervening cause, which produces special injury at different periods, separate actions may be brought, and the statute of limitations begins to run when the special injury is occasioned. Lombard's Case, supra. Here the taking of a right of way and the constructing of a railroad was a complete act, permanent in its nature. If the taking was a trespass, the loss of the value of the land to the true owner then occurred, and, if the construction of the railroad through the plaintiff's land damaged its value by dividing it into two parts, the damage was then consummated and complete. The cause of action then arose to the plaintiff, and the statute of limitations then began to run against her. If she was then a minor, it was suspended during her minority. Actions for trespass upon or damage to realty shall be brought within four years after the right of action accrues. Civ. Code 1895, § 3898. It is evident that the plaintiff was barred from suing for the damage arising from taking the land alleged to be hers, and from the dividing of her other land into two parts by the construction of a railway.

It is contended that the retention of possession by the defendant constituted a continuing trespass, and that the statute did not run. "Damages for a continuing trespass are limited to those which have occurred before action is commenced. Subsequent damages flowing from a continuance of the trespass give a new cause of action." Civ. Code 1895, § 3884. But, as already shown, this was not a continuing trespass or nuisance, which should be stopped or abated, but a complete and perfect act, permanent in its nature, from which apparently all the damage alleged to the plaintiff's property which ever would happen had already occurred. It was not alleged that from the operation of the road any additional damages had resulted, or that there was a continuous, progressive, or added injury. Danielly v. Cheeves, 94 Ga. 263 (3), 21 S. E. 524. This is not an action of ejectment, with an added prayer for mesne profits, which, under our Code, are recoverable by a plaintiff in ejectment in that action, and not by a separate suit. Civ. Code 1895, §§ 4997, 4998. Even if a separate action could have been brought, on the ground that the unlawful retention of possession of the strip had deprived the plaintiff of its use during the four years last past, and caused a continuing injury to the remainder of the land, certain it is that a plaintiff cannot recover both for the entire value of the strip of land taken and also for the loss of its use, nor for the entire depreciation in value of the rest of the land, and also its depreciation for four years.

4. The deed under which the plaintiff claimed title created a life estate in Mary A. Crawford, with remainder to such child or children as she might have by W. T. Crawford, share and share alike. The plaintiff alleged that she was the daughter of Mary A. Crawford, but did not allege that she was the daughter of W. T. Crawford. She thus failed to show that she was entitled to bring the action. The demurrer was properly sustained.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur, except EVANS, J., disqualified.

(129 Ga. 341)

GEORGIA GRANITE R. CO. v. VENABLE
et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 16, 1907.)

1. EMINENT DOMAIN—PROCEEDINGS TO CONDEMN—APPEAL—WAIVER OF IRREGULARITIES.

Where it was claimed that there were certain irregularities in a proceeding by a railroad company to condemn property for a right of way, but the parties agreed to waive them and proceed with the assessment, which was done, on appeal from the award of the assessors to the superior court it was error to dismiss the proceedings on motion on account of such irregularities, although it was also agreed that any question might be raised on the appeal trial which might have been made before the assessors.

2. SAME—TITLE OR RIGHTS ACQUIRED.

Although in such a proceeding the notice stated that it was desired to condemn a right of way, with the fee simple in the land, the statute would attach to such proceeding the restriction that the company would only acquire such an interest as would be necessary for the exercise of the franchise and the conduct of the business, with a reversion to the owners, their heirs and assigns, if the property should cease to be used for conducting the business.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 18, Eminent Domain, § 836.]

3. SAME—AMENDMENT OF NOTICE.

If the notice stated that it was desired to condemn a fee-simple estate in the land, upon appeal an amendment could be made stating that it was a proceeding under the statute, and that it was really desired to acquire by condemnation such interest as the statute authorized, reciting it.

4. SAME—AWARD OF ASSESSORS—AMENDMENT.

The award of the assessors could not be amended by mere act of one of the parties. If amendable at all, it could only be done by the assessors themselves, by permission of the court.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 18, Eminent Domain, § 603.]

5. SAME.

It was unnecessary to amend the assessment in the respect indicated above, after appeal from it.

6. SAME.

It was also competent to amend by alleging that after the assessment the company had tendered, and the landowners received the amount of the award. Under the statute this did not prevent the appeal, but waived any mere irregularity in the notice or the assessment.

7. SAME.

Where the notice recited previous negotiations for a fee-simple interest in the land sought to be condemned as a right of way, an amendment could be made, on appeal to the superior court, reciting that negotiations had been attempted to obtain a right of way only, and that the owners had refused to negotiate at all.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, De Kalb County; L. S. Roan, Judge.

Condemnation proceedings by the Georgia Granite Railroad Company against S. H. Venable and another. An award having been made and an appeal taken to the superior court, the proceedings were by that court dismissed, and the railroad company brings error. Reversed.

The Georgia Granite Railroad Company desired to condemn a right of way through certain land of W. H. and S. H. Venable. It issued a notice, under the statute, for the purpose of commencing condemnation proceedings, dated March 17, 1904. It recited that, "Whereas, the Georgia Granite Railroad Company (a railroad company duly incorporated and organized under the laws of said state) has endeavored to enter into contract with you by which it would procure from you a right of way one hundred feet in width, with title in fee simple to the land embraced therein, as hereinafter described, and offered to pay you a just and adequate compensation for said land; and whereas, you not only refused to fix a price on said land, but positively refused to entertain any offer whatever"—therefore notice was given that the right of way would be condemned, referring to the route located in its charter and the petition therefor on file in the office of the Secretary of State. It was stated that "said railroad corporation seeks to condemn a right of way with the fee therein, one hundred feet in width across your land as hereinafter described, for its railroad." Then followed a description of the strip of land 100 feet in width, a statement that an assessor named had been appointed by the company, and a request that the landowners appoint one also, to meet with him on the premises on April 5, 1904, to proceed with the condemnation. Service was acknowledged on April 4th, with a statement that the landowners declined to appoint an assessor, denying that the railroad company had a right to condemn the property sought to be condemned. Notice of this fact was given to the ordinary, who appointed an assessor to act for the landowners. The person so appointed declined to act, and upon notice the ordinary appointed another, who accepted. The two assessors then named a third assessor, who agreed to act. The landowners filed a protest on the grounds that they had no notice of the appointment of the second assessor for them; that the third assessor selected by the other two was not impartial, and could not do them justice on account of ill-will existing toward them; that the notice was not filed within the time prescribed by law; that there was no authority of law for the condemnation of a right of way for a private railroad; and that this was such a railroad, organized and being built purely for the purpose of serving private interests, and not for the purpose of serving the public at large. Subsequently an agreement was entered into between the parties, reciting briefly what had previously transpired, and stating that the landowners desired to select an assessor in the place of the one whom they deemed hostile to them. It was agreed "that any and all irregularities should be waived, and that said hearing on the 30th inst. shall be held and considered in all respects as a meeting duly held in pursuance of the statute for such cases made and provided." It was also agreed that the two other assessors should be requested to select a person named by the landowners, and that the three should meet, "qualify, and proceed to hear and determine the matters included in said proceeding, according to law, in all respects as though they had been selected, and the hearing had, as provided by the statute for condemnation of private property, all irregularities of any sort being waived; it being the purpose of the parties to comply with the statute relative to condemnation of private property, and to waive any irregularities that may have occurred or shall occur in the proceedings." The objectionable assessor resigned, and another, who was apparently satisfactory, was substituted in his place. An award was made, and an appeal to the superior court entered. It was further agreed that "appellants can, on the trial of the appeal, raise any question that they could have raised before the assessors." The court passed an order reciting that the agreement "contemplated that said case should be tried in this court without objection by either party, on any issue that could have been made before the arbitrators."

When the case came on for trial, one of the landowners had died, and his executor was made a party in his stead. He and the other landowner moved to dismiss the proceedings, on the grounds that they showed on their face that the Georgia Granite Railroad Company is not authorized by law to condemn the property sought to be condemned; that it was seeking to condemn an absolute or fee-simple estate in the land, which the law did not authorize; that, as a condition precedent to condemning private property for public use, it must appear that the person seeking to condemn has been unable to secure by contract or agreement the property which he has a right to condemn; and that it affirmatively appeared that the only effort made to procure the lands was an effort to procure an absolute fee-simple title thereto, and not an easement. The company moved to amend the proceedings by striking from the original notice any and all words showing an effort to condemn a fee-simple interest, and substituting therefor the statement, "such interest as will enable said company to use said property for railroad purposes during the period of its charter, or any renewal thereof"; also, by striking from the award of the assessors words indicating that a fee-simple estate was condemned, and inserting the words, "a right of way for railroad purposes during the period of the charter or any renewal thereof." It was further sought to add by amendment a statement that, before the condemnation proceedings were instituted, the company sought to agree with the landowners upon a mere right of way and use solely for railroad purposes of said strip of land, and the owners refused to agree upon any compensation for any use and to any extent of said strip for railroad purposes, and that, after the award was made, the company tendered to the owners the full amount of the award made by the assessors, and the same was accepted by them. The amendment was rejected, the proceedings were dismissed, and the company excepted.

Candler & Thomson and Candler, Thomson & Hirsch, for plaintiff in error. J. W. Moore and J. D. Kilpatrick, for defendants in error.

LUMPKIN, J. (after stating the facts as above). 1. After the proceedings to condemn were in progress, and it had been claimed that there were irregularities, it was agreed between the parties that they should be waived, and that the hearing should be had before the assessors. If the notice of the intention to condemn was not duly served, or if it was more extensive in describing the interest sought to be condemned than it should have been, these things at most were irregularities, and, under the terms of the agreement, were waived. Nor was this altered by a subsequent agreement, after the appeal, that the appellants might on the trial raise any question that they could have raised before the assessors. After having waived all irregularities, they could not have raised this question before the assessors. 2 Lewis, Eminent Domain (2d Ed.) §§ 362, 541.

2. The notice served by the railroad company stated, in one part of it, that the company desired to condemn a right of way 100 feet in width, with title in fee simple to the land embraced therein, and, in another, that it was seeking to condemn a right of way with a fee therein. It was contended that, under such proceedings, the company could not acquire a fee-simple title, and that this statement in the notice rendered it void. Under the statutes in some states it has been held that a railroad company acquired a fee in the land condemned for a right of way, subject to revert to the owner or his heirs if the land should cease to be used for the purposes for which it was condemned. Under other statutes the interest condemned has been held to be a mere easement. Under still others the condemnation is said to vest complete title. Generally, in construing a statute authorizing the taking of private property for public use, it will not be implied that a greater interest or estate can be taken than is necessary to satisfy the language and object of the act; and, if the Constitution and statute are both silent on the subject, usually only an easement can be taken. If the statute declares the amount of interest which can be acquired, it will control. 13 Cyc. 1021, and notes. In the general law for the incorporation of railroads in this state, codified mainly from the act of 1892 (Acts 1892, p. 42), occur certain expressions from which it might be argued that the condemnation by a railroad company for a right of way carried something more than a mere easement. Civ. Code 1895, §§ 2167 (3), 2170. Where the condemnation is merely to allow one railroad to use in part the right of way of another, it would seem clear that the condemning road could acquire no more than an easement. The first road to condemn would not acquire a fee-simple, indefeasible title, and the second, in condemning the right to use a part of its right of way, would apparently obtain only an easement. Civ. Code 1895, §§ 2167, 2170. In 1894 (Acts 1894, p. 95; Civ. Code 1895, § 4657 et seq.) an act was passed providing for the method of condemnation of property and assessment of damages by all corporations or other persons authorized by law to take or damage private property for public purposes. This does not confer the right of condemnation where it does not otherwise exist, but regulates the manner of exercising the right, and provides the extent of the interest which shall be acquired. It is applicable to a variety of persons, natural or artificial. Civ. Code 1895, § 4685. In respect to most, if not all of these, an easement is all that is necessary and all that is acquired by condemnation. Thus it has been held that a telegraph company, condemning a part of a right of way of a railway, obtained merely an easement. Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Postal Telegraph Cable Co., 120 Ga. 268, 48 S. E. 15. Civ. Code 1895, § 4683, provides that, upon condemnation and payment, the corporation or other person "shall become vested with such interest in the property taken as may be necessary to enable the corporation or person taking to exercise their franchise or conduct their business; and whenever the corporation or person shall cease using the property taken for the purpose of conducting their business, said property shall revert to the person from whom taken, his heirs or assigns." Under this law, whether a railroad company can obtain by condemnation a fee defeasible upon ceasing to use the property for the purposes of its business, or a mere easement, it is unnecessary to decide. Certain it is that the condemnation does not vest in the company a fee-simple estate, but that the reversion provided for in the section just quoted attaches itself as a condition of the law. A railroad seeking to condemn under this law cannot acquire an indefeasible fee-simple estate, although it may seek to do so.

The notice of intention to condemn showed that it was a proceeding to have compensation assessed and determined "as provided by the law of said state." The law of the state on the subject is that to which reference is made above. Although the notice stated that it was desired to condemn a fee-simple estate, or "a right of way, with the fee therein," the amount of interest which would be acquired is limited by the law, whether distinctly stated in the notice or not. It did not, therefore, render the proceeding void because the notice referred to the acquirement of the fee, instead of such interest as might be necessary for the conduct of its business, as the law provides. The law would prevail over the notice as to the extent of the interest obtained by condemnation. At most, describing the estate which the company desired to obtain by condemnation as a fee or fee simple was an irregularity. In a somewhat similar case it was said that the condemning company would acquire at least an easement. Gurney v. Minneapolis, etc., Co., 63 Minn. 70, 65 N. W. 136, 30 L. R. A. 534.

3. When objection was made to the statement in the notice that it was desired to condemn a fee-simple interest, the company proposed to amend the notice so as to show that it was desired to condemn such interest as the statute authorized. It was proposed to amend, not only the notice, but also the award of the assessors, for that purpose, and to state that before the condemnation proceedings were instituted the company had sought to agree with the landowners upon a mere right of way and use of the strip of land described for railroad purposes, and that the owners refused to agree upon any compensation for any use of the strip for railroad purposes, and also by alleging that after the award the company had tendered to the landowners the full amount thereof, and it had been accepted by them. The proposed amendment was rejected. The award of assessors could not be amended by the mere act of one of the parties; but the case was on appeal in the superior court, and the award was no longer binding, but was like the judgment of an inferior tribunal from which an appeal has been taken.

4. If the notice served on the landowners for the purpose of commencing condemnation proceedings was void, and objection was duly made, it could not be amended after the assessment and appeal so as to make it valid. The notice is the commencement of the proceeding. If such proceeding has not a valid basis at its beginning, it cannot be amended into validity after the assessment, by an amendment seeking to relate back and furnish a lawful basis, where none existed before. But if the proceeding was valid, even though irregular, upon appeal in the superior court we know of no reason why such an amendment could not be made as merely to concede that the fee-simple title could not be condemned, and to show that the company would only claim by condemnation the amount of interest in the land which the statute would give them. This is different from an effort on the part of the company seeking to condemn to ratify a notice which was unauthorized when given. Bridwell v. Gate City Terminal Co., 127 Ga. 520, 56 S. E. 624. In Savannah Railway Co. v. Postal Telegraph Cable Co., 115 Ga. 554, 42 S. E. 1 (3), the right of amendment as to mere description of the property sought to be condemned was recognized.

5. Civ. Code 1895, § 4669, declares that the notice shall describe the property or franchise and the amount of interest therein sought to be condemned. No reason appears why a mere misdescription could not be amended on appeal. Especially so after waiver of any irregularity.

6. Nor do we see why an amendment could not be made to the pleading, so as to allege that the landowners had received the amount awarded by the assessors. An owner cannot receive and hold money under an award, and on appeal dismiss the proceedings for irregularity. Such receipt and holding would itself operate as a waiver, and leave for determination the question of the proper amount of damages or compensation to be assessed. Civ. Code 1895, § 4680.

7. The notice of an intention to condemn stated that the company had endeavored to buy the strip of land described for the purpose of a right of way. While the case was pending on appeal in the superior court, an amendment was offered, stating that the company had endeavored to obtain a right of way only and the use for railroad purposes, and that the owners had refused to agree upon any compensation for any use or to any extent for such purposes. We do not see why this could not be done. A recital of preliminary negotiation in the notice is not a jurisdictional or unalterable statement.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(130 Ga. 126)

AMERICAN NAT. BANK OF MACON v. FIDELITY & DEPOSIT CO. OF MARYLAND. EXCHANGE BANK OF MACON v. SAME.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 4, 1907.)

1. BANKS AND BANKING—IMPROPER WITHDRAWAL OF FUNDS—LIABILITY OF BANK.

If a bank has notice or knowledge that a breach of trust is being committed by the improper withdrawal of funds, it incurs liability, becomes responsible for the wrong done, and may be made to replace the funds which it has been instrumental in diverting; and it appearing that the funds alleged in this case to have been diverted and misapplied were the assets of an insolvent corporation, and that the funds had been deposited in the bank by a receiver appointed by an order of the superior court, which provided that such funds should only be paid out on checks signed by the receiver and countersigned by the judge, of which order and the provisions thereof the bank had knowledge, the creditors of the corporation, to whom the receiver sustained a fiduciary relation, would have had the right to enforce the liability incurred by the bank because of having paid out such funds upon checks not countersigned as provided.

2. SUBROGATION—SURETY—RIGHTS OF CREDITORS.

But when the creditors, or the obligee in a bond given by the receiver for the faithful performance of his duties relating to the funds, upon a breach of trust by the receiver, participated in by the bank, brought suit and recovered judgment against the receiver and the surety on the bond, and the surety paid the judgment, such surety is subrogated to the rights of the creditors to enforce the liability incurred by the bank on account of its participation in the breach of trust by the fiduciary.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, Subrogation, §§ 17, 18.]

3. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS.

It appearing that the right of action against the defendant, once existing in favor of the parties to whose rights the plaintiff in this case is subrogated, is barred by the statute of limitations, the right of action upon the part of the plaintiff is also necessarily barred.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Bibb County; Robt. Hodges, Judge.

Actions by the Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland against the American National Bank of Macon and by the same plaintiff against the Exchange Bank of Macon. Demurrers to the petitions were overruled, and defendants bring error. Reversed.

The Fidelity & Deposit Company of Maryland, hereinafter called the "Fidelity Company," brought separate actions against the American National Bank of Macon, Ga., hereinafter called the "National Bank," and against the Exchange Bank of Macon, Ga., hereinafter designated as the "Exchange Bank," alleging substantially the same matters of complaint in both petitions. In each case the defendant bank filed general and special demurrers, which demurrers were overruled, and the defendants excepted. The issues presented by the bills of exceptions in the two cases are identical, and will be decided together, as a decision in one case will necessarily control the decision in the other.

The petitions of the Fidelity Company allege the following material facts: In December, 1893, H. C. Tindall and others, owners of all the capital stock of the Macon Hardware Company, hereinafter called the "Hardware Company," a private corporation, filed their petition to the superior court of Bibb county, alleging the insolvency of the Hardware Company, and praying that a receiver be appointed to administer the assets of the corporation for the benefit of its creditors. The Hardware Company and its creditors, including the National Bank and the Exchange Bank, were made parties defendant to this petition. Thereafter the Exchange Bank, the National Bank, and numerous other creditors of the Hardware Company entered their appearance in said suit, set up certain claims against the Hardware Company, and asserted their rights to share in the distribution of its assets. On January 9, 1894, the court passed an order appointing said Tindall permanent receiver of the Hardware Company, and designated certain banks, among them the Exchange Bank and the National Bank, as depositories to receive, hold, and disburse the funds of the receivership, "provided that the said banks will pay the customary rates of interest on such deposits at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, if left in the banks for six months, and no interest to be charged for the last 30 days prior to said money being checked out; each bank to have 30 days' notice of the intention to check." Said order also provided that "the said receiver is hereby authorized and directed to make his deposits as aforesaid in his name as receiver, and no checks shall be drawn against said deposits, except in his name as receiver, countersigned by the judge presiding of this court, except that checks drawn for expenses may be drawn without being countersigned by the judge as aforesaid, but the said checks shall specify for what expenses drawn." The Exchange Bank, the National Bank, and certain other named banks accepted said designation as depositories under the terms of said order, and the Fidelity Company became security upon the bond of the receiver.

It is alleged in the petition that, by virtue of said order of the court and the acceptance of the terms of said order by the Exchange Bank, the National Bank, and the other named banks, said banks so designated as depositories agreed with the court and with the creditors of the Hardware Company not to pay out the funds so received, except on checks drawn by the receiver and countersigned by the judge of the superior court, unless said checks were drawn for expenses and so specified; that the Exchange Bank and the National Bank failed and neglected to comply with the requirements of the aforesaid order of the court, and paid, out of the funds deposited with them, various sums, aggregating $2,901.53 and $475.44, respectively, upon checks signed by "H. C. Tindall, receiver"; that none of said checks had upon them any statement with reference to expenses, and were not countersigned by the judge, as provided in said order; and that the receiver appropriated the money so withdrawn to his own use, and has never accounted for the same. On the 22d day of February, 1901, a judgment was entered in favor of a number of the creditors of the Hardware Company, decreeing that said creditors should be entitled to participate in the distribution of the assets of the receivership in the hands of said receiver; and said receiver failed to account to the court for the sum of money which he had withdrawn from said depositories and misappropriated as above set forth. Thereafter, on March 26, 1901, R. A. Nisbet, clerk of the superior court, the obligee in the receiver's bond, brought suit, for the use of the creditors of the Hardware Company, on said bond, against Tindall, receiver, as principal, and the Fidelity Company, as security, to recover the amount for which Tindall as receiver failed to account when required by the court to do so, which amount was composed in part of the sum of $2,901.53 which had been withdrawn from the Exchange Bank and misappropriated by the receiver, and the sum of $475.44 which had been withdrawn from the National Bank in a like manner and misappropriated. Judgment against Tindall, receiver, and the Fidelity Company, security, was obtained on January 9, 1903, and on the 8th day of February, 1904, the judgment was paid in full by the Fidelity Company.

Petitioner alleges that the Exchange Bank and the National Bank knew that the drawing of said checks, the same not being for expenses and not countersigned by the judge, was unauthorized by the decree or order of the court, and said banks thereby enabled said receiver to commit a breach of trust by misappropriating the money so obtained; that the creditors of the Hardware Company had a right to recover from the banks the sums of money which had been paid out on said checks; and that, having paid the judgment rendered against it, as security on the receiver's bond, in favor of such creditors, it is subrogated to the rights of said creditors as against the Exchange Bank and the National Bank. The insolvency of said Tindall, receiver, is also alleged, and petitioner prays judgment against the defendant banks for the respective amounts which had been withdrawn from them on said unauthorized checks.

Two of the grounds of demurrer are "that there is no right of action in said petition, as amended, in the plaintiff against this defendant," and "that, as it appears from the face of the petition that the checks alleged to have been illegally paid by this defendant were drawn and paid by this defendant more than four years prior to the bringing of this action, therefore said cause of action is barred upon the face thereof."

Davis & Miller, Miller & Jones, and Geo. S. Jones, for plaintiffs in error. Erwin & Callaway and Jno. P. Ross, for defendant in error.

BECK, J. (after stating the facts as above). 1. In the absence of notice or knowledge, a bank cannot question the right of a customer to withdraw a fund, nor refuse the demands of the depositor by check; and it is also true that, if money be deposited by one as trustee, the depositor, as trustee, has the right to withdraw it, and, in the absence of knowledge or notice to the contrary, the bank would have a right to presume that the trustee would appropriate the money when drawn to a proper use; but it is also true that, if a bank has notice or knowledge that a breach of trust is being committed by the improper withdrawal of funds, it incurs liability, becomes responsible for the wrong done, and may be made to replace the funds which it has been instrumental in diverting. The Supreme Court of Maryland held that a bank, which credited a check to the individual account of a named person, when the check itself stated that it was for "deposit to the credit of" the person named, with the word "trustee" added to his name, was liable for participating in the breach of trust in case of loss ensuing to the trust estate by reason of his drawing out the fund by checks on his personal account. In the case referred to the court said: "To deposit to the credit of Henry W. Clagett, trustee, was an explicit notification to the bank that Clagett was not the actual owner of the money. It was an equally explicit instruction to the bank not to place the fund to the credit of Clagett's personal account. * * * Knowing that the money was not Clagett's, but that it was payable to him, and to be deposited to his credit as trustee, the bank had no authority to place it to his individual credit; and, if loss ensued by reason of Clagett drawing the fund out by check on his personal account, the bank is liable to make restitution to the trust estate. The bank, in the eye of the law, participated in the breach of trust of which Clagett was guilty." Duckett v. Nat. Bank, 86 Md. 403, 38 Atl. 983, 39 L. R. A. 89, 63 Am. St. Rep. 513, citing Bundy v. Monticello, 84 Ind. 119. "If the bank participates with the trustee in a misappropriation of the funds, or knowingly permits such misappropriation to take place, it must answer to the beneficiary for loss thereby occasioned." 3 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) 832. See, also, cases cited supporting the text.

Much stronger is the reason for holding, in the case at bar, that the bank participated in the breach of trust, than in the case of

Duckett v. Nat. Bank, supra. It was agreed in this latter case, in behalf of the bank, that if the bank had obeyed the direction given to it, and had opened an account with Clagett (the depositor) as trustee, still Clagett could have withdrawn the funds on checks appropriately signed, and could then have misapplied the money without involving the bank. But in the case at bar Tindall, the receiver, could not by checks, however appropriately signed by himself, unless they were also countersigned by the judge, have withdrawn the funds. Such were the express terms of the order or decree. The defendants knew the provisions made in the decree as to the manner in which checks, except checks for expenses, should be signed. They knew that they were depositories of trust funds, for the safeguarding of which extraordinary care and caution was being exercised by the court. We do not know by the use of what terms of direction, in a decree or order for the deposit of funds in a designated bank, more emphatic notification could have been given this defendant that payment upon any check, not countersigned as prescribed in this order, would amount to an aiding of a trustee in the misapplication of the funds. By the improper withdrawal of the funds Tindall was clearly guilty of a breach of trust. The bank had knowledge of this breach of trust, knowing, as it did, the express terms upon which Tindall might check out the money—terms which, so far as affect the sum now sued for, were plainly violated. Having the knowledge that a breach of trust was being committed, by payment of the checks improperly drawn and not countersigned by the judge of the superior court, it aided in that breach, and in the consequent misapplication of the funds; and, having done so, it became liable to the beneficiaries of the trust—that is, to the creditors of the Macon Hardware Company, to whom Tindall sustained a fiduciary relation.

2. That liability determined, we have to decide whether the surety, having paid the judgment against its principal, the receiver, was subrogated to all the rights and remedies of the obligee in the bond and the creditors of the Macon Hardware Company against the bank for having participated in the breach of trust and enabled the receiver to misappropriate the funds. "A surety who has paid the debt of his principal is subrogated both at law and in equity to all of the rights of the creditor, and in a controversy with other creditors ranks, in dignity, the same as the creditor whose claim he paid." Civ. Code 1895, § 2995. "He is entitled also to be substituted in place of the creditor as to all securities held by him for the payment of the debt." Id. 2996. That the surety was entitled, under the facts alleged in the petition, to the beneficial application of the doctrine of subrogation, seems to admit of little doubt. We find a general statement of the doctrine as follows: "Sureties of a fiduciary, who are compelled to satisfy a liability occasioned by his default, devastavit, or breach of trust, will be subrogated to all rights and remedies of the cestui que trust, the creditors, or other beneficiaries, against the fiduciary or those participating in the default, devastavit, or breach of trust. This rule is applicable to receivers." 27 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) 219. In the case of Orem v. Wrightson, 51 Md. 34, 34 Am. Rep. 286, it was held that the doctrine of subrogation "is not founded on contract, but has its origin in a sense of natural justice. So soon as a surety pays the debt of the principal debtor, equity subrogates him to the place of the creditor, and gives him every right, lien, and security to which the creditor could have resorted for the payment of his debt."

These general statements of the doctrine of subrogation receive a special application in an adjudicated case directly in point upon the question now before us. In the case referred to it was said that, where a bank has participated in the clerk of the court's breach of trust in receiving to his personal credit and converting to his own use interest allowed to him for the use of the state's money placed to his credit as clerk a surety on the clerk's official bond, who has paid a judgment recovered by the state, is subrogated to every right of the state in respect of the claim, including the right of the state against the bank. The court says: "The theory of the appellant's case is that the bank so aided and participated in Van Sant's diversion to his own use of the interest on the deposits as to have been equally guilty with him of the breach of duty thereby made, which, in view of his relation to the deposits, amounted to a breach of trust; that under those circumstances the state could have recovered from the bank the amount of the diverted interest; and that the appellant, having as surety satisfied to the state the amount of its loss, is entitled to be subrogated to its rights against the bank in the premises." And the court added, in upholding the contention of the appellant: "The facts of the present case, in our opinion, bring it within the class of cases last referred to [holding that the surety of a fiduciary is subrogated to the rights and remedies of both the trustee and the cestui que trust against the fiduciary and those participating in the wrongful act], and we think, both upon principle and authority, the appellant should be subrogated to the right of the state to recover from the appellee as a participant in Van Sant's breach of trust in receiving to his personal credit and converting to his own use the sum of $3,774.70, allowed to him by the appellee in return for the use of the state's money deposited to his credit as clerk of the court of common pleas." American Bonding Co. v. National Mechanics' Bank, 97 Md. 598, 55 Atl. 395, 99 Am. St. Rep. 466.

3. But while, as we have seen, the plaintiff in this case, as the surety, became subrogated to the rights of the creditors to enforce the liability incurred by the banks on account of their participation in the breach of trust, relatively to the right to enforce that liability the plaintiff in this case stands in the place of the obligee in the bond or of the creditors, for whose benefit this bond was taken. The participation by the bank in the breach of trust, in paying out the money improperly upon checks drawn by the receiver without being countersigned as provided in the order, was a wrong or tort against the creditors, giving rise to a right of action against the wrongdoer, the bank, at the time of the commission of the wrongful act; and inasmuch as the tort on the part of the bank was complete at the time of the wrongful payment of the checks, and it became immediately liable to suit for such wrongful act, the statute of limitations began to run immediately, and at the expiration of four years from that date the right of action was barred by the statute of limitations. This is clearly so, had the obligee in the bond or the creditors sought to enforce the liability incurred by the bank; and with reference to the enforcement of that liability, the surety, the plaintiff in this case, stands in no better position than would the party to whose rights he is subrogated. "The plaintiff, being subrogated, as he was, to all the rights of A., can have and exercise no greater rights than he had. This is a cardinal principle in all cases of subrogation. Where one takes the place of another, he can take and exercise no greater rights than such other could have done." Harris on Subrogation, p. 580, § 841, citing Walker v. Vaudry, 4 Rob. (La.) 395. See, also, Rodman v. Sanders, 44 Ark. 504.

In the present case, the first of the unauthorized payments by the bank upon the receiver's checks was made on the 20th day of January, 1894, and the last was made on the 23d day of January, 1899; and this action was instituted on the 29th day of July, 1904. It is clear, therefore, that the creditors could not enforce this demand against the bank; and, if they could not, the plaintiff, who was subrogated to their rights, could not. This being true, and these facts appearing on the face of the petition, the demurrer setting up the bar of the statute of limitations should have been sustained, and the court erred in overruling it.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 411)

CAMP et al. v. A. G. GARBUIT LUMBER CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 8, 1907.)

1. WRIT OF ERROR—RULINGS ON EVIDENCE—REVIEW.

When the bill of exceptions recites that in an interlocutory hearing before the judge certain documentary evidence was introduced, subject to specified objections as to its admissibility, and it does not appear whether the evidence was excluded, or any ruling upon its admissibility was made, nor is there any assignment of error thereon, no question as to the admissibility of the evidence is presented, and such evidence will be treated by this court as having been considered by the judge in arriving at his judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 8, Appeal and Error, § 2297.]

2. INJUNCTION—CONTINUING TRESPASS.

The cutting of timber by one who shows no title or claim of right should be enjoined at the instance of an owner in severalty or in common of the timber, where the circumstances show that the trespasses are constantly recurring and the defendant threatens to continue to cut the timber from day to day.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 27, Injunction, §§ 101, 105.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Echols County; R. G. Mitchell, Judge.

Action by R. J. and B. F. Camp against the A. G. Garbutt Lumber Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs bring error. Reversed.

J. L. Sweat, for plaintiffs in error. Cranford & Wilcox, for defendant in error.

EVANS, J. R. J. and B. F. Camp sought to enjoin the A. G. Garbutt Lumber Company from cutting and removing the timber from lot of land No. 90 in the Sixteenth district of originally Irwin, now Echols, county. The writ of injunction was refused, and the plaintiffs excepted.

On the interlocutory hearing it was made to appear that this particular lot of land was granted to Benjamin S. Jordan. In 1860 the administrator of Jordan conveyed the land to Skelton Napier, but no order of court authorizing the sale was exhibited to the judge. It was shown that Emily B. Jordan and Leonidas Jordan were the sole heirs at law of B. S. Jordan, and these heirs conveyed by deed, in 1871, land lot No. 90 to John T. Napier, executor of the last will and testament of Skelton Napier. Skelton Napier died, leaving a widow and seven children, among whom was John T. Napier. Plaintiffs also introduced a certified copy of the will of Skelton Napier, dated in 1852, and the codicil thereto, purporting to have been executed in 1856. In the will the testator directed that all his property, both real and personal (save that devised to his wife, the Spivey plantation and his negro slaves), be sold by his executor, and the proceeds "be divided share and share alike between my wife and each of my children; that is to say, my wife and each of my children having an equal share," etc. The will further provided that the devise to his son William "be and is hereby invested in trust to my sons John T. Napier and Thomas N. Napier as trustees, and not otherwise, for the sole and separate use of said William and his children. The property to remain in trust as aforesaid during the natural life of said William, and then go to his children, or, on failure of children, to his heirs by consanguinity." It was also stipulated in the will that the devise to the testator's daughters "be held in trust for them and their children, should there be any," etc. No trustee for the daughters was named in the will, nor was it shown that they had children at the testator's death. The plaintiffs also introduced a certified copy of "the agreement of the heirs of the estate of Skelton Napier, late of Bibb county, Ga., deceased, to divide the estate of the said Skelton Napier, deceased, between the heirs of said estate as it all now appears of record in this [ordinary's] office, in Book of Returns M, No. 2, folio 509." The general scheme of this written agreement was to divide the estate in kind, and the wild land was to "go and belong to John T. Napier in his own right, and said John T. Napier, trustee for William P. Napier, as directed and provided as to said trust in the will of the said Skelton, deceased; that is, one-half to each." Plaintiff also introduced letters of administration on the estate of John T. Napier, an order from the court of ordinary authorizing a sale of land lot No. 90 by the administrator of John T. Napier, and a deed by the administrator of John T. Napier to John T. Wiley, and mesne conveyances from John T. Wiley to the plaintiffs. An affidavit by D. W. Barnes was offered by plaintiffs, wherein affiant deposed that the plaintiffs and their predecessors in title had been in continuous possession of lot 90 for more than seven years, evidenced by such acts as extracting turpentine from the trees and cutting cross-ties off the land. The only evidence offered by the defendant was an affidavit of W. A. Ham, wherein affiant deposed that plaintiffs and their grantors had not been in exclusive or continuous possession of the land for seven years. The bill of exceptions recites that the plaintiffs introduced in evidence certified copies of the will of Skelton Napier, and of the division in kind among his distributees and legatees, "subject to the objections interposed thereto by defendant's counsel," which objections are set out in the bill of exceptions. At the conclusion of the evidence the judge refused the injunction, which is the only error complained of in the bill of exceptions.

1. Before discussing the character of the plaintiffs' title, we will take up the recital in the bill of exceptions that certain documentary evidence was received in evidence, subject to certain objections. The record is silent as to whether the court ever passed upon the merits of the objection. The documents were allowed in evidence, subject to the objections, and must necessarily have been considered by the court, in the absence of any statement or recital to the contrary. Hence we cannot consider the merits of the several objections, and must treat the case as if no objections had been interposed to this evidence, or, if interposed, had been overruled, and no exception taken thereto.

2. It is said in the brief of counsel for defendant in error that the record discloses that all the heirs and legatees of Skelton Napier did not sign the agreement of division of his estate, and on this account, as well as for other reasons, the agreement did not have the effect to assign to any particular distributee or legatee a title in severalty to any particular property of their testator. Without discussing the merits of this contention, we think that, even if it be sound, the plaintiff had such an interest in the land as gave him the right to preserve the property from spoliation by a trespasser. There can be no doubt that whatever interest John T. Napier had in this land passed to these plaintiffs. If the deed from the heirs of the grantee from the state to John T. Napier, as executor of Skelton Napier, be treated as conveying the title to John T. Napier individually, then the plaintiffs would have title to the land. If it be construed to vest the title in Skelton Napier's estate, then John T. Napier would have an interest in it, whether this particular land passed under the will or not. Independently of the partition of Skelton Napier's estate, the plaintiffs became tenants in common with the other legatees by the purchase of this land from the grantees of the administrator of John T. Napier. Section 4999 of the Civil Code of 1895 declares that any tenant in common or other person having a part interest in lands may have and maintain an action in ejectment or trespass for the recovery of such lands, or for an injury thereto, without joining with him any other person as plaintiff. The plaintiffs, therefore, have title at least to an interest in this land, and therefore may protect their estate from trespass by showing grounds for injunction. Downing v. Anderson, 128 Ga. 373, 55 S. E. 184. In McArthur v. Matthewson, 67 Ga. 143, it was said: "In a suit for injunction, complainants, on showing they have prima facie even an interest in the property, may maintain their bill." The plaintiffs having at least an interest in the land, did they show any right to the equitable remedy of injunction? This lot of land contains 490 acres. The defendant was engaged in cutting and removing the sawmill timber thereon when the suit was instituted. The officers and agents of defendant threatened to continue cutting the timber, unless lawfully prevented from so doing. It will require some time to complete the cutting and removal of the sawmill timber from so large a body of land. The defendant did not even attempt to show any title to support its claim of ownership. Under such circumstances, if the plaintiffs show title to an undivided interest in the land and timber, the defendants should be enjoined from committing a continuous and destructive trespass by denuding the land of its most valuable timber. Gray Lumber Co. v. Gaskin, 122 Ga. 342, 50 S. E. 164. We therefore think his honor should have enjoined the cutting and removal of the timber until the final trial of the merits of the case.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 387)

ZIPPERER v. SEABOARD AIR LINE RY.
(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 8, 1907.)
MASTER AND SERVANT—INJURY TO SERVANT—PLEADING.

No cause of action was alleged in the petition, and the general demurrer thereto was properly sustained.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Effingham County; P. E. Seabrook, Judge.

Action by R. P. Zipperer against the Seaboard Air Line Railway. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

D. H. Clark, for plaintiff in error. J. Randolph Anderson, for defendant in error.

EVANS, J. Zipperer sued the railroad company for damages for personal injuries alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the railroad company. The court dismissed the petition on general demurrer, and this is assigned as error.

The plaintiff depended upon substantially the following allegations as showing the defendant's liability: Plaintiff was a train hand upon one of defendant's work trains, and was directed by the conductor in charge of the train to uncouple one of the cars, that it might be placed upon the switch. In attempting to obey this command, and while walking along the side of the track, he violently struck his foot against a steel rail, which lay in his path, and was thrown under the moving train, sustaining serious injuries. The rail against which he stumbled was 30 feet long, weighing 70 pounds to the yard, and lying on its side, and presented a sharp, projecting surface. The defendant's negligence was alleged to consist in permitting the steel rail to remain in a place where the defendant knew, or in the exercise of diligence could have known, that plaintiff, in the performance of his duties as such train hand, would be compelled to travel. There is no allegation that it was not necessary for the railroad company to place the rail where it was, or that it was not placed there in a proper manner.

We do not think the plaintiff makes a case of negligence against the railroad company. The bare fact that a steel rail was placed on the roadbed, near its track, in full view of a passer-by, cannot be deemed a negligent act. If so, a railroad company could never repair its track, by placing necessary material at a convenient place and in a proper manner, without subjecting itself to liability for every accident occurring on that account at that point. As was remarked in the case of Lee v. Central Railroad Co., 86 Ga. 233, 12

S. E. 307, by Bleckley, C. J.: "It cannot be incumbent on railroad companies, or any one else, in such a world as this, to keep the whole face of the earth, on which servants and employes are to execute their functions, clear of every object that may cause an employe to slip up or be thrown down." Besides, the plaintiff, though affirming in technical phrase that he was free from fault, does not explain why, in the broad, open day, he did not see such a plain and distinct object as a steel track rail 30 feet in length. We concur in the judgment of the superior court that no cause of action was set forth, and that the general demurrer was properly sustained.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 333)

HARRIS v. SOUTHERN RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 8, 1907.)

1. NEGLIGENCE—PLEADING.

General allegations that a plaintiff was injured by reason of the negligent conduct of a railroad company, or the like, unless accompanied by allegations of fact showing negligence, are subject to special demurrer.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, Negligence, § 174.]

2. RAILROADS—ACCIDENT AT CROSSING—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

Although the agents of a railroad company may be negligent in running its engine and cars at a high rate of speed over a public road crossing, and in approaching a station where the train is to stop, and in not keeping a lookout, yet if a person, with knowledge of the impending danger, steps on the track and seeks to cross immediately in front of the engine, and is injured, he cannot recover.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 41, Railroads, § 1028.]

3. SAME.

Under the rule that pleadings are to be construed most strongly against the pleader, the case made by the petition was substantially as set out in the preceding note, and a demurrer to it was properly sustained.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Crawford County; W. H. Felton, Jr., Judge.

Action by Z. T. Harris against the Southern Railway Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Z. T. Harris brought suit against the Southern Railway Company, alleging substantially as follows: On the 9th day of November, 1905, plaintiff was injured by an engine operated by the defendant company; "said injury being caused by the negligent running of the said engine, and being caused without any negligence on the part of petitioner." The plaintiff had a contract to carry the United States mail from Roberta to Knoxville. He was also a hotel keeper at Roberta, and both of these occupations required his attendance at the depot of the defendant company upon the arrival of passenger trains. On the day mentioned, in the performance of his duties, he left the hotel to go to the depot of the defendant company, and in order to do so it was necessary to cross the railroad track at the depot. "As the plaintiff stepped upon the track, the engine of the north-bound passenger train struck the plaintiff," inflicting injuries upon him. The place where the engine struck him was a point on the track located almost at the depot, near the point where the trains always stop to receive passengers. A few yards south of this point there is a public crossing, which constitutes a part of the main thoroughfare of the town of Roberta, and is used constantly by the citizens. The train had to pass over the crossing before striking the plaintiff. The defendant was negligent in approaching the crossing at such a high rate of speed that it was impossible for the engineer operating it to stop the train within a sufficiently short distance to be safe for the public using the crossing. If the engineer had approached the crossing at such rate of speed as would have enabled him to control the train, as the law required and as the safety of the public demanded, the plaintiff would have crossed the track in safety.

By amendment the plaintiff alleged as follows: It was well known to the defendant and its engineer that the plaintiff was in the habit of crossing at the point where he was struck. It was in an incorporated town, and at a place where people congregated and assembled at the time when this train was due to arrive. Plaintiff used ordinary care, and would have succeeded in crossing in safety, but for the fact that the locomotive was running at an unusual and excessive rate of speed—at such a negligent rate of speed as this plaintiff did not know of and could not necessarily have anticipated. At the time he stepped upon the track he was far enough ahead of the engine to have been seen by the engineer, and for the engineer to have checked his speed, so as to have prevented the striking of the plaintiff and the injuries which were inflicted upon him. The negligence of the defendant and its engineer consisted in running the train at a negligent rate of speed at the place and under the circumstances named, and in not keeping a lookout at the time and place mentioned, "by which plaintiff could have been seen and the speed of the train checked, so as to have avoided the striking of the plaintiff." The crossing is part of the street in an incorporated town, and all that part of the railroad from the crossing to the station, beyond the point where plaintiff was injured, is and has been for many years used as a thoroughfare by the public in approaching the station, and that part of the road between the street and the station is constantly used by the public, all of which was well known to the defendant. The point at which the train struck the plaintiff was 25 yards north of the public crossing and 10 yards south of the depot. The train was going at such a rate of speed "at this point" as to be dangerous to passengers and to constitute negligence as to all persons whose business required that they cross the track of the defendant company at this point. Plaintiff was under contract with the United States government to deliver and receive the mails transported by the defendant. The railroad was also under contract with the United States government to transport the mails to and from the town of Roberta. By reason of this employment the plaintiff's presence was necessary at the depot of the defendant company upon the arrival and departure of its passenger trains as alleged.

The defendant demurred to the declaration, both generally and specially. The demurrer was sustained, and the plaintiff excepted.

A. C. Riley, L. L. Brown, and H. A. Mathews, for plaintiff in error. Arthur Heyman, A. J. Danielly, and C. E. Battle, for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. (after stating the facts as above). 1. The special demurrer attacks almost every allegation in the petition. As we shall affirm the judgment sustaining the general demurrer, it will not be profitable to deal at length with the various grounds of the special demurrer. Some of them were well taken, and some were not. The plaintiff in his petition must allege facts, not merely conclusions. General allegations that the defendant was negligent, or that the plaintiff was injured by the negligent conduct of the defendant, or the like, will not alone withstand a special demurrer. The pleader should state wherein the negligence consisted. He must plainly, fully, and distinctly set forth his cause of action. If he has done this, he is not required to enter into elaborate statements of minutiae. If he sets forth the negligent conduct complained of, a subsequent reference to it as the negligence above stated, or "above enumerated," does not render the petition demurrable.

2. Ordinarily a person who is injured by a railway train is not required to allege as a part of his case that he was without fault or negligence; but, if the facts alleged in his declaration show that he was wanting in ordinary care, the point may be raised by demurrer. It is a familiar rule that pleadings are to be construed most strongly against the pleader. In the light of this rule, how stands the plaintiff's case? He alleges that the defendant's train was running very rapidly in passing over the crossing and approaching the station close by; that there was negligence, both in not having the engine under control and in not keeping a lookout. But what does he show as to himself? He does not deny that he saw the engine approaching at a rapid rate of speed, or that he knew that the speed was not checked, or that there was no lookout kept. Indeed, so far as the petition shows, he is to be taken as having full knowledge of the dangerous position he assumed in going upon the track. He alleges that the engineer could have seen him, and it would seem that he could as easily have seen the engine. He says generally that there was "such a negligent rate of speed" as he did not know of; but he does not say that he did not see the rapidly moving train. It does not appear how far distant the engine was when he undertook to cross, but apparently he stepped immediately in front of it, since he alleged that "as the plaintiff stepped upon the track the engine of the north-bound passenger train struck the plaintiff." If it struck him as he stepped upon the track, he must have gone on the track very close in front of it. It was not stated whether the engine had already passed beyond the road crossing before he made his attempt to go in front of it. We have, therefore, presented to us a case where the plaintiff voluntarily went upon a railroad track immediately, or almost immediately, in front of a rapidly moving train, with knowledge of the danger, and miscalculated on his ability to cross the track before being struck. Such a declaration does not authorize a recovery. Thomas v. Central of Georgia Ry. Co., 121 Ga. 38, 48 S. E. 683; Atlanta Railway & Power Co. v. Owens, 119 Ga. 833, 47 S. E. 213; Ivy v. East Tenn., etc., Ry. Co., 88 Ga. 71, 13 S. E. 947.

Under the ruling above made, it is not necessary to discuss the effect of the law in regard to public crossings in determining the question of the existence of negligence on the part of the railroad relatively to persons who are near such crossings.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 123)

T. B. REDMOND & CO. v. ATLANTA & BIRMINGHAM AIR LINE RY.

ATLANTA & BIRMINGHAM AIR LINE RY. v. T. B. REDMOND & CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 4, 1907.)

1. ACCORD AND SATISFACTION—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

Where one has an unliquidated demand against another, and the debtor sends a check to his attorney, together with a receipt to be signed by the creditor, and the latter receives from the attorney the check, though protesting that a much larger sum is due him, and signs a receipt under seal which contains the stipulation that in consideration of the amount of the check, or voucher, the debtor releases the creditor "from all claims and demands whatsoever for or on account of the said contract, or for work and labor done and for materials furnished by us in connection with the same," the receiving and retaining of the sum offered, and the signing of the receipt, becomes an executed agreement, and constitutes a good accord and satisfaction, and, as such, is binding upon the creditor holding the demand, although he entered upon the receipt at the time of signing the same, or prior thereto, the letters "E. & O. E.," which mean "errors and omissions excepted."

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 1, Accord and Satisfaction, §§ 88-93.]

2. SAME—RESCISSIION—TENDER OF BENEFITS RECEIVED.

Even if the amount tendered and accepted was the amount fixed by the estimate of the debtor's engineer, and such estimate was incorrect, and the result of a mistake or fraud, the creditor would not be entitled to retain the proceeds of the check received upon the terms above set forth, and sue for the remainder of his unliquidated demand. Before he would be entitled to maintain such an action, it would be necessary for him to tender back the amount received.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 1, Accord and Satisfaction, § 145.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Paulding County; A. L. Bartlett, Judge.

Action by T. B. Redmond & Co. against the Atlanta & Birmingham Air Line Railway. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error, and defendant assigns cross-error. Judgment affirmed on main bill of exceptions. Cross-bill of exceptions dismissed.

T. B. Redmond & Co. brought suit against the Atlanta & Birmingham Air Line Railway Company to recover various amounts alleged to be due to the plaintiffs for work done and material furnished in the construction of a single track railroad along sections 37, 38, 39, and 40 of defendant's line. Both general and special demurrers were interposed by the defendant. Some of the demurrers were overruled and others sustained. The plaintiffs filed their bill of exceptions to the order sustaining certain grounds of the demurrer, and the defendant by cross-bill excepted to the order overruling certain other grounds. The petition alleged that the petitioners had entered into a contract in March, 1903, with the East & West Railroad Company to do certain work required in the construction of a single track railroad for the latter company on the sections above mentioned. Profert was made of said contract. It was further alleged that the Atlanta & Birmingham Air Line Railway Company, the defendant, was formed by a consolidation of the East & West Railroad Company and the Chattahoochee Terminal Railway, and that the defendant company had undertaken the construction of said sections of railroad and assumed the place of the East & West Railroad Company under the contract with petitioners, and became liable to petitioners in the same manner as the East & West Railroad Company would have been had not said substitution taken place. The contract provided, among other things, that "all questions, differences, or controversies which may arise between the company and the contractor, under or in reference to this agreement and specification, or its performance or non-performance, or the work to which they relate, or in any way whatever pertaining to or connected with said work, shall be referred to the engineer of the company, and his decision shall be final and conclusive as to both parties * * * understood and agreed between the parties that the work under this contract shall at every stage of its progress from beginning to end be subject to the directions, inspection and acceptance of the engineer, who shall determine without appeal what in any case a fair construction of the contract requires to be done by either party, and whose measurements, classifications and estimates, monthly or final, shall be absolutely conclusive upon both parties." The petition alleges that the final estimate, which was furnished to them about the 31st day of August, 1904, was erroneous and fraudulent in various particulars, and failed to allow petitioners the amount to which they were entitled for work done and material furnished. It further appears from the petition and amendments thereto that the final estimate was presented to petitioners, together with a voucher for the amount represented by said final estimate to be due them, by the attorney at law for the defendant. When the same was so presented, they protested that it was incorrect, and were thereupon referred to the engineer of defendant, one Jones. They sought to obtain access to said Jones, but he was not in Atlanta, so they wired to him at Birmingham, Ala., as follows: "Amount of voucher tendered us to-day is not the full amount due us. * * * Will accept voucher pending future adjustment of our claim." This telegram, it is alleged, was delivered to said Jones, and after waiting 24 hours for a reply, and no reply having been received, petitioners accepted the amount shown to be due them by said final estimate, and signed the following receipt: "We acknowledge to have received from the Atlanta & Birmingham Air Line Railway the sum of $41,664.67 in full payment for all materials furnished and for all work and labor done by us under or in connection with the contract [identifying the contract above set out]. The said contract being now completed and the said amount being the final payment to us under the same, and we do hereby release the said Atlanta & Birmingham Air Line Railway from all claims and demands whatsoever, for or on account of the said contract, or for work and labor done and for materials furnished by us in connection with the same. In witness whereof, we have hereunto set our hands and seals the seventh day of October, 1904. E. & O. E." Petitioners further allege that, at the time said voucher was signed by them, they were in great financial distress and in the most pressing need of money, by reason of the work which they had done for the defendant, which fact was known to the defendant, and that they were forced, by reason of such financial condition, to accept said sum, or await the result of protracted and expensive litigation, and that defendant took advantage of said condition of petitioners and required them to sign said receipt. By amendment it was further alleged that, before accepting the said sum of money and signing said receipt, plaintiffs entered thereon the letters "E. & O. E.," being an abbreviation of the words, "Errors and omissions excepted"; that said abbreviation is of well-known meaning in the business world, the purpose being to call in question the correctness of the statement, account, or receipt, and indicate that the correctness of such statement, account, or receipt is not admitted; and that the defendant took from the plaintiff said receipt, and turned over to them said voucher with full knowledge that it was indebted to them more than the sum called for by said voucher, and that the same was being received by plaintiff only in partial settlement and subject to future adjustment. The defendant filed general and special demurrers. The third, fourth, and fifth grounds of the general demurrer are as follows: "Because it appears by said petition that the said contract sued on has been settled and final estimates have been furnished to petitioner thereon, and payments have been made and accepted according to said final estimates and have been received by said plaintiffs on said final estimates. Said settlement thus made is sought to be set aside upon the ground of fraud, but no tender is alleged to have been made, or is in said petition made, to this defendant of the amount alleged to have been paid and received under said final estimate and settlement. Because the petition sets forth no cause of action. Because said petition shows that the said defendant hath paid said plaintiff for and on account of said work done under said contract and that said payment was accepted by said plaintiff, and shows no sufficient reason why said payment and settlement should be set aside, or any reason why plaintiffs should be allowed to recover." The court sustained the general demurrer on the grounds just quoted, and dismissed the suit. The plaintiff excepted.

Smith, Berner, Smith & Hastings and Peeples & Jordan, for plaintiff in error. King, Spalding & Little, for defendant in error.

BECK, J. (after stating the facts as above). It appears from the petition in this case that the plaintiffs accepted a certain sum tendered by the other party as the full amount due under the contract, though protesting that it was an improper amount and less than they were entitled to, and released the defendant, in consideration of such payment, from all further liability under the contract sued on. And it is insisted by defendant's counsel that this constituted an accord and satisfaction, and that under Civ. Code 1895, § 3735, the plaintiffs are concluded; the agreement having been actually executed by the payment of the money. Defendant insists that the payment and acceptance of the money, under the facts set forth in the petition, under the provisions of the Code section of the Code just cited, is binding upon the plaintiffs as an accord and satisfaction, whether the demand of the latter was liquidated or unliquidated. Under the view that we take of the questions made by the record, it is not necessary to decide whether that contention be sound, or whether section 3735 of the Code is so modified by the provisions of section 3734, when the two sections are construed together, that, if plaintiffs' demand was for a liquidated amount, the acceptance of the amount embodied in the receipt constituted accord and satisfaction, for in this case the demand was unliquidated. The contrary view, urged by the plaintiffs, is not countenanced by the authorities when applied to their case as stated by them. "A debt or demand is liquidated when agreed on by the parties, or fixed as to the amount, by the operation of law." Hargroves v. Cooke, 15 Ga. 321. "The word 'liquidated,' in the sense of the rule that payment of a lesser sum is a discharge of the remainder where the amount in dispute is unliquidated, but that it is not a discharge where it is liquidated, means that the amount due has been ascertained and agreed on by the parties or fixed by operation of law. The rule does not apply where there is a bona fide dispute as to the amount actually due. Treat v. Price, 47 Neb. 875, 66 N. W. 834, 836." "A demand is not liquidated, even if it appears that something is due, unless it appears how much is due; and when it is admitted that one of two specific sums is due, but there is a general dispute as to which is the proper amount, the demand is regarded as 'unliquidated' within the meaning of the term as applied to the subject of accord and satisfaction. Lestienne v. Ernst, 5 App. Div. 373, 39 N. Y. Supp. 199, 200, citing Nassoly v. Tomlinson, 148 N. Y. 326, 331, 42 N. E. 715, 51 Am. St. Rep. 695; Ives v. Jefferson County Sup'rs, 18 Wis. 166, 168; Clark v. Dutton, 69 Ill. 521, 523; Greenlee v. Mosnat, 116 Iowa, 535, 90 N. W. 338, 339, citing Nassoly v. Tomlinson, 148 N. Y. 326, 42 N. E. 715, 51 Am. St. Rep. 695." The two latter quotations were taken from 5 Words & Phrases, 4174.

A brief reference to some of the items of the account upon which the plaintiffs' demand in this suit is based will produce the conviction at once that it was unliquidated. One of the items alleged to be due to petitioners was for removing a certain number of cubic yards of dirt, which "petitioners show that they were compelled to handle in a manner not contemplated by the contract, and not provided for by the contract, and that said work was reasonably worth the sum at which it has been charged up [in the petition]." Another large item was for handling "wet excavation," and "petitioners show that no contract price was fixed for handling wet excavation, and that a customary and reasonable allowance for the same would have been $1.50 per cubic yard," and that only 70 cents per cubic yard "was allowed for the same according to the final estimate of the defendant." And "petitioners further show that the fills or slides in the tunnel amounted to 3,215 cubic yards, and that $3 per cubic yard was a reasonable price for handling this work, and petitioners show that no price was fixed in the contract for the payment of the same, but the defendant company arbitrarily undertook to fix the price at $1.25 per cubic yard." Another item was for lumber which it is alleged was improperly rejected by the defendant's engineer. It is unnecessary to enumerate all of the items charged in the petition, as it sufficiently appears from what has been shown that the indebtedness due to the plaintiffs by the defendant was not ascertained or agreed upon by the parties, and can not be regarded as "liquidated" within the meaning of the term, as applied to the subject of accord and satisfaction.

The mere fact that the defendant acceded to the estimate of the engineer, and was willing to pay that amount without attacking it, and tendered that amount with the condition embodied in the receipt or release, did not have the effect to render the plaintiffs' unliquidated demand a liquidated one. It did not render it one "ascertained and agreed upon by the parties or fixed by operation of law." In the case of Chicago Railway Co. v. Clark, 178 U. S. 353, 20 Sup. Ct. 924, 44 L. Ed. 1099, it was said: "The proposition is that the release was given without consideration, and that Clark was entitled to recover, so far as the items of $40,000 and $9,558.63 were concerned, on the principle that, where a liquidated sum is due, the payment of a less sum in satisfaction thereof, though accepted as satisfaction, is not binding as such, for want of consideration. Cumber v. Wane, 1 Strange, 426. The rule therein laid down has been must questioned and qualified. Goddard v. O'Brien, 9 Q. B. Div. 37; Sibree v. Tripp, 15 M. & W. 23; Couldery v. Bartrum, 19 Ch. D. 394; Foakes v. Beer, 9 App. Cas. 605; Notes to Cumber v. Wane, in 1 Smith's Leading Cases, 606; 12 Harvard Law Review, 521. The result of the modern cases is that the rule only applies when the larger sum is liquidated, and when there is no consideration whatever for the surrender of part of it; and, while the general rule must be regarded as well settled, it is considered so far with disfavor as to be confined strictly to cases within it. * * * And the cases are many in which it has been held that, where an aggregate amount is in dispute, the payment of a specified sum conceded to be due—that is, by including certain items, but excluding disputed items—on condition that the sum so paid shall be received in full satisfaction, will be sustained as an extinguishment of the whole. In Fuller v. Kemp, 138 N. Y. 231, 33 N. E. 1034, 20 L. R. A. 785, where certain items of an account were disputed, and certain items were undisputed, and defendant paid plaintiff only the amount of the undisputed items, the court held that the dispute over certain of the items made the account an unliquidated one, and that plaintiff, by accepting the amount of the undisputed items with notice that it was sent as payment in full, was precluded from recovering the balance of his demand."

The demand of the plaintiff being unliquidated, it necessarily follows that the tender or offer of the sum mentioned in the receipt upon the terms recited therein was in effect an accord and satisfaction. By the acceptance on the part of the plaintiffs of the sum named and the signing of the receipt containing the conditions upon which it was offered, the agreement to accept less than the amount of the unliquidated demand became executed, and, when the plaintiff attempted to collect the balance of his demand, the defendant could plead the executed agreement as an accord and satisfaction. And this conclusion is not affected by the fact that at the time of signing said receipt the plaintiffs entered thereon the letters "E. & O. E.," which were abbreviations for the words, "errors and omissions excepted." It appeared by said petition that said voucher was presented to the plaintiff by J. J. Spalding, attorney at law for defendant; that the said receipt was signed and delivered to the said Spalding; that the petitioners were informed in effect by the said Spalding, prior to accepting said voucher and cashing the same, that he had no authority and could not give them any relief in regard to their complaints, as set forth in their petition and amendments thereto; and that, without other or further communication from any agent, officer, or attorney of the defendant, the said plaintiffs received the amount of said voucher and signed the said receipt. Where a certain sum of money is tendered by a debtor to a creditor on the condition that he accept it in full satisfaction of his demand, the sum due being in dispute, the debtor must either refuse the tender or accept it as made, subject to the condition. If he accept it, he accepts the condition also, notwithstanding any protest he may make to the contrary. "A., being indebted to B. in an uncertain amount, sent to the C. Bank the amount which A. conceded to be due, with instructions to pay the sum to B., but only in full settlement, and on his signing a receipt to that effect. B., protesting that more was due, accepted the money, and signed the receipt, but caused the bank to send back, accompanying the receipt, a letter declaring that he only received the money on account, and not in settlement. Held that, by receiving the money, he had accepted the condition on which it was tendered, and that his protest availed nothing. Held, further, that the terms of the receipt, and the refusal of the bank to pay the money except upon his signing it, were notice to him that the bank had no authority to pay it, except on the condition that it should be received in full settlement." Treat v. Price, 47 Neb. 875, 66 N. W. 835. "When a party makes an offer of a certain sum to settle a claim, when the sum in controversy is open and unliquidated, and he attaches to his offer the condition that the sum, if taken at all, must be received in full satisfaction of the claim in dispute, and the party receives the money, he takes it subject to the condition attached to it, and it will operate as an accord and satisfaction, even though the party at the time of receiving the money declares that he will not receive it in that manner, but only in part payment of his debt as far as it goes." McDaniels v. Lapham, 21 Vt. 222. "The mere act of receiving the money is an agreement to accept the same on the conditions upon which it was offered." McDaniels v. Bank of Rutland, 29 Vt. 230, 70 Am. Dec. 406.

The claim that this release is not binding, because the sum named in the final estimate was fraudulently fixed, cannot avail the plaintiffs. As plaintiffs themselves did the work and were on the ground, they were in possession of all data necessary to determine whether the engineer's estimate was correct or incorrect, and, if incorrect, to what extent, and whether his conduct was fair or unfair. The petition shows not only opportunity of knowledge and notice, but actual knowledge of the facts by which they could have made good their present complaint that the final estimate was incorrect, unfair, and fraudulent. That being the case, they did not sign the receipt in ignorance of the fraud upon the part of the engineer, or of the mistake made by him; and having so signed the release with such notice, and accepted payment, they are now bound by the same. The plaintiffs had full opportunity for knowing the truth, and, if they did not ascertain it with such opportunity to inform themselves, it was because of negligence upon their own part, and equity will not now relieve them of its consequences. "It is true courts of equity will grant relief for ignorance, as well as for a mistake of fact; but the principles on which relief is granted in those cases are very different. When the party has acted in ignorance of facts merely, courts of equity will never afford relief where actual knowledge could have been obtained by the exercise of due diligence and inquiry. That was the very point determined in the case of Penny v. Martin, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 567. Justice Story has also observed (1 Eq. Jur. § 146, and note) that 'It is not sufficient that the fact is material, but it must be such that he could not by reasonable diligence get knowledge of when he was first put upon inquiry; for, if by such reasonable diligence he could have obtained knowledge of the fact, equity will not relieve him, since that would be to encourage culpable negligence.'" McDaniels v. Bank of Rutland, supra. But, even if this were not the case, we think the contention of the defendant company is sound when it insists that the plaintiffs, having received the amount of money tendered by the defendant in settlement of this claim, and having executed a full release, cannot set aside the same without having first, as a condition precedent to filing his suit, tendered back the money received. The plaintiffs received the sum of $41,664.67. They received it on terms and conditions stated in the receipt signed by them, and they ought not to be permitted to retain it and repudiate an executed agreement. The case as presented by the record makes applicable the language of Mr. Justice Cobb in the case of Hamilton & Co. v. Stewart, 105 Ga. 300, 31 S. E. 184: "The retention of the amount forwarded, declared to be in full settlement of the claim held by the person to whom it is sent, coupled with a failure within a reasonable time to decline the proposition, will raise a conclusive presumption of an acceptance of the terms and conditions set forth in the proposal. While, of course, a party cannot be bound by a settlement, unless he assents to its terms, still this assent may be implied from the circumstances, and conduct inconsistent with a refusal would raise a presumption of assent, upon which the other party would have a right to act. Nothing could be clearer than the proposition that where one person delivers to another property, to be retained upon a condition stated, the party receiving it cannot retain the property and repudiate the condition." See, also, the cases of East Tennessee, V. & G. Ry. Co. v. Hayes, 83 Ga. 558, 10 S. E. 350, and Walker v. Wadley, 124 Ga. 283, 52 S. E. 904. Again, it was held in the case of Strodder v. Southern Granite Co., 94 Ga. 626, 19 S. E. 1022: "Where an accord and satisfaction is fully executed, the party receiving the money from the other cannot rescind on the ground of fraud * * * without refunding or offering to refund the money which was the fruit of the accord and satisfaction. If any exception to this general rule results from inability, by reason of poverty, to restore the money, it is only when the fraud is not discovered * * * until after the money has been expended, or otherwise put beyond the power and control of the plaintiff. To use and appropriate the money with knowledge of the imposition would be a ratification of the settlement." We do not think that this ruling is in conflict with the case of Robinson v. Leatherbee, 120 Ga. 901, 48 S. E. 380, as it does not appear in that case that the money was tendered on condition that it should be accepted in full settlement of the account; but, if it is in conflict, then the case of Robinson v. Leatherbee must yield to the earlier decisions which are authority for the ruling here made.

It follows from the foregoing that the court did not err in sustaining the general demurrer and dismissing the action.

Judgment affirmed on the main bill of exceptions. Cross-bill of exceptions dismissed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 267)

PINNEBAD v. PINNEBAD.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 14, 1907.)

1. NEW TRIAL—BRIEF OF EVIDENCE—DISMISSAL OF MOTION.

Unless there is an order of the court relieving the movant in a motion for a new trial of the necessity of filing a brief of the evidence in accordance with the terms of Civ. Code 1895, § 5484, whenever the time fixed by the provisions of that section for the filing of the brief of evidence has expired, the motion for a new trial is ripe for dismissal at any time that the judge has jurisdiction to entertain a motion to that effect. Leave to prepare and file a brief of the evidence on or before the hearing in vacation must be unequivocally granted, else the movant cannot justify the omission to follow the practice required in the section above cited. Gould v. Johnston, 123 Ga. 765, 51 S. E. 608. [Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, New Trial, § 273.]

2. APPEAL—REVIEW—MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL—DISMISSAL.

Where the order setting the hearing of the motion for a new trial in vacation is susceptible of a construction which would allow the movant to prepare and file a brief of the evidence at a given time in the future, and of a construction which would not preserve this right, the Supreme Court will adopt that construction of the order which is placed upon it by the judge who granted it, when at the final hearing he dismisses the motion for a new trial on account of the failure to file the brief of the evidence. Brown v. Richards, 114 Ga. 318, 40 S. E. 224.

3. SAME—CONSTRUCTION OF ORDER.

Inasmuch as the statute expressly declares that a brief of the evidence accompanying a motion for a new trial must be filed during the term at which the trial was had, and it is frequently true that the purpose of a movant in procuring the order allowing additional time after the expiration of a term to amend the motion at any time before the final hearing is simply to reserve the right of amending the grounds of the motion, an order which, after reciting that it is impossible to make and complete the brief of the testimony in a case before the adjournment of court, provides that the motion be heard and determined on a named date in vacation, "and that movant may amend said motion at any time before the final hearing," will not, when construed by the judge who granted it as authorizing only 30 days from the time the motion is filed within which to file the brief of the evidence, be differently construed by the Supreme Court. Barnes v. M. & N. R. Co., 105 Ga. 495, 30 S. E. 883.

4. STIPULATIONS—BRIEF OF EVIDENCE—FAILURE TO FILE.

When, in a case of the character referred to in the preceding note, there is nothing to indicate, from the orders passed from time to time postponing the hearing of the motion for a new trial, that the respondent has waived the right to object to a brief of the evidence being filed after the expiration of 30 days from the date that the motion was filed, it is no sufficient reason to overrule a motion to dismiss the motion for a new trial that there was an agreement between counsel to insert, in one of the orders continuing the motion, passed after the expiration of 30 days from the date that the motion for a new trial was filed, a provision that the motion might be thereafter perfected in any way; it not appearing that such agreement was in writing, and no steps having been taken to amend the order which it is claimed should have contained this provision.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Glynn County;
L. A. Parker, Judge.

Action by Vincent Pinnebad against E. J. Pinnebad. From the judgment, plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.
See 57 S. E. 80.

Crovatt & Whitfield and Jno. M. Graham, for plaintiff in error. D. W. Krauss, for defendant in error.

OOBB, P. J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur, except ATKINSON, J., disqualified.

(129 Ga. 392)

JORDAN v. DOOLY.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 8, 1907.)

1. WRIT OF ERROR—REVIEW—GRANT OF NEW TRIAL.

The rule that the first grant of a new trial will not be disturbed, except where the verdict is demanded by the evidence, is applicable to a case where two successive verdicts have been rendered, one for the plaintiff and the other for the defendant, and where in each instance a new trial was granted.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 33, 63.]

2. NEW TRIAL—CONFLICTING EVIDENCE.

The evidence was conflicting, and the court did not abuse his discretion in vacating the verdict and granting a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, New Trial, §§ 144, 145; vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 3871.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Banks County;
O. H. Brand, Judge.

Action by G. W. Dooly against R. H. Jordan. Verdict for defendant. From an order granting a new trial, he brings error. Affirmed.

C. R. Faulkner and Fletcher M. Johnson, for plaintiff in error. J. C. Edwards, J. J. Bowden, and A. J. Griffin, for defendant in error.

EVANS, J. The case was complaint for land, and the paramount issue was that two of the plaintiff's muniments of title were void for usury. The evidence upon this point was conflicting. The jury returned a verdict for the defendant, and the court granted a new trial. The bill of exceptions complains of the judgment granting a new trial.

It appears from the record that the case was tried at a previous term of the court, and resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff, which was set aside on motion for new trial. Counsel for plaintiff in error insist that there is no merit in the various grounds of the motion, and that, as this is the second verdict which has been rendered in the case, the court abused his discretion in ordering a new trial. It is true that this is the second verdict, but it is not the second concurrent verdict. The reason of the rule that a second concurrent verdict (where no error of law has been committed) should not be disturbed except in cases where the verdict is strongly and decidedly against the weight of the evidence, and manifestly wrong, is that the jury are the judges of the facts, and, when this arbiter has twice spoken, their conclusions should not be lightly set aside. Dethrage v. Rome, 125 Ga. 806, 54 S. E. 654, and cases cited. But where the verdict is for one litigant, and that is set aside, and the next verdict is for the other litigant, the last verdict, instead of having the indorsement and approval of the first, is actually repugnant thereto. Hence the rule that the first grant of a new trial will not be disturbed, except in cases where the verdict is demanded by the evidence, is applicable to a case where two successive verdicts have been rendered, one for the plaintiff and the other for the defendant, and where in each instance a new trial has been granted.

The evidence in the case at bar upon the controlling issue was in hopeless conflict, and the judge did not abuse his discretion in granting a new trial.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 374)

SHREVE et al. v. PENDLETON, Judge.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 8, 1907.)

1. JUDGES — MANDAMUS TO CO-ORDINATE JUDGE.

When duties are imposed on a judge of the superior court as an officer, another judge of the superior court has no power to issue a mandamus to compel the performance of such duties.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 29, Judges, § 94.]

2. APPEAL—REVIEW.

One superior court judge having no power to issue a mandamus against another superior court judge to compel the discharge of an official function, this court will not inquire into the merits of the case, but will affirm the judgment refusing to grant a mandamus absolute.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; H. M. Holden, Judge.

Application by S. C. Shreve and others for writ of mandamus to J. L. Pendleton, Judge. From an order denying the writ, applicants bring error. Affirmed.

Anderson, Felder, Rountree & Wilson, for plaintiffs in error. W. O. Wilson, for defendant in error.

EVANS, J. Applicants desired to incorporate a town agreeably to the provisions of Pol. Code 1895, §§ 685-687. They filed a petition in the superior court of Fulton county (which is embraced in the Atlanta judicial circuit), in which it was alleged that the various provisions of the foregoing Code sections had been complied with, and prayed an order directing the clerk of the superior court of Fulton county to issue a certificate of incorporation. A property owner filed a caveat to the granting of the order prayed for, and the case was submitted to the judge on an agreed statement of facts. The judge of the Atlanta circuit, for reasons assigned in his judgment, based on conclusions of law from the admitted facts, refused to direct the clerk of the superior court of Fulton county to issue a certificate of incorporation. Whereupon applicants applied to the judge of the superior courts of the Northern circuit for the writ of mandamus to compel the signing of the order directing the clerk to issue a certificate of incorporation. The judge of the Northern circuit granted a mandamus nisi, and upon the coming in of the answer denied a mandamus absolute. The writ of error complains of the refusal to make the mandamus absolute.

We think an insurmountable obstacle confronts the plaintiffs before the merits of their case can be considered. It involves a question of such grave concern that it is well that it should be settled before any serious complication may arise from one judge invading the jurisdiction of another judge of co-ordinate power, and compelling him by mandamus to do an act which, though not strictly judicial in character, appertains to, and is devolved upon, the judicial officer. If one judge of the superior court is without jurisdiction to issue the writ of mandamus against another judge of the superior court to compel the performance of an act appertaining to the latter's judicial office, this court will not reverse the judgment refusing the writ. Harris et al. v. Sheffield, Judge, 128 Ga. 299, 57 S. E. 305.

At common law, the writ of mandamus issued from the court of King's Bench, and was directed to any person, corporation, or inferior court of judicature, requiring them to do some particular thing, therein specified, which pertains to their office and duty, and which the court of King's Bench had previously determined, or at least supposes, to be consonant with right and justice, and where there is no other adequate and specified remedy. Merrill on Mandamus, § 1. In the Constitution of Georgia adopted in 1798 (article 3, § 7), power was conferred on the judges of the superior court to issue writs of mandamus, and all other writs which may be necessary for carrying their powers fully into effect. In cases where the manner and time of exercising this power is not prescribed by statute, we have to look to the common and statute law of England, as of force at the time of our adopting statute. Johnson v. State, 1 Ga. 273. Our present Constitution omits any reference to the writ of mandamus, but the statute (Civ. Code 1895, § 4321) declares that the judges of the superior courts have authority to grant for their respective circuits writs of mandamus. "All official duties should be faithfully fulfilled, and whenever, from any cause, a defect of legal justice would ensue from a failure or improper fulfillment, the writ of mandamus may issue to compel a due performance, if there be no other specific legal remedy for the legal rights." Civ. Code 1895, § 4867. This section of the Code at first blush seems sufficiently broad to cover every case of official inaction; but, comprehensive as it is, it cannot extend to every case of failure to perform official duty. For instance, suppose the Supreme Court should arbitrarily refuse to decide a case within the time limited by the Constitution, no one would contend that the judge of the trial court, whose decision is under review, could compel action by issuing the writ of mandamus at the instance of either litigant. This is so for the reason that the writ issues only from a superior court to an inferior court to do those acts which clearly appertain to their duty. The very etymology of the word "mandamus—we command"—implies superior power, the power of a superior authority to compel an official or inferior judicature to act. The same reason which prohibits an inferior court from controlling the conduct of a superior tribunal applies just as cogently to the effort of one judge to compel the action of another judge of co-ordinate jurisdiction and power. The statute requires a judge of the superior court to decide a motion for a new trial within a specified time, yet no one would contend that a judge of another circuit had such supervisory power as to compel his action by mandamus. The question was squarely before the Alabama Supreme Court, in State ex rel. Thompson v. Circuit Judge of Mobile, 9 Ala. 338, where it was held that where the statute imposes the duty, not upon the individual, but upon the officer, in the absence of an express statute, one circuit judge has not the power to issue a mandamus to another circuit judge. The incorporation of a town or village is not by the judge sitting as an individual, but by the superior court. Pol. Code 1895, §§ 685-687. A part of this machinery consists of a petition filed in the superior court. The Code sections contemplate a vote by the qualified voters of the territory to be included in the proposed town, and a certificate of the result, by the managers of the election to "the superior court of the county in case a majority of all the qualified voters residing within such boundary shall vote in favor of such incorporation." Then follows section 687, which provides that "upon the filing of such certificate, the superior court shall, by an order, direct the clerk of said court to issue a certificate of the incorporation of such town or village," etc. It seems clear to us that the purpose of the Legislature was to confer upon the superior court power and authority to incorporate towns or villages. For the purpose of this argument it is immaterial whether the power was conferred on the court or the judge thereof as an officer. Certainly it was not conferred upon the individual temporarily filling the judicial office to act as an individual. The action which applicants for incorporation desired the judge to take was official, was the performance of an act as judge of the superior court. In our judgment one judge of the superior court cannot issue a mandamus to another judge of the superior court to compel the performance of an official act.

But it may be argued, if the applicants for incorporation are denied this particular remedy, they will be without any, inasmuch as the Supreme Court cannot issue a writ of mandamus in a case of this character (Central R. R. v. Miller, 91 Ga. 83, 16 S. E. 256), nor review by writ of error the action of the superior court granting or refusing a charter (Mangham v. Mallory, 128 Ga. 430, 57 S. E. 638). We reply in the language of Mr. Justice Crawford, in Russell v. Cooley, 69 Ga. 218: "The same difficulty would arise, and the citizens be equally remediless, if the judge were to refuse to hold his courts, refuse to punish persons convicted of crime, or discharge any other official duty incumbent upon him. The remedy in all such cases lies in impeachment." There may be found some loose obiter dicta among our decisions not entirely harmonious with our conclusion, but we think that no case will be found where the point decided conflicts with what we rule in this case.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 154)

RUSSELL v. EQUITABLE LOAN & SECURITY CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 5, 1907.)

WRIT OF ERROR—DIVIDED COURT—AFFIRMANCE.

This case being for decision by a full bench of six justices, and the justices being equally divided in opinion, the judgment is affirmed by operation of law.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 4421-4427.]

Fish, C. J., and Lumpkin and Evans, JJ., dissenting.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Fulton County; J. T. Pendleton, Judge.

Action by Lewis C. Russell against the Equitable Loan & Security Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed by divided court.

Lewis C. Russell instituted suit against the Equitable Loan & Security Company, a corporation, in the superior court of Fulton county. In the petition it was alleged, among other things, as follows: "(2) That your petitioner is the holder and owner * * * of four certificates, numbered 740, 742, 743, and 745, respectively, class A. (3) By the terms of said certificates, the Equitable Loan & Security Company agreed, undertook, and obligated itself to pay * * * the sum of $505.54 upon each of said certificates, making $2,022.16, should the holders of each of said certificates pay as specified therein 180 monthly installments of $1.25 each upon each certificate. (4) The said certificates are identical in form; * * * the only difference being that each certificate shows its proper number, and a copy of one of said certificates is hereto attached as a part of this petition, and marked 'Exhibit A.' (5) Your petitioner shows that upon his part he has fully complied with each and all of the stipulations, conditions, and requirements devolving upon him under said contract. (6) Having paid all dues and charges according to the requirements mentioned in paragraph 3, the said company is indebted to him in the sum of $2,022.16. (7) The said Equitable Loan & Security Company refuses to pay said sum of money according to its undertaking and obligation, though requested so to do and in duty bound thereto. * * * Other allegations were made which involved certain certificates known as "Class B"; but, as the judge did not pass upon them, it is unnecessary to set them out.

Exhibit A, which is referred to in paragraph 4 of the plaintiff's petition, is as follows:

"United States of America. Incorporated under the laws of the state of Georgia. Equitable Loan & Security Company. Atlanta [\$505.54] Georgia. Class A. No. 2,049. The Equitable Loan & Security Company of Atlanta, Georgia, promises to pay to — of —, Georgia, or order, at its home office in Atlanta, Ga., five hundred and five dollars and fifty-four cents (\$505.54) upon the following express terms and conditions: (1) That there shall be paid by the holder to the maker hereof, at its home office in Atlanta, Georgia, without any other or further notice, an installment of one dollar and twenty-five cents (\$1.25) on the fifth day of each and every succeeding month hereafter until one hundred and thirty installments shall have been thus paid, time being of the essence of this contract. (2) That the holder hereof shall surrender for cancellation this certificate whenever the same shall be called, upon the payment to him of its then redemption value, the maker reserving the right to call and pay the same before maturity under the following rules and regulations. Certificates paid before maturity shall be paid in the following order, to wit: The first paid shall be No. 1, the second paid shall be No. 3, the third paid shall be No. 9, the fourth paid shall be No. 2, the fifth paid shall be No. 6, the sixth paid shall be No. 18, the seventh paid shall be No. 27, the eighth paid shall be No. 4, the ninth paid shall be No. 12, the tenth paid shall be No. 36, and so on, according to the table which is printed on the back hereof, and which table is hereby referred to and made a part of this contract. (3) That the redemption value of this certificate, if paid prior to its maturity, shall be fifteen dollars, if paid one month after date eighteen and  $\frac{5}{100}$  dollars, if paid two months after date twenty-one and  $\frac{11}{100}$  dollars, if paid three months after date twenty-four and  $\frac{18}{100}$  dollars, if paid four months after date twenty-seven and  $\frac{26}{100}$  dollars, if paid five months after date thirty and  $\frac{35}{100}$  dollars, if paid six months after date, and so on, the redemption value increasing three dollars with each installment paid, besides interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum on the redemption value of said certificate for the month next preceding the date of redemption hereof.

(4) That of each and every installment paid as aforesaid the maker hereof shall place twenty-five cents to a reserve fund, which shall be used and held for the protection of all live outstanding certificates issued by this company, and seventy-five cents to a redemption fund, which may be used as follows:

(a) For paying certificates issued by this company in order and manner that they shall mature. (b) For paying off and retiring certificates prior to their maturity according to the terms hereinbefore stated. (c) For paying the heirs, executors, or administrators of any deceased holder hereof the sum that installments paid by such deceased may have contributed to the redemption and reserve funds, provided said certificate is in full force at death of holder, and satisfactory proof of such death is furnished the maker hereof within sixty days after death occurs, and the remaining twenty-five cents and all transfer fees shall be used for the expenses of said company. (5) That a failure to pay any one of said installments when due subjects the holder hereof to a fine of fifty cents, which, together with the omitted installment, must be paid by the fifth day of the next succeeding month, and, if said installment and fine are not paid within the said time, then this certificate shall be null and void and of no value, and the holder hereof forfeits all payments and fines, provided, however, that this company will reinstate said certificate at any time within three months after such forfeiture, upon the holder hereof first paying all dues hereon, together with fines assessed at the rate of fifty cents for each payment in default. If this certificate shall, according to the plan of redemption herein stated, become payable after it shall have been forfeited and before its reinstatement, then it shall be entitled to payment the next month after its reinstatement, and provided, further, that after six monthly installments shall have been paid in the manner herein provided, and all other stipulations herein shall have been fully complied with by the holder hereof and such holder shall thereafter default in any subsequent installment, the maker agrees to issue to such defaulting holder a new certificate, which shall bear the next unsold number for an amount equal to the payments made on such defaulted certificate, less the amount deducted for expenses, which new certificate thus issued, shall be nonassessable, and shall bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum and shall be payable in its regular order as per plan of redemption herein stated, provided application for such new certificate shall be made to the home office of the company, and the old or defaulted certificate surrendered within three months after such defaulted certificate shall be canceled on the books of the company. (6) That all receipts and fines shall be paid into the redemption fund. (7) That the contributions to the reserve and redemption funds may be loaned to the holders of certificates issued by this company upon terms and security to be accepted by the board of directors, provided that not more than one hundred dollars can be loaned on account of any one certificate and no loan can be made for a longer time than five years. (8) That after the reserve fund shall have reached the sum of one hundred thousand dollars, the interest earnings therefrom may at the option of the board of directors of this company be applied to the redemption of certificates then in force issued by this company. And, when the reserve fund shall have reached the sum of two hundred thousand dollars, then 50 per cent. or any other portion or all the further current contributions thereto may be applied to the redemption of certificates in force in like manner with the interest thereon when the board of directors shall so authorize. (9) That no transfer of this certificate shall be valid or binding on the maker hereof, until such transfer has been made in writing hereon, and the same duly recorded on the books of the company at its home office, and for each transfer a fee of one dollar must be paid before a transfer will be made. (10) That each and every transferee of this certificate accepts it subject to all the stipulations herein. (11) That no statement made by any one except as herein set forth shall be binding on this company. (12) That no part of the reserve, redemption, or other funds shall ever be loaned to any officer or director of this company. (13) That no part of the reserve and redemption fund shall be loaned, except (a) upon improved real estate within the incorporate limits of the city in which it is located, and then not in excess of 50 per cent. of its cash market value; (b) upon government, state, county, or city bonds that have never defaulted the payment of interest, and this provision can never be changed, except by the consent of every holder of live certificates issued by this company in class A. In witness whereof this company has caused this certificate to be executed in its name and behalf under its corporate seal and by its president and secretary. This — day of —, Equitable Loan & Security Co., by H. E. W. Palmer, President, Jno. S. Owens, Secretary."

On the back of the certificate appears the following:

Table Referred to in Body of This Certificate.
(Read from left to right.)

Numerical column.		First multiple column.		Second multiple column.
No.		No.		No.
Pay first	1	then	3	then	9
then	2	then	6	then	18
then	4	then	12	then	27
then	5	then	15	then	36
then	7	then	21	then	45
then	8	then	24	then	54
then	10	then	30	then	63
then	11	then	33	then	72
then	13	then	39	then	81
then	14	then	42	then	90
then	15	then	45	then	99
then	17	then	51	then	108
then	19	then	57	then	117
then	20	then	60	then	126
then	22	then	66	then	135
then	23	then	69	then	144
then	25	then	75	then	153
then	26	then	78	then	162
then	28	then	84	then	171
then	29	then	87	then	180
then	31	then	93	then	189
then	32	then	96	then	198
then	34	then	102	then	207
then	35	then	105	then	216
then	37	then	111	then	225
then	38	then	114	then	234
then	40	then	120	then	243
then	41	then	123	then	252
then	43	then	129	then	261
then	44	then	132	then	270
then	46	then	138	then	279
then	47	then	141	then	288
then	49	then	147	then	297
then	50	then	150	then	306
then	52	then	156	then	315
then	53	then	159	then	324
then	55	then	165	then	333
then	56	then	168	then	342
then	58	then	174	then	351
then	59	then	177	then	360
then	61	then	183	then	369
then	62	then	186	then	378
then	64	then	192	then	387
then	65	then	195	then	396
then	67	then	201	then	405
then	68	then	204	then	414
then	70	then	210	then	423
then	71	then	213	then	432
then	73	then	219	then	441
then	74	then	222	then	450
then	76	then	228	then	459
then	77	then	231	then	468
then	79	then	237	then	477
then	80	then	240	then	486
then	82	then	246	then	495
then	83	then	249	then	504
then	85	then	255	then	513
then	86
then	88
then	89
then	91

And so on.

The prayer of the petition, among other things not necessary to state, was for a judgment for the amount due upon the certificates. Upon the hearing, the defendant demurred on eight grounds, of which the substance of the last only need be stated, for the reason that the court placed its ruling solely upon that ground, which presents the only question which is argued by counsel. That ground is as follows: "Defendant demurs generally to said petition upon the ground that said certificates A show upon their faces that the contract evidenced by them is illegal and contrary to the public policy of this state, being in the nature of lottery contracts, which being true, a court of equity will not render its aid, either directly or indirectly, for their enforcement or collection." Upon consideration the court passed the following order:

"After hearing argument of counsel on the foregoing demurrer, it is ordered that ground No. 8 be sustained and the case dismissed, it having been stated by counsel for the plaintiff on the hearing that all matters connected with certificates B had been adjusted, and the judgment was claimed only on certificates A."

The plaintiff excepted.

Anderson & Anderson, for plaintiff in error.
Peoples & Jordan, for defendant in error.

ATKINSON, J. This is a suit for the recovery of the amount promised to be paid according to express stipulations by the Equitable Loan & Security Company, made in its certificates known as "Class A." There were no allegations in the plaintiff's petition showing the character of the company's business, its charter powers, the purpose of its organization, its assets or liabilities, or manner of transacting business. The petition consisted of a full recital of the contents of the certificates sued upon, and allegations to the effect that the plaintiff had paid the certificates to maturity in accordance with their stipulations, and that the company had refused payment in accordance with its promises. With nothing else appearing in the petition, the trial court sustained that ground of the defendant's demurrer, in which the position was taken that the petition showed upon its face that the certificates declared upon were in the nature of a lottery, and for that reason were contrary to public policy, and collection could not be enforced. Exception was taken to that ruling, and we have nothing else for consideration. Similar certificates were involved in the case of Equitable Loan & Security Company v. Waring, 117 Ga. 599, 44 S. E. 320, 62 L. R. A. 93, 97 Am. St. Rep. 177, but for sufficient reasons this court, in express terms, eliminated class A certificates from the ruling therein made. See page 649 of 117 Ga., page 341 of 44 S. E. (62 L. R. A. 93, 97 Am. St. Rep. 177). Certificates of classes A and B are set forth in the majority opinion in that case. A careful examination will show that the substantial difference between the two classes consists of a difference in arriving at redemption values to obtain in the event the company elects to redeem before maturity. In class A the value is fixed at certain specifically named sums, if redeemed at certain times. See condition 3 in class A, page 644 of 117 Ga., page 339 of 44 S. E. (62 L. R. A. 93, 97 Am. St. Rep. 117). In class B the values of redemption at specified times are not specifically named, but the method of ascertainment is given; that is to say, the redemption value at any given time before maturity is "the full amount of the first payment and all installments paid hereon, with interest on said amount at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, and its proportionate share of all dividends or accumulations from fines, lapses, and interest earned in excess of 8 per cent. per annum." See condition 2 in class B, page 650 of 117 Ga., page 341 of 44 S. E. (62 L. R. A. 93, 97 Am. St. Rep. 117). Dealing with this provision in class B certificates, the majority, admitting for the sake of the argument that the element of chance entered into the certificates, for reasons fully set forth by Mr. Justice Cobb in the opinion, held that there was no element of prize, and consequently the certificates of that class were not unlawful. Chief Justice Simmons and Mr. Justice Lamar, dissenting, held that in class B, as well as in class A, certificates, under the evidence submitted, the elements of prize and chance appeared, which rendered both classes obnoxious to the laws of this state. The court was unanimous in the conclusion that in order to render the certificates of either class lottery contracts, and for that reason obnoxious to the laws of this state, there must be somewhere in the enterprise union of three elements, to wit: (a) Consideration; (b) chance; (c) prize. The evidence is not before us which in that case played an important part in inducing the conclusions expressed both in the majority and dissenting opinions. What we shall say will deal with the case on demurrer, and refer strictly to the pleadings construed in the light of our statutes. The Penal Code of 1895 of this state (section 406) provides that "if any person, either by himself or his agent, shall sell or offer for sale, or procure for, or furnish to, any person any ticket, number, combination, or chance, or anything representing a chance in any lottery, gift enterprise, or other similar scheme or device, whether such lottery, gift enterprise, or scheme shall be operated in this state or not, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor." Section 407 provides that "no person, by himself, or another, shall keep, maintain, employ, or carry on any lottery in this state, or other scheme or device for the hazarding of any money or valuable thing." These statutes are directed against "lotteries," gift enterprises, or other similar schemes.

In a lottery there must be union of the three elements, consideration, chance, and prize. Equitable Loan & Security Company v. Waring, 117 Ga. 599, 44 S. E. 320, 62 L. R. A. 93, 97 Am. St. Rep. 177. A "gift enterprise" is a sporting artifice by which, for example, a merchant or tradesman sells his wares for their market value, but, by way of inducement, gives to each purchaser a ticket which entitles him to a chance to win certain prizes, to be determined after the manner of a lottery. See Meyer v. State, 112 Ga. 23, 37 S. E. 96, 51 L. R. A. 496, 81 Am. St. Rep. 17. As the gift enterprise contemplates lottery and lottery involves chance, it follows that the element of chance is an essential of a gift enterprise. The expression "similar schemes," as used in these statutes, necessarily refers to schemes like lotteries or gift enterprises, and consequently the element of chance is essential to their existence. These code sections 406 and 407 of the Penal Code of 1895 are to be construed together, and the use of the word "hazard," as employed in section 407, emphasizes the construction which we have given. If the contracts are not forbidden under the express terms or policy of those statutes, the court should not, on account of them, refuse, in a proper case, to require their enforcement. As "chance" is an essential element in either a "lottery," "gift enterprise," or "other similar scheme," it is proper to inquire: What is "chance" as contemplated in these statutes? The chance here referred to is that chance which is employed in connection with lottery schemes, where the attempt is to attain certain ends, not by skill or any known or fixed rules, but by the happening of a subsequent event, incapable of ascertainment or accomplishment by means of human foresight or ingenuity. If the result in a given transaction could be accomplished or foretold by the exercise of skill or foresight, its ascertainment would not be attributed to chance, but to the exercise of skill or foresight, and consequently to design. Chance and design are exactly opposite, and the presence of either will exclude the other. Where design enters into a transaction, it immediately partakes of the nature of contract, and will be governed by other principles. In the gaming sense there is no chance whatever where either party has means of knowing the result at the inception of the wager. There may be fraud, but not chance. Such is the element of chance as contemplated in the statutes which we have quoted. The International Dictionary gives the general definition of chance as "the unknown or undefined cause of events that to us are uncertain or not subject to calculation; luck; fortune." 6 Cyc. p. 890, defines chance thus: "Possibility; hazard; risk; or the result or issue of uncertain and unknown conditions or forces neither understandingly brought about by one's act nor pre-estimated by one's understanding." Illustrative of the definitions given, the case of Meyer v. State, supra, is in point. There a slot machine was employed. Whether a prize would be won or not depended upon an unknown display of cards which the machine would make. In several of the cases cited in the opinion other devices were employed, but each was of such character as to eliminate the idea of arriving at the result by human design. So in the case of Homer v. U. S., 147 U. S. 449, 13 Sup. Ct. 409, 37 L. Ed. 237. That case involved the sale of certain bonds issued by the Austrian government, which were to be paid at some period between 1 and 30 years after date, the date of payment to be ascertained by reference to the arbitrament of a wheel. In that case, the court, on page 462 of 147 U. S., on page 414 of 13 Sup. Ct. (37 L. Ed. 237), approvingly quoted from Bullock v. State, 73 Md. 1, 20 Atl. 184, 8 L. R. A. 671, 25 Am. St. Rep. 359, where it was said: "The investment may run 1 year or it may run 30 years, according to the decision of the wheel. It cannot be said that this is not a species of gambling, and that it does not tend in any degree to promote a gambling spirit and a love of making gain through the chance of dice, cards, wheel, or other method of settling a contingency."

It was not the mere contingency but the method of settling the contingency, that introduced the objectionable element of chance. Wherever it is sought to employ the element of chance in any kind of lottery or gambling scheme show is made of an attempt to displace the exercise of human design, and employ in its stead some uncertain scheme or device, which, uninfluenced by any possible design of the parties, may, according to mere blind luck, designate a particular result. Inasmuch as chance is an element of lottery, we frequently find illustrations of the meaning of chance made in the decision of lottery cases. The note found on page 168, which follows the decision of the case of People v. Lavin, reported in 1 American & English Annotated Cases, p. 165, is in point. There it is said: "If success in a guessing contest depends upon an exercise of judgment and the power of calculation, there can be no lottery. Barclay v. Pearson (1893) 2 Ch. 154. Thus it has been held that a reward offered by a newspaper for the successful guessing of the winning horses in a race is not a lottery. Caminada v. Hulton, 17 Cox C. C. 307; Stoddart v. Sagar (1895) 2 Q. B. 474. Neither is horseracing for a stake a lottery. People v. Fallon, 152 N. Y. 12, 46 N. E. 302, 37 L. R. A. 419, affirming 4 N. Y. App. Div. 88, 89 N. Y. Supp. 865; Matter of Dwyer (Supm. Ct. Spec. T.) 14 Misc. Rep. (N. Y.) 204, 35 N. Y. Supp. 884. Similarly betting on a horse race or other contests of skill cannot be considered a lottery. People v. Reilly, 50 Mich. 384, 15 N. W. 520, 45 Am. Rep. 47, explained in People v. Elliott, 74 Mich. 264, 41 N. W. 916, 3 L. R. A. 403, 16 Am. St. Rep. 640. Where a prize was to be awarded to the one who guessed the weight of a mass of soap, it was held that there was no lottery. Dunham v. St. Croix Soap Mfg. Co., 34 N. Bruns. 243. The offer of a prize for the most suitable name for a town, to be determined by a committee on its own judgment, has been held not to constitute a lottery. Holt v. Wood, 14 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 499. Whether the guessing in contests for prizes is dependent on skill and judgment to such an extent as to remove the transaction from the realm of chance must depend upon the circumstances of such case." Applying the absence of human design test to certificates of class A, what are the recitals of the certificates which affirmatively show the element of chance? It does not appear that the certificates were issued in the first instance in pursuance of any plan involving any kind of contingency or uncertainty. It does not appear how they were issued. In the absence of anything to show affirmatively that the original holder obtained his certificates by any uncertain plan or other contingency, it will not be presumed that he did obtain them in such manner. It does not appear therefore, that there was any chance involved in the issue of the certificates. If not issued in pursuance of a plan involving chance, the mere fact of the right of the company to redeem according to the table of multiples would not introduce the element of uncertainty. The holder of a given certificate designated by a number would know as certainly the order in which it would be paid under the table of multiples as if they were to be redeemed in numerical order. For example, the holder of certificate No. 9 would know from the express terms of the certificate that, in the event the company should elect to call certificates for redemption, No. 9 would be the third in order for redemption, just as he would have known that No. 3 would have been third in order, if the plan of redemption had been in numerical order. The redemption values at all periods of redemption are certain and stipulated. The holder has nothing to do in order to preserve the life of his certificate, except pay his dues at the several times specified. It does not appear that the company is dependent upon subscription or lapsing of other certificates for money with which to redeem. The company may employ certain portions of the money arising from subscriptions and lapses to the redemption of redeemable policies (see conditions Nos. 2, 4, 6), but it nowhere appears that it is dependent upon that source of income. In the absence of something shown to the contrary, it will be presumed that the company has a legitimate business, and that its earnings from that business will authorize the payment of the redemption values promised to be paid. The recitals of the certificates are not such, upon the face, as to overcome that presumption. But it is insisted that the element of uncertainty is introduced by reason of the stipulations made in condition 5. For example, if there were no forfeitures or lapsing of any certificate, No. 9 would be third in order for redemption, while, if certificates Nos. 1 and 3 should lapse, No. 9 would be first in order. This presents only a contingency expressly created by contract and in full contemplation of the parties, and does not manifest that character of uncertainty which shows an absence of design.

Forethought, consent, and design of the parties are manifest throughout the transaction. As a reasonable business proposition, and creation of the contingency and likewise its settlement were in advance expressly provided for by contract. Not in any sense were the creation or settlement submitted to the arbitrament of a machine or any other mere scheme of uncertainty. If the contingency happens which was provided for by contract, which advances the order of redemption of a given certificate from a lower to a higher rank, there is nothing else to be done to accomplish the advancement. The advancement goes by force of the contract. Many forms of insurance policies and other classes of contracts which are upheld everywhere may be found to embody stipulations as closely kindred to chance as the provisions of certificates of class A. The case of Public Clearing House v. Coyne, 194 U. S. 497, 24 Sup. Ct. 789, 48 L. Ed. 1092, involves a transaction which was held to be a lottery; Justice Peckham dissenting. In view of what has been said, we do not deem it necessary to comment upon that case. We only suggest that it is not controlling here, and that the decision there rendered was after a full hearing of all the facts, and not upon demurrer as in the present case.

Thus far we have dealt only with the element of chance; and, in order not to be misunderstood with respect to prize, we may, in the light of what has been said, make a few references to that element of a lottery. It is not mere value of the thing to be obtained that makes it a prize. Chance is a condition precedent to the existence of prize. A stipulation to furnish an article, however valuable, would not impress the article with the character of prize. The transaction would be merely contractual. But the same article, not obtained by stipulation, but through some scheme of mere chance, founded upon consideration, would impress the article with the character of prize. As the element of chance does not appear from the face of the pleadings, it follows that the element of prize is also absent, so far as the pleadings disclose. The pleadings in the case before us failing to show upon the face that the certificates involved the element of chance or prize, the court was not justified in dismissing the suit upon demurrer.

I am authorized to say that Presiding Justice OOB and Associate Justice BECK concur in the views above presented.

LUMPKIN, J. I cannot concur in the views expressed by Mr. Justice ATKINSON. The fallacy underlying the opinion of my learned Brother is that it deals with the certificates sued on as single, separate contracts, disconnected from the general plan of operation of the company which they disclose. On the face of each certificate it is evident that it was only one of many, which it was contemplated should be issued as a part of a general scheme. The nature of the scheme sufficiently appears, in my opinion, to show its illegality. From the face of the certificates the following facts may fairly be said to appear: The company exercised the business of issuing certificates like these in large numbers. Those on which the suit was brought are of a class known as "Class A." The plan was for the subscribers to pay, on each certificate, $1.25 per month for 180 months. Of each installment 25 cents was used for expenses, leaving $1 net to be used by the company, or an aggregate for the whole time of $130. Of each $1 thus paid in 25 cents was placed in the reserve fund, for the protection of live outstanding certificates. This was all which was required to be thus held. The other 75 cents was to be carried to a redemption fund. This could be used to pay off certificates maturing, or before maturity, according to a multiple table presently to be referred to, or for returning the $1 per month to representatives of deceased certificate holders. The contributions to the reserve and redemption funds might be loaned to certificate holders upon their certificates, or they might be loaned with real estate or bonds as security. For these installments the company agreed to pay to the holder, at the end of the period, $505.54. Certificates could be called in before maturity. Certificates paid before maturity were to be paid in the following order: First No. 1, then No. 3, then No. 9, then No. 2, then No. 6, then No. 18, and so on indefinitely under a multiple table based on 3. If paid prior to maturity, the redemption value should be $15 if paid in one month after date, $18.05 if paid in two months, $21.11 if paid in three months, and so on; the redemption value increasing $3 with each installment paid, besides interest at 4 per cent. on the redemption value for the preceding month. For a failure to pay installments on any certificate, a forfeiture would result. Thus, omitting the expense item, the plan or scheme was to promise large numbers of people $505.54 for each $130 paid in monthly installments during 180 months (ten years and ten months) or nearly 390 per cent. of the total payments (about 70 per cent. per annum on the amount for the average time of the payments); or, to those who should be paid off by the use of the multiple table, $15 for a total of $1.25 paid in, if the certificate should be paid in one month, or 1,200 per cent. of the amount paid in, 1,500 per cent. of the $1 having an earning capacity. Other fixed sums would be paid at times later than the first month, all entirely without regard to what the money paid in might earn. If they loaned out the money in the reserve or redemption funds, in this state they could only lawfully charge 8 per cent. per annum interest, while they promised the enormous percentages above mentioned. Whence were they to come? If all remained in, nothing short of a financial miracle could make payment possible. It was alone through lapses of many that some could hope for redemption. These lapses played a double part in the transaction: (1) The whole scheme evidently looked to the uncertain chance of the ruin of some for the possibility of complying with the promise to others. It was based and founded on the possibility of lapses. This is a wholly different thing from a life insurance company, which lays aside a reserve that, at some reasonable and fixed rate of interest, is estimated to accumulate enough to meet the policy at maturity, according to tables of expectancy. The states generally, if not universally, by statute now require this to be done. Lapses may add to profits, but are not the sine qua non in any legitimate business. Nor is there any analogy between such a scheme and the contracts of indemnity involved in fire, marine, or accident insurance. (2) The effect of lapses on the numbers of the certificates to be called in under the multiple table is to create a mere hazard or chance. To take a simple illustration: Let us suppose that at the end of five months after starting, for the first time a payment was to be made of 20 certificates—which would they be? By the table Nos. 1, 3, 9, 2, 6, 18, 27, 4, 12, 36, 5, 15, 45, 54, 7, 21, 63, 8, 24, 72. Suppose five of these had lapsed (say 1, 12, 8, 24, and 72), then five others would have to take their places, and thus become subject to redemption by the accident of lapses before other certificates of earlier date. The regular numerical order of issuance did not fix the order of payment. And the multiple table was subject to shifting and uncertainty by lapses. It is said that there is no evidence here that the purchasers took the certificates in numerical order, and could not select the number desired, so as to choose a number subject to redemption by the table. It does not clearly appear that this was universally true; but there is an indication that such was generally the case, and that under some circumstances it was certainly so. In the fifth paragraph of the certificate it was provided that after six installments had been paid, if a default should then take place, the holder might apply within a limited time, surrender his old certificate, and have a new one issued to him for the amount paid in, less the amount carried to expense fund, "which shall bear the next unsold number." This indicates that the certificates sold were numbered in regular order. If the one thus numbered happened to be named in the multiple table as subject to early redemption, no other purchaser could choose and buy it. If it happened not to be so, the taker could not ask for a different number.

But it is said that the language of the certificate as to redeeming and paying the arbitrary amounts fixed (prizes) was permissive. While the words are permissive in form, it is palpable that the scheme was to hold out early redemption at arbitrarily large amounts as a method of doing business. After deducting 25 per cent. from each installment paid for expenses, of the remaining $1 it was declared that 75 cents should be placed to "a redemption fund." What is a redemption fund, if not a fund with which it is intended to redeem? What was the meaning of declaring that the redemption value of a certificate "shall be fifteen dollars if paid one month after date," if it was not intended to hold out a possible redemption in one month? How? By the use of the multiple table and possible lapses. True it is said that the redemption fund "may be used" to pay for redeeming before maturity. But it is also said that the fund "may be used" to return to the estate of a deceased certificate holder the amount paid in by him (less the expense deduction). Suppose that the administrator of such decedent should call for his money within the time limited, would it be any answer to say to him, "We merely said we 'may' pay you, not that we would do so." Or suppose that a lottery company should issue tickets stating that they "may" have drawings, not positively that they will do so, would this be any reply to a charge that they would be conducting a lottery scheme?

In Equitable Loan & Security Co. v. Waring, 117 Ga. 599, 44 S. E. 320, 62 L. R. A. 93, 97 Am. St. Rep. 177, the nature of this company and of its certificates were fully considered. Certificates like the one now before us, belonging to class A, were practically treated as unlawful both by the majority and the minority of the court (pages 602 [1], 652 of 117 Ga., pages 321, 342 of 44 S. E., 62 L. R. A. 93, 97 Am. St. Rep. 177), though the majority of the court did not pass upon the question. The main point of difference was whether a new series of certificates, known as "Class B," issued after the United States mails had been closed to class A, was legal or not. Three of the Justices held that they were. Two dissented. One was absent. The writer of this, then on the bench of the superior court, wrote an opinion, expressing his views, which will be found published in 117 Ga. 604, 44 S. E. 320, 62 L. R. A. 93, 97 Am. St. Rep. 177, et seq. In that case the facts were more fully developed by evidence than they here appear; but under what was there said and the authorities cited I am of opinion that enough appears to hold that this scheme was a lottery, or at least a similar scheme or device, and contrary to public policy. In the case just referred to, Mr. Justice Cobb, in delivering the opinion of the majority, said of certificates of class B (page 600 of 117 Ga., page 346 of 44 S. E., 62 L. R. A. 93, 97 Am. St. Rep. 177): "If under the contract no certificate can ever be called for redemption until it has earned at least 8 per cent, then there is no element of prize in the contract." He construed the certificates of class B not to be subject to be redeemed until they had earned 8 per cent. This cannot be said of certificates of class A. By inference from this statement of Mr. Justice Cobb, there was a prize element in class A. And, if what has been said above, as to the issuing and numbering of the certificates, the chance application of a multiple table thereto, the effect of lapses on the application of the multiple table, and the gathering by chance lapses and distributing by chance numbers, is correct, then the scheme indicated on the face of the certificates was a scheme or device in the nature of a lottery, and contrary to public policy. It is suggested that the company might have had other money not arising from the sale of certificates, and might use it to meet them at maturity. The reply is that the suggestion goes to the solvency of the company, not to the legality of the scheme of which the certificates sued on form a part. But it may be remarked that the certificates indicate that the company was conducting the business of dealing in these certificates (which I think illegal) for profit, charging 20 per cent. of all installments, and all transfer fees, for expenses. There was nothing to indicate that they did anything else; nor can we well assume or infer from what appears that this scheme was designed as a mode of giving away money outside of that gathered in. Design which distinguishes a legitimate business from an illegitimate one does not mean merely the design to conduct, for a consideration, a scheme of chance, with prizes to the fortunate.

The company has invoked a ruling, by its demurrer, that its class A certificates were illegal; and I think the demurrer was properly sustained. For recent cases on the subject, see Silver v. Guarantee Investment Co., 183 Mo. 41, 81 S. W. 1098; State v. Nebraska Home Co., 66 Neb. 349, 92 N. W. 763, 60 L. R. A. 448, 103 Am. St. Rep. 706, and note; Stevens v. Cincinnati Times-Star, 72 Ohio St. 112, 78 N. E. 1058, 106 Am. St. Rep. 586.

I am authorized to state that FISH, C. J., and EVANS, J., concur in the views expressed.

(129 Ga. 352)

NUGENT v. WATKINS.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 8, 1907.)

1. WITNESSES—TRANSACTIONS WITH DECEDENT.

The death of the grantor of one of the parties to a litigation in regard to an alleged private way does not render the other party or his agent entirely incompetent to testify as a witness, but only incompetent to testify to transactions or communications with the deceased. Independent physical facts, which do not involve any such communication or transaction, are not within the rule.

2. EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Evidence which tends to establish the issue is admissible, even if not of itself sufficient for that purpose.

3. EASEMENTS—PRIVATE WAYS—PRESCRIPTION—EVIDENCE.

Under a proceeding to cause obstructions to be removed from a private way, based on the act of 1872 (Pol. Code 1895, §§ 678, 679), and alleging solely that the way was one established by prescription for more than 7 years, the applicant is not entitled to a judgment by proof that the road has been in use as a private way for more than a year, and that the owner has closed it without giving to the common users 30 days' notice in writing, in order that they might take legal steps to have it made permanent, as required by section 678 of the Political Code of 1895.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 17, Easements, § 93.]

4. WRIT OF ERROR—ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR.

An assignment of error, "that said ordinary erred in rendering said judgment of March 15, 1906, denying your petitioner the relief prayed by her," is too general to raise any specific ground of error in rendering the judgment in question, in addition to those pointed out in special assignments of error.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 8, Appeal and Error, § 2997.]

5. CERTIORARI.

There was no error in overruling the certiorari.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Richmond County; H. O. Hammond, Judge.

Action by Eliza Nugent against Sarah E. Watkins. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Eliza Nugent filed with the ordinary of Richmond county her petition against Sarah E. Watkins, seeking to have obstructions removed from an alleged private way, under the provisions of section 879, Pol. Code of 1895. She alleged that the way had existed, and had been worked and kept open and in repair by her and her grantor, and was in their constant and uninterrupted use, for more than seven years prior to its obstruction. The ordinary, under the evidence, rendered judgment for the defendant. On certiorari his judgment was sustained, and the plaintiff excepted.

Salem Dutcher, for plaintiff in error. Austin Branch and C. H. and R. S. Cohen, for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. (after stating the facts as above). This case is here for the second time. The ordinary dismissed the petition on demurrer. The judge of the superior court sustained his decision. On exception this court reversed the judgment. Nugent v. Watkins, 124 Ga. 150, 52 S. E. 158. On the trial, under the evidence, the ordinary found for the defendant. The case was carried to the superior court by writ of certiorari, and from the judgment of that court sustaining the decision of the ordinary it was brought by writ of error to this court.

The assignments of error may be grouped under three heads: (1) Overruling objections to the competency of the defendant and her employé as witnesses, and allowing them to testify as to obstructions placed in the alleged way at different times, in order to show that there had not been seven years' continuous and uninterrupted use of it. Objection was made to this on the ground that petitioner relied on use both by herself and her grantor, Watkins, and that what occurred during his lifetime amounted to transactions with him. (2) Allowing several witnesses to testify that one end of the lane or way had been obstructed for a number of years; that the obstruction consisted of a post put up in the lane and some signs containing the words "Private Lands"—one witness testifying that the post stayed there for a time, and then some person moved it or took it away, and another that it had remained there. They stated that this end of the alleged way was obstructed before the death of Watkins. The evidence was objected to on the ground of its legal insufficiency to change the character of the way as an established dividing line, or to break the legal continuity of its use. (3) Because "said ordinary erred in rendering said judgment of March 15, 1906, denying your petitioner the relief by her prayed."

1. The death of the grantor of one of the litigants did not render the other and her agent incompetent to testify at all as witnesses, but prevented them from testifying to transactions or communications with the deceased grantor. Murphy v. Bush, 122 Ga. 715, 50 S. E. 1004. The fact that she caused obstructions to be placed in the alleged way at different times, and closed the lower portion of it, so as to prevent wagons from going through, and the physical condition of the alleged way, did not constitute communications or transactions with the deceased grantor. The evidence did not show that there was any discussion or agreement in regard to this matter, or that there was any communication or transaction between the defendant and the deceased grantor in connection with it. So far as shown it was merely the independent physical act of the defendant, with which he was in no way connected by communication or action; and it did not even appear that he was present. What has just been said applies even more clearly to the evidence of the defendant's employé, who stated that he had put posts in the lane to block it up three times during the preceding 14 years, and that they would stand for a year or two, except the last, which still remained. Evidently this could not be called a communication or transaction between the employé and Watkins. Puryear v. Foster, 91 Ga. 444, 18 S. E. 816; Trimble v. Mims, 92 Ga. 103, 18 S. E. 362; Gomez v. Johnson, 106 Ga. 513 (1), 32 S. E. 600; Parker v. Salmons, 113 Ga. 1167, 39 S. E. 475 (which goes quite far); Horton, Adm'r, v. Smith, 115 Ga. 68, 41 S. E. 253 (also a strong case arising prior to the act of 1900). In Mayfield v. Savannah R. Co., 87 Ga. 374, 13 S. E. 459, it was sought to show by the plaintiff, an employé of the railroad company, that while engaged in the discharge of his duties, just as he had put one foot upon the rim of the pilot of the engine, the engineer put on steam and thus caused the engine to jerk, resulting in an injury to the plaintiff. This was a "transaction" in which both the plaintiff and the engineer were engaged, and the plaintiff was incompetent to testify in regard to it after the death of the engineer. The ruling is discussed in Atlanta, K. & N. Ry. Co. v. Roberts, 116 Ga. 509, 42 S. E. 753. There is nothing in Hendrick v. Daniel, 119 Ga. 358 (1), 46 S. E. 438, or in Parker v. Ballard, 123 Ga.

443 (1), 51 S. E. 465, which conflicts with the ruling now made. In her testimony the defendant did make use of the expression, "and Wilson Watkins never objected." Had attention been specially called to this, it should, and doubtless would, have been rejected. But the objection covered a considerable amount of evidence, in which these few words occurred. We do not think this requires a reversal.

2, 3. The petitioner alleged that the private way had been opened and in use continuously for more than seven years. The defendant denied this, and introduced evidence to show that she had caused the way to be closed at different times, so as to prevent wagons passing over it, and that she had had posts erected in it and signs put up declaring it to be private grounds. This evidence tended to sustain her contention, and was admissible. There was no error in refusing to rule out parts of it on the ground that the portions so objected to did not constitute a complete defense. Evidence which tends to establish the issue is admissible, even if not of itself sufficient for that purpose. Columbus Omnibus Co. v. Semmes, 27 Ga. 283; Smith v. Griffin, 32 Ga. 81; Walker & Chapman v. Mitchell & Co., 41 Ga. 102; Talbotton R. Co. v. Gibson, 106 Ga. 229 (5), 236, 32 S. E. 151. If the admissibility of evidence is doubtful, the tendency is rather to let it in, leaving its weight and efficacy to be judged of afterwards. But the evidence here objected to bore directly upon the issue between the parties.

It was contended that by section 673 of the Political Code of 1895, it is provided that, "when a road has been used as a private way for as much as one year, an owner of land over which it passes cannot close it up without first giving the common users of the way thirty days' notice in writing, that they may take steps to have it made permanent;" that no notice in writing was given, and therefore the closing up or obstructing the private way was unlawful; and that such an obstruction could not interrupt the continuity of the use. It was further urged that the fact that no written notice was given necessitated a judgment in favor of the petitioner, requiring the obstructions to be removed. Whether the method of procedure to have obstructions removed from a private way provided for by the act of 1872 (Pol. Code 1895, § 679) applies only to the private ways mentioned in that act, viz., those which have been in constant and uninterrupted use for 7 years or more without legal steps having been taken to abolish them, or whether this mode of procedure also applies to roads which have been used as private ways for more than a year, as to which it had previously been declared that the owner could not close them up without giving to the common users 30 days' written notice (Pol. Code 1895, § 673) we need not decide. The decisions do not seem to be quite harmonious on this subject. Some of them deal with the act of 1872 (Pol. Code 1895, §§ 678, 679) without reference to section 673. Others seem to assume that the method of procedure applies to both situations. See Brown v. Marshall, 63 Ga. 657; Powell v. Amoss, 85 Ga. 273, 11 S. E. 598; Peters v. Little, 95 Ga. 151, 22 S. E. 44; Dodson v. Scarborough, 110 Ga. 4, 35 S. E. 291; Buchanan v. Parks, 111 Ga. 873, 36 S. E. 947; Kirkland v. Pitman, 122 Ga. 256, 50 S. E. 117.

If we assume, however, that this method of procedure is applicable both to prevent the closing up of the road used as a private way for more than one year without written notice, and also to remove obstructions from private ways in constant and uninterrupted use for seven years or more, the petitioner cannot proceed on the ground alone that she has a perfect prescriptive right of way, and, failing to establish that, obtain a judgment on the ground that there was no written notice given by the owner of his intention to close up the road. She alleged that the private way in question had been in constant and uninterrupted use for seven years or more. This was denied. She must recover on the case which she made, if at all. If she desires to rely upon the closing of the road used as a private way by the owner thereof without written notice, she should have made proper allegations to invoke the law on that subject. If one alleges the existence of a prescriptive right of way, which is denied, and on this issue alone the case is tried, a judgment ordering the removal of obstructions from such way adjudicates its existence as a permanent, prescriptive way, and is binding as a judgment. If, on the other hand, the allegation is that a road has been used as a private way for as much as one year, and that the owner of the land over which it passes has closed it up without first giving the common users of the way 30 days' notice in writing, in order that they may take steps to have it made permanent, a judgment requiring the obstructions to be removed will not fix the character of the way as a permanent, prescriptive way, but will only prevent the closing up of the road by the owner until he has given the notice. He would still be at liberty to give the written notice and then close up the road, unless, in the meantime, it had been duly established as a permanent way. The results of the proceeding on the one ground or the other are quite different. If it is desired to invoke one law or the other, or both (if both can be joined), the pleadings should be shaped accordingly; and the proper practice would be for the judgment to show upon what it rested. Otherwise, proof of a mere failure to give written notice, under an issue as to the existence of a permanent way by prescription, might result in a judgment in effect declaring a permanent way where none in fact existed. Gardner v. Swann, 114 Ga. 304, 40 S. E. 271.

4, 5. A general assignment of error, "that said ordinary erred in rendering said judgment of March 15, 1906, denying your petitioner the relief by her prayed," is too general to raise any specific point for adjudication as to why the ordinary erred in rendering the judgment, in addition to the reasons already specially assigned. If the certiorari as a whole should be treated as raising the question whether the judgment was supported by the evidence, we think it was without merit. The evidence was conflicting. The defendant, among other things, testified that "this lane never has been open for seven years at a time." If there was no such way as the petitioner alleged, putting a second obstruction in it did not create a right where none existed. The ordinary has passed upon the evidence, the judge of the superior court has approved his judgment, and we will not interfere.

Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 393)

ATHENS TERMINAL CO. et al. v. ATHENS FOUNDRY & MACHINE WORKS.

ATHENS FOUNDRY & MACHINE WORKS v. ATHENS TERMINAL CO. et al.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 8, 1907.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—RAILROADS—USE OF STREETS—RIGHT TO LAY TRACKS.

A commercial steam railroad company cannot lay a railroad track longitudinally along the streets of a city without the sanction of the General Assembly. This sanction may be given either in the charter of the city or of the railroad company.

(a) Legislative sanction is not contained in the charter of the city of Athens.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 36, Municipal Corporations, § 1465.]

2. SAME—CONSENT OF AUTHORITIES.

Civ. Code 1895, § 2167, par. 5, confers upon a railroad company incorporated under the general railroad law the power to construct its track longitudinally in the streets of a city for lawful use with the written consent of the municipal authorities.

8. EMINENT DOMAIN—TRACKS IN CITY STREETS—COMPENSATION TO ABUTTING OWNER.

Although the General Assembly may empower a commercial railroad company to occupy the streets of a town or city with the consent of the municipal authorities, yet such permission is subject to the constitutional restraint that "private property shall not be taken or damaged for public purposes without just and adequate compensation being first paid." If the property of an abutting landowner will be damaged by the laying and use of a track in the street, the railroad company must first pay or tender to such property owner just and adequate compensation for the damages consequential upon the construction of the track and the uses to which it will be put. Upon failure to pay or tender the amount of such damages, equity will enjoin the construction of the track.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 18, Eminent Domain, § 257.]

4. SAME—REMEDY OF ABUTTING OWNER—LACHES.

The facts developed before the judge on the interlocutory hearing were sufficient to support his finding that the plaintiff was not guilty of laches in applying for the equitable remedy of injunction.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 18, Eminent Domain, § 783.]

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—LAYING OUT OF STREETS.

The provision in the charter of the city of Athens that the municipality "shall have full power and authority to open, lay out, widen, straighten or otherwise change the streets, lanes and alleys in said city, whenever the said mayor and council shall see proper to exercise said power," is sufficiently comprehensive to authorize a slight deflection of a street near one of its terminl.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Clark County; C. H. Brand, Judge.

Action by the Athens Foundry & Machine Works against the Athens Terminal Company. From the judgment, both parties bring error. Affirmed on both bills of exceptions.

This is an injunction suit, brought by the Athens Foundry & Machine Works against the Athens Terminal Company to restrain the latter from laying its track longitudinally in Foundry street, and from changing the course of Washington and Clayton streets, in the city of Athens. The Athens Terminal Company is chartered under the general railroad law, and owns in the city of Athens three blocks of property on the western side of Foundry street, lying between Broad street and Hancock avenue. The Athens Foundry & Machine Works owns property on the other side of Foundry street. The property of the Athens Terminal Company is intersected by Washington and Clayton streets. Washington street connects with Foundry street at a point opposite the gate which opens into the property of the Athens Foundry & Machine Works. Foundry street is about 40 feet wide. On January 3, 1906, the city of Athens passed an ordinance granting to George J. Baldwin and William W. Mackall, or their assigns, the right to construct a railroad track in Foundry street, to deflect Clayton and Washington streets, and to build warehouses and a freight depot, in accordance with certain plans submitted to the city. Work was begun in accordance with the ordinance within six months from the date thereof, and the property was excavated and graded, and at the time when the injunction suit was brought a large sum of money had been expended on the project. The Athens Terminal Company was chartered under the general railroad law on the 14th day of October, 1906. On January 14, 1907, Baldwin and Mackall transferred to the Athens Terminal Company all of their interests in the franchises granted by the city of Athens, and on April 19, 1907, the city of Athens ratified and confirmed the transfer, and passed an ordinance granting directly to the Athens Terminal Company all of the franchises which had been previously granted to Baldwin and Mackall, upon the same terms and conditions, with one exception, which is not material to this case.

The ordinance of the city of Athens required the paving of a portion of Foundry street, between Broad street and Hancock avenue, 16 feet in width, so as to leave a 6-foot sidewalk on the side of the street adjacent to the foundry works, and the street being opposite the Athens Foundry & Machine Works property, about 40 feet wide, leaving about 13 feet between the curb of the paved way and the property line of the Athens Terminal Company. The track in Foundry street is to be laid between the property line of the terminal company and the curb of the paved way. The foundry company claims to own a fee in Foundry street only to the center thereof, and the Athens Terminal Company claims to own the fee in the other half of the street adjacent to its property, so that the track, when laid in Foundry street opposite the Foundry Works, will be laid entirely on the fee of the street owned by the terminal company. Both Washington and Clayton streets will be deflected near their intersection with Foundry street, which is the terminus of each street. The ordinance provides that the city will do the necessary grading of Washington and Clayton streets. The Athens Terminal Company will pave those portions of Washington and Clayton streets which run through its property, and will open a new thoroughfare between Broad street and Hancock avenue, on the back of its property, and will pave the same. None of the tracks which lead off from Foundry street into the terminal property will rest on any part of either Washington or Clayton street as deflected, but will be entirely upon the property of the terminal company. The Athens Foundry & Machine Works maintain that the city of Athens has no power to change and deflect Clayton and Washington streets; that it had no power to grant to Baldwin and Mackall the right to lay tracks in the streets; that the city of Athens has no power to grant either to private persons or to a railroad company the right to use the streets; and that the construction of the track in Foundry street and the deflection of Washington street will cause the plaintiff to suffer special damages different in degree and kind from those suffered by the general public.

On the interlocutory hearing the court enjoined the terminal company from constructing and laying its tracks in Foundry street, opposite the foundry company's property, until the terminal company instituted condemnation proceedings and ascertained to what extent the foundry company had been injured, and pay or offer to pay whatever damages may be assessed, and refused to enjoin the deflection of Washington and Clayton streets, and the laying of the track in Foundry street not contiguous to plaintiff's property. Both the plaintiff and defendant

Lawton & Cunningham, H. S. West, and Erwin & Erwin, for plaintiff in error. E. S. Price and Jno. J. Strickland, for defendant in error.

EVANS, J. (after stating the facts as above). 1-2. A commercial steam railroad cannot lay its tracks longitudinally along the streets of a city without the sanction of the General Assembly. This sanction must appear by express grant or necessary implication. Daly v. Ga. So. R. Co., 80 Ga. 793, 7 S. E. 146, 12 Am. St. Rep. 286. Legislative sanction to devote a part of a street to railroad use is not given to a city by the grant of a general power to establish, change, and maintain its streets and alleys to a city. Nor is this sanction given by section 17 of the act approved August 24, 1872, amending the charter of Athens (Acts 1872, p. 127): "That in all cases of encroachments on the streets, lanes, or alleys of said city, the mayor and council shall have power to remove the same upon reasonable notice or permit, and sanction same for a fair and reasonable compensation in money, to be paid into the city treasury; said mayor and council having due regard to the interests of property holders who may be affected thereby." Daly v. Ga. So. R. Co., supra. As the city of Athens had no charter authority to consent to the laying of a track longitudinally along its streets, the grant of such power to Messrs. Baldwin and Mackall was an ultra vires act, and void. But after the filing of the petition the mayor and council re-enacted the same ordinance specifically granting to the Athens Terminal Company the same powers, slightly modified, which by ordinance the city had previously attempted to give to Messrs. Baldwin and Mackall. Objection was made to the court considering either ordinance, on the ground that the first ordinance was void, and that the ordinance conferring on the Athens Terminal Company the same powers previously given to Baldwin and Mackall in a void ordinance was passed by the council of the city of Athens after the inception of the litigation, and was neither curative of the void ordinance, nor available in this suit as an independent municipal act. The court properly considered both ordinances as evidence. The last ordinance by express terms incorporated the provisions of the former, and it thus became a part thereof. The plaintiff was seeking to enjoin the Athens Terminal Company from doing the things authorized by the municipal authorities of the city of Athens. Although, at the time the petition was filed, the Athens Terminal Company may have had no right to do any of the acts complained of, for lack of municipal consent, the terminal company could urge, on the interlocutory hearing, the municipal consent procured subsequently to the filing of the petition. It is in the nature of a plea puis darrein continuance.

So we come to the question whether the city of Athens could confer upon the terminal company the power to lay its railroad track longitudinally in Foundry street. As we have previously adverted, before a commercial railroad company can lay its track along a street in a city, it must have the authority, express or by necessary implication, of the General Assembly. This legislative sanction need not appear from the city's charter. It may be found in the general law, or in the charter of the railroad company applying for the use of the city's streets. Almand v. Atlanta Con. St. Ry. Co., 108 Ga. 417, 34 S. E. 6. The Athens Terminal Company is incorporated under the general railroad law, and has all the powers therein conferred on a railroad corporation. Bridwell v. Gate City Terminal Co., 127 Ga. 520, 56 S. E. 624. By Civ. Code 1895, § 2167, par. 5, a railroad company incorporated thereunder is permitted "to construct its road across, along or upon, or to use any stream of water, water course, street, highway or canal which the route of its road shall intersect or touch: provided, no railroad shall be constructed along and upon any street or highway without the written consent of the municipal or county authorities, and whenever the track of any such road shall touch, intersect or cross any road, highway or street, it may be carried over or under, or across at a grade level or otherwise, as may be found most expedient for the public good." etc. This Code section permits the longitudinal use of the street by the railroad company in a proper and lawful manner. Almand v. Atlanta Con. St. Ry. Co., supra. It cannot maintain a nuisance thereon, nor unreasonably obstruct the street, nor use the street as a yard, or for switching and drilling purposes. Atlantic Ry. Co. v. Montezuma, 122 Ga. 1, 49 S. E. 738. The terminal company disclaim in its answer any intention to improperly use Foundry street, and the question of improper use will arise only when it makes or attempts to make a use of the track not authorized by law.

3. Although the General Assembly may empower a railroad company to occupy the streets of a town or city with the consent of the municipal authorities, yet such permission is subject to the constitutional restraint that "private property shall not be taken, or damaged, for public purposes, without just and adequate compensation being first paid." While denying that the plaintiff will suffer any pecuniary injury to its property by the proposed improvements, counsel for the terminal company concede the plaintiff's right to recover, in an action of damages, loss or injury, if any, consequential upon the construction of the track and its contemplated use. But they insist that this is the sole remedy, and that the plaintiff has no right to enjoin the prosecution of the work until the damages are ascertained, and compensation therefor paid or tendered. In City of Atlanta v. Green, 67 Ga. 386, it was held that prior to the Constitution of 1877, which contains the declaration that "private property shall not be taken, or damaged, for public purposes without just and adequate compensation being first paid," municipal corporations were not liable for consequential damages resulting to property owners from raising or lowering the grade of streets, but were made so by the constitutional provision. Following this case is a multitude of decisions by this court to the effect that consequential damages caused to the property of a citizen by the construction of a public work may be recovered, though no part of his property be actually taken. The meaning of the words "without just and adequate compensation being first paid" came up in Chambers v. Cin. & Ga. R., 69 Ga. 320, very soon after the adoption of the Constitution of 1877. That was the case of a landowner seeking to enjoin a railroad company from proceeding to build its road through his land pending an appeal from the award of the assessors as to the damages; and it was held that the railroad company's effort to take property should be enjoined until it either paid or tendered the just value of the property taken. The fundamental law makes no distinction between damages resulting from the actual taking of the property and damages consequential from the construction of a public work where the property was not actually taken. In either event payment or tender must generally precede construction of work. Shortly after the pronouncement, in the Green Case, that if any owner of property be damaged by the grading of a street he may recover for such injury to his freehold, the question arose whether the grading of streets should be suspended by injunction because consequential damages would result to an abutting landowner. In this case (Moore v. Atlanta, 70 Ga. 611) it was held that an injunction ought not to be granted to stop the operation of the municipal government and clog its wheels, and that the remedy of the abutting landowner was an action for damages. The reasoning of the court was that, if improvements in the highway were within the constitutional provision as to first paying damages, the power of municipalities to improve its streets would be destroyed, if, before even repairing a street, it must try with every property owner the question whether the improvements would help or hurt him; hence, ex necessitate rei, this provision of the Constitution did not apply in the case of consequential damages to an abutting landowner where the city graded its streets to make them more accessible or safer for passageway.

Upon the theory that a street railway is a public convenience for passing along a city's streets, the principle of the Moore Case has been extended to street railways. Brown v. Atlanta Railway Co., 113 Ga. 462, 39 S. E. 71. But a commercial steam railroad receives legislative sanction to use a city's streets from altogether different considerations than those which apply to street railways. The former constitute the great arteries of commerce, and of necessity must have continuous trackage, that they may expeditiously serve the general public in the transportation of passengers and freight. They traverse commercial centers, and are allowed to occupy with their tracks the city's streets, in order that the flow of commerce may not be impeded by breaks in trackage. It would perhaps be less burdensome on the streets of a city to permit their longitudinal use by the railroad company in pulling a train of cars thereover than to transfer the entire railroad traffic, both through and local, over the street in horse-drawn vehicles. Yet the service is not primarily intended to relieve the streets of the burden of travel. On the other hand, by hauling freight and passengers from distant points, commercial railroads subject the streets to additional burdens. Because of this and for other reasons it has been held that the laying of a track upon a street in a municipality for the purpose of operating a commercial steam railroad imposes on the streets an additional servitude. A. & W. P. Ry. Co. v. A. B. & A. Ry. Co., 125 Ga. 530, 54 S. E. 736. One of the purposes of a street railway is to relieve the streets from congestion, by affording more rapid passage. The necessity for the operation of a street railway is largely a municipal problem, to be mainly solved by the municipal authorities. This is recognized by the Constitution (article 3, sec. 7, par. 20), which forbids the General Assembly from authorizing the construction of a street passenger railway without the consent of the municipal authorities. The construction and operation of a street railway was therefore included by the Brown Case in the category of a municipal improvement. Not so, however, with the commercial railroad. It is in no sense a local or municipal affair. The General Assembly has sanctioned its occupancy of a city's streets with the city's consent. The only effect of this legislative sanction is to allow it to pass through a city along a street where the city consents thereto. If it will injure or damage property in its operation, the amount of such damage must be paid or tendered before the work can progress, just as if the question had arisen outside of a city.

It is contended that, as the terminal company and the foundry company own the fee in the street fronting their respective properties, their property lines touch in the middle of the street, and, as the track is to be laid on the half of the street contiguous to the terminal company's property, its construction should not be enjoined, because no part of the Foundry's property will be taken. We have placed our decision on the ground that, with the exception of instances like those in the Moore and Brown Cases, supra, the constitutional provision that "private property shall not be taken, or damaged, for public purposes, without just and adequate compensation being first paid," applies alike to cases where property is taken and where property is not actually taken, but is consequentially damaged by the construction of a public work. It would not require specious argument, however, to support the proposition that to the extent of maintaining the integrity of Foundry street the abutting landowners had such an interest in the whole street that the street cannot be destroyed, or seriously impaired, or subjected to an additional servitude, without adequate compensation is first paid. See Marietta Chair Co. v. Henderson, 121 Ga. 399, 49 S. E. 312, 104 Am. St. Rep. 156; Barney v. Keokuk, 94 U. S. 324, 24 L. Ed. 224. The court found from the evidence that "the construction of the railroad track in Foundry street affects and interferes with the right of egress and ingress to the lot owned in fee simple by the foundry company, which is calculated thereby to inflict an injury to the lot itself." There was evidence to support this finding. "The construction and operation of a railway in a public street is a physical invasion of the easement of access of abutting landowners, and is a damage to the property, within the meaning of the constitutional provision which declares that private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation being first paid." A. & B. Ry. Co. v. McKnight, 125 Ga. 329, 54 S. E. 148. Hence it was not erroneous to enjoin the laying of the railroad track along Foundry street until the foundry company had been paid or tendered payment for any damages it might have sustained. A. & W. P. Ry. Co. v. A. B. & A. Ry. Co., supra.

4. The plaintiff in error further insists that the foundry company was well aware of the plan and purpose of the projectors of the enterprise; that its officers knew the railroad track would be laid in Foundry street; that large sums of money had been expended in the work of the general plan of improvement, with the knowledge of the foundry company and without objection on their part; that for these reasons the foundry company is in laches, and had forfeited its right to invoke the equitable remedy of injunction. "Vigilantibus non dormientibus jura subveniunt" is a most salutary maxim of equity. Its inapplicability to the case in hand will be manifest by a reference to the facts appearing in the record. The city of Athens, by an ordinance passed January 3, 1906, granted the privileges now claimed by the terminal company to Messrs. Baldwin and Mackall. This ordinance was void. Work was begun by them about July 1, 1906. The terminal company was chartered October 4, 1906. Baldwin and Mackall did not transfer their rights under the ordinance until about two months before the filing of the petition; and it was a month after the petition was filed before the ordinance was passed which conferred on the terminal company the same rights attempted to be conferred on

Messrs. Baldwin and Mackall. Nothing was done by the foundry company to encourage these operations. On the other hand, the superintendent of the foundry company deposed he did not know the terminal company contemplated a line of railroad track along Foundry street until a few days before the application for injunction. Under these circumstances the judge could well conclude that the foundry company had not waived, by delay, its constitutional right to protect its property by demanding compensation for damages before the construction of the work from which the injury will result. A motion was made to reopen the case because of an alleged misapprehension of fact by the court in announcing its decision on the interlocutory hearing. The court refused to reopen the case, and rendered a written judgment covering the various issues involved in the case. We have discussed these issues, and are in accord with the conclusions of the trial court. There was no error in refusing to reopen the case.

5. It is complained in the cross-bill of exceptions that the court erred in not enjoining the terminal company from interfering with Clayton and Washington streets. These streets afforded communication between Thomas and Foundry streets, which are parallel streets. There are other cross streets connecting Thomas and Foundry streets. The terminal company own the property on both sides of Washington and Clayton streets, where these streets are proposed to be deflected. When application was made for injunction, these two streets had been so graded that they could not be used as connecting Thomas and Foundry streets. The plan of improvements, as outlined in the ordinance of the city council of Athens, did not contemplate the closing of either Clayton or Washington streets, but that the course of the streets should be deflected near their entrance into Foundry street. The charter of Athens provides that "the mayor and council of the city of Athens shall have full power and authority to open, lay out, widen, straighten, or otherwise change the streets, lanes and alleys in said city, whenever the said mayor and council shall see proper to exercise such power." Acts 1887, p. 583. This grant is sufficiently comprehensive to authorize the deflection of a street near one of its termini. Trustees Atlanta Un. v. Atlanta, 93 Ga. 468, 21 S. E. 74; Patton v. Rome, 124 Ga. 525, 52 S. E. 742. There was evidence before the court that these streets were not intended to be permanently closed, and that the plan of improvement outlined in the ordinance authorizing the improvement was intended to be carried out in good faith; and, as the municipal authorities were empowered by the city's charter to change the course of the street, we see no error in the court's refusal to enjoin the terminal company in this respect.

Judgment affirmed on both bills of exceptions. All the Justices concur, except COBB, P. J., disqualified.

(129 Ga. 363)

EADY v. ATLANTIC COAST LINE R. CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 8, 1907.)

1. NEW TRIAL—BRIEF OF EVIDENCE—FILING—APPROVAL.

When a motion for new trial was duly filed during the term at which the verdict was rendered, and at that term the judge passes an order continuing the motion to an indefinite and unnamed day in vacation, but providing that, if the motion was not previously heard in vacation, it should stand on the docket to be heard during the next term of court, and no brief of evidence was filed with the motion, but in the order above referred to it was provided "that movant have until the hearing, whenever it may be," to prepare and present the brief of evidence, and the brief of evidence was not filed until the next term after the order was passed, the court had jurisdiction at that term to approve the brief of evidence and to decide the motion on its merits.

(a) The rulings in Napier v. Heilker, 115 Ga. 168, 41 S. E. 889, Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Hamilton, 119 Ga. 340, 46 S. E. 434, and Broadway National Bank v. Kendrick, 124 Ga. 1053, 53 S. E. 576, holding that the judge had jurisdiction to approve the brief of evidence and entertain the motion for new trial, are, upon review, adhered to and reaffirmed.

2. SAME.

There is nothing in the rulings in the cases referred to in the preceding note which conflicts with the ruling made in Blackburn v. Alabama Midland Ry. Co., 116 Ga. 936, 43 S. E. 366. In that case the original order was granted at the term when the motion for new trial was filed, and fixed a stated day in vacation for the presentation of the brief and a subsequent day in vacation for the hearing of the motion. If the day for the presentation of the brief and the day for the hearing had been the same, or if the motion had been called during term, and not in vacation, the ruling in that case might have been different.

3. COURTS—QUESTIONS CERTIFIED FROM COURT OF APPEALS—DETERMINATION.

When the Court of Appeals certifies to the Supreme Court a question asking for instructions as to the validity of a rule nisi in a motion for new trial, the question will be considered and answered in the light of the rule nisi accompanying the certificate.

4. NEW TRIAL—HEARING—ACCELERATION.

A motion for new trial being presented to the judge within due time during the term at which the trial was had, and the judge having passed an order providing that "the motion be heard and determined in vacation at such time and place as the court in vacation may fix, upon giving both sides five days' notice of such time and place." * * * If for any reason said motion is not heard and determined at the time and place fixed by the court as above provided, it is ordered that the same shall stand continued and be heard and determined thereafter at such time and place as counsel may agree upon and the court approve of, and, upon failure of counsel to agree, then at such time and place as the judge may in vacation fix upon his own motion or upon the application of either party, of which said time and place both sides or parties shall have five days' notice. It is further ordered that, if for any reason this motion is not heard and determined in vacation before the beginning of the next term of this court, then the same shall stand on the docket until heard and determined at the said term thereafter"—held, that the effect of this order was to make the motion for new trial returnable at the next term of the court, but the hearing of the same might be accelerated under the provisions thereof, and such rule nisi was valid.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Action by S. A. Eady against the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company. Verdict for plaintiff. Motion for new trial granted, and plaintiff brings error. Questions certified by Court of Appeals. Questions answered.

Jos. H. Hall, Warren Roberts, and Polhill & Williamson, for plaintiff in error. W. E. Kay, Bennet & Conyers, T. R. Perry, and J. H. Tipton, for defendant in error.

ATKINSON, J. This case was transmitted to the Supreme Court with the following certificate:

"The Court of Appeals desires the instruction of the Supreme Court as to the following questions of law for the proper decision of the above-stated case, to wit:

"(1) At the September term of a city court a motion for a new trial was filed in a case tried at that term of the court. The judge passed an order continuing the motion to an indefinite and unnamed day in vacation, but providing that, if it was not previously heard in vacation, it should stand on the docket to be heard and determined during the next (the December) term of the court. No brief of the evidence was filed with the motion, but in the order above mentioned it was provided 'that the movant have until the hearing, whenever it may be,' to prepare and present the brief of evidence. The brief of the evidence was filed during the December term of the court. The motion for new trial was called to be heard at the following June term of the court. Respondent moved to dismiss the motion for a new trial on the ground that the brief of the evidence was not filed during the term at which the trial was had, nor at any other time when it could lawfully be filed. The judge refused to dismiss the motion, and over respondent's objection approved the brief of the evidence and granted a new trial. Upon the facts above stated, did the trial judge, at the June term of the court, have the jurisdiction, discretion, or power to approve the brief of evidence? Counsel for respondent in the motion, now plaintiff in error, has filed in this court a request to review, modify, and overrule, so far as they interfere with the answering of the foregoing question in the negative, the following decisions of the Supreme Court, to wit: Napier v. Heilker, 115 Ga. 168, 41 S. E. 689; Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Hamilton, 119 Ga. 340, 46 S. E. 434; Broadway National Bank v. Kendrick, 124 Ga. 1053, 53 S. E. 576. And pursuant to the rule of this court this request is transmitted to the Supreme Court for its action thereon.

"(2) This court requests the Supreme Court to distinguish the decision of the Supreme Court in Blackburn v. Alabama Midland

Railway Co., 116 Ga. 936, 43 S. E. 366, from the decisions in the three cases named, and to answer whether that decision is applicable to the facts set out above.

"(3) Is the following a valid rule nisi upon a motion for a new trial: 'It is ordered that the respondent [naming him] show cause before me, at the time and place hereafter fixed in vacation [no time in vacation in fact being fixed], why the foregoing motion for a new trial should not be granted?'

"(4) If the third question be answered in the negative, can the respondent, who during the same term signed the following acknowledgment of service: 'Due and legal service acknowledged on the above and foregoing motion for a new trial, and the rule nisi and order of the court on said motion, and all further service and notice waived'—successfully demand a dismissal of the motion, when finally called for a hearing, on account of the lack of a sufficient rule nisi?'

The order referred to in question No. 3 in its entirety was as follows: "City Court of Sylvester, Worth County, Georgia, Sept. Adjourned Term, 1905. S. A. Eady v. Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company. Suit for damages in the city court of Sylvester, Worth County, Trial Sept. Adj. term, 1905. Verdict and judgment at said term, and on the 13th day of October, 1905, for plaintiff for $2,500.00. Having read and considered the foregoing motion for new trial in the above-stated case, the grounds of the same are approved and certified as true. It appearing to the court that it is impossible to make out and complete a brief of the testimony in said case before adjournment of this term of court, it is ordered, considered, and adjudged by the court that said motion be heard and determined in vacation, at such time and place as the court in vacation may fix, upon giving both sides five days' notice of such time and place, and the movant may amend said motion at any time before or at the final hearing. If for any reason said motion is not heard and determined at the time and place fixed by the court, as above provided, it is ordered that the same shall stand continued and be heard and determined thereafter at such time and place as the counsel may agree upon and the court approve of, and, upon failure of counsel to agree, then at such time and place as the judge may in vacation fix upon his own motion, or upon the application of either party, and of which said time and place both sides or parties shall have five days' notice. It is further ordered that, if for any reason this motion is not heard and determined during vacation before the beginning of the next term of this court, then the same shall stand on the docket until heard and determined at said term thereafter. It is expressly ordered that, if for any reason the said motion is not heard and determined at the time and place fixed by the court in vacation, the same shall stand continued by direction or consent of the court, without written order, to such other time and place as the court may direct in vacation, both sides to be given five days' notice of such time and place of the hearing. It is further ordered that the movants have until the hearing, whenever it may be, to prepare and present for approval a brief of the evidence in said case, and the judge may enter his approval thereon at any time in term or vacation, and if the hearing be in vacation, and the brief of evidence has not been filed in the office of the clerk of said city court before the date of the hearing and determining by the court of the motion for new trial, said brief of evidence may be filed in the office of said court at any time within ten days after the motion for new trial is heard and determined. It is further ordered that the plaintiff, S. A. Eady, show cause before me, at the time and place hereafter fixed in vacation, why the said foregoing motion for new trial should not be granted. It is further ordered that the plaintiff, S. A. Eady, or his counsel, be served with a copy of the said motion for new trial and this order and rule nisi at least five days before the time fixed for the hearing of said motion for new trial, and that this order shall act as a supersedeas until the further order of the court. Witness my hand and official signature in open court this the 14th day of October, 1905, at 2:45 o'clock p. m. [Signed] Frank Park, Judge City Court of Sylvester, Worth County, Ga."

(2 Ga. App. 475)

A. G. RHODES & SON FURNITURE CO.
v. JENKINS. (No. 412.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 3, 1907.)

1. MONEY RECEIVED—WHEN ACTION LIES.

An action for money had and received lies in behalf of the plaintiff to recover his money in the hands of a defendant who in equity and good conscience has no right to retain the same.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 35, Money Received, § 1.]

2. ACTION—CONTRACT OR TORT—WAIVER.

If one sells the property of another without authority, the owner may waive the tort and sue him for the money. Likewise, if one wrongfully obtains the money of another, he may waive his damages and sue for money had and received.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 1, Action, § 202.]

3. EXECUTION—SALE BY CONSTABLE—VALIDITY.

A constable's sale, not held at the time and place and in the manner provided by law, is void. Civ. Code 1895, § 4166. Where an attachment for purchase money is levied on property to which the plaintiff in attachment has reserved title, the sale is void, unless prior thereto section 5432, Civ. Code 1895, be complied with.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 21, Execution, § 622.]

4. SALE—CONDITIONAL SALE—SEIZURE BY VENDOR.

A seizure and illegal sale, and purchase at such sale, of the property by the vendor, who had theretofore sold such property under a conditional contract of sale, effects a rescission of the contract, and the purchaser is entitled to recover the amount of the purchase price paid by him, less the reasonable value of its use while in his possession.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Richmond County; H. O. Hammond, Judge.

Action by Christopher Jenkins against the A. G. Rhodes & Son Furniture Company. Judgment for plaintiff before a justice was affirmed in the superior court, and defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Dorsey, Brewster, Howell & Heyman, C. A. Picquet, and Walter Pearce, for plaintiff in error. Austin Branch, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. The defendant in error, Christopher Jenkins, brought suit in the justice's court against the Rhodes & Son Furniture Company for money had and received, and obtained a judgment in his favor. The furniture company carried the case to the superior court by certiorari, averring that the verdict of the jury in the justice's court was error, because: "(a) It was contrary to the law and the evidence. (b) The action declared upon was for an open account, while, if defendant had any remedy whatever, it was a suit in tort for damages. (c) That under the evidence the suit attached to the summons set forth no cause of action. (d) That the evidence disclosed that an attachment for the purchase money had been brought by petitioner against plaintiff, in the notary public (ex officio justice of the peace) court, 120th district, G. M., of Richmond county, and judgment rendered and property sold under said judgment, and the suit in question was a collateral attack upon said judgment, upon the ground that the property had not been properly sold. (e) That the evidence disclosed that $33.25 sued for had been voluntarily paid petitioner, without fraud or duress, and therefore could not be recovered." The certiorari, coming on to be heard on February 2, 1907, was overruled and dismissed by his honor, Judge Hammond, of the superior court.

It appears from the evidence in the justice's court that the plaintiff, Christopher Jenkins, purchased from the A. G. Rhodes & Son Furniture Company a lot of furniture on the installment plan. The payments were to be $1 a week, and the plaintiff had paid $33. He was behind two weeks in his payments. Defendant's agent demanded the balance. Plaintiff's wife was sick, and he informed the company of this fact. The furniture company refused to wait, and swore out an attachment for the purchase money, under which the property was seized. The plaintiff was absent from his home at the time of the levy, and his wife was sick in bed in confinement and unable to object. Under the attachment the property was sold, part at the court ground, and part at the Rhodes Furniture Company's store. The plaintiff demanded the amount he had paid of the furniture company, and they refused to pay his money back. Judgment by default was rendered against the defendant on the attachment on June 27, 1906, and the property was sold by the constable, as above stated, and purchased by the A. G. Rhodes & Son Furniture Company themselves on July 25, 1906. The attachment was levied May 18, 1906, and the plaintiff began his suit June 18, 1906. To the suit filed by Jenkins to recover the money paid by him, the defendant set up the attachment proceedings and pleaded it was not indebted to the plaintiff. In other words, it insisted that it was entitled to have both the furniture and the money that had been paid for it. The jury in the justice's court and the judge in the superior court thought otherwise, and we concur in their judgment.

The learned counsel for plaintiff in error argues that "Jenkins admitted that he was in default on the payments—admitted that the property had been seized by a constable. He did not allege or set up any fraud, and his sole excuse for not promptly meeting his payments was that he had had sickness in his family which had interfered with his payments." Counsel in his brief insists that the certiorari should be sustained upon all its grounds, and that the verdict was contrary to law and the evidence. It is insisted that the suit should have been "one in deceit or fraud," and was one improperly brought for money had and received, because the evidence did not disclose any contractual relation by which the furniture company was to refund any of the money. The main contention of the plaintiff in error, however, is that Jenkins' rights, if any, are precluded by the judgment in the attachment proceeding. The action was properly brought for money had and received. This action lies in all cases for the plaintiff's money in the hand of defendant, which in equity and good conscience he has no right to obtain, and it is necessary for the plaintiff to prove only two things—his right to the money, and the defendant's possession. "Whenever the plaintiff could recover in a court of equity, he can recover in an action for money had and received. Chitty on Contracts, 474; 2 Tr. 163; 1 Cowper, Rep. 372; Smith v. Bell, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 68, 8 L. Ed. 322. This is also ruled in Culbreath v. Culbreath, 7 Ga. 68, 69, 50 Am. Dec. 375." Phillips v. Crews, 65 Ga. 277. The $33.25 which the plaintiff had paid the defendant was in the defendant's possession.

The only question, then, was the right of the plaintiff to this money. If the plaintiff showed that he paid the money, he would have the right to require the defendant to account for it and would be entitled to recover, unless the defendant showed cause why he should not refund it. This the defendant attempted to do by evidence of the attachment, judgment, and sale thereunder. If the defendant had shown a proper judgment and legal sale thereunder, the plaintiff's action would have been defeated; but the sale for two reasons, as shown by evidence, was utterly void. According to the testimony of the constable himself, part of the property was sold at the place of holding justice's court and the remainder at the furniture company's place of business. There was no evidence that the sale took place within the legal hours of sale, or that the advertisement was posted at three public places, as required by law. Civ. Code 1895, §§ 4165, 4166.

The judgment set up by the defendant as a defense was not collaterally attacked, as insisted, but the sale thereunder properly disregarded as void. The contract evidencing the purchase of the furniture by Jenkins is called, throughout, a "rent contract," and all the payments to be made are designated as "rent"; but under the decision in Hays v. Jordan, 85 Ga. 742, 11 S. E. 833, 9 L. R. A. 373, followed in Ross v. McDuffie & Armstrong, 91 Ga. 121, 16 S. E. 648, Blitch et al. v. Edwards, 96 Ga. 610, 24 S. E. 147, National Bank v. Goodyear, 90 Ga. 723, 16 S. E. 962, Halliday v. Bank of Stewart County, 112 Ga. 464, 37 S. E. 721, Glisson v. Heggie, 105 Ga. 33, 31 S. E. 118, Snelling v. Arbuckle, 104 Ga. 366, 30 S. E. 863, and Cottrell v. Merchants' Bank, 89 Ga. 519, 15 S. E. 944, it is not a lease, but a contract of conditional sale, with the title reserved in the vendor; and, no quitclaim conveyance being shown to have been filed and recorded prior to the levy and sale, the sale was for that reason, also, void. Civ. Code 1895, § 5432; Cooper v. Smith, 125 Ga. 167, 53 S. E. 1013; Cade v. Jenkins, 88 Ga. 791, 15 S. E. 292; Glisson v. Heggie, 105 Ga. 33, 31 S. E. 118.

The furniture company elected to rescind the contract and retake the property. The contract was at an end. Having made their election, they could not keep plaintiff's money. He was entitled to recover what he had paid, less a reasonable amount for the use of the property during the time which he had it in possession. The amount to be thus deducted was to be fixed by the jury, and, as the defendant introduced no evidence as to the value of the use, it cannot complain that the jury only made a deduction of 25 cents. It could not complain, in the absence of such evidence, if the jury had made no deduction at all. We agree with learned counsel for plaintiff in error that it is immaterial why the defendant in error defaulted in his payments, and the furniture company had the right to retake the property, regardless of Jenkins' misfortunes; but when it retook the furniture, and at a void sale itself became the purchaser, it became liable, under the uniform current of authority, to account to Jenkins for the money received by it from him on a contract which itself preferred to abandon. The point is, not whether the plaintiff below had a good reason for his default (in law he had none), but whether the vendor, who had reserved title, elected to stand on his title or proceed without regard to the contract. It elected the latter, and must abide the consequences.

Judgment affirmed.

(2 Ga. App. 489)

WOLFE v. GEORGIA RY. & ELECTRIC CO.
(No. 35.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 3, 1907.)

1. CARRIERS—CARRIAGE OF PASSENGERS—DUTY OF CARRIER—PROTECTION FROM INSULTS.

(a) A common carrier is responsible for the proper treatment of its passengers, and is bound to protect them from insult as well as from physical injury. Where the insult is offered by one of the carrier's servants, the duty of protection is even stronger and more binding than where the offending party is a fellow passenger, and for humiliation or wounded feelings caused by such insult a passenger is entitled to recover.

(b) It is immaterial whether the insult is caused by malice or is the result of negligence on the part of the carrier's servant. Injury caused by omission to protect is none the less actionable than that caused by commission.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 9, Carriers, § 1121.]

2. SAME—SEPARATION OF RACES—LIABILITY FOR MISTAKE.

(a) In enforcing section 527, Pen. Code 1895, requiring the separation of races, the conductor is still the agent and servant of the corporation, and the liability of the corporation for his acts as such is not diminished by the delegation of police power. The police power is granted to better enable the corporation to discharge its duty of protecting its passengers, but the burden of exercising extraordinary diligence in the protection of the passenger is not lightened. (By Hill, C. J., and Powell, J., concurring specially.) If an honest mistake be made after extraordinary diligence has been exercised, the carrier would not be liable.

(b) Good faith, unaccompanied by freedom from fault (that degree of freedom from fault recognized by law as applicable between carrier and passenger), is no excuse for an insult offered by a servant of the carrier to a passenger who suffers injury. The good faith of the transaction can only be considered in mitigation of the damages.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 9, Carriers, § 1121.]

3. SAME—EVIDENCE—JUDICIAL NOTICE.

(a) To call a white man a negro, or to intimate that a white man is of African descent, under certain circumstances, may be an insult, and, dependent upon the circumstances, may be actionable.

(b) An insult does not necessarily consist in the use of language imputing a crime. It more generally consists in the use of language affecting the social status and personal feelings or the business relations of the person insulted.

(c) The courts can take judicial notice of social status, and of the superiority and inferiority of races, without affecting the civil rights of the citizen. An existent fact, which is per se neither the subject of legislation nor adjudication, can be judicially known and recognized as a fact.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 9, Carriers, § 1121.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Atlanta; H. M. Reid, Judge.

Action by Nathan F. Wolfe against the Georgia Railway & Electric Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

Dorsey, Brewster, Howell & McDaniel and Arthur Heyman, for plaintiff in error. Rosser & Brandon, W. T. Colquitt, and Ben J. Conyers, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. Nathan F. Wolfe, the plaintiff, brought a suit for damages against the Georgia Railway & Electric Company. The defendant filed a general demurrer, on the ground that no cause of action was alleged, and the court below sustained it. This judgment is brought to this court for review, and the question to be determined is: Does the plaintiff's petition set out a cause of action?

The plaintiff alleged: That on Monday night, June 27, 1904, he, accompanied by his sister, boarded a car of the defendant at the corner of Garnet and Whitehall streets for the purpose of being transported to a point on Highland avenue reached by one of the lines of defendant. That he paid to the conductor on the car the fare charged for the transportation of himself and sister, and asked for and received transfers to the Houston Street car. That he was duly transferred to this car, which had two long seats, one on each side of the car, with a broad aisle between. That he and his sister entered the car from the rear, and walked forward and took seats in the front part of the car. That there is a regulation of the defendant company that white passengers will seat from the front, and negro passengers will seat from the rear, of the car. That, when he and his sister had seated themselves, the conductor of said car came to him and took up the transfers for himself and sister. At the same time the conductor remarked to the petitioner: "You cannot sit there." That petitioner arose, thinking there was something the matter with the seat, and asked the conductor: "Where do you wish me to sit?" The conductor thereupon replied: "You must sit upon the rear portion of the car." Petitioner responded: "Where?" To which the conductor replied: "Beyond the white gentlemen." Petitioner thereupon responded: "Why do you wish me to sit there?" Whereupon the conductor replied: "It is all right. Sit down there"—indicating a space between the last white man and a negro. Whereupon the petitioner and his sister both asked: "What is this for?" The conductor replied: "Because white people seat from the front, and negroes from the rear, of the car." Petitioner asked: "What has that to do with me?" And the conductor responded: "Haven't I seen you in colored company?" Petitioner's sister then addressed the conductor as follows: "Do we look like colored people?" And that petitioner, for the first time understanding the import of the conductor's language, demanded an explanation and apology. Whereupon the conductor stated that he might be mistaken, but that he thought he had seen the petitioner with some colored people. That this colloquy took place in the car, in the presence of all the passengers, and in a sufficiently loud tone to be heard all over the car. The petitioner further alleges negligence on the part of the company, and sets out grounds under which he claims a right of recovery.

The allegations of the petitioner in this case present to this court circumstances which have never heretofore been presented to the courts of this state, and in an extended search for authorities we have been unable to find a ruling by any court of last resort which deals with main question involved in this case. The central point in this case, the pivot on which the decision must turn, is whether it is insulting to publicly call a white man a negro. Two other questions, it is true, are presented in the record; but they are only incidental to the main question, which we have stated above. The two other issues relate to the liability of a carrier for insulting conduct towards its passengers on the part of its agents or servants, and involve a consideration of section 527, Pen. Code 1895, as affecting the liability of the carrier for the acts of its servants while exercising police power. There are, therefore, three questions in the case: (1) Is the defendant street car company liable for insulting conduct on the part of its servants? (2) In the enforcement of section 527, Pen. Code 1895, is the conductor an officer of the state in any such sense as to relieve the corporation from liability for the malperformance of his acts while exercising police power? (3) Is the language alleged to have been used by the conductor, reasonably construed, necessarily insulting, or so probably insulting and humiliating, when publicly used, as that the question as to whether it caused pain, humiliation, and disgrace should have been left to the jury?

1. There is no difficulty whatever in answering the first question. It is the duty of a common carrier to protect his passengers from insult, so long as they are passengers—not only from insult by fellow passengers, but from insult at the hands of the carrier's own agents. The principle is clearly laid down in our own state in the decision in Cole v. Atlanta & West Point R. R. Co., 102 Ga. 474, 31 S. E. 107, and cases therein cited, and the court quotes with approval from Goddard v. Grand Trunk Ry., 57 Me. 214, 2 Am. Rep. 39. See, also, Railway Co. v. Quo, 103 Ga. 125, 29 S. E. 607, 40 L. R. A. 483, 68 Am. St. Rep. 85, and A. & W. P. R. R. Co. v. Condor, 75 Ga. 51. A carrier is as much bound to protect, and shield from attack the passenger's feelings as his person, and, if it subjects him to the pain and humiliation of being insulted or abused, it is liable for this negligent omission on the part of its servants to perform towards the passengers the duty of protection imposed by law, and it is immaterial whether the injury be willful and wanton—whether it be intended or unintentional. From very numerous authorities, which we have examined, the following abundantly sustain the statement we have just made: Hutchinson on Carriers, §§ 595, 596; Thompson on Negligence, § 3186; Traction Co. v. Crawford (Tex. Civ. App.) 71 S. W. 306; Texas Ry. Co. v. Tarlington, 66 S. W. 137, 27 Tex. Civ. App. 353; Booth on Street Railways, § 372; 2 Sedgwick on Damages, 637. In Chamberlain v. Chandler, 3 Mason (U. S.) 242, 245, Fed. Cas. No. 2,575, Judge Story, delivering the opinion, in discussing the duties, relations, and responsibilities which arise between the carrier and passenger said: "In respect to passengers, the case of the master is one of peculiar responsibility and delicacy. Their contract with him is not for mere special room and personal existence. * * * It is a stipulation, not for toleration merely, but for respectful treatment; for that decency of demeanor which constitutes the charm of social life; for that attention which mitigates evils without reluctance, and that promptitude which administers aid to distress. * * * It is intimated that all these acts, though wrong in morals, are yet acts which the law does not punish; that if the person is untouched, if the acts do not amount to an assault and battery, they are not to be redressed; that the law looks on them as unworthy of its cognizance. The master is at liberty to inflict the most severe mental sufferings in the most tyrannical manner, and yet if he withholds a blow the victim may be crushed by his unkindness. He commits nothing within the reach of civil jurisprudence. My opinion is that the law involves no such absurdity."

2 (a). Upon the second proposition it is insisted by learned counsel for defendant in error that the street railway company is not responsible, or liable, even if insulting language were used, because Acts 1890-91, p. 157, make the conductor an officer of the state by delegating to him police power. This brings us clearly up to the question as to whether the conductor, in obeying sections 526 and 527, or ever in exercising police power, is an officer of the state in such sense as to give immunity to his employer, the common carrier, from liability for damage arising from the improper discharge of his duties. The exact question, so far as section 527, Pen. Code 1895, is concerned, has not been decided by the Supreme Court; for section 902 of the Penal Code of 1895, which was involved in the decision in Seaboard Air Line Ry. Co. v. O'Quinn, 124 Ga. 359, 52 S. E. 427, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 472, expressly provides that nothing therein contained shall affect the liability of the railroad company for the acts of its employés. We think that the omission of this provision from section

527, however, is immaterial. The reasonableness of the rule that agents, selected and discharged at the pleasure of the carrier, should not be the means of relieving it from proper liability, is apparent, and this court held in Georgia Ry. & Electric Co. v. Baker, 1 Ga. App. 833, 58 S. E. 88 (6), that, "while a conductor of a common carrier is clothed with police power, that fact affords no immunity to the carrier for damages resulting from his wrongful and illegal discharge of his duties, either as a servant of the company or under cover of police power delegated to him by law." In no case where a passenger is mistreated can the fact that the servant of the company was carrying out the provisions of the Penal Code be used as a defense, unless it appears that such servant was acting outside the scope of his authority. The conductor acts at the peril of his employer. The police power, the duty of executing the law requiring the separating of the races, is not placed upon the conductor as an individual, but upon a particular agent of the company, to enable the carrier to better perform its duty of protecting its passengers—of protecting them, not only from assault and physical injuries, but also from abuse and insult. The particular officer of the company who shall discharge this duty is selected and named only because the artificial body has no hands save those of its servants.

(b) Nor does good faith affect the primal question of liability, though proof of good faith may reduce the finding to one for mere nominal damages. Good faith, unaccompanied by that degree of freedom from fault recognized by law as applicable between servant and passenger, is no excuse for an insult offered by a servant of the carrier to a passenger who suffers injury.

3. We come, then to the third question of the case. If the language used was such as tended to cause pain and suffering by reason of humiliation and personal indignity offered by the company's servant, it would be immaterial whether he was acting as a police officer or not, and it would be immaterial whether the insult consisted of the commission of an overt act, wantonly and willfully done, or such an act done as would naturally cause pain thereby, whether intended or not. Either would constitute an omission of the duty to protect the passenger resting upon the carrier. We think the jury should have been allowed to pass upon the circumstances under which the language was used, and the manner of its use, and to say how much the plaintiff was damaged, if he was injured. The question has never heretofore been directly raised in this state as to whether it is an insult to seriously call a white man a negro, or to intimate that a person apparently white is of African descent. We have no hesitation, however, after the most mature consideration of every phase of the question, in declaring our deliberate judgment to be that the willful assertion or intimation embodied in the declaration now before us constitutes an actionable wrong. We cannot shut our eyes to the facts of which courts are bound to take judicial notice. Certainly every court is presumed to know the habits of the people among which it is held, and their characteristics, as well as to know leading historical events and the law of the land. To recognize inequality as to the civil or political rights belonging to any citizen or class of citizens, or to attempt to fix the social status of any citizen, either by legislation or by judicial decisions, is repugnant to every principle underlying our republican form of government. Nothing is further from our purpose. Under our benign institutions "every man is the architect of his own fortune." Every citizen, white and black, may gain, in every field of endeavor, the recognition his associates may award. That is his right, and his own concern. But the courts can take notice of the architecture without intermeddling with the building of the structure. It is a matter of common knowledge that, viewed from a social standpoint, the negro race is in mind and morals inferior to the Caucasian. The record of each from the dawn of historic time denies equality. This fact was recognized by two of the leaders on opposite sides of the question of slavery, Abraham Lincoln and A. H. Stephens. The former on numerous occasions declared that it was no part of the proposition even of the Abolitionists to attempt to establish a condition of social equality between an inferior and superior race; and Alexander H. Stephens declared that the Southern Confederacy was based upon the acknowledged superiority of the Caucasian race over the negro. The distinction and inequality is recognized in Holy Writ.

We are not compelled to plant our decision on the ground of inequality or inferiority. We take judicial notice of an intrinsic difference between the two races. Certainly, if a court can take judicial notice of near a thousand things, some even of slight importance, which have been judicially recognized without proof, this court may be presumed to observe that there is a marked difference between a Caucasian and an African. Notice of this difference does not imply legal discrimination against either, and for that reason cannot, in any sense, impugn or oppose the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution of the United States or the Constitution of our own state. Our Constitution (article 1, § 1, par. 18) declares that the social status of the citizen shall never be the subject-matter of legislation. It has been said that this language was used for the express purpose of leaving the social status open to judicial determination. We, however, shall not take any such fanciful position; for it cannot properly be said that that which cannot be the subject-matter of legislation can be judicially administered. This, however, does not affect the subject of judicial notice of matters of history, common knowledge, etc. The sounder view is that neither Legislatures nor courts shall grade the citizen according to his social status, and yet that the courts can and must know and notice the meaning of words of opprobrium, as well as the connection in which these words are used. For instance, shortly after the Revolution, no greater term of opprobrium could be applied to an American citizen than to be called a "Hessian" or a "Tory," while, of course, it would have been no insult to apply the term "Hessian" to a native of the duchy of Hesse, and the word "Tory" was deemed in Old England a synonym of loyalty and patriotism. We might greatly lengthen the list, by adding various terms, such as "carpet-bagger," "scalawag," etc., where words ordinarily innocent may be insulting, dependent upon the circumstances of their use.

An insult or a slander may consist in the imputing of crime. But an insult does not necessarily consist in the use of language imputing a crime. It more generally consists in the use of language affecting the social status and personal feelings or business relations of the person insulted. Courts and juries are bound to notice the intrinsic difference between whites and blacks, and the mixture of whites and blacks in this country. As said by Chief Justice Lumpkin, in Bryan v. Walton, 14 Ga. 200: "The effect of manumission by the civil law would have great influence in the determination of a similar question here, were it not for the difference in color between their slaves and ours—a difference deep and ineradicable." The difference in races to which we have adverted is recognized in this state by the laws against intermarriage, by the laws for the separation of passengers by common carriers, separate schools, etc. It is admitted by the Supreme Court of the United States in Plessey v. Ferguson, 163 U. S. 544, 16 Sup. Ct. 1138, 41 L. Ed. 256, where the constitutionality of a similar statute separating the races was upheld. On page 551 of 163 U. S., page 1143 of 16 Sup. Ct., 41 L. Ed. 256, the court says: "Legislation is powerless to eradicate racial instincts, or to abolish distinctions based upon physical differences; and the attempt to do so can only result in accentuating the difficulties of the present situation. If the civil and political rights of both races be equal, one cannot be inferior to the other, civilly or politically. If one race be inferior to the other socially, the Constitution of the United States cannot put them upon the same plane." The same recognition of the great fact of distinction and difference between races is also accorded by the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania in the very forceful opinion in the case of West Chester & Philadelphia R. R. Co. v. Miles, 55 Pa. 209, 93 Am. Dec. 744. See, also, State v. Gibson, 86 Ind. 389, 10 Am. Dec. 42.

Taking into consideration, then, the difference in color, if nothing else, and bearing in mind that a little more than 40 years ago the black race were slaves, without civil standing or social or political rights, and keeping in view the further fact that a pure black man cannot be mistaken for a white man, and the fact that intermarriage between the races has been continuously forbidden in this state, to charge a white man, even though of dark skin, with being a colored man, or a colored man, even though of fair skin, with being a white man, is to impute the odium of illegitimacy. Under the decisions of this state it cannot be questioned that to make such a charge, either directly or by intimation easily understood by the bystanders, would be an aggravated insult; and if a servant, charged with the duty of separating the passengers, heedlessly, even though unintentionally, without the exercise of the proper degree of diligence, made a mistake, the company would be liable for his omission of that proper care for the protection of the passenger for which the carrier is bound. Furthermore, section 528, Pen. Code 1895, makes any passenger remaining in any car or compartment or seat other than that to which he may have been assigned, guilty of a misdemeanor, and where the assignment and seats are well known, to falsely charge a passenger with occupying a seat not assigned to his race, is to charge him either with attempting to commit a misdemeanor or of being actually guilty thereof. In any view this would be actionable. If the difference in race, referred to by Chief Justice Brown in Scott v. State, 39 Ga. 323, exists, as it undeniably does, then to wrongfully, though unintentionally, accuse a white man with being of negro descent, and of trying to put himself in that portion of the car where by law he is forbidden, thus illegally causing mortification and pain, creates an injury for which the law allows reparation. The good faith of the conductor—his lack of intention to wound—may lessen and greatly mitigate the amount of the damages; but it cannot altogether defeat a recovery, and for this reason we think the court erred in sustaining the general demurrer and dismissing the case.

In the case above cited, Chief Justice Brown, delivering the opinion of the court, says: "The Code of Georgia, as adopted by the new Constitution, forever prohibits the marriage relation between the two races and declares all such marriages null and void. With the policy of this law we have nothing to do. It is our duty to declare what the law is; not to make the law. For myself, however, I do not hesitate to say that it was dictated by wise statesmanship and has a broad and solid foundation in enlightened policy, sustained by sound reason and common sense. The amalgamation of the races is not only unnatural, but it is also productive of deplorable results. Our daily observation shows us that the offspring of these unnatural connections are generally sickly and effeminate, and that they are inferior in physical development and strength to the full blood of either race. It is sometimes urged that such marriages should be encouraged, for the purpose of elevating the inferior race to the position of the superior; but they bring down the superior to that of the inferior. They are productive of evil, and evil only, without any corresponding good. But government has no power to regulate social status. Before the law, the Code of Georgia makes all citizens equal, without regard to race or color. But it does not create, nor does any law of any state attempt to enforce, moral or social equality between different races or citizens of the United States. Such equality does not in fact exist, and never can. The God of nature made it otherwise, and no human law can produce it, and no tribunal enforce it. * * * While the great mass of the conquering people of the states which adhered to the Union during the late civil strife have claimed the right to dictate the terms of settlement, and have maintained in power those who demand that the people of the states lately in rebellion shall accord to the colored race equality of civil rights, they have neither required of us the practice of miscegenation, nor have they claimed for the colored people social equality with the white race. The fortunes of war have compelled us to yield to the freedman the legal rights above mentioned; but we have never authorized or legalized the marriage relation between the races, nor have we enacted laws regulating the social status, so as to compel our people to meet the colored people on terms of social equality. Such a state of things could never be desired by the thoughtful and reflecting portion of either race. It could never promote peace, quiet, or social order in any state or community. No such laws are of force in any Northern state, so far as I know, and it is supposed no considerable part of the people of any state desires to see them enacted."

We cannot shut our eyes to the fact that there is a universally recognized distinction between the races. The situation which confronts us in the present case is the relation occupied by three classes of people in this state—whites, blacks, and a mixed breed, resulting from unlawful relations between the two. The charge made by the conduct of the street car conductor cannot be construed as being that plaintiff was a full-blooded negro, but that he had enough negro blood to be classified with that race, or else that he was a white man degraded (as the conductor himself assumed) by having associated with negroes, or that, having negro blood in his veins, he was attempting to violate the law by putting himself in that portion of the car assigned to whites. In Bryan v. Walton, supra, Chief Justice Lumpkin says, on page 202: "Our ancestors settled this state as a province as a community of white men * * * possessing an equality of rights and privileges. The blacks were introduced into it, a race of slaves. The prejudice, if it can be called so, of caste, is unconquerable. It was so at the beginning. It has come down to our day. The suspicion of taint sinks the subject of it below the common level." And on page 205 he says: "In no part of this country, whether North or South, East or West, does the free negro stand erect and on a platform of equality with the white man." In Flood v. News & Courier Company, 71 S. C. 112, 50 S. E. 637, the Supreme Court of South Carolina held that to publish in a newspaper of a white man that he is colored is libelous per se, and cites numerous authorities to sustain its position. To the same effect was the decision of the Supreme Court of Louisiana in Upton v. Times-Democrat Pub. Co., 104 La. 141, 28 South. 970; and in Southern Ry. v. Thurman, 28 Ky. Law Rep. 699, 90 S. W. 240, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1108, the Court of Appeals of Kentucky held that a cause of action was set out.

If, as we hold, to call a white man a negro, or to intimate that he is of African descent, may be an insult—and we think that under the circumstances detailed in plaintiff's petition the jury might consider it insulting for either of three intimations which might arise—then the demurrer should have been overruled. This case is practically identical in principle with that of Davis v. Tacoma Ry. & Power Co., 35 Wash. 208, 77 Pac. 209, 66 L. R. A. 802, and Gillespie v. Brooklyn Heights Co., 178 N. Y. 347, 70 N. E. 857, 66 L. R. A. 618, 102 Am. St. Rep. 503. In the latter case Judge Martin, delivering the opinion of the court, says: "The relation between the carrier and its passenger is more than a mere contract relation, as it may exist in the absence of any contract whatever. Any person rightfully on the cars of a railroad company is entitled to protection by the carrier, and any breach of its duty in that respect is in the nature of a tort, and recovery may be had in an action of tort, as well as for the breach of the contract." And, quoting from Booth on Street Railways, § 372, the court proceeds: "No matter what the motive is which incites the servant to commit an improper act towards the passenger during the existence of the relation, the master is liable for the act and its natural and legitimate consequences." Hence it is responsible for the insulting conduct of its servants which stops short of actual violence." In the Gillespie Case are very numerous citations, exhaustively treating the subject and establishing beyond any controversy that a common carrier is liable for any injury resulting from the use of language insulting, abusive, or defamatory by one of its servants towards a passenger while in the exercise of his duty.

Judgment reversed.

HILL, C. J., and POWELL, J. (concurring). As stated in the third headnote, we think (while Judge RUSSELL does not) that if the conductor, in the exercise of his duties in the dual capacity of police officer and agent of the company, in attempting to enforce section 527 of the Penal Code of 1895, used extraordinary diligence—that is to say, extreme care and caution—to prevent mistaking a white man for a negro, or vice versa, and such a mistake nevertheless results, the carrier would not be liable. We concede that in taking this position we are somewhat at variance with what was said by the Supreme Court in the second division of the opinion in the case of Seaboard Air Line Railway v. O'Quinn, 124 Ga. 359, 52 S. E. 427, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 472, where a charge substantially embodying this proposition in a case standing upon a somewhat similar basis was disapproved. Still it will be seen that so much of the decision as asserts that this charge was error was obiter, since the court held that such a charge was more favorable to the complaining party than otherwise, and that the exception, therefore, could not be considered. Our idea of the matter is this: The carrier is charged by the statute with the absolute duty of separating the races, and is likewise charged with the duty to use extreme care and caution to protect its passengers from insult. In performing the first duty, he must necessarily use his judgment to determine whether the passenger is a white man or a negro; and, to the end that no mistake shall be made to the insult of the passenger, he must perform this duty with extreme care and caution, and if still, after all, a mistake is made, and a passenger is insulted, and consequently injured, the injury is damnum absque injuria.

(2 Ga. App. 511)

CENTRAL OF GEORGIA RY. CO. v. AUGUSTA BROKERAGE CO. (No. 58.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 3, 1907.)

1. WRIT OF ERROR—HARMLESS ERROR.

A verdict will not be set aside for an error in the admission of evidence, when the same result should have been reached, had such evidence been repelled.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 4153.]

2. NEW TRIAL—REMARKS OF COURT.

An intimation of opinion by a trial judge that an issuable fact has been proved requires the grant of a new trial.

3. WRIT OF ERROR—LAW OF CASE.

The decision of the Supreme Court in Central of Ga. Ry. Co. v. Augusta Brokerage Co., 122 Ga. 646, 50 S. E. 473, 69 L. R. A. 119, is controlling as to the principles therein announced, and is the final law of this case. The charge of the trial judge, in several portions, being in conflict therewith, a new trial necessarily results.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 4661.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Richmond County; W. F. Eve, Judge.

Action by the Augusta Brokerage Company against the Central of Georgia Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed.

Lawton & Cunningham and J. C. C. Black, for plaintiff in error. Wm. H. Fleming, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. After a very painstaking consideration of the record and of the very exhaustive briefs of the counsel in this case, we feel obliged to reverse the judgment of the lower court refusing a new trial. Viewing the countenance of the case as delineated by the evidence, we were inclined to the opinion that the plaintiff was entitled to the recovery awarded by the jury, for the record presented such an instance of discriminatory partiality on the part of the Central of Georgia Railway Company as, in our individual opinion, calls justly for the application of punitive and exemplary damages; but the controlling questions of law have already been decided adversely to the contentions of the defendant in error, and that decision is the law of the case. Central of Ga. Ry. Co. v. Augusta Brokerage Company, 122 Ga. 646, 50 S. E. 473, 69 L. R. A. 119. The decision in that case relieves us of great responsibility and leaves but little for our decision.

The errors complained of in the numerous grounds in the motion for new trial may be divided into three classes: (1) Exceptions taken to certain portions of the charge and refusals to charge. (2) Complaints of violation of section 4334 of the Civil Code of 1895. (3) Error in the admission of certain evidence. We shall consider these in reverse order.

In the light of the evidence adduced, were the complaint as to the admission of Mr. Daniel's evidence the only error, we would have no hesitation in ruling that the verdict of the jury was right, and that the error in the admission of testimony was immaterial.

Though the grant of a new trial because of the expression of an opinion on the part of a judge is mandatory, the exceptions taken to the charge upon this ground, with one exception, are eliminated when the charge is considered as a whole. As well argued by counsel for defendant in error, the evil to be avoided was the danger of the judge influencing the jury; and, while in some portions of the charge it may at first sight appear that the judge intimated an opinion, a second reading dispels the impression by showing that the opposite contention was immediately presented to the jury, and that they were told that they were the exclusive judges of the facts.

In the eighth ground of the motion for new trial it is insisted that the court erred in charging the jury as follows: "If you find it was willful, they would be entitled to exemplary damages; and in considering that you consider all the aggravating circumstances surrounding the violation of the rule, and connected with and incident to it, and the intent and purpose of the parties in violating the rule, as shown by the evidence." This was error, because it assumed that the rule had been violated and that aggravating circumstances had been shown. The very able counsel for defendant in error insists that the complaint of error is not well founded, because the language used by the judge was no invasion of the province of the jury, and also because other portions of the charge clearly and distinctly left it for the jury to decide whether there were aggravating circumstances or not. We have such high regard for the legal ability of our brother, and he has pressed the point with such earnestness, that we have only reached a decision after full investigation and mature deliberation.

Under the provisions of the Code of 1895 embodied in section 4334, as construed by our Supreme Court, the error arising from the expression of opinion as to the evidence on the part of the trial judge can hardly be cured by subsequent proper instructions upon the same subject, and it is doubtful if the injurious effect can be removed even by explicit reference to the intimation or expression of opinion and unequivocal and public withdrawal thereof. In Robinson v. Schly, 6 Ga. 525, it was said that "the books abound with authority to show that, if the instructions of the court assume or presuppose a fact proper for the decision of the jury, it is error, and a new trial will therefore be granted." And in Headman v. Rose, 63 Ga. 466, it was held that the court has no discretion, but is bound to reverse the judgment in case of such error. It has been held that whether the expression or intimation of an opinion was supported by the evidence or not, and whether in fact it was injurious to the party or not, and even though it was wholly unintended, and though the verdict be what it ought to be, the result is the same. Phillips v. Williams, 89 Ga. 603; Bohler v. Owens, 60 Ga. 186; Sanders v. Nicolson, 101 Ga. 739, 28 S. E. 976; Disharoon v. State, 95 Ga. 352, 353, 22 S. E. 698.

In our opinion the language excepted to in the eighth ground of the motion conveys an intimation that there had been both a violation of the rule and that it was attended with circumstances of aggravation. So that whatever may have been the charge of the court thereafter, and even though the jury may have been correctly instructed, the effect was to confuse the jury. Under such conditions it would be impossible for them to regard the instructions of the court and at the same time render an intelligent verdict. Ga. R. R. Co. v. Hicks, 95 Ga. 305, 22 S. E. 613. See, also, Whitley v. State, 38

Ga. 50-73; Savannah, Florida & Western Ry. Co. v. Hatcher, 118 Ga. 273, 45 S. E. 239; Morrison v. Dickey, 119 Ga. 698 (2), 701, 46 S. E. 863; Jenkins v. State, 123 Ga. 530, 51 S. E. 598, et seq. We might personally agree with the reasoning of the court in Davis v. State, 51 Neb. 301, 70 N. W. 984, cited by counsel for defendant in error, or concur in counsel's argument as to a proper construction of section 4334; but we are bound by the prior adjudication in this state.

As to the errors assigned as to the charge, regardless of our personal view, we are not permitted to hold but one opinion. The constitutional amendment creating this court bound us by the decisions of the Supreme Court. This case has twice appeared in that tribunal, and the law of the case has been fully expounded by what is to us binding authority. In Central of Ga. Ry. Co. v. Augusta Brokerage Co., 122 Ga. 646, 50 S. E. 473, 69 L. R. A. 119, the essential principles which control the legal aspect of the case are decided. The charge of the learned trial judge in several of the extracts to which exception is taken is diametrically opposed to the adjudication of the Supreme Court. The theory of the charge and of the decision of the Supreme Court are wholly in conflict.

In the case of Central of Ga. Ry. Co. v. Augusta Brokerage Company, supra, the Supreme Court held that "as to issuing through bills of lading or furnishing its cars to connecting carriers, in order that shipments may be carried to ultimate destination without reloading at terminal points, a carrier may discriminate against cotton seed, provided all shippers of that commodity are treated alike. * * * That such discrimination is dictated by the business interests of the carrier, and really affects but a single shipper, because he is the only person at a terminal point who is engaged in shipping cotton seed out of the state, cannot alter the matter." The plaintiff proved the discrimination, but he did not prove that any commodity was discriminated against except cotton seed. He proved that the discrimination was dictated alone by the selfish interest of the carrier; but, as the evidence shows no one else who was affected save itself, the discrimination, no matter how injurious to the plaintiff, in the language of the Supreme Court, "cannot alter the matter."

To quote from the decision of the Supreme Court, for the evidence on both trials appears to have been practically the same: "The situation may thus be summarized: The oil mills at Augusta depended largely for a supply of cotton seed upon the territory through which ran the defendant railway company's line. They delivered to it their manufactured products for shipment. So the railway company got a short haul on the raw cotton seed, and also a long haul on the reshipments made over its line of the manufactured products. It was not to the business interest of the railroad company that cotton seed grown at local stations on its Augusta & Savannah branch should be shipped to oil mills located in South Carolina; for none of the manufactured products could then be secured for reshipment at a high rate over its road. Its interest dictated that the cotton seed should stop at Augusta, and be manufactured into oil and by-products by the mills located at that point. The railway company, therefore, determined that it would not, by voluntarily granting facilities to shippers which it was under no legal duty to afford, supply the means of diverting from its road profitable shipments which it otherwise would receive. On the other hand, the material business interest of the brokerage company demanded that it should be granted such facilities. It was a free lance, in open competition with the oil mills of Augusta in the buying of cotton seed at the lowest price possible, and all the seed purchased by it were shipped from Augusta over the Southern Railway to South Carolina mills. To reload shipments at Augusta for the South Carolina trip was expensive. To get through bills of lading, or to secure the consent of the defendant company that its loaded cars be delivered to the Southern Railway at Augusta, so that the seed might be carried to its ultimate destination without reloading, would render the business of the brokerage company profitable, and the business of the Augusta oil mills less remunerative. Their interest and those of the defendant railroad company were coincident. Its interest and those of the brokerage company conflicted. The railway company acted as the average business man would have done. That is all. In declining to grant the privileges which the brokerage company wished to enjoy, the railway company merely adopted a policy which was within its legal rights as a carrier. State v. Railroad Co., 104 Ga. 437, 30 S. E. 891. That the brokerage company may have been the only broker in Augusta or elsewhere affected by the policy cannot alter the case. As a shipper it was not discriminated against, though one of the commodities it handled was incidentally." It appears to us that the only effective way to discriminate against a shipper is to discriminate against the things he ships; but we are nevertheless bound by the decision of the Supreme Court on the subject.

The request to charge set forth in the ninth ground of the motion should have been granted. The railroad company denied that there was discrimination against the plaintiff by withholding from it privileges accorded to other patrons. It was, therefore, proper for the court to have instructed the jury that the plaintiff could not recover damages upon the ground of discrimination because of the refusal of certain privileges, unless it appeared that such privileges were granted to other patrons.

The instruction complained of in the second ground of the motion for new trial is in the identical language held to be error when delivered on the former trial of this case. Central of Ga. Ry. Co. v. Augusta Brokerage Co., 122 Ga. 652, 50 S. E. 473, 69 L. R. A. 119.

The remaining exceptions are fully treated in the former decision in this case (Central of Ga. Ry. Co. v. Augusta Brokerage Co., 122 Ga. 646, 50 S. E. 473, 69 L. R. A. 119), and any further discussion of the principles involved would be profitless.

Judgment reversed.

POWELL, J., disqualified.

(145 N. C. 114)

EAST CAROLINA RY. CO. v. MARYLAND CASUALTY CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 3, 1907.)

INSURANCE — INDEMNITY — CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACT — SCOPE OF LIABILITY.

Under a contract to indemnify an employer against liability for accidents to employes, provided "this policy does not cover loss for liability for injuries as aforesaid to, or caused by, any person unless his wages are included in the estimated wages named in the schedule," the wages of the employe causing the injury, as well as those of the employe injured, must be so included, to make the indemnity company liable.

Appeal from Superior Court, Edgecombe County; Biggs, Judge.

Action by the East Carolina Railway Company against the Maryland Casualty Company. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

This action was brought by the plaintiff to recover $1,999, alleged to be due on a contract to indemnify it against liability to its employes, which was the amount theretofore adjudged to one J. G. Andrews, an employe of the plaintiff, on account of injuries received by the negligence of Henry Clark Bridgers, another of its employes, in a suit brought by him against the plaintiff. The policy of the defendant indemnifies "against loss from common-law or statutory liability; for damages on account of bodily injuries, fatal or nonfatal, accidentally suffered within the period of this policy by any employe or employes of the assured, while on duty at the places and in the occupations mentioned in this application, in and during the continuance of the work described in this application." But the liability is limited by the following clause: "This policy does not cover loss for liability for injuries as aforesaid to, or caused by, any person unless his wages are included in the estimated wages named in the schedule, and he is on duty at the time of the accident in an occupation hereinafter described at the place or places mentioned in the schedule." It appeared that Andrews' compensation as an employe of the plaintiff was included in the estimated wages named in the schedule which is a part of the policy, while Bridgers' were not so included. Issues were submitted to the jury and answered by consent, as follows: "(1) Was J. G. Andrews, at the time of the injuries for which he obtained the judgment in controversy, an employé of the plaintiff, and was he on the pay roll and his wages included in the estimated wages named in the schedule? Yes. (2) Were the injuries to J. G. Andrews for which the judgment was obtained caused by an employé of the plaintiff, and, if so, who? Yes, Henry Clark Bridgers, who was at the time running as engineman, and who held the office of president and general manager. (3) Were the wages of such employé included in the estimated wages named in the schedule? No." The court was of the opinion that, upon the verdict, the defendant was not liable to the plaintiff upon the contract, and so adjudged. The plaintiff thereupon appealed.

John L. Bridgers, for appellant. Jacob Battle, for appellee.

WALKER, J. (after stating the facts as above). The policy upon which this suit was brought is most clearly restricted to cases where the injury results to an employé of the insured from the negligence of some other employé, whose wages were on the pay roll of the company and included or considered in the estimate upon which the premium was computed. Parties who are sui juris must be permitted to make contracts for themselves, and the court, in the absence of any equitable element invoking its protection in favor of one or the other of the parties, must take the contract as it finds it and so construe it. It is true that, in passing upon contracts of insurance or indemnity like the one now in hand, the courts have adopted certain canons of interpretation, one of which is that the contract will be liberally construed in favor of the assured, so as not to defeat, without a clear necessity, his claim for indemnity. When doubt arises by reason of the language employed to express the agreement, so that it admits of two interpretations, the courts, as a general rule, adopt that one which, without any violence to the words selected by the parties, will sanction the claim and cover the loss. Goodwin v. Assur. Society, 97 Iowa, 226, 66 N. W. 157, 32 L. R. A. 473, 59 Am. St. Rep. 411; Kendrick v. Ins. Co., 124 N. C. 315, 32 S. E. 728, 70 Am. St. Rep. 592. The leading idea which controls in such cases was well stated by Judge Douglas in Grabbs v. Ins. Co., 125 N. C. 399, 34 S. E. 506: "The extraordinary development of insurance and its necessary adaptation to the varying and complicated business relations of a progressive age tax the utmost ability of the courts. But, while different conditions may require the application of different rules, one great principle must always be kept in view, and that is the ultimate object of all insurance. While we should protect the companies against all unjust claims, and enforce all reasonable regulations necessary for their protection, we must not forget that the primary object of all insurance is to insure. We cannot permit insurance companies by unreasonable stipulations to evade the payment of such indemnity when justly due, and thus defeat the very object of their existence." And so, in Bank v. Fid. & Dep. Co., 128 N. C. 371, 38 S. E. 909, the same learned judge tersely restated the rule: "The object of an indemnifying bond is to indemnify; and if it fails to do this, either directly or indirectly, it fails to accomplish its primary purpose, and becomes worse than useless. It is worthless as an actual security, and misleading as a pretended one." The Supreme Court of the United States is equally explicit: "If, looking at its provisions, the bond is fairly and reasonably susceptible of two constructions, one favorable to the bank, and the other favorable to the surety company, the former, if consistent with the objects for which the bond was given, must be adopted, and this for the reason that the instrument, which the court is invited to interpret, was drawn by the attorneys, officers, or agents of the surety company. This is a well-established rule in the law of insurance." Am. & Surety Co. v. Pauly, 170 U. S. 144, 18 Sup. Ct. 556, 42 L. Ed. 977. In Bray v. Ins. Co., 139 N. C. 893, in considering the same principle of construction, where the meaning of any provision or of the entire policy is uncertain, we held that the interpretation should be such as to favor the plaintiff, or party insured or indemnified, assigning, as one all-sufficient reason for this view of the matter, "that the company has had the time and the opportunity, with a view to its own interest, to make clear its meaning, by selecting with care and precision language fit to convey it, and if it has failed to do so the consequences of failure should not even be shared by the assured, so as to deprive him of the benefit of the contract, as one of indemnity for his loss." Probably the most important general rule guiding courts in the construction of insurance policies is that all doubt or uncertainty, as to the meaning of the contract, shall be resolved in favor of the insured. Vance on Insurance, p. 592. The latter author also says: "This rule, it is well settled, applies in full force to those contracts of special insurance which, unfortunately for both insurers and insured, are often filled with numerous conditions, the legal significance and economic purpose of which are alike uncertain." Jones v. Casualty Co., 140 N. C. 264, 52 S. E. 578, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 932, 111 Am. St. Rep. 843; Bank v. Ins. Co., 95 U. S. 673, 24 L. Ed. 563; Lumber Co. v. Fid. & Cas. Co., 63 Minn. 286, 65 N. W. 353, 30 L. R. A. 691; Fenton v. Fid. & Cas. Co., 36 Or. 233, 56 Pac. 1096, 48 L. R. A. 770. This court has distinctly declared that, if a contract of insurance is reasonably susceptible of two constructions, the uniform rule in all courts is to adopt that which is most favorable to stated facts, and found, as a conclusion of law, that the bank had a lien for the balance of the notes held by it on the dry kiln and consequently on the fund in court. The court, upon exceptions by the receiver, confirmed the report, and gave judgment for the amount due on the notes, and the receiver appealed.

Meares & Ruark, for appellant. Aycock & Daniels, for appellees.

WALKER, J. (after stating the facts as above). It cannot be well denied that, under the prior decisions of this court, the transaction between the Acme Machine Works and the Auburn Lumber Company constitutes a conditional sale of the property described in their contract. The agreement was that the former should sell, and the latter should buy, the machinery and other property, to be delivered at once for the stipulated price. A part of the purchase money was paid in cash, and for the remainder the lumber company executed its notes, by which it absolutely and unconditionally promised to pay the sums therein specified. All of the property named would have been delivered immediately to the lumber company but for the request that the dry kiln be retained by the Acme Company until the lumber company should be ready to receive it. The receiver of the latter company contends, upon the facts found by the referee, that he is entitled to a credit of $750, which was the value of the dry kiln, upon the notes given for the purchase money of the property bought by the lumber company from the Acme Company, and which are now owned and held by the Bank of Wayne.

We do not perceive upon what ground, legal or equitable, any such claim can be successfully maintained. The lumber company has made an absolute promise to pay a certain sum of money, the consideration of which was the purchase of the property described in the contract. Why, then, should it not be compelled to perform its promise? It is a mistake to suppose that its liability depends upon whether the title did or did not pass unconditionally to it from the Acme Company. Its obligation arises out of the fact that it has promised to pay the money upon a sufficient consideration, and the said obligation is in no way affected by the state of the title to the property, as between the parties; that is, whether vested conditionally or unconditionally. The case is not distinguishable from that of Tufts v. Griffin, 107 N. C. 47, 12 S. E. 68, 10 L. R. A. 526, 22 Am. St. Rep. 863, in which is stated by Judge Shepherd, in his usually clear and vigorous style, the principle governing such cases. Quoted from Burnley v. Tufts, 66 Miss. 49, 5 South. 627, 14 Am. St. Rep. 540 (in which will be found an able and well-considered opinion adopted by this court as a clear exposition of the law which obtains with us), he says:

"The transaction was something more than an executory conditional sale. The seller had done all he was to do, except to receive the purchase price. The purchaser had received all that he was to receive as the consideration of his promise to pay. The inquiry is not whether, if he had foreseen the contingency which has occurred, he would have provided against it, nor whether he might have made a more prudent contract, but it is whether, by the contract, he has made his promise absolute or conditional. The contract was a lawful one, and, as we have said, imposed upon the buyer an absolute obligation to pay. To relieve him from this obligation, the court must make a new agreement for the parties, instead of enforcing the one made, which it cannot do. As is said in the foregoing extract, the vendor has done all that he was required to do, and the transaction amounted to a conditional sale, to be defeated upon the nonperformance of the condition. The vendee had an interest in the property which he could convey, and which was attachable by his creditors, and which would be ripened into an absolute title by the performance of the condition"—citing 1 Wharton on Contracts, 617; Vincent v. Cornell, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 296, 23 Am. Dec. 683; Newhall v. Kingsbury, 131 Mass. 445.

We regard it as too late, at this time, to deny that the contract between these two companies was, in contemplation of law, a conditional sale. Ellison v. Jones, 26 N. C. 48; Ballew v. Sudderth, 32 N. C. 176; Parris v. Roberts, 34 N. C. 268, 55 Am. Dec. 415. The same is the law in other jurisdictions. Ridgeway v. Kennedy, 52 Mo. 24; Hanway v. Wallace, 18 Ind. 377; Dunbar v. Rawles, 28 Ind. 225, 92 Am. Dec. 311; White v. Garden, 10 C. B. 919; Coggill v. Railroad, 3 Gray (Mass.) 545. The subject is discussed, and the later authorities cited, in the recent case of Hamilton v. Highlands, 144 N. C. 279, 56 S. E. 929. It was not necessary to effectuate the intention and purpose of the parties, in making the contract, that there should have been an actual delivery of the dry kiln, as there was of the other property. The kiln was held by the Acme Company, subject to the order of the lumber company, and was therefore constructively in its possession. Allman v. Davis, 24 N. C. 12; Morgan v. Perkins, 46 N. C. 171; Cohen v. Stewart, 98 N. C. 97, 3 S. E. 716; Lumber Co. v. Wilcox, 105 N. C. 34, 10 S. E. 871; and especially Winberry v. Koonce, 83 N. C. 351. The parties stood towards each other, and in regard to their relative interests in the dry kiln, and in respect to any risk of its destruction by fire or other accidental cause, precisely as they would have stood if the kiln had actually been delivered.

It is familiar learning, and such an elementary and just principle as to have become axiomatic, that one party will not be permitted to plead his own act or fault which has prevented the performance of a contract by the other party, in order to defeat the latter's recovery thereon. It is just a simple application of the maxim that no man will be allowed to take advantage of his own wrong, and the doctrine has been strikingly illustrated in its application to cases analogous to this one. Buffkin v. Baird, 73 N. C. 283; Harris v. Wright, 118 N. C. 422, 24 S. E. 751; Harwood v. Shoe, 141 N. C. 161, 53 S. E. 616. Judge Pearson said: "One who prevents the performance of a condition, or makes it impossible by his own act, shall not take advantage of the nonperformance." Navigation Co. v. Wilcox, 52 N. C. 481, 78 Am. Dec. 260. So in Harwood v. Shoe, supra, it was said: "It would be against good morals, as well as law, to allow plaintiffs to profit by their wrongful acts, although they were not parties to the contract. 'Nemo ex suo delicto meliorem suam conditionem facere potest.'" Here it appears that the lumber company, by its own request, prevented the delivery of the kiln. Will it now be heard to say that the resulting loss should fall upon the Acme Company, who was ready and willing, at all times, even up to the very moment of the fire, to deliver it, when, if the delivery had been made as originally contemplated and agreed, no loss would have occurred? Such a proposition cannot be entertained for a moment. It would be grossly inequitable if we should so hold. The lumber company must abide by the consequences of its deliberate act which has entailed loss upon it, and not be permitted to shift the responsibility for the loss to the Acme Company, which was absolutely without any fault. The correct principle is stated and elucidated in 1 Parsons on Contracts (9th Ed.) p. 581, as follows: "If the contract be to deliver the thing ordered at the residence or place of business of the buyer, the seller is liable, although such delivery becomes impossible, unless it becomes so through the act of the buyer. If the seller refuses to deliver it at a time and place agreed on, and it perish afterwards without his fault, he is liable for it; but if he be ready, and the vendee wrongfully refuse or neglect to receive it, the seller is not liable, unless the thing perish through his gross and wanton negligence." As we have shown, there was no neglect or fault on the part of the Acme Company.

This being the situation with reference to the title of the kiln, the principle of Tufts v. Griffin, supra, most clearly applies. That case is cited with approval in Tufts v. Wynne, 45 Mo. App. 42, in which the same question as we have here was presented, and an analogy is there drawn between a conditional sale of personal property and a contract to sell land, it having been held by many courts, in accordance with a well-settled principle of equity, that in the latter case the loss, if any of the property is destroyed or diminished in value by accidental causes, falls upon the vendee; citing Snyder v. Murdock, 51 Mo. 175; Walker v. Owen, 79 Mo. 563; Martin v. Carver's Adm'r (Ky.) 1 S. W. 199. We have lately announced and applied the same principle as to land in Sutton v. Davis, 143 N. C. 474, 55 S. E. 844, where the leading authorities will be found carefully collected and lucidly considered by Justice Hoke, at page 484 of 143 N. C., at page 846 of 55 S. E. The general principle of liability on notes given for the purchase money of personal property, where title is retained as a security for payment, is clearly stated in Barrows v. Anderson, 3 Cent. Law J. 413, as follows: "But the question here is: At whose risk was the property? And who must bear the loss? The purchaser by his note obligated himself to pay the price at a given time. There is no condition or contingency expressed in the note upon which he can avoid payment, and the question is whether the law will supply such a condition. There is no doubt but that the title and right of property, by the terms of the note, remained in the seller, while the possession and right of possession were with the defendant, and the seller could not assert any claim to it until the buyer made default. The seller held the naked title, subject to the interest of the buyer; i. e., the contingent right to a title which would vest absolutely, on payment of the price, without any further act on the part of the seller. The right to the use of the machine for two years, with the contingent right to a perfect title upon the payment of the price, constituted the consideration of the note."

The real and substantial nature of the transaction, for the purpose of determining who should bear the loss, is that of mortgagor and mortgagee, or lienor and lienee. The contract, it is true, creates technically a conditional sale, but the vendor, in fact, only retains the legal title as a security in equity, and the title otherwise passes to the vendee with a lien for the purpose named. Hamilton v. Highlands, 144 N. C. 279, 56 S. E. 929. The intention of the law, as embodied in the recent statutes of registration, but emphasizes this view of the relation of the parties (Brem v. Lockhart, 93 N. C. 191) when we come to determine their legal and equitable rights. It is not our purpose to diminish in the least degree the rights of either party in the property as fixed by the former decisions of this court, but only to look at the transaction, as regards the question before us, according to its true and essential character and to administer justice under the fundamental maxims of the law. If we should decide that the Acme Company was holding the kiln for the lumber company as its bailee, our conclusion would not be affected or changed, as even in that case, there being no negligence shown on the part of the former company, but it being found that it was without any fault whatever, it could not be adjudged liable for the loss.

Some of the cases cited by the learned counsel for the receiver, in their well-prepared brief, can easily be distinguished from the one at bar, and the other authorities they rely on, which apparently support their position, are in direct conflict with our decisions and the best-considered cases on the subject decided in other courts. They are, in our opinion, contrary to both reason and a proper conception of what should, in accordance with good conscience and sound morality, be considered as the relative rights of the parties. The equity of the case is clearly with the Acme Company, and the law, we believe, is in harmony with the right.

There may be another ground upon which the bank can succeed, as suggested by its counsel, but we need not and do not consider it, as the point already decided is sufficient to dispose of the case in its favor.

The learned referee, who so intelligently tried the case and who has stated his findings of fact, and the law arising thereon, with such remarkable clearness, was right in his conclusion, as was the able presiding judge who confirmed his report and gave judgment accordingly.

We find no error in the record. Affirmed.

(145 N. C. 106)

KINSEY v. CITY OF KINSTON et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 3, 1907.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—STREETS—DUTY TO KEEP IN SAFE CONDITION.

The positive duty of a municipality to keep the public streets in a reasonably safe condition is applicable, though an excavation is made across a street by a contractor who is doing the work for a citizen to establish connection with the city sewer.

2. SAME.

That a contractor, opening a street to establish connection with the city sewer, may be himself liable for negligence, will not relieve the municipality if it was in law fixed with knowledge of his negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 36, Municipal Corporations, § 1855.]

3. SAME—ACTIONS AGAINST—QUESTION FOR JURY.

The question of knowledge by a municipality of defects in public streets is usually one for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 36, Municipal Corporations, § 1750.]

4. SAME—NOTICE OF DEFECTS.

A grant of a permit by a municipality to a contractor to open a ditch across a street is notice to the municipality that the work is in progress.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 36, Municipal Corporations, § 1645.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Lenoir County; Webb, Judge.

Action by Agnes H. Kinsey against the city of Kinston and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

The plaintiff sued to recover damages received from falling in a ditch at night, which ditch had been dug during the day of May 4, 1905, across defendant's street. The usual issues as to negligence, contributory negligence, and damage were submitted. The jury found for the plaintiff on all issues. The court refused motion for new trial, and rendered judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appealed.

Loftin & Varser, for appellants. E. R. Wooten and Geo. V. Cowper, for appellee.

BROWN, J. We have considered the 15 exceptions presented in the record in this case, and are of opinion that all of them are without merit. At the close of the evidence, the defendant moved to nonsuit, and excepted to the ruling of the court denying the motion. Plaintiff's evidence tends to prove: That about 8 o'clock at night on the 4th of May, 1905, the plaintiff was returning from her work, on her way home, and was walking on the sidewalk on King street, in the city of Kinston, when she suddenly fell headforemost into an open ditch 4½ feet deep, and 2½ feet wide, extending from the middle of the street across the said sidewalk, from which she was rendered unconscious. That there were no lights, warnings, signals, or signs at or near or upon the ditch. This was the usual way which plaintiff returned from her work at night going home. That she passed the place of injury the morning before she was hurt on the night of May 4th, and there was no ditch or excavation there. The ditch was dug in order to make a sewer connection from the city's main sewer to certain residences on King street. A permit was granted and issued on May 4, 1905, to cut the ditch across King street for that purpose. The work was performed by S. H. Isler, a contractor, who finished digging the ditch and making the connection by 4 p. m. of the same day, and at once, before closing the ditch, verbally notified city inspector Brown to inspect the connections with the city sewer. No written notice was given the inspector, who at the time of the verbal notice was temporarily ill. The inspector did not inspect the ditch that day, and it was left open all night without lights or other protection. We do not deem it necessary to notice any matters embraced in the exceptions other than the ruling of his honor denying the motion to nonsuit, and the seventh exception to that portion of his honor's charge, as follows: "That the grant of a permit to Isler to make the ditch is notice to the city that the work is in progress, and that thereafter it would be liable for the injuries arising from the negligence of the person doing the work, which is dangerous in itself."

1. The contention of the defendant that it is not liable because the excavation was made across its public street by a contractor who was doing the work for a citizen in order to establish water connection with the city sewer, and that, therefore, the motion to nonsuit should have been allowed, is wholly untenable. To allow such contention would be to relieve the city authorities of one of their most important duties. It is the positive duty of municipal authorities to keep the public streets in a reasonably safe condition, so that the people may pass along them with comparative safety. This duty is not suspended because a private contractor is permitted to open the streets in order to establish water connections with the public sewers. The fact that the contractor may be liable for negligence will not relieve the authorities of the municipality, if they are in law fixed with knowledge of such negligence. This is plainly deducible from our own decisions. Bunch v. Edenton, 90 N. C. 431; Russell v. Monroe, 116 N. C. 720, 21 S. E. 550, 47 Am. St. Rep. 823; Fitzgerald v. Concord, 140 N. C. 113, 52 S. E. 309. In other jurisdictions it has been expressly held that the city is liable for damages to pedestrians for the negligent performance of work in a city for private purposes under special permission of the city council, where there is ordinarily a certain city officer to supervise it, and the city has knowledge that it is in progress on the day in question. City Council of Augusta v. Oone, 91 Ga. 714, 17 S. E. 1005; Wendell v. City of Troy, 39 Barb. (N. Y.) 329. The city is not relieved even if the work is in the hands of an independent contractor. Southbend v. Turner, 156 Ind. 418, 60 N. E. 271, 54 L. R. A. 396, 83 Am. St. Rep. 200; 16 A. & E. Encyclopedia (2d Ed.) p. 197, "Cases cited." We think, therefore, upon the facts in evidence, that the court committed no error in overruling the motion to nonsuit.

2. It is further contended that in the part of the charge hereinbefore recited his honor substantially instructed the jury, as matter of law, that the defendant was fixed with notice of the obstruction or excavation which caused the plaintiff's injury, and that such instruction is erroneous. We concur with appellant in the construction placed upon the charge excepted to, but we cannot concur in regarding it as erroneous. The question of knowledge upon the part of municipal authorities of defects in the public streets is usually one to be determined by the jury upon the principles so clearly stated by Mr. Justice Hoke in Fitzgerald v. Concord, supra. But in the case at bar there was nothing in dispute respecting notice for the jury to determine. It is admitted that on the day the excavation was made the defendant issued its permit authorizing it to be done. The defendant's authorities were therefore expressly charged with knowledge of the character of the work and its possible dangers to those of the citizens who should use the street especially after nightfall, as the plaintiff happened to do. A ditch cut across a much used street in a city is necessarily dangerous, and it is the duty of the person doing the work to protect it against accident to those using the street. The duty of a private person is very much the same as that of the city itself when it is prosecuting an improvement. If a private individual fails to protect an excavation in the street, then it is the duty of the city authorities to see that it is protected, and they are held responsible that he should do so, for they were notified that he is going on with the work when he obtains the permit. The city is liable for negligence in failing to exercise supervision and inspection if injury results by such excavation made by an individual under such permit or license issued by it. City of Southbend et al. v. Bennie Turner, 156 Ind. 418, 60 N. E. 271, 54 L. R. A. 396, 83 Am. St. Rep. 200; District of Columbia v. Henry E. Woodberry, 136 U. S. 450, 10 Sup. Ct. 990, 34 L. Ed. 477; Bauer v. City of Rochester, 59 Hun (N. Y.) 616, 12 N. Y. Supp. 418; Hoyer v. Village of North Tana-wanda, 79 Hun (N. Y.) 39, 29 N. Y. Supp. 650; City of Baltimore v. O'Donnell, 53 Md. 110, 36 Am. Rep. 395; City of Chicago v. Johnson, 53 Ill. 91; City of Denver v. Aaron, 6 Colo. App. 232, 40 Pac. 587; Bowen v. City of Huntington, 35 W. Va. 682, 14 S. E. 217.

Upon a review of the whole record, we find no error.

(145 N. C. 152)

MANGUM v. NORTH CAROLINA R. CO.
et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 10, 1907.)

CARRIERS—STATION PLATFORM—INJURY TO PASSENGER—LIABILITY.

A railway company must keep its station premises in a reasonably safe condition for passengers, the duty extending to the manner in which a platform is allowed to be used, and a carrier is liable for injury to a passenger by the negligence of a newspaper porter while moving a truck along a platform with the carrier's consent; that the newspaper company may also be liable not relieving the carrier from its duty to furnish the passenger a safe passage to its train.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 9, Carriers, § 1142.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Wake County; E. B. Jones, Judge.

Personal injury action by C. E. Mangum against the North Carolina Railroad Company and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. No error.

Civil action tried at February term, 1907, of Wake superior court; his honor E. B. Jones, judge, presiding. These issues were submitted: (1) Was plaintiff injured by the negligence of the defendant as alleged in the complaint? Ans.: Yes. (2) Did plaintiff by his own negligence contribute to the injury complained of? Ans.: No. (3) What damage, if any, is plaintiff entitled to recover? Ans.: $7,500. From the judgment rendered, defendants appealed.

F. H. Busbee and A. B. Andrews, Jr., for appellants. Ohas. U. Harris, for appellee.

BROWN, J. The evidence tends to prove that the plaintiff, on the night of July 4, 1903, was a passenger on defendants' train en route from Raleigh to Danville, Va. He passed through the gates of the defendants' station at Raleigh, and as he was walking along the platform used by passengers to reach the cars he was run into and seriously injured by a truck loaded with newspapers. It was in evidence that the man in charge of the truck was not employed by the railroad, but was employed by a newspaper, and it was his business to handle the newspaper mail. When the newspaper mail reaches the station in time, it is the custom for the railroad truck hands to take the mail from the gate down to the train. When the newspapers arrive too late to be taken at the gate by the truck hands, the man who brings the newspapers down from the office takes it down to the cars and delivers it to the mail agents at the mail car. Witness R. E. Lumsden testified that the newspaper mail was handled by the railroad porters when it got to the gate before the transfer clerk and the porters went down with the regular mail. If it arrived in time, the railroad porters took the mail down to the mail car; but, if the newspaper mail got to the gate after the porters had gone down with the mail, the person who brought the newspaper mail took it down to the mail car and unloaded it. When he went down with the mail on the night of July 4, 1903, the newspaper mail had not come. A colored boy named Lunsford Davis handled the newspaper mail to the depot for the newspaper at that time. The witness heard of the accident either that night or the next day.

The only question presented for our consideration is the liability of defendants to plaintiff for the negligence of the newspaper porter upon the above facts. It seems now to be almost elementary that one of the recognized duties of a railway company that undertakes to carry passengers is to keep its station premises in a reasonably safe condition so that those who patronize it may pass safely to and from the cars. Pineus v. Railroad, 140 N. C. 450, 53 S. E. 297, 111 Am. St. Rep. 856; Wood on Railways, 310, 1341, 1349. This duty extends not only to the condition of the platform itself, whereon passengers walk to and from the trains, but also to the manner in which that platform is allowed by the common carrier to be used. Weston v. Railroad Co., 73 N. Y. 595; Wood, supra. The defendants owed a duty to plaintiff and to all other passengers to keep its depot platforms used by them as means of ingress and egress free from obstructions and dangerous instrumentalities, especially at a time when its passengers are hurrying to and from its cars. Pineus v. Railroad, supra; Railroad v. Johns, 36 Kan. 769, 14 Pac. 237, 59 Am. Rep. 609.

The fact that the injury to plaintiff was inflicted by the negligence of the newspaper porter, who, with defendants' consent, was on his way from the gates to the mail car with the truck loaded with papers, does not relieve the defendants from their contractual obligation to plaintiff, and we find no authority which sustains the contention that it does. The liability does not arise because defendants might reasonably have anticipated just what happened, but grows out of their duty to plaintiff to furnish him reasonably safe passage to the train. The defendants are not bound to accept newspapers and deliver them to the mail car unless the newspaper company delivers its papers at the gates in reasonable time for the defendants, through their own agents and employees to take them at the gates and transport them to the mail car. If the defendants customarily permitted the newspaper porter, when late in his delivery, to push the truck along the platform inside the gates when passengers are hurrying to and fro, the defendants must be liable for the porter's negligent conduct while using the station platform, upon the principle that they have temporarily accepted him as their servant. Railroad v. Gustafson, 21 Colo. 393, 41 Pac. 505; Kimball v. Cushman, 103 Mass. 194, 4 Am. Rep. 523; Hill v. Morey, 26 Vt. 178; Oil Creek v. Kreighton, 74 Pa. 316; Dimmitt v. Railroad, 40 Mo. App. 654.

The fact that the newspaper company may also be liable for the negligence of its servant as a tort does not relieve the defendants from their contract obligations to furnish plaintiff a safe passage to its train. The case of Fritz v. Railroad, 132 N. C. 829, 44 S. E. 613, pressed upon our attention, has no relation, we think, to the case at bar. In that case the plaintiff, while alighting from the train, was injured by another passenger who was attempting to make his way into the car and accidentally struck plaintiff on the knee with his valise. The court held in that case that such conduct on the part of the passenger could not reasonably have been anticipated by the company's agents. For the same reason, the case of Muster v. Railway, 61 Wis. 325, 21 N. W. 223, 50 Am. Rep. 141, cited by defendants, is no authority, in our opinion, to sustain their contention. In that case a postal clerk negligently threw out a mail bag at an unusual place, where he had never before thrown it. The court held that the company could not anticipate such conduct, and therefore was not called upon to take precautionary measures to prevent injury. On the contrary, it is held, in Snow v. Railway, 136 Mass. 552, 49 Am. Rep. 40, that a passenger, waiting on a platform at the railroad station for a train and injured by a mail bag being thrown from a passing train, such throwing being customary and well known to the company, may recover of the railroad company therefor. The decision is put upon the ground that, although the postal clerk is not the agent of the railroad company, but is the agent of the national government exclusively, the custom being known to the company, it must take precautions to protect its passengers from injurious consequences.

It is true, as contended by counsel, that there is no proof whatever that defendants are under any contractual obligation or duty to receive the mail intended for the mail car at the station gates, when the newspaper is late in reaching the train. But if, nevertheless, they do receive the papers on such occasions, and customarily permit the newspaper porter to discharge the duty their hired employes otherwise discharge, they must be held to liability to passengers if they are injured by such porter's negligence while on the platform.

The only exception to the evidence was abandoned by appellants upon the argument. We have examined the charge carefully, and find it fair, free from error, and in line with the views expressed in this opinion.

No error.

(62 W. Va. 167)

TOOTHMAN v. COURTNEY.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
April 25, 1907. Rehearing Denied
Oct. 17, 1907.)

1. MINES AND MINERALS—CONVEYANCES—OIL AND GAS LEASE.

A deed, granting, by the use of appropriate technical terms, all the oil and gas under a tract of land, together with the exclusive right to enter thereon at all times for the purposes of drilling and operating for oil and gas, but limiting the estate to a term of seven years and as much longer as oil or gas may be found thereon in paying quantities, stipulating for the payment of commutation money for delay in drilling, denominating it rental, and providing for the delivery into pipe lines, for the grantor, of one-eighth of all the oil produced and saved from the premises, and also for payment of a yearly rental for every gas well from which gas is transported and used off of the premises, does not pass the title to the oil and gas in place. In legal effect it is a mining lease and the title to the oil and gas in place remains in the grantor.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Mines and Minerals, §§ 154, 160.]

2. CONTRACTS — CONSTRUCTION — DEEDS — GENERAL RULES—INTENTION OF PARTIES.

Technical words in a deed, contract, or other instrument will be limited and controlled in their effect by the intention of the parties, gathered from the instrument, considered, as a whole, in the light of the nature of its subject-matter and the purpose for which it was executed.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 11, Contracts, §§ 732-734.]

3. TAXATION — ASSESSMENT — MODE — UNDIVIDED INTEREST IN LAND.

An undivided interest in land or mineral underlying land cannot properly be entered and taxed on the land book; and a deed founded upon a sale of such undivided interest for non-payment of taxes is irregular, and will be set aside.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 45, Taxation, §§ 577, 1352, 1353.]

4. SAME—CURATIVE STATUTES.

Such defect in the assessment, sale, and deed is not cured by any provision of section 25 of chapter 81 of the Code of 1899 [Code 1906, § 884].

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 45, Taxation, § 770.]

5. SAME — TAX TITLE — ACTION TO SET ASIDE DEED—CONDITIONS PRECEDENT.

A bill to set aside a tax deed in such case must tender the purchase money and taxes subsequently paid as a condition precedent to the setting aside of the deed, or aver the willingness and readiness of the plaintiff to pay the same. A decree which fails to secure to the purchaser such reimbursement is erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 45, Taxation, § 1586.]

6. APPEAL—DISPOSITION OF CAUSE—REMAND TO TRIAL COURT—LEAVE TO AMEND.

On reversing a decree for insufficiency of the bill, in a cause in which a good case is disclosed by the evidence, this court will remand the cause with leave to the plaintiff to amend his bill.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 4606, 4616-4619.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Monongalia County.

Action by Daniel L. Toothman against David H. Courtney and others. From a decree in favor of plaintiff, defendant Courtney appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Cox & Baker, for appellant. W. S. Meredith and W. S. Conaway, for appellee.

POFFENBARGER, J. Daniel L. Toothman obtained, by a decree of the circuit court of Monongalia county, the setting aside of a deed, made by the clerk of the county court of said county, conveying to David H. Courtney an undivided one-sixteenth of the oil and gas in a tract of 143 acres of land, lying in said county, pursuant to a sale thereof, as delinquent land, made by the sheriff. The land seems to be rich in oil production, carried on by the South Penn Oil Company, and the decree, in addition to setting aside said deed, requires said company to pay one-sixteenth of the oil produced by it to Toothman instead of Courtney. Believing the tax deed valid and his title to the royalty good, Courtney has appealed.

As the decree stands upon the theory of invalidity in the assessment, nontaxability, and nonsalableness of the Toothman interest as land, it is necessary to disclose here the transactions relating to the title. Owning the tract of land in fee, Toothman on the 6th day of August, 1889, executed to one C. J. Ford an instrument, the true character of which is a matter of controversy between counsel for the respective parties, but which designates itself "oil lease." In express terms, it grants to Ford "all the oil and gas in and under" the land, "to have and to hold for the term of seven years" from the date thereof "and as much longer as oil or gas is found in paying quantities thereon." Further provisions, bearing upon the question to be determined, read as follows: "The above grant is made upon the following terms: 1st. Second party agrees to drill a well upon said premises within ten months from this date, or thereafter pay to first party a yearly rental of $144.00 dollars for further delay until such well is drilled, such parted conditionally with his entire interest in the oil and gas, and for all time, not for a mere term of years. It was agreed, among other things, that, if any royalty should be produced under the lease then on the land, it should go to the grantee.

Our conclusion is that the instrument under consideration is a lease, vesting in Ford a right of exploration and production on the usual terms of one-eighth of the oil to the lessor as royalty, and seven-eighths to the lessee as a "working interest," which passed by assignment to the South Penn Oil Company, leaving the fee-simple title to all the oil and gas in the lessor. Of this he conveyed to Joseph H. McDermott one-sixteenth, retaining the title to fifteen-sixteenths. By the deed to Willson he conveyed the land in fee, reserving to himself "all the oil rental." What right or title remained in him by virtue of this reservation is a question not free from difficulty. We all agree that he still had a fee-simple estate in the oil and gas, but we differ as to the extent of that interest. My associates, except Judge MILLER, are inclined to the view that he retained an undivided one-sixteenth. I am unable to reach the conclusion that he retained that otherwise than by holding that he retained all the oil and gas, less what he had conveyed to McDermott. I do not see how it can be said that he retained any interest in the gas and oil or nominee. A rental issuing out of the land is not the land itself, nor is it any part of the land. Rents and profits are the mere usufruct of the land. There may be an estate in them, an unlimited right of enjoyment; but it is an incorporeal hereditament. A reservation in a deed or lease of a rent for a term of years is none the less an intangible incorporeal right. In the deed to Willson Toothman reserved no land, no oil, no gas, by name, but only the oil rental, which means the royalty. He reserved all the oil rental, thereby retaining in himself the beneficial use of all the oil in the land less what he had conveyed to McDermott. The only provision of the deed in favor of Willson relating to the oil is the grant of one sixty-fourth thereof, to become effective after the drilling of more than 12 wells on the land. Though he did not reserve by name the oil in place, or any part of it, his reservation of all the rental or royalty to be derived from it compels the court to hold, by construction of the instrument, that it vests in him the title to that thing, the beneficial use whereof has been reserved, namely, the oil in place. Jarman on Wills, marg. p. 741, says: "A devise of the rents and profits or of the income of land passes the land itself both at law and in equity—a rule, it is said, founded on the feudal law, according to which the whole beneficial interest in the land consisted in the right to take the rents and profits. And since St. 1 Vict. c. 26, such a devise carries the fee simple; but before that act it carried no more than an estate for life, unless words of inheritance were added. But where a testator, seized or possessed of a reversion in fee or for years, to which rent was incident, devised or bequeathed his 'ground rent,' not only the rent, but the reversion, would pass; as he was considered, when speaking of the ground rent, to mean by that term all the reversionary interest, of which the rent was the immediate fruit." This principle was applied by the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania in Weakland v. Cunningham (Pa.) 7 Atl. 148, in which it was held as follows: "The following reservation in a deed: 'Excepting the profits of one-half of all the stone coal, and of all other kinds of mineral, which may be discovered at any time hereafter'—is a reservation of the corpus of all such coal and mineral in place."

Not doubting the soundness of this legal proposition or its applicability in the construction of deeds, as well as wills, I unhesitatingly make use of it here, because it will operate justly, fully effectuating the intention of the parties. The oil was already under lease, and the royalty, or oil rental, is all it can ever yield to its owner. That reserved to Toothman, he has the entire beneficial use of the oil, the equivalent of the ownership of it in place. Willson can never derive a dollar from it, unless the conditional grant of a one sixty-fourth interest should take effect. If there had been no lease on the land, I would be of the same opinion, for a reservation of all possible benefit of the oil is tantamount to a reservation of the corpus thereof. It matters not that, in such case, there would be a presumption that one-eighth is the royalty contemplated, it being the usual royalty, for that presumption is inseparable from the further one that the remaining seven-eighths goes with the royalty as a means of making it available, or realizing it; for, where one-eighth is the royalty, the residue never benefits the landowner otherwise than by enabling him to get the one-eighth. It is given to the lessee as compensation for producing and delivering the royalty. The two presumptions are locked in indissoluble companionship. They unite in pressing the view that a grant, exception, or reservation of the one-eighth royalty carries with it, as a satellite of the royalty, the seven-eighths "working interest." That afterwards it happens that a larger royalty may be obtained by the grantee signifies nothing. He is at perfect liberty to make a better bargain for operation of the territory than it was supposed he could make. After events and mere surmises are not to be considered. The intention at the time of the execution of the deed is the test. Judge MILLER concurs in the views I have here expressed. But whether these conclusions be sound or not, we agree that Toothman had title to at least one-sixteenth of the oil in place, and that he did not have title to the whole of it; for he had, by his deed, conveyed one-sixteenth to McDermott.

The tax deed stands upon the assessment of an undivided interest in land. Will such an assessment sustain a sale and conveyance of land for nonpayment of taxes? Our statute does not contemplate such an assessment. Section 36 of chapter 29 of the Code of 1899 [Code 1906, § 821-36], reading as follows, requires land to be assessed either as tracts or town lots, according to the fact: "The clerk of the county court shall make out the land book, including all extensions, in such form as the auditor may prescribe, showing for each magisterial district in one table the tracts of land and in a separate table the town lots, arranged in the alphabetical order of the names of their owners." Accordant with said provision, and rendering proper departure therefrom impossible, section 37 of said chapter [Code 1906, § 821-37] imposes the following duties: "In the table of the tracts of land the clerk shall enter each tract separately, and shall set forth, in as many separate columns as may be necessary, the name of the person who, by himself or his tenant, has the freehold in his possession; the nature of his estate, whether in fee or for life; the number of acres as near as may be in the tract; the name of the tract, if it has a name; a description of it, as far as practicable, with reference to the water-courses, mountains or other places on or near which it lies; the distance and bearing, as near as may be, from the court house; the value of the land per acre, including buildings; the value of the whole tract and buildings; the sum included in the value on account of buildings; the amount of taxes assessed on each tract for state, state school, county, free school, building and other district purposes, in separate columns, at the rate assessed for each of such purposes." The person in whose name real estate shall be taxed is prescribed in section 40 [Code 1906, § 821-43] of said chapter, as follows: "As to real property the person who, by himself or his tenant, has the freehold in his possession, whether in fee or for life, shall be deemed the owner for the purpose of taxation. A person who has made a mortgage or deed of trust to secure a debt or liability shall be deemed the owner until the mortgagee or trustee takes possession, after which such mortgagee or trustee shall be deemed the owner." That undivided interests are not to be separately assessed is made apparent by the provision relating to taxation of lands of decedents, reading, in part, as follows: "When the owner dies intestate, his undivided real estate may be listed to his heirs without designating any of them by name until they shall have given notice to the clerk of the county court of the division of the same, the names of the several heirs, and the parcels allotted to each; and each heir shall be liable for the whole tax assessed upon such land while it is so listed; but when he pays the same he may recover of the others their proper proportion of the amount so paid and the proportion thereof for which such other or others are liable shall be a lien on the interests owned by him or them in such lands; and such liens, when the amount so paid exceeds twenty dollars in all, may be enforced in a court of equity." Section 26, c. 29, Code 1899 [Code 1906, § 821-26]. Separate assessment of certain interests is authorized by section 25 of said chapter [Code 1906, § 821-25], but they are not undivided interests. It says: "When a tract or lot of land becomes the property of different owners, in several parcels, or one person becomes the owner of the surface, and another of the minerals under the same, or of the timber alone on said land, the assessor shall divide the value at which the whole had before been assessed, among the different owners, having regard to the value of each interest compared with that of the whole, and enter the same on the copy of the land book in his possession, or upon a statement appended thereto." This applies where the freehold estate in the minerals or timber has been severed, in ownership, by deed or otherwise, from the freehold in the land. Under it, coal is assessable by the acre, oil or gas as the oil or gas in so many acres, and timber as the timber on so many acres; each as an entire thing, or stratum of the land. Nothing in it suggests a shadow of authority for assessing an undivided interest in one of these things, nor can there be any reason for doing so which would not be equally applicable to such interests in other portions of the land. However potent such reasons may be, the Legislature has refused to be governed by them, and the mode of assessment is a subject of its discretionary power, with which courts cannot interfere.

It has been suggested that section 4, c. 21, p. 83, Acts 1899, providing for the reassessment of the value of all the real estate in this state, authorizes and will sustain the assessment of undivided interests in minerals. How far that act may be deemed to have amended the general law, it having been a special act, providing for a single valuation, might be an interesting question, if it were necessary to make the inquiry. It contains no repealing clause, and appears not to have been designed to work any radical or fundamental alteration of the general laws relating to taxation, and its character and purpose must not be overlooked in seeking its meaning. The clause therein relied upon as authorizing this assessment reads as follows: "And when mineral, mineral water, oil, gas or coal privileges or interests, are held by a party or parties, or any company or association, exclusive of the surface, the same shall be assessed separately, to such party or parties, company or association." That mere licenses or leases for coal, oil, or gas never were, and are not now, taxable as land under this or any other statute, has been solemnly decided by this court in Harvey Coal Co. v. Dillon, 53 S. E. 928, 59 W. Va. 605, notwithstanding the very general terms used. The word "interest" is still more indefinite, and a qualified meaning is necessarily given to it by the context. That limits it to an interest held exclusive of the surface, thereby impliedly requiring separation in title of something from the surface. Separation from the surface can only apply to something which had connection therewith. Surface is a tangible thing. The "interest" to be held separately necessarily means, therefore, the coal, oil, gas, and mineral water; not an undivided interest in that interest. Under this act partial separation from the surface is not enough. The thing to be separately assessed must be held exclusive of the surface. That means total separation of something from the surface. Acts in pari materia must be construed together. This act and section 25 of chapter 29 of the Code of 1899 [Code 1906, § 821-25] were operative at the same time and related to the same thing. Said section 25 had already authorized separate assessments of minerals and timber when separately owned. As there was some confusion in the minds of assessors as to what were minerals, the reassessment act of 1899 descended into an enumeration of several species thereof, naming such as were frequently owned separately from the surface. These things the act called mineral "interests," plainly meaning the minerals themselves, not estates in them, interests in the titles thereto, or shares therein. It is not pretended that section 25 of the general law contemplates separate assessment of undivided interests in minerals, and there is a presumption against any intent to modify it by the special reassessment act, which must be overcome with plain language. The reassessment act related to valuation only. Nothing else is included in its title. Anything in the act, not fairly within its title, is a nullity. Who should pay tax on land is wholly foreign to the matter of valuing land for taxation. Acts should be so construed as to make them valid and effective, not unconstitutional and void. In merely enumerating the species of minerals, separate taxation of which had been authorized by the general statute, the valuation act added nothing, changed nothing. It merely interpreted the general statute and made it plain and clear for the guidance of the assessors acting under the valuing act. "Interests" in the clause of the statute, above quoted, necessarily means mineral water, oil, gas, and coal. It is qualified by the terms "mineral, mineral water, oil, gas or coal," used as adjectives. "Privileges and interests" are the assessable subjects, and they are mineral subjects. The complete owner of the coal in a tract of land is the owner of an interest in it, and it is a mineral interest. Such description does not fit ownership of an undivided half or other fraction of the coal. In describing such ownership, using interest for coal, it would be necessary to say an undivided interest in a mineral interest. My construction makes interest stand for mineral. The other construction would make it stand for mineral also, and then go further and qualify mineral by the word "undivided." This, in my opinion, is unwarranted by the letter of the clause, and is certainly in the very teeth of the general law, and therefore violative of another rule of construction.

If the terms in which the lawmaking body has expressed itself were, in any sense, doubtful respecting this matter, which I do not admit, there would be very strong reasons for resolving that doubt against taxation of undivided interests, and their potency on the question, whether the departure is material, is apparent. It would often bring almost infinitesimal interests in land under clouds of title and into litigation, thereby clogging and obstructing alienation, withholding land from the markets, impeding its improvement, and retarding the development and prosperity of the state. Such a system of taxation would be burdensome to the owner and unwise as a matter of state policy, viewed in this light alone. The observations of Mr. Justice Sawyer of the Supreme Court of California in Bidleman v. Brooks, 28 Cal. 72, on setting aside a tax deed, predicated on the assessment of a part of a tract of land, held in undivided ownership as the supposed equivalent, in acreage, of the undivided interest of one of the co-tenants, apply here with almost equal force. He said: "The assessor is nowhere authorized to arbitrarily divide up lots in strips to suit his caprice, and assess such several portions separately. If he may divide up a lot of well-known boundaries into strips 20 feet wide, he may divide it into strips of 1 foot in width, or even smaller dimensions, and assess each separately, and thus render it not only greatly inconvenient and oppressive to the owner, but almost impossible for him to ascertain whether his taxes have all been paid or not. The law undoubtedly contemplates that each lot of well-known dimensions and boundaries shall be assessed as one lot. In this instance there was a lot of the ordinary dimensions—the smallest of the lots as originally officially surveyed and platted in that part of the city—which had not been subdivided by the owner. It was inclosed by a single fence, separating it distinctly from all other lands, and had a dwelling-house and outbuildings upon it, the whole openly and notoriously occupied as a single lot or messuage by the defendant's tenant and his family. Yet it was arbitrarily sliced up into at least three parts, and each separately assessed as a distinct lot; the larger portion—more than half—being assessed to the real owner, the defendant, and the other two parcels to unknown owners. Such an assessment of a tract of land constituting one well-known lot, and actually occupied as such, if it would necessarily have such an effect, would be very likely to mislead the owner, and result, as in this instance, in a sale of his property. The owner calls to pay his taxes. A list of all the taxes against him is furnished. Upon looking it over, he finds a lot in a certain locality taxed to him, and, without scrutinizing the boundaries very closely, he naturally concludes that the whole lot is assessed to him, as it should be, pays his taxes, and rests in security, till several years afterward he finds that a small strip has been, in fact, assessed to unknown owners, and, without his knowledge or fault, sold."

Under our system of taxation, land itself, and not a mere estate or interest in it, is a primary subject of taxation, and the remedy for enforcement of payment is directly against the land as well as its owners. The statute creates a lien upon all land for the taxes thereon, which may be enforced by a suit in equity. It also provides for sale of the land for nonpayment of the taxes thereon, and, for failure to cause land to be charged with the taxes it ought to pay for a period of five years, the title is forfeited and becomes vested in the state by constitutional and statutory provisions. These provisions deal with the corpus and complete title to the land. In so far as they are constitutional, they are of great dignity, and may be considered as founded upon most weighty reasons of public policy. Such of them as are statutory must be deemed to be in execution of the constitutional plan of taxation, and highly impregnated with its spirit. Good reason for adopting the plan is found in the consequences which would flow from general use of the departure now under consideration. If 50 persons, owning equal undivided shares of a tract of land, were separately charged with their respective interests on the land book, the state's lien for taxes would be severed into 50 parts, and 50 suits might be maintained, and possibly would be necessary for the collection of the taxes on the tract. It would require 50 separate and distinct sheriff's sales for delinquency, and, if made to the state for want of private bidders, she would be compelled to make 50 purchases, instead of 1, undergoing multiplied risks of complication, delay, and loss, and the state would find herself, in thousands of instances, in a relation of co-tenancy with private persons in the ownership of land, not only as the results of such sales, but also of forfeiture for nonentry. It would not only bring upon the state embarrassment in the enforcement of her constitutional rights and powers, but upon the people interminable confusion of land titles, contrary to the spirit of the Constitution, which, by its system of forfeiture and transfer, endeavors to prevent and eradicate uncertainty of such titles.

It may well be assumed that taxation of land by undivided interests would be fraught with inconvenience and injury to the landowner as well as to the public, though the nature and extent thereof is not so apparent. First. The law prescribes a different mode, and so impliedly forbids it, all of which is presumed to rest upon sound reason, and, as the state's ability to sustain such burdens in the forms of expense and delay as are necessary to just, equitable, and fair dealing with the taxpayer is ample, the Legislature may be deemed to have considered his best interests, as well as those of the public, in adopting the scheme of assessment and collection of taxes. Secondly. The assessment of the entire tract or lot against some person or persons indicated by statute is almost universal among the states of this country. In some states the assessment is made against the owner or occupant, in others against the owner, and in others against the person or persons having the freehold in possession. In very few instances have assessments been prescribed otherwise than by tracts and lots. Blackwell, Tax Titles, § 258 et seq.; Black, Tax Titles, §§ 104, 105; Cooley, Tax. 730-733. "In a majority of the states the rule prescribed by the statutes is that lands and other real estate shall be assessed as such, irrespective of the separate estates that individuals may have in them." Cooley, Tax. 739.

However, inasmuch as every foot and particle of any given tract of land is made liable, by the Constitution and statutes, for all the taxes charged and chargeable thereon, and it is beyond the power of the assessor, collector, or owner to evade the claim and remedies of the state by the assessment or collection of only part of such taxes, it is not difficult to perceive that the owner of an undivided interest in it is subjected to great peril by the attempt to assess it by undivided interests. In such case, if one undivided interest should become delinquent, it would be the duty of the auditor to certify either the entire tract for sale or none of it; and, if any undivided interest should be omitted for a period of five successive years, the title to the entire tract would become forfeited and vest in the state. Forfeiture and sale can be prevented only by payment of all the taxes. Smith, Trustee, v. Tharp et al., 17 W. Va. 221; Frum v. Fox, 58 W. Va. 334, 338, 52 S. E. 178. This must be so, else the state may be deprived of part of her security by the mere ignorance, negligence, or malfeasances of her officers; for, in so dividing up an assessable subject, they release liens and split up remedies into mere shreds without warrant of law, and, if it be so, a landowner will ordinarily have great difficulty in determining when and how the taxes on his land have been discharged. Instead of one assessment and payment to look after, he may have 12 or 50. Again, he is presumed to know the law, and to have assumed, in this case, either that the taxes on his interest were included in some other legal assessment, or that it had not been charged at all; for, this assessment being invalid, he is presumed to have had knowledge of its invalidity and to have refrained from paying under the assessment for that reason. The departure from the requirement of the statute is therefore plainly manifest, and, as it appears in the record of the proceedings, it must be assumed that, but for it, the interest sold would have been redeemed. McCallister v. Cottrelle, 24 W. Va. 173; Williamson v. Russell, 18 W. Va. 612; Simpson v. Edmiston, 23 W. Va. 675; McClain v. Batton, 50 W. Va. 121, 40 S. E. 509.

A great many defects and irregularities in tax sales and tax deeds are cured by section 25 of chapter 31 of the Code of 1899 [Code 1906, § 884], but this seems clearly not to be one of them. It is not an irregularity, error, or mistake in the delinquent list, the return thereof, the affidavit thereto, the recordation of such list or affidavit, the manner of laying off any real estate sold, the plat, the description, or report. It is not an instance of the failure of any officer to do or perform any act or duty required to be done or performed by him after sale is made, or of his illegal or defective performance, or attempt at performance, of any such act or duty. Nor is it within any of the other defects or irregularities specifically cured by said section.

Affirmance of the decree would be the inevitable result of these conclusions, but for a fatal defect in the bill, which can be cured by amendment. It does not tender the tax sale purchase money and taxes subsequently paid in obedience to the statutory requirement in such case, nor does it aver the plaintiff's readiness and willingness to reimburse the purchaser, nor does the decree in any way secure to the defendant his right of reimbursement. For this reason the decree will have to be reversed and the cause remanded with leave to the plaintiff to amend his bill in this respect. See McClain v. Batton, 50 W. Va. 121, 40 S. E. 509; Mosser v. Moore, 56 W. Va. 478, 49 S. E. 537. The court below, deeming the assessment, sale, and deed fraudulent and void, held reimbursement not necessary. We do not concur in this view. It was an irregular and defective assessment and sale, not cured by the statute.

Agreeably to the conclusions above stated, the decree will be reversed, the demurrer sustained and the cause remanded, with leave to the plaintiff to amend his bill.

(78 S. C. 260)

EHRLICH v. JENNINGS, Treasurer.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Sept. 27, 1907.)

1. BILLS AND NOTES—BONA FIDE PURCHASERS.

The holder of a negotiable instrument for value before maturity and without notice has a good title as against the true owner, though the same may have been stolen.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 7, Bills and Notes, § 955.]

2. STATES—BONDS—NEGOTIABILITY.

A coupon bond of a state is a negotiable instrument, and the state issuing the same incurs the same responsibilities as an individual.

3. SAME.

Laws 1892, pp. 24, 25, §§ 1, 2, provide for the redemption of certain bonds and stocks of the state by the issuance of other bonds and stocks to be exchanged therefor. Section 3, p. 26, requires all bonds and stocks surrendered to be immediately canceled. A coupon bond, having been exchanged for a certificate of stock under sections 1 and 2, but not canceled as required by section 3, was thereafter stolen and again restored to circulation. Held, that a holder for value before maturity and without notice was entitled to again exchange the same for a certificate of stock.

4. SAME.

Const. art. 10, § 11, forbidding the General Assembly from creating any further debt or obligation without first submitting the question to the electors, does not bar a bona fide holder of a coupon bond of the state from the right to exchange the same for a certificate of stock under the express provisions of Laws 1892, pp. 24, 25, §§ 1, 2, though such bond has theretofore been redeemed by exchange of a certificate of stock, but again restored to circulation by theft.

5. MANDAMUS—TO STATE TREASURER—REDEMPTION OF BONDS.

Mandamus will lie to compel the State Treasurer to exchange a certificate of stock for a coupon bond, as authorized by the express provisions of Laws 1892, pp. 24, 25, §§ 1, 2, under the rule that mandamus lies to compel a public officer to perform a ministerial duty imposed by law to the performance of which relator has a right and to enforce which he has no other adequate remedy.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 33, Mandamus, § 220.]

6. STATES—ACTIONS AGAINST STATE—STATE OFFICER AS DEFENDANT.

Mandamus to compel the State Treasurer to exchange a certificate of stock for a coupon bond, as authorized by the express provisions of Laws 1892, pp. 24, 25, §§ 1, 2, is in no sense a suit against the state without its consent.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, States, § 181.]

Pope, O. J., Gary, A. J., and Gary, Klugh, Prince, and Hydrick, Circuit Judges, dissenting.

En banc. Mandamus by Edward Ehrlich against R. H. Jennings, as State Treasurer, to compel him to issue a certificate of stock in exchange for a coupon bond, under Laws 1892, p. 24. Writ granted.

W. T. Aycock, for Relator. Attorney General J. Fraser Lyon, for State Treasurer.

JONES, J. The relator as holder of a coupon bond No. 2525, for $1,000, payable to bearer, issued by the state in June, 1893, presented the same to the State Treasurer, and demanded a certificate of stock in exchange therefor under the act of 1892 (Laws 1892, p. 24), entitled "An act to provide for the redemption of that part of the state debt known as the Brown consul bonds and stocks by issuing other bonds and stocks." The State Treasurer refused to make the exchange, on the ground that said bond had been previously redeemed, having been surrendered to the State Treasurer by a holder in exchange for stock, and thereafter had been stolen from the treasury vault by a clerk in the office. Mandamus is now sought to compel the State Treasurer to issue stock in exchange for said bonds.

No marks to indicate cancellation were ever placed upon said bond, although the statute expressly declared that such surrendered bond "shall immediately upon such surrender be canceled and filed by the State Treasurer with the permanent records of his office." It is admitted that relator is a bona fide holder for value before maturity and without notice. The general rule of law is that a thief of personal property cannot convey to a purchaser, however innocent, any title to the stolen property as against the real owner; but from the highest considerations of public policy the law excepts from the rule negotiable instruments acquired in good faith before maturity and without notice, and makes the title of such holder good against the world. Bond Debt Cases, 12 S. C. 200; Spooner v. Holmes, 102 Mass. 503, 3 Am. Rep. 491; Evertson v. Nat. Bank of Newport, 68 N. Y. 14, 23 Am. Rep. 9; Murray v. Lardner, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 110, 17 L. Ed. 857; Cooke v. United States, 91 U. S. 389, 23 L. Ed. 237. The Bond Debt Cases, 12 S. C. 201, show that a coupon bond of the state, valid in its inception, is a negotiable security, and the state issuing such negotiable paper incurs the same responsibilities which attach to individuals or corporations in like cases. There is no suggestion that the bond in question was not valid when originally put in circulation, and, it being admitted that relator is a bona fide holder thereof at this time, his title can in no wise be affected by the surrender of the bond to the Treasurer by some antecedent holder and the subsequent theft, by means of which it was again put in circulation. The method which the state had adopted to take such bond out of circulation—cancellation—was not complied with by those intrusted by the state with that duty. The direction to cancel surrendered bonds was designed to prevent the very possibility which has happened, and the failure of the state officers to comply cannot be treated as a circumstance of no consequence, for the absence of marks of cancellation make it possible for the thief to put the bond in circulation.

The respondent relies upon the case of Branch v. Commissioners of the Sinking Fund, 80 Va. 427, 56 Am. Rep. 596. The syllabus of that case is as follows: "Coupon bonds issued by the state of Virginia had been redeemed, and others had been issued in their stead. The bonds so redeemed were stolen from the state, and came into possession of a bona fide holder for value, who presented them to be refunded in other state bonds. Held, that mandamus would not lie to compel the funding." This result is based upon three reasons: (1) The bonds could not be funded because they were not legal outstanding obligations of the state, having been redeemed and extinguished. (2) That, if the bonds were legal obligations of the state to be paid at maturity, the contract of the state was to pay money, not to give other bonds for them. (3) That the bondholders were under the circumstances guilty of negligence in failing to inform themselves, as they could and ought to have done by a breath, as to the genuineness of the bonds. It will be observed that the third reason given is contradictory of the view that the holder was a bona fide holder for value before maturity without notice, as that language is understood in this state and now generally in this country and England. At one time in England, under the case of Gill v. Cubitt, 3 Barn. & C. 466, it was held that the holder, to have good title, must not have taken the negotiable paper under circumstances which ought to have excited the suspicion of a prudent man, and this view has received some support in this country, but in Goodman v. Harvey, 4 Ad. & E. 870, the doctrine of Gill v. Cubitt was completely discarded, and the rule declared that negligence which is not so great as to warrant an inference of fraud or bad faith will not affect the title of the holder. Such is now generally the rule in this country. Goodman v. Simonds, 20 How. (U. S.) 343, 15 L. Ed. 984; Murray v. Lardner, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 110, 17 L. Ed. 857; Witte v. Williams, 8 S. C. 290, 28 Am. Rep. 294. We refer to this to show that, in so far as the Virginia case rests upon the negligence of the holder as affecting his title, it cannot receive any sanction in this state, for, if the holder was merely negligent, his title should have been held unaffected; whereas, if his negligence was so gross as to warrant an imputation of bad faith, that made a case wholly different from the case at bar, where there is not a suspicion of bad faith. With respect to the second reason given in the Virginia case, if it be conceded that the bond in question is a valid obligation of the state in the hands of a bona fide holder, it would seem clear that such bona fide holder is clothed by law with every right given to holders of the bonds by the statutes which authorized their issuance, exchange, or redemption. The main reason upon which the doctrine of the Virginia case rests is that which treats the bonds when once surrendered to the Treasurer in exchange for other bonds as dead matter, whose vitality could never be restored without voluntary redelivery by the state, and, there being no such redelivery, the bonds should be held to be in the category of commercial paper stolen from the maker before it had legal inception. Although there is conflict, much authority exists for the view that an innocent holder for value of paper commercial and negotiable in form, but which had never been completed by delivery, cannot acquire rights thereto against the alleged maker. Burson v. Huntington, 21 Mich. 415, 4 Am. Rep. 497; Cline v. Guthrie, 42 Ind. 227, 13 Am. Rep. 357; Salley v. Terrill, 95

Me. 553, 50 Atl. 896, 55 L. R. A. 730, 85 Am. St. Rep. 433.

This rule, however, cannot properly apply in a case where the negotiable paper has once become operative by a valid delivery. The real point of inquiry is, admitting a valid and strictly negotiable paper in the hands of a bona fide holder before maturity: How far can intervening circumstances affect the title of the holder? The general rule is that payment before maturity is no defense against a subsequent bona fide holder for value before maturity. 3 Randolph, Com. Paper, § 1470; 2 Dan. Neg. Inst. § 1233; Haug v. Riley, 101 Ga. 372, 29 S. E. 44, 40 L. R. A. 249; Rockville Nat. Bank v. Citizens' Gaslight Co., 72 Conn. 581, 45 Atl. 361. It is the duty of the maker paying commercial paper before maturity to take reasonable precaution to prevent its restoration to circulation by accident or fraud. In Ingham v. Primrose, 7 C. B. N. S. 82, the acceptor of a bill after paying it, and intending to cancel it, tore it in halves and threw it into the street, but the drawer, having picked up the pieces and pasted them together, put the bill again into circulation. The acceptor was compelled to pay a second time. In California v. Wells Fargo & Co., 15 Cal. 336, certain warrants issued by the state of California were paid and deposited in the office of the Treasurer, were afterwards stolen from the office and passed into the hands of a bona fide holder, who presented them to the Treasurer to be exchanged for bonds under a statute of that state. The Treasurer, not aware of the theft, exchanged bonds for warrants. On discovering the theft afterwards, he brought suit to recover the bonds, but the court held that the bonds were valid debts of the state in hands of the innocent holder. In Rockville Nat. Bank v. Citizens' Gaslight Co., 72 Conn. 576, 45 Atl. 361, coupon bonds of the defendant had been paid before maturity and surrendered, but not marked "Canceled," and left in the hands of the defendant's treasurer, who, with no power to reissue, fraudulently pledged same with plaintiff bank, which took them before maturity, bona fide, and without notice. The court held that plaintiff was entitled to recover upon the bonds. The case of District of Columbia v. Cornell, 130 U. S. 655, 9 Sup. Ct. 694, 32 L. Ed. 1041, is distinguishable from this case in at least two important particulars: (1) The certificates involved in that case were held not to be strictly commercial paper. (2) When paid, they were, in fact, marked "Canceled," although the marks of cancellation were removed by the thief, a clerk in the office.

The principle that a bona fide holder cannot acquire title where there is absolute want of power in the state or its officers to issue negotiable paper has no application in this case; the bond in question having been originally issued by due authority. The holder is not claiming by virtue of any reissue of the bond after its redemption, but by virtue of the original issue and relation to it as a bona fide holder unaffected by intervening facts. The claim is not that the Treasurer, or any one in his office, had power to reissue the bond, but that he was charged by the state with the duty to keep it out of circulation by cancellation, and that his failure to do so was the state's failure. It is true the doctrine of estoppel in pais does not apply to a sovereign state, and that the state can only act under its Constitution and through its legislative enactments, and that, therefore, contracts cannot be created against the state except under such sanctions. Bank v. State, 60 S. C. 475, 38 S. E. 629. But here we have a bond of the state issued by due authority of the Legislature, which the representative of the state failed to cancel as directed by statute, and which is now under the law merchant the property of the relator. As stated by Chief Justice Waite in Cooke v. United States, 91 U. S. 589, 23 L. Ed. 243: "A government may suffer loss through the negligence of its officers. If it comes down from its position of sovereignty, and enters the domain of commerce, it submits itself to the same laws that govern individuals there. Thus, if it becomes the holder of a bill of exchange, it must use the same diligence to charge the drawers and indorsers that is required by individuals; and, if it fails in this, its claim upon the parties is lost. U. S. v. Barker, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 559, 6 L. Ed. 728. Generally in respect to all the commercial business of the government, if an officer specially charged with the performance of any duty authorized to represent the government in that behalf neglects that duty, and loss ensues, the government must bear the consequences of his neglect." It may be further said that the right of a bona fide holder of commercial paper under circumstances like these does not wholly rest upon the law of estoppel, but is grounded upon high public policy which is subserved by making him secure in his title.

It is urged in behalf of the respondent that the recognition of the bond in question as a valid debt of the state, when it has already been redeemed by the issue of stock in exchange would result in increasing the debt of the state, in violation of Const. § 11, art. 10, which forbids the General Assembly from creating any further debt or obligation without first submitting the question to the qualified electors, etc. As declared in Whaley v. Galliard, 21 S. C. 581, with reference to a similar provision in the Constitution of 1868, the object of the provision was to place restrictions upon the power of the Legislature to contract debts. It has no application to a case like this. We are not concerned now with the validity of the stock issued in exchange for the bond, but the principle announced touching the rights of a bona fide holder would surely protect the holder of such stock in his title. The bond in question in the hands of the relator is no new debt attempted to be created by the unauthorized act of some officer, or even by the judgment of a court, but represents the old debt provided for in the statute authorizing the issue of that series of bonds.

Having thus established the status of relator's title to the bond in question, we proceed to consider whether mandamus should issue to compel the exchange demanded. Mandamus lies to compel a public officer to perform a plain ministerial duty imposed by law, involving no discretionary power to the performance of which the relator has a right, and to enforce which he has no other adequate and specific legal remedy. Every condition of this law governing mandamus is met in this case. There is no other adequate legal remedy. We have shown the relator's title to the bond in question to be impregnable. As owner of the bond, he is unquestionably entitled to every right conferred upon the holder by the statute authorizing its issuance, exchange, or redemption. He has presented to the proper public officer the actual bond for exchange, and his demand has been refused. The officer has no discretion to refuse such a demand by a bona fide holder, and the statute imposes upon him the plain ministerial duty to make the exchange upon demand and surrender of the bond. In Lord v. Bates, 48 S. C. 95, 26 S. E. 213, the court refused mandamus because the statute required the funding of certain bonds upon their actual surrender, a condition which the holder had not met. In this case the bond is actually tendered; hence there is nothing in the case of Lord v. Bates antagonistic to the issuance of the writ in this case.

The Attorney General, however, waives all questions as to the remedy. The right of a bona fide holder of negotiable paper is not merely equitable. It is a legal right under the law merchant, and mandamus should not be denied upon the ground that relator's right is a mere equity. This is in no sense a suit against the state without its consent; for, whenever mandamus lies, it compels the performance of official duty imposed by the state.

The writ should be issued as prayed.

WOODS, J., and WATTS, GAGE, DANTZLER, MEMMINGER, and WILSON, Circuit Judges, concur with JONES, J.

GARY, A. J. (dissenting). This is an application to the court, in the exercise of its original jurisdiction, for a writ of mandamus, requiring the State Treasurer to issue a certificate of stock in exchange for a bond, which was heretofore surrendered to the Treasurer, and a certificate of stock issued in exchange for it, under the provisions of the act of 1892 (Laws 1892, p. 24) entitled "An act to provide for the redemption of that part of the state debt, known as the Brown consul bonds and stocks, by issue of other bonds and stocks," which, among others, contains the following provisions:

"Section 1. That the State Treasurer shall cause to be prepared, a sufficiency of blanks of coupon bonds and certificates of stock of uniform design and appearance, to be colored brown, as will provide for a total issue of an amount (face value) in the aggregate of such bonds and certificates of stock, not to exceed the aggregate amount of bonds and stocks that have been or may be issued, under an act entitled 'An act to reduce the volume of the public debt and provide for the payment of the same,' approved December, A. D. 1873, and acts amendatory thereto. * * *

"Sec. 2. That the said coupon bonds shall be exchangeable for certificates of stock, and said certificates of stock shall be exchangeable for coupon bonds.

"Sec. 3. That all bonds and certificates of stock surrendered, as hereafter provided for, shall immediately upon such surrender be canceled, and filed by the State Treasurer with the permanent records of his office, and a correct registry shall be kept by the State Treasurer, of all exchanges made under the provisions of this act, so as to exhibit in a separate account and convenient form, the names of the holders thereof, and the number and amounts of all such bonds and stocks, received into the Treasurer's office, together with the numbers and denominations of all bonds and stocks, issued in exchange therefor, or sold by him under the provisions of this act. And the Secretary of State is hereby required to keep at all times a correct registry of all the bonds sealed by him under the provisions of this act. And the Governor is in like manner hereby required to keep a similar registry of all bonds signed by him, each registry to be accessible to public inspection at all times."

The said bond was not canceled, but was stolen and placed in circulation, and came into the hands of the petitioner, who alleges that he is a bona fide holder thereof. There is not even the slightest suspicion of wrong, on the part of the petitioner, attaching to his possession of the bond.

The first question that will be considered is whether mandamus is the appropriate proceeding. There is no difference in principle between this case and that of Lord v. Bates, 48 S. C. 95, 26 S. E. 213, which was an action instituted, in the original jurisdiction of this court, for a writ of mandamus requiring the State Treasurer to fund certain bonds which were lost. The application was refused on the ground that the duty of the Treasurer was not plainly defined, peremptory and ministerial. In that case the court quoted with approval the following language from the case of United States ex rel. International Cont. Co. v. Lamont, 155 U. S. 303, 15 Sup. Ct. 97, 39 L. Ed. 160. "It is elementary law that mandamus will only lie to enforce a ministerial duty as contradistinguished from a duty which is only discretionary. * * * Moreover, the obligation must be both peremptory and plainly defined. The law must not only authorize the act (Commonwealth v. Boutwell, 18 Wall. [U. S.] 523, 20 L. Ed. 631), but it must require the act to be done. A mandamus will not lie against the Secretary of the Treasury, unless the laws require him to do what he is asked in the petition to be made to do. Reeside v. Walker, 11 How. (U. S.) 272, 13 L. Ed. 693. See, also, Cox, Secretary, v. McGarrahan, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 298, 19 L. Ed. 579. And the duty must be clear and indisputable. Knox County Commissioners v. Aspinwall, 24 How. (U. S.) 376, 16 L. Ed. 735." To the same effect is the case of United States v. Windom, 137 U. S. 636, 11 Sup. Ct. 197, 34 L. Ed. 811, in which the court says: "The principle upon which persons holding public office may be compelled, by a writ of mandamus, to perform duties imposed by law, have been distinctly defined. * * * That principle is that the writ of mandamus may issue where the duty which the court is asked to enforce is plainly ministerial, and the right of the party applying for it is clear, and he is without any other adequate remedy; and it cannot issue in a case where its effect is to direct or control the head of an executive department, in the discharge of an executive duty, involving the exercise of judgment or discretion. The doctrine to be gathered from these cases, as well as those in which mandamus was granted, as those in which it was refused, especially from the two leading cases (Kendall v. U. S., 12 Pet. [U. S.] 524, 9 L. Ed. 1181, and Decatur v. Paulding, 14 Pet. [U. S.] 497, 10 L. Ed. 559), is thus enunciated in U. S. v. Black, 128 U. S. 40, 9 Sup. Ct. 12, 32 L. Ed. 354, by Mr. Justice Bradley, who delivered the opinion of the court: "The court will not interfere by mandamus with the executive officers of the government, in the exercise of their ordinary official duties, even where those duties require an interpretation of the law, the court having no appellate power for that purpose; but, when they refuse to act in a case at all, or when, by special statute, or otherwise, a mere ministerial duty is imposed upon them—that is, a service which they are bound to perform without further question—then, if they refuse, a mandamus may be issued to compel them." It is proper here to remark, as applicable to the determination of this case, that, in the extreme caution with which this remedy is applied by the courts, there are cases when the writ will not be issued to compel the performance of even a purely ministerial act. In a case, for instance, where the intention of the officer, though acting within the scope of his duty, had been frustrated by a clerical mistake (U. S. v. Schurz, 102 U. S. 378, 394, 395, 26 L. Ed. 167, 171), or where the case is one of doubtful right (Insurance Co. v. Wilson, 8 Pet. [U. S.] 291, 302, 8 L. Ed. 949), or in a case where, the relator having another adequate remedy, the granting of the writ may in this summary proceeding affect the rights of persons who are not parties thereto." See, also, Conant v. Fuller, 18 S. C. 246; the concurring opinion of Mr. Chief Justice McIver in Lord v. Bates, 48 S. C. 95, 23 S. E. 213; State v. Morria, 67 S. C. 153, 45 S. E. 178; Pugh v. Moore, 44 La. Ann. 209, 10 South. 710; Herwig v. Richardson, 44 La. Ann. 703, 11 South. 135; 19 Enc. of Law, 732-737, 733.

When the bond was surrendered and a certificate of stock issued in exchange, it lost its legal effect as a subsisting obligation of the state. Cancellation was not a condition precedent upon which the validity of the certificate of stock, which was issued in exchange therefor, depended; and such requirement was intended simply to prevent fraud after the transaction between the holder of the bond and the state had terminated by the exchange. The provision as to cancellation stood upon the same footing as that in regard to the registry of the bonds, as to which the court, in the Bond Debt Cases, 12 S. C. 200, used this language: "It is very manifest that this provision in regard to the registry of the bonds is a mere direction to the Treasurer, and was not designed to be a condition precedent, the performance of which should be necessary to the validity of the bonds. It does not provide that before any bond is issued it shall be registered by the Treasurer, but it is clear that the registration is to follow, not precede, the issue of the bonds, and could not therefore affect their validity. * * * The Constitution was never designed to afford the means of setting a trap for the holders of the bonds of the state by making their rights dependent upon the performance or nonperformance of duty by one of the officers of the state, after the bonds had been issued." The rights of the petitioner are equitable, and mandamus is not the proper remedy for the assertion of a mere equity. "The remedy by mandamus rests upon the legal rights of the relator, on the one hand, and the obligations and duties of the respondent on the other, and cannot be predicated solely upon the equitable rights and obligations existing between the parties." 19 Enc. of Law, 731, 732.

The question whether the petitioner is a bona fide holder of the bond in question is not ministerial, but strictly judicial in its nature, and the action of the Treasurer in refusing to exchange the bond for a certificate of stock is not subject to control or review by this court. The Attorney General, however, stated upon the hearing of this case that he did not urge the objection that mandamus was not the proper remedy; and did not contend that the petitioner had actual notice of any facts which would tend to show that he was not a bona fide holder of the bond. Conceding that he had neither actual nor constructive notice of such facts as tended to show that he was not a bona fide holder of the bond, it does not by any means follow necessarily that the writ should be granted requiring the Treasurer to make a second issue of a certificate in exchange for said bond. The right of the Treasurer to issue a second certificate of stock involves a question of power, and must be determined by the act of 1892 hereinbefore mentioned, under which petitioner contends he is entitled to relief. The sections of that act hereinbefore set out, and the absence of words conferring power upon the Treasurer to make a second issue of a certificate, clearly show that the Legislature had in contemplation but a single issue in exchange for a bond, and that the Treasurer is not authorized to make a second issue. In the Bond Debt Cases, 12 S. C. 200, the principle was announced that, after there had been one issue of bonds under the act therein mentioned, there was no power to make a second issue thereunder. In that case the court used this language: "These bonds, together with their coupons, must therefore, upon the foregoing principles, be regarded as valid debts in the hands of bona fide holders, if the acts so referred to be constitutional, and do, in fact, authorize their issue, even though it may now appear that all the conditions prescribed may not have been complied with, and even though there may have been the grossest frauds perpetrated by the officers and agents of the state in issuing them and putting them into circulation. It is not and cannot be denied that the acts so referred to do, in fact, purport to authorize the issue of bonds, except in the case of the second issue of bonds for the payment of the interest upon the public debt, for which there does not seem to have been the shadow of authority of any kind, and which, therefore, are absolutely void, no matter in whose hands they may be; for, if the act be construed as giving authority for a second issue, there is no conceivable reason why a third or fourth or an indefinite number of issues could not have been made upon the same construction; and certainly a construction leading to such a result cannot be a correct one." That case clearly shows that bonds issued without authority of law are void, even in the hands of a bona fide holder. To the same effect is the case of Branch v. Com. of Sinking Fund, 5 Hansbrough (Va.) 427, 36 Am. Rep. 596, in which there was an application for a writ of mandamus to compel the commissioners of the sinking fund to fund certain bonds of the state of Virginia, which had been redeemed, but were afterwards stolen from the treasury of the state, and purchased bona fide for value, and without notice on the part of the petitioner that they had been stolen. In refusing the writ of mandamus the court used this language: "We are of opinion that after these bonds with their appurtenances had been redeemed by the state, and taken into her possession and custody, they ceased to be her obligations; and could not again become such unless she voluntarily redelivered or reissued them. They had run their career, and fulfilled their mission, and had returned to the dusty depository of dead matter in the treasury, and they had been submitted by outstanding equivalents which represent the legal and moral obligations of the state, and they were and are as though they never had been." As the act of 1892 does not authorize the second issue of a certificate, the stock which the petitioner prays the Treasurer may be required to issue would be void, even in the hands of a bona fide holder, by reason of a lack of authority to perform such act.

Lastly, if the duty enjoined upon the Treasurer to issue a second certificate is not ministerial, this court (however willing it might be to grant the petitioner relief) has not the power in mandamus proceedings to do so; for, when it appears that rights of the state, other than those incidental to mandamus proceedings, are involved, the action becomes in effect a suit against the state, and its rights cannot be adjudicated unless it is made a party, which cannot be done except by an act of the Legislature. "When no provision has been made by law for the auditing and payments of claims against the state or when the claim has not been admitted or is disputed, mandamus will not lie, because it would be equivalent to an action against the state, and a state cannot be sued without its consent." 19 Enc. of Law, 804, 805. "That a state cannot be sued in any of its courts, without its express consent, which can only be given by the legislative authority, is a proposition so universally conceded as to render any argument or authority to support it wholly unnecessary. If, however, authority should be asked for, it will be found in almost every case which will be hereinafter cited, where it will be found that the proposition has either been distinctly decided or expressly recognized; and we are not aware of any authority to the contrary." Lowry v. Thompson, 25 S. C. 416, 1 S. E. 141. See, also, Water Power Co. v. Electric Co., 43 S. C. 154, 20 S. E. 1002, in which the language from Lowry v. Thompson, supra, is quoted with approval.

For these reasons, I dissent.

POPE, C. J., and GARY, KLUGH, PRINCE, and HYDRICK, Circuit Judges, concur in this dissent.

(78 S. C. 36)

CHARLES v. ATLANTIC COAST LINE R. CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Aug. 31, 1907.)

1. CARRIERS—CONNECTING CARRIERS—LOSS OF SHIPMENT—EVIDENCE.

For the purpose of showing that four bags out of a shipment of rice were lost while in the possession of the terminal carrier, a freight bill for transporting 30 packages of rice presented by such carrier to, and paid by the consignee, and indorsed, "4 sacks short," is relevant.

2. SAME.

A prima facie showing of loss while in the hands of the terminal carrier is made out by testimony of the consignee that he ordered 30 bags of rice of W., and that such carrier presented to him, and he paid, a freight bill for carrying 30 packages of rice consigned by one having the same initials as W., and that it was indorsed, "4 sacks short."

3. APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR.

There being sufficient undisputed evidence to support the judgment of a magistrate, error in admitting other evidence will be considered harmless.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 4161.]

4. EVIDENCE—BEST AND SECONDARY—WRITINGS COLLATERAL TO ISSUES.

Plaintiff, in an action by the consignee against a carrier for loss of 4 bags out of a shipment of 30 bags of rice, may testify that he had bought 30 bags of rice of W., without producing the written order and acceptance admitted to be in existence, defendant's liability being dependent not on such contract, but on its possession for transportation of goods consigned to plaintiff, and such contract being merely a collateral matter, as to which parol testimony is admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 20, Evidence, § 1862.]

5. COMMERCE—INTERSTATE COMMERCE—REGULATION.

Act 1903 (24 St. at Large, p. 81), providing a penalty of $50 to be paid the consignee by a carrier doing business in the state, for failure to adjust and pay within a certain time a claim for loss of freight while in its possession, is not unconstitutional as an interference with interstate commerce, even in case of an interstate shipment.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 10, Commerce, §§ 77-86.]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Florence County; Geo. W. Gage, Judge.

Action by R. Keith Charles against the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Willcox & Willcox, for appellant. Galletly & Ragsdale, for respondent.

JONES, J. This action was brought in a magistrate court to recover the value of four sacks of rice alleged to have been shipped from New Orleans, La., by Martin J. Wynne to the plaintiff at Timmons ville, S. C., and to have been lost while in the possession of the defendant carrier, and also to recover $50 penalty for failure to adjust and pay the claim within 90 days, as prescribed by the act of February 23, 1903. The magistrate gave judgment against defendant for the amount claimed, $68.48, which judgment on appeal was affirmed by the circuit court.

We notice first appellant's seventh and eighth exception, alleging error in finding that the rice sued for was lost while in the possession of the defendant, there being no testimony whatever tending to show such fact. The circuit court found that "the defendant presented to and collected from the plaintiff a freight bill for 30 sacks of rice, and marked on the bill, '4 sacks short,'

* * * that it was warrantable to conclude that the four sacks of rice did come into the possession of the defendant company, for it collected the freight on the four sacks, and declared that the rice was missing. Enough was proven to cast on the defendant company the burden of proving that, when the shipment reached its line, four sacks were then missing. The defendant alone knew the fact, and it did not prove it." The plaintiff was the only witness examined in the case and his testimony warranted the conclusion of the circuit court, if his testimony on this point was admissible. The fifth exception charges that it was error to admit in evidence the freight bill, Exhibit F, on the ground of irrelevancy. It appears from the exhibit that defendant collected from plaintiff $13.50 freight for transporting "30 pkts. rice," and that the consignor was "M. J. W.," and that four sacks were short. Plaintiff testified that in August, 1905, he ordered Martin J. Wynne of New Orleans to ship 30 bags of rice, and paid him for the same, and that he paid the freight for 30 bags, and only received 26. There was no evidence of any other order by plaintiff for rice or shipment of rice to plaintiff during the period involved in the controversy. The freight bill and its payment with this statement indorsed thereon was clearly relevant. It tended to show a single shipment of 30 bags of rice to plaintiff by one whose initials were the same as those of the alleged shipper, and that charge was made by defendant for transporting that number of bags, coupled with an admission that four were missing. This was at least sufficient to make out a prima facie case of loss while in the possession of defendant, and to cast upon defendant the burden of showing that the loss did not occur on its line. Willett v. Railway, 66 S. C. 478, 45 S. E. 93; Walker v. Railway, 76 S. C. 309, 56 S. E. 952.

The foregoing conclusion renders it immaterial to consider the third and fourth exceptions to the admission of testimony by the magistrate, for it may be conceded that it was error to admit in evidence a bill of lading purporting to be issued by the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company for 30 sacks of rice consigned by Martin J. Wynne to plaintiff, without some proof that it was in fact issued to the consignor by an authorized agent, and that it was also error to allow in evidence a bill for 30 packages of rice rendered to plaintiff by Martin J. Wynne, dated August 23, 1905, containing the words, "shipped via L. & N. Rd.," being the mere statement of Martin J. Wynne not examined in this case, still the error was harmless, as this testimony may be stricken from the record, and leave undisputed testimony sufficient to sustain a judgment for the loss of the goods while in defendant's possession. Section 368 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1902 requires that on appeals from magistrate's court judgment should be rendered according to the justice of the case, without regard to technical errors and defects, which do not affect the merits.

The first and second exceptions allege error in permitting plaintiff to testify that he had purchased 30 bags of rice from Martin J. Wynne without producing the written order and acceptance therefor admitted to be in existence. This not being a suit between plaintiff and Martin J. Wynne touching the purchase of the rice; and, defendant's liability being dependent not upon such contract of purchase, but upon its possession for transportation of goods consigned to plaintiff, the contract in question involved merely a collateral matter, as to which parol testimony was admissible. Elrod v. Cochran, 59 S. C. 470, 88 S. E. 122.

The ninth exception assigns error in not reversing the judgment of the magistrate for the statutory penalty, after having held that the claim in question arose out of an interstate shipment, and that the penalty statute was invalid as to interstate shipments. What the circuit court really held was that the terms of the proviso of the act of 1903 were invalid in so far as they refer to commerce between the states, under the authority of Central of Georgia R. R. v. Murphy, 196 U. S. 194, 25 Sup. Ct. 218, 49 L. Ed. 444, but that defendant could not avail itself of the invalidity of this proviso, as the evidence showed that defendant was in possession of the goods lost; in other words, that the penalty statute of 1903 does not violate the interstate commerce law in so far as it applies to common carriers in this state in whose possession the goods are lost or damaged. The Georgia statute, which was condemned in the Murphy Case as an unlawful interference with interstate commerce, imposed upon the initial or connecting carrier, as a condition of availing itself of a valid contract of exemption from liability beyond its own line, the duty of tracing the freight and informing the shipper in writing when, where, and how, and by what carrier the freight was lost, damaged, or destroyed, and of giving the names of the parties and their official position, if any, by whom the truth of the facts set out in the information can be established. The distinction between the Georgia statute and our statute (Civ. Code 1902, § 1710) is pointed out in Skipper v. Seaboard Air Line, 75 S. C. 276, 55 S. E. 454, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 388, which sustained section 1710 as not violative of interstate commerce. We are, however, not now to consider the validity of section 1710, but we are to consider the validity of the act of 1903 (24 St. at Large, p. 81) as applied to interstate shipments. The statute, by its title, is "An act to regulate the manner in which a common carrier doing business in this state shall adjust freight charges and claims for loss of or damage to freight." Section 2 provides "that every claim for loss of or damage to freight while in the possession of such common carrier shall be adjusted and paid within forty days, in case of shipments wholly within this state, and within ninety days, in case of shipments without this state, after the filing of such claim with the agent of such carrier at the point of destination of such shipment: provided, that no such claim shall be filed until the arrival of the shipment or of some part thereof at the point of destination, or until after the lapse of a reasonable time for the arrival thereof. In every case such common carrier shall be liable for the amount of such loss or damage, together with interest thereon from the date of the filing of the claim therefor until the payment thereof. Failure to adjust and pay such claim within the periods respectively herein prescribed shall subject each common carrier so failing to a penalty of fifty dollars for each and every such failure, to be recovered by any consignee or consignees aggrieved in any court of competent jurisdiction: provided, that unless such consignee or consignees recover in such action the full amount claimed, no penalty shall be recovered, but only the actual amount of the loss or damage, with interest as aforesaid: provided, further, that no common carrier shall be liable under this act for property which never came into its possession, if it complies with the provisions of section 1710, vol. 1, of the Code of Laws of South Carolina, 1902." The last proviso, as the circuit court correctly held, has no application to carriers into whose possession the goods have come. Construing the statute in Seegers v. Railway, 73 S. C. 71, 52 S. E. 797, the court said: "The duty to make prompt settlement for loss or damage to goods is but an incident of the duty to transport and deliver safely and with reasonable diligence. The statute in question was designed to effectuate an important public purpose, viz., to compel the common carrier to perform with reasonable diligence the duty which peculiarly appertains to his business as a carrier of freight. The penalty is but a means to that end."

While it is not easy to define the exact limits of the operation of state laws as affecting interstate commerce, we have no hesitation in saying that the statute in question, as it affects carriers doing business in this state who fail or refuse to adjust and pay the loss of or damage to goods while in their possession, is no unlawful interference with interstate commerce, even as applied to an interstate shipment. The penalty imposed is for a delict of duty appertaining to the business of a common carrier, and, in so far as it may affect interstate commerce, it is an aid thereto by its tendency to promote safe and prompt delivery of goods, of its legal equivalent—prompt settlement of proper claim for damages. No penalty can attach except upon the establishment in a court of a default of duty imposed by statute. The statute does not attempt to regulate interstate commerce, and imposes no tax or burden thereon. It is supported by the general principle declared in Sherlock v. Alling, 93 U. S. 99, 104, 23 L. Ed. 819, and enforced in Smith v. Alabama, 124 U. S. 465, 8 Sup. Ct. 564, 31 L. Ed. 508, and Nashville, etc., R. R. v. Alabama, 128 U. S. 96, 9 Sup. Ct. 28, 32 L. Ed. 352, that state legislation "relating to the rights, duties, and liabilities of citizens, and only indirectly and remotely affecting the operations of commerce, is of obligatory force upon citizens within the territorial jurisdiction, whether on land or water, or engaged in commerce foreign or interstate, or in any other pursuit." In the case of Western Union Tel. Co. v. James, 162 U. S. 650, 16 Sup. Ct. 934, 40 L. Ed. 1105, a statute of Georgia requiring telegraph companies to transmit and deliver dispatches with impartiality, good faith, and diligence, under penalty of $100 in each case, in the absence of legislation by Congress on the subject, was held not to be an unwarrantable interference with interstate commerce as to messages without the state.

The exceptions are overruled, and the judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

(78 S. C. 81)

COOPER v. SEABOARD AIR LINE RY.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Sept. 6, 1907.)

CARRIERS—CONNECTING CARRIERS—INJURY TO SHIPMENT—PRESUMPTION.

The presumption from the receipt by a consignee from the terminal carrier of a shipment of goods damaged by breakage is that the goods were damaged while in the possession of such carrier.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 9, Carriers, § 837.]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Richland County; D. E. Hydrick and R. Withers Memmingers, Judges.

Action by J. B. Cooper against the Seaboard Air Line Railway. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

E. L. Craig and Lyles & McMahan, for appellant. De Pass & De Pass, for respondent.

JONES, J. In this action brought in a magistrate court, plaintiff sought to recover of defendant $8 damage by breakage while in its possession to a shipment of a box of crockery ware from Cincinnati, Ohio, to Blaney, S. C., and $50 penalty for failure to adjust and pay the claim within 90 days after the filing thereof, as prescribed by the act of February 23, 1903 (24 St. at Large, p. 81). The first trial resulted in a verdict for plaintiff, which, on appeal to the circuit court, was set aside, and the case remanded to the magistrate court for new trial, because of error in the admission of testimony. On the second trial before the magistrate judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff in the sum of $58, and, on appeal to the circuit court, this judgment was affirmed, from which defendant appealed to this court on one exception, assigning error to the circuit court in holding the act of February 23, 1903 (24 St. at Large, p. 81), not violative of article 1, § 8, cl. 3, Const. U. S., relating to interstate commerce.

On the trial before the magistrate court, defendant offered no testimony, and the only testimony offered by plaintiff was proof of damage by breakage to the goods received. There was a presumption, therefore, that the goods were damaged while in the possession of the defendant, the terminal carrier. Willet v. Railway Co., 66 S. C. 478, 45 S. E. 93; Walker v. Railway, 76 S. C. 309, 56 S. E. 952. And the finding of fact on this point by the circuit court is conclusive. This case, therefore, falls within the principle stated in Charles v. A. C. L. R. Co. (recently filed), 58 S. E. 927, which sustained the constitutionality of this statute as applied to carriers doing business in this state in whose possession goods were lost or damaged.

The judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

McTEER v. SOUTHERN EXPRESS CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Sept. 24, 1907.)

STATUTES—TITLE—PLURALITY OF SUBJECTS.

The act of 1903 (24 St. at Large, p. 81), entitled "An act to regulate the manner in which common carriers doing business in the state shall adjust freight rates and claims for loss or damage to freight," does not violate Const. art. 3, § 17, as relating to two separate subject-matters.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, Statutes, § 135.]

Appeal from Circuit Court, Hampton County; Geo. W. Gage, Judge.

Action by E. E. McTeer against the Southern Express Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. B. De Loach, for appellant. E. F. Warren, for respondent.

JONES, J. The circuit court in this case sustained the judgment of a magistrate in favor of plaintiff against defendant for $120, the value of two bottles of whisky broken and lost while in the possession of defendant for transportation from Covington, Ky., to Early Branch, in this state, and for $50 penalty for failure to adjust the loss within the time required by act of 1903 (24 St. at Large, p. 81).

The only exception discussed in this court was whether the penalty statute was violative of the interstate commerce clause of the federal Constitution. This question has been considered in several cases at this term of the court, and decided against appellant's contention. Charles v. A. C. L. R. Co., 58 S. E. 927; Cooper v. S. A. L. Ry. Co., supra. The exception that the statute is in conflict with article 3, § 17, of the state Constitution, in that it relates to two separate subject-matters, must be overruled under the authority of Aycock, Little & Co. v. Southern Ry., 76 S. C. 331, 57 S. E. 27.

The judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

MAZURSKY v. ATLANTIC COAST LINE R. CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Sept. 24, 1907.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Barnwell County; Geo. W. Gage, Judge.

Action by B. Mazursky against the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Robt. Aldrich, for appellant. Davis & Best, for respondent.

JONES, J. This appeal is from a judgment of the circuit court affirming a judgment of the magistrate in favor of plaintiff against defendant for $1.10, the value of a box of collars lost while in the possession of defendant carrier for transportation from Albany, N. Y., to Barnwell, S. C., and for $15 penalty for failure to adjust the loss within the time required by the act of 1903 (24 St. at Large, p. 81).

The exceptions assail the statute as in violation of the interstate commerce clause of the federal Constitution, but they must be overruled under the authority of Charles v. A. C. L. R. Co. and other cases decided at this term. 58 S. E. 927.

The judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

(78 S. C. 302)

PARK et ux. v. SOUTHERN RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 3, 1907.)

1. CARRIERS—PASSENGERS' EFFECTS—LIABILITY FOR LOSS.

A railway company is not responsible for a passenger's baggage, which is shown never to have been delivered to it.

2. SAME.

Where there was no joint contract between carriers to carry passengers and their baggage, but distinct tickets were bought, and the second carrier, to accommodate a passenger, gave its check for baggage before receiving it from the first carrier, the second carrier, on showing that the baggage was never received, or that it exercised due care in delivering the baggage received, is relieved from liability for its loss.

3. SAME—BAGGAGE CHECK—NATURE.

A railroad baggage check is not a contract, but a receipt, and is prima facie evidence of a delivery of baggage to the carrier.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 9, Carriers, § 1504.]

4. SAME—BAGGAGE—ACTION FOR LOSS—COMPLAINT—SUFFICIENCY.

A complaint in an action for loss of a passenger's baggage, which alleges that plaintiff holds the check of the carrier, only alleges evidence of delivery, and is bad for failing to allege a delivery, of the baggage to the carrier.

5. PLEADING—COMPLAINT—ALLEGATION OF PARTIES.

A complaint must set forth the material facts, and where it sets forth evidence, and omits a material allegation, it is bad.

6. CARRIERS—LOSS OF BAGGAGE—PRIMA FACIE EVIDENCE.

Where a railway company issued to a passenger its check for baggage, without having received the same from another company, for the purpose of accommodating the passenger, the check was prima facie evidence of a delivery to it of the baggage, rebuttable only by direct proof that the baggage was never received.

7. HUSBAND AND WIFE—ACTIONS—PARTIES.

Under Code Civ. Proc. 1902, § 138, providing that persons having an interest in the subject of the action may be joined as plaintiffs, a husband and wife may join in an action ex contractu for loss of baggage, consisting of articles belonging to each.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Greenville County; R. C. Watts, Judge.

Action by A. K. Park and wife against the Southern Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Reversed, and remanded for new trial.

Cothran, Dean & Cothran, for appellant. Haynesworth & Patterson, for respondents.

POPE, C. J. This action was begun by the plaintiffs, A. K. Park and Lella G. Park, in February, 1904, to recover $185, the value of a trunk alleged to have been lost by the defendant railway. It appears that early in September, 1903, the plaintiffs, being in New York and wishing to return home, about an hour and a half prior to their departure turned their trunk over to the McDonald Express Company for delivery at the Twenty-Third Street station of the Pennsylvania Railroad. The plaintiff A. K. Park testified that he saw the trunk at the station, identified it, and saw the agent of the railroad company strap a check thereon. The plaintiffs took passage to Baltimore, where they stopped over for about 24 hours, but, not needing the trunk, and therefore without finding out whether it had arrived or not, they exchanged checks with the agent at Baltimore and continued their journey to Washington, where they made a second stop. They arrived at Washington, according to the testimony, about dusk, and the next morning about 9 o'clock Mr. Park called for his trunk, but after careful search by both himself and the agent it could not be found. Nor was it found prior to the time the plaintiffs left Washington for Greenville, their home. The agent of the defendant company, however, according to the custom of the road, a custom alleged to be merely for the convenience of travelers, took up the check held from the Pennsylvania Railroad and issued a Southern check to the plaintiffs, agreeing to forward the trunk when it arrived. Some days afterwards the trunk arrived in Washington, bearing a check corresponding to that taken up by the Southern's agent from Mr. Park. It, according to the testimony of the defendant, was immediately sent to him; but he refused to accept it, alleging it not to be his. The lost trunk not having been found, this suit was begun. The defendant, alleging that the trunk had never come into its possession, denied any liability on its part. The case came on for trial at the November, 1906, term of court for Greenville county, before Judge Watts and a jury. At the conclusion of plaintiffs' testimony a motion was made by the defendant for a nonsuit on the grounds: (1) That there was absolutely no proof going to show that the trunk had ever been delivered to the defendant; and, (2) that the complaint alleged the trunk to be the joint property of the plaintiffs, while the evidence showed that part of the articles belonged to one of the plaintiffs and part to the other. The motion was refused, and the jury rendered a verdict in favor of the plaintiffs for $185. On motion for a new trial the verdict was cut down to $176.50, the value placed upon the goods lost by the plaintiffs. The defendant appeals.

The question made is one of grave importance and much difficulty. The circuit judge, in overruling the first ground for the nonsuit, held that by taking up the check issued by the Pennsylvania Railway and issuing its check instead the Southern Railway became the agent of the Pennsylvania Railway, and was responsible for any neglect on the part of that road; that they took up the check at their peril, and left the plaintiffs in a worse fix than they found them. Such a doctrine, to say the least of it, is a hard one. When we bear in mind that there was no joint contract between these roads to carry plaintiffs and their baggage from Greenville to New York and return, and when we remember that there were two distinct tickets bought, namely, from Greenville to Washington and return, and from Washington to New York and return, we think it hardly going too far to say that such a doctrine would be unjust. There is no law in existence by which a railroad company can be held responsible for baggage which is shown never to have been delivered to it. Even in cases of through shipments of freight under joint contract a connecting carrier is allowed to relieve itself from liability by showing that the goods in question never reached its line, unless under contract it make itself absolutely liable. How much more, then, should the defendant in this case, where there were three distinct shipments, be allowed to show that the goods for which it issued its check as an accommodation never arrived, or that it exercised due care in delivering the baggage that did arrive bearing a check corresponding to that surrendered by the plaintiffs. Having shown either alternative, we think both reason and authority will sustain us in holding the defendant relieved of liability.

The evidence of delivery relied on in this case is the check issued by the defendant company. Now it will doubtless be conceded that a check is a mere receipt for goods delivered. It can be no contract, for there are no words written thereon making a contract. The contract of carriage is either parol or is contained in the ticket held by the passenger. It has been held that even the ordinary ticket does not constitute a contract of carriage, but is merely prima facie evidence of the possessor's right to transportation. Pier v. Finch, 24 Barb. (N. Y.) 514. The general rule seems well settled that a receipt is merely prima facie evidence of the thing receipted for. Hogg v. Brown, 2 Brev. (S. C.) 223; Gibson v. Peebles, 2 McC. (S. C.) 418; Daniels v. Moses, 12 S. C. 130; Brice v. Hamilton, 12 S. C. 32; Bowen v. Humphreys, 24 S. C. 456. Now, unless, there is some matter of public policy making it advisable or necessary to make an exception in the case of receipts of common carriers, the rule will apply in the case now under consideration. That there cannot be such necessity for the exception seems settled by the number of authorities holding that such receipts are merely prima facie evidence, a few of which are 4 Elliott, § 1655; 3 Hutch. on Carriers (2d Ed.) §§ 1301, 1302; Davis v. Railway, 22 Ill. 278, 74 Am. Dec. 151; Ahlbeck v. Railway, 39 Minn. 424, 40 N. W. 364, 12 Am. St. Rep. 661; Zeigler Bros. v. Railway, 87 Miss. 367, 39 So. 811; 7 Current Law, 603.

Plaintiffs, relying on Dill v. Railway, 7 Rich. (S. C.) 162, 62 Am. Dec. 407, and Salley v. Seaboard, etc., Ry., 76 S. C. 173, 56 S. E. 782, seek to show that the law is settled to the contrary in this state. The case of Dill v. Railway holds only that a check is evidence of delivery. That there is a distinction between the ordinary check and bill of lading seems evident. True, the responsibility of carriers of baggage is that of common carriers. The check issued by them, however, is merely a receipt for the baggage received, while a bill of lading, in addition to being a receipt, contains the contract under which the goods are to be carried. This conception distinguishes this and the case of Salley v. Railway, supra. In that case there was a joint contract of carriage, the railroad company issuing the bill of lading expressly making itself liable for the property, while here a receipt merely was issued, and according to the evidence a parol contract was made by which the defendant was to forward such goods as arrived over the Pennsylvania Railway bearing a check corresponding to the one surrendered by the plaintiffs. As was said above, there was no duty resting upon the defendant to issue its check to the plaintiffs. It could lawfully have refused such check until the baggage was actually delivered to it. In order, however, to save the expense and delay incident to passengers waiting on baggage, merely as an advantage to passengers, it is a custom of the defendant to exchange checks and forward the baggage when it arrives. Certainly, in making such a contract, the plaintiff being aware that his baggage is not in the custody of the defendant, it could hardly be presumed that it was in the contemplation of the parties that the defendant meant to make itself absolutely liable. Rather the presumption in the mind of the passenger would be that the defendant could not be held liable unless it was made to appear that the goods were actually received by it. Hence, if the evidence in this case is susceptible only of the inference that the defendant never received the goods in question, then it cannot be held responsible for them. To hold otherwise would be to make a contract between the parties which it was clearly their intention not to make, and would impose a liability upon the defendant which it was not its purpose to undertake.

Should the nonsuit, then, have been granted on this ground? We think not. The check issued by the defendant and introduced in evidence by the plaintiffs was certainly some testimony going to show delivery of the baggage in question to the defendant. There is nothing in this view conflicting with the order of Judge Purdy on demurrer, requiring an allegation of delivery to be made in the complaint. An allegation that the plaintiffs hold the check of the defendant was only an allegation of evidence going to show the fact of delivery. One of the fundamental rules of pleading is that the material facts must be stated in the complaint, while matters of evidence going to sustain such facts are properly brought out at the trial. Where, then, evidence is set forth and a material allegation is omitted, then, of course, there is a defect in the pleading. Again we ask, is the prima facie showing made by the check rebutted by the testimony of the plaintiff? As to immediate delivery it can hardly be doubted, but one would hardly suppose that a railroad company would issue its check, unless there was a combination of circumstances making a delivery at one time or another practically certain. The check is issued in contemplation of these circumstances. The presumption of delivery arising therefrom is so strong that it can only be rebutted by direct proof on the part of the defendant that the baggage was never received by it. The check in such cases continues to be a prima facie showing, which showing the railroad company must overcome. Hence the nonsuit on this ground was properly refused.

The second ground of the nonsuit must also be overruled. Were the action one of tort, the appellant's contention would be correct. Hellams v. Switzer, 24 S. C. 39. The action here, however, is ex contractu, and, according to section 138 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1902, all parties interested in the contract must be joined as parties. This was likewise the general rule prior to the adoption of the Code. In Ellis v. McLemore, 1 Bailey (S. C.) 13, it is said the general rule is that all must join in the action who have an interest in the contract. The same rule is laid down in the Ency. of P. & P. vol. 15, p. 528, and many authorities are there collated sustaining the proposition.

What has been said, we think, entirely disposes of all the exceptions raised. In our view of the law it was error on the part of the circuit judge to hold the defendant responsible for the baggage, even though it was shown that it never came into its hands. Therefore the judgment below must be reversed.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be reversed, and the case remanded for a new trial.

(78 S. C. 331)

STATE ex rel. REESE et al. v. ANSEL, Governor.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 5, 1907.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—EXECUTIVE POWER—JUDICIAL REVIEW.

Whether a proposed new county embraces the same territory as was embraced in a proposed county voted on within four years is, under the Constitution, exclusively for the Governor.

2. COUNTIES—CREATION—PROCEEDINGS—STATUTES.

The Governor, by entertaining a petition for the creation of a new county and appointing a commission under Act Feb. 21, 1905 (24 St. at Large, p. 915), to investigate whether the requirements of the Constitution as to area, distance, wealth, population, etc., have been complied with, does not necessarily determine that the proposed new county does not embrace the same territory as was embraced in a proposed county voted on within four years; and the Governor may thereafter determine that question in the affirmative, and refuse to order an election on that ground.

3. SAME.

Until the Governor has made an order for an election on the question of the creation of a new county, the inquiry as to the compliance with the constitutional requirements relating to the creation of new counties is before him, and a decision made by him before that time may be revoked.

Original application for mandamus by the state, on the relation of Luther W. Reese and others, against M. F. Ansel, Governor, to require respondent to order an election on the question of the formation of a new county. Denied.

Geo. T. Jackson, for relators. J. Fraser Lyon, Atty. Gen., for respondent.

WOODS, J. This is an application for a writ of mandamus requiring his Excellency, Gov. Ansel, to order an election on the question of formation of a new county. We shall not enter into the inquiry whether this court has the power to issue a mandamus requiring the Governor of the state to perform a plain ministerial duty, because, in our opinion, the petition does not show any duty which the Governor has failed to perform.

In January, 1907, relators filed a petition with his Excellency, Gov. Heyward, for the creation of a new county out of portions of Edgefield and Aiken counties. The description of the territory to be included in the proposed new county was on its face general and approximate, and concluded with this statement: "The foregoing description and boundaries are intended to cut off and include not exceeding 135 square miles from Edgefield county, and not exceeding 235 square miles from Aiken county, and to that end at any time before final survey and location may be varied, changed, or amended by the commissioners acting in behalf of the proposed new county, appointed pursuant to an act approved the 21st day of February, A. D. 1905, they being hereby constituted and appointed attorneys in fact of petitioners for that purpose; the power given them to amend or change the lines or description being ancillary and not exclusive of petitioners' right to amend this petition at any time." Gov. Heyward, under the act of February 21, 1905 (24 St. at Large, p. 915) appointed commissioners to investigate whether the requirements of the Constitution "as to area, distance, wealth, population, etc.," had been complied with. Subsequently the petitioners petitioned Gov. Ansel, who had succeeded Gov. Heyward, to be allowed to amend the petition by substituting for the general description an exact description of the territory to be included by courses, distances, and boundaries shown on the plat. When this application to amend was made, opponents of the new county scheme filed an answer to the petition, in which they alleged the proposed new county to be substantially the same as the proposed new county of Heyward, which had been defeated at an election held in December, 1906. Gov. Ansel, after hearing argument from both sides, allowed the amendment, but dismissed the petition, on the ground that, while there was a variation in territory of about 50 square miles, nevertheless the proposed new county was substantially the same as the proposed new county of Heyward, and therefore, under the Constitution, no election could be held in less than four years after the election at which the proposed new county of Heyward had been defeated.

In Lamar v. Croft, 73 S. C. 407, 53 S. E. 540, the decision of the question whether a proposed new county embraces the same territory as one voted on within four years before was held to be given by the Constitution exclusively to the Governor. The position taken by the relators is that, when Gov. Heyward entertained the original proposition and appointed a commission under the statute to investigate whether the requirement of the Constitution as to area, distance, wealth, population, etc., had been complied with, he necessarily adjudged and determined that the new county now proposed was not the same as the proposed and defeated new county of Heyward. This position is entirely unsound. It is important to observe the commission is nothing more than machinery provided by the General Assembly to aid the Governor in the performance of the duty, imposed on him by the Constitution, of determining whether the conditions precedent to ordering an election have been met. While the statute requires him, before ordering a new county election, to appoint the commission for investigation, the investigation and report are only for his information. It is not necessary for him to decide anything before appointing a commission of investigation. Indeed, his decision as to sameness, as well as to other constitutional questions, may well depend entirely on the information afforded by the investigation and report of the commission. The order of Gov. Heyward, appointing the commission, by no means implied even an opinion that the proposed new county was not substantially the same as the proposed new county of Heyward. The inference is much more reasonable that he intended to leave that question to be decided, along with the others as to compliance with the Constitution, after the general description of the territory had been verified and made more certain by the investigation and report of the commission.

We are not called on to decide whether the Governor's order for a new county election is irrevocable; but certainly, until the order for an election has been made, there is no warrant in the Constitution or the statutes for the courts to hold the Governor precluded from reviewing his own conclusions or those of his predecessors in the light of the information afforded by the commission provided by law to furnish it. At least until the election is ordered, in contemplation of law, the inquiry as to the compliance with all the constitutional requirements is pending before the Governor.

The judgment of this court is that the application for mandamus be refused.

(73 S. C. 5)

BOOZER v. LOAN & EXCHANGE BANK.
(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Aug. 20, 1907.)

LANDLORD AND TENANT—LEASE—USE OF BUILDING.

Plaintiff leased to defendant a brick store-room for certain rent, with a provision that it was understood that the defendant desires the building for the purpose of conducting a general banking business, and the alterations to be made were such as would fit the building for this purpose, as may be determined on in the judgment and discretion of the defendant. Held, not to restrict the lessee to the use of the leased building for conducting only a banking business.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 32, Landlord and Tenant, § 484.]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Greenwood County; Purdy, Judge.

Action by Eliza J. Boozer against the Loan & Exchange Bank. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Nicholson Bros., for appellant. Grier & Park, for respondent.

GARY, A. J. This is an appeal from an order refusing to grant a temporary injunction to restrain the defendant from subletting the premises described in the complaint for other than banking purposes, on the ground that under the terms of the lease the building could only be used for such purposes. The following is a copy of the lease: "(1) State of South Carolina, County of Greenwood. This memorandum of agreement is to witness: That Mrs. Eliza J. Boozer, party of the first part, has granted, leased and rented, and by these presents does grant, lease and rent unto the Loan & Exchange Bank, party of the second part, all and singular that certain brick storeroom, situated in the state and county above written, in the town of Greenwood, fronting on the public square therein, and the premises on which the same is situate, and bounded on the north by the store of W. R. Bailey, and said lot extending back for a distance of two hundred and seventeen (217) feet, on the rear by lands of Mrs. T. F. Riley, and on the south by another store of Mrs. Eliza J. Boozer; the said lot being the lot on which is situate the said certain brick store formerly occupied by T. St. J. Goodwyn. (2) To have and to hold the said above mentioned and rented storeroom and premises, to the said Loan & Exchange Bank, its successors and assigns, for and during the full term of my natural life, at the sum of four hundred dollars per annum, payable monthly at the end of each and every month, during the lifetime of this agreement—that is to say, the sum of $33⅓ per month, each and every month, during the term of this lease—rent to begin September 1, 1903. (3) And the said Loan & Exchange Bank agrees to pay to the said Mrs. Eliza J. Boozer or order the rent stipulated herein above, in the manner and at the times and in the sums above mentioned and stipulated. (4) If the said building is destroyed by fire or other casualties, and if said building is rebuilt by party of the first part with due expedition, and if the building so erected is of like size and kind as the building on said lot at the time of said fire or other casualties, this lease shall not terminate, but shall remain in full force, provided that during the time the building is unoccupied, the party of the second part, or its assigns, shall not be liable for rents. (5) The party of the first part herein gives and grants to the party of the second part, or its assigns, full permission and leave to make any alterations in and upon said building, as it or its assigns may decide to make, provided that he pay the cost thereof without charge to the party of the first part. (6) The party of the first part further agrees to keep and maintain the said building at all times in good repair, and put in front of said building, at her expense, a cement sidewalk. It is understood and agreed that the party of the second part desires this building for the purpose of conducting therein a general banking business, and the alterations to be made are such as will fit the building for this purpose, as may be determined upon in the judgment and discretion of the said party of the second part. All fixtures and furniture placed in said building to be the property of the party of the second part, with the right to remove the same when the building is vacated, or upon the expiration of this lease."

The question whether the plaintiff made a prima facie showing depends upon the construction of said lease; the plaintiff contending that the use of the building is limited to banking purposes. Our interpretation of the lease is that section 7 was not intended to create a new right, nor to limit the previous provisions, but was merely explanatory of the power to make alterations, even to the extent of changes so great as to render the building suitable for banking purposes. The building prior to the lease had been used as a grocery store, and a question might have arisen as to the authority of the defendant to make alterations so drastic as to convert it temporarily into a building for banking purposes. It was to forestall any such question that section 7 was inserted. By this construction alone can force and effect be given to all the provisions of the lease. If the words, "it is understood and agreed that the party of the second part desires this building for the purpose of conducting therein a general banking business," should be construed as showing that the building could only be used for conducting a banking business therein, then they would limit the effect of section 2. And if the words, "the alterations to be made are such that will fit the building for this purpose," should be construed as intending that only such alterations can be made, then they would trench upon the provisions of section 5. If the words, "for the purpose of conducting a banking business," had been inserted in section 2, the principle announced in Fire Co. v. Richland Lodge, 70 S. C. 572, 50 S. E. 499, would be applicable; and, if the intention had been to limit the use to this extent, they would naturally have been inserted in that part of the lease, instead of the portion relating to alterations. The law favors a construction that will give effect to all the provisions of a contract.

It is the judgment of this court that the appeal be dismissed.

(78 S. C. 309)

BATSON et al. v. SOUTH CAROLINA MUT. INS. CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 5, 1907.)

INSURANCE—MUTUAL INSURANCE—RIGHT TO SUE—FORM OF REMEDY.

Where a mutual assessment insurance company denies liability on a policy providing that no suit shall be brought thereon until an assessment has been made, and refuses to make an assessment, the insured may sue at law for breach of contract and recover the amount he would have been entitled to if the company had made an assessment.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 28, Insurance, § 1986.]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Greenville County; Ernest Gary, Judge.

Action by L. T. Batson and another, partners under the firm name of Batson & Walsh, against the South Carolina Mutual Insurance Company. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Jos. A. McCullough, for appellant. Morgan & Bonham, for respondents.

JONES, J. This was an action at law in a magistrate court to recover $72.27 as the pro rata share due plaintiffs by the defendant company on a policy of fire insurance. The magistrate dismissed the action on the ground that plaintiff's remedy was to proceed in equity to compel an assessment so as to fix the amount payable under the policy, but on appeal the circuit court reversed the judgment of the magistrate and rendered judgment against defendant for the amount claimed.

The defendant is a mutual insurance company incorporated under the laws of this state and authorized to mutually insure the buildings of its members from loss by fire, wind, or lightning upon such terms and conditions as may be fixed by its by-laws. The policy insured the plaintiffs to the extent of $350, and stipulated to make good the loss not to exceed that sum by pro rata assessments on policies liable. The policy, among other things, stipulates: "(7) Payment of any loss or damage shall be due within sixty days after the assessment is made to pay the same. * * * (11) It is mutually agreed that no suit or action against this company for the collection of any claims against it shall be sustainable in any court of law until after an award shall have been obtained, fixing the amount of such claim in the manner provided, and not until after an assessment has been made against the policies then liable for their pro rata share due on each policy according to the sum fixed by said award; and in all cases the burden of proof shall be upon the assured to prove affirmatively as a part of his case in chief that the award has been obtained or duly waived by the company after the assured had made tender of such arbitration in writing, which writing shall be the only competent evidence of such tender; and provided further that the assured shall assume the burden of proof and prove affirmatively that such assessment has been made by the company, or that the assured has taken such legal steps as may have been necessary to compel such assessment in case the company shall have refused to make the same. The amount received from such assessment shall fix the liability of the company for said loss."

The defendant denied all liability on the policy and refused to make the assessment. It is not disputed that a pro rata assessment, if it had been made, would have realized the amount for which judgment was rendered. The question presented is whether plaintiffs could maintain an action at law for the said sum as damages for breach of defendant's contract, or was their remedy in equity to compel an assessment? This question has been recently considered in Thompson v. Piedmont Mutual Ins. Co., 58 S. E. 341, and the conclusion reached was that, when an insurance company denies all liability and refuses to make an assessment, an action at law is maintainable to recover the amount of damages to which the insured would be entitled if the company had performed its part of the contract. The court in that case cites Bentz v. N. W. Aid Ass'n, 40 Minn. 202, 41 N. W. 1037, 2 L. R. A. 784, Jackson v. N. W. R. Ass'n, 73 Wis. 507, 41 N. W. 708, 2 L. R. A. 736, and Lawler v. Murphy, 58 Conn. 294, 20 Atl. 457, 8 L. R. A. 113, to which may be added Elkhart Mut. Aid, etc., Ass'n v. Houghton, 103 Ind. 286, 2 N. E. 763, 53 Am. St. Rep. 514; Earnshaw v. Sun Mut. Aid Society, 63 Md. 465, 12 Atl. 884, 6 Am. St. Rep. 460; O'Brien v. Home Ben. Soc., 117 N. Y. 310, 22 N. E. 954.

The judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

(78 S. C. 108)

YARBOROUGH v. SOUTHERN RY.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Sept. 7, 1907.)

1. CARRIERS—LOSS OF GOODS—FIRE—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action against a railway company to recover for cotton placed on the platform at a station and destroyed by fire, evidence held to show consent on the part of the railway company to the cotton being placed on the platform before ready for shipment.

2. TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—CHARGE ON FACTS.

In an action to recover for cotton destroyed on a railroad platform before it was ready for shipment, where there was evidence that the company consented to have the cotton so placed, it was a charge on the facts to instruct the jury that they should infer such consent from the agent's being informed that the cotton was so placed, and making no objection.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, §§ 539-551.]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Fairfield County; Prince, Judge.

Action by Benjamin H. Yarbrough against the Southern Railway. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

B. L. Abney, J. E. McDonald, and W. H. Townsend, for appellant. Ragsdale & Dixon, for respondent.

WOODS, J. This defendant appeals from a judgment for $185.65 recovered, under section 2135, Civ. Code 1902, for the partial burning of four bales of cotton on the defendant's platform at Alston, S. C., by a fire set out by one of defendant's locomotives.

1. The issues of fact bearing on the appeal are: (1) Was the cotton placed on the platform without the defendant's consent? And (2) If with defendant's consent, was the consent accompanied by notice that the cotton would be at the owner's risk? The plaintiff testified he was hauling a lot of nine bales of cotton to the railroad for shipment to a purchaser, intending to take out a bill of lading as soon as the other five bales could be hauled; and when four of the nine bales were placed on the platform the fire occurred. He further testified to telling the agent of the four bales being on the platform and his intention to haul the remaining five before taking a receipt, and to the agent failing to object to his plan. The railroad agent testified that the following notice over the names of the general freight agents of the railroad had been posted on the depot a month before the fire; "Notice to the public: All persons are hereby forbidden to place cotton upon the premises of this company until the same shall have been tendered to and accepted by this company for shipment." The plaintiff and his witnesses denied having ever seen such a notice, though frequently at the depot on business. The agent further testified he had notified the plaintiff that cotton placed on the platform would be at his risk until tendered to the company and received by it, and he denied any positive knowledge of plaintiff's four bales being on the platform, and any recollection of the plaintiff telling him of it. He admitted his custom was to allow separate portions of a single shipment of cotton to be placed on the platform, and to delay giving the bill of lading until the whole had been hauled; his understanding being that the cotton was at the risk of the owner until delivery of the bill of lading. From this statement of the evidence, it is obvious there was some testimony from which the jury might infer consent of the railroad company to the cotton being placed on its premises, and the motion for nonsuit was properly refused.

2. The circuit judge laid down in the charge of the proposition that the jury might properly infer the consent of the railroad company to the placing of property on its platform from the fact that an agent has notice of its being placed there and makes no objection. In view of the issues made on the trial, we think this was a charge on the facts. According to the testimony adduced by the defendant, there was conspicuously posted a notice forbidding all persons to place cotton on the premises of the company until tendered and accepted for shipment. It was for the jury to say whether the paper was so posted as to give notice to all shippers. If it did give such notice to the shipper, then evidently it cannot be laid down as a proposition of law—a rule of evidence—that the inference of consent could be fairly drawn from the failure of the railroad company to hunt up each individual known by its agents to have disregarded its public notice, and again notify him of its refusal to consent to his placing his property on the premises before he was ready to have it shipped. Whether such inference could be fairly drawn from failure to make specific objection in each case was entirely a question of fact for the jury, upon which the Constitution forbids a circuit judge to express an opinion.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the circuit court be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

(73 S. C. 348)

STATE ex rel. WATTS v. CAIN, Chairman, et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 5, 1907.)

1. MANDAMUS—NATURE OF REMEDY.

Mandamus is not a prerogative writ running in the name of the sovereign, but is an ordinary process, available to any private citizen, to protect a private right when it is an appropriate remedy.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 33, Mandamus, § 1.]

2. SAME—PROCEEDINGS—SURPLUSAGE.

The name of the state in mandamus by a private citizen to protect a private right is surplusage.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 33, Mandamus, § 237.]

3. INTOXICATING LIQUORS—COUNTY DISPENSARIES—STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION.

Dispensary Act, §§ 6, 12, authorizing the county dispensary board to buy and retail liquors, and providing that the board, before permitting any dispensary to offer any liquor for sale, shall "cause" the same to be put into packages, authorizes the board to maintain an establishment for bottling beer for sale; the words, "to cause," meaning to act as a cause or agent in producing, to effect as an agent, to produce.

4. STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION—IMPLIED POWER.

Where a power is conferred by statute, everything necessary to carry out the power and make it effectual is implied.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, Statutes, § 264.]

5. INTOXICATING LIQUORS—COUNTY DISPENSARIES.

The grant under Dispensary Act, § 36, to a licensee for the maintenance of an establishment for bottling malt liquors, is not exclusive, and he cannot complain of a loss sustained in consequence of a county dispensary board establishing works for bottling beer, as authorized by sections 6 and 12.

6. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—PERSONS ENTITLED TO RAISE CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTIONS.

A party deriving his authority under a statute cannot assail its constitutionality.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 10, Constitutional Law, § 41.]

7. SAME—DETERMINATION OF CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTIONS—NECESSITY.

The Supreme Court will not pass on the constitutionality of a statute, unless it is necessary to a determination of the issues.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 10, Constitutional Law, § 43.]

Mandamus by the state, on the relation of H. E. Watts, against John J. Cain and others, constituting the county dispensary board for Richland county, to enjoin respondents from maintaining an establishment for bottling beer for sale. Dismissed.

Bellinger & Welch, for plaintiff. Thomas & Thomas, for defendant.

JONES, J. The petitioner applied in the original jurisdiction of this court for a rule requiring respondents to show cause why they should not be perpetually enjoined from bottling beer for sale, and maintaining an establishment for such bottling. The respondents made answer to the rule issued, and also submitted a demurrer to the petition for insufficiency. By an order filed June 14, 1907, this court dismissed the petition, and the reasons therefor will now be briefly stated. The answer raised a preliminary question, that the name of the state was used by the petitioner without the consent of the Attorney General or other competent authority, and that the proceeding is by the petitioner in his private capacity for the protection of a private right. In modern practice, mandamus is not regarded as a prerogative writ running in the name of the sovereign, but as ordinary process of the court, available to any private citizen, to protect a private right when it is an appropriate remedy. Therefore the use of the name of the state in such cases is a mere form, and may be treated as surplusage. Lord v. Bates, 48 S. C. 103, 26 S. E. 213; Milster v. Spartanburg, 68 S. C. 30, 46 S. E. 539. The petitioner is maintaining a bottling establishment for all malt liquors in the county of Richland, having been licensed to do so under section 36 of the Carey-Cothran dispensary act, upon paying to the county dispensary board of said county the required license fee March 8, 1907. The respondents constitute the county dispensary board for Richland county under said act, and, conceiving they had authority to do so under sections 6 and 12 of said act, are now buying beer in bulk and causing the same to be bottled in a bottling plant which they have established for the purpose, and are retailing the same through the county dispensaries of Richland county, claiming that in this way they can secure better beer at a lower price than if they should buy exclusively from the licensed bottlers, and can prevent a monopoly of the beer business by said licensed bottlers, but that they stand ready to purchase from the licensed bottlers whenever the quality of their beer and the prices quoted are such as to make it to the interest of the public that they should make such purchases.

The main question is whether sections 6 and 12 of the said act authorize respondents to maintain the bottling establishment. Section 6 authorizes the members of the county dispensary board to buy in any market and retail within the state liquors and beverages as provided herein. Section 12 provides: "The county dispensary board before permitting any dispensary to offer any liquor for sale shall cause the same to be put into packages of not less than one-half pint nor more than five gallons, and seal the same. The dispenser shall sell by the package only and no person shall open the same or drink any of the contents on the premises." The power to purchase liquors in bulk and to retail liquors through the county dispensaries is undoubtedly given; and we think it also clear that the power to cause the liquors to be put into certain packages and sealed necessarily involves the power to bottle the same through such agencies as they may deem best, and that the establishment of a bottling plant of their own is not beyond the power granted in the act. If the Legislature had intended that the liquors purchased in bulk by the board should be turned over to licensed bottlers to be put into packages required by law, other language would have been used. "To cause," according to the Century Dictionary, means "(1) to act as a cause or agent in producing; effect; bring about, be the occasion of; (2) to make; force; compel"—and, according to Webster's International Dictionary, means "to effect as an agent; to produce; to be the occasion of; to bring about; to bring into existence; to make." The language is certainly broad enough to include the power to effect or bring about the bottling through appliances and instrumentalities under their direct supervision. If the power to establish a bottling plant is not expressly given, it is necessarily implied. "Where a power is conferred by statute, everything necessary to carry out the power and make it effectual and complete will be implied." 24 A. & E. Ency. Law, p. 614, and cases cited. "What is implied in a statute is as much a part of it as what is expressed." Wilson v. National Bank of Nashville, 103 U. S. 770, 26 L. Ed. 488. The fact that this construction would authorize the board to compete with petitioner in the matter of bottling is not a fatal objection, although to the extent of the loss of the patronage of the board of Richland county the value of petitioner's license to him would be impaired. While under section 36 of said act the petitioner became a licensee upon the payment of the annual license fee to the Richland county board, the license was not granted by the board but by the state under the statute, so that the same authority which licensed petitioner empowered the respondents to bottle. There being no exclusive grant to petitioner, such impairment of the value of his license as was incident to the exercise of the power conferred upon respondents is without remedy. City of Joplin v. Southwest Missouri Light Co., 191 U. S. 150, 24 Sup. Ct. 43, 48 L. Ed. 127; North Springs Water Co. v. Tacoma, 21 Wash. 517, 58 Pac. 773, 47 L. R. A. 214.

The respondents have argued that petitioner has no interest to make this controversy because all the interest claimed arises under section 36 of said act, and that said section is not constitutional. Respondents, however, derive all their authority under said statute, have no interest to be subserved by overthrowing it, and cannot be heard to assail its constitutionality. Ex parte Florence School, 43 S. C. 16, 20 S. E. 794; Moore v. Napier, 64 S. C. 564, 42 S. E. 997; State v. Morris, 67 S. C. 153, 45 S. E. 178.

The petitioner argues against the constitutionality of section 12 of said act in so far as it authorizes the board to bottle liquors, but the petition raises no question as to the constitutionality of the statute, and any discussion of that subject is unnecessary. The court will not pass upon the constitutionality of a statute, unless it is necessary to the determination of the issues presented. Ex parte Florence School, 43 S. C. 15, 20 S. E. 794.

Rule discharged, and petition dismissed.

(78 S. C. 312)

BISHOP v. VALLEY FALLS MFG. CO.

NOLEN v. SAME.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 5, 1907.)

1. MANDAMUS—CLERK OF COURTS—ARBITRATION AND AWARD—ENTRY OF JUDGMENT.

Where there is a valid award under a statutory arbitration, it is the ministerial duty of the clerk of the court to enter judgment in accordance with the award, and such duty will be enforced by mandamus.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 33, Mandamus, § 70.]

2. ARBITRATION AND AWARD—AGREEMENTS TO ARBITRATE—CONSTRUCTION.

In the absence of express stipulations on the subject, the presumption is that an agreement is for a statutory, rather than a common-law arbitration.

3. SAME—REMEDIAL STATUTES—CONSTRUCTION.

Statutes providing for and regulating arbitration, and authorizing the entry of judgment on the award itself, are remedial, and should be liberally construed.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 4, Arbitration and Award, § 7.]

4. SAME—AGREEMENT—WHEN COMPLETE.

Under the statute, an agreement for arbitration is complete when one party to a dispute proposes arbitration and the other party assents to it, and each party enters into bond in double the amount involved to faithfully abide the result.

5. SAME—SELECTION OF ARBITRATORS.

The selection of arbitrators is no part of the agreement for arbitration required by the statute, and the fact that the parties agree on the arbitrators, instead of requiring them to be selected in the manner indicated in the statute, does not preclude the arbitration from being referred to the statute.

6. SAME.

By a written agreement for arbitration the parties to an action followed the statute by binding themselves in double the amount indicated by the complaint to be involved to faithfully abide the result of the arbitration, defendant also agreeing to pay the costs of the arbitrators of the witnesses and of any court officers connected with the arbitration. Held that the arbitration should be regarded as statutory.

7. SAME—REVOCATION.

Where the parties to an action had agreed to arbitrate the service by defendant of a notice on plaintiff of a statement of defendant's position that the agreement contemplated a common-law and not a statutory arbitration was not a revocation of the agreement; defendant appearing and participating in the arbitration.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Spartanburg County; R. Withen Memminger, Judge.

Actions by George C. Bishop against the Valley Falls Manufacturing Company, and by C. B. Nolen against the same defendant. From a decree awarding a writ of mandamus to compel the entry of judgment in favor of each plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Stanyarne Wilson, for appellant. Johnson & Nash, for respondents.

WOODS, J. This is an appeal from a decree of Judge Memminger awarding a writ of mandamus to compel the clerk of the court of common pleas to enter judgments in favor of each of the plaintiffs on awards of arbitrators. The important question is whether the agreement contemplated an arbitration under the statute or at common law; for, if there was valid award under a statutory arbitration, then, under the statute, it was the clear ministerial duty of the clerk to enter the judgment in accordance with the award.

The plaintiffs, George C. Bishop and Mrs. C. B. Nolan, had instituted separate actions against Valley Falls Manufacturing Company for damage to their lands alleged to be flooded by the defendant's dam. While the actions were pending, parties to the suits made the separate arbitration agreements now under consideration. The agreements were identical, and we first consider whether on their face without respect to the affidavits before the circuit judge, they show an intention of the parties to have an arbitration under the statute. In the absence of express stipulations on the subject, we think the presumption is in favor of a statutory arbitration. In early times the disposition of the courts was to look with jealousy on arbitrations, and give them as little force as possible, but later and more intelligent judicial sentiment is strongly in their favor. As said in Greenville v. Spartanburg, 62 S. C. 125, 40 S. E. 147, "courts favor awards, and will indulge every reasonable presumption to uphold them, and whoever assails them has the burden of clearly establishing their invalidity." An award under an arbitration at common law was not the end of the matter, for, unless the losing party chose to comply with it, the successful party was obliged to incur the delay and expense of bringing his action to enforce compliance. To remedy this defect, many states have passed statutes providing for and regulating arbitration, and authorizing the entry of judgment on the award itself. The statutes are remedial, and should be liberally construed, so as to advance the legislative purpose of putting an end to litigation. When parties enter into an agreement designed to end litigation, their contract as far as its language will allow should be construed to be effectual and complete to that end. Hence, when on its face the contract may be regarded as providing for either a statutory arbitration or an arbitration at common law, it should be referred to the statute.

The defendant insists, however, the agreement cannot be referred to the statute because the arbitrators were agreed on, and not selected by the parties, as required by the statute. The views of other courts give us little aid on this point, because, for the most part, they relate to statutes quite different from ours. Our statute is somewhat peculiar in language, but very simple. The agreement for arbitration is complete when one party to a dispute proposes arbitration and the other assents to it, and each party enters into bond, in double the amount involved, to faithfully abide the result. The selection of arbitrators is no part of the agreement required by the statute. After the agreement has been made, the statute provides a method of selection, so that there may be no reason for difference between the parties on the point. But this is nothing more than conferring on each party the right to demand that the arbitrators be selected in the manner indicated by the statute. This right, like all others, may be waived by agreement of the parties to select the arbitrators in some other way. Hence it is illogical to say an arbitration cannot be referred to the statute merely because the parties agree on the arbitrators, instead of exercising the right to require them to be selected in the manner indicated in the statute. For these reasons alone, we think the arbitration should be regarded statutory. But the written agreement indicates on its face an intention to proceed under the statute. In it the parties followed the statute by binding themselves in double the amount indicated by the complaint, to be involved to faithfully abide the result of the arbitration. In addition to this, the Valley Falls Manufacturing Company agreed "to pay the costs of the arbitrators, of the witnesses, and of any court officers connected with said arbitration." Unless the arbitration was to result in a judgment as provided by the statute, court officers would have had no costs in connection with it, and, in using this language, the parties must have had in contemplation the costs of entering the judgment.

The defendant further contends, even if the agreement to arbitrate should be referred to the statute, it was revoked before action under it, and therefore no judgment could be entered on the award. This claim of revocation rests on the service of a written notice on the plaintiffs before the arbitrators had acted. But this notice was nothing more than a statement of defendant's position that the agreement contemplated a common-law, and not a statutory, arbitration. So, far from repudiating the agreement the defendant appeared and participated in the arbitration. The defendant's expression of opinion as to the effect of its written agreement obviously was not a revocation.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

(78 S. C. 1)

SALEM R. CO. v. D. W. ALDERMAN & SONS CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Aug. 19, 1907.)

EMINENT DOMAIN—PRIVATE BUSINESS CORPORATIONS—RAILROAD CROSSINGS.

Under Civ. Code 1902, § 1895, providing that private business corporations organized under the article shall have power to operate railroads, tramways, turnpikes, or canals for their own use, and have the right to cross any existing railroad or public roads, as is provided by law for railroad corporations, but shall have no power to condemn lands, except for crossing any existing railroads, evidence held to show that it was essential for the business with which the private railroad in question was connected that it be extended in the direction sought, and that there is a reasonable necessity for it to condemn a crossing over an existing railroad, where it is doubtful that it could obtain a way from private individuals by purchase.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Clarendon County; Hydrick, Judge.

Action by the Salem Railroad Company against the D. W. Alderman & Sons Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Jos. F. Rhame, J. H. Lesesne, and Wilcox & Wilcox, for appellant. Wilson & Du Rant, for respondent.

WOODS, J. The Salem Railroad is a corporation organized under the laws of the state, operating a railroad in Williamsburg and Clarendon counties. The D. W. Alderman & Sons Company, is a private corporation organized under the laws of the state, engaged in the manufacture of lumber, and, in connection with its business, operating private railroads for the purpose of conveying timber to its mill at Alcolu, S. C. In February, 1906, the D. W. Alderman & Sons Company served notice on the Salem Railroad Company that it required a right of way 20 feet in width across the railroad at a certain point in Clarendon county. The Salem Railroad Company duly signified its refusal to allow such right of way to be taken. Thereafter, under the petition filed by the D. W. Alderman & Sons Company, the clerk of the court of common pleas, acting under the statute, was about to impanel a jury to assess damages for the right of way, when the Salem Railroad Company, denying the right of condemnation, brought this action for injunction. The denial of the right of condemnation rests on the allegation of the complaint that the crossing will be dangerous, causing annoyance to the plaintiff and interruption of its business, and "that the defendant herein does not require the use of the right of way above described over and across the railroad of this plaintiff for the purpose of transporting timber and other articles to and from its mill, but, on the contrary, has or can procure a right of way for its railroad by which to reach its property without crossing the railroad of this plaintiff." A temporary injunction was granted by Judge Gage. The case was tried before Judge Hydrick, who dissolved the injunction and dismissed the complaint. The single exception charges error in the circuit court's finding of fact that a reasonable necessity for the crossing existed at the time this action was commenced.

The defendant, being a private business corporation, has no right of condemnation beyond that conferred by Civ. Code 1902, § 1895: "Corporations organized for any purpose under the provisions of this article shall have power to construct and operate a railroad, electric railway, tramway, turnpike or canal, for their own use and purposes, and shall have the right to effect a crossing with any existing railroad or public roads as is now provided by law for railroad corporations; but they shall have no power to condemn lands except for crossing any existing railroad or public road, as herein provided." It would require a lengthy analysis of the evidence to make plain the precise situation of the proposed crossing in relation to the timber the defendant finds it necessary to reach by its private railroad. The statement of these salient facts will be sufficient. The defendant's private railroad already crosses the plaintiff's railroad, and this would be a crossing back on a curve where it is desirable for many reasons not to have crossings, or any other obstacle to the continuous movement of trains. The plaintiff railroad runs only one train a day each way. While it hauls some guano and other freight for the public, its main business is the transportation of logs and lumber for its principal owner, Mr. Wilson. The defendant could reach its timber by a route, just as convenient, leading over the lands of private owners, without crossing the plaintiff railroad. But, as will be seen by reference to the statute above quoted, the law confers on the defendant no authority to condemn a right of way over the lands of individuals. W. D. McFadden is one of the private owners whose consent would be essential to the defendant taking the route suggested by the plaintiff over the lands of others; and the effort was made to prove his willingness to sell defendant a right of way at a reasonable price.

Had the plaintiff been able to show that the necessary rights of way over this land and that of other persons could be procured for a reasonable price, it would have had, under the circumstances, strong reason to ask for a permanent injunction against the crossing of its railroad. But, considering the refusal of McFadden to name any price for the right of way, in connection with his attitude to Wilson and Alderman, the persons mainly interested in the suit, it is highly improbable the defendant could have acquired a right from him for a reasonable price.

We think these are the correct conclusions to be drawn. The extension of the defendant's railroad is essential to the conduct of its business. It has no right to condemn the lands of private owners; and its ability to acquire by purchase, at a reasonable price, rights of way over the lands of private owners, was shown to be, at least, extremely doubtful. The condemnation of the crossing over the plaintiff's railroad is therefore necessary; the case falling well within the rule of reasonable necessity laid down in South Carolina Railroad Company v. Blake, 9 Rich. Law, 228, and Riley v. Union Station Company, 71 S. C. 489, 51 S. E. 485.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

(73 S. C. 294)

ARMOUR & CO. v. ROSS et al.*

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 2, 1907.)

1. BAILMENT—RIGHTS OF THIRD PERSONS.

An agreement by a broker to sell the goods of another, title to remain in the latter until sold, creates a bailment within Civ. Code 1902, § 2655, providing that every agreement whereby the bailor reserves title to himself shall be void as to subsequent purchasers without notice, unless recorded, and the agreement must be recorded to be valid against subsequent purchasers of the broker.

2. SAME.

Civ. Code 1902, § 2655, providing that every agreement whereby a bailor reserves title to himself shall be void as against subsequent creditors unless recorded, has no reference to simple or unsecured creditors, but applies only to those whose claims have been reduced to judgment, or to those holding liens on the property before receiving notice of the unrecorded agreement, notwithstanding section 2456, as amended in 1898 (22 Stat. at Large, p. 746), which provides that conveyances of land, etc., shall be void as against subsequent lien or simple contract creditors, unless recorded; the latter section being distinct from the former.

3. SAME.

Where the transaction by which one became a creditor of a bailee was distinct from that in which he purchased the chattels in possession of the bailee, and he was not a creditor within Civ. Code 1902, § 2655, providing that every agreement between bailor and bailee whereby the bailor reserves title to himself shall be void as to subsequent creditors, unless recorded, his claim was not such a consideration as could make him a purchaser for value without notice, within the statute.

4. SAME—NATURE AND ELEMENTS.

Bailment is the delivery of goods for some purpose on a contract, express or implied, that after the purpose has been fulfilled they should be redelivered to the bailor, or otherwise dealt with according to his directions, or kept until he reclaims them.

*For opinion on rehearing, see 58 S. E. 1135.

Woods, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Cherokee County; O. G. Dantzler, Judge.

Action by Armour & Co. against M. L. Ross and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded for new trial.

J. C. Jefferies, for appellant. Butler & Osborne, for respondents.

GARY, A. J. This is an action to recover the value of goods alleged to have been converted by the defendants to their own use. This is the second appeal. The first is reported in 75 S. C. 201, 55 S. E. 315. The complaint alleges that at the time hereinafter mentioned the plaintiff was the owner of a quantity of bacon and lard, of the value of $1,353.41; that at said time the property was in possession of defendant St. John Butler, as plaintiff's agent, and was in his hands upon consignment; that on or about the 20th of August, 1901, the defendants, knowing that the plaintiff was owner of said property, and in order to pay an old debt due the defendant St. John Butler to his codefendants, H. L. Ross and W. A. Turner unlawfully and wrongfully converted the same to their own use, and placed it out of the possession of said agent, who thereupon left the state, and that the defendants Ross and Turner detained and concealed said property from the plaintiff for the purpose of appropriating it to their own use. The defendants Ross and Turner in their original answer, upon which they went to trial the first time, denied the allegations of the complaint, and set up as a defense that they were purchasers for valuable consideration without notice. After the case was remanded for a new trial, the defendants amended their answer by alleging, also, that they were subsequent creditors for valuable consideration without notice. At least a part of the indebtedness was contracted about the 8th of June, 1901, at which time the property in question was in the possession of St. John Butler, which was more than two months before he is alleged to have sold the property. The jury rendered a verdict in favor of the defendants, and the plaintiff appealed.

The first assignment of error is because his honor, the presiding judge, ruled that the agreement entered into between the plaintiff and St. John Butler was null and void as to subsequent creditors or purchasers for valuable consideration without notice, as it was not recorded within the time required by section 2655 of the Civil Code of 1902, which is as follows: "Every agreement between the vendor and vendee, bailor or bailee of personal property, whereof the vendor or bailor shall reserve to himself any interest in the same, shall be null and void as to subsequent creditors or purchasers for valuable consideration without notice, unless the same be reduced to writing in the manner now provided by law, for the recording of mortgages; but nothing herein contained shall apply to livery stable keepers, inn keepers, or any other persons letting or hiring property for a temporary use, or depositing such property for the purpose of having repairs or work or labor done thereon." The agreement made between the plaintiff and St. John Butler was in form an instrument of writing, dated the — day of June, 1899, directed to St. John Butler, signed by Armour & Co., and containing, among others, the following provisions: "Upon your acceptance in writing indorsed hereon, you are constituted our broker and commission merchant Gaffney, S. C., to sell provisions and products, as we may offer through or consign to you, or to your care for that purpose, upon the following conditions: (1) The title of all goods is to remain in us until sold by you, in accordance with the terms fixed by us, and when sold, the proceeds of sale shall at all times be the property of Armour & Co., and you shall any time deliver any or all unsold goods to whomsoever Armour & Co. may authorize to receive them." St. John Butler accepted the terms of the proposed contract. In 3 Enc. of Law, 733, the word "bailment" is defined as follows: "Bailment is the delivery of goods for some purpose, upon a contract expressed or implied, that after the purpose has been fulfilled they shall be redelivered to the bailor, or otherwise dealt with according to his directions, or kept until he reclaims them." The agreement herein is embraced within this definition. Section 2655, Civ. Code 1902, was construed in the case of Ludden & Bates v. Dusenbury, 27 S. C. 467, 4 S. E. 60, in which there was an agreement stipulating for the hiring of an organ, valued at $95, for the term of nine months, at a monthly rental of $10, with an option to the bailee to buy it at any time within that period at the said valuation, in which case the money paid for the rental should be deducted from the purchase money. The court held that it was not a mortgage, nor a conditional sale, but a contract of hiring only, with an option to buy at a future time, and that the agreement, not having been recorded in the manner provided by said section, was void as to a purchaser of the property at sheriff's sale under a judgment recovered against the bailee by a subsequent creditor for valuable consideration without notice. The court concludes with the following statement of the law: "It will thus be seen that the law as it now stands and as it stood when the agreement here in controversy was made is no longer confined to verbal agreements, but extends to every agreement, and it covers agreements between bailor and bailee, as well as those between vendor and vendee, and that all such agreements must be reduced to writing and recorded like mortgages, in order to make them valid against the claims of subsequent creditors or purchasers for valuable consideration without notice. Inasmuch, therefore, as the agreement here in question was never recorded, and inasmuch as there is no evidence that the defendant, who, as we have seen, must be regarded as a subsequent purchaser, ever had any notice of the agreement, it is quite clear that, even regarding the agreement as a contract, not of sale, but a contract of hiring, which is a bailment, the defendant was entitled to recover." The exceptions raising this question are overruled.

The next error assigned is because his honor, the presiding judge, refused to direct a verdict or grant a new trial, on the ground that there was no testimony whatever tending to sustain the defense that the defendant Ross was a creditor or purchaser for valuable consideration without notice. Upon the former hearing of this case, before the defense was amended by alleging that he was not only a purchaser, but a subsequent creditor for value without notice, this court used the following language: "There is testimony to the effect that the defendants were purchasers, and that they did not have notice of the agreement hereinbefore mentioned between the plaintiff and Butler; but the defendants failed to introduce any testimony whatever tending to show that there was such consideration as equity recognized in support of their defense. On the contrary, the testimony of the defendant Ross was to the effect that the sale of the articles to him by Butler was based upon the consideration of past indebtedness, which is not sufficient to sustain said defense. Quite a different question would be presented if the appeal involved the construction of section 2456 of the Civil Code, as that section was amended in 1898 (22 St. at Large, p. 746), by adding the words: 'Whether simple contract creditors or lien creditors.' Marsh v. Ramsay, 57 S. C. 121, 35 S. E. 433." In determining upon that hearing whether Ross was a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice, the question whether he was such a creditor as the statute contemplated was necessarily involved, and, if this court had entertained the view that he was such creditor, it would have been compelled to rule that he was entitled to the protection of the statute. In such a case he would have had the right, under judicial proceedings, to subject the property to the payment of his indebtedness, or to become the purchaser of the property, in consideration of said indebtedness, provided he did not have notice of the agreement at the time of his purchase. The statute, however, does not have reference to simple or unsecured creditors, but to those whose claims have been reduced to judgment, to those holding other liens on the property, before receiving notice of the unrecorded instrument. King v. Fraser, 23 S. C. 543; Carraway v. Carraway, 27 S. C. 576, 5 S. E.

157; Summers v. Brice, 36 S. C. 204, 15 S. E. 374; Turpin v. Sudduth, 53 S. C. 295, 31 S. E. 245, 306; Armstrong v. Carwile, 56 S. C. 463, 35 S. E. 196. The respondents' attorneys rely upon the case of Herring Co. v. Cannon, 21 S. C. 212, 53 Am. Rep. 661, to show that Ross was entitled to the protection of the statute. The facts of that case were as follows: In August, 1880, Herring & Co. sold and delivered to E. S. Griffin a safe for $105.63, payable January 1 and April 1, 1881, and took notes therefor, in which they reserved the title to said safe in themselves until paid for, but failed to record the notes. After the purchase of the safe, and while it was in Griffin's possession, Griffin contracted debts with two different firms, who had no notice of Herring's claims. These creditors sued Griffin, and attached the safe, and recovered judgment for their debts before they had any notice of Herring & Co.'s claim. The safe was sold by the sheriff under the attachment proceedings. Jas. F. Izlar, who was notified of Herring & Co.'s claims, bought the safe at the sale, and afterwards sold it to Cannon, the defendant. The court used the following language: "It is conceded in the case that the safe was seized and sold under legal process issued by subsequent creditors without notice, and therefore it is unnecessary to inquire whether Izlar, the first purchaser, or Cannon, to whom he sold, had actual notice of plaintiff's claim at the time of their respective purchases. The purchase at the sheriff's sale for the benefit of suing creditors, admitted to be subsequent creditors without notice, gave to the purchaser that protection which is extended to the class to which the creditor in execution belonged, whether he, the purchaser, had actual notice or not." That case is not conclusive of the question under consideration, as it was therein conceded that those under whose attachment proceedings the safe was sold were subsequent creditors for value without notice. The amendment to section 2456 of the Civil Code in 1898 by inserting the words, "whether simple contract creditors or lien creditors," is not applicable, as that section and section 2655 are separate and distinct; and, if the Legislature had intended to amend the latter section, it would have been very easy to have so expressed its intention. Finally, our reason for ruling that the defendant Ross was not entitled to the protection of the statute is that the transaction by which he became a creditor of St. John Butler was separate and distinct from that in which he purchased the property; and, as he was not such a creditor as came within the purview of the statute, his indebtedness was not such a consideration as could sustain the defense of purchaser for value without notice.

The thirteenth and fifteenth exceptions cannot be sustained, as the propositions for which the appellant contends were inapplicable to the case under the pleadings and testimony.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be reversed, and the case remanded for a new trial.

WOODS, J. (dissenting). I dissent, as I am unable to agree that the amendment of 1898 (22 St. at Large, p. 746), making section 2456 of Civil Code apply to the protection of simple contract creditors, as well as lien creditors, had no effect on section 2655, requiring record of certain agreements between vendor and vendee and bailor and bailee. By the act of 1876 (16 St. at Large, p. 92) it was provided deeds, mortgages, and other specified papers "and generally all instruments of writing now required by law to be recorded," etc., should be valid so as to affect subsequent creditors or purchasers without notice only when recorded within 40 days. In 1882 an act was passed providing: "Every agreement between the vendor and vendee, bailor and bailee, of personal property, whereby the vendor or bailor shall reserve to himself any interest in the same, shall be null and void as to subsequent creditors or purchasers for valuable consideration without notice unless the same be reduced to writing and recorded in the manner now provided by law for recording of mortgages: provided, that nothing herein contained shall apply to livery stable keepers, or inn keepers, or any other persons letting or hiring property for a temporary purpose." 18 St. at Large, p. 35. Clearly the main purpose and effect of this act was to make agreements of the kind mentioned between vendors and vendees, and bailors and bailees, "instruments required by law to be recorded," within the meaning of the act of 1876, and such instruments fell as fully under that statute as if the statute had been amended, and the agreements between vendors and vendees, and bailors and bailees, had been mentioned along with deeds and mortgages. When, therefore, the statute of 1876 was amended in 1898 to the form of section 2456 of Civil Code, so as to protect not only subsequent lien creditors, but also subsequent simple contract creditors, the amendment applied to all "instruments required by law to be recorded," and agreements between bailors and bailees like that involved in this case are such instruments.

For these reasons, I think the judgment of the circuit court should be affirmed.

(78 S. C. 8)

CUMMINS v. ATLANTIC COAST LINE R. CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Aug. 20, 1907.)

1. CARRIERS—DELAY IN FREIGHT—ACTION FOR DAMAGES.

A complaint alleging that defendant carrier unreasonably delayed a shipment for one day, without alleging negligent delay, held to state a cause of action in contract against the carrier for failure to transport with reasonable dispatch.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 9, Carriers, § 436.]

2. SAME—REASONABLE DILIGENCE.

The issue of reasonable diligence in the shipment of freight is for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 9, Carriers, § 449.]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Charleston County; Aldrich, Judge.

Action by E. L. Cummins against the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company. From an order overruling a demurrer, the defendant appeals. Affirmed.

W. Huger Fitzsimons and T. Moultrie Mordecai, for appellant. Legare & Holman, for respondent.

GARY, A. J. This is an action to recover damages for the alleged delay in the transportation of freight.

The complaint sets forth three causes of action, the first of which alleges "that on the 8th day of May, 1905, the plaintiff delivered to the defendant, at Meggetta, S. C., a station on its line of road, 220 crates of cabbage; that the same were received for transportation to the city of New York, there to be delivered to certain commission merchants for sale for the account of the plaintiff, that the cabbage should have been delivered to the said commission merchants on the 11th day of May, 1905, but that the same were unreasonably delayed in transportation for one day, and were not delivered until the 12th day of May, 1905; that, by reason of such delay in transportation, the cabbage were rendered worthless, and the same resulted in a total loss to the plaintiff; that, if said cabbage had been received in due time and in good condition, the plaintiff could have realized a net profit of 85 cents per crate, whereby the plaintiff has been damaged in the sum of $187." The second and third causes of action are similar to the first. The defendant demurred to the complaint, and to each cause of action, on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; (1) in that it is not alleged that the delay was negligent; and (2) in that it is alleged that the delay was only one day, which is not sufficient to raise the presumption of negligence. The demurrer was overruled, and the defendant appealed.

The plaintiff had the right to bring his action either ex contractu or ex delicto (Pickens v. Railroad, 54 S. C. 498, 32 S. E. 567); and, even conceding that the allegations are not sufficient to constitute a cause of action founded upon tort, they nevertheless are appropriate to a cause of action based upon contract. The ruling of his honor, the presiding judge, is not only in harmony with the doctrine prevailing generally, but is sustained by the decisions in this State. In Nettles, v. Railroad, 7 Rich. Law, 190, 62 Am. Dec. 409, the court uses this language: "The defendants were by the contract, which as common carriers they made with the plaintiff, bound to deliver the goods in Camden within a reasonable time. Rapheal v. Pickford, 5 Man. & Gran. 551. After the expiration of a reasonable time, without disproof of negligence on their part, they became answerable for the wrong of nondelivery; and, if nothing more had appeared, the measure of damages would have been the value of the goods at the place where they should have been delivered, together with any reasonable loss and expenses which had been directly occasioned by the wrong." In the case of Harby v. Railroad, 75 S. C. 321, 325, 55 S. E. 760, 762, the court said: "The correct rule in such cases is that, when no time is expressly agreed upon, the goods must be transported with all reasonable diligence"—which must be determined by the jury, citing Nettles v. Railroad, 7 Rich. Law, 190, 62 Am. Dec. 409, and 6 Cyc. 442.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

(78 S. C. 334)

POPE et al. v. PATTERSON.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 5, 1907.)

1. DEEDS—CONSTRUCTION.

The object of construction of a deed is to ascertain the intention of the parties, and, when so ascertained, nothing remains but to effectuate that intention, if it can be done according to law.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 16, Deeds, § 281.]

2. TRUSTS—TRUST DEEDS—CONSTRUCTION—LEGAL TITLE.

Grantor, in consideration of his natural love and affection for his children, conveyed certain premises on the following trust: The rents and profits were reserved to grantor for life. The premises, on grantor's death, were to be equally divided among his children. The share of one of the children was to be for her use during life only, with remainder to her children living at her death, and the share of a grandson named was limited to the use of his wife during her life, remainder to his children at her death, and the trustee was to hold on the further trust to sell, when so directed by grantor. Held, that the intent of grantor was to vest the legal title in the trustee until a sale at his request or his death, and that, it being the duty of the trustee to convey on request of grantor, the statute of uses did not execute the use or vest the legal title in the beneficiaries.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 47, Trusts, § 175.]

3. SAME—STATUTE OF USES.

Where an estate in real property is conveyed to one for the use of, or in trust for, another, and no duty is imposed on the trustee for the proper performance of which it is necessary that the legal title remain in the trustee, such title by operation of the statute of uses passes to the cestui que trust, but, where there is anything for the trustee to do, rendering it necessary that he retain legal title, then the statute will not execute the use, and legal title remains in the trustee.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 47, Trusts, § 175.]

4. SAME.

Grantor, in consideration of his natural love and affection for his children, conveyed certain premises in trust to pay grantor the rents and profits for life, and after his death the whole estate to be equally divided among his children as therein directed, and it was provided that such deed was on the further trust that trustee would convey the same, when so directed by grantor. Held, that if necessary to effectuate the intention of grantor to retain the jus disponendi, and to place legal title in the trustee, and not in his beneficiaries, the clause in reference to the sale of the land by trustee might be transposed and placed first in the deed.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 47, Trusts, § 162.]

5. EVIDENCE—PRESUMPTION—PERFORMANCE OF CONDITION PRECEDENT.

Where a trust deed vested in the trustee the legal title with the duty to convey on written request of grantor, and the trustee executed a deed, a written request to do so will be presumed after the lapse of 20 years.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 20, Evidence, § 90.]

6. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—PERSONS BARRED—CESTUI QUE TRUST.

Where the statute of limitations has run against a trustee vested with legal title to land, the cestui que trust is also barred, though she is a married woman.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 33, Limitation of Actions, § 660.]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Barnwell County; J. B. McDonald, Special Judge.

Partition by M. L. Pope and others against E. L. Patterson. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs' appeal. Affirmed on the opinion of the court below.

The following is the opinion of McDonald, J., in the court below:

"This is an action for the partition of real estate, and was heard by me at a special term of the court for Barnwell county October, 1905, upon the pleadings and an agreed statement of facts. By agreement of counsel, a jury was waived. Since the hearing of the case, my time has been so fully occupied by pressing business engagements that I have not been able heretofore to consider the numerous authorities cited by counsel for plaintiffs in his very full and able argument. I sincerely regret this delay in my decision of this very interesting case.

"The plaintiffs allege, in their complaint, that they are seised in fee and entitled to the possession of two-fifths interest in fee in a tract of land situate in Barnwell county, S. C., containing 1,300 acres, more or less, and that the defendant is entitled to three-fifths thereof in fee, but that he has been in exclusive possession of said lands, collecting and receiving the rents and profits thereof, and converting them to his own use. The plaintiffs therefore demand partition of the premises, and an accounting of the rents and profits received by the defendant for the time that he has been in exclusive possession of the said premises. The defendant sets up three defenses: (1) A general denial. (2) The presumption of a grant, arising from 20 years' continuous adverse possession. (3) Adverse possession for 10 years under claim of title, founded upon a written instrument.

"The plaintiffs base their claim to their alleged interests in the tract of land described in the complaint upon a certain deed executed and delivered by one H. D. Duncan to H. A. Duncan, as trustee, bearing date the 13th day of April, 1868. That deed is in the following language: 'The State of South Carolina, Barnwell District. Know all men by these presents, that I, Hansford D. Duncan, of the said state and district, for and in consideration of the natural love and affection which I bear towards my children, H. A. Duncan, Harriet Eliza Twiggs, widow of the late George W. L. Twiggs, deceased, Sarah E. Eaves, wife of Dr. Paul F. Eaves, Mary Lucia Sams, wife of the Rev. Marion W. Sams, and my grandson, Darling P. Duncan, and also the sum of one dollar to me in hand paid by H. A. Duncan, the receipt of which I do hereby acknowledge, have given, granted, bargained, sold and released, and by these presents do give, grant, bargain, sell and release unto the said H. A. Duncan all that tract of land situate, lying and being in the said district on the lower three runs, containing fifteen hundred acres, on which I formerly resided, and known as the Sandy Run Place. Also my two lots in the village of Barnwell, on which I now live, containing ten and eleven acres. To have and to hold all and singular the above described premises, together with the rights, members, and appurtenances thereto belonging unto the said H. A. Duncan, his heirs and assigns forever. And I, the said H. D. Duncan, do hereby warrant and forever defend the said premises unto the said H. A. Duncan against me, my heirs, executors and administrators, and all other persons claiming or to claim through me. In trust, nevertheless, that the rents and profits of the said land are to be paid over to the said H. D. Duncan for and during his natural life, and the use of the said residence in Barnwell village for the same term. And after the death of the said H. D. Duncan, then the whole estate herein conveyed to be equally divided, share and share alike, between my children, H. A. Duncan, H. E. Twiggs, S. A. Eaves, M. L. Sams, and my grandson, D. P. Duncan. The share of my daughter, M. L. Sams, to her sole and separate use during life, and after her death, to be equally divided among her children who may be living at the time of her death; the share of a deceased child, should the child so dying leave a child or children alive, to be equally divided among the children of said deceased child. The share of my grandson, D. P. Duncan, for the sole and separate use of his wife, Rosa, during life, and after her death to be equally divided among the children of the said D. P. Duncan who may be living at the time of his death; the share of a deceased child, should the child so dying leave a child or children alive, to be equally divided among the said children of said deceased child. The shares of my children, H. A. Duncan, H. E. Twiggs, S. A. Eaves, to vest absolutely upon the falling in of the life estate of myself. And on the further trust that should the said H. D. Duncan desire to sell the whole or any part of the above described property, the said H. A. Duncan shall execute such titles of the same to such person as he, the said H. D. Duncan, shall direct, in writing, without the necessity of applying to any court for that purpose. In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal this, the 13th day of April, A. D. 1868. H. D. Duncan. [L. S.] Signed, sealed, and delivered in the presence of W. W. Woodward, B. B. Sams.'

"From the agreed statement of facts, it appears that all of the plaintiffs, except Rosa Aldrich and A. P. Aldrich, are children of Mrs. Lucia Sams and her husband, Marion Sams. Mrs. Lucia Sams was the daughter of the grantor, H. D. Duncan, mentioned as M. L. Sams in the above deed. H. D. Duncan, the grantor in the above deed, died in the year 1881, and the trustee, H. A. Duncan, died in the year 1882. Mrs. Sams died on the 6th of November, 1902, her husband, Marion Sams, having predeceased her on the 2d of August, 1899. The plaintiffs Rosa Aldrich and A. P. Aldrich are the wife and child of D. P. Duncan, the grandson of H. D. Duncan mentioned in said deed. D. P. Duncan died on the 31st of March, 1894, leaving him surviving, as his heirs at law, his wife, the plaintiff Rosa Aldrich, and an only child, the plaintiff A. P. Aldrich. D. P. Duncan and Rosa Duncan were husband and wife at the time of the execution of the above trust deed. On the 30th day of August, 1879, H. A. Duncan, as trustee, conveyed to H. D. D. Twiggs the property in dispute, and on the same day, in pursuance of a sale for delinquent taxes, a deed was also executed and delivered to the said H. D. D. Twiggs by the sinking fund commission conveying the property in dispute, the same having been sold for delinquent taxes in the name of H. A. Duncan. On the 18th day of February, 1880, H. D. D. Twiggs conveyed the property in dispute to H. F. Snelling. Thereafter, on the 18th of April, 1893, H. F. Snelling conveyed to Benjamin Graham 800 acres of the land in dispute. On the ——— day of ———, 18—, H. F. Snelling conveyed to the British & American Mortgage Company, Limited, by way of mortgage, 500 acres of the land in dispute. Subsequently the said mortgage was foreclosed and the land sold. The British & American Mortgage Company, Limited, became the purchaser thereof, and took deed thereto bearing date the 12th day of November, 1897. The British & American Mortgage Company, Limited, on the 19th of November, 1897, conveyed to the defendant E. L. Patterson said 500 acres of land, being part of the land in dispute, and on the 4th day of June, 1903, Benj. Graham conveyed to the defendant E. L. Patterson 800 acres, being part of the land in dispute. All of the above deeds were duly placed on record in the office of the registrar of mesne conveyance for Barnwell county, and the respective and successive owners of said land paid the state and county taxes thereon after the date of the sale for taxes in the year 1879. The defendant claims title by virtue of above deeds and possession thereunder. It is admitted in the agreed statement of facts that the successive owners of the land in dispute held the same openly, notoriously, exclusively, and adversely against all persons whomsoever, but this admission is without prejudice to the right of the plaintiffs to contend that such possession was not adverse as to them, it being contended that as to Mrs. Lucia Sams, she being a married woman, and under the disability of coverture at the time of the execution of the above trust deed, the possession of the several successive owners could not be adverse to her. This action was commenced on the 24th day of February, 1904. These are the salient facts upon which the issues in this case arise.

"It is contended by the plaintiffs that under the above deed from H. D. Duncan to H. A. Duncan, trustee, the beneficiaries mentioned therein took vested remainders at the time of the execution of said deed, the enjoyment thereof, however, being postponed until the falling in of the life estate reserved in said deed to the grantor, H. D. Duncan. They contend, further, that the trustee, H. A. Duncan, did not hold the legal title in trust for the remaindermen, but that his office as such trustee terminated with the death of H. D. Duncan, the grantor and life tenant. In other words, it is the contention of the plaintiffs that the statute of uses executed the use and vested the legal title in the remaindermen immediately upon the execution of the trust deed, and that the reservation or power of sale contained in the trust deed is null and void, as being repugnant to the estate granted. This in brief is the main contention on behalf of the plaintiffs. They, of course, contend, further, that the tax deed above mentioned is void as against them, for noncompliance with statutory requirements; and they also contend that there could be no adverse possession as to them under the facts above stated. On the other hand, the main contention of the defendant is that, under this trust deed, the legal title vested and remained in the trustee; that his conveyance was a valid execution of the power of sale under the terms of the trust deed; and that the defendant, his predecessors and grantors, having held adversely for more than 20 years, will be presumed to have acquired title to the land in dispute by a grant from the state. He also contends that, as the legal title remained in the trustee, the statute of limitations began to run against him upon his conveyance to H. D. D. Twiggs, and that not only the trustee, but the cestui que trust, would be barred at the end of the statutory period. The defendant also relies upon adverse possession under tax title.

"From the view that I take of the facts in this case, it will not be necessary to pass upon every issue that has been raised between the plaintiffs and defendant. It is evident that the pivotal point in the case depends upon the construction of the trust deed above set forth. If the plaintiffs' contention that the legal title in remainder vested in the cestui que trust at the time of the execution of the trust deed under the operation of the statute of uses be sustained, then it is manifest that plaintiffs are entitled to the relief demanded in their complaint, unless their rights are otherwise barred by the presumption of a grant, lapse of time, adverse possession, or by the tax title offered in evidence by the defendant. If, however, the legal title did not so vest in the cestui que trust, then it is equally evident that the conveyance by the trustee, in the absence of fraud, would bar any supposed rights that the plaintiffs might claim in the premises. The solution of these questions, as has been stated, depends upon the proper construction of the trust deed. The object of construction of all contracts by the courts is to ascertain the intention of the parties, and, when so ascertained, nothing remains but to effectuate that intention, if it can be done according to law. It is not for the courts to make contracts by construction, but it is their duty to carry out the expressed intention of the parties if it can be done consistently with sound and settled legal principles. As is said in 2 Devlin on Deeds, § 836: 'As in the case of all contracts, the intent of the parties to the deed, when it can be obtained from the instrument, will prevail, unless counteracted by some rule of law.' Again, in same section, it is said: 'If a question of law arises upon the construction of a deed, it is the province of the court to construe it, and to decide from the language what the intention of the party was. When the intention of the parties can be plainly ascertained, arbitrary rules are not to be resorted to. The rule is that the intention of the parties is to be ascertained by considering all the provisions of the deed, as well as the situation of the parties, and then to give effect to such intention, if practicable, when not contrary to law.' Again, in section 837, quoting the language of Chief Justice Kent, in Jackson v. Myers, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 388, 389, 8 Am. Dec. 504, it is said: 'The intent, when apparent and not repugnant to any rule of law, will control technical terms, for the intent, and not the words, is the essence of every agreement. In the exposition of deeds, the construction must be upon the view and comparison of the whole instrument, and with an endeavor to give every part of it meaning and effect.' And, if a deed cannot take effect in the precise way intended, yet, if it can operate in another mode, it will be so construed. In note 3, on page 106, same volume, will be found a quotation from the opinion of Mr. Chief Justice Ruger, in Coleman v. Beach, 97 N. Y. 545, 553, which states the rule very clearly, as follows: 'If the disposition which the owner of property desires to make does not contravene any positive prohibition of law, his control over it is unlimited, and the only office which the courts are called upon to perform in construing his transfers of title is to discover and give effect to his intentions. In the case of repugnant dispositions of the same property contained in the same instrument, the courts are of necessity compelled to choose between them; but it is only when they are irreconcilably repugnant that such a disposition of the question is required to be made. If it is the clear intent of the grantor that apparently inconsistent provisions shall all stand, such limitations upon and interpretations of the literal signification of the language used must be imposed as will give some effect, if possible, to all of the provisions of the deed.' The well-settled rule of construction adopted by our own courts is in harmony with the above statement of the law. In McCown v. King, 23 S. C. 235, the rule is stated in the following language: 'The object of construction as to deeds—in fact, as to all papers in contest before the courts—is to reach the intention of the parties, because it is this which must control, otherwise the contract would be the contract of the court, and not of the parties. The ascertainment, however, of this intention is not to be had by conjecture or by what seems to be natural justice, or what the court would have done under the circumstances, but it must be had by the application of the rules of construction laid down in the books, and which the wisdom of the past has established as the best means of reaching the true meaning and intent of such papers. Whatever the application of these rules evolves, nothing more, nothing less, must be regarded and declared to be the intent of the matter under construction, whether it be in consonance with our notions of what it ought to be or not.' See, also, Mellichamp v. Mellichamp, 28 S. C. 129, 55 S. E. 333; Fuller v. Missroon, 35 S. C. 327, 14 S. E. 714; Brown v. McCall, 44 S. C. 511, 22 S. E. 823; Foster v. Glover, 46 S. C. 522, 24 S. E. 370; Faber v. Police, 10 S. C. 386.

Applying these principles of construction to the deed in question here, I do not think it can be seriously doubted that it was the intention of H. D. Duncan that the legal title to the tract of land in question should not vest in the beneficiaries at the time of the execution of the deed. On the contrary, I think it was his clear intention to vest the legal title in the trustee, there to remain until divested upon the happening of certain contingencies, to wit, a sale at his request, or his dying without exercising the power to direct a sale. It was certainly not his intention, in my opinion, that the legal estate should be vested in his children under the statute of uses. The following facts and circumstances, in my opinion, strongly support this view: (1) The grantor uses apt and technical words to convey the entire fee to the trustee, and he even inserts the warranty clause before the language declaring the trust. (2) The rents and profits are reserved, and 'are to be paid over' to the grantor for and during his natural life. (3) The estate conveyed is not to be divided among his children until after the death of the said grantor. (4) After directing a division, he provided that the share of Mrs. Sams should be for her sole and separate use during her life only, with remainder to her children living at the time of her death, etc., and the share of his grandson, D. P. Duncan, is limited to the sole and separate use of the wife of D. P. Duncan during her life, with remainder to his children living at the time of her death, etc. (5) The shares of the other children are not 'to vest absolutely' until the falling in of the life estate. (6) The trustee is to hold the land upon the further trust, to sell the whole or any part thereof when so directed, in writing, by the grantor. If the contention of plaintiffs' counsel is correct, then no effect whatever can be given to that clause of the deed which provides a life estate for Mrs. Sams, and for the wife of his grandson, D. P. Duncan, nor can any force or effect be given to that clause of the deed in which the grantor provides for a sale by the trustee if he is so directed in writing. To so construe this deed would bring about a result manifestly contrary to the plain intention of the grantor. His intention must be carried out, unless repugnant to some principle of law. It is contended that to give effect to that clause providing for a sale would violate the rule of law whereby the legal title becomes vested under the statute of uses when the trustee has no duties to perform. Does the statute of uses apply to this case? The rule on this subject is clearly stated in Snelling v. Lamar, 32 S. C. 75, 76, 10 S. E. 825, 17 Am. St. Rep. 835, in the following language: 'It is well settled that where an estate in real property is conveyed to one for the use of or in trust for another, and no duty is imposed upon the trustee for the proper performance of which it is necessary that the legal estate should remain in the trustee, such estate, by the operation of the statute of uses, will pass at once to the cestui que trust, or person for whose use the estate is conveyed; but when there is anything for the trustee to do, which renders it necessary that he should retain the legal title in order fully to perform the duties imposed upon him by the instrument creating the trust, then the statute will not execute the use, as it is termed, and the legal estate will remain in the trustee. These principles have been so often determined that it cannot now be necessary to do more than refer to some of the cases in which they have been settled. Ramsay v. March, 2 McCord, 252, 13 Am. Dec. 717; Faber v. Police, 10 S. C. 376; Bristow v. McCall, 16 S. C. 545; Howard v. Henderson, 18 S. C. 184; Ayer v. Ritter, 29 S. C. 135, 7 S. E. 53. The rule was also stated by Chancellor Harper, in Posey v. Cook, 1 Hill (S. C.) 413, as follows: 'Perhaps the rule might be more accurately expressed to say that where the intention is that the estate shall not be executed in the cestui qui use, and any object is to be effected by its remaining in the trustee, then it shall not be executed.' See, also, Farr v. Gilreath, 23 S. C. 512; Ayer v. Ritter, 29 S. C. 136, 7 S. E. 53; Wieters v. Timmons, 25 S. C. 488, 1 S. E. 1; Carrigan v. Drake, 36 S. C. 365, 15 S. E. 339; Brown v. McCall, 44 S. C. 503, 22 S. E. 823; Foster v. Glover, 46 S. C. 522, 24 S. E. 370; Holmes v. Pickett, 51 S. C. 280, 29 S. E. 82; Bank v. Garlington, 54 S. C. 424, 32 S. E. 513.

"It was perfectly competent, in my opinion, for the grantor, by the deed here under consideration, to convey the property to the trustee for the purpose of selling the whole or any part thereof when he should be so directed in writing by the grantor. Such a trust does not violate any rule of law. In order that the trustee might convey the land, it was certainly necessary that the legal title should remain in him for that purpose, and, hence, as he had this duty to perform with reference to the land, if he should be called upon to do so by the grantor, the statute of uses would not execute the use nor vest the legal title in the grantor's children. I think the intention of the grantor was to retain the jus disponendi, so to speak, during his life, and his children were to take under this deed only in the event that he did not direct the trustee to sell the land during his lifetime. I think this is made more evident when we consider the fact that the grantor provided in effect that the land should not be divided until after his death, by the further fact that he gives one of his daughters only a life estate in the property, and that the share provided for his grandson was limited to the use of his wife for life, and, finally, by the fact that as to the shares of the other children he provides that they are not 'to vest absolutely' until the falling in of the life estate. In other words, as to the shares of H. A. Duncan, S. A. Twiggs, and S. E. Eaves, there was to be no absolute vesting of the estates until the termination of the grantor's life estate. In order to carry out the intention of the grantor, it is legally permissible to transpose the two clauses of the deed which declare the trust; and, if necessary to effectuate the intention of the grantor, the clause in reference to the sale of the land may be placed first in the deed. McCown v. King, 23 S. C. 235, 236. In the deed construed in that case, the trust clause was separated from the granting clause, as is the case here, by the interposition of the warranty clause, and yet the court so transposed the different clauses as to carry out the manifest intention of the grantor. If this be done here, then the deed can be so construed as to effectuate the intention of the grantor, and every part of it can be given effect without violating any known principle of law.

"But, even if it were not clearly permissible to so transpose the several clauses of this deed, in my opinion, the latter trust clause may be enforced and given effect without violating any sound legal principles. In the case of Wieters v. Timmons, 25 S. C. 488, 1 S. E. 1, a very similar provision was made in a trust deed, and the court held, at least by the clearest implication, that the power of sale therein given might have been exercised during the joint lives of the grantor and his wife. At page 495 of 25 S. C., at page 4 of 1 S. E., it is said: 'During the life of the grantor he was to have control of the entire income of the property to be used by him in the support and maintenance of his wife and children, and the education of said children, and it was not unreasonable that he should attach thereto the proviso in question permitting him and his wife to change the property, if found necessary, subject to be reinvested for the same purposes as expressed in the original deeds. Up to his death, the interest of the issue, other than support and maintenance, was contingent, and the proviso could in no way therefore affect them. Upon the death, however, of the grantor, the interest of the wife and the issue was separated by the terms of the deed, the wife being entitled to the use and benefit of one moiety for life, and the other moiety to go to the issue in fee. The grantor died without making any request jointly with his wife for the sale of the property, or any portion thereof, and for the reinvestment of the proceeds, and therefore it is no longer possible for such joint request to be made; and, although it is true the proviso empowered the survivor to make such request, yet it would be utterly inconsistent with the vested interest of the issue in the moiety to which they became entitled at the death of their father (the grantor) to suppose that this power extended to said interest.' The clear inference from this language is that a conveyance upon the joint request of the grantor and his wife would have been sustained by the court, and the interest of the issue would have been thereby barred. For these reasons, I am of the opinion, and so hold with reference to the deed here under consideration, that the statute of uses did not execute the use or vest the legal estate in the children of H. D. Duncan, the grantor.

"Having held that the legal title remained in the trustee, and that he had the right to convey upon the written request of the grantor, it only remains to consider what was the effect of his conveyance to H. D. D. Twiggs upon the contingent interest of the plaintiffs. This deed was made by the trustee on the 30th day of August, 1879, and the written request of H. D. Duncan will now be presumed after the lapse of 20 years. It is admitted that Twiggs and those who succeeded in title under him up to the time of the commencement of this action, in February, 1904, were in open, notorious, exclusive, and adverse possession of the land. It is contended, however, that owing to the fact that Mrs. Sams was a married woman, and under the disability of coverture, the possession could not be adverse as to her, and that the rights of the other tenants in common would thereby be preserved. There would be great force in this position if it were not for the fact that the legal title, as I have held, was in the trustee, and not in Mrs. Sams, and, the trustee having made a conveyance of the land, the statute of limitations began to run as against the legal title and in favor of those in possession at the time of such conveyance; and, notwithstanding the fact that Mrs. Sams was a married woman, I am unable to perceive how the running of the statute would be arrested in view of these facts. As to this point, in Benbow v. Levi, 50 S. C. 128, 27 S. E. 655 (a case where the legal title was in the trustee), it is said: 'If an executor, or an administrator, or committee of a lunatic, or a guardian of a tender infant has a chose in action properly in his hands belonging to the estate of his cestui que trust, and such personal representative allows time enough to elapse from maturity of the chose to bar a recovery thereon, and he brings an action thereon and fails to recover, his right of action is gone, and with his loss of such right so goes that of his cestui que trust. So as to land. If trustees who hold a legal title allow the statute of limitations to bar them, or a presumption of a grant to arise, the right of action for the land is barred and their cestui que trust are barred also. Trustees v. Jennings, 40 S. C. 168, 18 S. E. 257, 891, 42 Am. St. Rep. 854.' Here on the 18th day of February, 1890, H. D. D. Twiggs, the grantee of the trustee, H. A. Duncan, conveyed the land in dispute to H. F. Snelling, who, it is admitted, was in possession for more than ten years under his conveyance. This gave him, as against the trustee and Twiggs, at least a title by adverse possession under the statute of limitations, and such title was subsequently acquired by the defendant.

"This being my view of the law applicable to the facts in the case, I do not regard it material to decide what effect, if any, should be given to the tax title set up by the defendant herein. I may say, however, that owing to the absence of proof as to statutory requirements having been complied with, I am doubtful whether the plaintiffs would be barred by that deed if they otherwise had any rights in the premises. My conclusion, therefore, is that the plaintiffs have failed to establish any title to the two-fifths interest in the land in dispute, and I hold that the same is in the defendant.

"It is therefore ordered and adjudged that the plaintiffs have no interest in the tract of land described in the complaint, and that the complaint herein be dismissed, with costs."

B. T. Rice, for appellants. J. O. Patterson & Son, for respondent.

WOODS, J. This is a case of much difficulty, and the plaintiff's counsel has made a strong presentation of the argument against the construction of the trust deed from W. D. Duncan to H. A. Duncan adopted by the circuit judge. After careful consideration, however, we have concluded to adopt the reasoning of the circuit decree as sound and convincing.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

(78 S. C. 317)

COOPER et al. v. COOPER et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 5, 1907.)

1. WILLS—CONSTRUCTION—PERSONS ENTITLED TO TAKE.

Testator, who had been twice married, after making certain bequests to his widow in lieu of dower, provided: "I give her also a life interest, or as long as she remains my widow, an equal portion with my children, * * * and at her death or marriage said property to be equally divided between all of 'our' surviving children, or those of them who may not have completed their education, should there be any such." The residue of his estate was given to "my" surviving children, to be equally divided among them, except a daughter by his first marriage, who was given an equal share in the real estate only, and except, also, two sons of that marriage, as to whom he provided that, having completed their education, he desired them to receive only one-third each of a child's portion of his personal estate, besides their full share of his real estate. At the will's date the children of the first marriage were all of age, and had completed their education, but none of the children of the second marriage were of age, and some were of quite tender years. Held, that children of the first marriage, who survived the widow, were not entitled to share in the remainder after her life estate, and that the same went to the children of the second marriage, and, all of them having completed their education at the widow's death, only those who survived her were entitled to take.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 49, Wills, § 1063.]

2. SAME—VESTED OR CONTINGENT ESTATES.

Where the persons who are to take under a will are uncertain, as where it depends on who shall survive a life tenant, the remainder is not only contingent, but nontransmissible.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Sumter County; D. E. Hydrick, Judge.

Partition by Robert Muldrow Cooper and others against Francis Pelot Cooper and others. Decree for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed on the opinion of the court below.

The following is the opinion of Hydrick, J., in the court below:

"This is an action for the partition of the tract of land described in the complaint, and incidentally for the construction of the will of George William Cooper. Trial by the jury was duly waived by consent of the attorneys for all parties. The original will is in the handwriting of the testator, and the word 'our,' in the paragraph hereinafter copied, was underscored in the original will by testator. The will is dated July 30, 1874. Testator died April 5, 1875, leaving surviving him his widow, Rosa I. Cooper, and nine children, three by a former marriage, viz., Mary Jane Petrie, William Albert Cooper, and Robert Muldrow Cooper, and six by the second and last marriage, viz., Rosa Leycester Cooper, Francis Pelot Cooper, Edward Wood Cooper, Harriett Cooper Cheyne, Hamilton Witherspoon Cooper and Augustus Thomas Cooper. At the date of the second marriage, the children of the first marriage were all quite small, the youngest of them being an infant in arms, who never knew any other mother than his step-mother, who treated the children of the first marriage just as she did her own. The children of the two marriages treated each other just as brothers and sisters of the whole blood, so that the family lived together most amicably. After giving the widow $5,000 in cash, or securities, at her option, his best carriage and pair of horses, her saddle pony, all the property which she possessed at the time of their marriage, and all that she had subsequently inherited, the same to be in lieu of dower, the will proceeds as follows: 'I give her also a life interest or as long as she remains my widow, an equal portion with my children, as hereinafter named, i. e. a child's portion, of all property both real and personal, of which I may be possessed at the time of my decease. She to occupy my dwelling house or houses, with my children, and have exclusive use of all my household and kitchen furniture and at her death or marriage, said property to be equally divided between all of our surviving children, or those of them who may not have completed their education, should there be any such.' The residue of the estate is given to his surviving children, to be equally divided among them, except Mary Jane Petrie, who is given an equal share only in the real estate, and except, also, William Albert and Robert Muldrow, of whom the will says: 'My sons, Wm. A. and Robt. M. Cooper, having completed their education, I desire them to receive one-third each of a child's portion of my personal estate besides their full share of my real estate.'

"At the date of the will, the children of the first marriage were all of age and had all practically completed their education. Robert M. Cooper was at college during the last year of his father's life, but it was his last year at college before graduating, and his education was so nearly completed that his father regarded it as practically completed, and so states in his will. At that time none of the children of the second marriage were of age and some of them were of quite tender years. The tract described in the complaint was set apart to the widow, under the provisions of the will above quoted, and occupied by her until her death, which occurred May 13, 1905. The widow was survived by Mary Jane Petrie and Robert Muldrow Cooper, children of the first marriage, and by Francis Pelot Cooper, Harriett Cooper Cheyne, Hamilton Witherspoon Cooper, and Augustus Thomas Cooper, children of the second marriage. After the death of testator, and before the death of his widow, William Albert and Edward Wood Cooper died, leaving no issue, and Rosa Leycester Cooper, having intermarried with James Read Muldrow, died leaving one child, the defendant, Sarah Rosa Muldrow. The defendants, Thomas Hasell Dick and George W. Dick, are the children of Mary Scott Cooper, the eldest daughter of testator, who intermarried with Thomas Hasell Dick, Sr., and died before her father.

"The questions arising upon the record are (1) whether the remainder to 'our surviving children' is transmissible; and (2) whether the children of the first marriage who survived the widow are entitled to share therein. I have had no doubt on either point. But in deference to the earnestness and zeal, as well as the ability, with which counsel for plaintiffs maintained their contention, I have given the points careful consideration.

"It is alleged in the complaint, and argued by plaintiff's counsel, that the scheme of the will manifests an intention of testator that all his property should be equally divided among all his children. That may be so if previous advancements and educational advantages are taken into account, but not otherwise. It is not conceded, however, that absolute equality in the division was intended, at any rate that such intention is to be gathered from the will; for upon the face of the will it appears that Mrs. Petrie was to get no part of the personal estate and William A. and Robert M. were to get only one-third each of a child's part thereof, for the reason, as stated by the testator as to the two last named, that they had already completed their education. Nor does such an intention appear when the will is read in the light of the testimony, from which it appears that testator had two grandchildren, the children of a predeceased daughter, for whom no provision is made. It would be purely speculative to undertake to account for these apparent inequalities. It suffices that it was the testator's will. Throughout the will, testator uses the pronoun 'my' where it is appropriate to express his intention. In referring to the children of both marriages, he speaks of them as 'my' children. Had he intended to give the remainder in question to all his children, he would not have changed the use of 'my,' and used 'our,' for 'my' would have been the more appropriate word to express that intention. When he abandoned the use of 'my' and used 'our' and underscored it, the conclusion seems inevitable that he meant to emphasize the distinction between the two words, and thereby say to the expositor of his will 'I mean that "our" shall be construed to mean "our" (that is, mine and my wife's) in contradistinction to "my" children, which includes the children of both marriages.' This intention is made even clearer by the succeeding words, 'or those of them who may not have completed their education, should there be any such'; for, having already said that the older set of children had all completed their education, these words show clearly that he meant the remainder to be used in the first contingency, as an educational fund for the benefit of those children of the second marriage who might not have completed their education at the falling in of the prior estate. If, at that time, there had been some who had completed their education, and some who had not, those who had not would have taken to the exclusion of those who had. This intention, though clearly enough expressed in the language of the will, is made even clearer by reading the will in the light of the circumstances of the testator when he penned it. As all the children of the second marriage had completed their education prior to the death of the widow, the only remaining contingency was as to which of them would survive the period of distribution. Where the persons who are to take are uncertain, as where it depends upon who shall survive, the life tenant, as in this case, the remainder is not only contingent, but nontransmissible. Roundtree v. Roundtree, 28 S. C. 450, 2 S. E. 474.

"Therefore only the children of the second marriage who survived the widow are entitled to share in the remainder; and it is so ordered, adjudged, and decreed. Parties may apply for such further orders as may be necessary to carry out these views."

Shand & Shand and Haynsworth & Haynsworth, for appellants. Lee & Moise, for respondent Augustus Cooper. James Simons, for respondent F. P. Cooper. McLeod & Dennis, for respondent Mrs. Harriett C. Cheyne.

WOODS, J. The reasoning of the circuit decree is convincing, and we are satisfied to adopt it.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

(78 S. C. 57)

FREE v. SOUTHERN RY.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Sept. 2, 1907.)

1. STATUTES—EVIDENCE OF FOREIGN STATUTES.

The statutes of another state can only be proved by printed volumes of the statutes purporting to have been published by state authority.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, Statutes, § 890; vol. 20, Evidence, §§ 1235, 1236.]

2. DEATH—ACTION—PLEADING.

Under the statutes of North Carolina granting recovery by personal representatives in an action for wrongful death, a nonsuit should not be granted because the statute gave a personal representative the right to sue without naming the beneficiaries, where the complaint alleged that the action was for the benefit of the parents of deceased.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT—INJURY TO SERVANT—NEGLIGENCE.

Where the evidence shows that a railroad employé while working in the yard and watching another train was run over by a switch engine which had no watchman, gave no warning, but was running at a rapid rate of speed, the jury may infer negligence and a want of contributory negligence.

Gary, A. J., dissenting.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Spartanburg County; Prince, Judge.

Action by John Free, administrator of Jules Free, against the Southern Railway. From an order of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Stanyarne Wilson, for appellant. Sanders & De Pass, for respondent.

WOODS, J. Jules Free, an employé of the Southern Railway Company, was killed by one of its engines in September, 1904, at Charlotte, N. C. His father, John Free, qualified as administrator in this state and brought this action to recover damages. The complaint contains this allegation: "That under the law of the state of North Carolina, known as the 'Lord Campbell Act,' the defendant, by the said wrongful killing of Jules Free, became liable to this plaintiff as administrator, for the benefit of his parents, for the damages caused by the said wrongful conduct, and that said plaintiff, as such administrator, was thereby damaged in the sum of $2,000, for which he asks judgment." A nonsuit was granted on the grounds that there was no proof of a statute in North Carolina allowing such a suit for the benefit of parents of the person killed. The following statute of North Carolina was admitted: "That any servant or employee of any railroad company operating in this state, who shall suffer injury to his person, or the personal representative of any servant or employee who shall have suffered death, in the course of his service or employment with said company, by the negligence, carelessness, or incapacity of any servant, employee, or agent of the company, or by any defect in the machinery, ways, or appliances of the company, shall be entitled to maintain an action against such company."

1. The plaintiff attempted to prove the statute law of North Carolina provided that such an action as this should be brought for the benefit of parents by introducing the reports of the Supreme Court of North Carolina. A statute of a sister state cannot be so proved in the courts of this state. Nothing less than printed copies of the volume containing the statute purporting to have been published by the state authority will be taken as evidence. Civ. Code 1902, § 2890. The circuit judge was therefore right in holding that the only statute law of North Carolina before the court was the statute above quoted. An examination of the case of Killian v. Railway Co., 128 N. C. 261, 38 S. E. 873, on which the plaintiff relied, shows that he was also right in holding that that case does not state the law of North Carolina to be that an action like this is to be brought for the benefit of the parents. For the purposes of this case, therefore, the statute law of North Carolina must be taken as giving a right of action to the personal representative of the person who shall have suffered death in the manner laid down in the statute above quoted, without providing for any special beneficiary.

2. The case, then, is this: The plaintiff in bringing this action as the administrator of Jules Free made allegations complete and sufficient in all respects under the statute, except he erroneously alleged the defendant became liable to him, as administrator of Jules Free, for the benefit of his parents. The circuit judge granted the nonsuit on the ground that the use in the complaint of the words, "for the benefit of his parents," was a fatal departure from the statute. We are unable to assent to this view. If the plaintiff, as administrator, was entitled to recover, his recovery should not be defeated because he has erroneously alleged he must hold his recovery for the benefit of certain persons. Under the statute of North Carolina, as proved, a complete cause of action was stated in the complaint, without the reference to the supposed beneficiary, and that should have been regarded as mere surplusage. This conclusion rests well on the reasoning of Mr. Justice Jones in Morris v. Gas & Elec. Co., 70 S. C. 281, 49 S. E. 854: "The statute is remedial, and should be liberally construed, so as to accomplish its object. It was designed to remove the common-law rule, founded on the maxim, 'Actio personalis moritur cum persona,' as an obstacle to the recovery of damages for the death of a party by a wrongful act, neglect, or default of another, and to create a right of action in the administrator of the deceased for the benefit of the person named in the statute. In re Estate of Mayo, 60 S. C. 401, 38 S. E. 634, 54 L. R. A. 660. The award of damages for the wrongful death is the important matter. The manner of distribution is of secondary consideration." The case of Lilly v. Railway Co., 32 S. C. 142, 10 S. E. 932, was obviously different, and we think the doctrine of that case should not be extended.

The defendant contends, however, that the law of North Carolina, as proved in this case, is essentially different from the law of this state, in that it does not designate the persons for whose benefit the administrator is allowed to recover; while the corresponding statute of this state provided for distribution among certain kindred of the deceased. As indicated in Morris v. Gas & Elec. Co., supra, the essential thing in the varying statutes of the several states is the same, namely, the giving of a right of action to the administrator or some other person interested in the life of the deceased in his own behalf or as trustee for others. Any variance as to the beneficiaries and the method of distribution ought to be regarded as a minor difference. It was held in Dennick v. Central R. R. Co., 103 U. S. 11, 18, 26 L. Ed. 439: "Wherever, either by the common law or the statute law of a state, a right of action has become fixed and a legal liability incurred, that liability may be enforced and the right of action pursued in any court which has jurisdiction of such matters and can obtain jurisdiction of the parties. * * * If the liability to pay money was fixed by the law of the state where the transaction occurred, is it to be said it can be enforced nowhere else, because it depended upon statute law, and not upon common law? It would be a very dangerous doctrine to establish that, in all cases where the several states have established the statute for the common law, the liability can be enforced in no other state but that where the statute was enacted and the transaction occurred." After much judicial discussion, the authority and reasoning of this case is now generally recognized with this qualification, that the courts of one state will not recognize a cause of action arising in another state, when the statute of such other state giving the right of action is contrary to the public policy of the state where the action is brought. Dennis v. Railroad Co., 70 S. C. 257, 49 S. E. 869, 106 Am. St. Rep. 746; Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 18 Sup. Ct. 224, 36 L. Ed. 1123; Stewart v. Railroad Co., 168 U. S. 445, 18 Sup. Ct. 105, 42 L. Ed. 537; Texas, etc., R. R. Co. v. Cox, 145 U. S. 593, 12 Sup. Ct. 905, 36 L. Ed. 829; Leonard v. Columbia S. E. Co., 84 N. Y. 48, 38 Am. Rep. 491; Higgins v. Central, N. E. & W. R. R. Co., 155 Mass. 176, 29 N. E. 534, 31 Am. St. Rep. 544. The numerous other federal and state cases to the same effect will be found collated in Attrill v. Huntington, 70 Md. 191, 16 Atl. 651, 2 L. R. A. 779, 14 Am. St. Rep. 354; 10 Rose's Notes on U. S. Reports, 3; Id. 856.

The North Carolina statute on which this action rests is entirely consistent with the public policy of this state as expressed in its statute giving a right of action in such case to the personal representative of the deceased; and it is not opposed to the public policy of this state because in the subordinate matter of distribution the South Carolina statute names the beneficiaries, and the North Carolina statute, as proved, leaves the recovery in the hands of the administrator for general distribution. It is true the plaintiff's exception does not set out as clearly as is desired the error which we think was committed in granting the nonsuit. But exceptions should be liberally construed where they do not mislead or surprise opposing counsel. Looking at the exception in that light, it does raise the question that a nonsuit should not have been granted for failure to prove, by the printed volume of the statute of North Carolina, that any recovery by the administrator would be for the benefit of the parents. Respondent's counsel was not surprised nor misled, for the point on which we think the judgment should be reversed was fully and ably argued by him.

3. The defendant has given due notice that he would ask to have the nonsuit sustained on the additional grounds (1) that there was no proof of negligence by the defendant; and (2) that no other inference could be drawn from the evidence than that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. Defendant offered no evidence, and plaintiff's witnesses were in substantial agreement as to the circumstances of the killing. Jules Free was a boy employed to carry water to a gang of hands working near the station at Charlotte, N. C. As Free was returning across the tracks with water, his attention attracted by an approaching freight train, he was struck and killed by a switch engine coming from the opposite direction on another track. Witnesses variously estimated the speed of the switch engine at from 20 to 35 miles an hour, and they all testified there was no watchman on its pilot, and no warning of its approach by bell or whistle. From this evidence the jury might well infer the defendant was negligent in running its switch engine at such a rate of speed in a yard where there were several tracks and the confusion of other moving trains, without a guard on the pilot and without signals, and that, in these circumstances, the unfortunate boy in crossing the track in the discharge of the duty assigned to him was not guilty of contributory negligence in not seeing the engine and getting out of its way.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the circuit court be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

GARY, A. J. (dissenting). This is an action under the statute of North Carolina (Revised 1905, § 59), commonly known as "Lord Campbell's Act," on account of the death of plaintiff's intestate, who was in the employment of the defendant, and was killed, by one of its switch engines in the yards at Charlotte, N. C., while crossing one of its tracks. The sixth paragraph of the complaint is as follows: "That under the law of the state of North Carolina, known as the 'Lord Campbell Act,' the defendant, by said wrongful killing of said Jules Free, became liable to this plaintiff as his administrator for the benefit of his parents for the damages caused by said wrongful conduct, and that said plaintiff, as such administrator, was thereby damaged in the sum of $2,000, for which he asks judgment." The defendant answered the complaint, denying all except the formal allegations thereof, and setting up the defenses of contributory negligence and assumption of risk. The plaintiff filed a reply alleging the statute of North Carolina as follows: "That any servant or employé of any railroad company operating in this state, who shall suffer injury to his person, or the personal representative of any servant or employé who shall have suffered death in the course of his service or employment with said company, by the negligence, carelessness or incapacity of any servant, employé or agent of the company, or by any defect in the machinery ways or appliances of the company, shall be entitled to maintain an action against such company." At the close of the plaintiff's testimony the defendant made a motion for a nonsuit on the following grounds: "(1) That there is no proof here that, under the law of North Carolina, where this accident happened, that the plaintiff can recover. This act does not set out for whose benefit the action shall be brought. (2) That if the suit is brought here in the name of the personal representative that personal representative must be a personal representative of North Carolina, and not a man in this state. (3) That as an additional ground all the evidence shows the deceased was guilty of contributory negligence." The plaintiff then requested permission to amend paragraph 6 of the complaint, so as to conform the pleadings to the facts proved, but the request was refused.

The nonsuit was granted on the first of said grounds, and the plaintiff appealed, upon a single exception, which is as follows: "That his honor erred in holding that the only way in which the Lord Campbell act of North Carolina, referred to in the complaint, could be proven, was by a volume of the statutes of North Carolina, and in granting nonsuit because such statute was not produced; it being respectfully submitted that the proof offered by the plaintiff, to wit, the decision of the Supreme Court of North Carolina, and the decision of the Supreme Court of South Carolina, as to what that statute was, was sufficient proof of such statute to go to the jury." It seems to us that the exception was taken under a misapprehension of the ruling of his honor, the presiding judge. The decision in the case of Killian v. Railroad, 128 N. C. 261, 38 S. E. 873, was introduced in evidence without objection, but, when the plaintiff offered to introduce the decision in the case of Dennis v. Railroad, 70

S. C. 254, 49 S. E. 869, 106 Am. St. Rep. 746, the following took place: "Mr. Sanders: We do not admit that as evidence. Mr. Wilson: I offer it as evidence. Mr. Sanders: We object to the South Carolina report going in as evidence. Court: I hold that the statement found in that decision of the Supreme Court of South Carolina, as to what Lord Campbell's act is in North Carolina, is not evidence, is not the best evidence of what that act really is. That is not the way to prove it. That can only be proven by the volume of the statutes of North Carolina. What the act of the North Carolina Legislature is cannot be proven by the decision of the Supreme Court of South Carolina. As to the case of Killian v. Railroad Company, 128 N. C. 261, 38 S. E. 873, introduced in behalf of the plaintiff, for the purpose of showing what the Lord Campbell's act in North Carolina is, it is, in my judgment, insufficient for that purpose, even if I were of the opinion that the decision of the Supreme Court of South Carolina was the proper method of proving a North Carolina act. In that case it was shown that the Lord Campbell's act, § 1498 (Code 1883), provided: Whenever the death of a person is caused by the wrongful act of another, action therefor may be brought. Section 1499 provided that the plaintiff in such action may recover such damages as are fair and just compensation, resulting from such death. That being the case, and as the court is now advised that this North Carolina case, even if it is proper evidence as to what provision is made, for whose benefit the suit is to be brought, and as the plaintiff has alleged in his complaint that the act provides for the bringing of such a suit by the personal representative, in a case like this, where there is the death of his son, for the benefit of the parent, and as this suit is brought for the benefit of the parent of the deceased by the personal representative, and that there is no evidence before the court that under the North Carolina statutes suit can be brought and maintained for the benefit of the parent, the motion for a nonsuit is sustained for want of evidence, showing that an action under the statute of North Carolina, for a wrongful act causing the death of the deceased, is authorized to be brought by the personal representative, for the benefit of the parent of the deceased, when that deceased is a child."

Section 2890 of the Code of Laws, which provides the manner of proving the statutes of other states, is as follows: "Printed copies in volumes of statutes, Code, or other written law enacted by any other sovereignty, state or territory, or foreign government, purporting or proved to have been published by the authority thereof, or proved to be commonly admitted as evidence of the existing law in the courts and judicial tribunals of such sovereignty, state, territory, or government, shall be admitted by the courts and officers of this state, on all occasions, as presumptive evidence of such laws. The unwritten or common law of any other sovereignty, state or territory, or foreign government, may be proved as facts by parol evidence; and the books of reports of cases adjudged in their courts may also be admitted as presumptive evidence of such law." This section shows that the ruling of the presiding judge, when objection was interposed to the introduction in evidence of the South Carolina decision, was free from error. We do not understand his honor to have ruled that the decision in the Killian Case was not competent evidence of the North Carolina statute, but that it failed to show that the personal representative of the deceased could bring the action for the benefit of the parents, in consequence of which there was no testimony to sustain the allegation of the complaint in this respect.

For these reasons, I dissent.

(78 S. C. 105)

FORREST v. McBEE.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Aug. 20, 1907.)

1. JUDGMENT—RES JUDICATA.

The judgment of a circuit court on appeal from a magistrate's court is res judicata of the issue involved when not appealed from.

2. AGRICULTURE—LIENS—FORECLOSURE—VOID WARRANT—LIABILITY OF PLAINTIFF.

Where plaintiff brought an action before a magistrate to foreclose an agricultural lien, he is responsible for the acts of the constable acting under a warrant which was void because of the negligence of the magistrate, though plaintiff acted in good faith, and did not specially authorize the constable to make the levy.

3. APPEAL—LAW OF CASE.

Questions of law determined by the Supreme Court are the law of the case on any subsequent trials.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 4661.]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Greenville County; Watts, Judge.

Action by Anderson Forrest against S. L. McBee. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

See 51 S. E. 675.

J. J. McSwain, for appellant. Blythe & Blythe, for respondent.

GARY, A. J. This is an action to recover damages for the seizure of the plaintiff's crops under an agricultural warrant issued by a magistrate at the instance of the defendant, on the ground that the proceedings were null and void, by reason of the fact that the defendant failed to file an undertaking in compliance with the requirements of the statute. The facts are stated in the former opinion of this court, reported in 72 S. C. 189, 51 S. E. 675. The jury rendered a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $25, and the defendant appealed.

The appellant's attorney, in his printed argument, discusses the exceptions under three general heads, and in considering the questions presented by the exceptions we will follow his arrangement.

1. The first of the heads is "that the presiding judge erred in his construction of the opinion of this court upon the former appeal." After reading to the jury all the requests of the defendant, his honor, the presiding judge, charged: "Now, gentlemen, that is very good law, and I charge it to you, except as I may hereinafter modify it in charging you, generally. I charge you as a matter of law that the court having decided that the taking of that property under the warrant sworn out by Mr. McBee was illegal, unlawful, and wrong, that has been adjudicated, and there was no appeal taken from that. The record shows that, when the matter came up before Judge Klugh, he sustained the magistrate, and held that the attachment was illegal and unlawful, and, if Mr. McBee had seen fit, he could have appealed, but there was no appeal taken, and that is out of it. And the court has decided that the taking of the property by the constable under the proceedings issued by Mr. Cox, at the instigation of Mr. McBee, was unlawful and illegal, and, that being the case, the plaintiff is entitled to recover whatever actual damages he has sustained by the taking of that property, and the jury can award him such actual damages as flow from the seizure of that property illegally." Our construction of this portion of the charge is that his honor, the presiding judge, had reference to the ruling of his honor, Judge Klugh, and not to the opinion of the Supreme Court. But, even if we are in error, the decision of Judge Klugh had the effect which the appellant contends the presiding judge erroneously ascribed to the opinion of this court, and therefore there was not, in any event, prejudicial error.

2. Under the second of said general heads, the appellant contends "that the defendant, McBee, is not liable for the act of the constable, done in pursuance of a warrant, which was void by reason of the negligence of the magistrate, when defendant, McBee, acted in good faith, did not improperly influence the magistrate to issue such void warrant, nor specially authorize the constable to make a levy under such void warrant, nor did he subsequently ratify the same." The principles for which the appellant's attorney contend are antagonistic to the views expressed by this court in its former opinion, and cannot be sustained for the following reasons: In the first place, the questions of law determined by this court upon the former appeal are res judicata, and the principles then announced must be followed throughout the trial of the case, until it is finally disposed of (Carpenter v. Lewis, 65 S. C. 400, 43 S. E. 881); and, in the second place, the court, after carefully reviewing the doctrine stated in the former opinion, sees no reason to recede from it.

3. Under the trial of the general heads, the appellant's attorney contends "that the presiding judge charged on the facts, and indicated his opinion." Before the commencement of the last trial on circuit, the court allowed the plaintiff to strike out of the complaint all allegations of willfulness or malice on the part of the defendant in instituting the proceedings to seize the crops of the plaintiff, and also granted the motion to strike out of the answer certain allegations and defenses, by which amendments the issues that remained were very few. After considering the charge of the presiding judge in its entirety, we are unable to discover wherein it violated article 5, § 26, of the Constitution.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

(78 S. C. 23)

LANGSTON v. COTHRAN et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Aug. 20, 1907.)

1. WITNESSES—TRANSACTIONS WITH DECEDENT.

A son, after introduction of a deed to him by his father, since deceased, may testify that he bought the land of the father and paid for it, such testimony being not inadmissible under Code Civ. Proc. 1902, § 400, as relating to transactions with decedents.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 50, Witnesses, § 664.]

2. SAME.

That decedent was in possession of certain land when he conveyed the same to the witness is not a transaction between the witness and the decedent as to which the witness was incompetent to testify.

3. PROPERTY—EVIDENCE OF CLAIM OF TITLE—DOCUMENTARY.

Tax receipts are admissible to show that the party paying the taxes claimed the land.

4. TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS.

A request to charge is properly denied where there is no evidence on which to base it.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, § 596.]

5. ADVERSE POSSESSION—DISCLAIMER.

Where a person disclaimed title to land, and thereafter held it openly, notoriously, and adversely for 10 years, he would have a good title.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 1, Adverse Possession, §§ 65-76.]

6. PROPERTY—TITLE—POSSESSION—LEGALITY—BURDEN OF PROOF.

It is incumbent on those alleging that possession of land is unlawful to establish such fact.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 40, Property, § 9.]

7. TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—CONFORMITY TO ISSUES.

Where an answer denied title to the land in controversy in plaintiff, and also set up adverse possession, it was proper to refuse to charge only on the question of adverse possession.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, § 587.]

8. EJECTMENT—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where the court in ejectment gave an instruction in accord with the request of plaintiff, and added thereto: "This is good law, and, if plaintiff has shown good title, it is a question of fact for you whether it has been defeated"—such added words were simply explanatory.

tory, and did not affect the proposition of law as given.

9. APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR.

A correct abstract proposition not applicable to the evidence held not prejudicial, where it could not have misled the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 4220.]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Greenville County; Purdy, Judge.

Action by Elizabeth Langston against John Cotheran and others. Judgment for defendants. Plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

The following are the exceptions:

"(1) That his honor, the presiding judge, erred in allowing the witness T. O. Cooley, one of the defendants, to testify, against the objection of the plaintiff, as to transactions between the said witness and the deceased, John J. Cooley; said testimony being inadmissible under section 400 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1902.

"(2) That his honor erred in allowing the witness John T. Cooley, one of the defendants, to testify, against the objection of the plaintiff, as to transactions between the said witness and John J. Cooley, deceased, said testimony being inadmissible under section 400 of the Code, and to testify that the said John J. Cooley was 'in possession' of the land in dispute at the times designated by the witness; the question of possession being one of law in this case.

"(3) That his honor erred in allowing the witness John C. Cotheran, one of the defendants, to testify, against the objection of the plaintiff, to transactions between the said witness and John J. Cooley, deceased, said testimony being inadmissible under section 400 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1902.

"(4) That his honor erred in admitting in evidence, against the objection of the plaintiff, tax receipts of John J. Cooley, deceased, without any proof whatever that they referred to the land in dispute.

"(5) That his honor erred in refusing to charge the jury, as requested by plaintiff's counsel, as follows: 'That, if the jury believe that John J. Cooley went into possession of the land in question as one of the heirs at law of Hiram Cooley, then he could not as a matter of law hold adversely to the other heirs without giving them unequivocal notice of such claim; and, if the jury further believe that he gave no such notice to the other heirs, then these defendants claiming under him cannot successfully plead the statute of limitations against the claim of the plaintiff, and their verdict should be for the plaintiff.'

"(6) That his honor erred in refusing to charge the jury, as requested by plaintiff's counsel, as follows: 'That to constitute adverse possession, the party setting up such plea must show that he held the land, claiming it as his own, against all other claimants, and, if the jury believe from the evidence that John J. Cooley at any time while cultivating the land admitted that he had no title to it, and did not claim it as his own, then the plea of adverse possession and the statute of limitations must fail, and the verdict of the jury must be for the plaintiff.'

"(8) That his honor erred in refusing to charge the jury, as requested by the plaintiff's counsel, as follows: 'That there is no presumption of law in favor of one in possession of land unless he claim it as his own and notify others who may be interested, if any, that he does so claim it.'

"(9) That his honor erred in refusing to charge the jury, as requested by the plaintiff's counsel, as follows: 'That the defense in this case rests entirely upon the theory of adverse possession in John J. Cooley, for no paper title in John J. Cooley has been shown, except the will of Hiram Cooley, which conveys to John J. Cooley 200 acres, and no more.'

"(10) That his honor erred in refusing to charge the jury, as requested by plaintiff's counsel, as follows: 'That, if the jury find that the plaintiff has shown a good title to the land, then she is presumed to be the owner of the land until the contrary be shown.'

"(11) That his honor erred in charging the jury as follows: 'If John J. Cooley went into possession of the land in dispute before the death of Hiram Cooley, and remained continuously in open, notorious possession thereafter for 10 years, holding the same adversely to the said Hiram Cooley and the whole world, and such period of adverse holding had elapsed before the death of the said Hiram Cooley, he thereby acquired good title to the said land against the said Hiram Cooley and the whole world'—there being no evidence of any such holding, and so misleading and confusing the jury.

"(12) That his honor erred in charging the jury as follows: 'That, if John J. Cooley had acquired title to the said land by such adverse holding at the death of the said Hiram Cooley, the said Hiram Cooley could not defeat it or take the land away from him by last will and testament or otherwise without his consent'—there being no evidence of any such state of facts in the case.

"(13) That his honor erred in charging the jury as follows: 'If the said John J. Cooley had not in any way acquired title to the land in dispute at the time of the death of the said Hiram Cooley, and if the said Hiram Cooley did not give the same to him by last will and testament, and did not give it to any one else by his last will and testament, then, under the tenth clause of the last will and testament of Hiram Cooley, it became the duty of his executor to sell the same and apply the proceeds of sale as therein directed'—this being irrelevant and having no bearing upon the facts proven.

"(14) That his honor erred in charging the jury as follows: 'If the said John J. Cooley was continuously in open, notorious, and adverse possession of the said tract of land, holding it adversely to all the world, for 30 years after the death of Hiram Cooley, and after his will was admitted to probate, then the law presumes that after such a length of time that the executor of the said will, or some person having authority to carry out the provisions of said will according to law, sold said land as directed in the will and executed and delivered a deed to the said John J. Cooley. The law raises such presumption to quiet possessions of long standing and put an end to litigation—this being in direct contradiction of the facts proven and tending to mislead the jury.

"(15) That his honor erred in charging the jury as follows: 'If said John J. Cooley was in the exclusive, open and notorious possession of said land for 30 years after the death of the said Hiram Cooley, holding it adversely to all the world, he would under such presumption have good title thereto, and if being so in possession, and after having so acquired title thereto, he conveyed or devised the same to the defendants, or to others from whom the defendants have derived title thereto, your verdict should be for the defendants'—there being no proof that John J. Cooley ever held the land adversely, but, on the contrary, repeatedly stated that he claimed no title to it.

"(16) That his honor erred in charging the jury as follows: 'If the said John J. Cooley was in the exclusive, open, and notorious possession of the land in dispute for 20 years continuously after the death of the said Hiram Cooley, holding it openly and adversely to the heirs at law of the said Hiram Cooley and all the world, the law at the end of the 20 years of such holding presumes that he acquired title thereto from the state and every other person in interest, including such heirs at law. And the law in such case presumes that he acquired title at the beginning of his possession'—there being no proof of such holding.

"(17) That if the said John J. Cooley acquired title to said land in any manner, and if, after acquiring title thereto, he conveyed or devised the same to the defendants or others through whom the defendants have obtained such title, then your verdict should be for the defendants'—the testimony showing that John J. Cooley neither acquired nor claimed title to the land.

"(18) That his honor erred in charging the jury as follows: 'That if the said John J. Cooley claimed the land to known boundaries or fenced or inclosed the same, and held exclusive, open, notorious, and adverse possession of the same to such fence, inclosed or known boundaries, for the period of time hereinabove stated, he would be entitled to all the land within such known boundaries or extending to such fence or inclosure'—there being no proof of any such state of facts in the case."

Julius H. Heyward, for appellant. B. M. Shuman, for respondents.

GARY, A. J. This is an action to recover the tract of land described in the complaint.

The facts are thus stated by the appellant's attorney: "In the year 1820 one Pleasant Saddler conveyed to Hiram Cooley a tract of land lying in Greenville county (then district), and containing 266 acres, more or less. In the year 1859, or 1860, Hiram Cooley measured off 200 acres from this tract, and allowed his son, John J. Cooley, to occupy the said 200 acres, but made him no deed. Subsequently Hiram Cooley moved to Anderson, where he died in 1864, leaving a will whereby he devised, inter alia, as follows: '8th. I give and bequeath to my son, John J. Cooley, the two hundred acres of land upon which he now lives, being the same I had surveyed for him some two or three years ago, but never executed the title.' This will is dated February 11, 1862, and was probated in Anderson in April, 1864; one B. F. Mauldin being appointed executor. By the tenth clause of said will the executor is required to 'sell and convey the entire residue of my property, both real and personal, not disposed of by this will, and divide the proceeds equally among my children,' as therein named. On July 4th the executor, B. F. Mauldin, died without having sold the 66 acres of the Saddler tract. In the meantime John J. Cooley used the said 66 acres, but repeatedly stated to his children and others that it was not his land, and that he claimed no title to it. In July, 1896, John J. Cooley and his then wife, Stacey Cooley, executed together certain deeds purporting to convey, with other lands, parts of the said 66 acres to certain of their children, and in November of the same year John J. Cooley executed a will, whereby he undertook to devise the remaining portions of said land to others of his children by said marriage. All these papers were executed while the said John J. Cooley was in a dying condition. On December 13, 1896, John J. Cooley died. He had been twice married, and left children by each marriage. In the year 1896, before the death of John J. Cooley, action was commenced in the court of common pleas for the county of Greenville by the children of the first wife against John J. Cooley and his children of the second wife, for the recovery of the said 66 acres, as the property of their mother, the first wife. In the progress of said action, this plaintiff, for the first time, received information as to the condition of the title, and that she might have an interest in the land under the tenth clause of the will of Hiram Cooley, she being one of the children of Hiram named in said clause. This plaintiff thereupon, in the year 1898, instituted an examination of the records, and, having ascertained the fact as above set forth, applied, by advice of counsel, to the probate court for Anderson county for appointment as administratrix de bonis non, cum testamento annexo of the will of Hiram Cooley, which appointment was duly made on the 21st day of March, 1902. On the 1st day of February, 1904, being sales day, said 66 acres was, after due advertisement, offered for sale at public outcry at Greenville courthouse, and duly knocked down to the plaintiff herein, she being the highest bidder therefor. A deed having been duly executed and delivered, this action was commenced on April 17, 1905, by service of the summons and complaint on the defendants personally. The cause came on for a hearing for the second time before Hon. R. O. Purdy, circuit judge, and a jury, at Greenville, at the June term, 1906. The jury found for the defendants, and judgment having been entered, this appeal is taken upon exceptions to the rulings and charge of the presiding judge." There was testimony also tending to show that John J. Cooley was in the open and notorious possession of the land, exercising acts of ownership, for more than 50 years prior to his death.

The exceptions will be set out in the report of the case, and considered in their regular order.

1. First exception: The exception fails to specify the transactions, but, waiving this objection, it cannot be sustained. The witness T. O. Cooley was allowed to testify that he bought the land from John J. Cooley and paid him for it. The deed which John J. Cooley executed to T. O. Cooley had already been introduced in evidence, and it was not contended that there was fraud in its execution. The seal to a deed imports a consideration. Therefore the amount paid by the witness for the land was wholly immaterial.

2. Second exception: His honor, the presiding judge, allowed the witness John T. Cooley to testify that John J. Cooley was in possession of the land when he made the several conveyances to the witness and others. This testimony did not relate to a transaction or communication between John T. Cooley and John J. Cooley, and was not objectionable under section 400 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1902.

3. Third exception: There was no objection to the testimony mentioned in this exception.

4. Fourth exception: The tax receipts are not set out in the record. Such receipts are, however, admissible for the purpose of showing that the party paying the taxes claimed the land. Ellen v. Ellen, 16 S. C. 143.

5. Fifth exception: The request mentioned in this exception was refused, on the ground that the proposition contained therein was not applicable to the case. There is no testimony to the effect that John J. Cooley claimed the land as an heir at law of Hiram Cooley. The circuit judge, however, charged the jury fully upon the question of adverse possession.

6. Sixth exception: After reading to the jury the request set out in this exception, the presiding judge said: "I will charge you that, with this modification: Any disclaimer on the part of John J. Cooley, if you believe there was such, would be in derogation of his title, and his title must be open, notorious, and adverse, must have been continuous; but if he disclaimed his title, and then held it openly, notoriously, and adversely for 10 years, he would still have a good title. He must have been on the land that length of time prior to 1870. It must have been for a period of 10 years. If he claimed it for 10 years openly, notoriously, and adversely, he would have a good title, and, if the period of 20 years was of force, he must have claimed it for a period of 20 years openly, notoriously, and adversely, and that would give him good title." The request was properly modified for the reason that it took from the jury the consideration of the question whether John J. Cooley could acquire by adverse possession after admitting, at any time, that he was not the owner of the lands. The request was not in accord with the principle announced in McCutchen v. McCutchen, 77 S. C. 129, 57 S. E. 678.

Seventh exception: There is no exception by this number.

7. Eighth exception: In regard to the request mentioned in this exception, the circuit judge charged: "Well, gentlemen, I will charge you this in the place of that: If a person is in possession of land, and does such acts upon it, and his possession is open, notorious and adverse, and his acts indicate that he is claiming it as his own, and those acts are sufficient to put other people upon notice that such is the case, then they are bound by his possession, and he would have a good title. If his possession was secret, holding it under some one else, that would give him title by adverse possession. If he holds it openly, notoriously, and adversely, and does such acts upon it as would put other people upon notice that he was claiming it as his own, that would be sufficient and would give him title to the land, if he held it for a period of 10 years, if it was the 10-year period, or for 20 years if it was the 20-year period. Secret holding would never mature into title, but open, notorious, and adverse holding, giving notice to the world that he was holding it and claiming it as his own, would ripen into title." Instead of charging the substitute, the presiding judge might properly have refused the request altogether, as possession alone is sufficient to raise the presumption that such possession is rightful, and it is incumbent on those who allege that it is unlawful to establish that fact.

8. Ninth exception: This request was properly refused for the reason that it ignored the fact that the answer denied title in the plaintiffs, and the further fact that the defendants relied upon the presumption of a grant.

9. Tenth exception: In ruling upon the request in this exception, the circuit judge said: "That is good law, and I so charge you. It is a question of fact for you whether she has shown good title, and, if she has shown good title, it is a question of fact for you whether it has been defeated." The superadded words were merely explanatory, and did not change the proposition of law embodied in the request.

10. Eleventh exception: To the eighteenth exception, inclusive, we adopt the arrangement of the appellant's attorney in considering these exceptions together. There was testimony to which the charge in these exceptions was applicable, but, even if there were no such testimony, it has not been made to appear that the rulings were prejudicial to the rights of the appellant. Vann v. Howle, 44 S. C. 548, 22 S. E. 735; Boggero v. Railway, 64 S. C. 112, 41 S. E. 819.

It is the judgment of the court that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

(78 S. C. 10)

FRANKS v. SOUTHERN COTTON OIL CO.
(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Aug. 20, 1907.)

NEGLIGENCE—DANGEROUS PREMISES.

Where an infant was drowned in a reservoir maintained by defendant for use in its business in an open field near the public highway, and among the residences of a city, where children were accustomed to play, with knowledge of the defendant, and was unguarded, defendant was liable to the parents of the infant.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, Negligence, § 54.]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Laurens County; R. O. Purdy, Judge.

Action by R. J. Franks against the Southern Cotton Oil Company and R. H. Hudgens. From an order overruling demurrers to the complaint, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

This is an appeal from an order overruling a demurrer to the complaint, on the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The first paragraph of the complaint alleges the corporate existence of the defendant; and the other paragraphs are as follows: "That the defendant R. H. Hudgens is now, and at the times hereinafter stated was, the manager of the cotton seed oil mill located at Laurens, S. C., and owned and operated by the defendant the Southern Cotton Oil Company. That the plaintiff is the qualified administrator of the estate of Luther Franks, deceased, who departed this life intestate on the 20th of April, 1906. That on the 20th day of April, 1906, and prior thereto, the defendant the Southern Cotton Oil Company owned, and jointly with its manager, R. H. Hudgens, maintained and used in connection with its oil mill at Laurens, S. C., a large and deep reservoir, which it kept filled with water, to be used in connection with the said oil mill, said reservoir being located in an open field, near the public highways, streets, and many of the residences of the city of Laurens, where children of tender years were accustomed to resort for play, the said reservoir being not protected by a fence, guard, or otherwise, but was exposed and easily accessible to children, who, not knowing of the danger, made use of it as a place of amusement. That it was the duty of the defendant the Southern Cotton Oil Company, and also the defendant R. H. Hudgens, as manager of the said oil mill, to have securely protected the said reservoir, so that children resorting to it as a place of amusement would not be injured, but the said defendants, not regarding their duty in that behalf, carelessly, negligently, willfully, and wantonly permitted the said reservoir to remain uninclosed and unprotected in any way. That the defendant the Southern Cotton Oil Company, as well as the defendant R. H. Hudgens, knew of the unprotected condition of the said reservoir, and that children resorted there as a place of amusement, which facts this plaintiff is informed and believes, and so alleges, had been more than once called to the attention of the defendants, with the request that said reservoir be properly protected. That the plaintiff's intestate, Luther Franks, a small boy of tender years, being less than 10 years of age, while playing around the said reservoir, which was filled with water, was drowned. That the plaintiff is the father of the said Luther Franks, deceased, and Mrs. Nannie Franks is his mother, for whose benefit this action is brought. * * * The defendant demurred to the complaint, on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, in that it does not show that the injuries of the deceased were the result of a failure on the part of the defendant to perform any duty it owed to the deceased. Under the authority of Bridger v. Railroad, 25 S. C. 24, and Pekin v. McMahon, 154 Ill. 141, 39 N. E. 484, 27 L. R. A. 206, 45 Am. St. Rep. 114, his honor, the presiding judge, overruled the demurrer, and the defendant appealed.

Mitchell & Smith, Sheppard, Grier & Park, and Dial & Todd, for appellant. Simpson, Cooper & Rabb, for respondent.

GARY, A. J. (after stating the facts as above). The appeal raises the single question whether the defendants owed a duty to the deceased in regard to the reservoir. In the case of Bridger v. Railroad, 25 S. C. 24, this court followed the doctrine announced in Sloux City, etc., v. Stout, 17 Wall. (U. S.) 657, 21 L. Ed. 745, the first of which are known as the turntable cases, in which it was held that an infant could recover for an injury causing him damages as the result of a failure on the part of the railroad company to keep its turntable locked or properly guarded. If that principle is applicable to this case, it is conclusive of the question under consideration. The United States Supreme Court has not confined the doctrine to turntable cases, but has applied it in other cases, notably in Union, etc., R. R. v. McDonald, 152 U. S. 262, 279, 14 Sup. Ct. 619, 626, 38 L. Ed. 434, where it was held that the railroad company was guilty of negligence in leaving unguarded the slack pile, made by it, in the vicinity of its depot building. The court in that case uses this language: "In Townsend v. Wathen, 9 East, 277, 281, it was held that if a man place dangerous traps, baited with flesh, in his own ground, so near to a highway, or to the premises of another, that dogs passing along the highway, or kept in his neighbor's premises, would probably be attracted by their instinct into the traps, and in consequence of such act his neighbor's dogs be so attracted and thereby injured, an action on the case would lie. 'What difference,' said Lord Ellenborough, C. J., 'is there in reason between drawing the animal into the trap by means of his instinct, which he cannot resist, and putting him there by manual force?' What difference, in reason, we may observe in this case, is there between an express license to the children of the village to visit the defendant's coal mine, in the vicinity of its slack pile, and an implied license, resulting from the habit of the defendant to permit them, without objection or warning, to do so at will, for purposes of curiosity or pleasure. Referring to the case of Townsend v. Wathen, Judge Thompson, in his work on the Law of Negligence, well says: 'It would be a barbarous rule of law that would make the owner of land liable for setting a trap thereon baited with stinking meat, so that his neighbor's dog, attracted by his natural instincts, might run into it and be killed, and which would exempt him from liability for the consequence of leaving exposed and unguarded on his land a dangerous machine, so that his neighbor's child, attracted to it, and tempted to intermeddle with it, by instincts equally strong, might thereby be killed or maimed for life.' Volume I, pp. 304, 305."

The principle is thus stated in Thompson on Neg. § 1024: "The owners and occupiers of real property are held by the law in some respects to a different standard of liability in case of injuries to children, coming upon their premises, from that under which they stand with respect to adult persons. It is believed that the following propositions may safely be stated to be the law: (1) The owner or occupier of real property stands under the same duty to children, who are expressly or impliedly invited to come upon his premises, in respect of keeping such premises safe, to the end that they will not be injured in so coming, under which he stands to adult persons. (2) As a general rule, he is not bound to keep his premises safe, or in any particular condition, for the benefit of the trespassing children of his neighbors, or for the benefit of children who occupy no more favorable position than that of bare licensees. (3) A well-grounded exception to the foregoing principles is that one who artificially brings or creates upon his own premises any dangerous thing which from its nature has a tendency to attract the childish instincts of children to play with it is bound, as a mere matter of social duty, to take such reasonable precautions as the circumstances admit of, to the end that they may be protected from injury while so playing with it, or coming in its vicinity." The same author uses this language in section 1030: "We now come to a class of decisions which hold the landowner liable in damages in the case of children injured by dangerous things suffered to exist unguarded on his premises, where they are accustomed to some with or without license. These decisions proceed on one or the other of two grounds: (1) That where the owner or occupier of grounds brings or artificially creates something thereon which from its nature is especially attractive to children, and which at the same time is dangerous to them, he is bound, in the exercise of social duty and the ordinary offices of humanity, to take reasonable pains to see that such dangerous things are so guarded that children will not be injured by coming in contact with them. (2) That although the dangerous thing may not be what is termed an 'attractive nuisance'—that is to say, may not have especial attraction for children by reason of their childish instincts—yet where it is so left exposed that they are likely to come in contact with it, and where their coming in contact with it is obviously dangerous to them, the person so exposing the dangerous thing should reasonably anticipate the injury that is likely to happen to them from its being so exposed, and is bound to take reasonable pains to guard it, so as to prevent injury to them." In 1 Street's Foundations of Legal Liability, 160-161, the reason for the liability in the turntable cases is thus stated: "Liability in the turntable cases is strictly put upon the ground of implied invitation to children to come upon the premises in order to play there, the invitation being supposed to arise from the attractive nature of these dangerous engines. This hypothesis is hatched up to evade the obstacle which arises from the fact that the plaintiff is a trespasser. But it is unnecessary, as it is inadequate and artificial. Liability is to be ascribed to the simple fact that the defendant, in maintaining a dangerous agent from which harm may, under peculiar conditions, be expected to come, has the primary risk, and must answer in damages, unless a counter assumption of risk can be imposed on those who go there to play." See, also, 2 Woods, Railway Law, § 321 et seq. In Cooley on Torts, p. 624, the author says: "In the case of young children, and other persons not sui juris, an implied license might sometimes arise, when it would not in behalf of others. Thus, leaving a tempting thing to play with exposed where they would be likely to gather for that purpose may be equivalent to an invitation to them to make use of it." In Bishop, Noncont. Law, 854, it is stated: "A child too young to be controlled by reason therefore not improperly led by its instincts receives from the law the protection which its special nature requires. For example, a man who leaves on his own ground, open to the highway or upon or beside any public place, a dangerous machine, likely to attract children, will be liable to one injured by playing with it, if he neglected precautions against such an accident." In 7 Enc. of Law, 403, 404, it is said: "A child injured while trespassing has no right of action, unless injured by the negligence of the defendant, when the injury might have been avoided by ordinary care on the defendant's part. But when a child of tender years commits a mere technical trespass, and is injured by agencies that, to an adult, would be open and obvious warnings of danger, but not so to a child, he is not debarred from recovering, if the things instrumental in his injury were left exposed and unguarded, and were of such a character as to be likely to attract children, excite their curiosity, and lead to their injury while they were pursuing their childish instincts. Such dangerous and attractive instrumentalities become an invitation by implication." In Pekin v. McMahon, 154 Ill. 141, 39 N. E. 484, 27 L. R. A. 208, 45 Am. St. Rep. 114, the court, held that a pond or pit in a populous city, in which the water is from 5 to 14 feet deep, with logs and timber floating therein, on which children are in the habit of playing near a driveway across vacant lots, but partially inclosed from the streets on the sides thereof, renders the city which owns them liable for the drowning of a child playing there, if the premises are found by the jury sufficiently attractive to entice children into danger and to suggest the probability of such an accident. In this case are cited numerous others in which the doctrine of the turntable cases is sustained, where the injuries were caused by the agencies of a different character.

To the same effect is the case of Biggs v. Conn. Barb Wire Co., 60 Kan. 217, 56 Pac. 4, 44 L. R. A. 655, 658, which held that the maintenance of dangerous machinery on private grounds, unprotected from the visits of trespassing children, renders the owner thereof, who has knowledge that children are accustomed to frequent said grounds, and climb upon the structures supporting dangerous appliances, liable in damages to the next of kin of a boy 14 years of age who was caught in the exposed machinery and killed. The court quotes with approval the following language from the case of Price v. Atchison Water Co., 58 Kan. 551, 50 Pac.

450, 62 Am. St. Rep. 625: "It is, however, contended by the defendant in error that, inasmuch as the deceased was a trespasser upon its grounds, it owed to him no duty to guard against the accident which occurred. Without doubt, the common law exempts the owner of private grounds from obligation to keep them in a safe condition for the benefit of trespassers, idlers, bare licensees, or others who go upon them, not by invitation express or implied, but for the pleasure or through curiosity. Cooley on Torts (2d Ed.) 718; 1 Thomp. Neg. 308; Dobbins v. Missouri, K. & T. R. Co., 91 Tex. 60, 41 S. W. 62, 38 L. R. A. 573, 66 Am. St. Rep. 856. The common law, however, does not permit the owner of private grounds to keep thereon allurements to the natural instincts of human or animal kind, without taking reasonable precautions to insure the safety of such as may be thereby attracted to his premises. To maintain upon one's property enticements to the ignorant or unwary is tantamount to an invitation to visit and to inspect and enjoy; and in such cases the obligation to endeavor to protect from the dangers of the seductive instrument or place follows as justly as though the invitation had been express."

The same principle was announced in Koplekom v. Colo. Cem. Pipe Co., 16 Colo. App. 274, 64 Pac. 1047, 54 L. R. A. 284, 285, where the court held that the owner of an uninclosed lot adjacent to a highway, in a thickly populated part of the city, who leaves unguarded thereon a heavy section of cement pipe of unstable equilibrium, which because of its large diameter is an attractive plaything for children to roll about, and who knows that they resort there for that purpose, is liable to a child who, not having arrived at years of discretion, is injured by the pipe toppling over on him while he is playing with it. The court used this language: "If it be said that the complaint itself shows that the piping was upon private premises, that the children were trespassers, and that they were not upon the land by invitation or consent of defendant, it may be answered, as it was by Chief Justice Cooley in Powers v. Harlow, 53 Mich. 507, 19 N. W. 257, 51 Am. Rep. 154, and approved by all of the authorities that we have cited: 'Children, wherever they go, must be expected to act upon childish instincts and impulses; and others, who are chargeable with a duty of care and caution towards them must calculate upon this and take precautions accordingly. If they leave exposed to the observation of children anything which would be tempting to them, and which they, in their immature judgment, might naturally suppose they were at liberty to handle or play with, they should expect that liberty to be taken.' Or, as was tersely and pithily expressed in the Minnesota case (Keffe v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co., 21 Minn. 207, 18 Am. Rep. 393): 'What an express invitation would be to an adult, the temptation of an attractive plaything is to a child of tender years.' * * * If an owner sees fit to keep on his premises something that is an attraction and allurements to the natural instincts of childhood, the law, it is well settled, imposes upon him the corresponding duty to take reasonable precautions to prevent the intrusion of children, or to protect from personal injury such as may be attracted thereby."

Under the caption of "Liability for Injuries to Children," the author, in 1 Thompson on Neg. § 1026, thus speaks in strenuous language of the doctrine that liability extends only to wanton injuries: "One doctrine under this head is that if a child trespass upon the premises of the defendant, and is injured in consequence of something that befalls him while so trespassing, he cannot recover damages unless the injury was wantonly inflicted, or was due to the recklessly careless conduct of the defendant. This cruel and wicked doctrine, unworthy of a civilized jurisprudence, puts property above humanity, leaves entirely out of view the tender years and infirmity of understanding of the child, indeed his inability to be a trespasser, in sound legal theory, and visits upon him the consequences of his trespass, just as though he were an adult, and exonerates the person or corporation upon whose property he is a trespasser from any duty towards him which they would not owe under the same circumstances towards an adult."

We recognize the fact that there are numerous decisions announcing a rule contrary to that hereinbefore stated, but we prefer to follow the doctrine based upon humanity and the wholesome maxim, "Sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas."

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

(78 S. C. 67)

HORN et al. v. SOUTHERN RY.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Sept. 8, 1907.)

1. TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—PREPONDERANCE OF EVIDENCE.

Where, at the beginning of his charge, the court, in the clearest language, placed on plaintiff the burden of proving by preponderance of evidence the allegations that the negligence of defendant was the proximate cause of the injury to plaintiff, a verbal slip placing on defendant the burden of proving contributory negligence by preponderance of evidence, which might be construed to mean that the primary inquiry was whether defendant had made out such a defense, was not misleading.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, § 573.]

2. SAME.

Where, in instructions concerning contributory negligence, there was language which might bear the meaning that defendant could not rely on the position that plaintiff's injury was due entirely to her own negligence, unless it proved that fact by the preponderance of evidence, it was not misleading, when the court charged that the plaintiff must show that defendant's negligence was the proximate cause of the injury.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, § 703.]

3. CARRIERS—DUTY TO INVALID PASSENGER.

A carrier is bound to render reasonable assistance to a passenger whose inability to take care of himself is made known to the carrier.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 9, Carriers, §§ 1093-1097.]

4. TRIAL — INSTRUCTIONS — CONSTRUING CHARGE AS A WHOLE.

An instruction that the negligence of defendant carrier entitled plaintiff to recover punitive damages if it intentionally injured her, "injured her carelessly, did not care whether she suffered injury or not. That is meant by willfulness"—was not ground for reversal, where, from all that was said on the subject taken together, the jury could not have failed to understand punitive damages could be recovered only for willful or wanton misconduct.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, § 703.]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Spartanburg County; Klugh, Judge.

Action by Mary Louisa Horn and Ben Horn against the Southern Railway. Judgment for plaintiffs. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Sanders & De Pass, for appellant. De Pass & De Pass, for respondents.

WOODS, J. The plaintiff Mary Louisa Horn, her husband, John Horn, and her adult sister on March 5, 1905, were passengers from Union to Jonesville on the defendant's train. The action was brought for injuries alleged to have been received by the plaintiff in a fall due to the turning of a stool placed on the ground to aid passengers in alighting.

The plaintiff testified she had several parcels, and asked the conductor to help her when she reached Jonesville; that her husband preceded her in getting off the train with their baby in his arms; that neither conductor nor porter rendered her any assistance; that, when she stepped from the car with a clothes case in one hand, a hat and umbrella in the other, the stool turned and threw her to the ground because it was not set in the right place; that the conductor was standing on the ground where the passengers were alighting, saw her fall, and, so far from offering her assistance, actually laughed at her. The conductor testified he had no recollection of the request for assistance; that he did take the arm of the plaintiff as of other women to aid them in stepping off; that the stool was placed in exactly the proper place, but he observed the plaintiff come down the steps looking over at the crowd, and not at the stool; that the plaintiff merely staggered around without falling, and made no complaint whatever. He denied laughing at the plaintiff. His testimony that a number of other passengers had preceded the plaintiff and alighted in safety was not disputed. There was some evidence that the place where the car stopped was not quite level, but this was denied by the conductor. This statement makes the issues of fact sufficiently clear. The jury found a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $800. The appeal relates to alleged errors in the charge of the circuit judge. We do not think there is any ground upon which this court can interfere with the judgment.

1. In imposing upon the defendant the burden of proving contributory negligence by a preponderance of the evidence, the circuit judge by a verbal slip used language which might be construed to mean that the primary inquiry was whether the defendant had made out the defense of contributory negligence, rather than whether the plaintiff had proved the defendant's negligence as a proximate cause of injury. But at the beginning of the charge, in the clearest language, he had placed on the plaintiff the burden of proving by the preponderance of the evidence the allegation that the negligence of the defendant was a proximate cause producing injury to the plaintiff, and had charged the plaintiff could not recover without discharging this burden. So, taking the instruction on this point as a whole, we do not think it could be inferred the jury were misled.

2. There is also language in the charge, which, standing alone, would bear the meaning that the defendant could not rely on the position that the plaintiff's injury was due entirely to her own negligence, unless it proved that fact by the preponderance of the evidence. But this language was used in the instructions concerning contributory negligence. It would be going too far to infer misapprehension by the jury on this point; for the instruction that the plaintiff could not recover without proving affirmatively by the preponderance of the evidence her injury to have been due to the negligence of the defendant certainly negated the idea that she could recover unless the defendant assumed and discharged the burden of proving by the preponderance of the evidence the injury to have been due entirely to her negligence. The burden of proving the defendant's negligence as the proximate cause would imply to any reasonably intelligent mind the burden of proving the absence of the plaintiff's negligence as the sole proximate cause. The charge, therefore, does not warrant a reversal on the authority of Kennedy v. So. Ry. Co., 59 S. C. 535, 38 S. E. 169, and Michiner v. Telephone Co., 70 S. C. 525, 50 S. E. 190. If inadvertences like those relied on here are deemed by counsel to be material, they should be called to the attention of the circuit judge at the close of the charge. If they escape the attention of vigilant and learned counsel, this court ought not to infer they were so grasped by the jury as to lead them into error.

3. The defendant submits in the next place the following was a charge on the facts: "Well, now, I instructed you that it was bound to furnish passengers with safe and proper appliances and facilities for riding on its trains. Now, if that included the assisting of passengers from the train by the railroad company's handling whatever parcel or package the passenger has, if a railroad company of ordinary prudence would do that, then in this case it is bound to do that. As a matter of course, the railroad company, no more than any other individual, can be held to do that which is impossible, and the railroad company must go upon appearances as the facts and circumstances make these appearances, and if a passenger is burdened with baggage and the employé of the railroad company sees that, why, the railroad company is bound to, if it becomes necessary to the safe alighting of the passenger from the train, for the railroad company to assist in handling any package or boxes. Now, it is the duty of the railroad company to do that. It is not the duty of the railroad company to go through the train, and see each passenger to know whether he wants assistance, or to ascertain what baggage he might happen to have to get off with. But if it is apparent, and would be apparent to a person of reasonable observation that the passenger is in need of assistance, then the railroad is bound to furnish assistance just the same as it is bound to assist a person in any other way prevented from safely alighting without assistance, if the person is sick or aged or infirm, or in any peculiar circumstances which are apparent to the railroad company or comes to the knowledge of the railroad company, which renders a greater degree of care necessary, why the railroad company is bound to afford that additional assistance, and exercise that additional degree of care if such appearances are obvious. As a matter of course, the railroad company is not bound to exercise that same degree of care in the case of an ordinary person alighting from its train." We do not discern in this language anything more than a fair statement of the law as to the duties of a carrier to passengers on its train.

The courts seemed at one time inclined against holding a carrier bound to aid in the alighting even of a passenger manifestly disabled from sickness or infirmity; the view being that such a passenger in undertaking a journey should provide for his own assistance. But it is now generally held that the carrier is bound to render reasonable assistance to a passenger whose inability to take care of himself has been made known to the carrier. Simms v. Railway Co., 27 S. C. 268, 3 S. E. 301; Doolittle v. Railway Co., 62 S. C. 130, 40 S. E. 133; Madden v. Railway Co., 41 S. C. 440, 19 S. E. 951, 20 S. E. 65.

No doubt justice requires the exercise of great caution on the part of the judges in stating this principle of law, and on the part of the juries in applying it, especially when negligence is charged against the carrier for failing to assist a passenger incumbered with parcels. As a general rule, it is not the duty of the carrier to provide servants to carry hand parcels. Considering the number of passengers usually on a car and the unreasonable burden it would be on the railroad to employ attendants enough to assist all of them, as a general rule, passengers ought not to incumber themselves with parcels they are not able to carry with safety. But there are exceptions to these rules which the carrier must recognize when brought to his notice, especially where assistance is asked, in form of the aged or maimed or sick, or children, or adult persons traveling with small children who may be unable to carry the parcels usually allowed to the passenger as reasonably necessary. The charge of the circuit judge did not impose any greater burden on the carrier than the duty to take notice of such exceptions.

4. The fourth exception relates to the following instruction: "Well, now, the plaintiff claims not only damages to compensate her for loss or injury, but also claims punitive damages. She claims the railroad was wanton and willful in its negligence, and therefore it ought to be punished by the awarding of damages, besides any damages which may be awarded for her actual injuries or loss. That's what is meant by punitive or, vindictive damages, damages to punish a wrongdoer. In this case the plaintiff claims the railroad company was a wrongdoer, and ought to be punished because it injured her willfully and wantonly; that is, it intentionally injured her, and that it injured her carelessly, didn't care whether she suffered injury or not. That is what is meant by willfulness. If you find that the railroad company did injure plaintiff and was either willful or wanton, and wished to do her injury, an intentional injury, that makes a case where the railroad company ought to be visited with such punishment as will prevent it from being willful or careless, or wantonly injuring a passenger or any other person in the future." The defendant submits this charge was erroneous, in that (1) "there is no evidence in the case to warrant the submission to the jury of the question of punitive damages"; (2) by this charge his honor made the terms "willful" and "careless" synonymous, and instructed the jury that a verdict for punitive damages could be given if the defendant "either willfully, intentionally, or carelessly injured the plaintiff." The use of the word "carelessly" in stating the basis of punitive damages was not fortunate, as it is more nearly synonymous with "negligently" or "inadvertently," than with "willfully" or "wantonly." But, taking all that was said on the subject together, the jury could not have failed to understand punitive damages could be recovered only for willful or wanton misconduct.

The sworn statement of the plaintiff that, when she fell, the conductor made no effort to aid her, and laughed at her, is some evidence of wanton misconduct. The court cannot interfere with the right of the jury to pass on the credibility of the testimony. But, in addition to this, there was no motion for nonsuit as to punitive damages, nor request to charge that there was no evidence upon which punitive damages could be recovered. Jennings v. Edgefield Mfg. Co., 72 S. C. 411, 52 S. E. 118.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

(78 S. C. 20)

FLEMING et al. v. BYRD et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Aug. 20, 1907.)

1. ATTACHMENT—MOTION TO DISSOLVE.

Where a motion is made to dissolve an attachment because the cause of action alleged in the complaint is not the same as that set forth in the affidavit, the complaint may be considered with the affidavit, though not verified or made a part thereof.

2. SAME—AFFIDAVIT.

An affidavit setting forth that plaintiff has sustained damages to an extent named because of breach by defendant of a certain contract, and that defendant is a nonresident, shows plaintiff entitled to a writ of attachment, under Code Civ. Proc. 1902, § 248, where the complaint states a cause of action for breach of contract as set forth in the affidavit, though the facts are mixed up with allegations appropriate to a different cause of action.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 5, Attachment, § 840.]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Greenville County; Watts, Judge.

Action by Jane Fleming and Mollie Miller against T. M. Byrd and others. From an order dissolving an attachment, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

J. J. McSwain, for appellants. Haynesworth, Patterson & Blythe, for respondents.

GARY, A. J. This is an appeal from an order setting aside an attachment. On the 9th of June, 1906, the plaintiff filed the following affidavit with the clerk of the court, on which an attachment was issued and levied upon certain real property, belonging to the defendant, T. M. Byrd, in Greenville county: "Personally comes Sarah Jane Fleming, who upon oath says that she is the plaintiff in this action, and that a cause of action exists in her favor against the defendant, T. M. Byrd, on account of breach of contract made by said T. M. Byrd with plaintiff and her deceased husband, L. H. Fleming, to the effect that said T. M. Byrd would support and care for plaintiff and her husband, so long as both should live, upon a certain tract of land in Spartanburg, which was conveyed by deed to said T. M. Byrd upon consideration of said agreement, and said T. M. Byrd has breached and failed to comply with said agreement, and has sold said tract of land to Garvin McMakin, and has himself removed from the state and is now a resident of Gainesville, Ga., and is not a resident of South Carolina, and the damages sustained by plaintiff under and by virtue of said breach is $1,000, and that said T. M. Byrd has real estate in Greenville city, said county and state, which plaintiff is informed and believes that said T. M. Byrd is undertaking to sell and dispose of, and the same is subject to attachment and levy at instance of plaintiff. * * * The defendant made a motion to dissolve the attachment on the grounds that it was irregularly issued, "in that this action is not one wherein attachment may issue under the provisions of the Code, and in that this section is not for the recovery of damages, as stated in the affidavit upon which said attachment is founded, and the affidavit is insufficient." On hearing the motion his honor, the circuit judge, granted the following order: "This was a motion to dissolve the attachment herein on the ground that it was irregularly issued, in that the Code does not authorize the issue of attachment in actions of this character. In my opinion the point is well taken. It is therefore ordered that the attachment be, and is hereby, vacated." The plaintiff appealed, and the exceptions, in different form, assign error in the said ruling.

Section 248 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1902 provides that in any action arising for the recovery of money against a defendant who is not a resident of this state the plaintiff at the time of issuing the summons, or any time afterwards, may have the property of such defendant attached, etc. By reference to the affidavit, it will be seen that it sets forth the fact that she is the plaintiff in an action against the defendant for breach of a certain contract, by which she sustained damage to the extent of $1,000, and the fact that the defendant is not a resident of this state. These facts, standing alone, would show that the plaintiff was entitled to the writ of attachment. The appellant's attorneys, however, contend that the affidavit should be read in connection with the complaint, when it will be seen that the attachment was irregularly issued. The complaint was not verified, and was not made part of the affidavit. It is true that, when the motion to dissolve an attachment is on the ground that the affidavit is not sufficient to sustain an attachment, the plaintiff cannot supplement the defective affidavit by facts stated in the complaint, unless it is verified and made a part of the affidavit. Addison v. Sujette, 50 S. C. 192, 28 S. E. 948; Chitty v. Railroad, 62 S. C. 526, 40 S. E. 944.

But a different question is presented when the motion to dissolve is on the ground that the cause of action set forth in the affidavit is not the cause of action alleged in the complaint. The former is an attack upon the regularity of the attachment proceedings, and must be tested by the papers before the clerk when he issues the writ. The latter is an attack upon the truth of the affidavit, and is therefore a motion to dissolve on the ground that it was improvidently issued, in which case the defendant may rely upon the complaint for the purpose of showing that the cause of action stated in the affidavit is not the true one. As an attachment is only incidental to and in aid of the action set out in the complaint, it would be an anomaly to sustain an attachment based upon a cause of action wholly distinct from that stated in the complaint. His honor, the circuit judge, therefore properly considered the complaint in determining the motion. An examination of the complaint, however, will show that it states facts which, by a literal construction, will support a cause of action for damages for breach of contract as set forth in the affidavit, although such facts are mixed up with other allegations appropriate to a different cause of action. Such defects may be cured by a motion to amend.

It is the judgment of this court that the order of the circuit court be reversed.

(78 S. C. 120)

SMITH v. ELLISON et ux.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Sept. 10, 1907.)

1. JUDGMENT—REVIVAL—LIMITATIONS.

Under Code Civ. Proc. 1902, § 309, providing that a final judgment may be revived within 10 years from the original entry, a summons to show cause served after 10 years is too late.

2. SAME—RETURN TO SUMMONS.

A return to a summons in an action to revive a judgment that the time within which the judgment could have been revived has long since expired is a sufficient plea of the statutory bar.

Gary, A. J., dissenting.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Pickens County; Gary, Judge.

Summons by John A. Smith, executor of H. Glenn Smith, against James M. Ellison and Martha J. Ellison, to revive and execute a judgment. From an order reviving the same, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Blythe & Blythe, for appellants. Julius B. Boggs, for respondent.

POPE, C. J. This was a summons issued on December 23, 1906, by the plaintiff, John A. Smith, executor of H. Glenn Smith, to the defendants, James M. Ellison and Martha J. Ellison, requiring them to show cause, if any they could, why a judgment entered up against them on the 27th day of September, 1890, should not be revived. The return and answer of the defendants denies that any judgment was ever lawfully entered against them, and alleges that, if it has, as is alleged in the summons, the time within which the same could have been revived has long since expired. Judge Ernest Gary, in an order of March 5, 1907, ordered the judgment revived. Defendants appeal.

Section 309 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1902 provides: "A final judgment may be revived at any time within the period of ten years from date of original entry thereon by the service of a summons upon the judgment debtor * * * to show cause, if any he may have, why such judgment should not be revived; and if no good cause be shown to the contrary, it shall be decreed that such judgment is revived." The meaning of the term, "date of the original entry," is too plain to require a consideration of its meaning. A period of 10 years following can mean nothing but the succeeding 10 years following the original entry. The words of the statute are plain that a summons, to revive, must be issued within this period; otherwise the privilege of renewal will be denied. The revival thus obtained will give life to the judgment for 10 years following the 10-year period from the date of the original entry of the judgment, thus making a period of 20 years, the entire time a judgment is allowed to constitute a lien on property. This statute is then one of limitation, and according to well-settled authority must be pleaded. This is the ground on which the respondent seeks to have the judgment sustained. He would show that appellants have not properly pleaded the statute. This contention, however, we cannot sustain. The plaintiff, in his summons, stated the fact that the judgment was entered in September, 1890. The revival proceedings were not begun until December, 1906. The defendants denied the judgment, but contended that should the judgment be held valid, as it alleged in the summons, that then, according to the face of the summons itself and the facts set forth thereon, the revival was barred by the statute. The facts of the case are really in issue, thus distinguishing this case from those relied upon by the respondent where the defendant claimed the benefit of the statute without stating any grounds upon which to base his claim. In this view, we think the pleadings are sufficient.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be reversed.

GARY, A. J. (dissenting). This is a proceeding to renew a judgment by summons commenced on the 22d of December, 1906, in which it is recited that the original judgment was recovered against the defendant on the 17th of September, 1890. The defendants made return to the summons, and showed cause as follows why the judgment should not be renewed: "(1) They deny that any judgment was ever lawfully entered against them. (2) That if any judgment has ever been rendered against them, as alleged in said summons, the time within which the same could be renewed has long since expired." His honor, the circuit judge, upon hearing the issues, filed an order that the judgment be renewed, and that the plaintiff have leave to issue execution thereon, from which order the defendants appealed.

Section 309 of the Code of Civil Procedure for 1902 contains the following provisions:

"(1) A final judgment recovered in any court of record in this state, subsequent to the 25th day of November, A. D. 1873, shall constitute a lien upon the real estate of the judgment debtor, in the county where the same is entered, for a period of ten years from the date of entry thereof. * * * (2) A final judgment may be revived at any time, within the period of ten years from the date of the original entry thereof, by the service of a summons upon the judgment debtor, as provided by law * * * to show cause, if any he may have, why such judgment should not be revived; and if no good cause be shown to the contrary, it shall be decreed that such judgment is revived; and such judgment shall thereupon constitute a lien upon the real estate of the judgment debtor, then owned or hereafter to be acquired by him, in the county where the judgment is entered, for a period of ten years from the entry of such decree; but such lien shall not revert to the date of the original entry of such judgment." Section 311 of the Code is as follows: "Nothing in the two preceding sections shall be construed to prevent an action upon a judgment, after the lapse of twenty years from the date of the original entry thereon, in case it shall be established by competent and sufficient evidence that said judgment, or some part thereof, remains unsatisfied and due. * * * These sections must be construed together. The words, "but such lien shall not revert back to the original entry of such judgment," clearly show that section 309 of the Code contemplates proceedings to renew the judgment, even after the expiration of 10 years from the original entry thereof; for otherwise they would be meaningless. The fact, too, that nothing contained in section 311 was intended to prevent an action upon the judgment, even after the lapse of 20 years from the date of original entry, in case it was established that the judgment, or some part thereof, remains unsatisfied, shows that section 311 contemplated such proceedings on the part of the judgment creditor as were necessary to protect his rights before the lapse of 20 years from the date of the original entry, otherwise we would have the anomalous situation of a statute affording relief to the judgment creditor after a certain time which it would not accord to him prior to that period. The proceedings for the renewal of a judgment are in the nature of an action. Adams v. Richardson, 32 S. C. 139, 10 S. E. 981; Gregory v. Perry, 71 S. C. 246, 50 S. E. 787; Brantley v. Bittle, 72 S. C. 179, 51 S. E. 561. Furthermore, the defendants did not interpose any objection to the form of the proceeding by which the plaintiff sought to have the question determined whether the judgment or any part thereof remained unsatisfied. The cases of Anderson v. Baughman, 69 S. C. 39, 48 S. E. 38, Gregory v. Perry, supra, and Brantley v. Bittle, supra, indicate that the judgment may be renewed at any time, within 20 years from the date of original entry.

For these reasons, I dissent.

(78 S. C. 115)

ROBERTS v. HERRON et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Sept. 10, 1907.)

1. WILLS—CONSTRUCTION—VESTED REMAINDERS.

Testator devised to his wife certain pieces of property, to hold until his two children became of age, then to be divided "in equal shares between my wife and my two children above named, and to share and share alike." Held, that the children took vested remainders, and, on their deaths before attaining majority, their interests passed to their heirs at law.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 49, Wills, § 1467.]

2. PARTITION—WHEN RIGHT ACCRUES.

Where testator gave to his wife certain property, to hold until his children became of age, and then to be divided, and the children died before attaining majority, the wife, when the children would have attained their majority, is entitled to partition.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Charleston County; Watts, Judge.

Action by Catherine Roberts, in her own right, and as administratrix, against Mary Ella Herron and another, executors of William A. Herron. Decree for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Jno. B. Edwards, for appellants. Bulst & Bulst, for respondent.

GARY, A. J. This is an action for partition, and involves the construction of a will.

William A. Herron died on the 3d of November, 1893, leaving of force his last will and testament, which contained the following clauses: "1st. I give, devise and bequeath to my wife, Mary Ella Herron, the following pieces of property, to wit: House and lot, No. 84, north side of Morris street; house and lot, No. 82, north side of Morris street; house and lot, No. 80, north side of Morris street; houses and lots, Nos. 1 and 2, De Reef's Court. To have and to hold the same until my two children, Mary and William, shall become of age, then to be divided in equal shares between my wife and my two children named above, and to share and share alike. * * * 3d. House and lot, No. 80 Morris street, now occupied by Mrs. Vanderhost, I desire her to remain during her lifetime, and after her death then to revert to my wife, Mary Ella Herron, and to my two children, Mary and William." The facts are thus stated in the report of the master: "That the said William A. Herron left surviving him, as his only heirs at law and distributees, his widow, the defendant, Mary Ella Herron, who was his second wife, and his two children, Mary Crum Herron and William Herron, whose mother, Almona Isabel Herron, who was the daughter of the plaintiff herein, was the first wife of the said William A. Herron. Mary Crum Herron died intestate, unmarried, under age, and without issue, on or about the 1st day of February, 1901, leaving as her only heir at law and distributee her brother, the said William Herron. On the 22d day of October, 1904, the plaintiff, Catherine E. Roberts, who was the grandmother of Mary Crum Herron and William Herron, was duly appointed administratrix of the estate of Mary Crum Herron by the judge of probate for Charleston county, and took upon herself the burthen of the administration of the said estate. William Herron died intestate, unmarried, under age, and without issue, on or about the 18th day of June, 1904, leaving as his only heir at law and distributee his grandmother, the plaintiff Catherine E. Roberts. On the 22d day of October, 1904, the said Catherine E. Roberts was duly appointed administratrix of the estate of William Herron, deceased, by the probate judge for Charleston county, and took upon herself the burthen of the administration of the said estate." The master ruled that the children of the testator—Mary Crum Herron and William Herron—took vested remainders under the will, and his report was confirmed in all respects by his honor, the circuit judge.

There are several exceptions, but they are all dependent upon the determination of the question presented by the first exception, which is as follows: "Because the said master erred in finding and reporting that 'the two children of the testator, Mary Crum Herron and William Herron, took vested remainders in the fee in the premises named, which upon their deaths passed to their distributees or legatees,' when he should have found and reported that the said children took no estate in said premises since they failed to reach their majority, which was the contingency, upon which they were to take; and his honor, the presiding judge, erred in not so holding." The rule for determining whether remainders are vested or contingent is thus stated in the case of Faber v. Police, 10 S. C. 376, 387: "According to the elementary writers, a vested remainder is one which is limited to an ascertained person in being, whose right to the estate is fixed and certain, and does not depend upon the happening of any future event, but whose enjoyment in possession is postponed to some future time. A contingent remainder, on the other hand, is one which is limited to a person not in being or not ascertained; or, if limited to an ascertained person, it is so limited that his right to the estate depends upon some contingency in the future. So that the most marked distinction between the two kinds of remainders is that in the one case the right to the estate is fixed and certain, though the right to the possession is deferred to some future period; while in the other the right to the estate, as well as the right to the possession of such estate, is not only deferred to a future period, but is dependent upon the happening of some future contingency. As it has been well expressed, 'It is not the uncertainty of the estate in the future, but the uncertainty of the right to such enjoyment, which marks the difference between a contingent and a vested remainder.' Our construction of the will is that the testator had in view two objects: (1) It was his intention that the land in dispute should be divided, share and share alike, between his widow and his two children; and (2) that the widow should have the right to the possession of the land until the children attained their majority, at which time the division was to take place.

The appellant's attorney in his argument says: "The testator did not contemplate the death of his two children, before they reached their majority, and therefore made no provision for such an event, and the court cannot undertake to supply such an omission." This is correct, but we are unable to discover in the will a single expression which tends to show that the right of the children to the estate was uncertain, but that the uncertainty related to the time the widow was allowed to hold possession of all the land before the division could take place. As the widow, under the terms of the will, was only entitled to one-third of the land, and the possession of all until the children became 21 years of age, and as the time has expired within which the children would have attained their majority, we fail to see by what right she can claim to be the owner of all the land. We recognize the principle announced in all the authorities relied upon by the appellant's attorney, that when the right of a devisee is dependent upon the contingency of his living until he becomes 21 years of age, and he dies before that time, his contingent interest is defeated, and cannot be transmitted to his representatives. But, as we have said, this case does not fall within that principle. Cole et al. v. Creyon, 1 Hill's Ch. 320, 26 Am. Dec. 208; Bankhead, Adm'r, v. Carlisle, Adm'r, 1 Hill's Ch. 358; Bently v. Long, 1 Strob. Eq. 44, 47 Am. Dec. 523.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

(78 S. C. 73)

EDGEFIELD MFG. CO. v. MARYLAND CASUALTY CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Aug. 31, 1907.)

1. EVIDENCE—BEST AND SECONDARY.

In an action on an indemnity policy of insurance, where plaintiff showed that it had been insured in defendant company for several years, taking a renewal policy at the expiration of each term of insurance, and proved that after a thorough search among its papers the policy could not be found, and offered in evidence the policy of the preceding year as a copy, except as to dates, such copy was admissible, though no search had been made among the private papers of the officers of plaintiff corporation.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 20, Evidence, §§ 605-637.]

2. INSURANCE—INDEMNITY POLICY—CONSTRUCTION.

Where an indemnity policy provided that no action should lie against the insurance company as to any loss under the policy, unless brought by the insured to reimburse himself for loss actually sustained and paid in satisfaction of a judgment within 60 days from its date, payment must be made of any judgment in favor of an employe for personal injuries within 60 days from the date of the judgment.

3. SAME—NOTICE OF ACCIDENT—ACTION—NOTICE—WAIVER.

In an action against an indemnity company, the policy stipulated that the insured should give immediate notice of the accident, and, if any suit is brought against the insured, he shall immediately forward to the company any summons or other process as soon as served on him, and the company will defend against such proceeding, unless it shall elect to pay the indemnity provided for. The indemnity company participated in a defense after notice that all questions as to the failure of the insured to give prompt notice of the injury sued for were reserved. Held to show no waiver of this requirement of the policy.

4. DEPOSITIONS—ADMISSIBILITY.

Testimony de bene esse taken in typewriting is good without a certificate of notary that it was written by the witness or read over to him.

5. INSURANCE—INDEMNITY POLICY—NOTICE OF ACCIDENT—EXCUSE FOR DELAY.

An indemnity policy stipulated that notice of an injury to an employe of the insured should be immediately given, and any summons of process served on the insured shall be immediately sent to the company. The evidence showed that the vice president in charge of the mill was in ill health when the accident happened to an employe, and shortly thereafter died; that a month later a temporary successor learned for the first time of the casualty insurance, and immediately gave the company notice, and offered to send the summons served against the company on behalf of the injured employe. The vice president and most of the people in the office had been sick with small-pox, and the office closed therefor and quarantined. Held sufficient to justify a jury in finding that the delay in giving notice under the policy was excusable.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Edgefield County; Memminger, Judge.

Action by the Edgefield Manufacturing Company against the Maryland Casualty Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Mordecai & Gadsden and E. H. Folk, for appellant. Tompkins & Wells and N. G. Evans, for respondent.

WOODS, J. The Edgefield Manufacturing Company obtained a policy of insurance for $3,500 in the Maryland Casualty Company to protect it against claims for accidents to its employes. In the case of Jennings v. Edgefield Manufacturing Company, 72 S. C. 411, 52 S. E. 113, the plaintiff recovered a judgment of $3,500 for personal injuries. After payment of the judgment, Edgefield Manufacturing Company brought this action on the insurance policy to recover $1,500; the insurance being limited to that amount for the death or injury of anyone person. The plaintiff recovered judgment for the amount claimed, and the defendant appeals. The plaintiff had been insured in the defendant company for several years, taking a new or renewal policy at the expiration of each term of insurance. At the trial, after proving that a thorough search had been made through the company's papers for the policy without finding it, the plaintiff offered in evidence as a copy, except as to dates, the policy issued for the preceding year. The defendant contends this paper should have been excluded for lack of evidence that a search had been made among the private papers of those who were officers of the company when the policy was in force, and for lack of sufficient evidence of the terms of the old policy being the same as the new.

1. The law requires search in the place where the paper is presumed to be. Culpepper v. Wheeler, 2 McM. 66; Norris v. Clinkscales, 47 S. C. 488, 25 S. E. 797. According to the proof here, the insurance policies were kept in the vault of the plaintiff company, and there is no presumption that they were taken out and placed among the private papers of its retiring officers. There was ample evidence from defendant's own agent of the policy introduced being identical in terms with that sued on. It is evident the old policy was properly admitted. It is equally evident its exclusion would have been far from aiding the defense. The complaint alleged an insurance policy without mentioning any condition, except plaintiff's agreement "to give the defendant due and reasonable notice of any accident or any suit for damages arising from the same." The answer admits this allegation, "But for greater certainty prays reference to the said policy of insurance," sets up certain conditions not referred to in the complaint, and alleges plaintiff's failure to comply with them. Actual proof of the policy, therefore, was not requisite to make out the cause of action. The admission of the copy was of no consequence to the plaintiff, but was essential to the defense in proving the conditions set up in the answer.

3. The next question arises under the following clause of the answer: "No action shall lie against the company as respects any loss under this policy, unless it shall be brought by the assured himself to reimburse him for loss actually sustained and paid by him in satisfaction of a judgment within 60 days from the date of such judgment, and after trial of the issue. No such action shall lie unless brought within the period within which a claimant might sue the assured for damages unless at the expiry of such period there is such an action pending against the assured, in which case an action may be brought against the company by the assured within 60 days after final judgment has been rendered and satisfied as above. The company does not prejudice by this clause any defenses to such action which it may be entitled to make under this policy." The policy covered the year beginning May 6, 1903, and ending May 6, 1904. Jennings received his injury October 21, 1903, brought his action January 6, 1904, and recovered judgment in November, 1904. The remittitur from the Supreme Court was sent down October 19, 1905. The plaintiff paid the judgment October 24, 1905, and brought this action January 23, 1906. The suit was not brought within 60 days after the final judgment, and the defendant contends this is fatal. The circuit judge construed the first sentence of the condition of the policy, above quoted, to mean payment must be made by the assured of any judgment in favor of an employé for personal injury within 60 days from the date of the judgment. Nothing about this section of the policy is clear except the obscurity. The language will fairly bear the construction placed on it by the circuit judge. The insurer framed the clause as a condition of its liability, and obscurity and ambiguity will be solved against it. Sample v. Insurance Co., 46 S. C. 491, 24 S. E. 334, 47 L. R. A. 696, 57 Am. St. Rep. 701; Moulou v. Am. Ins. Co., 111 U. S. 335, 4 Sup. Ct. 466, 28 L. Ed. 447. On this principle, the charge of the circuit judge on this point must be sustained. Inasmuch as the record in the clerk's office showed the payment of the judgment in less than 60 days after the final judgment of the Supreme Court, this stipulation of the policy disappears as a defense, and the giving or refusing an instruction as to the validity of such conditions could be of no consequence.

3. The defendant submits, in the next place, it was relieved from liability by failure of the plaintiff to comply with the first of these additional stipulations in the policy: "The assured upon the occurrence of an accident shall give immediate written notice thereof, with the fullest information obtainable at the time to the home office of the company at Baltimore, Md., or to its duly authorized agent. He shall give like notice, with full particulars of any claim that may be made on account of such accident, and shall at all times render to the company all co-operation and assistance in his power. (2) If thereafter any suit is brought against the assured to enforce a claim for damages on account of an accident covered by this policy, the assured shall immediately forward to the home office of the company every summons or other process as soon as the same shall have been served on him, and the company will, at its own cost, defend against such proceedings in the name and on behalf of the assured, or settle the same, unless it shall elect to pay the assured the indemnity provided for in clause A of special agreements as limited therein." There was no evidence of waiver by the defendant of the requirement as to notice of the accident. It is true the Maryland Casualty Company participated in the defense of the suit of Jennings, but it did so after explicit notice by letters to the Edgefield Manufacturing Company that all questions as to the alleged failure to give prompt notice of the injury to Jennings were reserved; and to this express reservation the plaintiff made no objection. The letters introduced expressed explicit refusal to waive this requirement of the policy, and the circuit court erred in not having so interpreted them to the jury. Toale v. Tel. Co., 76 S. C. 248, 57 S. E. 117; Baker v. Tel. Co., 75 S. C. 97, 55 S. E. 129; Matthie v. Ins. Co., 174 N. Y. 489, 67 N. E. 57; Donogh v. Farmers' Ins. Co., 104 Mich. 503, 62 N. W. 721.

4. The defendant offered evidence, taken de bene esse, showing the date when the notice of the accident to Jennings and of his suit was received from the plaintiff, its refusal to waive the stipulation, and the importance of prompt notice of the accident and of the suit. The depositions were ruled out because there was nothing to show the testimony was reduced to writing by the officer himself, or by the witness in his presence, and because the typewritten pages were not initialed. We do not think these were sound objections to the admission of the depositions. The court cannot presume the testimony to have been taken by a stenographer and afterwards typewritten, and therefore requiring a certificate that it had been read over to the witness. In taking testimony de bene esse typewriting is as any other writing. Stoddard v. Hill, 38 S. C. 390, 17 S. E. 138. Typewriting is common, and there is no presumption against its use by the officer or witness in reducing the testimony as required by the statute. Rule 12 of the circuit court (33 S. E. viii) lays down certain requirements as to the size and minimum weight of paper to be used for typewriting "original pleadings and other proceedings," and also as to initialing the pages. In a broad sense, the term "proceedings" used in the rule would embrace the taking of testimony de bene esse. The object of the rule is to prevent mistake or imposition, and, as to other pleadings and proceedings, there is no safeguard prescribed by statute. But the statute lays down with particularity the safeguards to be used for preserving the integrity of testimony taken de bene esse. These seem quite adequate; and the reasonable view is that the judge meant to safeguard such proceedings as the General Assembly had not already safeguarded by statute. This conclusion is strengthened by the consideration of the inconvenience that would arise from requiring observance of excessive formalities by officers outside of the state unfamiliar with our rules of court. The testimony taken de bene esse should have been admitted.

3. The final question is: Did the refusal to charge there was no evidence of waiver, and the rejection of the evidence taken de bene esse, so prejudice the defendant as to warrant this court in ordering a new trial? The stipulations that the insured should give immediate notice of an accident and full information concerning it, and send the summons immediately to the insured company, means that these things should be done with reasonable promptness under the circumstances, not that they should be done literally without the lapse of any time. The numerous authorities on this point are collated in 21 Cyc. 1731, 1732. What is reasonable promptness under such stipulation is usually a question of fact for the jury. There was evidence that Price, vice president and treasurer in charge of the mill, was in extreme ill health, though trying to attend to the duties of his office, when the accident happened to Jennings, and grew worse until his death in February, 1904. Mr. A. S. Tompkins then took charge of the offices of the mill, as temporary successor to Price. In March, 1904, Mr. Tompkins was made aware for the first time that his company had casualty insurance by finding the policy among the papers of the company, and on the same day gave the casualty company notice of the accident, and offered to send it the summons served on behalf of Jennings. Mr. Tompkins thus sums up in his evidence the reasons for the delay: "That is when I found the policy. Not only had Mr. Price been sick, but the balance of the people in the office nearly all had smallpox. The entire office had three or four months' vacation by Mr. Price being in a dying condition; quarantined on account of smallpox. That was the condition of things at the time this accident occurred and shortly after. We had these conditions to contend with. The mill was almost entirely at a standstill." All this evidence was undisputed, and there is no suggestion against its credibility. The testimony taken de bene esse proves nothing more than the delay in giving the notice of the accident and in sending the summons, and the importance to the company of promptness in these matters.

In view of these facts, it is evident a jury could not reasonably reach any other conclusion than that the delay was excusable, and the notice given and the summons sent with all promptness to be fairly expected and exacted. We do not say there was not a scintilla of evidence supporting the defense; and, if the verdict had been for the defendant, the scintilla would have prevented this court from ordering a new trial for lack of facts to sustain the defense. But this court should not order a new trial where from an examination of the record it has no doubt the verdict of any fair jury would have been the same, even if no error had been committed. In such a case the errors should be regarded not prejudicial.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

(73 S. C. 188)

CLOY et al. v. WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Sept. 9, 1907.)

1. TELEGRAPHS—DELAY IN DELIVERY—NOTICE TO COMPANY.

A telegram from a husband to his wife, "We got left, go to your father's tonight, will be on next train"—would not carry the information to the company that a failure to deliver before night would cause the wife to be at home without protection a part of the night, and drive from her home in the night to that of her father alone through a forest.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 45, Telegraphs and Telephones, § 69.]

2. SAME—VOLUNTARY ACT.

Where a wife received a delayed telegram that her husband would not return that night, and to go to her father's, the court cannot say that her driving through the forest with her infant at night to her father's home was a voluntary act.

3. SAME—DAMAGES.

Where, in an action for delay of a telegram, there was uncontradicted evidence of an effort to deliver, and no evidence that the agent of defendant could have secured an earlier delivery by using all the fee charged for that purpose, a verdict for $850 was excessive as including punitive damages.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 45, Telegraphs and Telephones, § 74.]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Barnwell County; Gage, Judge.

Action by Lois Cloy and D. R. Cloy against the Western Union Telegraph Company. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Jno. R. Bellinger, for appellant. Davis & Best, for respondent.

POPE, J. This case was tried at the fall, 1906, term of court for Barnwell county. It appears that D. R. Cloy, one of the plaintiffs herein and husband of Lois E. Cloy, having been on a trip to Savannah, wished to return to his home near Estell, S. C., on the 25th day of September, 1906, but was left by the train. Knowing that Mrs. Cloy would be expecting him, he telegraphed her the following message, which arrived at Estell about 2:30 o'clock: "We got left, go to your father's tonight, will be on next train." Plaintiffs lived seven or eight miles from Estell, and, in order to secure a prompt delivery of the message, plaintiff D. R. Cloy, in addition to the regular charge, paid the defendant company $1, the amount demanded by the agent for delivery. The message was not delivered until about 8 o'clock that evening. The complaint alleges that the delay was willful and wanton, and as a result thereof "the plaintiff Lois E. Cloy was left at home alone with her infant child, in the country, isolated from friends or any one near enough to protect her, whereby she was frightened and worried to such an extent that she was compelled to leave her home and drive three miles in the dark alone with her infant child to the house of her father through the forest; and by reason of all the facts hereinbefore set forth the said Lois E. Cloy suffered great bodily pain, fear, mental anguish and anxiety, to her damage $1,950." A motion was made to strike out this language from the complaint, on the grounds that such results were not in the contemplation of the parties. The motion was refused; Judge Gage holding that the language, "Go to your father's tonight," was at least sufficient to warn the company that such results would follow from a failure to deliver the telegram. A motion for a nonsuit as to punitive damages was likewise refused. The jury found a verdict of $850 for the plaintiff. The defendant appeals.

1. The first six exceptions relate to the refusal to strike out. We are of the opinion that it was not error to refuse to strike out the language above quoted. It might have been proper to have stricken out that portion of the allegation which related to plaintiff's child had the motion been so directed, but as defendant sought to strike out the whole allegation, some of which was proper, it was not error to refuse the motion as a whole. The telegram containing the words, "Go to your father's tonight," put it clearly within the contemplation of the parties as one of the objects of the telegram that plaintiff would on receipt of the message seek the protection of her father's home as bidden by her husband. Hence the propriety of the allegation that, in consequence of the delay in delivering the telegram, plaintiff was compelled to leave her home and drive in the dark to the house of her father. The fact that the drive was to be in the night was to be anticipated as a natural result of the failure to deliver the message before night, and the defendant's knowledge that plaintiff was expected to go to her father's house that night necessarily included knowledge that she must go the necessary distance and along the proper road lying between the points indicated. Going through the forest along the road was but a necessary incident of the journey contemplated by the message. Moreover, the complaint, in the portion sought to be stricken out, alleged that by reason of the failure to deliver the message promptly plaintiff was compelled to spend a part of the night alone, isolated from friends or any one near to protect her, which caused her mental suffering; in other words, that a reasonable delivery of the message as contemplated would have enabled her to reach her father's house before night, and thus have relieved her of the fear and anxiety involved in being in her home in the country at night without protection. Speaking generally, whatever injury or mental suffering naturally and proximately resulted to the plaintiff by reason of the delay in delivering the message was a proper matter for allegation and proof. To strike out the allegations in question would deprive plaintiff of any right to recover for mental anguish.

2. As regards the second question raised, we do not think this court can as a matter of law say that plaintiff's drive through the forest in the dark alone with her infant was her own voluntary act, and that her fear and anguish arising therefrom was the result of her own conduct, for which the defendant is not responsible. It is the duty of one affected by the negligent act of another to exercise ordinary care in using reasonable means at hand for the purpose of minimizing or averting the consequences of such negligence. But in this case it is not a necessary inference from the undisputed facts that plaintiff negligently failed in this regard. Plaintiff's father, living three miles distant, was her nearest natural protector, and, in addition to the filial instincts prompting her to go to him, was the direction of her husband to go there. It is true that Mr. Paul Allen lived at a distance by road from her house, variously estimated by the witnesses as from a half mile to a mile, thought by plaintiff to be a mile, and sent word by a negro boy named Tillman, bearing the telegram to let him know if there was anything he could do for her; but plaintiff's husband had been living in the community only a short while, and there is no evidence (beyond the inconsequential testimony that Allen and Cloy sometimes brought each other's mail from the post office at Seminole) tending to show such confidence and friendship between herself and husband and Mr. Allen as beyond question should have induced her to go to his home or accept his company or escort with the uncertainty and anxious delay involved in any event, in preference to setting out alone without delay for her father's home. The night being dark, she provided herself with a lantern. She probably knew the way well. The road was good and the weather propitious, so it was not unreasonable for her to suppose that she could reach her father's home in about an hour, and that it would be the best course to go at once and alone. At any rate, it was for the jury to say under all the circumstances whether in the dilemma brought upon her by the delay of delivering the telegram she negligently failed to minimize or avert the consequences of such delay.

3. As it is not disputed that there was some evidence tending to show negligence on the part of the defendant, and as there was some evidence tending to show a few hours' mental anxiety and suffering on the part of the plaintiff in consequence of such negligence, a verdict based upon the idea of a fair and just compensation for the injury would have been unassailable in this court under the exceptions. But the verdict for $850 is manifestly largely punitive, and several exceptions involve the question whether there was any evidence tending to show willful misconduct on the part of the defendant. We look in vain for anything in the testimony tending to show a reckless or wanton disregard of duty on the part of the defendant. The plaintiff testified that the message was delivered to defendant's agent at Savannah between 12 and 1 o'clock on September 25th. It appears that some time was consumed in an effort to find out if the agent at Estell could procure a messenger to deliver the telegram at plaintiff's home, about eight miles in the country, and, after hearing from the Estell agent, the Savannah agent agreed to deliver the message for $1 in addition to the ordinary rate for delivery at Estell. A memorandum on the message blank stated that it was received at the Savannah office at 2:30 p. m. The agent at Estell applied to Mr. Peeples, who conducted a livery business, to deliver the message, but he could not, as his horses were all out. The Estell agent was informed by Mr. Peeples that the quickest way to get the message out would be by the mail boy. There was also no testimony that any other means of delivery was available. The defendant's agent employed Wallace Hays, the mail boy, to carry the message and deliver it to Mr. Dickenson, postmaster at Seminole, which was six or seven miles from Estell, with one intervening office to serve, with request that he get it out to Cloy's with his mail. The mail boy arrived at Seminole a little before sundown, and delivered the telegram to the postmaster. About half an hour afterwards the postmaster delivered the telegram to Mr. Solomons, who carried it to Mr. Allen's, and, being unwell, he stopped there, and Mr. Allen sent the telegram on by a negro boy, who delivered it to the plaintiff at about 8 o'clock. Here certainly was undisputed evidence of some effort to deliver, and the case clearly does not fall within that class of cases which permits an inference of wantonness from long delay without explanation or effort to deliver. The fact that defendant's agent paid the mail boy only 25 cents for his services, when the company charged $1 for the special delivery, is referred to by respondent as a circumstance showing wantonness in failing to deliver in time, but it must be remembered that the delivery was not to be completed by the mail boy, for, after the message reached Seminole, it remained to be sent on by others acting for the company for whom compensation would have to be provided by the company if demanded. The mail boy regarded 25 cents as adequate compensation for his services, no doubt, because he was going to Seminole anyway, and could carry the message that far with little or no inconvenience. There is no foundation in the testimony for the suggestion that defendant's agent willfully misappropriated the remaining 75 cents, and there is nothing to show that, if the whole of the $1 had been paid to the mail boy, the message would have been delivered more promptly. When the company made the charge of $1 for the special delivery, it was doubtless in contemplation that a team would have to be hired, as the effort to get a conveyance from the livery stable keeper showed. We fail to see how this circumstance could affect the question of willfulness with respect to the delivery of the message. There was no evidence that defendant's agent had opportunity to secure a speedier delivery of the message by using the special fee for that purpose and wantonly failed to do so. We therefore sustain the exceptions raising this question.

It is the judgment of this court, that the judgment of the circuit court be reversed, and the case remanded for a new trial.

(78 S. C. 88)

STATE v. EMERSON.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Sept. 6, 1907.)

1. HOMICIDE—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE—HARMLESS ERROR.

On trial for murder for killing a father in the bedroom of his daughter, into which accused had gone under a plea of self-defense, exclusion of evidence offered to show estrangement between the father and his daughter was harmless, where that fact was testified to by the same witness in chief.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 26, Homicide, § 714.]

2. SAME—EVIDENCE.

Where the only evidence of illicit intercourse between accused and the daughter of deceased was an occurrence 10 years previous, it is not competent to show the father had knowledge of such relation to show the attitude of the deceased toward the defendant at the time of the homicide, where the defense was self-defense.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 26, Homicide, § 398.]

3. WITNESSES—IMPEACHMENT.

When accused is advised of a particular conversation with one person, and gives his version of it in reply, he may be contradicted by another, who says he heard the conversation, though his name was not given by defendant on his examination as being present at the time.

4. HOMICIDE — MANSLAUGHTER — SELF-DEFENSE.

It would be manslaughter to kill a man found in the house for purposes of illicit intercourse with the owner's daughter, but such wrongful act on the part of the person entering the house will deprive him of any right of self-defense should he kill the owner of the house who attacks him on the spot.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 26, Homicide, §§ 145, 146.]

5. SAME—MURDER.

Where there was evidence that accused armed himself with a pistol in anticipation of some interference with his purpose in entering the house of deceased, and with the intent to take the life of such owner, should it be necessary to save his own in the course of such interference, such formed design rendered defendant guilty of murder.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 26, Homicide, § 14.]

6. CRIMINAL LAW—INSTRUCTIONS.

Failure to give instruction already covered by the instructions given is not error.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 2011.]

Appeal from General Sessions Circuit Court of Anderson County; Gary, Judge.

J. A. Emerson was convicted of murder, and appeals. Affirmed.

Bonham & Watkins and Cothran, Dean & Cothran, for appellant. J. E. Boggs, Sol. Martin & Earle, G. C. Sullivan, and Paget & Watkins, for the State.

JONES, J. The appellant was indicted for the murder of Thomas F. Drake, and, upon being convicted with a recommendation to mercy, was sentenced to life imprisonment, from which appeal is taken upon numerous exceptions. The homicide occurred on the night of August 12, 1906, in the home of the deceased in Anderson county. Mrs. Belle Bailey, a married daughter of the deceased, about 31 years old, was living in the home of her father, with her child, Mary, about 13 years old, and her brother, Ralph Drake. The defendant, a sergeant of the county chain gang, left camp some 14 miles from Drake's for the purpose of visiting Belle Bailey in her bedroom. Hitching his mule in the woods near the house, he went to the open window of the bedroom, and, discovering a knot in the curtain, the signal agreed upon between them, he entered through the window. He placed his coat and pants upon the floor and his pistol on top in reach from the side of the bed and got in bed with Belle Bailey. The deceased occupied a room just across the hall and nearly opposite Belle Bailey's room. Deceased got up during the night and set a lighted lamp in the hall on a table standing almost opposite Belle Bailey's room door, which stood slightly ajar. Belle said to her paramour: "There is a light, Allen." He then got out of bed and started towards the door. She testified that her father pushed the door open before she reached it; that she asked him what he wanted, and he said, "I want to hear a fuss"; that he had a pistol in his hand; that she heard Allen say, "Don't shoot"; that her father immediately fired towards Allen; that Allen shot his pistol; that her father immediately started to shoot again, when Allen shot the second time and her father fell away from the room door into the hall. The deceased was shot through the heart and died immediately. The defendant testified that when Belle punched him in the side and said, "There is a light, Allen," he raised up in bed and saw the door open and Drake with a pistol in hand; that he said to Drake, "Don't you shoot me," and bent over in bed to get his pistol, and while in that position Drake fired, the ball grazing and cutting the skin on his back; that he (defendant) then fired into the ceiling above to ward him off and get a chance to get out of the room; that Drake was about to fire again when defendant fired as quick as he could and Drake disappeared; that he then left the room without his clothes and went to where his mule was hitched; and that Belle brought the clothes to him there. The defendant and Belle went off together to Anderson, the defendant voluntarily surrendered to the sheriff, and Belle went to Atlanta. The defendant set up the plea of self-defense, and the real struggle in the case was on the point whether defendant was without fault in bringing on the difficulty. On this issue defendant sought to show the cause of Belle Bailey's marriage with William Bailey, some 13 years before the homicide; that her father knew of her unchaste character and her previous relations with the deceased; that he was estranged from his daughter by reason of her conduct; that he never spoke to her or entered her bedroom; that defendant knew of this relation, and therefore did not expect to encounter the father on his visit to the daughter.

1. The first exception assigns error in the court's refusal to allow defendant's counsel to ask the witness Ralph Drake: "Do you know the immediate cause of her marriage at that time? Why was it she got married just at that time?" The object was to show that the marriage was forced because Belle was with child by William Bailey. This was properly excluded as too remote and as not throwing any light upon the homicide occurring 13 years afterwards, and there being nothing to connect the circumstances of that marriage with the defendant or the homicide. If the purpose of the testimony was preliminary to showing an estrangement between Belle Bailey and her father because of her unchaste conduct and the improbability of the defendant encountering the father in her bedroom, the ruling was harmless, as it was an undisputed fact in the case established by the state's witness Ralph Drake, at folios 25, 26, that the relation between Belle and her father was not friendly, that he had not spoken to her for 10 or 12 years, and that he never entered her room.

2. The basis of the third exception is the alleged refusal of the court to allow the witness Belle Bailey to answer the question, "Did you make it known to him (defendant) that your father did not communicate at all with you?" The case, at folio 74, shows the following in the examination of Belle Bailey: "Q. You need not state what you said to Allen Emerson, but I will ask you this question, whether or not you made it known to him that your father, never, under any circumstances, came into your room? A. I have. Q. You told him that? A. Yes, sir." After this, when the question referred to in the exception was asked, objection was made by the solicitor, and the court sustained the objection. This cannot constitute reversible error, if it be conceded that the testimony was competent, for the question, in so far as it relates to whether Drake ever entered her room, had previously been answered without objection and remained as testimony in the case. Moreover, the defendant, at folio 149, testified that he knew Drake never had any communication with Belle and never visited her room, and that he had no reason to expect to meet Drake in that room. It is not reversible error to exclude testimony as to matters already in evidence and undisputed. The fact that Drake did not speak to his daughter or visit her room was proven by the state, as already remarked, and was not a matter of dispute.

3. The second and fourth exceptions charge error in refusing to allow the following questions to be propounded to the witness Belle Bailey: "Do you know whether or not your father was aware of this relation between yourself and Allen Emerson?" "I wish you would state to the jury whether or not your father had knowledge of the fact that there had been illicit relations between you and Allen Emerson, the defendant." The witness Belle Bailey had just previously testified that 10 years before she gave birth to a child, and that the defendant was its father, but there was at that stage in the case no testimony of any other improper relation between the parties up to the night of the homicide. So that we are bound to assume that the purpose of the question was to ascertain whether the deceased knew of the illicit relation which had existed between his daughter and the defendant 10 years previously. The circuit court ruled that the testimony might be relevant and admissible if Drake, the father, had on this occasion killed the defendant and was on trial for the same, but that it was not relevant to the issue in this case. The appellant contends that the father's knowledge of the unchaste relation between defendant and his daughter would be a material and relevant circumstance in determining whether the father's attack upon defendant was in revenge for past wrong, and therefore malicious, or was the result of heat and passion aroused by suddenly discovering the adulterer in his house in the bed with his daughter; that, if Drake would have been guilty of murder had he killed defendant, the defendant had the right to defend himself against such malicious attack; and that if the deceased knew of the unchaste relations of his daughter with defendant, and had ceased to communicate with her, defendant could not reasonably have anticipated an encounter with the deceased, and therefore was without fault in bringing on the difficulty. This contention is plausible, but not sound. It will be observed that the question was not so framed as to indicate to the court that it was intended to show that the defendant was aware that the deceased had knowledge of his previous illicit relation with his daughter; on the contrary, the plain import was merely to show the knowledge of the deceased. If defendant was not aware that deceased had such knowledge, the fact of the deceased's knowledge could have no influence in prompting or explaining the conduct of the defendant.

Is the testimony competent as tending to show the attitude of deceased towards the accused at the time of the homicide? To be so it must fall within the rule governing the admission of evidence of previous quarrels, ill feeling, or hostile acts between the parties. The rule on that subject is thus stated in 21 Cyc. 962: "Where there is a claim supported by some evidence of self-defense, or, as it has been well stated, where the proof justifies the giving of a charge on the law of self-defense, defendant may for the purpose of showing deceased to have been the aggressor, and the killing to have been necessary in self-defense, introduce evidence tending to show that deceased entertained hostile feelings towards him. Thus he may show that there had been previous difficulties or quarrels between himself and deceased, or that previous to the killing deceased had been guilty of acts and conducts evincing hostility towards defendant. Defendant may show that on former occasions deceased assaulted or attacked, beat, waylaid, or shot at him. There must, however, be some connection between the previous difficulties and the homicide. Defendant cannot go back to a remote period and prove a particular quarrel or grudge unless he also proves a continued difference flowing from that source; but, where there has been a series of difficulties down to the time of the killing, defendant may introduce evidence of previous affrays, difficulties, and attacks, although remote in time and place, their weight being for the jury." In State v. Faile, 48 S. C. 62, 20 S. E. 798, it was held competent to give in evidence uncommunicated threats by the deceased against the accused made two weeks before the homicide, and in State v. Thrailkill, 71 S. C. 142, 50 S. E. 551, it was held competent to show that the deceased approached the scene of the difficulty armed with a gun with knowledge that the accused had just previously killed his brother. This and similar rulings are upon the ground that the evidence reasonably tends to show a hostile attitude by the deceased against the accused at the time of the homicide and to illustrate or interpret his action. But in this case the attempt is not made to show any previous threat or hostile demonstration by the deceased, but mere knowledge by the deceased of defendant's former conduct. The remoteness of the act sought to be put within the knowledge of the deceased, and the failure to offer or attempt to connect it with the homicide justified the circuit court in excluding the evidence. Daniel v. State, 103 Ga. 202, 29 S. E. 767. In judging the mental attitude of the deceased at the time of the homicide, it would be absurd to attribute his conduct to ill feeling engendered by information of an old wrong, the continued existence of which had not been manifested by any hostile word or deed, rather than to the overwhelming indignation and injury engendered by another similar wrong just perpetrated or about to be perpetrated under his roof. State v. Johnson, 47 N. C. 247, 64 Am. Dec. 582. Moreover, the defendant, instead of showing the continued existence of ill feeling by the deceased caused by his former conduct, testified to the contrary, for at folios 167, 183, 184, 191, and 192, he testified to the effect that his relations with the deceased were not unfriendly; that some eight or ten years before the homicide he made explanation of his relations with Belle to her relatives, Jesse Drake, John Drake, and the deceased, Jesse Drake being spokesman for the party; that Jesse Drake was satisfied with his explanation; and that deceased never complained after such explanation. This testimony was not disputed. These exceptions must therefore be overruled.

The fifth exception assigns error in permitting the introduction of a note written by Emerson to Mrs. Bailey about a year before the homicide. As neither the note nor a statement of its contents appears in the "Case," we are unable to consider the exception.

4. A witness for the state, F. D. Suber, testified that on the day after the homicide he heard a conversation in the jail between defendant and William Bell, in which defendant said: "There was a light burning in the hall, and the door opened, and Mr. Drake made a dark place between him and the door, and he was the best target he ever had to shoot at." The defendant, when examined, denied having made such a statement, and testified that what he said was: "When the door opened it blinded me, and the light shined on me and made the best target out of me for him to shoot at I ever saw." In reply, the witness C. B. Prince, over objection, was permitted to testify that he was present during the said conversation in the jail, and in answer to the question, "Did you hear defendant say that Drake was the best target he ever shot at?" the witness answered, "Yes." The defendant's counsel then requested that the witness be asked to state the exact language, whereupon the court sustained the solicitor's contention that it was not necessary to give the exact language used, but that it would be sufficient to state the substance of the conversation.

The sixth exception alleges error in the following particulars: (1) The defendant had not been asked as to any conversation to which Prince was a party and had no opportunity to deny it; (2) defendant had the right to have witness repeat the exact language in order to test the accuracy of his memory; (3) in the form in which the question was put, witness was made to simply repeat Suber's statement. Statements or declarations of the accused relative to matters in issue may be given in evidence, whether he goes on the stand as a witness or not, and therefore, if he testifies, it is not essential that he be advertised of the purpose to give his declarations in evidence. State v. White, 15 S. C. 391; State v. Freeman, 43 S. C. 107, 20 S. E. 974. The accused in this case was particularly advised of the particular conversation and gave his version of it. It was competent in reply for the state to corroborate the testimony of Suber by the testimony of another witness who was present at the time. When it is desired to give the declaration of the accused in evidence, it is proper, when it is possible to do so, to give his exact words; but, if the witness cannot state with certainty the exact words, it is competent to state the substance of the declaration, and the accuracy and truth of the witness may be tested under cross-examination. When the particular form in which the question is put is the point of exception, timely objection should be made so as to give the court an opportunity to see that the question is in proper form before answer, which was not done in this case. We, however, see no ground for reversal on account of the form of the question under the circumstances.

5. In the course of the charge to the jury, the court read the case of Dabney v. State, 113 Ala. 38, 21 South. 211, 59 Am. St. Rep. 92, 94, and declared that such is the law of South Carolina, and this charge is the basis of the seventh, eighth, ninth, eleventh, and fifteenth exceptions. In that case Faulkner, on the night of the homicide, discovered Dabney in the room of Faulkner's wife under circumstances indicating preparation for adultery. Faulkner demanded admittance, and on being refused proceeded to break down the door, and upon entering was shot by Dabney after Faulkner had stated that he had come to kill both of the parties and was advancing with pistol drawn and pointed at Dabney, who had no means of escape except through the door. Dabney having appealed from a conviction of murder in the second degree the Supreme Court of Alabama rendered an opinion containing the following extracts which were read to the jury by Judge Gary on the trial of this case: "It is, and always has been, an elementary principle of criminal law, so familiar as not even to require a citation of our own numerous adjudications upon it, that one who provokes a difficulty, who by his own wrong contributes to a situation out of which arise a necessity to take the life of another to preserve his own, cannot invoke the doctrine of self-defense to justify the homicide he commits in such difficulty—cannot plead a necessity to kill which arose from his own wrong. Sexual intercourse with the wife of another is such a wrong, so obviously calculated to bring on a difficulty with the husband, as that the law itself recognizes it as provocation sufficient to reduce the killing of the adulteress and her paramour by the husband, upon detecting them in the act, to manslaughter; a wrong which is an adjudged provocation to homicide on the part of the husband. If, as in the case at bar, the paramour, in order to save his own life from the consequences of the deadly passions of the husband, excited by the wrong of the former, slays the husband, he can in no sense be said to have been free from fault in bringing about the mortal encounter. The fatal result, to the contrary, is traceable directly to his own wrong, and he cannot justify his act by an invocation of the doctrine under which one free from fault and unable to retreat is authorized to save his own life by destroying that of another. It is also a too elementary and familiar principle of law to need discussion or reference to authorities that if one, entering upon the commission of a wrongful act has in contemplation that another will or may interfere with his enterprise, arms himself with a deadly weapon with the intent to take the life of that other should it become necessary to save his own in the course of such interference, and who in fact does take the life of the person so interfering in pursuance of such intent, is guilty of murder in the first degree; the intent to kill under the conditions contemplated constituting the 'formed design' sufficient and necessary in murder, when the circumstances of the act do not justify the design, and the wrongfulness of the act in which the slayer was engaged at the time, the necessity to strike arose, precluding all justification of the design."

Error is assigned to this charge in the following particulars: (1) It was inapplicable to the facts of this case and tended to excite the jury against the defendant; (2) it is not an adjudged provocation to homicide if a father find one in cohabitation with his daughter of known immoral character whose immorality had so estranged him that he ceased to treat her as a daughter; (3) that it erroneously conveyed to the jury as the opinion of the court that the defendant had precluded himself from setting up the plea of self-defense, and that it was lawful for Drake to kill Emerson because of his cohabitation with the daughter of deceased; (4) there was no evidence that defendant in this case "armed himself in anticipation that any one might or would interfere in his purpose and with intent to take the life of the other should it become necessary to save his own in the course of such interference, etc."; (5) that having charged at defendant's request that one who knows the unchaste character of a female will not be excused for assaulting one found in cohabitation with her to the same extent as would one who had no previous knowledge of the woman's lack of virtue, it was error to give to the jury the facts and law of the Alabama case, the two propositions being diametrically opposed. There is no doubt that the common-law rule prevails in this state that, if a husband discovers one in the act of adultery with his wife, and immediately kills him, he is guilty, not of murder, but of manslaughter, upon the ground that the adulterous act is an act of aggression against the husband constituting in law a sufficient provocation to engender the heat and passion which negatives malice. In 4 Bl. Com. (Sharswood Ed.) p. 190, we find: "So if a man takes another in the act of adultery with his wife and kills him directly upon the spot, though this was allowed by the law of Solon, as likewise by the Roman civil law (if the adulterer was found in the husband's own house) and also among the ancient Goths, yet in England it is not absolutely ranked in the class of justifiable homicide, as in case of a forcible rape, but it is manslaughter. It is, however, the lowest degree of it; and therefore, in such a case the court directed the burning in the hand to be gently inflicted, because there could not be a greater provocation." In State v. Chiles, 58 S. C. 49, 36 S. E. 496, this court approved as correct a charge that it would be manslaughter for a husband to kill one while in the act of adultery with his wife. The same principle should apply where a father kills one who he detects in illicit intercourse with his daughter, especially if she be a member of his household and under his roof, as the cases stand upon the same footing of reason and justice. 21 Cyc. 753; State v. Grugin, 147 Mo. 39, 47 S. W. 1058, 42 L. R. A. 774, 71 Am. St. Rep. 553. If such a provocation be sufficient to mitigate a killing of a paramour by the father to manslaughter, it is surely a wrongful act reasonably calculated to stir the passion of the father and provoke an attack by him, such as would deprive the paramour of any right of self-defense should he kill the father who attacks him on the spot. The law of self-defense, as repeatedly declared in this state, requires that the slayer shall be "without fault" in bringing on the difficulty. One is not "without fault" who does that which a reasonable man would expect to bring on a physical encounter and which did actually contribute to bringing it on. State v. Rowell, 75 S. C. 510, 56 S. E. 23. If we concede that defendant had no reasonably safe means of escape and shot Drake to save his own life, his plea of self-defense is unavailing, because by his own guilty act he brought on the necessity to kill.

6. Hence the principle of the Alabama case as given to the jury on the subject of self-defense was sound and applicable, unless it be true, as contended by appellant, that the knowledge by the deceased of his daughter's former acts of unchastity and the estrangement between them because of such conduct and the fact that defendant knew of the estrangement and of the father's habit not to visit his daughter's room are circumstances which have some tendency to show that defendant was without fault in bringing on the difficulty. We are clearly of the opinion that these circumstances cannot have such effect. The fact that Drake did not visit his daughter's room for communion and companionship as a father furnished no sort of reason for believing he would not as master of his home go there to eject an invader of its sanctity. Emerson's visit was admittedly clandestine, so far as Drake was concerned, and there is no foundation in the evidence for a suggestion that Emerson was there by the acquiescence or implied invitation of Drake, or that Drake had set a trap for him with a view to kill him. Hence the doctrine of Wilkinson v. State, 91 Ga. 729, 17 S. E. 990, 44 Am. St. Rep. 63, has no application. In the case of Varnell v. State, 26 Tex. App. 56, 9 S. W. 65, much relied upon by appellant, the defendant and a daughter of deceased were guilty of illicit intercourse 30 or 40 yards from the house and away from the deceased, who, after being informed of what had happened, went to the place, his daughter having fled to the house, and there attacked defendant with an axe and was killed by him. The court held that upon these facts the defendant had not lost his right of self-defense. This was manifestly on the theory that the deceased attacked the defendant in that case in revenge for what had occurred out of his presence, and the case is distinguishable from the case at bar. In Varnell's Case, the deceased attacked upon information of a completed act done out of his presence; in the case at bar, the deceased attacked for an act in progress under his roof and in his sight. Drake, being in his own home, had a perfect right, on hearing a noise, to arm himself, place a light on his table, and approach the door of his daughter's room, which stood ajar, and ascertain the cause. If he had reason to believe a man was in his daughter's room for an unlawful purpose, he not only had a right to push open the door and use whatever force was necessary to eject the invader of his home and family honor, but it was so natural and probable that any father would do so under such circumstances that it would be unreasonable, indeed foolhardy, for the trespasser not to expect a possible encounter with the father. The law will not give immunity or amelioration from the natural consequences of doing a criminal act in proportion to the secrecy and frequency with which it is committed. The law will not heed Emerson when he says: "I have entered Drake's home before for immoral purposes without discovery. I have reliable information that Drake never enters his daughter's room. I do not therefore expect to meet him on my secret and noiseless visits there at night. If I should happen to meet him, and, contrary to my expectation, he assaults me during my criminal act in his home, the law of self-defense will protect me if I kill him to save my own life, because I am without fault, having done nothing reasonably calculated to bring on a difficulty." The bare statement shows how untenable is the contention based upon the alleged belief of Emerson that he would not encounter Drake that night. It is sufficient to know that he did encounter Drake in his home, where he had a right to be, and where Emerson had no right to be. But it is said the testimony supports a theory that the father had knowledge of his daughter's unchastity, and because of this was so estranged from her as to have abandoned her and lost all concern about her conduct and welfare, and that therefore he did not attack defendant in sudden heat and passion upon a new provocation, but in revenge for past wrong, which clothed defendant with the right of self-defense. No reasonable view of the testimony warranted an inference that the father had so abandoned his daughter to a life of shame as not to be naturally moved to ungovernable wrath by witnessing her further pollution. It is true, Emerson testified that he had been making similar visits to the room of Belle Bailey once or twice a month during 1906, but there was no attempt to show that Drake acquiesced in it, or that he was aware of it. Drake undoubtedly knew of the daughter's downfall many years before, and his proud heart was so stung and humiliated by it that he did not entirely forgive her, yet the undisputed testimony is that by his wish she was living under his roof as a member of his household. She kept the house and did the cooking, but there was nothing unusual or degrading in that. Her sister Kittle did the same thing until she married. She ate at his table and entertained her friends in his home. She received support for herself and child from her father's means and had her own pocket money from the farm produce. She had the friendship of her brother and the companionship and love of her innocent child in the old home. The father's grief for her former lapse forbids the thought that he had lost concern for her as his daughter, and the denouement shows that she could have relied on his protection from further dishonor at any cost. We do not hesitate to say that there is nothing in the testimony to warrant an inference that the relation between father and daughter was such that defendant was without fault in bringing about the necessity to kill. At request of appellant, the court instructed the jury: "That the illicit intercourse of one with a female of well-known unchaste character, with her consent, is not such provocation, if her want of chastity be known to her male relatives, as would reduce the homicide of the man by the relative to manslaughter. And one found in intercourse with such woman under such circumstances, if assaulted by her relative under the facts herein supposed to exist, may defend himself from assault to the extent of taking human life, if it be necessary to protect his own life, or to protect his person from serious bodily harm, provided he did nothing more than this to bring on the difficulty, and there was no other safe means of escape, and provided the jury believe a reasonably firm person under the same circumstances would come to the same conclusion." Whether this was a correct charge was not involved in the appeal. Certainly it was as favorable to appellant as he could possibly expect, in so far as his contention rests upon the unchaste character of Belle Bailey, and should be fairly construed as a qualification of the rule stated in the Alabama case in accordance with appellant's view.

7. It remains to inquire whether the charge based upon the Alabama case was inapplicable for want of evidence tending to show that defendant armed himself with a deadly weapon in anticipation that any one might or would interfere with his purpose, and with intent to take the life of another should it be necessary to save his own in the course of such interference. A brief reference to the testimony will be sufficient to show that this contention is incorrect. Reference has already been made to the fact that Emerson placed his pistol that night on top of his clothes in reach from the side of the bed where he was. Emerson, in explanation of his being armed with a pistol, stated that as sergeant of the county chain gang he usually carried a pistol, and that he had it with him on this occasion, in anticipation that he might come across an escaped convict, and that he did not carry it in anticipation of interference with his visit to Belle Bailey. It was, however, for the jury to determine whether this was a satisfactory explanation of Emerson's having the pistol in Drake's house when not on duty, and of the apparently careful placing of it for quick use. Mary Bailey, in contradiction of her mother, testified that shortly after the homicide that night her mother said in her presence that she heard her father when he got out of bed and begged Emerson to leave. If warned to leave in time to make his escape, did he remain with purpose to shoot his way out later, if necessary? Mention has been made of the witnesses who testified that Emerson, after the homicide, declared that Drake was the best target he ever shot at. Earle Mayfield testified that, two weeks after the homicide, Emerson told him that he had been warned to stay away from Drake's house, and that he knew he ought not to have gone there, and further said: "Mr. Drake appeared in the door again, and then, God damn him, I meant to kill him." Also: "I had the advantage of him, as he was between me and the light." Ralph Drake testified that Belle Bailey told him that night that Allen Emerson had not been there but twice, and that he said he would come if it cost him his life. Furthermore, an issue was raised in the testimony whether Drake fired his pistol at all that night. There was testimony that after careful search in the room and on the ground about the window no bullet marks, other than those made by balls from Emerson's pistol, could be found, and no bullet from Drake's pistol could be found, and there was a conflict of testimony as to whether the pistol of Drake, found by his side with one empty shell, appeared to have been recently discharged. The foregoing certainly constitutes some evidence tending to show that Emerson entered Drake's home for an unlawful purpose, and with the intention to use a deadly weapon against any one interfering with its accomplishment. If Emerson killed Drake pursuant to such formal design, it was murder.

8. The tenth exception assigns error in charging the jury: "If the evidence fails to show you by the preponderance of the evidence that he was without fault in bringing about the difficulty, then his plea of self-defense fails, and you will say what offense he is guilty of—guilty of murder or guilty of manslaughter." It is contended that such charge was faulty, in eliminating the principle that one may not be without fault in bringing on a difficulty, and yet his right of self-defense survives if he shows an intention and desire to abandon the conflict, and, further, that it eliminates the doctrine that defendant was entitled to an acquittal if there was a reasonable doubt of his guilt, although the evidence fails to establish the plea of self-defense. There was nothing in the testimony calling for a statement of the law touching the right of self-defense when one originally at fault withdraws from the difficulty in good faith; but, conceding there was such testimony, the point was covered by charging appellant's fifth request to charge. So, also, in giving to the jury appellant's fourth request to charge the jury were fully instructed to acquit the accused if there was a reasonable doubt on any material point. State v. Way, 38 S. C. 346, 17 S. E. 39; State v. Way, 76 S. C. 94, 56 S. E. 653.

9. The twelfth and thirteenth exceptions allege error in the failure to charge appellant's request: "That one is not obliged to retreat if thereby he increases his danger, provided he has not forfeited his right to self-defense in other respects." The court, doubtless, did not deem it necessary to give this charge because he had previously, at request of appellant, instructed the jury that "the law, recognizing the imperfections of human nature, does not require that one charged with homicide should show that there was no other possible means of escape when he struck the fatal blow; but he is only called upon to satisfy the jury that, under all the circumstances by which he was surrounded, he readily believed that there was a necessity for taking the life of his adversary in order to preserve his own, and that, in the opinion of the jury, these circumstances were such as to justify such a belief in the mind of a person of ordinary firmness and reason." The charge given was more favorable to the appellant than the charge refused, and more fully and clearly covered the point sought to be made. The request refused made the right not to retreat under certain circumstances depend upon whether retreat would actually increase the danger, and was coupled with a proviso so extensive as to cloud the point in the mind of the jury; whereas, the charge given only imposed upon the defendant the duty of showing that he believed there was a necessity to kill, which involves the absence of reasonable safe means of escape or retreat, and that the circumstances justified such belief in an ordinary person.

The fourteenth exception imputes error in charging the jury: "If you conclude that the defendant was a trespasser in that house, and the trespassing was such as would be reasonably calculated to precipitate a conflict, then such trespasser could not be said to be without fault, and in that event such trespasser could not invoke the plea of self-defense"—the error assigned being that the charge implied the right on the part of the deceased to assault the defendant with a deadly weapon and seek to kill him because he was a trespasser. This is an incorrect view of the charge. The court did not use the term "trespasser" in the sense of one committing a simple trespass upon real property, as contended by appellant, but a trespasser in the sense disclosed by the evidence, and already discussed, and he left it to the jury to say whether such a trespass was committed by Emerson as was reasonably calculated to precipitate a conflict with the deceased in his home. The charge was correct and in accordance with the views heretofore announced.

After careful consideration of every exception, we find no ground for reversal.

The judgment of the circuit court is therefore affirmed.

(78 S. C. 374)

DRAWDY v. ATLANTIC COAST LINE R. CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 12, 1907.)

1. RAILROADS—ACCIDENTS AT CROSSINGS— VIOLATION OF SIGNAL STATUTE.

Where a railroad fails to comply with the signal statute when approaching a crossing, and a person is killed there by the train, the non-compliance is presumed to be the negligence which caused the death, unless it is shown to have been caused in some other manner.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 41, Railroads, § 1120.]

2. SAME—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—NON-SUIT.

A person who knew that a train was approaching a crossing, and had ample opportunity to observe its proximity, speed, and the extreme hardness of attempting to cross in front of it, nevertheless made the attempt and was killed. Held, that he was guilty of contributory negligence warranting a nonsuit.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 41, Railroads, § 1026.]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Colleton County; R. O. Purdy, Judge.

Action by W. P. Drawdy, executor of M. A. Drawdy, against the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

See 55 S. E. 444.

Griffin & Padgett, Howell & Gruber, and O. C. Tracy, for appellant. W. Huger Fitzsimons, T. M. Mordacai, Peurifoy Bros., and P. A. Wilcox, for respondent.

WOODS, J. M. A. Drawdy was killed by defendant's train while attempting to cross its track at Green Pond, where the public road intersects the railroad; and the plaintiff, as administrator, brought this action to recover damages for his death. The judgment of the circuit court overruling a demurrer to the complaint was affirmed by this court. 75 S. C. 308, 55 S. E. 444. The former appeal decided it was not per se such negligence as will prevent a recovery for personal injuries or death for one to undertake to cross a railroad track at a crossing after he has heard one blast of the whistle of the approaching train. The particulars of the accident as they appeared in the complaint were held not to show on their face gross or willful negligence preventing a recovery under the statute which makes a railroad company liable when it fails to give the statutory signals, unless the person killed or injured was guilty of willful or gross negligence. When the case came on for trial, the circuit judge held the particulars of the accident developed by the evidence on behalf of the plaintiff to show plainly the gross negligence of Drawdy in attempting to cross the track in front of the train contributed to his death as a proximate cause, and granted an order of nonsuit. The appeal is from this order.

The deceased, M. A. Drawdy, and his wife, Elizabeth Drawdy, on their journey from Walterboro to Beaufort, had to stop off and change cars at Green Pond. They had left home without breakfast, and, while waiting for their train, Drawdy left his wife in the station, and went across the track for the purpose of buying lunch at a store nearby. On his return, he was struck and killed by a through train not scheduled to stop at Green Pond. There was evidence that the train was running at a high rate of speed, but not faster than the fast trains usually ran by; and that there was an embankment which for a part of the way would obstruct Drawdy's view of the approaching train on his return; and some of the witnesses testified they heard one sharp blast of the whistle at the usual place about 500 yards distant, but did not hear the continued signal required by the statute. The statute provides that, if the continued signal prescribed is not given, "the corporation shall be liable for all damages caused by the collision, * * * unless it be shown that in addition to mere want of ordinary care, the person injured or the person having charge of his person or property was at the time of the collision, guilty of gross or willful negligence, or was acting in violation of the law; and that such gross or willful negligence or unlawful act contributed to the injury." The court held in Strother v. Railroad Co., 47 S. C. 381, 25 S. E. 273: "The failure on the part of defendant's servants to ring the bell or sound the whistle in the manner provided by the statute was negligence per se. When the defendant violates the requirements of the statute as to ringing the bell or sounding the whistle, and a person is injured by its locomotive while crossing a highway, street, or traveled place, it will be presumed that such negligence caused the injury, unless the testimony shows that the injury was caused in some other manner, which was not done in this case." There was evidence that the crossing at Green Pond was a much frequented and traveled place, and plaintiff contended on the authority of Risinger v. So. Ry. Co., 59 S. C. 429, 38 S. E. 1, that, it was for the jury to decide whether the rate of speed at which the train was run by such crossing was negligence. The remarks in the Risinger Case were applied to the rate of speed through the town or Leesville, and we do not think there is good ground to extend the principle to an ordinary crossing merely because it is frequented, for the reason that as to mere crossings the statute has prescribed the precautions to be taken.

But the point is not material here, for under the case of Strother v. Ry. Co., supra, noncompliance with the signal statute is presumed to be the negligence which caused personal injury or death of a person injured or killed by the train at a crossing. As there was some evidence from which it might possibly be inferred that the continued signal prescribed by law was not given, the consideration of the appeal from the nonsuit must begin with the assumption that the negligence of the defendant was a proximate cause of the death of Drawdy. The inquiry, then, is whether there was gross negligence on the part of Drawdy contributing to his death as a proximate cause. We think that no other than an affirmative answer is possible under the evidence offered by the plaintiff. Drawdy went across the track to the store of either Welch or Boynton. Those stores were opposite each other on the public road, not more than 30 feet from the track. G. S. Arnett, the only eyewitness of the accident, testified to these facts: He was standing between Boynton's store and the railroad, 15 or 20 feet from the track. Drawdy passed him, going towards Welch's store. A few minutes afterwards the witness heard a sharp blast from the approaching train at about 500 yards distant. It does not appear that he knew where Drawdy was at this moment. After a lapse of 10 or 15 minutes from the time he crossed the track, and after the blast of the whistle, Drawdy passed the witness at a run in the effort to recross the track in advance of the train. From his position when Drawdy passed him the witness saw and heard the train, and knew the impossibility of making a safe crossing. It is manifest from the evidence that Drawdy had heard the signal, knew the train was approaching, and was running a race with it in his anxiety to get to the station. Had he taken the slightest precaution to use his eyes or ears, he could not have failed to see how near the train was, how rapidly it was running, and how reckless would be the attempt to cross in front of it; for he passed the very spot where all these things were obvious to Arnett. It seems the train was so near when he passed Arnett that he was not able to go 10 steps to the railroad before the locomotive came, for the position of the body indicated he did not have time to get in front of the train. This is Arnett's account in his own language: "Q. You say Mr. Drawdy was running towards the railroad? A. Yes, sir. Q. How far was he from the railroad when he passed you? A. At whatever distance I was, I would say 20 to 25 feet. Q. Eight or ten steps? A. Yes, sir; it was 10 steps. I am sure it was that far. Q. What happened after that? Just describe it in your own way. A. Well, he tried to apparently—As he passed by me in such a rush, I looked around, and seen he was trying to get across the railroad, and the train was so near at hand I watched him, and seen there was going to be a collision; that he could not get across, and closed my eyes for a moment to keep from seeing him, and, as quick as the engine passed, I opened them and stooped down, and looked underneath the cars to see if I could see his feet on the other side, to see if he had got across, and I could not see it, and as quick as the train passed I rushed to the track and looked up it to see if I could see him, and I did see him by the track." On the cross-examination he testified: "Q. While you were standing there you heard a train blow, didn't you? A. Yes, sir. Q. You knew a train was coming, didn't you? A. I was expecting it. Q. You heard it and knew it was coming? A. Yes, sir. Q. Mr. Drawdy at that time was on the south side of you? A. Yes, sir; he passed me. Q. So, when he got to you, if he had any hearing at all, he must have known the train was coming? A. Well, I think so. * * * Q. Tell me why it was that you shut your eyes when you saw him going to that train? A. To keep from seeing a position. Q. Why was it? A. I saw the speed he was going, and the speed the train was going. Q. You knew it was impossible for him to cross first? A. Yes, sir. Q. Are you sure Mr. Drawdy got on the track? A. Yes, sir. Q. Didn't you shut your eyes? A. I don't know whether he got on the track or not. I seen the way he was going, and that he was going to try to get across. Q. Didn't you see he couldn't get on the track in front of that engine? A. I didn't know whether he was going on or not. I seen there was going to be a collision."

In Bamberg v. Railroad Co., 72 S. C. 393, 51 S. E. 989, "the plaintiff testified she had already crossed the track 30 or 40 yards from the place where she was injured; and there looked for the train, but did not see it, walked rapidly on, and, hearing no whistle or bell, undertook to cross a second time without looking again. Under this proof, it was for the jury to say whether the plaintiff's failure to look and listen constituted contributory negligence." But in that case the court says: "No doubt the failure to look and listen before going on the railroad track under some circumstances would be held to admit of no other inference than that the person injured was guilty of contributory negligence, and in such cases the court would grant a nonsuit on the principle announced in Jarrell v. Railway Co., 58 S. C. 491, 36 S. E. 910. This case is clearly of that character. Its facts are not even analogous to those in the Bamberg Case, and are very different from those in Osteen v. Railroad Co., 76 S. C. 368, 57 S. E. 196, where the verdict was allowed to stand only because of a doubt as to whether the plaintiff's negligence was a proximate cause of the injury. Here Drawdy knew the train was approaching, and very near the crossing. He had ample opportunity to observe how near it was, and its speed; and, if he had observed it at all, he would have seen the extreme hardihood of attempting to cross in front of it. The fact made out a case of gross negligence by the deceased as the proximate cause of the accident at least as strong as was made in Barber v. Railroad Co., 34 S. C. 451, 13 S. E. 630, where the plaintiff was nonsuited because he undertook to cross in front of a train which he knew to be approaching and near at hand. The continued statutory signal could not have given Drawdy more complete warning than he had; and therefore it was not the failure to give the signal, but the neglect of the deceased to heed the notice he had of the near approach of the train, that was the proximate cause of his death. The case is an illustration of that mysterious mental condition into which men sometimes fall, where the facts present to the senses the most urgent alarm of danger, and yet the mind either fails to receive the impression, or from confusion loses control of itself and of the body.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

(78 S. C. 43)

VENNING v. ATLANTIC COAST LINE R. CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Aug. 31, 1907.)

1. COMMERCE—INTERSTATE COMMERCE—CONNECTING CARRIERS.

24 St. at Large, p. 1, makes each carrier the agent of its connecting carrier from whom it receives freight, and makes each liable for any freight lost, damaged, or destroyed by the connecting carrier. Held, an infringement of the interstate commerce clause of the federal Constitution.

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—EQUAL PROTECTION OF LAWS.

24 St. at Large, p. 1, making each carrier the agent of its connecting carrier from whom it receives freight, and liable for neglect of its connecting carrier, is not a violation of Const. U. S. Amend. 14, or Const. S. C. art. 1, § 5, as denying to the carrier the equal protection of the law.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 10, Constitutional Law, § 702.]

3. CARRIERS—LOSS OR DAMAGE TO FREIGHT.

24 St. at Large, p. 81, providing a penalty for failure to pay loss or damage to freight in a given time, applies only to loss or damage to freight occurring on line of carrier sued in the state.

4. SAME—INFORMATION AS TO LOSS.

24 St. at Large, p. 81, § 2, providing for the recovery of loss or damage to freight, does not impose on one connecting carrier liability for the default of another, unless such carrier obtains and gives information, or uses due diligence, as provided by Civ. Code 1902, § 1710, by furnishing information as to when the loss or damage occurred.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Clarendon County.

Action by S. R. Venning against the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company. From circuit judgment affirming judgment of the magistrate, defendant appeals. Reversed.

The following are the statutes referred to and considered in the opinion:

Civ. Code 1902, § 1710:

"When under contract for shipment of freight or express over two or more common carriers, the responsibility of each or any of them shall cease upon delivery to the connecting line 'in good order,' and if such freight or express has been lost, damaged or destroyed, it shall be the duty of the initial, delivering or terminal road, upon notice of such loss, damage or destruction being given to it by the shippers, consignees, or their assigns, to adjust such loss or damage with the owners of said goods within forty days, and upon failure to discharge such duty within forty days after such notice, or to trace such freight and inform the said party so notifying when, where and by which carrier the said freight or express was lost, damaged or destroyed, within said forty days, then said carrier shall be liable for all such loss, damage or destruction in the same manner and to the same extent as if such loss, damage or destruction occurred on its lines: Provided, that if such initial, terminal or delivering road can prove that, by the exercise of due diligence, it has been unable to trace the line upon which such loss, damage or destruction occurred, it shall thereupon be excused from liability under this section."

24 St. at Large, p. 1:

"An act to further define connecting lines of common carriers and to fix their liabilities.

"Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the state of South Carolina, that all common carriers over whose transportation lines, or parts thereof, any freight, baggage or other property received by either of such carriers for through shipment or transportation by such carriers on a contract for through carriage, recognized, acquiesced in or acted upon by such carriers, shall in this State, with respect to the undertaking and matters of such transportation, be considered and construed to be connecting lines, and be deemed and held to be the agents of each other, each the agent of the others, and all the others the agents of each, and shall be held and deemed to be under a contract with each other and with the shipper, owner and consignees of such property for the safe and speedy through transportation thereof from point of shipment to destination; and such contract as to the shipper, owner or consignee of such property shall be deemed and held to be the contract of each of such common carriers; and in any of the courts of this state, any through bill of lading, way bill, receipt, check or other instrument issued by either of such carriers, or other proof showing that either of them has received such freight, baggage or other property for such through shipment or transportation, shall constitute prima facie evidence of the subsistence of the relations, duties and liabilities of such carriers as herein defined and prescribed, notwithstanding any stipulations or attempted stipulations to the contrary by such carriers, or either of them.

"Sec. 2. For any damages for injury, or damage to, or loss, or delay of any freight, baggage or other property sustained anywhere in such through transportation over connecting lines, or either of them, as contemplated and defined in the next preceding section of this act, either of such connecting carriers which the person or persons sustaining such damages may first elect to sue in this state therefor, shall be held liable to such person or persons, and such carrier so held liable to such person or persons shall be entitled in a proper action to recover the amount of any loss, damage or injury it may be required to pay such person or persons from the carrier through whose negligence the losses, damage or injury sustained, together with costs of suit.

"Sec. 3. That this act shall take effect immediately upon its approval by the Governor, and all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with this act are hereby repealed.

"Approved the 13th day of May, A. D. 1903."

24 St. at Large, p. 81:

"An act to regulate the manner in which common carriers doing business in this state shall adjust freight charges and claims for loss or damage to freight.

"Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the state of South Carolina, that from and after the passage of this act, all common carriers doing business in this State shall settle their freight charges according to the rate stipulated in the bill of lading: Provided, the rate therein stipulated be in conformity with the classification and rates made and filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission, in case of shipments from without this state, and with those of the railroad commissioners of this state, in case of shipments wholly within this state; by which classification and rates all consignees shall in all cases be entitled to settle freight charges with such carriers; and it shall be the duty of such common carrier to inform any consignee or consignees of the correct amount due for freight, according to such classifications and rates; and upon payment and tender of the amount due on any shipment, or on any part of any shipment, which has arrived at its destination, according to such classifications and rates, such common carrier shall deliver the freight in question to the consignee or consignees, and any failure or refusal to comply with the provisions hereof shall subject each such carrier so failing or refusing to a penalty of fifty dollars for each such failure or refusal, to be recovered by any consignee or consignees aggrieved by suit in any court of competent jurisdiction.

"Sec. 2. That every claim for loss of or damage to property while in the possession of such common carrier shall be adjusted and paid within forty days, in case of shipments wholly within this state, and within ninety days in case of shipments from without this state, after the filing of such claim with the agent of such carrier at the point of destination of such shipment: Provided, that no such claim shall be filed until after the arrival of the shipment, or of some part thereof, at the point of destination, or until after the lapse of a reasonable time for the arrival thereof. In every case such common carrier shall be liable for the amount of such loss or damage, together with interest thereon from the date of the filing of the claim therefor until the payment thereof. Failure to adjust and pay such claim within the periods respectively herein prescribed shall subject each common carrier so failing to a penalty of fifty dollars for each and every such failure, to be recovered by any consignee or consignees aggrieved in any court of competent jurisdiction: Provided, that unless such consignee or consignees recover in such action the full amount claimed, no penalty shall be recovered, but only the actual amount of the loss or damage, with interest as aforesaid: Provided, further, that no common carrier shall be liable under this act for property which never came into its possession, if it complies with the provisions of section 1710, vol. 1, of the Code of Laws of South Carolina, 1902.

"Sec. 3. That any common carrier, upon complying with the provisions of this act, shall have all the rights and remedies herein provided for against the common carrier from which it received the freight in question.

"Sec. 4. That causes of action for the recovery of the possession of the property shipped, for loss or damage thereto and for the penalties herein provided for, may be united in the same complaint.

"Sec. 5. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

"Approved the 23d day of February, A. D. 1903."

P. A. Willcox, Henry E. Davis, and Wilson & Du Rant, for appellant. W. C. Davis, for respondent.

WOODS, J. The Belknap Hardware Company, in January, 1905, delivered to the Southern Railway Company at Louisville, Ky., a steel range and warming closet, consigned to the plaintiff at Manning, S. C. The defendant, Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company, the terminal carrier, delivered to the plaintiff the warming closet only, and this action was brought in a magistrate's court to recover $21 for failure to deliver the range and $50, the statutory penalty for failing to adjust and pay the claim within 90 days. The allegation of the complaint is that the Southern Railway Company undertook carriage and delivery of the goods to Manning, S. C., for itself and the defendant, its connecting line. But the bill of lading expressly provides: "No carrier shall be liable for loss or damage not occurring on its portion of the route." The defendant's clerk, whose duty it was to check the contents of cars turned over by the Southern Railway to the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad at Columbia, testified the range was marked short on his book and was never received by the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad. The magistrate rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $21 for failing to adjust and pay the claim in 90 days, and on appeal the circuit court affirmed the judgment.

1. It was held in Willett v. Railway Co., 66 S. C. 477, 45 S. E. 93, that when property received by the initial carrier in good condition is delivered by the terminal carrier in damaged condition, the burden is on the terminal carrier to show the damage did not occur on its own line. The same principle was held to apply to the loss of a part of a car load of goods in Walker v. Railway Co., 76 S. C. 308, 56 S. E. 952, and in Bradley v. Railway Co. (recently filed) 57 S. E. 1101, it was held to extend to the loss of a part of several articles shipped under one bill of lading. Applying this last case, the defendant's delivery of the warming closet cast upon it the burden of showing that it had never received the range. The credibility of the testimony that the range had not come into the possession of the defendant was for the magistrate and the circuit court to pass on, and, had the record disclosed that this evidence was disbelieved on any reasonable ground, the judgment would be affirmed, because this court could not disturb a finding of fact that the presumption of loss by the terminal carrier had not been refuted by credible testimony. The record makes it clear, however, the judgment was not upon this ground, but on the statute of 1903 (24 St. at Large, p. 1), under which the defendant as one of the connecting carriers would be liable without respect to whether the range was lost on its line or on that of another carrier. If the act of 1903 is a valid statute, the evidence that the range was never delivered to the defendant carrier would be immaterial, and it was no doubt so regarded by the circuit court. The vital question therefore is whether this act of May, 1903, must be held unconstitutional as an attempt to regulate interstate commerce. In Skipper v. S. A. L. Ry. Co., 75 S. C. 276, 55 S. E. 454, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 388, an exception raising the question of the constitutionality of this act was overruled, but the main question considered in that case was the constitutionality of sections 1710 and 2176 of the Civil Code of 1902. We propose now to consider the question of constitutionality of the act of May, 1903, as if it had not been heretofore made.

2. The statute was intended to make radical changes in the law as to the liability of carriers for losses or damage occurring on connecting lines. The extent of the changes contemplated will be made evident by viewing the state of the law as it appears from the adjudications of the Supreme Court of the United States and the Supreme Court of this state, with respect to the relations of connecting lines with each other, and to the owners of goods in course of transportation, and with respect to the right of such carriers to contract, before the enactment of the statute, in contrast with the law as it would be under the statute. The Supreme Court of the United States held, in Michigan Central R. R. Co. v. Mineral S. M. Co., 83 U. S. 318, 21 L. Ed. 297, that, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, the liability of a common carrier ended with its prompt delivery of the property in good order to the next connecting carrier. This rule was recognized and followed by the same court in Railroad Co. v. Pratt, 89 U. S. 129, 22 L. Ed. 827, and St. Louis Ins. Co. v. S. L. R. R. Co., 104 U. S. 146, 26 L. Ed. 679, and other cases. The law was held to be the same in this state in Piedmont, etc., R. R. Co. v. C. & G. R. R. Co., 19 S. C. 353; Dunbar v. Railway Co., 36 S. C. 110, 15 S. E. 357, 31 Am. St. Rep. 860; Hill v. Railroad Co., 43 S. C. 461, 21 S. E. 337. Under these cases it is obvious a stipulation in the bill of lading, limiting the liability of each carrier to its own line, would be a reasonable limitation. In Lewis v. Railroad Co., 25 S. C. 249, it was held the initial carrier could not without special authority make a contract binding upon the terminal carrier. Terminal and intermediate carriers were held entitled to the benefit of any reasonable stipulations in the bill of lading limiting their liability, in Harby v. So. Ry. Co., 75 S. C. 321, 55 S. E. 760.

The act of 1882 (Civ. Code 1902, § 2176) provided the initial carrier should be liable for loss or damage to goods until it discharged itself by showing a written receipt from the carrier to which it was its duty to deliver it; and, when the initial carrier so discharged itself, the successive connecting carriers were made liable in the like manner, with the right to discharge themselves by like written receipt from the next carrier. The act further provided that any carrier by willfully failing or refusing to produce the written receipt of the next carrier, on the demand of any one interested, lost the benefit of it in any action brought against the carrier for the loss or damage of the property. This act was held constitutional in Skipper v. S. A. L. Ry., 75 S. C. 276, 55 S. E. 454, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 388, and there is no ground to doubt the soundness of that conclusion. The act did nothing more than relieve persons interested in property lost or damaged in transit of intolerable hardship, by fixing the kind of evidence a carrier shown to have been in actual possession of the property should take, preserve, and produce that it had been properly delivered to another carrier. It merely made a rule of evidence less drastic than that which was held to be reasonable and valid in Richmond, etc., Co. v. Patterson Tobacco Co., 169 U. S. 311, 18 Sup. Ct. 835, 42 L. Ed. 759. The section of the Virginia Code under consideration in that case was: "When a common carrier accepts for transportation anything directed to a point of destination beyond the terminus of his own line or route, he shall be deemed thereby to assume an obligation for its safe carriage to such point of destination, unless, at the time of such acceptance, such carrier be released or exempted from such liability by contract in writing, * * * if such thing be lost or injured, such common carrier shall himself be liable therefor, unless, within a reasonable time after demand made, he shall give satisfactory proof to the consignor that the loss or injury did not occur while the thing was in his charge." In holding the statute to be the legitimate exercise by the state of Virginia of the power to determine the form in which contracts may be proved, not amounting to a regulation of interstate commerce, the court says, at page 814 of 169 U. S., page 336 of 18 Sup. Ct. (42 L. Ed. 759): "The inadequacy of the bill of lading to protect the carrier from liability beyond its own line resulted, it is true, from the statute, but not because the statute forbade the carrier from contracting so as to limit his liability, but because the contract which he did make was not in the form required by law, and therefore was not evidence that there was such a contract. Indeed, the entire argument, upon which it is asserted that error was committed by the court below, but manifests in varying forms of statement the fallacy already noticed, that is, it comes from obscuring the difference between substance and form, between a power to contract and the asserted right in availing of the authority, to disregard the requisites essential to show a valid contract, and this confusion also marks the difference between the case now presented and the very many adjudged cases cited by the plaintiff in error in support of its proposition."

The act of May, 1903, now under consideration, is entirely different in scope from the Virginia statute and our statute of 1882. It goes far beyond prescribing a rule of evidence or the form of contract. By it the General Assembly has undertaken to make a complete change in the legal relations of connecting carriers to each other and to the owners of goods in transit, and in the right of such carriers to contract. The act provides that all carriers which recognize, acquiesce in, or act upon a contract for through shipment shall be statutory connecting carriers, and, as such, agents of each other with respect to the matter of transportation, and they shall be under contract each with all the others, and with the shipper, owner, and consignee, for safe and speedy transportation of the property from the point of shipment to destination. Any through bill of lading, issued by any one of such carriers, showing that any one of them received the property for through transportation, is made prima facie evidence of the agency of each other and all the others, and of the contract of each and all of such carriers with each other and with the owner to transport the property with safety and speed from the point of shipment to destination; and against this prima facie evidence of agency and contract the express stipulations of the parties themselves are made unavailing. In consonance with these provisions, it is further enacted, the person sustaining damage or loss shall have the right of recovery against any one of the connecting carriers he may choose to sue; the liability being unaffected by proof that the property had been lost or damaged on another line, or had never come into the possession of the carrier sued. The carrier singled out by the shipper, owner, or consignee is in turn allowed to recover from the carrier through whose negligence the loss, damage, or injury was sustained, together with costs.

In Central Ry. Co. v. Murphey, 196 U. S. 194, 25 Sup. Ct. 218, 49 L. Ed. 444, the Supreme Court of the United States held a statute of Georgia unconstitutional as to interstate commerce, which imposed upon the initial or any connecting carrier, as a condition of availing itself of a valid contract of exemption from liability beyond its own line, the duty of tracing the freight and informing the shipper in writing, when, where, and how, and by which carrier, the freight was lost, damaged, or destroyed, and of giving the names of the parties and their official position, if any, by whom the truth of the facts set out in the information could be established. In Skipper v. Railway Co., supra, this court held section 1710 of Civil Code constitutional. Pointing out the particulars in which that section differed from the Georgia statute, which had been declared unconstitutional in Central Ry. Co. v. Murphey, supra, Mr. Justice Jones uses this language: "The Georgia statute made the initial carrier absolutely liable if it failed within 30 days after application to inform the shipper in writing when, where, how, and by what carrier the freight was lost or damaged, together with the names of witnesses to establish such facts; whereas, our statute (section 1710) provides that the carrier shall be excused from liability upon proof that, by the exercise of due diligence, it has been unable to trace the line upon which the loss or damage occurred. The Georgia statute prevented a carrier from availing itself of a valid contract exempting from liability for loss or damage occurring beyond its own line, except upon an onerous condition, which in many cases it could not meet; whereas, the South Carolina statute excuses the carrier if the loss did not occur on its own line, and it could not after due diligence comply with the statute." The act of 1903, now under consideration, goes as far beyond the Georgia statute as section 1710 fell behind it. The Georgia statute was held to be unconstitutional, in that it made one connecting carrier liable for the delict of another, unless it exempted itself by giving to the party interested information within 30 days as to the particulars of the loss. The requirement that the carrier should obtain and give this information was, as the court held, so onerous as to amount to an illegal attempt to regulate interstate commerce. Still, under the Georgia statute, the carrier had the chance to save itself by giving the information required. In our statute there is no means of escape for a carrier which recognizes, acquiesces in, or acts upon the contract of the initial carrier for through shipment, however innocent from liability for the breach of duty of a connecting carrier.

The far-reaching character of the attempt to regulate interstate commerce will be still more apparent on viewing another feature of the statute. The provision that the carrier selected for liability by the owner of the goods should have the right of recovery from the carrier actually in default, to compensate for its own liability to the owner, would be of no avail against the real defaulting carrier operating entirely outside the state. For the state law can have no extraterritorial effect. A railroad operating in Kentucky cannot be made the agent of a railroad in South Carolina, or liable for its default, or subject to a suit by the South Carolina railroad for breach of duty to a shipper, by authority of a South Carolina statute. Therefore, if this statute is given effect, a carrier operating on an interstate line partly in this state, upon receiving freight in Georgia upon a connecting line, under a bill of lading issued by a Kentucky railroad, would have to pay for the loss or damage arising from the negligence of the Kentucky road, without any recourse against the defaulting road. Obviously, the practical result would be that the loss and damage on all through shipments from the entire country into South Carolina would fall on the interstate roads coming into this state, to the exemption of all connecting roads for their own defaults. On principle, as well as under the authority of Central R. R. Co. v. Murphey, it is impossible to avoid the conclusion that the act of May, 1903, here under consideration, is unconstitutional.

The defendant submits that the act is obnoxious to the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States and section 5, art. 1, of the Constitution of South Carolina, in that it denies to common carriers the equal protection of the law, and should be declared void even as to the transportation of goods by connecting lines entirely within the state. The argument in support of this proposition is strong, but we do not think it is conclusive. While the lawmaking branch of the state government has no power to require persons or corporations to make contracts, it has in general the power to regulate the business of public transportation within its borders. Considered with respect to such business, in this act, the General Assembly has in effect forbidden a common carrier to recognize, acquiesce in, or act upon a through contract of shipment made by a shipper, owner, or consignee with another carrier, except upon condition that it shall become liable for any default of such other carrier. But the carrier may avoid this liability for the default of another by refusing to recognize, acquiesce in, or act upon the through contract of shipment. A carrier, it is true, is required by section 2177 of the Civil Code of 1902 to forward freight sent on another road "according to the directions contained thereon or accompanying the same," and we think, aside from this statute, the common law imposes the obligation upon the carrier to receive and forward goods tendered by another carrier, just as if they were tendered by the owner. But in doing so it need not recognize, acquiesce in, or act upon the through bill of lading. It may receive the goods, give its own receipt, charge its own freight, and in all respects repudiate or disregard the through bill of lading. By thus refusing to recognize, acquiesce in, or act upon the through bill of lading, it would avoid liability for the default of another. It cannot therefore be said that the statute denies to the carrier the right to prosecute its business, except upon condition that it shall become liable for the default of others.

3. It remains to consider whether the judgment of the circuit court in this case can be sustained under section 1710 of the Civil Code of 1902, or under the act of February, 1903 (24 St. at Large, p. 81). As to section 1710, it is only necessary to refer to the case of Cave v. Railway Co., 53 S. C. 498, 31 S. E. 359, where it was held no relief could be given under this section unless the complaint alleged shipment under a contract providing that the responsibility of each carrier should cease upon the delivery of the freight to a connecting carrier "in good order." There is no allegation of the kind in this case. On the contrary, it is evident from the complaint the action was intended to rest on the invalidity, under the act of May, 1903 (24 St. at Large, p. 1), of such a contract as section 1710 contemplates. Section 1710 therefore can have no application.

We come, then, to the act of 1903 (24 St. at Large, p. 81), which it is convenient to designate as the act of February, 1903, to distinguish it from the statute already considered, and held unconstitutional, passed in May, 1903 (24 St. at Large, p. 1). We are not concerned with the first section, which relates to freight charges and the duty of the carrier to deliver goods on payment of the charges after they have reached destination. The section of main importance here is the second, which provides for the recovery for loss of or damage to freight, and penalties for failure to adjust and pay such loss or damage within a certain time. The question vital to this case is whether the statute can be construed to impose upon one connecting carrier liability for the default of another, unless such carrier obtains and gives the information, or uses due diligence to obtain it as provided in section 1710 of the Civil Code of 1902. We do not think it can be so construed. The main enactment as to the recovery of damages and penalties thus begins in section 2: "That every claim for loss of, or damage to property while in the possession of such common carrier shall be adjusted and paid within forty days," etc. The words we have italicized clearly limit the loss and damage which a carrier is required to adjust and pay for, to that which befalls while the goods are in the possession of such carrier, and excludes the idea of liability for loss or damage to the goods while in the possession of another carrier. It is true there is a proviso at the end of this section "that no common carrier shall be liable under this act for property which never came into its possession," if it complies with the provisions of section 1710, vol. 1, of the Code of Laws of South Carolina of 1902. But as the body of the act does not make the carrier liable at all "for goods which never came into its possession," a proviso which exempts from liability for loss of or damage to such goods on certain conditions can have no effect. The act imposes no liability to which the exemption can be applied.

4. The rule is that all parts of a statute, including provisos, are to be construed together, and effect given if possible to all. But it is contrary to reason, as well as authority, to extend by implication a proviso to cover that which is opposed to the express language of the main enactment. Southgate v. Goldthwaite, 1 Bailey, 367; U. S. v. Dickson, 15

Pet. (U. S.) 141, 10 L. Ed. 639; The Irresistible, 7 Wheat. (U. S.) 551, 5 L. Ed. 520; 26 Am. & Eng. Enc. 681; Endlich on Statutes, §§ 184, 185. The fact that the statute is penal adds force to this conclusion. We are of the opinion that the proviso of section 2 has no effect, and the act only imposes penalties upon the carrier for failing to adjust claims for loss, occurring while the goods are in its own possession. It follows, the plaintiff in this case cannot sustain his recovery on the ground that the defendant was liable under the act of February, 1903, for goods lost by a connecting carrier because it failed to obtain and give information of the kind required in cases falling under that act, or to use due diligence to obtain such information.

5. This penalty act of February will apply to the case if the finding on the new trial should be that the loss occurred on the defendant's road, but not otherwise. It is attacked as unconstitutional under the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution of the United States. That question is discussed and decided against the defendant's contention in Charles v. A. C. L. R. R. Co. (recently filed) 58 S. E. 927.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the circuit court be reversed, and the case remanded to the magistrate's court for a new trial.

(78 S. C. 33)

LEWIS v. ATLANTIC COAST LINE R. CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Aug. 31, 1907.)

APPEAL—REVERSAL—REJECTION OF EVIDENCE—GROUNDS OF DECISION—VOID STATUTE.

A judgment of the circuit court affirming a judgment of a magistrate, based on 24 St. at Large, p. 1, rendering a connecting carrier liable for damages to freight suffered while on the line of another carrier, will be reversed; such act having been held a violation of the interstate commerce clause of the federal Constitution.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Clarendon County.

Action by W. M. Lewis against the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company. From an order of the circuit court affirming a judgment of a magistrate, defendant appeals. Reversed.

P. A. Willcox, Henry E. Davis, and Wilson & Du Rant, for appellant. W. O. Davis, for respondent.

WOODS, J. In July, 1904, Nordyke & Marmon Company delivered to the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad Company, at Indianapolis, Ind., a corn mill, standard shoe and hopper, box iron castings, crated iron gear wheel, crated iron shaft, consigned to the plaintiff at Alcolu, S. C. The goods reached the defendant over the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad, the terminal carrier, in a damaged condition. Thereafter plaintiff brought this action in a magistrate's court against the terminal company for $11 damages and the statutory penalty of $50 for failure to adjust and pay the claim within 90 days. The judgment of the magistrate for the entire amount claimed was affirmed by the circuit court.

The complaint alleges a contract of through carriage with the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Railroad, by which it undertook for itself and its connecting lines, including the defendant, to transport the goods to destination; and it further alleges that all the connecting carriers received the goods and recognized, acquiesced in, and acted on the contract for through carriage. The plaintiff proved the goods were damaged when received. The bill of lading was introduced in evidence, but does not appear in the record. To rebut the presumption of damage by the terminal carrier, the defendant's receiving clerk testified the goods came into the possession of the defendant from the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad Company at Richmond, Va., in a damaged condition. The credibility of this evidence was for the magistrate and circuit judge to pass on, and, if the record disclosed this evidence had been rejected on any reasonable ground, the judgment would be affirmed, because this court could not disturb the finding of fact that the presumption of damage by the terminal carrier had not been rebutted by credible testimony. The record makes it clear, however, the cause was not decided on this ground, but on the statute of May, 1903 (24 St. at Large, p. 1), under which the defendant, as one of the connecting carriers, would be liable without respect to whether the damage to the goods occurred on its own line or on that of another carrier. If the act of 1903 is a valid statute, the evidence that the property was damaged on another line would be immaterial, and the circuit court no doubt so regarded it in holding the statute constitutional.

This case was heard in connection with Venning v. Atlantic Coast Line Railway, 58 S. E. 983, and the decision in that case disposes of all the questions arising in this.

The judgment of this court is that the judgment of the circuit court be reversed, and the case remanded to the magistrate's court for a new trial.

(78 S. C. 124)

KENNEDY et al. v. CITY OF GREENVILLE.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Aug. 21, 1907. On Rehearing, Sept. 10, 1907.)

1. NONSUIT—GROUNDS—ERRONEOUS ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

It is error to grant a nonsuit on the ground that the trial court committed error in admission of evidence, or that on a previous trial of the case a judge erroneously granted a new trial after verdict.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—DEFECTIVE STREETS—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

That a pedestrian knew of a defect in a street does not raise an inference, as a matter of law, that she was guilty of contributory negligence or assumed the risk of passing over it, unless the danger was so obvious that persons of ordinary prudence would not have attempted to use the street.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 38, Municipal Corporations, §§ 1745-1757.]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Greenville County; Aldrich, Judge.

Action by Julia M. Kennedy and R. H. Kennedy against the city of Greenville. From an order granting a nonsuit, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

J. J. McSwain, for appellants. Wm. G. Sirrine, for respondent.

POPE, C. J. This action was brought by Julia M. Kennedy, to be hereafter designated as plaintiff, and her husband, R. H. Kennedy, against the city of Greenville, a municipal corporation of this state, to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiff, by reason of the defective condition and mismanagement of its streets. It appears that on and before April 28, 1905, the defendant had been engaged in the installation of sewers in the street in front of plaintiff's residence, and for the purpose had opened a trench or excavation near the center of the street from six to eight feet deep, two to three feet wide, and several hundred yards long. All of the dirt was thrown to the south side, the side on which plaintiff's residence was, thus throwing travel to the north side; the space left on the south side being too narrow for the passage of vehicles. This excavation interfered materially with plaintiff, who was accustomed to cross the street immediately in front of her house, for the purpose of attending services at the Episcopal Church, she being organist, and according to her testimony an agent of the defendant, at her request, moved the dirt and made a crossing, utilizing for the purpose a table top furnished by her. Over the objection of the defendant, it was sought to be shown that this crossing was used by the public generally, with the consent and acquiescence of the defendant. The acts of negligence alleged were failure to rope or rail the excavation and to properly light it so as to warn travelers of its exact location. On the night of the 26th of April, 1905, plaintiff having been out, she and her daughter returned some time between 12 and 1 o'clock. The carriage stopped in front of the residence, and the daughter alighted. Before the plaintiff could get out, however, the horses, being restless, moved up several steps, and, according to the allegations of the complaint, the night being very dark and rainy, the plaintiff lost her bearings and in moving forward, feeling with her feet for the crossing, she fell into the trench and was seriously injured. The case first came on for trial before Judge Dantzler and a jury and resulted in a verdict for the defendant. On motion of the plaintiff, Judge Dantzler granted a new trial on the ground that he had charged upon the facts. It was again heard at the March, 1906, term of court for Greenville county, Judge Aldrich presiding, and after the introduction of plaintiff's testimony, on the motion of the defendant, a nonsuit was granted on the ground that the only inference to be drawn from the evidence was that the plaintiff contributed to her injury by her negligence. The plaintiff appealed.

1. The controlling question in the case is whether or not the presiding judge erred in granting a nonsuit. The respondent, in addition to the grounds on which the motion was granted, seeks to have it sustained on the ground that it was error on the part of Judge Dantzler to grant a new trial after judgment in the first case, and also on the ground of the admission of incompetent evidence by Judge Aldrich. It is well settled that a nonsuit cannot be sustained on grounds additional to those on which it was granted. Graham v. Seignious, 53 S. C. 132, 31 S. E. 51; Sumner v. Harrison, 54 S. C. 353, 32 S. E. 572; Norris v. Insurance Co., 55 S. C. 450, 53 S. E. 566, 74 Am. St. Rep. 765; Lewis v. Hinson, 64 S. C. 580, 43 S. E. 15. We think, however, that the errors alleged in granting a new trial can hardly be said to constitute a ground on which a motion for a nonsuit can be sustained, for the reason that it would require one circuit judge to pass upon the action of another. Therefore, if the matter of granting a new trial can be considered at all, it must be regarded as separate from the appeal from the nonsuit. Defendant seeks to have the question considered under subdivision 3 of section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure of 1902, which provides: That on an appeal from "a final order affecting a substantial right made in any special proceeding, or upon a summary application in any action after judgment, and upon such appeal to review any intermediate order involving the merits and necessarily affecting the order appealed from," the court shall have jurisdiction. It does not require very close scrutiny to reach the conclusion that defendant is in error as to this contention. This section was intended to apply only to collateral proceedings arising after judgment. As was said in Cureton v. Hutchinson, 3 S. C. 606, this subdivision was intended to provide a remedy where matters, either of an independent nature or collateral to an action, arise upon a special proceeding, and where matters arise upon a summary proceeding in an action after judgment. The idea that this section was intended to apply to motions for new trials is negated by a special provision in subdivision 2 on this identical subject. We have endeavored to show in the recent case of Lampley v. Ry. (July 10, 1907, 57 S. E. 1104), that an appeal from such an order will lie only in those cases in which, if this court find that there was no error committed in granting a new trial, it can then render judgment absolute. The question here, however, is somewhat different. In this cause, we are met by the query as to the power of the court to consider the granting of a new trial on an appeal from a motion granting a nonsuit in that new trial. Whatever might be the rule when a case is decided on its merits, we are of the opinion that in the case now before us the motion cannot be considered. A decision as to the propriety of the nonsuit is the important matter. If the conclusion is reached that the nonsuit was properly granted, then that is an end of the matter. On the contrary, if the nonsuit should not have been granted, then the appeal as to the granting of a new trial is fraught with all the disadvantages set forth in the case of Lampley v. Railway, supra. If the court should decide that the new trial was properly granted, the presumption always being that it was, then, as was said in Caston v. Brock, 14 S. C. 111: "The party allowed to appeal without restrictions from such order would have two chances—he may contend for his verdict that has been set aside in the appellate court, and, on being dismissed from that court without relief, may return to the circuit and have a trial de novo of the whole case." Hence we hold that the motion for a nonsuit must stand or fall upon the grounds set forth in the motion.

2. These grounds, several in number, raise only the question as to whether or not the only inference to be drawn from the testimony was that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. Defendant contends that plaintiff had knowledge of the condition of the street, and therefore in attempting to cross it she assumed the risk. Mere knowledge of defects will not of itself give rise to the conclusion that the only inference is that the plaintiff was negligent, unless it is made to appear that the danger, likely to result therefrom, was so obvious that no person of ordinary prudence would have attempted to cross. In the case of Mosheuvel v. District of Columbia, 191 U. S. 247, 257, 24 Sup. Ct. 57, 59, 48 L. Ed. 170, Justice White of the Supreme Court of the United States discussed this question at length. There it was contended that, where a defect existed in a highway, and was known to one who elected to use such highway, such election, even if it were justified by the dictates of ordinary prudence, nevertheless must be held as a matter of law to entail the consequence of a want of ordinary care and prudence. The court said: "We are of the opinion, however, that the rule as thus contended for is unfounded in reason and unsupported by the weight of authority. When analyzed, the proposition comes to this: That no person can, as a matter of law, without assuming all of the risks, use the streets of a municipality where he knows of a defect therein, even although it be that, in the exercise of a sound judgment, it might be deemed that with ordinary care and prudence the street could be used with safety. The result of admitting the doctrine would be to hold that all persons in making use of the public streets assumed all risks possible to arise from every known defect or danger." Judge White quotes many authorities to sustain this view, and we think we cannot do better than to incorporate some of them here. In Dewire v. Bailey, 131 Mass. 169, 41 Am. Rep. 219, the action was brought to recover from the owner of a building for damages occasioned to one who had fallen on a plank sidewalk covered with ice and snow, on his way out of the building. The proposition was that the injured person knew of the snow and ice on the walk, and therefore, by electing to use it, assumed the risk, and was, as a matter of law, conclusively presumed to be guilty of contributory negligence. In reviewing this contention, the court said: "The rulings of the justice presiding at the trial all rest upon the proposition that knowledge on the part of the plaintiff, at the time he entered upon the sidewalk, of the accumulation of snow and ice and of the unsafe condition of the sidewalk resulting therefrom, is in law conclusive evidence that he was not in the exercise of due care in attempting to pass over the sidewalk. Looney v. McLean, 129 Mass. 33, 37 Am. Rep. 295, was an action by a tenant of a part of a building against the landlord to recover for injuries received in consequence of the giving way of one of the steps of a staircase used in common by the tenants, for the safe condition of which the landlord was responsible, and it was held: 'That the fact, if proved, that the plaintiff had previous knowledge that the stairs were in a dangerous condition, would not be conclusive evidence that the plaintiff was not in the exercise of due care'—quoting a number of authorities. In Mahoney v. Metropolitan Ry., 104 Mass. 73, it was held 'that the fact that the plaintiff saw the obstruction created by the defendant, and knew its dangerous character, is not conclusive proof that he was negligent in attempting to pass it. A person, who in the lawful use of a highway, meets with an obstacle, may yet proceed if it is consistent with reasonable care so to do; and this is generally a question for the jury, depending upon the nature of the obstruction and all of the circumstances surrounding the party. In the case at bar, if the plaintiff had reasonable cause to believe that he could pass the obstruction in safety, and used reasonable care in that attempt, he is entitled to recover.' * * * We think the law in a case of this kind is that, only when the nature of the obstruction is such that the court can say, that it is not consistent with reasonable prudence and care that any person having knowledge of the obstruction should proceed to pass over it in the manner attempted, can the court rule that such knowledge prevents the plaintiff from maintaining his action. * * * In Pomfrey v. Saratoga Springs, 104 N. Y. 459, 11 N. E. 43, the damage sued for was occasioned by a fall sustained in attempting to pass over an embankment of snow and ice which had accumulated upon the sidewalk. The defendant requested the court, in effect, to charge the jury that if the plaintiff saw the obstruction, and chose to attempt to pass over it, and not go around it, she could not recover. The action of the trial judge in refusing to give such instruction was approved by the Court of Appeals; the court saying: "The charge of the judge sufficiently laid down the rule of law as to plaintiff's contributory negligence, and it would not have been proper for the judge to charge, as matter of law, that it was negligence for the plaintiff, under the circumstances disclosed in this case, to attempt to pass over the embankment"—quoting authorities. In Sandwich v. Dolan, 141 Ill. 430, 31 N. E. 416, the court uses this language: "These instructions were properly refused. They announce, in substance, the proposition, that, where a party goes upon a sidewalk which he knows to be in a dangerous condition, he is thereby guilty of negligence per se. Such is not the law." Again, in Bloomington v. Chamberlain, 104 Ill. 268, an instruction was held to be erroneous which told the jury that "the law required the plaintiff to go out in the street, and pass around the walk, if she knew it was defective." In Graham v. Oxford, 105 Iowa, 705, 75 N. W. 473, the court said: "It is not true that one who knows of a defect in a walk is necessarily guilty of negligence if he attempt to pass over it. Much depends upon the character of the defect, the occasion for passing over it, and the care used in doing so. If a person knows of a defect in a walk, but believes that it can be passed in safety by the exercise of ordinary care, and he is justified as a reasonably prudent man in holding that belief, he is not negligent in attempting to pass over it in an ordinarily careful and prudent manner." There are numerous other cases to the same effect, but we deem these sufficient to show the general trend of the decisions, as well as the rule they establish.

The rule thus laid down is the only one entirely consistent with reason. To hold that the mere use of a defective street or highway with knowledge of such defect is negligence would, in many cases, work great hardship and inconvenience. We think it can be legitimately said that, in the majority of cases where defects occur in a highway or street, the continued use of it is not so dangerous that it in itself would amount to negligence on the part of the user. In such cases the use may be entirely safe and free from danger if due care and prudence is exercised. What is due care under the circumstances of each case must be a question for the jury. Was the alleged defect in the case at bar so dangerous that no person of ordinary care and prudence would have attempted to use it, and did such use give rise to the inference of negligence on the part of the plaintiff? It was in evidence that this crossing was put there by one Williman, overseer of the workmen digging the trench, and that it had been used continuously by the plaintiff and the public generally. Plaintiff had used it very frequently and just a few hours before had crossed there in order to enter the carriage in which she was riding. It requires no vivid imagination to conceive by the use of ordinary care, the crossing in question could be safely used. The length of it was only between two and three feet, and the width was over eighteen inches. The very idea that it was so dangerous that no person of ordinary prudence would use it is negatived by the fact that scores of persons had used it both in the daytime and at night. Whether the plaintiff in this case exercised due care under all of the circumstances of the case is a question of fact for the jury, unless there is no evidence going to show such care on her part. The statute under which the action was brought requires the plaintiff to show that she was not negligent. This must be alleged in the complaint as one of the material allegations thereof. Walker v. Chester Co., 40 S. C. 342, 18 S. E. 936. Then if there is any evidence going to sustain it, a nonsuit would be improper. Blakely v. Laurens Co., 55 S. C. 422, 33 S. E. 508. In this case there was such evidence. The plaintiff testified that as she got out of the carriage she felt her way over the ground very cautiously with her feet; that she was always a careful person. This was some evidence going to establish this allegation of the complaint. It certainly should have been passed upon by the jury. It was for that tribunal alone to say whether, under the circumstances, the plaintiff did exercise due care. Likewise, it was its province to say whether or not the crossing in question was used by the public generally with the consent and acquiescence of the defendant. It is true that the evidence on this point was objected to, but it was admitted, and on considering the nonsuit this court will not pass on its competency. Lewis v. Hinson, 64 S. C. 580, 43 S. E. 15. Hence the motion for nonsuit should have been refused.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be reversed.

On Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. After careful consideration of the petition herein, this court is satisfied that no material question of law or of fact has been overlooked or disregarded.

It is therefore ordered that the petition for a rehearing be dismissed and that the order heretofore granted staying the rendition be revoked.

(145 N. C. 168)

BLAND et al. v. BEASLEY et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 10, 1907.)

1. EJECTMENT—RIGHT OF ACTION—DEFENSES.

The rule that under St. 32 Hen. VIII (Code 1883, § 1333), making void a conveyance of premises in the adverse possession of another, an action of ejectment would not lie, was modified by Code 1883, § 177, now Revisal 1905, § 400, providing that a grantee may maintain an action in his own name, notwithstanding his conveyance or that of one under whom he claims is void by reason of the premises having been in the adverse possession of another at the time of conveyance, and section 1333 was expressly repealed by Pub. Laws 1899, p. 138, c. 42.

2. ADVERSE POSSESSION—NECESSITY OF ACTUAL POSSESSION.

Where, in ejectment, the legal title is shown to be in plaintiff, and neither party is in possession, the law carries the seisin to plaintiff within Revisal 1905, § 383, barring an action for recovery of land, unless it appear that plaintiff or those under whom he claims were "seised or possessed of the premises" within 20 years before bringing the action.

3. SAME—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

Possession for seven years under color of title, to bar the entry of one shown to be or to have been the real owner, must be continuous, uninterrupted, and manifested by distinct and unequivocal acts of ownership.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 1, Adverse Possession, §§ 65-76.]

4. SAME—PRESUMPTIONS.

Under the express provisions of Revisal 1905, § 386, the person establishing a legal title to premises in ejectment is presumed to have been possessed within the time required by law, and the occupation of the premises by any other person to have been under and in subordination to the legal title, unless such possession is shown to have been adverse.

Appeal from Superior Court, Pender County; Long, Judge.

Ejectment by J. T. Bland and others against L. A. Beasley and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

L. A. Beasley, H. L. Stevens, C. D. Weeks, and Shepherd & Shepherd, for appellants. J. D. Kerr, Jas. O. Carr, Simmons, Ward & Allen, E. K. Bryan, and C. E. McCullen, for appellees.

CLARK, C. J. Action to recover land. The defendants excepted because the court refused to charge the jury, as prayed, that, the plaintiffs having failed to show actual possession in themselves or in those under whom they claim within 20 years before this action was begun, they cannot recover. The plaintiffs acquired their title within said period, the defendant being then in possession. An action of ejectment could not have been maintained under St. 32 Hen. VIII (Code 1883, § 1333), which made a conveyance under such circumstances void, but that rule was modified by Code 1883, § 177, now Revisal 1905, § 400, which provides that "an action may be maintained by a grantee of real estate in his own name, whenever he or any grantor or other person through whom he may derive title might maintain such action, notwithstanding the grant of such grantor, or other conveyance be void by reason of the actual possession of a person claiming under a title adverse to that of such grantor or other person at the time of the delivery of such grant or other conveyance." Johnson v. Prarie, 84 N. C. 773; Osborne v. Anderson, 89 N. C. 261. Indeed, section 1333 of the Code has been later totally repealed by chapter 42, p. 138, Pub. Laws 1899, and hence does not appear in the Revisal at all.

It will be noted that this defense is not under Revisal 1905, § 384, for the defendants did not prove "20 years' adverse possession." It is true that Revisal 1905, § 383, debars the plaintiffs from maintaining an action for recovery of realty, unless it appear that they or those under whom they claim were "seised or possessed of the premises" in question within 20 years before beginning the action. But the defendants have not shown 20 years' possession, and, the plaintiffs having shown the legal title, the law carries the seisin to the party having the legal title, when neither is in possession. His honor was correct in charging the jury that "the possession for seven years under color of title must be continuous, uninterrupted, and manifested by distinct and unequivocal acts of ownership to bar the entry of one shown to be or to have been the real owner, and, when the title is claimed by adverse possession, the burden is on him who relies upon such claim to show continuous possession. There is no presumption that the possession of real estate is adverse." Monk v. Wilmington, 137 N. C. 322, 49 S. E. 345. Revisal 1905, § 386, provides that possession by another shall be deemed "to have been under and in subordination to the legal title," unless such possession is shown to have been adverse.

There was evidence sufficient to go to the jury to locate the grants and conveyances under which the plaintiffs claimed. The other exceptions need no discussion. The case was largely one for the jury on the evidence as to the location of the land in dispute; and, upon a thorough consideration of the exceptions, we find no error of which the defendants have cause to complain.

No error.

(145 N. C. 132)

HORTON v. SEABOARD AIR LINE RY.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 10, 1907.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT—INJURIES TO SERVANT—NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Where plaintiff was injured by the alleged negligence of his fellow servant, for which defendant was responsible as provided by Revisal 1905, § 2646, in dropping the end of the main rod of an engine while plaintiff was endeavoring to adjust it, and plaintiff testified, without contradiction, both that his fellow servant "dropped his end of the rod" and "that the rod slipped from his hand," whether the servant was negligent was for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Master and Servant, §§ 1051-1067.]

2. SAME—PRESUMPTION OF NEGLIGENCE.

The dropping of the rod was not in itself conclusive of negligence on the part of such fellow servant, nor did it raise a presumption of negligence, though it was some evidence thereof.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Master and Servant, §§ 881, 891.]

3. SAME—DUTY TO FURNISH COMPETENT ASSISTANTS.

Where defendant ordered plaintiff to repair an engine, it was defendant's duty to furnish plaintiff competent assistants, who would exercise ordinary care in performing the work.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Master and Servant, § 334.]

4. TRIAL—REQUEST TO CHARGE.

Where the court charged that the fact that plaintiff was injured while in defendant's employ was "no evidence of negligence," and that the fact that plaintiff's fellow servant dropped the engine rod by which plaintiff was injured raised no presumption of negligence, and, if unsupported by other evidence from which the jury could reasonably infer negligence, was not proof of negligence, the court did not err in refusing to charge that, if the jury found from the facts that there were no attending circumstances from which they could reasonably infer negligence, other than the unexpected falling of the rod on plaintiff's arm, they should find that the defendant was not negligent.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 48, Trial, §§ 651-659.]

5. SAME—ASSUMED FACTS—APPLICABILITY TO EVIDENCE.

Where plaintiff was injured by his fellow servant dropping his end of an engine rod while plaintiff was endeavoring to adjust it, and there was no evidence as to why he dropped it, a request that, if "there were no attending circumstances" from which the jury could reasonably infer negligence other than the fact of the unexplained falling of the rod, etc., was properly refused as assuming the evidence showed an "unexplained falling of the rod."

Appeal from Superior Court, Vance County; Biggs, Judge.

Action by W. R. Horton against the Seaboard Air Line Railway. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Action for personal injury sustained by plaintiff while in employment of defendant. Plaintiff testified that he was at the time of, and had been for many years before, the injury complained of, in the employment of defendant as yard locomotive engineer at Henderson, N. C.; that on December 10, 1903, Mr. Clark, the traveling engineer of defendant, who had charge of its engines and the duty of looking after them, came to Henderson and told him that the front end of the engine was in bad condition and must be fixed at once. Plaintiff told Clark that the brass was worn out and that he could not fix it. Clark said that it must be done; that plaintiff must fix it at once. Plaintiff told him that he would do the best he could with it; that he had no tools. He said that it must be done that night. It snowed, and the wind blew "as hard as you ever saw it." When plaintiff quit work, he backed down to a yard and bought some wood. Seagrave was fireman on engine. Plaintiff says: "We were working on the main rod. Seagrave had never seen a rod taken down before, and didn't look like he knew anything about it. I was trying to enter the rod into the back end of the strap, when his end slipped out of his hand and jerked my hand down on the rod. He dropped his end of the rod. I had hold of the other end of the rod. It mashed my arm. It was eight or ten feet long. It was about half-past 10 or 11 o'clock at night when I got through fixing the engine." He testified that certain tools were necessary to do the work, that he purchased a file himself, and that it was necessary to have one man to help him. The foregoing is all of the evidence in regard to the time, place, manner, etc., of the injury. There was evidence in regard to the condition of the engine and of the work to be done on it, and of the character and extent of the injury, none of which is necessary to set out in detail for the purpose of passing upon the exceptions referred to and relied upon in the defendant's brief. Defendant moved for judgment of nonsuit. Motion denied. Defendant excepted.

The usual issues were submitted to the jury. His honor, after stating the contentions of the parties, among other instructions not excepted to, charged the jury: "As between master and servant, the mere fact of the servant being injured while in his employ is not prima facie evidence of negligence, and the burden is upon the servant to prove the injury was caused by the master, and he must show that the injury was the result of his negligence. It is not sufficient to show that he was injured. He must go further and show the cause of the injury, and that it was the result of negligence of some agent of the master, and that it was this negligence that was the proximate cause of the injury. So much for the questions of law which I shall give you to guide you and control your actions in determining the first issue. Now, applying these rules to the facts in the case, you must determine whether Mr. Horton was injured by the negligence of the defendant's fireman, Mr. Seagrave, and whether that negligence was the cause of the injury, if you find that Mr. Horton sustained an injury. Did the defendant railroad, through its agent, fail to exercise proper care, as I have explained to you, in handling this rod? And was such negligence the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury, if you find he was injured, as claimed by him on or about December 10, 1903? That is the question which you must determine with reference to the first issue." His honor explained the evidence and directed the attention of the jury to the several issues and phases of the case. To this there is no exception.

Defendant requested his honor to give the following special instructions:

"As between master and servant, the mere fact that the servant is injured while in his employ is not prima facie negligence, and is no evidence of negligence." This prayer was given; the court adding: "But the burden of proof is upon the servant to prove that his injury is caused by the negligence of the master."

"Upon the whole evidence, if the jury believe it, they will answer the first issue 'No.' Refused, and the defendant excepts.

"The mere fact that plaintiff's arm was injured while in the employment of the defendant is no presumption of negligence." The court gave this instruction."

"The mere fact that Joseph Seagrave dropped the rod is no presumption of negligence." The court gave this instruction.

"The general rule is that the mere fact and proof of injury, unsupported by other evidence of negligence, or any attending circumstances whereby the jury can reasonably infer negligence, is not a presumption of negligence; and if the jury should find from the facts in this case there are no attending circumstances from which they can reasonably infer negligence, other than the bare fact of the unexplained falling of the rod upon the plaintiff's arm, they will answer the first issue 'No.'" His honor gave the first part of the instruction, but omitted to give the latter part, to wit: "And if the jury should find from the facts in this case that there are no attending circumstances from which they can reasonably infer negligence, other than the bare fact of the unexplained falling of the rod upon the plaintiff's arm, they will answer the first issue 'No.'" Defendant excepted.

There was judgment upon the verdict. Defendant appealed.

Day, Bell & Allen, for appellants. T. M. Pittman and J. O. Kittrell, for appellee.

CONNOR, J. (after stating the facts as above). Defendant, in the well-prepared brief and the oral argument of counsel, alleges as the first ground for a reversal of the judgment the refusal of his honor to direct judgment of nonsuit. This contention involves the proposition that there was no evidence of negligence fit for the consideration of the jury. It is conceded that plaintiff was in the line of his duty, acting by direction of an employé of the company having the power to give the order, and that Seagrave, whose alleged negligence was in dropping the rod from his hand, was a fellow servant for whose negligence defendant is liable under the fellow servant law. Revisal 1905, § 2646. Is there any evidence that Seagrave "dropped his end of the rod"? The plaintiff swears to it, and he is not contradicted. Seagrave is not introduced by either party. It is true that plaintiff also used the expression, "The rod slipped from his hand." It was for the jury to say which was the correct statement. If he dropped the end of the rod while plaintiff's arm was in a position to be injured thereby, it certainly constituted some evidence from which the jury may have inferred negligence. It was his duty to hold the rod—to use such physical power as was at his command to prevent it from dropping. The dropping of the rod was not conclusive, nor, as his honor charged the jury, did it raise a presumption of negligence; but it was certainly some evidence thereof. In this connection his honor said to the jury: "In determining the question as to whether the agent of the defendant was or was not negligent in dropping or letting the rod slip, if you find he dropped or let it slip, the question of whether he acted as a reasonably prudent man would have acted under similar circumstances must be considered; the burden being upon the plaintiff to satisfy you by greater weight of evidence that the agent did not exercise proper care. If you are satisfied by the greater weight of evidence that the agent did not exercise proper care, that he was negligent, and that this negligence was the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury, then, as I have explained, it is your duty to answer the first issue 'Yes.' If you are not satisfied by the greater weight of evidence that he was negligent, or that it was the proximate cause of plaintiff's injuries, you will answer that issue 'No.'" His honor carefully explained to the jury that the burden of proof was upon the plaintiff, not only to show that Seagrave let—that is, permitted—the rod slip or drop from his hand, but that he failed to exercise the care of a prudent man to prevent its doing so. There is no suggestion that the rod slipped or dropped because of its weight, or that Seagrave did not have physical strength sufficient to hold it; that it was too heavy for one man to hold. It is true that plaintiff says: "I should say that it weighed 400 or 500 pounds. I never weighed one." Defendant's witnesses say that it did not weigh to exceed 75 pounds. It was the duty of defendant, when, by its agent, it ordered plaintiff to fix the engine, to furnish a competent man to assist him, who would exercise reasonable—that is, ordinary—care in holding the rod. If it failed to do so, there was negligence; and, if such negligence was the proximate cause of the injury, it was actionable.

We have examined the cases relied upon by defendant. Bryan's Case, 128 N. C. 387, 38 S. E. 914; Alexander's Case, 132 N. C. 428, 43 S. E. 1003. We do not think them conclusive of the question presented by this record. Certainly, if it is the duty of one to hold up an iron rod while another person is in a position with reference to it that dropping it will injure him, the duty is imposed upon the person so holding to use ordinary care to prevent it from dropping. In the absence of any explanation why he "dropped" it, is it not a reasonable inference that he failed to exercise ordinary care? The principle governing cases of this kind has been so fully and so recently discussed by us that we deem it only necessary to cite the last one, in which Mr. Justice Hoke reviews all of them. Fitzgerald v. Railroad, 141 N. C. 530, 54 S. E. 391, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 337. We are all of the opinion that his honor correctly denied the motion for judgment of nonsuit, or to direct a verdict upon the first issue.

There is no exception to the charge as given argued in the brief, and we find no error therein. Defendant, however, earnestly contends that his honor committed prejudicial error in refusing to give the last part of the instruction asked. While it is settled by a number of cases decided by this court that a party is entitled to formulate a correct proposition of law applicable to phases of the testimony and have it submitted to the jury, it is equally well settled that if the court, either in its general instruction or in response to special prayers, has stated the same proposition in a form equally favorable to the contention of appellant, the failure to give such prayer is not reversible error. His honor had clearly instructed the jury in respect to the law applicable to the testimony. He had also, in response to defendant's prayer for special instruction, told the jury that the mere fact that plaintiff was injured while in the employment of defendant was "no evidence of negligence"; that the "mere fact that Joseph Seagrave dropped the rod is no presumption of negligence"; and, again, that "the mere fact and proof of injury, unsupported by other evidence of negligence or any attending circumstances whereby the jury can reasonably infer negligence, is not a presumption of negligence." We are unable to see how much more strongly his honor could have put defendant's contention, unless he had instructed them that there was no evidence of negligence. Having submitted the question of negligence to the jury upon the theory that if they found that Seagrave dropped the rod, etc., we do not perceive how he could have said to them that, if they found no attending circumstances, they must find that there was no negligence. Plaintiff's contention was that, in the absence of "attending circumstances" explaining why he dropped the rod, the jury should infer that he did so negligently; that he was not exercising due care. To have given the instruction asked would have been to reason in a circle, and withdraw from the jury indirectly the very question which he had submitted to them. It was the unexplained dropping of the rod which plaintiff relied upon to maintain his contention.

It will be further noted that the instruction assumes that the evidence showed an "unexplained falling of the rod." This assumption has no support. All of the evidence is that Seagrave "dropped the rod," or that it "slipped" from his hand. It has been frequently held that, where the duty is imposed of securely fastening an object the falling of which endangers life or limb of one to whom the person owes the duty of fastening the object, the falling of it unexplained justifies the inference that it was not securely fastened. Wimpelmann v. Caloday, 88 Md. 92, 40 Atl. 1078; Gerlach v. Edelmeier, 88 N. Y. 645; Kearney v. Railroad, L. R. 5 Q. B. 411; and other cases cited in Womble v. Grocery Co., 135 N. C. 474, 47 S. E. 493. Here Seagrave was an intelligent human being, knew the conditions and the duty which he owed plaintiff, and almost certain injury to him if he dropped the rod. If there were "attending circumstances" explaining why he did so, as if his hands were benumbed by cold, or he was taken suddenly sick, or for any reason he was suddenly disabled, it was open to defendant to show such conditions. The instruction asked is not perfectly clear; but, as we interpret the language, his honor correctly declined to give it. The case has been, so far as an examination of the record discloses, fairly tried, and every phase of the testimony submitted to the jury with correct instructions in respect to the law.

The judgment must be affirmed.

(145 N. C. 112)

BALTHROP v. TODD et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 3, 1907.)

DEEDS—CANCELLATION—CONFIDENTIAL RELATIONS—BURDEN OF PROOF.

Where, in a suit by a grantor to set aside a deed conveying without consideration her entire real estate to her sister, the evidence showed that the grantor was feeble and illiterate, and reposed confidence in her sister and her husband, a confidential relation was shown; and the grantee, to sustain the deed, must show the good faith of the transaction.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 16, Deeds, § 587.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Nash County; Biggs, Judge.

Action by Zaney Balthrop against James H. Todd and another. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Reversed, and new trial granted.

Jacob Battle, for appellant. F. S. Spruill, for appellees.

BROWN, J. It is in evidence that on March 1, 1900, the plaintiff, a feeble old woman, approaching 70 years, conveyed her entire landed estate, consisting of three tracts, to her sister, Sarah J. Todd, with whom (she and her husband, James H. Todd) the plaintiff had made her home for some 14 years. No money was paid or promised, and at the time the defendants did not claim that plaintiff owed them a penny. Plaintiff had no other property whatever, except $108, to support herself. In her advanced age and enfeebled condition, she leaned upon her brother-in-law and sister, and reposed trust and confidence in them. Plaintiff was a widow, childless, could not read and write, and was in bad health. Shortly before the deeds were executed, Todd told a neighbor that the plaintiff had some money and land; that he was going to promise to take care of her during her life and thus get her property, and, after he got it, he was going to drop her. He told the plaintiff that her brother intended to have a guardian appointed for her, and then she could no longer control her own property. She doubtless thought that it was necessary to do as her brother-in-law told her to do in order to retain control of her property. She asked him if she could not make a will. He said: "Make a deed. It will be best, as a will can be destroyed." James H. Todd then procured the deeds to be written and executed at his house, reciting a money consideration, although not a dollar was paid or promised, and no claim made that plaintiff owed him anything.

Clearly his honor erred in not submitting the case to the jury upon appropriate issues and under proper instructions. It is true that the evidence does not bring the case within either of the four definite fiduciary relations mentioned by Judge Pearson in Lee v. Pearce, 68 N. C. 87, when the court can instruct the jury that fraud is presumed as matter of law. But the evidence discloses plainly such a "confidential relation" or "position of dependence" that, if the jury find the facts to be as testified to by plaintiff, the burden of proof shifts, and, to sustain the validity of the deeds, the defendant must satisfy the jury of the bona fides and legality of the transaction. The evidence brings it within that class mentioned by Lord Hardwicke in Chesterfield v. Jansen, where fraud arises from the circumstances and condition of the immediate parties to the transaction. 2 Pom. Eq. §§ 922, 923. It comes within the fourth class of those quasi relations of confidence mentioned in Lee v. Pearce, viz., "when the relation is that of friendly intercourse and habitual reliance for advice," etc., which Judge Pearson says "raise a presumption of fraud, as matter of fact, to pass before the jury for what it may be worth." See, also, Buffalo v. Buffalo, 22 N. C. 241; Smith v. Moore, 142 N. C. 296, 55 S. E. 275, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 684; Timmons v. Westmoreland, 72 N. C. 587; Bigelow on Fraud (1890) p. 295; 2 Pom. Eq. §§ 928 (2), 956.

New trial.

(145 N. C. 140)

ORMOND v. CONNECTICUT MUT. LIFE INS. CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 10, 1907.)

1. TRIAL—SUBMISSION OF ISSUES.

No particular form is required in the submission of special issues to the jury, and, if they substantially present the issues as raised by the pleadings, it is sufficient.

2. INSURANCE—RIGHT TO PROCEEDS—ACTIONS TO DETERMINE—PARTIES.

In an action to recover of an insurance company testator's share of a policy, beneficiaries to whom the insurance company had paid the policy in full were properly made parties defendant.

3. PARTIES—NONJOINDER OF NECESSARY PARTIES—EFFECT.

Failure to join a necessary party is error, to which exception lies.

4. SAME—JOINDER OF UNNECESSARY PARTIES.

Joinder of unnecessary parties either plaintiffs or defendants is immaterial, save only as it may affect the matter of costs.

5. INSURANCE—ASSIGNMENT OF POLICY.

No particular form of words is essential to effect an assignment or surrender of a policy of insurance.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 28, Insurance, § 479.]

6. EVIDENCE—ADMISSIONS—DECLARATIONS OF TESTATOR—ADMISSIBILITY AGAINST EXECUTOR.

In an action to recover of an insurance company testator's share of a policy, declarations of testator are admissible against the executor.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 20, Evidence, §§ 983-985.]

7. SAME—ASSIGNMENT OF POLICY.

In an action by an executor against an insurance company to recover testator's share of a policy, evidence held to show an assignment of testator's interest in the policy to his children, barring any recovery by his executor.

Appeal from Superior Court, Lenoir County; Long, Judge.

Action by Y. T. Ormond, executor of A. R. Miller, deceased, against the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Plaintiff sues to recover one-fifth of, a policy of insurance on the life of his testator, issued by defendant. The court submitted the following issues: "(1) Did the plaintiff's testator, * * * after the death of his wife, relinquish any rights and interest he might have had in the policy from his wife, and surrender said policy to his children to be kept alive for their benefit as alleged in the answer? Ans. Yes. (2) Did the defendants Hyatt, Luce, and E. L. Miller, agreeably to such an understanding with A. R. Miller, keep alive the said policy and pay the premiums according thereon from year to year and until the death of A. R. Miller (plaintiff's testator), as alleged in the answer? Ans. Yes." From the judgment rendered, plaintiff appealed.

Y. T. Ormond and Geo. V. Cowper, for appellant. W. S. O'B. Robinson and F. H. Busbee & Son, for appellee.

BROWN, J. The evidence in this case tends to prove that in 1868 plaintiff's testator, A. R. Miller, insured his life in the defendant company in the sum of $10,000 for the benefit of his wife, Delia M. Miller, and their four children, Sybil Hyatt, E. L. Miller, Maude Luce, and W. R. Miller. In 1884 Mrs.

Della M. Miller died intestate, leaving her husband, A. R. Miller, and the four children above named. No administration was granted upon her estate. In 1903 W. R. Miller assigned his interest in the policy to Mrs. Sybil Hyatt, and soon thereafter died, before the death of A. R. Miller. In June, 1905, A. R. Miller died, leaving a will in which Mrs. Luce was named as residuary legatee. The policy was presented to the insurance company for payment by the three children and by Mrs. Hyatt, as assignee of W. R. Miller, and the amounts due were paid by the company, as appears by the receipts and releases of the beneficiaries. The rights and interest of A. R. Miller having been relinquished and surrendered as claimed to the four children, the company paid to them as beneficiaries the amount of the policy in full, without deduction. The plaintiff brings this action as executor of A. R. Miller to recover one-fifth of the amount of the policy, alleging that the interest of Mrs. Della M. Miller in the policy had not been relinquished or surrendered to the other beneficiaries by Dr. Miller, the insured, who, it is admitted, acquired such interest upon the death of his wife in 1884.

1. The objection made by the plaintiff to the form of the issues submitted by the court to the jury is without merit. No particular form is prescribed by law, and, if the issues submitted substantially present the issues as raised by the pleadings, they are not open to objection. Mace v. Ins. Co., 101 N. C. 122, 7 S. E. 674. The issues submitted in this case are so formulated that they clearly express the controverted facts alleged on the one side and denied on the other.

2. Upon application of the defendant company, the court some time before the trial entered an order making the beneficiaries to whom the insurance company had paid the policy in full parties defendant, to which plaintiff excepted. The beneficiaries themselves take no exception to the order of the court making them parties. It possibly may be, as contended by the plaintiff, that they are not strictly speaking necessary parties. They certainly are not improper parties; and it is doubtless best for the due administration of justice that they should be present before the court when the title to the fund is settled. Under our practice, the failure to join a necessary party is an error, to which exception may be properly taken; but the joinder of unnecessary parties, either as plaintiffs or defendants, is immaterial, save only as it may affect the matter of costs. Rowland v. Gardner, 69 N. C. 53.

3. It is contended by appellant that the evidence, in any view of it, fails to establish an assignment of A. R. Miller's interest in the policy to his four children to whom the company paid the full amount of the policy. No particular form of words is essential to effect an assignment or surrender of a policy of insurance. An assignment is substantially a transfer, actual or constructive, with the clear intent at the time to part with all interest in the thing transferred and with a full knowledge of the rights so transferred. May on Ins. §§ 388, 390; Winberry v. Koonce, 83 N. C. 351. The declarations of plaintiff's testator, which are clearly competent against his executor, indicate that he did not care to pay the premiums any longer, and that he "turned over" the written policy and his interest in it to his four children hereinafter named, who agreed to pay the premiums thereon, and that after that the testator paid no further premiums. We think the two letters signed by the testator, dated November 30, 1890, and April 13, 1893, written to the insurance company and received by them in due course of mail, are clear proof of an assignment or surrender of all of the testator's interest which he then had in the policy to his four children. In the letter of April 13, 1893, the testator practically directs the company to cancel the policy, and to issue "a separate paid up policy, the amount being divided into four equal parts, and made payable to the following individuals: Mrs. Sybil Hyatt, Kinston, N. C., Mrs. Maude Luce, Galesville, Wis., E. L. Miller, Lenana, Kan., and W. R. Miller, Kinston, N. C. You can send them here to my care or to the above addresses as you think best." The evidence shows that the written policy was delivered to Dr. Hyatt, the husband of Mrs. Sybil Hyatt, one of the children, for the benefit of testator's four children, and there is no evidence that up to his death he exercised any control over it or claimed any interest in it. We think there is abundant evidence to be submitted to the jury that the two letters to the company were written by the testator or by his direction and authority, and that the plaintiff's exception on that ground is untenable.

Upon a review of the whole record, we are of opinion that the case has been fairly tried, and that there is no error.

(145 N. C. 422)

STATE v. TISDALE.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 3, 1907.)

INTOXICATING LIQUORS—CRIMINAL PROSECUTION—INDICTMENT—DESIGNATION OF PURCHASER.

An indictment, charging defendant with carrying on the business of a retail liquor dealer in a city in which the sale of liquor was prohibited by law, is insufficient, where it does not charge a sale to some person by name, or to some person unknown to the jurors, notwithstanding Revisal 1905, § 2060, providing that the possession of a license issued by the United States to manufacture or sell at wholesale or retail intoxicating liquor shall be prima facie evidence that the person having such license is guilty of doing the act permitted by it in violation of the state law.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 29, Intoxicating Liquors, §§ 237-239.]

Clark, C. J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Craven County; Neal, Judge.

Nathan Tisdale was convicted of carrying on the business of retail liquor dealer in a city where the sale of liquor was prohibited, and he appeals. Judgment arrested.

W. D. McIver and R. A. Nunn, for appellant. Assistant Attorney General Clement, D. L. Ward, and L. I. Moore, for the State.

BROWN, J. It is unnecessary to consider any of the exceptions taken by the defendant on the trial, as his exception to the bill of indictment is well taken, and the motion to arrest the judgment must be allowed. The first count charges the unlawful sale of liquor without a license to some person, to the jurors unknown, in violation of the general law. The second count charges the unlawful sale to some person, to the jurors unknown, within territory wherein the sale of liquor is wholly prohibited by law. The third count is as follows: "The jurors aforesaid, upon their oaths aforesaid, do further present: That the said Nathan Tisdale, late of the county of Craven, on the 20th day of September, 1906, unlawfully and willfully did engage in and carry on the business of retail liquor dealer, by selling spirituous and malt liquor to divers persons in the city of Newbern, said city of Newbern being an incorporated town where the sale of spirituous and malt liquors is forbidden by law, and where the majority of the qualified voters of said city had voted against the sale of spirituous, vinous, and malt liquors in said city and for prohibition, contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and against the peace and dignity of the state." The state entered a nol. pros. as to the first and second counts. The court below overruled defendant's motions as to the insufficiency of the third count, and the defendant was tried and convicted upon that count alone. This count does not charge the defendant with a sale of liquor to any specific person by name, nor does it charge a sale to any person whose name is unknown to the jurors. It charges that the defendant did engage in and carry on the general business of a retail liquor dealer in the city of Newbern, where the sale of liquor is prohibited by law.

The learned counsel for the state rely upon section 2060 of the Revisal to sustain the bill. This section provides that the possession or issuance to any person of a license to manufacture, rectify, or sell, at wholesale or retail, spirituous or malt liquors by the United States government or any officer thereof in any county, city or town, where the manufacture, sale, or rectification of spirituous or malt liquors is forbidden by the laws of the state, shall be prima facie evidence that the person having such license, or to whom the same was issued, is guilty of doing the act permitted by the said license, in violation of the laws of this state. There is nothing in it, or any other statute, to which our attention has been called, or which we have been able to find, which supports the contention of the state. It is evident the General Assembly never thought it necessary to create any such specific offense as carrying on the general business of retailing liquor in territory where its sale is entirely forbidden. In such territory liquor is a contraband, and the sale of it is a secret transaction. The bill of indictment may charge a sale to some person by name, or to some person unknown to the jurors. It must charge one or the other. State v. Stamey, 71 N. C. 202. In an indictment for the unlawful sale of liquor, it is not sufficient to charge the defendant generally with the offense of illegal selling. The facts constituting the offense must be set forth. State v. Faucett, 20 N. C. 239. "Every necessary ingredient in the offense must be set forth," says Judge Daniel for the court, in that case, and he then proceeds to state the exceptions to the rule, viz., indictments against a common barrator, a common scold, for keeping a common gambling house or bawdy house. In State v. Stamey, the identical point is decided, as it was in Faucett's Case; both being indictments for selling liquor. In State v. Blythe, 18 N. C. 199, decided in 1835, the question seems to have been first presented to this court. It is there held, in an opinion by Chief Justice Ruffin, that the indictment was defective because the names of the slaves to whom the liquor was sold were not set out in the bill. The learned Chief Justice says: "Every indictment ought to have convenient certainty as to time, place, and persons, and give to the accused reasonable notice of the specific facts charged on him, so that he may have an opportunity of defending himself. Here the indictment conveys no information of that sort." The same principle of criminal pleading is set forth in State v. Ritchie, 19 N. C. 29. The Stamey Case is cited with approval in State v. Pickens, 79 N. C. 654; State v. Miller, 93 N. C. 516, 53 Am. Rep. 469; State v. Foy, 98 N. C. 748, 3 S. E. 524; State v. Hazell, 100 N. C. 474, 6 S. E. 404; State v. Dalton, 101 N. C. 683, 8 S. E. 154; State v. Farmer, 104 N. C. 889, 10 S. E. 563; State v. Gibson, 121 N. C. 681, 28 S. E. 487. This rule of criminal pleading is recognized by the common law and is founded upon a just regard for the rights of persons charged with crime. Archb. Crim. Prac. 41, 42. It is not a technical refinement of the law. Had it been, it would have long since been discarded, and would never have survived up to 1897, when the last opinion citing Stamey's Case was written by the present Chief Justice.

The reason for setting forth the name of the person to whom the liquor is sold is because each sale constitutes a distinct offense for which the offender may be punished. When the name of the vendee of the liquor is given, the particular transaction on which the indictment is founded is identified. The accused then has notice of the specific charge, and may have the benefit of the first acquittal, or conviction, if accused a second time of the same offense.

Judgment arrested.

WALKER, J. (concurring). It seems to me that the distinction between the sale of liquor under a general prohibitory statute, of the character of that upon which this indictment was drawn, and the like offense when the act is prohibited, for instance, near a church, or other place, is simply this: That in the former there may be repeated indictments for different offenses, while in the latter the crime consists in doing the prescribed act in, or near, a certain place, or within a given distance of a certain locality. Where there may be numerous indictments arising out of different offenses, as where a man sells liquor in violation of the general statute, the name of the person to whom the liquor is sold should be given, by every elementary rule of criminal pleading, which has been adopted to protect the defendant from double punishment and to enable him to make his defense and to successfully plead his former conviction or acquittal, for there may be many offenses committed by the violation of the same law, on different occasions. Not so, perhaps, where the offense consists in selling in a prohibited place. It makes no difference to whom the defendant sold, so that it appears that he had sold within the prohibited distance of the church, or other place, intended to be protected. Selling in the prohibited place is the offense. The writer of this opinion is not willing, at present, and without further reflection, to assent to the doctrine that, even in the latter case, the name of the purchaser should not be given, if known, because we should always be careful to safeguard the defendant against a second prosecution for the same offense, as it is abhorrent to us—living, as we do, under a system of laws and a constitution which forbids double punishment—to impose two penalties for the same crime. It is contrary to the fundamental principles of the common law, to Magna Charta, and to the Bill of Rights. Const. art. 1; Com. v. Blood, 4 Gray (Mass.) 31; Capritz v. State, 1 Md. 569; Dorman v. State, 34 Ala. 216. We should be careful therefore to see that, in administering the criminal law, whether in pleading, evidence, or practice, we do not depart from this manifestly just and well-established principle. The people of this state, who are really and substantially the prosecutor in all criminal proceedings, do not ask that any man be punished, or even be exposed to punishment, twice for the same criminal act. Justice Bynum, who always stated a principle of law with conciseness and vigor, in State v. Stamey, 71 N. C., at page 203, says: "The purpose of setting forth the name of the person on whom the offense has been committed is to identify the particular fact or transaction on which the indictment is founded, so that the accused may have notice of the specific charge and have the benefit of an acquittal or conviction if accused a second time." See, also, State v. Blythe, 18 N. C. 199; State v. Ritchie, 19 N. C. 29; State v. Faucett, 20 N. C. 239, and, in the reports of other states, State v. Allen, 32 Iowa, 491; State v. Steedman, 8 Rich. (S. C.) 312; Dorman v. State, supra; Capritz v. State, supra; Com. v. Blood, supra. Mr. Bishop, in his work on Statutory Crimes (1873 Ed.) § 1037, classifies the courts in respect to their decisions upon this subject, and places this court with those who have held that it is essential to a valid indictment to state the name of the person to whom the liquor was sold. He also recognizes the distinction between the cases which I have attempted to point out in this opinion. State v. Steedman, supra. No one, of course, in this particular prosecution, is seeking to punish the defendant twice for the same offense. That is palpably not the question. It is the liability to be punished hereafter upon a second prosecution and for the same act by reason of a material defect in the bill. The distinction between the two cases is too plain for argument. And, again: Shall a citizen be tried hereafter by "indictment, presentment or impeachment," as required by sections 12 and 17, art. 1, of the Constitution, or merely by a bill of particulars. Unhesitatingly, I declare in favor of the former method, under which the freemen of England and this country have heretofore been safe against untrue and unjust accusation against the citizen. We may soon imperil the liberty of the citizen by impairing and thereby gradually abolishing the forms of law intended for his protection. Trials are not conducted now as they were in the days of Sir Walter Raleigh. We live, not under a king, or a potentate, but in a democracy, the best form, we think, of all government, where every man has an equal chance, or should have, before the law, and the right "in all criminal prosecutions to be informed of the accusation against him, and to confront his accuser and witnesses with other witnesses, and to have counsel for his defense, and not be compelled to give evidence against himself or to pay costs, jail fees, or (even) necessary witness fees of the defense, unless found guilty." Const. art. 1, § 11. If this had been the law of England, as it should have been, when Raleigh was called to the bar to answer the charge against him, he would, perhaps, have escaped the ignominy of the block. Even the ancient forms and the old lore should not be neglected, or disregarded, as we cannot well know what the law is, except by what it has been, and how it has gradually developed by degrees into a perfect and more liberal system. But, however, in our rapid progress towards a more sensible administration of justice, and however lightly we may have regarded mere forms of procedure, we should not by a too liberal construction jeopardize the liberty of the citizen, and especially should we not deliberately violate his constitutional right and privilege.

CLARK, C. J. (dissenting). In Black on Intoxicating Liquors, § 464, where the precedents are collected, the overwhelming weight of authority is that in indictments for the illegal sale of liquor it is not necessary to name the persons to whom it was sold. In this state, in State v. Faucett, 20 N. C. 239, it was held that the name of the purchaser must be charged, because, said Daniel, J., the words of the statute (1 Rev. St. c. 34, § 81) prescribed a penalty for "each and every offense." This case has been followed only by State v. Stamey, 71 N. C. 202. These two cases have never been cited in any other case on this point. They have been cited on other points. On the other hand, in State v. Muse, 20 N. C. 403 (in same volume with State v. Faucett, supra), it was held that, in indictments for selling liquor near a church, it was not necessary to name the vendee, because, says Ruffin, C. J., the statute does not give a penalty for each and every offense. This last case is exactly in point, for our present statute is like the wording of the statute in this last case, and differs from that in State v. Faucett, in the same particular which Chief Justice Ruffin there pointed out. The statute under which the defendant is indicted is Revisal, § 2062: "No person shall sell or otherwise dispose of for gain any spirituous, vinous or malt liquors, or intoxicating bitters, without first obtaining, as provided by law, a license so to do." This case therefore falls exactly under State v. Muse, and not under State v. Faucett. The words "for each and every offense," are not in the statute now, which is the distinction both Judge Daniel and Chief Justice Ruffin made in those cases. The only other reason given in State v. Faucett, supra, is that the defendant may be able to use the judgment as an estoppel when again indicted. Yet the same case (State v. Faucett) holds that, if the sale is charged to have been made "to persons to the jurors unknown," the indictment is valid. So if the sale is charged, as in this case, merely "to divers persons," the indictment is invalid; but, if the sale is charged to have been made to "divers persons to the jurors unknown," the indictment is good. It is impossible that one of these forms should be more informing to the defendant, or to the court, than the other.

Revisal 1905, § 3254, forbids an indictment to be quashed, or judgment stayed thereon, "by reason of any informality or refinement if in the bill sufficient matter appears to enable the court to proceed to judgment." It is clear that, if there is sufficient matter to enable the court to proceed to judgment in one case, there is in the other. The mere adding after "divers persons" the words "to jurors unknown" cannot give the trial court any additional light when proceeding to judgment. The difference is a "refinement" which the statute requires to be disregarded, and there is no better time to do so than now and in this case. State v. Faucett, 20 N. C. 239, was decided far back when such refinements still lingered occasionally in the administration of the criminal law, and State v. Stamey, 71 N. C. 202, was so held merely to follow the other case. It would be best not to lengthen the line by adding the present case to the other two. It is like the expressions "with force and arms," "against the form of the statute," "against the peace and dignity of the state," and the like, which at one time were considered sacred and indispensable and in some undefinable way connected with the maintenance of our liberties, and whose omission from an indictment vitiated a verdict against the guiltiest criminal. State v. Harris, 106 N. C. 687, 689, 11 S. E. 377. The growing enlightenment of the age has given a clearer conception both to the Legislature and to the courts that a trial for crime should proceed solely upon the merits of the case, disregarding all informalities and refinements. In former days, in an indictment for homicide, the nature and size of the wound had to be charged, the manner in which it was inflicted, the value of the weapon, and, if a firearm was used, it was gravely charged that it was loaded with powder and shot, and that by the ignition of the powder "the leaden bullets aforesaid were propelled in and against the left side of" aforesaid, and many similar details taking up two to four pages of foolscap. Now, three or four lines state the charge in a clear business like way, and no prisoner has ever suffered injustice thereby. If details are required by the prisoner for information, he can have a bill of particulars. There is no reason why the "refinement" of quashing a bill for selling liquor should be allowed for not adding to "divers persons" the further words "to jurors unknown," when the latter allegation is not required to be proven; still less ought the judgment to be arrested as here when objection for the omission to use those words was not made till after trial and verdict. As was said in State v. Harris, 106 N. C. 689, 11 S. E. 379, "To sustain absolute technicalities in indictments will be to waste the time of the courts, needlessly increase their expense to the public, multiply trials, and in some instances would permit defendants to evade punishment who could not escape upon a trial on the merits. If it has not the last-mentioned result, it is no advantage to defendants to resort to technicalities, and, if it has such effect, the courts should repress, as they do, a reliance upon them."

Here upon the evidence the defendant was guilty beyond question. The jury have so found. The judge states that in defiance of law the defendant continued to sell after indictment and even after verdict. He feared the federal courts enough to pay the United States tax on his business. Why should the state courts reward his contempt of state process by turning him loose, unwhipped of justice, because of the mere omission of the words "unknown to the jurors," which could have been of no aid to the court in proceeding to judgment, nor could their omission be any possible detriment to the just rights of the defendant. Instead of following an ancient decision, based on a differing statute, and which is contrary to the overwhelming weight of authority in other jurisdictions, it seems to me we should obey the statute (Revisal 1905, § 3254), which was passed to prevent just such miscarriages of justice, and to follow the present statute (Revisal 1905, § 2062), which is like that upon which the court in State v. Muse, supra, sustained an indictment, which like this did not charge the names of the vendees. The courts should keep up with legislation. The law should express the best sentiment of the age. It should move because all the world beside is moving, for, as Galileo said: "E pur si muove." We should move up abreast of our age, and not take our seats by the abandoned camp fires of a generation that has gone before.

No one is seeking to punish this defendant twice. No such question is before us. The difficulty is to punish him once for an offense of which he has been duly convicted upon a trial in which there was no valid objection taken. He is seeking to escape judgment upon the attenuated technical ground that the indictment charged the sales to have been made by him to "divers persons," instead of to "divers persons unknown." He might have had this information if he had asked at the trial for a bill of particulars as to the names of the vendees. He made no objection on that score at the trial. He does not show that he has received any detriment. Revisal 1905, § 3254, provides that no bill shall be quashed nor judgment stayed by reason of any informality or refinement. It was passed for just such cases as this. Magna Charta, the English Bill of Rights, nor the common law can have any effect to prohibit or restrict the legislative power of the people of North Carolina, except in so far as they have been expressly placed by our people in the words of our Constitution. In indictments for false pretense (Revisal 1905, § 3432), and in some other offenses, the statute provides that the ownership of the property need not be charged, and certainly the Legislature could provide, and has intended, that when there is a mere technical omission (as here of the word "unknown") in an indictment, not objected to at the trial, and which is not shown to have worked any detriment, the trial, verdict, and judgment shall not be vitiated by such omission.

(145 N. C. 432)

STATE v. DOWDY.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 10, 1907.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS—CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS—INDICTMENT—SUFFICIENCY.

An indictment, charging an unlawful sale of spirituous liquor to a person or persons to the jurors unknown, is not subject to the objection that it does not give the name of the person or persons to whom the sale was made.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 29, Intoxicating Liquors, § 239.]

2. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—PRESUMPTIONS—GENERAL VERDICT—GOOD AND BAD COUNTS.

Where two counts in an indictment are good, and there is evidence tending to sustain them, on a general verdict of guilty the conviction should be upheld, though a third count may be defective.

3. INTOXICATING LIQUORS—CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

A writing under the hand and seal of a collector of internal revenue: "Current list of special taxpayers in C. county, * * * L. & D., retail malt liquor dealers. * * * Date of payment and issue of certificate Sept. 30, 1906" —is a certification that a license was issued, and that the license issued was to sell spirituous liquor, the term "spirituous liquor" including malt liquor, and hence was admissible on a trial for an unlawful sale of spirituous liquor; Revisal 1905, § 2060, providing that the issuance to any person of a license to manufacture or sell spirituous or malt liquor by the United States government in any county or city where the manufacture or sale of such liquor is forbidden by state law shall be prima facie evidence that the person having such license is guilty of doing the act permitted thereby, in violation of the state law.

4. CRIMINAL LAW—EVIDENCE—OFFICIAL RECORDS.

Rev. St. U. S. § 3240 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2093], providing that each collector of internal revenue shall keep for public inspection a list of persons who shall have paid special taxes in his district, and shall state thereon the business for which such special taxes have been paid, and on application of any prosecuting officer of any state shall furnish a certified copy thereof, as of a public record, makes the matter certified to an official record of his office, for the purpose of the certificate, and, as such, the copy, properly certified, is made competent evidence by Revisal 1905, §§ 1616, 1617, providing that copies of all official papers and records of any public office of the state or the United States shall be received in evidence when certified to be true copies.

5. SAME—TRIAL—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—RIGHT OF ACCUSED TO CONFRONT WITNESSES.

Revisal 1905, §§ 1616, 1617, provide that copies of all official papers and records of any public office of the state or the United States shall be received in evidence when certified to be true copies. Rev. St. U. S. § 3240 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2093], provides that each collector of internal revenue shall keep in his office for public inspection a list of persons paying special taxes in his district, and shall state thereon the business for which such special taxes have been paid, and on application of any prosecuting officer of any state shall furnish a certified copy thereof. The rules of the Department of Internal Revenue prohibit its officers from giving oral testimony of the contents of public records in its offices. Held, that the admission in evidence, on a trial for an unlawful sale of spirituous liquor, of a certified copy of the list of persons paying special taxes, was not an invasion of defendant's constitutional right to confront the witnesses against him.

6. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—LEGISLATIVE POWERS—CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS—RULES OF EVIDENCE.

Revisal 1905, § 2060, providing that the issuance to any person of a license to manufacture or sell spirituous or malt liquor by the United States in any county or city where the manufacture or sale of such liquor is forbidden by state law shall be prima facie evidence that the person having the license or to whom the same was issued is guilty of doing the act permitted thereby, in violation of state law, is not unconstitutional; it being within the power of the Legislature to change the rules of evidence and declare that certain facts, when shown, shall constitute prima facie evidence of guilt.

7. CRIMINAL LAW—EXCESSIVE PUNISHMENT.

A sentence of two years' imprisonment for unlawfully selling spirituous liquor is not excessive, where the evidence tends to establish a deliberate violation of law, with an evident purpose to persist in it.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, §§ 3304-3308.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Craven County; Neal, Judge.

D. W. Dowdy was convicted of unlawfully selling spirituous liquor, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Henry R. Bryan and W. D. McIver, for appellant. Assistant Attorney General Clement and D. L. Ward, for the State.

HOKE, J. The various questions raised by the exceptions have been heretofore resolved against the defendant, and we find no error which entitles him to a new trial. Objection is made that the bill of indictment is not sufficiently definite and specific, in that it does not give the name of the person or persons to whom the alleged unlawful sale was made. There are three counts in the bill; the first two charging an unlawful sale to a person or persons to jurors unknown, and the third charging that defendant was unlawfully carrying on the business of selling spirituous liquors in prohibited territory. It may be that under section 3529 of the Code the third count could be sustained for some of the unlawful conduct forbidden by that section, but, without passing upon that question, we think the first two counts are undoubtedly good, alleging an unlawful sale to person or persons to jurors unknown. This kind of allegation should only be resorted to from necessity, and when the facts justify such a method of statement; and it seems from the authorities that when the charge is made in this way it should be proved as laid. State v. Trice, 88 N. C. 630; Archbold's Criminal Practice & Pleading, p. 124. It is important always, and required when possible, that in cases where each forbidden act constitutes a separate offense, the name of the person to whom the sale is made should be given, to the end that the defendant should have reasonable opportunity to prepare such defense as he may have, and that the bill on conviction may protect him from a second prosecution for the same conduct. State v. Faucett, 20 N. C. 239; State v. Stamey, 71 N. C. 262; State v. Tisdale (at this term) 58 S. E. 998. As a matter of form, however, the first two counts in the present bill are sufficient and have been frequently upheld. State v. Faucett, supra; 1 Chitty, Criminal Law, marg. pp. 212, 213. The two first counts then in the present bill being good, and there being evidence tending to sustain them, on general verdict of guilty, the conviction would be upheld on the good counts, even though the third should be defective. State v. Sheppard, 142 N. C. 586, 55 S. E. 146; State v. Toole, 106 N. C. 736, 11 S. E. 168.

The defendant further excepts because the court admitted on the trial, as incriminating evidence, a written paper under the hand and official seal of E. C. Duncan, collector of internal revenue, in terms as follows: "Current list of special taxpayers in Craven county, N. C., as of record Nov. 7, 1906. Lee & Dowdy, retail malt liquor dealers, New Bern, from Sept. 1, 1906. Tax $20.83. Date of payment and issue of certificate Sept. 30, 1906. Serial Number Stamp 222. 104 Queen Street; the firm consisting of N. G. Lee and D. W. Dowdy. Witness my hand and official seal. E. C. Duncan, Collector. [Seal.]"—the objection being, first, that it does not certify that a license was issued to sell spirituous liquors. Second, was it such a copy or extract from the record of any public office as should be received in evidence under the law? It is held with us that the term "spirituous liquors" includes malt liquors as well. State v. Giersch, 98 N. C. 720, 4 S. E. 193. And while the paper does not state in exact words that a license issued, we think that such a statement is by fair intendment the necessary import of the words used, and as such making a copy receivable in evidence under the law. The federal statute addressed to this question provides as follows: "That chapter three of the Revised Statutes of the United States be and hereby is amended in section thirty-two hundred and forty, so as to read: Sec. 3240. Each collector of internal revenue shall, under regulations of the commissioner of internal revenue, place and keep conspicuously in his office, for public inspection, an alphabetical list of the names of all persons who shall have paid special taxes within his district, and shall state thereon the time, place and business for which such special taxes have been paid, and upon application of any prosecuting officer of any state, county or municipality, he shall furnish a certified copy thereof, as of a public record, for which a fee of one dollar for each one hundred words, or fraction thereof, in the copy or copies so requested, may be charged. Approved June 21, 1906." This statute makes the matter certified to an official record of the office, for the purpose of the certificate, and, as such, the copy, properly certified, is made competent evidence by the express provisions of our own statutes on the subject. Revisal 1905, §§ 1616, 1617.

It is strongly urged, however, that the admission of this paper violates the constitutional right of the defendant that on a trial for crime he should have opportunity to confront his accusers and the witnesses offered to sustain the charge. This right, of such supreme importance to the citizen, so essential to any proper and impartial administration of justice, should appeal most impressively to the courts of this state, for North Carolina declined to adopt the federal Constitution until the amendment by which it was guaranteed had been formulated by the federal Congress and its adoption practically assured. It has, too, a prominent place in our own Bill of Rights, and this court would never uphold or countenance any legislation or procedure by which it was destroyed or substantially impaired. The right, however, does not mean that never under any circumstances shall a criminal charge be prosecuted except by the presence of living witnesses. At the time of the adoption of our Constitutions, the principle was subject to several well-recognized exceptions, as the testimony of a witness examined at a former trial and since deceased, dying declarations under certain circumstances, official certificates, and the like. Says Mr. Greenleaf (volume 1, 163): "The constitutional clause purported merely to adopt the general principle of the hearsay rule, that there must be confrontation, but it did not purport to enumerate all the exceptions and limitations to that principle. There were then a number of well-established exceptions, and there might be others in the future. The Constitution indorsed the general principle subject to these exceptions, merely naming and describing it sufficiently to indicate the principle intended." And on approval of these exceptions as to official records, Mr. Justice Avery, in the case of State v. Behrman, 114 N. C. 804, 19 S. E. 220, 25 L. R. A. 449, says: "When facts from their very nature can only be proven by a record or a duly authenticated copy of a record, proof of them does not fall within the constitutional inhibition since the genuineness of the original was determined by inspection and of the copies by an examination of the certificates, and the right to confront accusers was intended to be secured to the accused, not under all circumstances, but only where it would bring with it the benefit of testing the truth of testimony by meeting a prosecuting witness face to face and subjecting him to cross-examination." And to like effect is Reeves v. State, 47 Tenn. 96. The case before us comes, we think, clearly within the principle established by this exception. It was shown that the Department of Internal Revenue has prohibited its officers from giving oral testimony of the contents of public records in its office. This was no doubt found necessary for the proper and efficient administration of the business of the department, and in any event the Executive Department is made the conclusive judge of whether the order should be made, and it has been directly upheld and approved as a valid and binding regulation by the United States Supreme Court in Boske v. Comingore, 177 U. S. 459, 20 Sup. Ct. 701, 44 L. Ed. 846; the doctrine being there laid down as follows: "The regulation adopted by the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized by section 161 of the Revised Statutes [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 80], and that section was consistent with the Constitution of the United States. To invest the Secretary with authority to prescribe regulations not inconsistent with law for the conduct of the business of his department, and to provide for the custody, use, and preservation of the records, papers, and property appertaining to it, was a means appropriate and plainly adapted to the successful administration of the affairs of his department; and it was competent for him to forbid his subordinates to allow the use of official papers in their custody except for the purpose of aiding the collection of the revenues of the United States." It was no doubt on account of this ruling, and in recognition of its fitness, that Congress enacted the statute above referred to, providing that copies of the records might be furnished prosecuting officers. The entries then having been constituted official records, and a copy and its admission as evidence expressly provided for by statute, and the rules of the department making it impossible that oral testimony speaking directly to the facts recited should be obtained, the case we think comes clearly within the principle established by the recognized exceptions to the constitutional provision, and the copy was properly received in evidence.

It is further assigned for error that the court charged the jury as follows: "The court charged the jury that the possession of or issuance to any person of a license to manufacture, rectify, or sell at wholesale or retail spirituous liquors by the United States government or any officer thereof in any county, city, or town where the manufacture, sale, or rectification of spirituous or malt liquors is forbidden by the laws of this state, constituted prima facie evidence that the person having such license and issued, as before stated, was guilty of doing the act permitted by the said license, in violation of the laws of the state, and if you find from the evidence beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant had license to carry on the business of retail liquor dealer in the city of New Bern, it being admitted that said city is incorporated where the sale of liquor is prohibited by law, this would be prima facie evidence of his guilt; but unless you find from all the evidence that he is guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, then you ought to acquit him." Defendant admits that the charge is in accord with our statute on the subject (Revisal 1905, § 2060), but contends that the statute is unconstitutional. We have so recently discussed and decided this question in State v. Barrett, 138 N. C. 630, 50 S. E. 506, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 628, that we do not feel it necessary to do more than refer to that decision. In Barrett's Case, we held that the Legislature had the constitutional power to change the rules of evidence, and to declare that certain facts and conditions, when shown, shall constitute prima facie evidence of guilt; the limitation being that the facts and conditions should be relevant to the inquiry and tend to prove the fact in issue. And the case we think comes clearly within the principle, and the objection must be overruled.

Again, it is contended that the judgment should be set aside because the judgment is excessive, but we do not assent to the position, and here, too, the authorities are against the defendant. State v. Farrington, 141 N. C. 844, 53 S. E. 954; State v. Miller, 94 N. C. 904. Without expressing an opinion on the question of prohibition, the people of New Bern have adopted this as the law by which they are to be governed, and they are entitled to have the law enforced. This is not an exceptional instance of law breaking which can be dealt with in leniency or by an ordinary sentence; but the evidence tends to establish a willful and deliberate violation of law on the part of the defendant with an evident purpose to persist in it, and presents a case where a light or even an ordinary sentence would be inefficient and entirely out of place.

There is no error, and the judgment below is affirmed.

No error.

(145 N. C. 440)

STATE v. TOLER.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 10, 1907.)

Appeal from Superior Court, Craven County; Neal, Judge.

Thomas J. Toler was convicted of unlawfully selling spirituous liquor, and he appeals. Affirmed.

R. A. Nunn, for appellant. Asst. Atty. Gen. Clement and D. L. Ward, for the State.

HOKE, J. The exceptions presented by this appeal are in all respects similar to those decided in case of State v. Dowdy (at the present term) 58 S. E. 1002.

For the reasons stated in that opinion, the exceptions of the defendant are overruled, and the judgment against him affirmed.

No error.

(145 N. C. 156)

WILLIAMS et al. v. McFADYEN'S ADM'R et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 10, 1907.)

1. JUDGMENT—ENFORCEMENT—LIMITATIONS.

While a judgment for plaintiff, in an action to enforce a vendor's lien, and for foreclosure by sale, is final as to the amount of indebtedness, and, for purposes of appeal, as to all litigated questions, yet, as to all subsequent questions incident to the sale, possession of the property, distribution of the proceeds, etc., the decree is interlocutory, and hence no sale having been made under a decree awarded in 1895, Revisal 1905, § 391, limiting the time for suing on judgments, does not bar plaintiffs' right to a sale of the property; that section applying to final judgments only, or to judgments partaking of that nature.

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER—VENDOR'S LIEN—SALE—FORM OF RELIEF—MOTION.

Where, on judgment for plaintiffs in an action to enforce a vendor's lien, a sale was decreed, but none made, the cause not having terminated by final judgment, plaintiffs' remedy to enforce a sale is only to be had by motion in the cause.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sampson County; Long, Judge.

Action by Charles Williams, guardian, and others, against Duncan McFadyen; defendant's administrator and heirs being substituted on his death. From a judgment for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

It appears from facts found by his honor at the hearing below that in September, 1894, the original summons was issued in the name of Chas. Williams, guardian of Julia Blizzell (now Parrott), against Duncan McFadyen, to collect the purchase money for a tract of land and enforce a vendor's lien therefor against said McFadyen, who held the same under a bond for title, and was in possession claiming the interest in land, existent by reason of said bond. At a subsequent term, said Chas. J. Williams, individually, and his wife, Sarah J. Williams, mother of Julia F. Blizzell, were allowed to join and file a supplemental complaint as claimants of a part of said purchase money. At October term, 1895, judgment was had in favor of plaintiffs for the amount of the purchase money and "condemning the land to be sold" for the payment of the debt, interest, and cost, allowing plaintiffs to bid at the sale, and appointing Jno. D. Kerr, attorney of plaintiffs, as "commissioner to make the sale pursuant to the order of the court, make report of his proceedings, and retaining the cause on the docket for further orders and decrees." No sale was ever had under this decree, nor was any action taken by the commissioner, and the cause was continued from term to term, until February term, 1905, when the original defendant, Duncan McFadyen, having died, it was ordered that his administrator and heirs at law be made parties defendant, which was done by service of summons issued and returnable at a subsequent term. Later, at May term, 1906, it was ordered that Julia F. Parrott, formerly Julia Blizzell, and her husband, Geo. F. Parrott, be made parties plaintiff, and these parties thereupon filed another complaint setting out their interest in the purchase money and giving a history of the cause to date, styling their affidavit a complaint. Defendants filed an affidavit, styled an answer, setting forth their statement of the matter and pleading various statutes of limitations, more especially setting up the 10-year statute in bar of plaintiffs' right to relief. The cause then came on for hearing before his honor, Judge B. F. Long, as stated, who found the facts, and gave judgment for plaintiffs, directing sale by a substituted commissioner, as shown by his decree. Defendants excepted and appealed.

L. V. Grady and Stevens, Beasley & Weeks, for appellants. Rouse & Land, for defendants.

HOKE, J. (after stating the facts as above). We are unable to perceive in what way or by what statute of limitations the plaintiffs are barred of their right to enforce the collection of their debt by a sale of the property. The defendants more particularly insist that the demand is barred by the 10-year statute of limitations applicable to judgments (Revisal 1905, § 391), and that this position finds support in a direct adjudication of this court. McCaskill v. McKinnon, 121 N. C. 194, 28 S. E. 265, 61 Am. St. Rep. 659. But we do not think their position is well taken, or that they have correctly interpreted the authority cited as applied to the facts of the present case. Our statute of limitations applies to final judgments, or to judgments or decrees which partake of that nature, and was never intended to effect interlocutory judgments, and in a cause still pending. The action to enforce a vendor's lien for unpaid purchase money, where the vendee, defendant, is in possession under the bond of title, is in many of its aspects like a proceeding of foreclosure and sale to collect a debt secured by mortgage. Where a definite indebtedness is declared, and judgment therefor entered, and foreclosure by sale decreed, such judgment is final as to the amount of indebtedness so adjudicated, and it is final also for purposes of appeal as to all debated and litigated questions between the parties preceding such a decree; but, as to all subsequent questions arising as incident to the sale, the occupation and possession of the property by the parties of record, the collection and distribution of the proceeds, and the like, the decree is interlocutory, and the cause is still pending. Knight v. Houghtalling, 94 N. C. 408; Clement v. Ireland, 138 N. C. 136, 50 S. E. 570; Nutt v. Cumming, 155 N. Y. 309, 49 N. E. 880; Morgan v. Casey, 73 Ala. 222. This is true in all jurisdictions where the cause in express terms is retained for further orders and decrees, and it is true with us from the force and effect of such a decree, and whether such a feature formally appears or not, for our decisions are to the effect that a decree for absolute sale without requiring a report to be submitted for further consideration by the court is irregular and improper and will be set aside on motion. Foushee v. Durham, 84 N. C. 56; Mebane v. Mebane, 80 N. C. 84. The double aspect of this class of decrees being final in some respects, and in others as interlocutory, is recognized in the authority relied upon by defendant. McCaskill, Adm'r. v. Graham, 121 N. C. 190, 28 S. E. 264, where it is said by Furches, J.: "The judgment of $754.93 was a personal judgment and was final. The judgment foreclosing the mortgage was the exercise of the equitable jurisdiction of the court, and was not what would have been a final decree in equity, and was not so in this case." And so it is here. The judgment as to the debt is final, and on plea of statute properly entered could no longer be enforced as a judgment in personam and against other assets of deceased; but, as a proceeding in rem, the cause is still pending for the purposes of carrying out the provisions of the decree directing a sale of the property, and an application of the proceeds to the satisfaction of the plaintiffs' debt.

We have it, then, that as to the questions involved in this motion, the cause is still pending. Plaintiffs are here representing the same interests and asserting the same right claimed and established by the unexecuted and interlocutory decree; and defendants, as successors and heirs at law of Duncan McFadyen, deceased, are parties of record bound by the terms of the decree, subject to the orders of the court made in the cause, and when nothing has occurred to put them in a hostile attitude so as to cause the statute to operate for their protection. The judge below was correct therefore in ruling that plaintiffs' right to proceed was not barred by the statute of limitations. Inasmuch as some of the affidavits offered and used on the hearing are styled complaints, and some of the notices issued are called summons, we deem it well to note that the relief sought by plaintiff on this hearing, the cause not having terminated by final judgment, is only to be had by motion in the cause; and that, according to our present decisions, an independent action instituted and prosecuted as such will no longer be treated as a motion in a pending cause. Long v. Jarratt, 94 N. C. 443; Falson v. McIlwaine, 72 N. C. 312. It is evident here, however, from a perusal of the record and papers, that all the notices issued and the affidavits filed were in the pending cause, and that the parties have properly treated them as a proceeding in that cause, and no new action was entered or contemplated.

There is no error, and the judgment is affirmed.

Affirmed.

(145 N. C. 418)

STATE v. HERRING.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 10, 1907.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS — STATUTES — REPEAL.

Under Revisal 1905, § 5458, declaring that the Revisal shall not repeal any act prohibiting or regulating the sale of liquors in any particular section of the state, section 2080, extending and applying the regulation that the place of delivery of liquors shall be the place of sale to certain counties and townships of the state, not including P. county, did not repeal Pub. Laws 1903, p. 851, c. 498, making the place of delivery of whisky in P. county the place of sale.

2. SAME — REGULATIONS — POLICE POWER — VALIDITY.

Pub. Laws 1903, p. 851, c. 498, making the place of delivery of whisky in P. county the place of sale, constituted a valid regulation of the sale of liquors.

3. SAME — AIDING AND ABETTING — EVIDENCE.

Under Pub. Laws 1903, p. 851, c. 498, making a place of delivery of whisky in P. county the place of sale, evidence held to show a sale by the dealers from whom the liquor was ordered to the persons to whom it was delivered in P. county, in which defendant aided and abetted.

Appeal from Superior Court, Pender County; Long, Judge.

Sol. Herring was convicted of illegal sales of intoxicating liquors, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Solicitor Jones, the alleged vendee of the liquor, testified for the state as follows: "On Wednesday or Thursday I gave defendant 50 cents to send for some liquor, and 4 cents to pay express. I gave him the 54 cents the morning he sent off the order. I got the liquor on Saturday following. I went to the stables and got the liquor. Sol. was there, and I got my liquor. I got a quart of gin. The arrangement we made with defendant about sending for the liquor was on Wednesday or Thursday. Jim Johnson, Ellis Taylor, and Amos Grady were present when we made the arrangement to send for the liquor. Defendant was going to order some for himself, so we all gave him the money, 50 cents each and 4 cents express from Wilmington. Defendant was to send for the liquor. The liquor came on Saturday morning following, in the daytime. The box was open when I got to the stable. Defendant and Amos Grady were there when I got there. When I got there Sol. said: 'It has come, and you all know what you ordered.' I picked mine up out of the box and took it and went home. Jim Johnson, Ellis Taylor, and Amos Grady were present when I gave defendant the money. The others gave defendant same amount at the same time, in this town. When I saw the liquor it was at Johnson's stables. It was in a box. I got it out. All the bottles had the names of the owners upon it, and I did not see any bottles unmarked. My bottle was wrapped in a paper, and name on bottle. Ellis Taylor got his at the same time that I got mine." There was further testimony as follows: William Hand, cross-examination:

"I saw a negro carrying a box to the stables. Cannot say who the man was carrying the box. He was 250 yards away from me. Four bottles had been taken away when I got there. Seven remained in the basket covered with a bag. Solicitor Jones and the three other witnesses each had liquor. I examined the box when it came in, and it had express tag on it from Wilmington, N. C. Defendant told me he had not made a cent on the whisky, and ordered it to come in his box, but each bottle was labeled in the name of the person to whom it belonged; that he sent the order to Sternberger Bros., Wilmington, N. C., and they packed and shipped the whisky as above stated to him at Burgaw. Sternberger Bros., are licensed barkeepers in the city of Wilmington, N. C." Defendant requested the court to charge the jury that if they believed the testimony they would render a verdict of not guilty, which was refused, and defendant excepted. Verdict of guilty, and from judgment on verdict defendant appealed.

Stevens, Beasley & Weeks, for appellant. Assistant Attorney General Clement, for the State.

HOKE, J. (after stating the facts as above). Chapter 350, p. 503, of the Public Laws of 1901, prohibits the manufacture or sale of spirituous liquors in the county of Pender, and chapter 498, p. 851, of the Public Laws of 1903, makes the place of delivery of such whisky in said county the place of sale. Section 2080 of revisal of 1905, which extends and applies this last regulation to 47 counties in the state, and to certain townships in some additional counties, does not include the county of Pender, and might probably have the effect of repealing the local law, just referred to, but for the express provision elsewhere found in the Revisal itself (section 5458) to the effect that the Revisal shall not repeal any act prohibiting or regulating the sale of liquors in any particular section of the state, etc.

We have it, then, that the sale of liquors is unlawful within the county of Pender, and the further statutory regulation that the place of delivery of whisky within said county shall be the place of sale. The validity of this regulation, popularly known as the "Anti Jug Law," has been upheld with us by direct adjudication (State v. Patterson, 134 N. C. 612, 47 S. E. 808) and the decision on this question, we think, is well considered. We see no reason, as a general proposition, why the Legislature cannot make the place of delivery the place of sale, as to all contracts entered into after the enactment of such a law; and certainly a statute of this kind is valid to the extent required for the proper exercise of the police power, as here. Page on Contracts, § 1778; Freund on Police Power, § 499; State v. Goss, 59 Vt. 266, 9 Atl. 829, 59 Am. Rep. 706. In Page on Contracts,

It is said: "The power to regulate contracts is at least as wide as the police power and has been assumed to be the same thing." And in Freund, § 499: "The liberty of contracts yields readily to any of the acknowledged purposes of the police power." This, then, being a valid regulation, we think the evidence, if believed, shows a clear case of guilt on the part of the defendant; and the court was right in refusing to give the defendant's prayer for instruction. The testimony tended to establish that there was a sale of whisky by Sternberger Bros., of Wilmington, N. C., to Solicitor Jones, the person named in the bill of indictment, completed by delivery at and in Pender county; and that defendant aided and abetted such unlawful sale, both in taking the orders, procuring the whisky, and having same delivered to the purchaser, as charged in the bill of indictment. State v. Johnston, 139 N. C. 640, 52 S. E. 273.

There is no error, and the judgment is affirmed.

No error.

(145 N. C. 161)

RALEIGH REAL ESTATE & TRUST CO. v. ADAMS et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 10, 1907.)

1. BROKERS—EMPLOYMENT—TERMINATION.

Where defendants fixed no definite time for the duration of plaintiff's employment as their broker, either was entitled in good faith to terminate the employment at will, before any contract was effected with a purchaser.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 8, Brokers, §§ 10, 11.]

2. SAME—DUTY OF BROKER.

A broker endeavoring to sell land for his principal is bound to communicate to the principal the real facts and true situation with reference to a proposed purchase of the property.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 8, Brokers, §§ 16-26.]

3. SAME—RIGHT TO COMMISSIONS.

A broker must obtain a contract from a proposed purchaser able to buy, where by the purchaser is bound to buy on the authorized terms, or produce to his principal a proposed purchaser who is able, willing, and ready to buy on the terms authorized, to entitle the broker to commissions.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 8, Brokers, §§ 65-81.]

4. SAME—TERMINATION OF AUTHORITY.

Defendants employed plaintiff as a broker to sell certain real estate for $5,000 cash. Plaintiff obtained a purchaser who was ready and willing to purchase on the terms specified, but plaintiff represented that the property had been sold for $1,000 cash, and the balance on time, but if such terms were unsatisfactory cash would be raised for the whole amount. Defendants declined to sell on those terms, and immediately withdrew the property from the market. Held, that plaintiff did not produce a purchaser on the terms prescribed, and was therefore not entitled to commissions.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 8, Brokers, §§ 66, 67.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Wake County; E. B. Jones, Judge.

Action by the Raleigh Real Estate & Trust Company against M. J. Adams and another. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

This action was brought by the plaintiff to recover the sum of $250 alleged to be due by the defendants, as commissions for the sale of two lots in the city of Raleigh. The plaintiff's version of the facts was that the property was placed with it for sale by the defendants at 5 per cent. commissions for services rendered in making the sale. That it sold the lots to Mr. Corpening and Mr. Tennille for $5,000, the price named by the defendants, as vendors. Mr. Ellington, who conducted the transaction for the plaintiff, went to the house of the defendant Adams on December 1, 1905, to take his acknowledgment and his wife's privy examination to the deed for the lots, telling him at the time that he had sold the property for $1,000 in cash and the balance on time, and, if the defendants did not want to take the $1,000 and give time on the balance, he could raise the cash for the whole amount. The defendants declined to sell the property on those terms. Mr. Ellington testified that he had made an arrangement with the Raleigh Savings Bank to get the balance of $4,000. He demanded the commissions for making the sale on December 2d, and the defendants refused to pay the same. The defendants' testimony tended to show, on the contrary, that they had placed the lots for sale in the hands of several real estate dealers, with the understanding that the one who first sold them, according to the stipulated terms—that is, $5,000 in cash—should be preferred and receive the commissions. That Ellington had met Adams on the street and stated to him that he held the lots at too high a price. He afterwards, on or about Thanksgiving Day, 1905, told the defendants that he had a proposition to make to them, and that he would pay $1,000 down and the balance in one and two years, to which the defendants replied that they would not accept it, that the sale must be for cash, as before agreed upon, that they did not care to sell on time, and had decided to take the property off the market. Ellington did not say that he could raise the cash, but merely made a proposal to buy as above indicated. There was but the one offer of part in cash and the balance on time. The defendants, when this offer was made by Ellington and refused by them, withdrew the property from the market. There was other evidence and facts bearing more or less upon the controversy, but the foregoing is a sufficient statement to present the point decided in this court. No question was made about the actual ability of Corpening and Tennille to pay the $5,000.

The issues submitted to the jury and the answers thereto were as follows: "(1) Did the defendants withdraw the property from sale in good faith before the plaintiff found a purchaser, ready, willing, and able to pay (for the property)? Ans. Yes. (2) In what amount, if any, are the defendants indebted to the plaintiff?" (Not answered, as the response to the first issue disposed of the case.) The plaintiff requested the court to instruct the jury as follows: "If they found from the evidence that the plaintiff procured a purchaser able, ready, and willing to pay $5,000 in cash, before they withdrew the property from sale, they should answer the first issue 'No,' although the plaintiff did not tell the defendants that the purchaser would pay cash." This instruction was refused and exception taken. The court then charged the jury as follows: "The burden of proof upon the issue submitted is on the defendants. Among other things, the jury are instructed that, if they find from the evidence that Mr. Ellington, the plaintiff's agent, as claimed by him, told the defendants at the interview between them that he had found a purchaser who desired to pay $1,000 cash and the balance on time, but if it was not satisfactory he would raise all the purchase price in cash and pay the same, and the defendants then declined to sell, and withdrew the property from sale, then the jury will answer the first issue 'No.' But if you find from the evidence that the defendants went to the office of the plaintiff, as they were requested to do, and Mr. Ellington told them he had a proposition to make them, which was that they take $1,000 cash for the property and the balance, $4,000, in one and two years, and he did not tell the defendants that they could get the purchase price, $5,000, cash at the time, and they withdrew the property from sale in good faith, and Ellington did not tell them they could get the cash for the property until the next day, or afterwards, as testified to by them, then the jury will answer the first issue, 'Yes.'" The defendant duly excepted to the charge and now assigns, as error, the refusal to give its special prayer and the two instructions given by the court. There was judgment upon the verdict for the defendant, and the plaintiff appealed.

Womack, Hayes & Pace, for appellant. W. N. Jones and W. H. Lyon, Jr., for appellees.

WALKER, J. (after stating the facts as above). The defendants having specified no definite time for the duration of the plaintiff's employment as their broker, when they appointed and authorized it to sell the lots, either had the right to terminate it at will, before any contract was effected with a purchaser, subject, however, only to the ordinary requirement of good faith. Abbott v. Hunt, 129 N. C. 403, 40 S. E. 119; Sibbald v. Iron Company, 83 N. Y. 378, 38 Am. Rep. 441; Coffin v. Landis, 46 Pa. 426; Young v. Trainor, 158 Ill. 423, 42 N. E. 139; Bailey v. Smith, 103 Ala. 641, 15 South. 900; Hartley's Appeal, 53 Pa. 212, 91 Am. Dec. 207; Hunt v. Rousmanier, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 174, 5 L. Ed. 589; Insurance Co. v. Williams, 91 N. C. 69, 49 Am. Rep. 637; Brookshire v. Vonnannon, 28 N. C. 231; Wilcox v. Ewing, 141 U. S. 627, 12 Sup. Ct. 94, 35 L. Ed. 882. The cases which we have so copiously cited will show the different circumstances under which this rule of law has been applied and demonstrate the wisdom of it.

There is another principle equally as well settled: A broker, who negotiates the sale of property, is not entitled to his commissions, unless he finds a purchaser in a situation, and ready and willing, to complete the purchase on the terms agreed upon between him and his principal, the vendor. Mallonee v. Young, 119 N. C. 549, 28 S. E. 141; 2 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law, 584; McGavock v. Woodlief, 20 How. (U. S.) 221, 15 L. Ed. 884. Can it be that a real estate broker will be permitted by the law to recover his commissions, when he has reported to his principals a sale upon terms materially different from those which the latter had stated in their proposal to sell; the offer being thereupon rejected, and the property withdrawn from sale? No authority has been cited to us which sustains such a proposition as an affirmative answer to the question would establish. It was clearly the duty of the broker in this case to communicate to his principals the real facts and the true situation, as no doctrine is better settled in the law of agency than that the agent must give to his principal notice of all facts, relative to the business intrusted to him, which have come to his knowledge, and which may materially affect the principal's interests. Tiffany on Agency, p. 415, § 107; Humphrey v. Robinson, 134 N. C. 432, 46 S. E. 953. The relation between the agent and the principal being of a fiduciary nature, it results that there must always be the exercise of good faith by the former towards the latter. The principal reposes confidence in his agent and is entitled to receive, in return, perfect loyalty to himself and unselfish attention to his business. There should be no conflict between their interests, as the agent must always be free and untrammelled, in order to serve his employer with undivided devotion and fidelity to his trust and an unremitting endeavor to promote the success of the matters committed to his charge. Reinhard on Agency, §§ 239-246. An agent must also obey instructions and observe the terms of the agency, otherwise he does not perform, in the eye of the law, his full duty towards his principal, and is not entitled to receive the compensation for his services promised to him in the contract of agency.

We held substantially, in Humphrey v. Robinson, supra, following the general principles thus stated, that a real estate broker, who fails to communicate to his employer any facts known to him and material to the transaction he had in charge, was not entitled to damages for the failure of his principal to comply with the contract made by the broker in his name and on his account with a third person. So, here, the plaintiff, as agent, failed to disclose to the defendants, who employed it to sell the lots, the facts as it now claims they actually existed. Its agent reported to them a contract with Corpening and Tennille entirely different from the one he was authorized to make, and the defendants had the right, then and there, to reject the proposition and terminate the agency, which they did, according to the findings of the jury. We cannot imagine upon what principle of equity, even broadly considered, and certainly we have failed to discover any principle of law, upon which the plaintiff is entitled to commissions, as upon a sale made by it, for surely none have been justly earned. It is now the established doctrine of the courts that, in the absence of any usage, or contract, express or implied, to the contrary, or conduct of the seller preventing a completion of the bargain by the broker, an action by the latter for his commissions will not lie until it is shown that he has procured and effected a sale of the property upon the terms fixed by the vendor. It is not enough that the broker has devoted his time, labor, or money to advance the interests of his employer. Unsuccessful efforts, however meritorious, afford no ground of action. Where his acts bring about no agreement or contract between his employer and the purchaser, by reason of his failure in the premises, the loss of expended and unremunerated effort must be all his own. He loses the labor and skill used by him which he staked upon success. If there has been no contract, and the seller is not in default, then there can be no reward. His commissions are based upon the contract of sale. Rapalje on Real Estate Brokers, § 75, and cases cited in the note; Sibbald v. Iron Co., 83 N. Y. 378, 38 Am. Rep. 441. The broker must also act strictly, or at least substantially, according to the authority conferred upon him, in order to entitle himself to the stipulated compensation. Rapalje on Real Est. Brokers, §§ 59, 60. In one of the cases cited on the argument by the plaintiff (McDonald v. Smith, 99 Minn. 42, 108 N. W. 292), it is said: "A real estate broker, in order to earn a commission for finding a purchaser, must either obtain a contract from a proposed purchaser able to buy, whereby he is legally bound to buy on the authorized terms, or he must produce to his principal a proposed purchaser who is able, willing, and ready to buy upon the terms authorized. It is not necessary that the principal and the purchaser actually be brought face to face, but the principal must be notified that such purchaser has been found and afforded a full opportunity to make a binding contract for the sale of the land on the authorized terms."

If the plaintiff has lost the benefit of its commissions upon a sale that it could easily have made, the fault was its own, and no blame can attach to the defendants. The mistake it made was in trying to obtain a little better terms from its principal in respect to the time for the payment of the purchase money. It tried to make a sale, contrary to the instructions of the principal, in which payment of the larger part of the purchase money was to be deferred, when in fact, as it now claims, the purchaser was ready to pay all in cash. It is plain that a cash sale is what the defendants desired, and it was no doubt more advantageous to them. They had at least a right to consider it so when they made the bargain with the plaintiff. The latter was therefore, by every consideration of good faith, bound to communicate to the defendants the important fact that they could get cash for the property. Instead of doing so, the plaintiff withheld this information until the defendants had exercised their undoubted right to put an end to the agency.

The jury have found against the plaintiff upon the facts, adopting the defendants' version of them. The instruction requested was properly refused under the circumstances, and the charge of the court, which was concise and clear-cut, presented the case to the jury in its proper light.

No error.

(145 N. C. 144)

SWINDELL v. LATHAM.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 10, 1907.)

1. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT—AUTHORITY OF AGENT.

An agent can only contract for his principal within the limits of his authority, and one dealing with an agent with limited powers must generally inquire as to the extent of his authority.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 40, Principal and Agent, § 245.]

2. SAME.

An agent, with authority to buy or sell, has, in the absence of any restriction to the contrary, the power to buy or sell for cash or credit.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 40, Principal and Agent, § 280.]

3. SAME.

An agent authorized to buy goods, where no funds are advanced to him, has implied authority to buy on the credit of his principal.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 40, Principal and Agent, §§ 280, 313.]

4. SAME—RATIFICATION OF AGENT'S ACTS.

Where, in an action against a principal for money loaned to his agent, authorized to buy goods for a mercantile business, the principal claimed that the agent was instructed to buy for cash and draw checks on a bank, and that arrangements had been made with the bank to honor checks, an instruction that where an agent is directed to buy for cash with money advanced by the principal, who fails to furnish cash, and the agent borrows money and uses it to pay for goods which are used for the benefit of the principal, the latter is liable for the money borrowed, was erroneous because making the liability of the principal for the money borrowed turn only on whether the money was applied to the payment of goods used in the business, though he did not know that the agent had violated instructions.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 40, Principal and Agent, § 627.]

5. SAME—INDIVIDUAL INTEREST OF AGENT.

An agent cannot, without the knowledge of his principal, represent himself and the principal, where their interests conflict.

6. SAME — ACTIONS — EVIDENCE — ADMISSIBILITY.

In an action against a principal for money borrowed by his agent, evidence that the transaction between plaintiff and the agent was usurious, in so far as it affected the principal, was admissible on the question whether plaintiff knew the agent was exceeding his authority.

Appeal from Superior Court, Beaufort County; W. R. Allen, Judge.

Action by W. E. Swindell against J. E. Latham. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

This action was brought to recover the sum of $3,906.25, which the plaintiff alleges is due to him from the defendant, by reason of the fact that the latter, who lived in Newbern, was conducting a mercantile business in Washington, Beaufort County, N. C., by and through his agent, A. B. Smith, and that Smith was authorized to purchase such goods, wares, and merchandise as were necessary to be used in the conduct of the said business, either for cash or on credit, and that, in the usual and necessary conduct of the affairs of his principal, A. B. Smith borrowed from the plaintiff the said sum, which was used in the said business, and of which the defendant derived the use and benefit. The defendant denied all of this and averred that his agent was authorized to buy only for cash which was to be furnished by him, or procured through the bank.

The court charged the jury as follows: "(1) The plaintiff brings this action to recover money which he alleges was borrowed by the defendant's agent, A. B. Smith, for use in the defendant's business, of buying and selling cotton and merchandise, in Washington, and that the agent, when he received the loan of the money, was acting within the scope of his authority, and that the defendant received the benefit of the money so borrowed in the prosecution of his business in Washington. (2) The defendant admits that he was doing business in Washington by his agent, A. B. Smith, but he denies that Smith, as his agent, had any authority to borrow money, but, on the contrary, he was instructed to buy only for cash and to draw checks on the bank for the purchases so made by him, both of cotton and merchandise, and that sufficient arrangements had been made with the bank to honor all checks so drawn, and he avers that he is not liable to the plaintiff for any money borrowed by Smith from him. (3) A principal is not bound by the act of his agent, unless the act is within the authority of the agent. This authority may be expressly given, but there is no evidence of such authority in this case. It may also be implied. If the principal acts in such manner, and permits his agent to so conduct his business as to lead one of ordinary prudence to believe he has authority to do a particular act, and a third party deals with the agent, relying upon this apparent authority, the principal is liable. (4) If an agent has no authority to borrow money in order to pay for goods, but is directed to buy for cash with money advanced by the principal, and the latter fails to furnish the cash, and the agent, for the purpose of promoting the business, borrows money and uses it to pay for goods for his principal, and the goods are used in said business for the benefit of the principal, then the principal is liable for the money so borrowed."

(5) The court here stated the contentions of the parties and recited the testimony, showing its bearing upon the issues in the case.

"(6) If you find by the greater weight of the evidence that the defendant held Smith out as his agent, and with his knowledge and consent permitted the business to be so conducted by Smith as to lead a man of ordinary prudence to believe that he had authority to borrow money, and the plaintiff, while acting upon this belief, loaned money to said agent, which was used in buying goods for the defendant, you will answer the first issue 'Yes.' If you find by the greater weight of the evidence that the defendant failed to furnish his agent with sufficient funds to pay for goods, that he knew goods were to be bought for cash, that his agent borrowed money from the plaintiff and used the same to pay for goods, and that these goods went into the business of the defendant and were disposed of for his benefit, you will answer the first issue 'Yes'; otherwise 'No.'"

(7) If you believe the evidence in this case, the plaintiff loaned to Smith $1,548.75 in October, 1903, $857.50 on February 16, 1904, and $1,500 on December 16, 1904. If you further believe the evidence, the first two of these transactions are usurious, and the plaintiff would not be entitled to recover any interest thereon, and all payments made would be deducted from the principal sum. The third transaction is dependent upon the intention of the parties. If it was made for the purpose of securing a greater rate than 6 per cent, it was usurious; but, if otherwise, it was not. (8) If you answer the first issue 'Yes,' you will answer the second issue, if you believe the evidence, $1,356.25 on the first transaction, $778.75 on the second, $1,500 on the third, if you find it was usurious, or $1,500 and interest from December 16, 1904, if it was not usurious. (9) If you answer the first issue 'No,' do not consider the first and second loans any further, but you will still consider the third, and if you find from the evidence that Smith borrowed the $1,500 from the plaintiff on December 16, 1904, and used it to buy goods for the defendant, that these goods were received by the defendant and used by him with a knowledge of these facts, that the defendant is liable therefor, and if you so find, answer the second issue $1,500, if usurious, or $1,500 and interest, if not usurious.

If you do not so find, and you answer the first issue 'No,' then you will answer the second issue 'Nothing.' If you believe the evidence and answer the first issue 'Yes,' you will answer the second issue $300, less $92, leaving $207.12, with interest from January 7, 1905."

The following issues were submitted to the jury: "(1) Was A. B. Smith, prior to December 13, 1904, authorized by the defendant to enter into the contracts with the plaintiff, sued on in this case, and to charge defendant with the payment of the money received thereby? Ans. Yes. (2) Is the defendant indebted to the plaintiff, and, if so, in what amount? Ans. $3,635."

There was a verdict, under the evidence, and the charge of the court, for the plaintiff, as appears in the record, and judgment was entered thereon, from which the defendant, having duly excepted to the alleged errors of the court in the trial of the case, appealed to this court.

W. C. Rodman, for appellant. Harry McMullan and Ward & Grimes, for appellee.

WALKER, J. (after stating the facts as above). It seems to us that the presiding judge went too far, under the facts and circumstances of this case, in the fourth instruction given the jury, which was as follows: "If an agent has no authority to borrow money in order to pay for goods, but is directed to buy for cash with money advanced by the principal, and the latter fails to furnish the cash, and the agent, for the purpose of promoting the business, borrows money and uses it to pay for goods for his principal, and the goods are used in said business for the benefit of the principal, then the principal is liable for the money so borrowed." We presume that his honor, in giving this instruction, was attempting to follow the principle which he thought had been declared in Brittain v. Westhall, 135 N. C. 492, 47 S. E. 616, and Id., 137 N. C. 30, 49 S. E. 54; but he did not confine himself to the limit which, in that case, is prescribed to an agent, in buying goods for his principal, and, for this reason, he erred in the instruction given to the jury because it broadened the scope of the agent's authority as there defined. There is undoubtedly one expression in that case, as reported in 135 N. C. 492, 47 S. E. 616, which, when considered by itself, might, perhaps, have led the judge into this error; but what is said in a judicial opinion must be read with reference to the facts of the particular case then under investigation, and also in connection with the context. In Brittain v. Westhall, as reported in 135 N. C. 492, 47 S. E. 616, and again in 137 N. C. 30, 49 S. E. 54, there were two questions involved: (1) Whether Westall had furnished Townsend, his agent, with funds to buy the goods; and (2) whether if he had done so, and his agent, instead of using the funds for that purpose, bought the goods on the credit of his principal, and the latter afterwards received and appropriated them, knowing that Townsend, his agent, had violated his instructions to buy only for cash with money supplied to him and had bought on credit. With reference to these questions, we stated several legal propositions: (1) "That an agent can only contract for his principal within the limit of his authority, and persons dealing with an agent having limited powers must generally inquire as to the extent of his authority." Brittain v. Westhall, 135 N. C. 495, 47 S. E. 616. See, also, Bank v. Hay, 143 N. C. 326, 55 S. E. 811. (2) "When the authority to buy or to sell is given in general terms, it is clear, in the absence of any restriction to the contrary, that the agent has the power to buy for cash or on credit, as he may deem best, and to sell in the same way. Ruffin v. Mebane, 41 N. C. 507. Or if express authority to buy on a credit is not given to an agent, but he is authorized to make the purchase, and no funds are advanced to him to enable him to buy for cash, he is, by implication, clearly authorized to purchase on the credit of his principal, because when an agent is authorized to do an act for his principal all the means necessary for the accomplishment of the act are impliedly included in the authority, unless the agent be in some particular expressly restricted. Sprague v. Gillett, 50 Mass. 91." Brittain v. Westall, 137 N. C. 32, 49 S. E. 54; Komorowski v. Krumdick, 56 Wis. 23, 18 N. W. 881. (3) "On the face of the contract, it appeared that Townsend was directed to buy only for cash, and, this being so, he could not, of course, buy on credit contrary to the instruction of his principal. Whether the defendant subsequently ratified what he did, and is therefore liable to the plaintiff, is quite another and different question." Brittain v. Westall, 137 N. C. 33, 49 S. E. 54. This was said by us in regard to a prayer of the defendant, as follows: "The written contract introduced in evidence constituted Townsend the agent of Westall, with limited authority only. As such agent, Townsend had authority to buy lumber for cash, with money furnished him by Westall, but he did not have authority under said written contract to buy lumber on Westall's credit." (4) "The contract expressly required Townsend to buy for cash, and the only possible ground of defendant's liability is that he received and appropriated the lumber to his own use, knowing that his agent had bought it on his credit, or that he had not provided his agent with the cash to buy lumber, in which case the latter had implied authority to buy on credit, and that fact would also be some evidence of notice to defendant that his agent had so bought. 1 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law, 1021, and notes." Brittain v. Westall, 137 N. C. 34, 49 S. E. 54. This language was used by us when commenting upon a prayer of the defendant, as follows: "Although the identical lumber in controversy came into the possession of defendant and was appropriated by him, he would not be liable to plaintiff for its value unless he had authorized Townsend to buy on his credit, or accepted and appropriated the lumber with notice of the fact that Townsend had bought it on his (defendant's) credit." We also stated that, if the agent is instructed to buy only for cash to be furnished by the principal, and violates his instructions by buying on credit, and the principal thereafter receives and uses the goods knowing that he has not furnished the cash with which to buy them, he is liable at least for the value of the goods to the seller, as he must have known that they were bought on credit, but if it appears that he did furnish the cash, and the agent nevertheless purchased on credit, he is not liable for the price even though he afterwards received and used the goods, if it appears that he did so without notice of his agent's default.

It follows from this statement of the law, as declared by the two decisions in that case, that the instruction of the judge below was erroneous, because the defendant's liability, as principal of A. B. Smith, to the plaintiff, was made to turn only upon whether the borrowed money had been applied to the payment for goods which were used in the defendant's business, in which event the jury were told that the defendant would be liable, not merely for the value of the goods so used by his agent in his business, or for the value of any benefit he may have derived therefrom, but for the full amount of the borrowed money. The defendant lived in Newbern; the business was carried on by his agent, Smith, in Washington. It may be that, under the real facts and circumstances of this case, the defendant did not know that his agent had violated his instruction, and his liability to the plaintiff for the amount of the borrowed money depended upon such knowledge. This was the ultimate fact to be established, and the jury should have been so instructed. Whether the defendant would be liable for the value of the goods actually used in his business or for the value of any benefit derived therefrom, even if he had no notice that his agent had disobeyed his instructions, is a question which is not now before us. We simply decide that there was error in the instruction of the court to the jury.

There are some expressions in the receipts given by A. B. Smith, the agent, to the plaintiff for the borrowed money, which might indicate that they were buying flour on joint account for the purpose of speculation, using the credit of the defendant for that purpose. We may not correctly understand these receipts, and their meaning and significance may be far otherwise than would appear on their face; but it is not permissible for an agent thus to use his principal's credit, if we are right in our interpretation of these receipts. An agent cannot, in law, represent himself and his principal, where their interests conflict, and without the knowledge of the latter. An agent cannot thus well serve in two capacities, for himself and his principal, because the latter's interests may be prejudiced even by an unconscious and unintentional desire to advance his own. Sumner v. Railroad, 78 N. C. 289; Lamb v. Baxter, 130 N. C. 67, 40 S. E. 850; Mining Co. v. Fox, 89 N. C. 61; Atkinson v. Pack, 114 N. C. 597, 19 S. E. 628. We have only referred to this matter that the intention of the parties may be made clearer at the next trial. It may be, and likely is, that the transaction is entirely free from any objectionable feature.

If the transactions between the plaintiff and the agent, A. B. Smith, were usurious, in so far as they affected the defendant, we do not see why this is not at least a circumstance to be considered by the jury upon the question as to whether the plaintiff did not know that the agent was exceeding his authority and acting contrary to his principal's instructions.

New trial.

(78 S. C. 327)

EPSTIN et al. v. BERMAN et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 5, 1907.)

1. PLEADING—MOTIONS—MAKING COMPLAINT MORE DEFINITE AND CERTAIN.

A complaint alleged that the plaintiffs, as members and trustees of a religious corporation, are entitled to the custody and control of a certain lot with a synagogue thereon, the property of the corporation, and that defendants, wrongfully claiming to be the trustees, are assuming to act as such, and are wrongfully exercising control and custody over the lot and synagogue to the plaintiffs' damage, wherefor they pray, besides other relief, for a certain sum in damages. Held, that the wrongful acts alleged do not necessarily import substantial pecuniary damage to the plaintiffs, and the court properly ordered the complaint amended by stating with particularity how and in what way the plaintiffs have been damaged.

2. SAME.

The order to amend the complaint did not require plaintiffs to allege mere evidentiary matters or special damages.

3. APPEAL—DECISIONS REVIEWABLE—ORDERS TO AMEND PLEADINGS.

An order to make the pleadings definite and certain by amendment is appealable when it deprives the appellant of some substantial right.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 2, Appeal and Error, § 703.]

4. SAME—DISCRETION OF COURT—ABUSE OF DISCRETION.

The Code vests the circuit courts with power to order an amendment to make a pleading more definite and certain, and the court's action will not be disturbed unless it clearly appears that the appellant has been prejudiced.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 3832.]

5. DAMAGES—GENERAL DAMAGES.

General damages are such as necessarily accrue from the unlawful acts alleged, and are recoverable under a general averment of damage.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Damages, § 4.]

6. SAME—SPECIAL DAMAGES.

Special damages are such as naturally and proximately, but not necessarily, accrue from the unlawful acts alleged, and are not recoverable unless specifically alleged.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Damages, § 4.]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Richland County; R. Withers Memminger, Judge.

Action by Philip Epstein and others against Julius Berman and others. From an order requiring the complaint to be made more definite and certain, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

J. S. Muller and D. W. Robinson, for appellants. Melton & Belser, for respondents.

JONES, J. This appeal is from an order of Judge Memminger requiring the complaint to be made more definite and certain. The complaint alleges, substantially: (1) That the Tree of Life is a religious corporation organized by the Israelites of the city of Columbia; (2) that the plaintiffs are members and the trustees of said corporation charged with the custody and control of its property; (3) that said corporation owns a certain lot, described, with a synagogue thereon, for use by its members for divine worship; (4) that the defendants, Julius Berman, August Kohn, J. M. Cohen, C. C. Goldstein, J. M. Epstein, and August Meyer, are wrongfully claiming to be trustees of said religious body and corporation, and are assuming to act as such, and are wrongfully exercising control and custody of said lot and of said synagogue; (5) "that the plaintiffs have been damaged by the unlawful and wrongful acts of defendants in the sum of $5,000." The prayer of the complaint is that they be declared the rightful trustees of the corporation; that the claims of the defendants be declared wrongful, and they be prevented from further attempting to exercise the duties of such trustees; that plaintiffs be put in charge of said corporation; and "for $5,000 and costs." Judge Memminger held that the wrongful acts alleged in paragraph 4 of the complaint are of the most general character, and do not necessarily import substantial pecuniary damages to the plaintiffs; and that, if such damages are claimed, the particular acts and circumstances out of which such damages arise should be set forth in order to enable defendants to prepare to meet the plaintiffs' charge, and ordered plaintiffs to amend the complaint by stating with particularity, definiteness, and certainty by what precise acts, in what items, and how and in what way the plaintiffs have been damaged in the sum claimed. The plaintiffs except to the order on substantially two grounds: (1) That defendants were not called upon to meet any claim for special damages, but damages such as would naturally and necessarily result from the wrongs alleged; that the effect of the order would be to require plaintiffs to allege special damages which they do not choose to claim. (2) That compliance with the order would require plaintiffs to allege evidentiary matter.

An order to make pleadings definite and certain by amendment is appealable when it deprives the appellant of some substantial right. Bolin v. Railway Co., 65 S. C. 228, 43 S. E. 665; Lynch v. Spartan Mills, 66 S. C. 16, 44 S. E. 93. The Code, however, invests the circuit court with power to order such amendment when the allegations of a pleading are so indefinite or uncertain that the precise nature of the charge is not apparent, and large discretion must necessarily be allowed the circuit court, and the court's action will not be disturbed except in a case where it clearly appears that the appellant has been prejudiced. The delay and trouble involved in appeals from orders of this character should not be encouraged by any very technical or refined criticisms of the action of the circuit court. The manifest object of the court was to require a definite statement of the acts of defendants alleged to be wrongful and resulting in damage to plaintiffs. The mere characterization of acts as "wrongful," or "unlawful," does not assign any specific legal character to the acts, and may generally be disregarded. Aaron v. Southern Ry., 68 S. C. 100, 46 S. E. 556. The acts characterized as unlawful—"claiming to be trustees of said religious body," "assuming to act as such," "exercising control and custody of said lot and synagogue"—are very general and indefinite. In Bolin v. Railway Co., 65 S. C. 228, 43 S. E. 665, and Lynch v. Spartan Mills, 66 S. C. 17, 44 S. E. 93, the court approves the statement in Pom. Code Remedies that: "The material facts which constitute the ground of relief should be averred as they actually existed or took place, and not the legal effect or aspect of these facts, and not the mere evidence or probative matters by which their existence is established." Good pleading requires a plain and concise statement of the final, ultimate facts which constitute the cause of action or defense. While the general allegations in the complaint may be sufficient as against a general demurrer, yet the defendants on this motion were entitled to have a definite statement of the specific acts of wrong, so that the court could reasonably infer resulting damage to plaintiff, and the defendants may know what particular delict is charged against them. The plaintiffs certainly must know wherein the defendants have breached plaintiffs' alleged right to the control and custody of the property. They are not required to do an impossible thing, and no substantial right is taken away or impaired by the order. We do not construe the order as either requiring plaintiffs to allege mere evidentiary matter or as requiring the allegation of special damages.

General damages are such as necessarily accrue from the unlawful acts alleged, and are recoverable under a general averment of damage, while special damages are such as naturally and proximately, but not necessarily, accrue from the unlawful acts alleged, and are not recoverable unless specifically alleged. The complaint does not undertake to allege any special damages, and we do not interpret the order as doing anything more than requiring the plaintiff to state with definiteness and certainty the unlawful acts relied on as the basis of a claim for general damages.

The judgment of the circuit court is affirmed.

(78 S. C. 352)

BUSSEY v. CHARLESTON & W. C. RY. CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 8, 1907.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT—INJURY TO SERVANT—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—VIOLATING ABROGATED RULE.

A section master killed by collision of a train with his hand car was not guilty of contributory negligence by violating the company's rule, providing for the sending of a flagman ahead; it having been abrogated by accustomed disregard thereof, known to and acquiesced in by the company's representative, the road master, whose duty it was to furnish rules and supervise the work of the division.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Master and Servant, §§ 763-765.]

2. SAME—RULES OF MASTER—REASONABLENESS—QUESTION FOR COURT OR JURY.

Conflicting expert testimony as to the necessity for the rule of a railroad company, that a section master approaching a curve on a hand car shall stop and send a flagman ahead, does not raise an issue of fact on which the reasonableness of the rule depends, in which case only is the reasonableness of the rule one for the jury, instead of the court; but such an issue is raised by evidence that another rule required the section master to go over his section at least every other day, and that it was impossible for him to do so if he stopped at curves to send ahead a flagman.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Master and Servant, §§ 1032-1043.]

3. SAME—NEGLIGENCE—EVIDENCE.

Evidence of negligence, in an action for death of a section master from collision with his hand car of a special freight, held sufficient to go to the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Master and Servant, §§ 1000-1050.]

4. SAME—FELLOW SERVANTS—RAILROADS.

Under Civ. Code Ga. 1895, § 2610, providing that, except in case of railroad companies, the master is not liable to one servant for injuries from the negligence of other servants about the same business, a railroad company is liable for injury to an employé from negligence of his fellow servants.

5. SAME—NEGLIGENCE—PRESUMPTION.

Under the law of Georgia, in case of injury to an employé, on its being shown that he was without fault, there is a presumption of negligence of the master.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Master and Servant, § 873.]

6. APPEAL—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

The substance of a rejected charge having been given in the charge of the court, any error in holding it to be a charge on the facts is harmless.

7. MASTER AND SERVANT—INJURY TO EMPLOYÉ—NEGLIGENCE—EVIDENCE.

Though, under the law of Georgia, failure of a train to give the statutory signal at a crossing cannot be considered as negligence per se, in the matter of the collision of the train with a hand car three-quarters of a mile from the crossing, yet it may be considered as an item of evidence tending to establish negligence.

8. APPEAL—REVIEW—QUESTIONS OF FACT.

There being evidence of defendant's negligence to go to the jury, the refusal of a motion for new trial on the ground that the verdict for plaintiff was against the weight of evidence will not be disturbed.

9. SAME.

It is not error of law for the court, in denying a motion for new trial, to state as conclusions facts not sustained by the evidence.

10. DEATH—DAMAGES—EXPECTANCY OF LIFE—EVIDENCE.

Under the law of Georgia, the jury are not limited to the mortality and annuity tables in estimating the value of a life.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court, of Edgefield County; R. Withers Memminger, Judge.

Action by Elizabeth J. Bussey, administratrix of John C. Bussey, deceased, against the Charleston & Western Carolina Railway. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

S. J. Simpson and Sheppard Bros., for appellant. J. Wm. Thurmond and James H. Tillman, for respondent.

POPE, O. J. This action was brought in July, 1905, by the plaintiff, Elizabeth Bussey, as administratrix of John C. Bussey, deceased, against the defendant railway company, to recover damages for the alleged wrongful death of the intestate herein. The deceased was in the employment of the defendant railway as a section master, having under his control a section of road reaching from the neighborhood of Woodlawn, a station just on the south side of the Savannah river, to Lulaville, a station in Georgia. On the 25th of February, 1905, deceased, together with his men, were on the road working towards Augusta. They stopped at Woodlawn, where, according to the testimony introduced by the plaintiff, they had dinner, and, Mr. Bussey having learned from the agent at this place that the track was clear, they continued their work up the road. After leaving Woodlawn some distance, they were proceeding around a curve in the road, their hand car moving upgrade at the rate of 20 miles an hour, when they were run into by an extra freight train, and Bussey was killed. The plaintiff alleged negligence on the part of the defendant in not notifying the deceased of the approach of the extra train; in failing to blow the whistle at Sneed's Crossing, a public crossing three-fourths of a mile from the scene of the accident; in coming around the curve at a high rate of speed without having the train under control; failure to blow at the curve, as was customary; and, finally, failure of the engineer to apply the brakes and stop the train before striking the car of deceased. The defendant denies that it was negligent in any of the above particulars, and alleges that it was not its duty to give deceased notice of the extra train, and that his injury was caused by his own negligence in not sending a flagman ahead, as he, according to the rules under which he was employed, was bound to do. The case came on for hearing at the October, 1906, term of court for Edgefield county. Judge Memminger having refused defendant's motion for a nonsuit, the case went to the jury and resulted in a verdict of $15,000 for the plaintiff. Thereupon defendant made a motion for a new trial, and, it also having been refused, it now appeals to this court, alleging error in a number of particulars.

In disposing of the exceptions, the first question naturally arising is whether or not the rule requiring section masters to send ahead flagmen had been abrogated. The plaintiff introduced evidence in reply tending to show an accustomed disregard of the rule. Whether this evidence was admissible depends upon the fact whether the disregard was brought home to the defendant company. Certainly secret and occasional violations of the rule by employes are not admissible to prove its abrogation. 20 Am. & Eng. Ency. 107, and authorities; Binion v. Railway, 118 Ga. 282, 45 S. E. 276. It must be shown that the failure to observe such regulation is sufficiently well known to the master to raise the presumption that by acquiescence in its violation the rule had been annulled. In this, as in all other cases, knowledge of the representative is knowledge of the master, and therefore if knowledge is brought home to such representative, and such acquiescence on his part is shown, the rule cannot relieve the master. Railway Co. v. Collarn, 73 Ind. 261, 38 Am. Rep. 134; Baulec v. Railway, 59 N. Y. 356, 17 Am. Rep. 325; 20 A. & E. Ency. 108. The evidence here objected to tended to show an accustomed disregard of the rule by all section masters, and that even Stillwell himself, who was the road master, and whose duty it was to furnish rules and supervise the work of his division, regularly traveled without sending flagmen ahead. We think the only reasonable inference from the testimony is that Stillwell had notice of the violation of the rule. His duties, being those of the master, made him the representative of the master. Therefore his knowledge was the master's knowledge. The purpose of the evidence was to show that the rule was constantly violated by both the servants and the representative of the master; that it was so universally disregarded that the only reasonable inference was that the master had notice of and acquiesced in the violation. This being so, even granting that the rule was promulgated by Kenley, the result would not be effected. The question here is: Was the violation of the rule brought to the knowledge of the master, and did he acquiesce in it? Its determination was for the jury. It is quite true that rules are necessary for the conduct of the complex business of railroads and should be given effect. No organization composed of many departments can be successfully managed where there is an absence of system and regulation. Where such rules are established and promulgated in some reasonable way, and employes have knowledge of them, they are binding, and the duty devolves upon employes to obey them. Many rules are, however, adopted which, when they are attempted to be put into practice, prove impracticable, and without being expressly revoked they are allowed to be constantly violated. Such abrogated rules cannot in a true sense be regarded as rules, and employes are not guilty of negligence in violating them. They are not a scale by which servants' acts are to be measured as to whether or not they are negligent. Care and diligence are not governed by them. Pa. Co. v. Roney, 89 Ind. 453, 48 Am. Rep. 173; 1 Labatt on Master and Servant, pp. 315, 511. We are of the opinion therefore that the evidence was properly admitted, and that the court was correct in leaving it to the jury to decide whether the rule had been abrogated.

Under this view, if the jury found that the rule was not abrogated, then the question as to the reasonableness of the rule becomes important. Was it proper to submit this question to the jury? There seems to be much conflict of authority on this subject. In volume 1, at page 508, of his work on Master and Servant, Labatt says: "Whether reasonableness of a rule is a question for the court or the jury is one as to which there is much conflict of authority. One theory is that the question is always for the court; the reason for this view being that it would otherwise be impossible to secure a uniformity of view or to insure the rule pronounced unreasonable by another jury in a subsequent case. Another view is that the question is primarily one for the jury. Some courts have enunciated an intermediate doctrine which seems to be more in harmony with general principles, viz., that reasonableness of a rule is a mixed question of law and fact, except in plain cases." The rule is thus laid down in 20 A. & E. Ency. 104: "Rules adopted by employers engaged in a complex and dangerous business are presumably selected as the best for avoiding injuries to their employes, and unless clearly shown to be unreasonable and insufficient the master should not be charged with negligence in adopting them. * * * Whether or not a rule adopted by the master for the conduct and government of his employees is reasonable is a question of law for the court." In Elliott on Railroads, § 202, we find: "The reasonableness of such regulations and the manner of their enforcement in a given case has been held by some of the courts to be a question of fact for the jury. But it would seem that this must be a question of law for the courts to decide, if any fixed or permanent regulations are to be established, and the better authority holds it to be such, since one jury in a given case might pronounce the rule reasonable, while another jury in another case might decide the rule to be unreasonable. * * * There are many cases in which the reasonableness of the rule depends, in the particular instance, upon disputed facts and circumstances, and where this is true it may perhaps be called a mixed question of law and fact; but, when the facts are undisputed, we think it clear both upon principle and according to the weight of authority that the question is one of law for the court." Again, Thompson, in his work on Trials, says, at section 1057: "Whether a certain rule of a railway corporation is reasonable, and therefore valid, is a question of law for the court; the general rule being that the reasonableness of the by-laws, rules, and regulations of corporations, whether private or municipal, is to be decided as a question of law. And it is improper to submit the question of the reasonableness of such a by-law, ordinance, or regulation to the jury for decision." The practice in our state seems to be in accord with these authorities. Broom v. Tel. Co., 71 S. C. 506, 51 S. E. 259; State v. Earle, 66 S. C. 202, 44 S. E. 781; Gideon v. Enoree Mfg. Co., 44 S. C. 442, 22 S. E. 598. Therefore the plaintiff must show that there was an issue of fact raised to entitle the submission of the question to the jury. In her endeavor to do this, she contends that the defendant after putting the rule in evidence produced witnesses to prove the necessity, which is practically identical with the reasonableness of the rule; that reply was made by the plaintiff, and thus an issue of fact was clearly raised. This point is not well taken. We are unable to see where the disputed fact or facts come in. The evidence introduced by the defendant was merely the expert opinion of the witnesses as to the necessity of the rule. It is true that the facts are stated upon which the rule is based, but nowhere in the plaintiff's reply can we find these facts contradicted. A contradiction of an opinion merely could raise no issue of fact. It would raise simply the original question of necessity or reasonableness that the court is called upon to decide. There is the fact, however, that, according to rule 1,000 of the defendant railway, the deceased was required to go over his section of road at least every other day. There was testimony to the effect that this was impossible if plaintiff's intestate had stopped at curves to send a flagman ahead. This, then, raises a question of fact, and makes the reasonableness of the rule, so far as the deceased was concerned, a question for the jury.

From the consideration of the question above, it is clear that the nonsuit was properly refused; the ground of the motion being that the plaintiff was negligent. The evidence raised issues which had to go to the jury on this point. Binlon v. Railway, 118 Ga. 878, 36 S. E. 938. If, after consideration of the testimony, the jury found that the deceased was justified in violation of the rule in question, then, so far as the plaintiff's testimony was concerned, her intestate was free from fault in bring about the injury. Nor according to the plaintiff's testimony was the defendant so absolutely absolved from negligence as to warrant such a course. It was in evidence that the defendant's agent informed the deceased that the track was clear; that the defendant's agents were rounding the curve with a special train at a rapid rate of speed; that no signal was given, nor was the train under control. These, together with the other alleged acts of negligence, were sufficient to carry the case to the jury.

The circuit judge charged the jury that a servant of a railroad company does not assume the risks caused by the negligence of the company or its employees acting in the scope of their duties, and such risks cannot be said, under the law, to be incident to his employment, and assumed by him. The appellant endeavors to show that this is an incorrect proposition of law, in that it makes the master liable for injuries caused by the negligence of fellow servants. Section 2610 of the Civil Code of Georgia of 1895 declares that, except in case of railroad companies, the master is not liable to one servant for injuries arising from the negligence or misconduct of other servants about the same business. Gun v. Willingham, 111 Ga. 427, 36 S. E. 804. The plain implication, and in fact the holding in Georgia, is that, where an employee of a railroad company is injured by the negligence of a fellow servant, the master is liable. Ry. v. Worley, 92 Ga. 84, 18 S. E. 361; Ralley v. Garbutt, 112 Ga. 288, 37 S. E. 360. Therefore this contention must be overruled.

The fifth exception alleges error on the part of the circuit court in charging the jury that, if it was affirmatively shown that the intestate was without fault himself, a presumption of negligence would arise against the defendant, and the burden of proof would be upon the defendant to show that it was not negligence. The charge, according to the doctrine prevailing in Georgia, is correct. The cases make a distinction between injuries to employees and those resulting to third persons. In the latter case, immediately upon the happening of the injury, the presumption arises that the master was negligent, which presumption it is incumbent upon him to overcome. In the former case, where the plaintiff was taking part in the act during the performance of which he was injured, before the presumption will arise, he must show that he was free from fault in bringing about the mishap. When this is done, the presumption is identical with that in cases of injuries to persons not employes. Railway v. Vandiver, 85 Ga. 470, 11 S. E. 781. The presumption is, of course, by no means conclusive, and even very slight evidence on the part of the defendant may dispel it. This being the law, there was no error in the charge.

Again, error is alleged in refusing to charge the following request, and in holding it to be a charge upon the facts: "So, if you find that Bussey neglected to send forward a flagman on the occasion in question, if his duty required him so to do, and that he took the risk of being on the track with his hand car, without a flagman ahead of his car when run into by the train, then I charge you that the plaintiff is not entitled to recover, even if you find that the company was also negligent, and if these were the facts you should find for the defendant." This exception cannot be sustained. Throughout his charge the circuit judge was apparently anxious to impress upon the jury the fact that, if the deceased was in any way to blame for the injury resulting to himself, the plaintiff could not recover. That if he neglected his duty in failing to send forward a flagman, he was blamable, is stated in a number of instances. Thus, at folio 590, he uses this language: "To find such section master free from fault, you should find from the evidence, if there is any such evidence, that at the time of his injury on the railway curve in question, if there was any such curve, that he was doing everything that his employers required him to do for his protection, and had sent out a flagman to flag approaching trains, if his duty required him to send out such flagman. If his duty required him to send out such flagman, and he failed to do so, you will not be authorized to find Mr. Bussey free from fault." Again, at folio 598, he says: "And if you find that such rules notified him that extra trains would run without notice, and that he should not run around curves without a flagman in advance, then I charge you that he was bound to obey such rule, and had no right to substitute any other rule or measure of diligence, but must obey that prescribed by his employer, unless he was authorized in ignoring the rules with the knowledge and acquiescence of the company or those in authority to promulgate and enforce same." And, again, he charged, at folio 610: "The court charges you that if you find from the evidence that it was the duty of the employe, Bussey, to send forward flagmen to flag the curve in question, as against the approaching trains, and that such flagging was required to be done by Bussey as an act of precaution under the rules and regulations of the company, if there were such rules, of which he had notice, if he did have notice, and that Bussey failed so to flag on the occasion in question, and as a result thereon was killed by an approaching train, then I charge you that such failure to obey the rules would be such an act on his part as would prevent any recovery in this case." Clearly, from these quotations, the substance of the rejected charge was given to the jury, and, even were the circuit judge in error in holding it a charge upon the facts, it was immaterial and harmless.

The judge instructed the jury that the failure of the defendant to give the signal at Snead's Crossing could not be considered as negligence per se, with respect to the deceased, but that it might be considered only as an item of evidence tending to establish negligence. The defendant alleges that this was error. An examination of the Georgia cases will show that they sustain the circuit judge. In the case of Railway v. Golden, 93 Ga. 510, 21 S. E. 68, we find this language: "But this court, so far as I know, has never held, relative to a person that distance from a crossing, that the omission to give the signal required by law is negligence per se, as was charged in this case by the trial judge. It has been held that the evidence of noncompliance with the statute by the servants of the railroad company is admissible, and the jury may be instructed by the judge that they may consider it. This, I think, is as far as the court has gone on the subject." In the very strong opinion in the case of Railway v. Gravitt, 93 Ga. 369, 20 S. E. 550, the court lays down the same rule. The purpose of such a holding is clear. The neglect to blow the whistle at the crossing, as defendant's duty required, has a tendency to show a negligent or reckless disregard of duty. This fact, together with other facts, may form a chain bringing home to the defendant the negligent act complained of, and for which it is sought to be held responsible. It may be very important, or it may be of no value at all. It is just so much evidence as the jury may take into consideration and give such weight as to them seems proper.

Finally, we consider the question whether it was error on the part of the trial judge to refuse a new trial. It is well settled that for error of fact this court is without power to review the circuit court's action. Therefore, to entitle the defendant to a new trial, error of law must be shown. The first alleged error, based upon a number of subdivisions alleging error, is that the verdict should have been set aside because it was contrary to the overwhelming weight of the testimony. Without taking up the subdivisions separately, we hold that the grounds alleging error because of a lack of proof of negligence cannot be sustained. These questions were properly submitted to the jury, and, they having reached a verdict, this court will not interfere upon the ground that the finding is against the weight of the testimony. Ruddell v. Railway, 75 S. C. 291, 55 S. E. 528; Cain v. Railway, 74 S. C. 89, 54 S. E. 244. Likewise, it has been held that it is not error of law for a judge in overruling a motion for a new trial to state as conclusions facts not sustained by the testimony. Caldwell v. Railway, 73 S. C. 443, 53 S. E. 746. Therefore these grounds must be overruled. Nor can we see that the circuit judge attempted to lay down any new rule as regards master and servant in his order. His intention was to say that a railroad company could not lay down a rule and in contemplation of such rule act in entire disregard of the rights of the employé.

The eleventh exception raises the point that under the Georgia statute and the decisions of that state a verdict of $15,000 was illegal and excessive, in that it was more than the amount that could, by the rules established by the courts of Georgia, have been fixed by the jury as the value of the life of the deceased. According to these rules, the plaintiff is allowed to recover for the full value of the life of his or her intestate. The difficulty is in arriving at the value of the life. The defendant contends that the proper and only method is to use the mortality and annuity tables, and from the former the number of years the deceased probably would have lived, and from the latter the amount of $1 for that time, and multiply that amount by the yearly earnings of the deceased. This is a correct statement of the general rule when the tables are used, but the jury are not bound to use the tables in estimating the value of a life. Railway v. Clark, 117 Ga. 548, 44 S. E. 1; Railway v. Burney, 98 Ga. 1, 26 S. E. 732. And even when the tables are used there is no iron-clad law holding the jury down to them. As was said by Justice Lumpkin, in what he thought would be a proper charge for the trial judge as set out in the case of Burney v. Railway, supra: "In estimating the probable length of a given man's life, as compared with the average duration of life of one of the same age, his health, occupation, habits, and surroundings, just as they are disclosed by the evidence, ought to be considered, and proper weight be given to all these things in fixing the expectancy of the life, diminishing or increasing the figures laid down in the tables according to the facts in the particular case under investigation. * * * If in any case the expectancy of the person under consideration would, under the evidence, have been properly greater or less than that of the average man, the amount of damages to be allowed should be increased or diminished accordingly. * * * Feebleness of health, actual sickness, the loss of employment, voluntarily abstaining from work, dullness in business, reduction in wages, the increasing infirmities of age, the corresponding diminution of earning capacity, and other causes, may contribute to a greater or less degree to decreasing the gross earnings of a lifetime. All should be taken into consideration." We take it for granted that the jury properly considered all of these matters, and reached their verdict only after careful deliberation. The circuit judge, who was present and heard the testimony, by his refusal to grant a new trial, expressed his approval of the verdict. This court therefore holds that it is correct.

Nor can we sustain the exception that the new trial should have been granted because the verdict was contrary to the charge of the court. The jury were instructed that in order for the plaintiff to recover she must show that her intestate was free from fault, and that, if both he and the defendant were free from fault, there could be no recovery. As was said above, the whole question of negligence was submitted to the jury, and they, having found a verdict for the plaintiff, thereby made it known that they found the facts such as would sustain a verdict. Therefore this court cannot set it aside.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

(78 S. C. 381)

WILSON v. VIRGINIA-CAROLINA CHEMICAL CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 15, 1907.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT—INJURIES TO SERVANT—CAUSE OF ACCIDENT—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In an action for the death of an employé, run over and killed while standing on a railroad track by a loaded car being pushed down on him, evidence as to whether the failure to give a signal of the approach of the car was the proximate cause of the accident held sufficient to go to the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Master and Servant, § 1016.]

2. SAME—MOTION FOR NONSUIT.

Where an employé was killed by being struck by a loaded car pushed down against him as he was standing on a railroad track, whether those who were pushing the car had by their negligence brought on decedent such a sudden emergency as to excuse him for trying to escape on the less safe side of the track was an issue of fact which could not be decided on a motion for nonsuit.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Master and Servant, §§ 1089-1132.]

3. SAME—FELLOW SERVANTS.

Plaintiff's intestate, a shoveler employed in defendant's phosphate mill, was killed by being struck by a loaded car being pushed against him. Decedent and the men who were pushing the car were working in different departments of the mill under different foremen, neither of whom, however, had power to hire laborers, provide machinery or the place of labor, or to do any duty imposed by law on the master. Held, that the employés pushing the car were decedent's fellow servants, for whose negligence defendant was not liable.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Master and Servant, § 483.]

4. SAME—FELLOW SERVANT LAW—SCOPE.

The change in the fellow servant law made by the Constitution of 1895 affects only the employes of railroad corporations.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Charleston County; R. O. Purdy, Judge.

Action by Lizzie Willson, as administratrix of the estate of William Wilson, deceased, against the Virginia-Carolina Chemical Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded for new trial.

Simeon Hyde, Mordecai & Gadsden, and Rutledge & Hagood, for appellant. Jas. L. Jervey and Jervey & Cohen, for respondent.

WOODS, J. The plaintiff, as administratrix of the estate of William Wilson, recovered judgment against the defendant for $1,500, under these allegations charging the intestate's death to have been caused by defendant's negligence: "That on or about the 14th day of March, 1906, the plaintiff's intestate was in the employ of the defendant company and was actively engaged in his duties, which consisted in shoveling up scattered phosphate rock from the space in front of the door of a certain building into which phosphate rock was being discharged from cars, through which space ran a railroad track; that, while so engaged and intent upon his work, a railroad car, loaded with phosphate rock, was carelessly and negligently pushed along said railway track by the agents and employes of the said defendant company; that no signal was made nor warning given of the movement of said car; that by reason of said carelessness and negligence of the defendant, as aforesaid, the said car struck the said William Wilson, and crushed him between the said moving car and said building, and he was thereby injured, so that he then and there died." A motion for nonsuit was made on these grounds: (1) That it appeared from the testimony that the injury to the plaintiff's intestate was caused by the negligence of fellow servants, who were not doing any part of the duty of the master; (2) that the injury to the plaintiff's intestate was due to his own contributory negligence as a proximate cause thereof; (3) that there was no evidence of the negligence of the defendant which could support the verdict in the case. The main question in the appeal was whether the circuit judge was right in refusing the motion for nonsuit.

The evidence verifies the complaint as to the mechanical means by which Wilson met his death. While it is far from clear that the failure to give a signal of the approach of the car was the proximate cause of the accident, on this point there was evidence to go to the jury. It is true Wilson was aware of the approach of the car, and called to White, who was working with him, to get out of the way, and he could have escaped by getting off of the track, as White did, on the safe side away from the house, against which he was crushed; yet the evidence made a question of fact as to whether the car was so close on him when he saw it that even a man of ordinary coolness and discretion would not be responsible for an unwise choice of a means of escape. Whether those who were pushing the car had by their negligence brought upon Wilson such a sudden emergency as to excuse him for trying to escape on the less safe side of the track was an issue of fact not to be decided on a motion for nonsuit.

There is not the least doubt, however, that the men who were pushing the car, including Robinson, who was the foreman, were fellow servants of Wilson, and the nonsuit should have been granted on that ground. Charlie Sanders was the miller and foreman of those working in and immediately at the mill, and deceased and White were working under his orders. Sam Robinson was foreman of the gang pushing the car. He and Sanders were nothing more than gang foremen; both working under the orders of Happolt, who was the boss in charge of all the laborers referred to in the testimony. These foremen had no power to hire laborers, provide machinery or the place of labor, or to do any duty imposed by law on the master. They were therefore fellow servants of the deceased, and the master is not responsible for their negligence. Shirley v. Abbeville Co., 76 S. C. 452, 57 S. E. 178, and authorities cited; Tucker v. Buffalo Mills, 76 S. C. 539, 57 S. E. 626; Biggers v. Catawba Co., 72 S. C. 264, 51 S. E. 882; Bryant v. Mfg. Co., 75 S. C. 487, 56 S. E. 9.

Even if it be considered that the deceased and those who were pushing the car were servants employed in different departments of the same general business, this would not avail the plaintiff. Gunter v. Mfg. Co., 15 S. C. 455. The change in the law on this subject, made by the Constitution of 1895, affects only the employes of railroad corporations.

The nonsuit should have been granted.

The record does not indicate the action was commenced after the adoption of rule 27 of this court, and therefore the cause must be remanded for a new trial.

(78 S. C. 433)

McMILLAN et al. v. INSURANCE CO. OF NORTH AMERICA.*

SAME v. INSURANCE CO. OF NORTH AMERICA et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 11, 1907.)

1. INSURANCE—FIRE—ACTION ON POLICY—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In an action on an insurance policy, held, under the evidence, a question for the jury whether a cashbook was delivered to the ad-juster, as required by the policy, or was destroyed by fire.

*For opinion on rehearing, see 58 S. E. 1135.

2. APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where, in an action on a fire policy, there was an issue whether a cashbook had been delivered to the insurer, as required by the policy, an instruction that, if the books were kept and securely locked in an iron safe, it is presumed that, having once been in the safe, they continued there, unless it be shown they were taken out, was not prejudicial to the insurer, since manifestly a book would remain in a safe securely locked until removed.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 4219.]

3. INSURANCE—FIRE—KEEPING BOOKS—SUBSTANTIAL COMPLIANCE.

Where a mercantile fire policy requires insured to keep books, etc., to present a complete record of the business transacted, and to keep the books locked in a fire-proof safe at night, a substantial compliance reasonably meeting the end in view is sufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 28, Insurance, § 853.]

4. SAME—ACTION ON POLICY—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action on a fire policy requiring insured to keep books, showing the state of their business, an instruction that a substantial compliance with the clause was required, and that if by accident books should be lost without insured's design, if there still remained means of fully ascertaining the value of the stock, so that the insurer has suffered no disadvantage, the loss would not vitiate the policy, was not objectionable as meaning that a failure to comply substantially with the clause would not defeat the policy if the loss resulted, not from design, but accident.

5. SAME—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Under the evidence in an action on a fire policy, held a question for the jury whether insured substantially complied with a clause requiring them to keep books to show the state of their business.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 28, Insurance, § 1737.]

6. EVIDENCE—BOOK ENTRIES—PAROL TESTIMONY.

Where a mercantile fire policy sued on required insured to keep books showing the state of their business, one of the cashbooks being lost, it is no fatal objection to proving insured's cash sales by other book entries that some parol testimony is necessary to make the showing complete.

7. INSURANCE—FIRE—WAIVER OF NONWAIVER PROVISIONS.

A nonwaiver agreement respecting a fire policy may be waived.

8. SAME—WAIVER OF FORFEITURE PROVISIONS.

An insurer waives a forfeiture provision, if with knowledge of the facts constituting forfeiture the policy is delivered as a valid contract.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 28, Insurance, § 1023.]

9. SAME.

A forfeiture under a fire policy is waived, if, knowing the facts showing right to forfeiture, the insurer requires insured to do some act or incur expense inconsistent with the position that the contract has become inoperative.

10. SAME—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In an action on a fire policy, held, under the evidence, a question for the jury whether insured had waived a nonwaiver agreement.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 28, Insurance, § 1743.]

Woods, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Marion County; J. C. Klugh, Judge.

Actions by M. L. McMillan and another, partners as M. L. McMillan & Son, against the Insurance Company of North America, and against the Insurance Company of North America and the Fire Association of Philadelphia, doing business as Philadelphia Underwriters. From judgments for plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

King, Spalding & Little and W. F. Stackhouse, for appellants. M. C. Woods and Henry Mullins, for respondents.

JONES, J. The plaintiffs, in the first-named case, recovered judgment against defendant for $1,745.29 on a policy of insurance issued February 9, 1903, on a stock of general merchandise, furniture, and fixtures at Mullins, S. C., which was destroyed by fire December 27, 1903, and in the second-named case recovered judgment against defendants for $1,734 on a policy of fire insurance issued September 4, 1903, on the same stock of general merchandise at Mullins, S. C., destroyed by fire as stated. These cases were heard together in this court, as they involved substantially the same facts and are controlled by the same principles of law.

The main controversy on the trial and on this appeal relates to the question whether the policies were forfeited by failure to comply with the "iron-safe clause." This clause provides that the assured shall take a complete itemized inventory of the stock once a year, keep a set of books which shall clearly and fully present a complete record of the business transacted, including all purchases, sales, shipments, both for cash and credit, from date of inventory and during the continuance of this policy, and will keep such books and inventory securely locked in a fire-proof safe at night, and at all times when the building mentioned in the policy is not actually open for business, or, failing in this, the assured will keep such books and inventory in some place not exposed to a fire which would destroy the aforesaid building; further providing that a failure to provide such set of books and inventory for the inspection of the company shall render the policy null and void and constitute a perpetual bar to recovery thereon. The assured kept an iron safe in their storeroom, and kept a set of books consisting of an inventory book showing inventory taken January 5, 1903, an invoice book, a journal, cashbook, and ledger. Account of cash sales from January 5, 1903, to August 17, 1903, was kept in one book. This book being filled, they entered cash sales in the journal from August 17th to September 9th, and thereafter to the time of the fire in a separate cashbook. The defendant concedes that all the books were delivered to it after the fire, except the book showing cash sales from January 5th to August 17th. The failure to deliver this book is the point relied on as in violation of the iron-safe clause. The plaintiff Joseph A. Mc-Millan, managing partner, and the clerk, John McMillan, testified that the last time they saw this book it was in the safe where it was usually kept. Joseph McMillan testified that after the fire the books were taken from the safe and deposited in the Bank of Mullins, and were delivered to the adjuster of defendant on December 31, 1903; that until the adjuster called his attention to the absence of entry of cash sales from January 5th to August 17th he thought he had delivered all the books to the adjuster. A. L. De Rossett, the adjuster, testified that no such cashbook was ever delivered to him; that Jos. A. McMillan told him that it was destroyed in the fire, and gave him an affidavit to that effect on February 20, 1903, which was introduced in evidence. Thus an issue was raised for the jury as to whether such cashbook was ever in the hands of the adjuster. On this point, the court charged, in effect, that, if plaintiff did have a complete set of books and turned them over to the adjuster, that was a compliance with the policy. It is contended that there was error in this charge, as there was no evidence on such issue. The charge was correct as a matter of course, and as there was some evidence tending to show that the book was not in use at the time of the fire, and was last seen in the safe where it was usually kept by those in charge of it, and that the books in the safe after the fire were delivered to the adjuster, it was for the jury to say whether the book was delivered to the adjuster, or was destroyed in the fire.

In this connection, it is relevant to notice the exception which complains that the court erred in charging: "If you find from the evidence that the books were actually kept and securely locked in an iron safe, then the law raises the presumption that having once been in the safe they continued there, unless it be shown that they were taken out, on the general rule that, where any state of facts is shown to be in existence, the law presumes that that state of facts continues until it is shown that it has been changed." As is manifest that an inanimate object like a book would remain in an iron safe where it was securely locked until removed by some agency, we fail to see how the charge could be prejudicial to appellant. Under this charge, if the jury should accept the adjuster's statement that the cashbook in question was not delivered to him by McMillan, and should accept McMillan's statement that he delivered to the adjuster all the books found in the safe after the fire, nothing in the safe having been destroyed by the fire, then the inevitable inference would be that the book was not in the safe at the time of the fire. But, on the other hand, if the jury should accept the statement of the McMillans that the book was last seen by them in the safe before the fire, and there is nothing in the circumstances to indicate removal by accident or design before the fire, then the necessary inference would be that the book was in the safe at the time of the fire, and if nothing in the safe was destroyed by the fire, and if McMillan delivered to the adjuster all the books in the safe after the fire, the inference would be that the cashbook was delivered to the adjuster. The statement of Joseph McMillan to the adjuster, during the negotiations for a settlement, that the book was destroyed in the fire, and his affidavit to that effect on February 20th, drawn by the adjuster, may have been regarded by the jury as the mere expression of McMillan's opinion or belief that such was the only way he could account for the absence of the book if he did not deliver it to the adjuster, for, at folio 227 of the brief on the trial of the second-named case above, the adjuster testified that McMillan said "he presumed the book got burned." But if the statement of McMillan to the adjuster was meant to convey the idea that he actually knew that the book was destroyed in the fire while out of the safe, still it was for the jury to decide between the truth of that statement and his positive testimony on the stand that he last saw the book in the safe.

In the first-named case, the court, in part, instructed the jury: "If you find that they substantially complied with that provision, so that the defendant has not been either defrauded or put to any disadvantage in its efforts to ascertain the truth in reference to the character and condition of the property at the time of the fire, and should find that the plaintiffs, acting in good faith, even though there might accidentally by some possibility have been a defect, and some book or paper was missing, not by plaintiff's design, but as the result of accident, and yet that the plaintiffs furnished to the defendant all the evidence, from information, that such a part of their set of books would have furnished, so that the defendant was not put at any disadvantage, and that the loss of the book or paper was not through the fault of the plaintiffs, then that would amount to a substantial compliance with that clause of the policy." And in the second-named case the jury were instructed: "A substantial compliance with that (iron-safe clause) is required, and if by chance, by accident, there should apparently be a failure to comply with that provision, if by accident some book, or some of the books, should be lost without any design on the part of the parties insured, if there still remains the means to ascertain accurately and fully the value of the stock, so that the insurance company has suffered no disadvantage by reason of the loss, that loss would not amount to a violation of the policy."

These and other extracts from the charge on this subject are made the basis of several exceptions, but a consideration of the foregoing will involve all that is material on this branch of the charge. The object of the iron-safe clause is to secure the means of showing with reasonable ease and certainty the extent of the loss by fire destroying the stock of merchandise, and it serves to protect the insurance company against an ignorant or fraudulent overestimate of the loss by the assured. The law, however, does not require a strict literal compliance with this clause by the assured, but is satisfied by a substantial compliance which reasonably meets the end in view. Liverpool, etc., Ins. Co. v. Kearney, 180 U. S. 132, 21 Sup. Ct. 327, 45 L. Ed. 460; Western Assurance Co. v. Redding, 68 Fed. 708, 15 C. C. A. 619; Western Assurance Co. v. McGlathery, 115 Ala. 213, 22 South. 104, 67 Am. St. Rep. 26; North British & Mercantile Ins. Co. v. Edmundson, 104 Va. 486, 52 S. E. 350. In 19 Cyc. 167, cases are cited to support the text that, "if the insured has complied with the requirements by taking an inventory and keeping books, the fact that some of such books were destroyed will not invalidate the policy, where the missing information is supplied by other satisfactory means." We do not construe the charge under consideration to mean, as contended by appellant, that a failure to comply substantially with this clause would not defeat the policy if the loss was the result, not of design, but of accident. We think it clear that a failure to substantially comply with the iron-safe clause would defeat the policy, in the absence of a waiver, whether the result of design or negligence. The court was endeavoring to convey to the jury his view of what would constitute substantial compliance, and the charge must be construed with reference to the testimony touching compliance. It was not denied that plaintiff fully complied with all the requirements of the clause in question, except as to one disputed particular, whether there was a failure to produce the book showing cash sales for a part of the time covered by the policy. The charge, therefore, had reference to this alleged deficiency alone. The vital question was whether there could be a substantial compliance in the absence of the missing cashbook. The import of the charge thus considered was that if the loss of this cashbook, or the failure to produce it, was accidental, and not the result of design or fault, and there still remained the means to ascertain accurately and fully the value of the stock, so that the insurance company would suffer no disadvantage by reason of the loss, there would be a substantial compliance. As the policy does not require any particular set of books or any particular method of bookkeeping, that which would enable one of average skill and intelligence in such matters to make a reasonably accurate estimate of the extent of the loss would answer every purpose of the stipulation. The policy further permits books to be kept out of the safe in some place not exposed to a fire which would destroy the building in which the business was being conducted. From this it must result that if the books and inventory kept in the safe, together with books kept elsewhere, would furnish to a person with average intelligence the data for a fair estimate of the loss, the terms of the policy would be substantially met, even though some particular book of the set kept in the safe should be missing. To this extent there is no reasonable ground to doubt the general correctness and applicability of the charge. In this case the insured supplied the information contained in the missing book by reference to the expense account, as shown by the books remaining in the safe, and the cash deposit account of plaintiffs as shown by the books kept by the Bank of Mullins, with testimony that it was plaintiffs' custom to make deposit in the bank of the daily cash sales, less such items for expenses as were paid out during the day. By this method the cash sales from January 5th to August 17th were shown to be $1,609.16.

Was it proper to submit to the jury under the instructions to determine whether there was a substantial compliance with the policy? We think so. Under a strict and literal construction, this would not be a compliance, as the book of the Bank of Mullins was not a book kept by the assured in their business as merchants; but, under a liberal construction with a view to substantial justice between the parties to this contract of indemnity, the plaintiffs' cash deposit account kept by the Bank of Mullins for the mutual benefit of the bank and its depositors afforded, in connection with the expense account shown by plaintiffs' books and custom of plaintiffs making their deposits, a reasonably accurate and satisfactory means of showing cash sales by book entries. Insurance Co. v. Hefflin (Ky.) 60 S. W. 393. The jury, under the charge, must have been satisfied of the accuracy of this method, and that defendant suffered no disadvantage thereby. The fact that some parol testimony was necessary to make the showing by book entries complete is not a fatal objection, as under any ordinary system of bookkeeping some reliance must be placed upon parol testimony in explanation to show stock on hand at any particular time, for in every case such factors as appreciation or depreciation of invoice price of stock, the rate of profit on cash and credit sales, the honesty and accuracy of the bookkeeper, must be taken into account.

The defendant's adjuster arrived at Mullins on December 30 or 31, 1903, after information as to the fire, and on December 31, 1903, the parties entered into what is known as the nonwaiver agreement, which stipulates: "That any action, inquiry, investigation, or examination undertaken by the said parties of the second part in investigating, developing, or determining the cause, origin, or spread of the fire, occasioning the damage, if any, suffered by said loss claimant, or in investigating or ascertaining the amount, nature or extent of the said loss and damage, if any, to the property of the parties of the first part, caused by fire alleged to have occurred on the 27th day of December, 1903, to property situated in Mullins, county of Marion, state of South Carolina, shall not in any manner or to any extent whatsoever admit the liability of the parties of the second part for said loss, or waive, avoid, or invalidate any of the conditions, exceptions, or forfeitures of the policies of the parties of the second part, held by the parties of the first part, and shall not waive, avoid, or invalidate any rights, known or unknown, or any privilege or exemption from liability by either of the parties to this agreement. The purpose of this agreement is to preserve without estoppel, waiver, or forfeiture, the rights of all parties hereto, and provide for and permit an impartial and full investigation of the alleged fire, and the just determination of the amount of loss or damage, if any, without regard to or admission of any liability of the parties of the second part."

With respect to this agreement, the court, at request of appellant, charged: "A written paper styled nonwaiver agreement has been introduced in evidence. If you find in this cause that the plaintiff and the defendant company, through its adjuster, before anything was done towards adjusting the loss here sued on, entered into the nonwaiver agreement above mentioned, then I charge you that the legal effect of such nonwaiver agreement is such that nothing done after its signature in or about the investigating of said loss or ascertaining the amount of the stock or of the loss would operate as a waiver of any of the rights of either party, either plaintiff or defendant, or as a waiver of any of the terms of the policy sued, or as any waiver of any forfeiture or violation of its terms, if you find that any such forfeiture or violation had taken place." In connection with this charge, the court instructed the jury that a nonwaiver agreement may itself be waived by express agreement or by acts or conduct.

The appellant excepts to this last instruction as a mere abstract proposition, inapplicable and prejudicial, as there was no testimony tending to show such waiver. It is not, and cannot be, disputed that the nonwaiver agreement could be waived, as it would be unreasonable to give more potency and sanctity to such an incidental agreement than to the principal agreement. The policy itself contains nonwaiver agreements. In one place it is stipulated that the company "shall not be held to have waived any provision or condition of the policy, or any forfeiture thereof by any agreement, act or proceeding on its part relating to the appraisal or any examination herein provided for," and in another place that "no officer, agent, or other representative of the company shall have power to waive any provision or condition of the policy except such as by the terms of the policy may be the subject of agreement indorsed hereon or added hereto, and to such provisions and conditions no officer, agent or representative shall have such power or be deemed or held to have waived such provisions or conditions unless waiver, if any shall be written upon or attached hereto, nor shall any privilege or permission affecting the insurance under this policy exist or be claimed by the insured unless so written or attached."

Notwithstanding such provisions in the policy, the law is well settled in this state that an insurance company waives the forfeiture if, with knowledge of the facts constituting forfeiture, the policy is delivered as a valid contract. Pelzer Mfg. Co. v. Sun Fire Office Co., 36 S. C. 273, 15 S. E. 562; Gandy v. Insurance Co., 52 S. C. 228, 29 S. E. 655; Madden & Co. v. Insurance Co., 70 S. C. 303, 49 S. E. 855; Doyle v. Hill, 75 S. C. 263, 55 S. E. 446; Fludd v. Assurance Society, 75 S. C. 320, 55 S. E. 762. It is also well settled that a forfeiture is waived if, with knowledge of the facts showing forfeiture, the insurance company requires the insured to do some act or incur some trouble or expense inconsistent with the position that the contract had become inoperative by breach of a condition. Kingman v. Insurance Co., 54 S. C. 603, 32 S. E. 762. The same rule applies with reference to alleged forfeiture under contract with a telegraph company. Hays v. Tel. Co., 70 S. C. 16, 48 S. E. 608, 67 L. R. A. 481, 106 Am. St. Rep. 731. Applying the same test to the nonwaiver agreement, we think there was evidence which made it proper to submit the whole question of waiver to the jury. There was evidence that the books were examined by the adjuster, and the absence of cash entries from January 5th to August 17th was discovered, soon after the delivery of the books on December 31st. McMillan testified that the adjuster made no claim that such deficiency worked a forfeiture, but, on the contrary, the evidence shows that the adjuster, notwithstanding this knowledge, proceeded with the attempted adjustment by requiring the plaintiffs to procure certified invoices. The adjuster returned to Mullins on February 20th after notice from plaintiffs that they had procured the invoices, and, with full knowledge that the books failed to show said cash sales, he procured from a plaintiff Jos. A. McMillan an affidavit in which the sales for the period named were estimated at $1,640. McMillan testified that when he signed that paper he was trying to come to a settlement of the amount of the loss by the fire, that the adjuster told him he could not make proof of loss without having some agreement about it, and requested him to make an estimate of the cash sales. Plaintiff further testified that, when the adjuster left on February 20th, he promised to return the following Wednesday, but did not do so. This was certainly some evidence of conduct on the part of the company incorsistent with the idea that the absence of the cashbook would be regarded as a forfeiture of the policy.

The foregoing conclusions render it necessary to overrule the exceptions in each case.

The judgment of the circuit court in each of the above-named cases is affirmed.

WOODS, J. I dissent on the ground that there was no evidence of waiver of the non-waiver agreement. All the acts relied on to constitute waiver of this contract were done after the execution of the contract in investigating the nature and extent of the loss, and were expressly covered by the nonwaiver agreement.

(62 W. Va. 154)

STATE v. JOHNSON.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.)

Dissenting opinion.

For former opinion, see 57 S. E. 371.

POFFENBARGER, J. (dissenting). Believing the parties to the contract of sale, in the first instance, were Stone and Johnson, and that there was a subsequent sale by Johnson to Midkiff and Adkins, and not merely one sale by Stone to Johnson, Midkiff, and Adkins, I am constrained to dissent from the opinion and decision in this case. The whisky was Stone's. He consigned and shipped it to Johnson. Whether he knew Johnson is immaterial. He knew of him. In some way he had ascertained that there was such a man, and he offered to sell him the whisky for $2. He made no offer to either Midkiff or Adkins. Nobody but Stone could have changed his offer of sale to Johnson, so as to make it an offer of sale to Johnson, Midkiff, and Adkins. The offer was accepted without any modification, and the whisky delivered in execution of the contract of sale. Legally viewed, as it must be, this effectuated a sale from Stone to Johnson, notwithstanding the participation of Midkiff and Adkins in the transaction. These two strangers obtained part of the whisky, and, in legal contemplation, they obtained it from Johnson, and not from Stone. The legal test as to what constitutes a sale governs. State v. Flanagan, 38 W. Va. 53, 17 S. E. 792, 22 L. R. A. 430, 45 Am. St. Rep. 836; Morganstern v. Commonwealth, 27 Grat. (Va.) 1018. The distinction between the legal and practical test in construing statutes, and especially revenue statutes, must be observed. Harvey Coal & Coke Co. v. Dillon, 59 W. Va. 605, 53 S. E. 928, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 628; State v. Graybeal (W. Va.) 55 S. E. 398. No doubt Johnson, Midkiff, and Adkins, viewing the matter from the standpoint of laymen, thought they three jointly were purchasing from Stone, but this was a legal impossibility, without the concurrence of Stone as the seller, and there is no evidence that he consented to the inclusion of Midkiff and Adkins as purchasers. Mere ignorance of the law on the part of Johnson, as to what constitutes a sale, could not excuse him, and his intention is immaterial, for the question on which the soundness of the decision turns is the construction of the statute. What he did brought him within the letter of the statute, and as the plain object of our statutes, regulating the liquor traffic, is to prevent all sales except those made by persons specially licensed therefor, to the end that the revenues of the state may be augmented by the license tax, and the right of sale limited to persons deemed suitable by the license court, when authorized, and entirely prohibited when the license court, in the exercise of its discretionary power, sees fit not to authorize any sales to be made, he was likewise within the spirit of the statute. To allow a consignment to one person in a community, to become a means of sale, in a practical sense, to several persons, will necessarily work a great inroad upon our system of law, ordained for the regulation of the liquor traffic, and open the door for wide and serious evasion thereof.

58 S.E.—65

(62 W. Va. 223)

WALTON v. KNIGHT et al.*

(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
May 22, 1907.)

1. EASEMENTS — RIGHT OF WAY — PRESCRIPTION.

A private right of way by prescription may be acquired over another's land by visible, continuous, and uninterrupted use thereof for 10 years, under a bona fide claim of right, with the acquiescence of the owner.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 17, Easements, §§ 27-33.]

2. SAME—ACQUIESCENCE OF OWNER—PRESUMPTIONS.

Such use is presumed to be with the knowledge and acquiescence of the owner and to prima facie give the right, which presumption will be conclusive, unless accompanied by the protest and objection of the owner under such circumstances as to repel it.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 17, Easements, § 89.]

3. SAME—BONA FIDES.

When there has been such use of another's land for the period requisite to create an easement by prescription, the bona fides of the claim of right is established.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 17, Easements, §§ 27, 28.]

4. SAME—UNINCLOSED LANDS.

Such right of way may be acquired as well over uninclosed and uncultivated land as over land inclosed by visible fence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 17, Easements, § 32.]

5. SAME—ROUTE—DEVIATIONS.

While, as a general rule, the right thus acquired must be confined to one definite route between the same termini, such right will not be lost by occasional variations from the route to avoid muddy or worn places therein.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 17, Easements, § 31.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

*Rehearing denied October 17, 1907.

Appeal from Circuit Court, Greenbrier County.

Suit by Minnie M. Walton against James Knight and others. From a decree in favor of plaintiff, defendants' appeal. Affirmed.

John W. Arbuckle, for appellants. Williams & Dice, for appellee.

MILLER, J. The parties plaintiff and defendant own contiguous tracts of land in Greenbrier county; each consisting of about 400 acres, parts of an original survey of 800 acres, both traversed by Spring creek, and the plaintiff's land being the part lying back of that owned by the defendants, whose land lies between that of the plaintiff and the county road. The land owned by the defendants passed from William Hanna, the original patentee of the 800 acres, to Albert Hanna, who in December, 1849, conveyed the same to Andrew McCoy, who in October, 1855, conveyed it to Andrew Knight, the father of the defendants. The bill alleges, and the answer denies, that the plaintiff owns a right of way as appurtenant to her farm over a portion of the land of the defendants about 300 yards in length, passing from the west side of her land down the northern side of Spring creek a short distance, thence across said creek to intersect the public road leading from Dry Run to Falling Spring; that she and those under whom she claims have used said way for travel by vehicles, hauling, walking, and riding for at least 35 years prior to the institution of this suit, continuously, uninterruptedly and adversely, without obstruction or permission from any one; that it is the only practicable way she has for travel from said farm to the public road; that within the past few months the defendants have caused said right of way to be ploughed up and fence posts to be set in the ground across the same for the purpose of completely obstructing it; and she prays for an injunction and for general relief.

It has been held by this court that such a right of way may be acquired by grant, express or implied, or by prescription; that a private right of way may be acquired by prescriptions by the visible, continuous, and uninterrupted use thereof for 20 years under a bona fide claim of right. Boyd v. Woolwine, 40 W. Va. 283, 21 S. E. 1020; Rogerson v. Shepherd, 33 W. Va. 307, 10 S. E. 632. To the same effect are Stokes v. Appomattox Co., 3 Leigh (Va.) 318; Coalter v. Hunter, 4 Rand. 58, 15 Am. Dec. 726. In Wooldridge v. Coughlin, 46 W. Va. 345, 33 S. E. 233, this court held that the use of a private way for 10 years with the acquiescence of the owner will confer a right thereto, unless denied; that such user is without more taken to be with his acquiescence and knowledge, and prima facie gives the right; but that if it appears that the user is against his protest, and he denies the right, it cannot become vested from time of user—citing Field v.

Brown, 24 Grat. (Va.) 74; Nichols v. Ayler, 7 Leigh (Va.) 546; Washb. Easem. 86, 111. In Worrall v. Rhoads, 2 Whart. (Pa.) 427, 30 Am. Dec. 274, it is said a grant of a right of way will be presumed from the uninterrupted enjoyment thereof for 21 years, and that such presumption applies to a way over uninclosed land, whether clear or woodland. In Garrett v. Jackson, 20 Pa. 331, it is held that where one uses a road whenever he chooses over the land of another, without leave or objection, the use is adverse, and, if uninterrupted for 21 years, gives an indisputable title to that enjoyment; that such enjoyment, without evidence as to how it began, is presumed to have been in pursuance of a grant, and the burden of showing the contrary lies on the owner of the land.

Some confusion may arise from the language used in our decisions as to the time required to establish title to a way by prescription. In Boyd v. Woolwine, supra, it is held to be 20 years; but in Wooldridge v. Coughlin, supra, 10 years. The natural inquiry is, why this difference, and what is the time essential? It is evident, from the authorities cited, that the court was referring in the former case to the common-law rule, and in the latter to our present statute of limitations. "By judicial construction an adverse user of an easement for the period mentioned in the statutes (of limitations), as they were passed from time to time, became evidence of a prescriptive right." Jones, Easem. § 161; Railroad Co. v. McFarlan, 43 N. J. Law, 605, 617. "Such adverse user must have existed for a period equal at least to that prescribed by the statute of limitations for acquiring title to land by adverse possession." Jones, Easem. § 164; In Lucas v. Turnpike Co., 36 W. Va. 427, 437, 15 S. E. 182, 185, the court quotes with apparent approval Goddard on Easements: "Without minutely stating here the local statutes of limitations as to adverse user, it may be safely asserted that no less period will suffice, and no greater will be required, in fixing the requisite length of enjoyment to gain a right to an easement in land by prescription than to acquire the land itself by adverse occupation. This element of duration is therefore comparatively simple."

What is the nature of this presumption of title arising from such use of another's land is a question about which there has been a diversity of opinion. It is generally supposed to rest upon the fiction of a lost grant; not, however, because even the court or a jury is to believe the presumed grant, but because public policy and convenience require that such long-continued use be not disturbed. Jones on Easem. § 161, says that the fiction of a lost grant seems to have been originally invented to avoid the rule of pleading requiring proof, quoting from Railroad Co. v. McFarlan, supra. Jones says (section 162): "The weight of authority is that such presumption is conclusive, as a matter of law."

that the use of the easement was adverse and under a claim of right, in the absence of circumstances indicating the contrary; and, moreover, such enjoyment of the right affords a conclusive presumption of the right." And, quoting from Railroad Co. v. McFarlan, Jones says in the same section: "When the fiction of a lost grant was devised, there arose considerable diversity and fluctuation in judicial opinions as to whether an uninterrupted user for the period of limitation conferred a legal right, or raised merely a presumption of title which would stand good until the presumption was overcome by evidence which negatived in the judgment of juries the existence of a grant. This state of the law produced great insecurity to titles by prescription, and subjected such rights to the whim and caprice of juries. This evil was remedied by the later English authorities, which gave to the presumption of title arising from an uninterrupted enjoyment of 20 years the most unshaken stability, and made it conclusive evidence of a right. * * * In this country the prevailing doctrine is that an exclusive and uninterrupted enjoyment for 20 years creates a presumption, juris et de jure, and is conclusive evidence of title whenever, by possibility, a right may be acquired by grant."

But this court, in its decisions above referred to, and the court of Virginia, seem committed to the doctrine that such user for the statutory period raises only a prima facie presumption of a grant which may be repelled. Judge Brannon, in Wooldridge v. Coughlin, supra, says: "The flight of the long time requisite to vest the right under the old law afforded a conclusive presumption that there had been an express grant of the easement, its evidence lost by the tooth of time, and no proof that it never existed could be heard; whereas, under the new rule, user for the statutory period raises only a prima facie presumption of a grant, which may be repelled. * * * To establish a right of way under the modern law, it must appear that it has been exercised for the statutory period, with the acquiescence of the owner over whose land the way is claimed"—citing the Virginia cases. The test of our decisions seems to be that the use must be visible, continuous, and uninterrupted for the statutory period, under a bona fide claim of right. We may inquire: What is such bona fide claim of right? In Beils v. Railway Co., 49 W. Va. 65, 69, 38 S. E. 497, it is indicated that such right may originate and have its commencement in trespass. In Garrett v. Jackson, supra, it is said that passage by one over land of another, with special permission of the owner on every occasion, will not raise the presumption of a grant, no matter how often it may occur or how long continued; but that use of an easement at pleasure, without leave or objection, is adverse, and if uninterrupted for 21 years gives indisputable title. In Worrall v.

Rhoads, 2 Whart. (Pa.) 427, 30 Am. Dec. 274, it is said: "In the absence of evidence tending to show that such long-continued use of the way may be referred to a license, or other special indulgence that is either revocable or terminable, the conclusion is that it has grown out of a grant by the owner of the land, and has been exercised under a title thus derived. The law favors this conclusion, because it will not presume any man's act to be illegal. It is also reasonable to suppose that the owner of the land would not have acquiesced in such enjoyment for so long a period, when it was his interest to have interrupted it, unless he felt conscious that the party enjoying it had a right and a title to it that could and ought not to be defeated. And, besides, seeing it can work no prejudice to any one excepting to him who has been guilty of great negligence, to say the least of it, public policy and convenience require that this presumption should be made, in order to promote the public peace and quiet men in their possession." Whenever, therefore, there has been such use for a long period, the bona fides of the claim of right is established, and the owner of the servient estate must rebut the presumption of right, by showing leave or license from him, or protest and objection under such circumstances as to repel the presumption.

It is conceded by the defendants here that the plaintiff and her predecessors have used a way over their land, though with some variation, continuously for more than 35 years; but they combat the presumption of right upon three different grounds:

First, they claim that prior to the Civil War their land over which the way is claimed was inclosed by fence and cultivated; that prior to that time the owners of the plaintiff's land used the creek bed as a right of way. But this does not account for the subsequent use, nor defeat the present claim. That during the War the fences were torn down and the land thrown out into the common and traveled over by the owners of plaintiff's land and others is no sufficient defense to her claim of right. In Worrall v. Rhoads, supra, the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania says that: "There seems to be no reason for making any distinction between the legal effect of a person occupying for the space of 21 years a way over the clear land of another which is inclosed by a visible fence, and his clear or woodland that is uninclosed, or inclosed merely by an ideal one; for all are considered as inclosed by the law, and the owner is entitled to be protected in the quiet, exclusive, and undisturbed enjoyment of the latter description of land as much and to as great an extent as in that of the former. * * * Such an occupation of a way over either is equally opposed to the absolute right and dominion of the owner over his land." And in Jones on Easem. § 297, the author says: "Such an easement may as well be exercised over an open and uncultivated field as upon one substantially inclosed and usually cultivated. Indeed, inclosure and cultivation would most likely be derogatory to the free exercise of a right of way."

Second, an attempt is made to show that such use of defendants' land was permissive, for the accommodation of the plaintiff and those who preceded her; but the evidence is entirely wanting of any proof of such permission. The bill alleges continuous, uninterrupted, and adverse use without any obstruction or permission. The defendants in their answer say such use was not under any claim of an easement over their land, but was a matter of sufferance by them and those under whom they claim. The answer does not say it was a permissive use, nor that there was a leave or license given, or any interruption or objection by them or their predecessors. R. E. Hanna, a witness for the plaintiff, resided with his father, Albert Hanna, on the plaintiff's land from about 1853 to 1872. He says he has known the way in controversy for at least 40 years. He further says: "We hauled over it some, and we traveled over it horseback and afoot and any way we had to travel. We traveled over it in all the ways that people travel over a road." That he has been over the road recently, and thinks it is about the same place it was when he lived there. That neither his father nor any member of his family, to his knowledge, ever asked permission of any one to use said road. H. W. Knight, another witness for the plaintiff, who lived on and had charge of the defendants' land from 1876 until 1903, gives testimony to the continued use of this way by the plaintiff and her predecessors during that time, substantially on its present location. He says: "No change, with one exception: There was a mud hole formed in a low place in the bottom. In order to get around that mud hole, some one broke a track through the elders for a short distance round the mud hole and back to the original track again." There is much other testimony of the same character. Opposed to this testimony of the plaintiff's witnesses, the defendants offer James C. McCoy, who says he lived on the land owned by the defendants with his father in 1849 or 1850. For how long he does not definitely state, but the record shows that his father conveyed this land to Andrew Knight October 28, 1855. He says when his father owned the defendants' land he had it inclosed and cultivated it in corn. He gives no testimony as to any permission by his father to use the right of way. This witness was employed by the defendants as a surveyor to make a plat of the different ways they claim were used over their land by the plaintiff and others. When asked on cross-examination how long he had known the road claimed by the plaintiff to have been used by the owners and occupiers of the Walton land, he says: "I left the Knight farm when I was about 13 years old, and it was several years after we left there before I was back there, and I did not pay any attention to the roads. Since the War that road has been traveled up through the bottom there." And he admitted that he had traveled this road himself in going to the Walton house from the public road. There is absolutely no proof of any permissive right, or of any objection or protest by the defendants or by former owners of their lands. Jones on Easem. § 283, lays down the rule that a right of way may be acquired by prescription, although the use began under a mere license or verbal consent, provided the other requisites of a prescriptive right exist; that is, the user must have been exercised under a claim of right for the full prescriptive period, with the knowledge and acquiescence of the owner of the servient estate, under circumstances showing the user to be adverse.

Third, the defense is made that the way over the defendants' land was not confined to any one particular route, and no defined and exclusive way was acquired. There was evidence showing occasional use of the creek bottom; that occasionally the plaintiff and her predecessors varied somewhat from the usual and beaten path; that at the public road they made short turns; that at one point on the way there was a slough and mud hole in the road, and to avoid the mud the plaintiff traveled around them. But with all this evidence, the court found, upon the uncontradicted testimony considered with that which was conflicting, that the plaintiff had acquired and was entitled to a right of way over defendants' land as set out by definite description in the decree of the court. We cannot say this finding was contrary to the law and the evidence. Jones on Easem. § 296, says: "A right of way may be acquired by user, though between the termini the person claiming the right has at different times taken several different routes to avoid muddy and worn places in the route previously used. Such temporary variance of the way does not destroy it." There was evidence in this case that other persons besides the plaintiff used different routes in crossing defendants' land. Jones says (same section): "To show that one claiming a right of way by prescription had not confined himself to a definite route, it is not competent to prove that other persons had gone over the land in different directions, and that the place where they traveled was for the time being the way for such persons, and for the claimant of the right of way. The acts of strangers could not defeat or qualify his right."

For the reasons stated, we affirm the decree of the circuit court.

(61 W. Va. 489)

DENT v. PICKENS et al.(Supreme Court of Appeals of West Virginia.
March 12, 1907.)1. APPEAL—PROCEEDINGS FOR TRANSFER OF CAUSE—PROCESS—WAIVER.

Where an appellee appears by two or more counsel, who file briefs on the merits of the cause, and by letter to the clerk join in requesting a submission of the cause, service of appellate process will be treated as waived, although one of the counsel in his brief may present the question of such want of service.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 2, Appeal and Error, §§ 2168-2172.]

2. SAME—PRESENTATION OF QUESTIONS IN LOWER COURT—MOTIONS—NECESSITY.

Where, in a suit against a devisee and others to have sold to pay liens a greater interest in land than was devised to him, co-devisees remotely interested therein by executory devise over in default, at his death, of living children or issue of such children, are made defendants solely for the purpose of having said will construed against their contingent interest in said land, and who appear and by their demurrer overruled challenge as matter of law the right of the plaintiff to any relief against them, and, on default of answer by them, final decree is pronounced that said devisee took by said devise such greater interest, and directing a sale thereof to pay said liens, such final decree is not a decree by default precluding such co-devisees from an appeal without motion in the circuit court to correct the error therein against them, provided by section 6, c. 134, Code 1899 [Code 1906, § 4037]; such error being necessarily involved in the decree overruling their demurrer to the bill.

3. WILLS—CONSTRUCTION—ESTATE CONVEYED.

A will making specific devises of lands to children and grandchildren of the testator by the tenth item gave to his son D. P. a tract of 396 $\frac{1}{4}$  acres, charging it, however, with \$2,000 in favor of his personal estate; and, after making said specific devises, by the eleventh item provided: "All the lands hereinbefore devised to my said children and grandchildren \* \* \* are to be taken and held by them subject to the following limitation—that is to say, that if any of my said children or grandchildren hereinbefore mentioned shall die without children, or the lawful issue of such children, living at the time of his or her death, or born within ten months thereafter, then in that case the lands herein devised to such child or grandchild so dying without such children, or the lawful issue of such children, living at the time of his or her death, or born within ten months thereafter, shall descend to each of my surviving children and the lawful issue of my deceased children and grandchildren, the descendants of each of my deceased children and grandchildren taking the portion which my deceased child or grandchild would take if living at the time of such death." Held, that at the death of the testator the said D. P. took a defeasible estate in fee in said 396 $\frac{1}{4}$  acres, with an estate limited thereon, by executory devise to the other persons described in said eleventh item of the will.

4. SAME—GENERAL RULES OF CONSTRUCTION.

Words of survivorship contained in a will will be construed according to their usual and common acceptance, unless a different meaning plainly appears to have been intended thereby; and will be referred to the event plainly intended to accomplish the purposes of the testator, whether that event be before, at the time of, or after the death of the testator.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Appeal from Circuit Court, Barbour County.

Action by Susan C. Dent against Dever Pickens and others. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendants John D. Pickens and another appeal. Reversed and remanded. See 53 S. E. 164.

John Bassel, for appellants. Haymond Maxwell and J. Hop Woods, for appellee.

MILLER, J. This case has been several times before this court upon appeals prosecuted by one or more of the parties from decrees of the circuit court. A clear understanding of the entire case may be obtained by referring to the published decisions of this court on those appeals, beginning with 34 W. Va. 240, 12 S. E. 698, 26 Am. St. Rep. 921. This is an appeal by John D. Pickens, a brother of Dever Pickens, and by May Pickens Davisson, his niece and a daughter of his deceased brother, Alexander H. Pickens, co-devisees with others under the will of the late James Pickens, from the decree of the circuit court pronounced on the 23d day of February, 1905. Other appeals from this decree have heretofore been disposed of as follows: The first by A. G. Dayton and others, decided March 13, 1906; the second by Susan C. Dent, the plaintiff, decided at the present term of court on the 28th day of January, 1907 (not officially reported).<sup>1</sup> The present appellant John D. Pickens was a co-petitioner with A. G. Dayton and others in the first appeal from said decree; but, as that appeal was limited by the order of this court awarding it to certain specified matters assigned as errors in said decree, the present appellants were, by an order of this court of March 6, 1906, as modified by a subsequent order of March 8, 1906, on their joint petition allowed an appeal from so much of said decree as adjudged that by said will an estate in fee simple indefeasible became vested in said Dever Pickens in the 396 $\frac{1}{4}$  acres devised to him, and adjudging the same to be sold to pay the liens of plaintiff and others thereon. That portion of the decree of the circuit court referred to is as follows: "And the court, proceeding further to pass upon and determine under said third amended bill the true estate of the defendant Dever Pickens, under the will of his father, James Pickens, deceased, in and to the 396 $\frac{1}{4}$  acres of land involved herein devised to him thereunder, is of opinion, and doth adjudge, order, and decree, that he the said defendant, Dever Pickens, having survived the testator his said father and having lawful issue of two children, the infant defendants Coburn Pickens and Paul Pickens, still living, born of the marriage of said Dever Pickens and the defendant Minnie Coburn Pickens, has by reason thereof, and the true construction of said will, and the intention of the testator, said James Pickens, deceased, thereunder, an indefeasible estate in fee simple therein." This decree shows that the cause was heard upon the former pleadings and proceedings, upon a report of Geo. M. Kittle, commissioner in chancery, filed on the 18th day of May, 1903, with three exceptions indorsed thereon, and particularly upon the third amended bill of the plaintiff, filed at April rules, 1904, upon demurrer of the defendants thereto (overruled by the court), and upon the answers of some of said defendants (not including any answer by the present appellants so far as the record shows).

<sup>1</sup> Rehearing pending.

The point is made in the brief of counsel for the appellee that she is not before this court upon any process issued or served upon her, or upon any appearance by her to this appeal, and that, to save her rights in respect thereto if necessary, she appears here only for the purpose of taking advantage thereof. What the necessity here suggested is we do not quite comprehend. If by this saving it is meant to save this point only in the event of a decision adverse to her, we do not think the point should prevail. Notwithstanding this point, counsel has proceeded to discuss the case on its merits in quite an able and elaborate brief. We find, however, by reference to the papers in the cause in the clerk's office of this court, that, as a matter of fact, no process regularly issued upon this appeal. We do find, however, that copies of the order allowing the appeal were mailed at their request to counsel in the case; and it seems to have been understood between the clerk and counsel that no formal process was to issue. Aside from this, other counsel for the appellee appeared and filed a brief in the case in June, 1906, without suggestion of want of process; and there is a letter from him on file in the clerk's office, as well as from counsel for the appellants, asking that the case be submitted to the court upon the briefs filed. We think this is sufficient appearance of parties to amount to a waiver of process, and we so hold.

Counsel for the plaintiff, in one of the briefs filed, makes the point that the appellants, having failed to answer the third amended bill, or to make any motion in the court below to correct the errors now complained of, have, by section 6, c. 134, Code 1899 [Code 1906, § 4037], no standing in this court upon this appeal. The record will show that the original bill did not put in issue the quality of the estate of Dever Pickens in the 396 $\frac{1}{4}$  acres. In the first amended bill the plaintiff charged that his interest in said 396 $\frac{1}{4}$  acres under the will of his father was a defeasible estate, and that the same was wholly insufficient to pay the plaintiff's judgment. In the second amended bill the plaintiff reaffirmed in extenso all the material allegations of her original and first amended bills. The prayer of this second amended bill, among other things, was that his interest in the real estate therein mentioned might be ascertained and subjected to the plaintiff's judgment and execution. In the third or last amended bill, the plaintiff has taken a different position with respect to the quality of said estate. After setting out the provisions of said will devising said land to said Dever Pickens and the limitations thereon, the plaintiff charges that the said Dever Pickens, having survived the testator and now having lawful issue living—namely, the defendants Coburn Pickens and Paul Pickens, born of his marriage with the defendant Minnie Coburn Pickens—has an absolute estate in fee simple in said land, and that his estate therein became such upon the death of his said testator; and the prayer of this bill, among other things, is that the said will in respect to such estate therein devised to him may be judicially construed and said estate determined. The answer which the appellants' counsel makes to this point in the brief of counsel for the appellee is that John D. Pickens and May Pickens Davison, together with all the other devisees of James Pickens, having been made parties to the third amended bill for the express purpose of having the court adjudicate the question of the estate taken by Dever Pickens under the will, whether a conditional fee or indefeasible fee, and as they would all be bound by any decree rendered in the cause, and all defendants having entered their demurrer to the bill, it is perfectly indifferent whether they filed answers or not. Because, as he claims, when the demurrer was overruled, which raised the same question presented here, that was an adjudication of the entire question as to the character of the estate vested in Dever Pickens, and was not a decree for want of appearance, and therefore it did not require a motion to reverse the decree before an appeal could be taken therefrom.

We are not referred by counsel for either of the parties to any authority upon this important question of practice. In the case of Gates v. Cragg, 11 W. Va. 300, this court corrected an error made by the court below in a decree subsequent to the issuing of the rule on overruling defendant's demurrer, and in default of answer, without any previous motion being made in the court below to correct such error; but, as noted in the case of Watson v. Wiggington, 28 W. Va. 533, 554, this error was clearly independent of those resulting merely from giving effect to the order overruling the demurrer. The case of Gates v. Cragg seems not to have been called to the attention of the court in Steenrod's Adm'r v. Railroad Co., 25 W. Va. 133. In the latter case it was held that a demurrer is an affirmative admission of the allegations of the bill—itself a confession that, if the facts alleged in the bill entitle the plaintiff in law and equity to the relief prayed for, then such relief may be given, and, in order to avoid the effect of this admission, it is imperative that a plea or answer denying or avoiding those allegations be filed before a decree on its merits is entered, and that, when in such cases the demurrer is overruled, the bill stands in the court overruling it precisely as if no demurrer had been entered, and that a subsequent decree is necessarily on bill taken for confessed as it originally stood at rules, and an order entered before the demurrer was filed and overruled. In Watson v. Wiggington, supra, Judge Green says (page 551 of 28 W. Va.): "Further examination has satisfied us that the general principles announced in Steenrod v. Railroad Co. are correct, but that, to avoid mistakes they should be to some extent modified; and, as these principles thus settled conflict with the opinions I expressed in the case in 11 W. Va., I ought to have assigned my reasons for changing my views." And he says: "The controlling reason for the conclusions reached in the case of Gates v. Cragg was that the spirit of the statute law, which we are construing, was to require parties in the court below to seek to correct all errors occurring in an appealable decree, when such decree had been made without any defense on the part of the appellant, by making a motion to correct such errors before taking an appeal to this court and incurring unnecessary expense. This was regarded as just and reasonable, inasmuch as the circuit courts were peculiarly liable to commit errors in entering such decree; they being very often the result of mere inadvertence. Such an error would often be without delay or expense corrected by the court below, if its attention was called to the error by a motion before an appeal was allowed. This I still regard as the obvious purpose of our statute; and it was obviously so regarded by this court when this contrary decision was rendered in Steenrod v. Railroad Co. This distinctly appears from the opinion of the court pronounced by Judge Snyder; and it is abundantly shown by that portion of this opinion hereinbefore quoted. But in carrying out this plain object of our statute this court in the case of Gates v. Cragg (see pages 305, 306, of 11 W. Va.) held that, if the defendant appeared and filed a demurrer, no decree could be rendered against him as on bill taken for confessed; and, if the demurrer is overruled, the court must, as required by the statute, give a rule on the defendant to answer the bill, and, if on the day specified in the rule he fail to appear and answer, the same decree must be entered against him as would before the statute required this rule have been immediately entered when the demurrer was overruled, and such a decree made after the appearance of the defendant and the overruling of his demurrer was regarded as a decree not rendered upon a bill taken for confessed, but as rendered after due consideration of the defendant's objections; and it did not, we considered, come within the spirit of the statute requiring a motion in the court below to correct certain errors before any application for an appeal could be made to the appellate court."

After further commenting upon Steenrod

v. Railroad Co., and discussing some authorities which hold that, although the principles of the cause may be settled by the overruling of the demurrer to the bill, an appeal therefrom cannot be taken until after a decree has been entered carrying into effect these principles, Judge Green says (page 554 of 28 W. Va.): "The truth is this court in Gates v. Cragg failed to note the distinction, which is well pointed out by this court in the case of Steenrod v. Railroad Co., between the cases where the errors complained of by the defendant in his appeal are errors necessarily resulting from the decree erroneously overruling the defendant's demurrer, and the cases where the errors complained of by the appellant, the defendant, include also other errors independent of those resulting from such order overruling the defendant's demurrer. There is to my mind after duly considering the subject a clear distinction between the two cases. In the one the only error complained of in the final decree is an error necessarily resulting from the court's correctly carrying into effect a previous interlocutory order settling the principles of a cause and erroneously overruling the defendant's demurrer to the bill; such final decree, though no answer had been filed, not being a decree on a bill taken for confessed, but really simply a decree on the previous interlocutory order. From such a final decree an appeal lies, though no previous motion has been made in the court below to correct the errors in it. In the other case the appellant complains not only of the error committed in such interlocutory order, but also of errors in the subsequent final decree, which errors are independent of those resulting merely from giving effect to an erroneous order overruling a demurrer to a bill. Such a final decree as this is where no answer has been filed, a decree on a bill taken for confessed, and therefore a decree, which cannot be appealed from, till after a motion has been made in the court below to correct such errors. Referring to the first point of the syllabus of this case for a more succinct statement of the conclusion of Judge Green under the facts stated in the first position, he says: "If he then appealed from such decree solely on the ground that the court could properly render no decree against him on the plaintiff's bill, this court could entertain such an appeal, it being regarded substantially as an appeal from a previous decree overruling a demurrer, which after this decree against him was an appealable decree if it settled the principles of the cause."

Measured by these rules, what is the position of the appellants here? Does the error in the final decree complained of necessarily arise from the error in the decree overruling defendants' demurrer? If so, under these authorities the appeal lies without motion first made in the court below to correct the error, otherwise not. The question is a close one; but, when we consider the facts in this case in connection with the pleadings, we think that the case is within the rule authorizing appeals without previous motion to correct the error under section 6, c. 134, Code 1899 [Code 1906, § 4037]. It will be observed that the appellants are in no wise interested in this litigation, except in so far as it is the purpose, in construing the will of James Pickens, to estop them from hereafter asserting, as against the plaintiff and the prospective purchaser of the land devised to Dever Pickens by the will of his father, a different construction thereof. If, as the second amended bill of the plaintiff charged, Dever Pickens took by this will a defeasible estate, and not an estate in fee simple indefeasible as charged in the third amended bill, these appellants would have no interest in the subjects of controversy. These appellants were not parties to the original suit, nor to the first and second amended bills. They were brought in on the third amended bill, for the one purpose of having determined the estate of Dever Pickens in the tract of land to be sold. This last bill pleaded the terms and provisions of the will relating to the devise to Dever Pickens, with the limiting clause thereof, which will be hereafter more particularly referred to; and the bill then undertook, by way of conclusion from the facts pleaded in relation to said will, to charge, contrary to the allegations of the second amended bill, that Dever Pickens took by said will a fee-simple estate indefeasible. This question rested substantially upon the provisions of the will itself. An answer to this bill by these appellants would have been nothing other than an admission of the facts charged with respect to the provisions of the will. It could have denied the conclusions of law charged; but these objects were accomplished by the demurrer. The demurrer admitted the facts, but denied the conclusions of law. It said that, admitting the facts, the conclusions of law charged did not follow. All the rights of these appellants, therefore, were involved in the demurrer to the bill; and, if the subsequent decree of the court which is appealed from amounted to no more, so far as the appellants are concerned, than the carrying into effect of the error of the court in overruling their demurrer, they are entitled to this appeal without first having made a motion to correct the error in the court below. A decision upon the demurrer by the court below that Dever Pickens did not take by the will of his father a fee-simple estate indefeasible in said land would have denied the right of the plaintiff to any relief as against these appellants, and would have dismissed the bill as against them. We think, therefore, that the position of the appellants is fairly within the rule of Watson v. Wiggington, supra, and that this court has jurisdiction of their appeal without previous motion to correct the error complained of in the court below.

The only other question presented upon this appeal is: What estate in the tract of 396 $\frac{1}{4}$  acres of land proceeded against did Dever Pickens take by the will of his father, James Pickens? The appeal which was allowed upon the petition of the appellants confined the same to this sole and single question. The question is a legal one, presented by the testamentary document itself—coupled, of course, with the date of the death of the testator, the subjects and objects of his bounty, as presented by the record. James Pickens died testate January 22, 1887. His will was dated December 8, 1884, and was probated in the clerk's office of the county court of Barbour county March 1, 1887. He left a widow, Ann Mariah Pickens, to whom he devised his household and kitchen furniture and the sum of \$5,000 in money, in full satisfaction of her distributive share of his personal estate, and provided that she was to retain dower in all his real estate, and that his several other devisees should take and hold the lands devised to them, respectively, subject to her dower right therein to the same extent as if he had died intestate in reference thereto. He declared in the second item thereof: "It is my purpose and intention in this, my will that all my children now living and the two children of my deceased son, Alexander H. Pickens, shall all share equally in the final distribution of my real and personal estate. The children of my said son, Alexander H. Pickens, or their lawful issue, and the children or lawful issue of any other of my children taking per stirpes the portion or portions which my deceased child or children would have taken if living." In the third item he says: "Having heretofore given and advanced to my son, John D. Pickens, the sum of six thousand dollars, for which I hold his receipt, and also the sum of thirty eight hundred and fifty eight dollars and sixty four cents, being the balance due to me from him on his obligation for four thousand one hundred and twelve dollars, dated the 20th day of September, 1878, I hereby release him from all liability to me for the sum of \$6,000 and \$3,858.64, and in addition thereto I devise to him all that certain tract of land conveyed to me by Simon White, containing 73 and  $\frac{1}{4}$  acres, which I charge and estimate to him at the price of twenty five hundred and fifty five dollars, making in all the sum of \$12,413.64." In the fourth item he charges his daughter, Rachel Margaret Pickens, the wife of Nathan D. Boring, with the sum of \$6,000 in money and \$6,000 in land, with which "she shall be charged in the final settlement of my estate," aggregating the sum of \$12,000. He then proceeds by the fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth, ninth, and tenth items to make specific devises of lands—to his grandchildren May Pickens and Albert Pickens, the children of his deceased son Alexander H. Pickens, 295 acres; to his daughter Jennie Pickens, 238 acres; to his daughter Mollie Pickens, 284½ acres; to his daughter Emma Pickens, wife of Samuel Walker, four several tracts; and finally, by the tenth item, to his said son Dever Pickens the 396¾ acres involved in this suit. Item 10 of said will, omitting the descriptive boundaries, is as follows: "To my son, Dever Pickens, I devise one tract of land containing 360 acres and another tract of land adjoining the same containing 36 and ¾ acres, containing together 396 and ¾ acres, which I estimate and value to him at the price of sixteen thousand dollars, of which he is required to pay to my executors the sum of two thousand dollars, which I declare to be a lien and charge on said land, in three equal installments, payable in one, two and three years after my death, which constitute a part of my personal estate." He then proceeds, by the eleventh item, to impose a limitation upon the estates thus devised, as follows: "All of the lands hereinbefore devised to my said children and to my said grandchildren, May Pickens and Albert Pickens, except the tract of 73 and ¾ acres of land hereinbefore devised to my son, John D. Pickens, are to be taken and held by them subject to the following limitation—that is to say, that if any of my said children or grandchildren hereinbefore mentioned shall die without children, or the lawful issue of such children, living at the time of his or her death, or born within ten months thereafter, then in that case the land herein devised to each child or grandchild so dying without such children, or the lawful issue of such children, living at the time of his or her death, or born within ten months thereafter, shall descend to each of my surviving children, and to the lawful issue of my deceased children and grandchildren, the descendants of each of my deceased children and grandchildren taking the portion which my deceased child or grandchild would have taken if living at the time of such death."

As bearing upon the proper construction to be given to this will, the twelfth, thirteenth, and fourteenth items are pertinent. They are as follows:

"Item Twelfth. After the payment of all my debts and funeral expenses, including the cost of suitable monuments to mark the graves of myself and my said wife, and the charges of administration of my said estate and after the payment of the legacy of five thousand dollars and of the delivery of the property hereinbefore specifically bequeathed to my wife, Ann Mariah Pickens, I direct my executors hereinafter named out of the residue of my personal estate to pay to my said children and grandchildren such sums of money as with the value of the lands and money hereinbefore devised or advanced to them or any of them, with the price hereinbefore affixed to each devise, as will make the share of each of the value of fourteen thousand dollars—that is to say, to John D.

Pickens, fifteen hundred and eighty six dollars and thirty six cents; to Rachel Margaret Boring, two thousand dollars; to Charity Young, thirty nine hundred dollars; to May Pickens, nineteen hundred dollars; to Albert Pickens, nineteen hundred dollars; to Jennie Pickens, forty five hundred dollars; to Mollie Pickens, five thousand dollars, and to Emma Walker six hundred dollars; but in case my personal estate prove insufficient for the payment in full of the last named eight legacies, then I direct my executors to abate the deficiency from each of said legacies ratably. And in case either of my said grandchildren, May Pickens or Albert Pickens, shall die before attaining the age of twenty one years, unmarried and without lawful issue living at the time of his or her death, or born within ten months thereafter, then the legacy bequeathed to such grandchild and the interest of such grandchild in the residue of my estate so dying shall be paid to the survivor of them; but in case both of said grandchildren shall so die before attaining the age of twenty one years and without lawful issue living at the time of such death, or born within ten months thereafter, then the interest of both of said grandchildren in my estate, including both of the legacies to them, and in the interest of each in the residue of my estate, shall fall into and become a part of the residue of my estate and be disposed of as hereinafter provided; and in case my said wife, Ann Mariah Pickens, shall die during my lifetime, then in that case the legacy of five thousand dollars and the personal property specifically bequeathed to her shall also fall into and become a part of the residue of my estate.

"Thirteenth Item: All moneys that I may hereinafter advance to my said children or grandchildren shall be applied in liquidation of the several legacies hereinbefore bequeathed to them respectively.

"Item Fourteenth: All the rest and residue of my estate of every kind and character shall be equally divided between my said children, John D. Pickens, Rachel Margaret Boring, Charity Young, Jennie Pickens, Mollie Pickens, Emma Walker and Dever Pickens, May Pickens and Albert Pickens, the last two taking together an equal share with each of my surviving children."

The present position of the plaintiff is that this will gives to Dever Pickens an indefeasible fee-simple estate in the 396¾ acres of land devised to him. On the other hand, it is contended by the appellants, as originally charged by the plaintiff in the second amended bill, that the will vested in Dever Pickens, with an estate in fee simple limited thereon by executory devise upon his dying without children, or the lawful issue of such children living at the time of his death, or born within 10 months thereafter, to his surviving brothers and sisters, the descendants of such deceased brother or sister to take such portion as such brother or sister would have taken if living at the time of such death.

The proper construction of this will, and the solving of the issue thus presented, depend upon the time to which, by the provisions of the will and the rules of law applicable thereto, the words of survivorship in the will shall be referred—whether to the date of the death of the testator, or the date of the death of the first devisee before or after the death of the deviser. The decree of the court below seems to have been based, in part at least, upon the fact that there were born to Dever Pickens after the death of the testator two children, who are still living; an event happening after the death of the testator. It is argued by counsel for the appellee, as a general rule of construction, that whenever there is a devise to one person in fee, and in case of his death to another, the contingency referred to is the death of the first named devisee during the lifetime of the testator, and, if such devisee survive the testator, he takes an absolute fee; that the words do not create a remainder over to take effect on the death of the devisee at any time, nor an executory devise, but are merely substitutionary and used for the purpose of preventing a lapse in case the devisee first named should not be living at the time of the testator's death. It is further contended by them that this construction is uniformly adopted, unless there is some language in the will indicative of a different intention on the part of the testator. We are referred by counsel for this rule to In re N. Y. L. & W. Ry. Co., 105 N. Y. 89, 11 N. E. 492, 59 Am. Rep. 478, opinion by Rapallo, J., and to two Virginia cases as binding upon us, namely, Hansford v. Elliott, 9 Leigh, 78, and Martin v. Kirby, 11 Grat. 67. In the case of Martin v. Kirby, cited, Judge Lee says: "Whatever may be the rule of the English courts, this court would seem to adopt the rule that the words of survivorship refer to the death of the testator. This is declared to be in cases in which no special intent to the contrary is manifested the safest and soundest construction and more consonant to the intention of the testator and best supported in the authorities." We are cited to the later cases of Stone v. Lewis, 84 Va. 474, 5 S. E. 282; Sellers, Ex'r, v. Reed, 88 Va. 377, 13 S. E. 754; Gish v. Moomaw, 89 Va. 345, 15 S. E. 868; Chapman v. Chapman, 90 Va. 409, 18 S. E. 913; Crews' Adm'r v. Hatcher, 91 Va. 378, 21 S. E. 811; Stanley v. Stanley's Adm'r, 92 Va. 534, 24 S. E. 229. It would serve no good purpose to refer by way of criticism to these Virginia cases; but it may be confidently asserted that their authority has been very much shaken by the later case of Cheatham v. Gower, 94 Va. 386, 26 S. E. 853. One judge—Keith, P.—dissented. The provision of the will involved in that case was: "I give to my nephew, T. M. Cheatham, during his life my mansion house, and at his death to his surviving children. My money and bonds I wish to be equally divided between L. L. Lester's and T. M. Cheatham's children. All the balance of my estate, both real and personal, I wish to be equally divided between T. M. Cheatham's and L. L. Lester's children." And it was held that the remainder, after the termination of the life estate created by the first clause, passed to the children of T. M. Cheatham at his death, whether being in the testator's lifetime or not, but the estates given by the other two clauses of the will passed to the children of Lester and Cheatham living at the death of the testator. The court, discussing the case, referring to the other Virginia cases cited by counsel, said: "In the case at bar, the word 'surviving' is not used by the testatrix except in the first clause of her will, and, had she intended that only the children of T. M. Cheatham who were living at her death should take under that clause, it would seem reasonable to suppose that she would have used such words as would show beyond question what she meant, and not such as she does use, which, by their common and ordinary meaning, in the sense in which they would be understood by persons of common understanding, mean that only such children of T. M. Cheatham as might be living at his death were to take an interest in the property." It will appear from an inspection of these Virginia authorities down to the case of Cheatham v. Gower that the court in Virginia has followed the earlier English decisions on this subject, and has adhered to them tenaciously, and did not until the Cheatham Case modify the rule of the prior cases in accordance with the later English decisions. For a history of the earlier English cases, and the later cases modifying the rule of the earlier ones, reference is made to 2 Jarman on Wills (6th Ed.) 661 et seq. Referring to the later English cases of Brograve v. Winder, Newton v. Ayscough, Hoghton v. Whitgreave, and Daniell v. Daniell, which depart from the rule of the earlier cases, Mr. Jarman says (page 671): "The general rule referring survivorship to the death of the testator was, it will be observed, departed from in the preceding cases only upon particular grounds; and these cases, by resting the construction on the special circumstances, might seem indirectly to afford a confirmation of that rule. Their effect, however, in consequence of the indefinite and questionable nature of the exceptions which they went to establish, evidently was to strike at the root of the rule itself, and to prepare the way for its abandonment in cases where such circumstances did not exist." And he adds: "It is curious to observe in the history of this rule of construction the steps by which an established doctrine is overturned." There is an earlier Virginia case of Burfoot v. Burfoot, 2 Leigh. 119, one of the cases cited by counsel for the appellants in support of his views. As we understand them, it is conceded by the appellants that this case is contrary to the Virginia decisions relied upon by them.

Inasmuch as the Virginia court in Cheat-ham v. Gower, supra, did not feel itself bound by the prior decisions of Hansford v. Elliott and Martin v. Kirby, neither do we feel bound thereby to adhere to the ancient rule, which is now opposed to the weight of authority; and in Schaeffer v. Schaeffer, 54 W. Va. 681, 46 S. E. 150, though the point is there only mooted, yet Judge Brannon, who anticipated the adoption by us of the better and more modern rule of construction, referring to the rule of Martin v. Kirby, says: "Speaking for myself, I am at present ready to say that the rule is not sound. Once it was, but not now. Numerous English decisions once upheld it." And, referring to the discussion by Mr. Jarman (star page 1547), Judge Brannon quotes this author as follows: "In this state of the authorities one need scarcely hesitate to affirm that the rule that reads a gift to survivors simply as applying to objects living at the death of the testator is confined to those cases in which there is no other period to which survivorship can be referred; and that, where such gift is preceded by a life or other prior interest, it takes effect in favor of those who survive the period of distribution, and of those only." He then cites numerous American authorities recognizing this change in the rule. In Schaeffer v. Schaeffer, at page 685 of 54 W. Va., at page 151 of 46 S. E., Judge Brannon, quoting from the same author, says in reference to the term "substitution" used by Rapallo, J., in 105 N. Y. 89, 11 N. E. 492, 59 Am. Rep. 478: "The term 'substitution' is generally applied to limitation intended to provide for the death of prior devisees or legatees before the period of distribution." Summers v. Smith, 21 N. E. 191, 127 Ill. 645, and Smith v. Kimbell, 38 N. E. 1029, 153 Ill. 368, Illinois cases, and Britton v. Thornton, 112 U. S. 526, 5 Sup. Ct. 291, 28 L. Ed. 816, are leading cases, and all in accord with the modern rule of construction. Smith v. Kimbell was upon a bill for specific performance of a contract for the sale of real estate. The first point of the syllabus is: "A testator devised land to his daughter in language that carried the fee, and then declared: 'Should the said daughter die leaving no heirs, I will and direct that all of the above described property shall be equally divided between my sisters.' Held, that the devise to the sisters was a valid executory devise, dependent upon the daughter dying without issue surviving her." Commenting on the New York and Pennsylvania cases cited contrary, the Illinois court says: "They are not applicable here, for the reasons involved in the observations already made. 'When the death of the first taker is coupled with other circumstances, which may or may not ever take place—as, for instance, death under age or without children—the devise over, unless controlled by other provisions of the will, takes effect, according to the ordinary and literal meaning of the words, "upon death," under the circumstances indicated, at any time, whether before or after the death of the testator.'" In Britton v. Thornton, supra, the will of Joseph Thornton provided: "To Eliza Ann Thornton, natural daughter of my said son Nelson, I give and devise all that plantation bought of Andrew Porter and John Davis"—and, after describing it, provided: "Should the said Eliza Ann die in her minority, and without lawful issue then living, the land hereby devised shall revert and become a part of the residue of my estate hereinafter disposed of." "The question which lies at the foundation of this case," says Justice Gray, "is what estate Eliza Ann Thornton took in the land which Joseph Thornton specifically devised to her"; and he answers it by saying: "By this specific devise, Eliza Ann Thornton took an estate in fee, defeasible by an executory devise over." And Justice Gray further observes: "When, indeed, a devise is made to one person in fee, and 'in case of his death' to another in fee, the absurdity of speaking of the one event, which is sure to occur to all living, as uncertain and contingent, has led the courts to interpret the devise over as referring only to death in the testator's lifetime. * * * But, when the death of the first taker is coupled with other circumstances which may or may not ever take place, as, for instance, death under age or without children, the devise over, unless controlled by other provisions of the will, takes effect, according to the ordinary and literal meaning of the words, upon death, under the circumstances indicated, at any time, whether before or after the death of the testator."

It seems unnecessary to further burden this opinion, already too long, by referring to or discussing other authorities. The difference between the old and the modern rule of construction which we adopt is the difference between giving the words of the testator a technical meaning not intended by him, in order to aid the earliest possible investment of the estate devised, and construing the words of the testator according to their ordinary and common acceptation to accomplish the purposes of the testator. The old rule was not founded upon proper principles, and, as Jarman says with reference to the growth of the new doctrine, as quoted by Judge Brannon in Schaeffer v. Schaeffer, at page 683 of 54 W. Va., at page 151 of 46 S. E.: "The sequel will serve to show that no rule of construction, however sanctioned by repeated adoption, is secure of permanence, unless founded in principle."

It only remains to apply the proper rule of construction to the will of the testator involved in this case. Holding this document up by its four corners, and reading therefrom the mind of the testator, it is clear that, when he made his will, he anticipated that his living children and the children of his deceased son would all be living at the time of his death; and, as far as he could, after providing for his widow a competency in cash and for her dower in all his lands, he endeavored to make an equal division of his property between his children and grandchildren with estates therein, using the language of the limiting clause of the will, "to be taken and held by them subject to the following limitation," etc.; and that limitation was that after they should thus come into possession of the estates devised to them, if any of them should die without children, or the lawful issue of such children, living at the time of his or her death, or born within 10 months thereafter, then the lands therein devised to those so dying without such children, or the lawful issue of such children, living at the time of his or her death, or born within 10 months thereafter, whether such event should happen before or after the death of the testator, should descend to each of the survivors of them and to their lawful issue, the descendants of each of them taking the portion which their deceased ancestor would have taken if living at the time of such death—meaning, of course, the death of the first taker. This language was written in this will, as the record shows, by a careful and painstaking lawyer, at one time a distinguished judge of this court, and it can have no other meaning than to refer the words of survivorship contained therein to the time of the death of the several primary devisees, whether that event should take place before or after the death of the testator.

Several reasons attempted to be drawn from the provisions of the will are assigned by counsel for appellee against the construction we place upon this will. First. It is claimed that by the second item the testator has evinced an intention that all of his children and his two grandchildren should share equally in the final distribution of his real and personal estate. The expression is, "children now living," etc., referring to his children and grandchildren living at the date of the will; but, if the death of any of these children and grandchildren had occurred prior to the death of the testator, the literal fulfillment of this expressed wish of the testator could not have taken place. But, if it be said that the last clause of this item anticipates such death of his children before the death of the testator, by providing that said children or the lawful issue of any other of his children should take per stirpes the portions which his deceased child or children would take if living, and thereby refers the words of survivorship to a time anterior to the death of the testator, we do not think this item of the will, taken with the other provisions thereof, is sufficient to indicate an intention on the part of the testator that the words of survivorship used in the eleventh item of the will, the limiting clause thereof, are to be so referred; for clearly this item, as before explained, refers the period of survivorship to the death of the immediate devisees who would be in a position to take and hold the land devised, at the death of the testator, subject to the contingency of such child or grandchild dying without children or lawful issue of such children living at the time of his or her death, or born within 10 months thereafter. Second. It is claimed that the provision in the devise of the 396 $\frac{1}{2}$  acres charging said land with a lien in favor of the testator's estate for the sum of \$2,000 was an inequitable provision, inconsistent with the testator's expressed desire that his estate should be divided equally between his children and grandchildren; for, it is argued, if Dever Pickens took only a life estate in the 396 $\frac{1}{2}$  acres, or took an estate in fee defeasible by an executory devise over, as claimed by the appellants, it is possible that he might have enjoyed the use of the devise for a day only. The answer to this is that the testator did not anticipate such a contingency. He was looking forward to the enjoyment by his children of the lands and property respectively devised to them for the usual term or expectancy of life, and in the division of his lands this seemed to him to be the only way of equalizing Dever Pickens with his other children, so that they might remain in enjoyment during their several lives of equal portions of his estate, subject to the contingency of the eleventh clause of the will. Third. Another argument is drawn, on the theory of inequality, against our construction of this will—that the testator in the first clause of the will bequeathed a large bequest of \$5,000 to his wife, and by the eleventh clause thereof provided that, in case she should die during the testator's lifetime, then the legacy of \$5,000 and the personal property specifically bequeathed to her should fall into and become a part of the residue of his estate, and it is said that, if this provision is read in connection with the said second clause, it is impossible to conclude that the testator meant that there should be at any time such a distribution of his estate as would give one child an interest greater than the others or greater than the interest devised to the two grandchildren. In other words, as we understand the argument, the postponement of the distribution of the residuum of his estate and of this \$5,000 bequest to the wife of the testator after his death would work an inequality upon the other children not anticipated by the testator. The same argument might be made with reference to the provision in the twelfth item, providing that in case both the grandchildren should die before attaining the age of 21 years, unmarried and without lawful issue at the time of his or her death, or born within 10 months thereafter, the interest of both, including both legacies to them, and the interest of each in the residue of such estate, should fall into and become a part of the residue of the estate of the testator, to be disposed of as therein provided. Here is a special provision of the will plainly postponing the division of the residue, under the conditions named, to a time which may happen long subsequent to the death of the testator. We see nothing in these arguments against our construction of the will. It seems to be written in plain terms, with little room for contrariety of opinion in relation thereto.

We hold that by the terms of the will of said James Pickens the defendant Dever Pickens took and holds thereunder an estate in fee in said tract of 396 $\frac{1}{4}$  acres, defeasible by an executory devise over upon his dying without children, or the lawful issue of such children, living at the time of his death, or born within 10 months thereafter, to his surviving brothers and sisters and the lawful issue of such deceased brothers and sisters, the descendants of such brothers and sisters to take such portion as such brother or sister would have taken if living at the time of such death. We are therefore of opinion that there is error in the decree of the circuit court in adjudging that the said Dever Pickens by the devise to him of said tract of land took thereunder an indefeasible estate in fee simple therein, and decreeing such interest therein to be sold in satisfaction of the lien decreed thereon.

We therefore reverse the said decree in this respect, with costs to the appellants; and this cause is remanded to the circuit court, with directions to modify its decree aforesaid in accordance with the opinion of this court, and to be therein further proceeded with according to the principles herein enunciated and the rules of equity.

(129 Ga. 125)

SIMMONS v. SCARBOROUGH.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 3, 1907.)

WRIT OF ERROR—BILL OF EXCEPTIONS—FINAL JUDGMENT—ASSIGNMENT OF ERROR.

"A direct bill of exceptions to a ruling made pendente lite, which does not assign error upon any final judgment, though such a judgment was rendered, will not be entertained by this court." Kibben v. Coastwise Dredging Co., 120 Ga. 899, 48 S. E. 330.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 2, Appeal and Error, §§ 329, 344.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Lee County; Z. A. Littlejohn, Judge.

I. C. Scarborough obtained a fi. fa. on a judgment recovered against E. J. and L. B. Simmons. Mrs. L. B. Simmons filed an affidavit of illegality to the levy, and, from a judgment directing that the fi. fa. proceed, Mrs. Simmons brings error. Writ dismissed.

The plaintiff in error, Mrs. L. B. Simmons, filed an affidavit of illegality to the levy of a fi. fa. in favor of Scarborough, transferee of Byrom, against E. J. and L. B. Simmons. Upon the trial the plaintiff in error offered an amendment to her affidavit of illegality. The bill of exceptions recites that "the plaintiff generally demurred to the amendment and objected to the same, and the court sustained the demurrer and refused to allow the amendment; thereupon defendant then and there excepted, and now excepts and assigns the same as error, and, for cause of error, says that the amendment was sufficient in law and should have been allowed. The plaintiff then introduced the fi. fa. with the levy on the same, and closed. No other evidence. Verdict was had for the plaintiff, and judgment entered directing said fi. fa. to proceed." No other assignment of error is made in the bill of exceptions, except the one above quoted, complaining of the judgment refusing and disallowing the amendment.

Allen Fort & Son, H. L. Long & Son, and Lane, Maynard & Hooper, for plaintiff in error. Shipp & Sheppard, for defendant in error.

BECK, J. Writ of error dismissed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 126)

MERCER v. SAGER.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 3, 1907.)

1. EXECUTORS—SALE OF LAND—TITLE OF PURCHASER—CAVEAT EMPTOR.

Where land is sold by an executrix under a valid decree or judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction, directing said executrix "to sell the said several tracts of land in the foregoing petition mentioned and described at public outcry," and the same was duly advertised for four weeks before the sale, and regularly sold to the highest bidder, the purchaser at such sale takes subject to the general rule of caveat emptor. Kirkland v. Wade, 61 Ga. 478; Colbert v. Moore, 64 Ga. 502; Wells v. Harper, 81 Ga. 194, 6 S. E. 913, 12 Am. St. Rep. 819.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 22, Executors and Administrators, §§ 1573-1577.]

2. SAME—SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

There being no misrepresentations or fraud by the executrix or any one conducting the sale, and it appearing that the alleged defects complained of by the purchaser could have been discovered as well before as after the sale, the purchaser was bound by his bid; and no error was committed by the court in decreeing specific performance of his contract by the bidder.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 22, Executors and Administrators, §§ 1577-1588.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Chatham County; Geo. T. Cann, Judge.

Suit by L. W. Sager, as executor, etc., against J. A. Mercer, Jr. From a decree in favor of complainant, defendant brings error. Affirmed.

The second item of the will of Mary Houston, deceased, provided that her property should be held in trust by her executor, who was directed, out of the rents, income, and profits, to educate and maintain the minor children of the testatrix, and to pay the necessary expenses of the estate. And said executor was further directed "to hold together the corpus of said estate until the youngest child shall arrive at the age of twenty-one years; and then in further trust to divide the said corpus of the trust estate among all my children living at the time of such distribution, share and share alike as tenants in common, the child or children of a deceased child to take in place of the parent, and to share per stirpes and not per capita." By a codicil the testatrix appointed Sager, defendant in error, executrix and trustee, "with all the powers therein conferred, * * * any sale and reinvestment to be made by the said trustee only under the direction and decree of a court of competent jurisdiction in a proper case-made." When the two youngest children of the testatrix had arrived at the age of 20, and 17 years, respectively, they filed a petition against the executrix as such and individually, and against the other children, praying that a division of the estate among all the children be made at once, for the reason that the net income of the estate was insufficient to educate and support the minor children according to the provisions of the will. All the legatees then in life consented to the relief sought in this petition; and the court passed an order which, after reciting that all parties at interest were represented, and the jury having returned a verdict in favor of the prayer in the petition, directed that the estate of the testatrix be divided among said legatees; and it was further ordered and decreed that the executrix "sell the several tracts of land [belonging to said estate] * * * at public outcry, after advertising the same once a week for four weeks before the sale on a regular sales day," and "that any sale shall be made subject to confirmation by this court." In conformity to the provisions of this decree the sale was made, and a portion of the lands was bid in by plaintiff in error, and said sale was confirmed by the court. The case at bar arose upon a petition filed by the executrix to enforce this bid. The defendant, Mercer, filed his answer, in which he admitted making the bid above referred to, but alleged that the court had no authority to decree the sale and distribution of said estate before the youngest child arrived at the age of 21 years, and that said sale was not binding upon contingent beneficiaries in said will, who were not parties to the said proceedings, nor represented therein, and prayed that he be released from his said bid. The case was heard by the presiding judge without the intervention of a jury, and it was ordered and adjudged that the defendant be required to take the property and pay the amount bid by him therefor. The defendant excepted.

Lester & Ravenel, for plaintiff in error.
Saussey & Saussey, for defendant in error.

BECK, J. Judgment affirmed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 74)

HARRIS v. POWERS et al. POWERS et al
v. HARRIS et al. NOLAN et al.
v. SAME.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Aug. 12, 1907.)

1. DOWER—PROPERTY SUBJECT TO DOWER—EQUITY OF REDEMPTION.

At common law a widow was not dowable of an equity of redemption.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 17, Dower, §§ 45, 57, 59.]

2. COMMON LAW—ADOPTION.

The common law of force prior to May 14, 1776, was adopted as the law of this state by the act of February 25, 1784 (Cobb's Dig. 721, § 3), except where modified by statutes or not adjusted to the conditions or system of government existing here.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 10, Common Law, § 10.]

3. DOWER—PROPERTY SUBJECT TO DOWER.

Where an owner of land made a deed to secure an indebtedness, and took a bond for reconveyance upon payment of the debt, and died without having paid any part of the debt, or having obtained a reconveyance, his widow was not entitled to take dower either in the land as a whole or in the equity of redemption, at least not without first redeeming the property.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 17, Dower, §§ 57, 59.]

4. SAME.

Where the estate of the decedent was insolvent, and was placed in the hands of a receiver for administration by a court of equity, and the case was referred to an auditor for an accounting, creditors, whose claims would be affected by the allowance of dower, had a right to contest the widow's claim to have dower allowed to her in land to which the husband did not hold title at the time of his death, but only an equity of redemption.

5. SAME.

The principles above announced were not changed by the fact that the receiver, under order of the court, sold the land which had been conveyed to secure the debts, paid off the indebtedness, and had a surplus on hand. Nor did it alter the case that creditors assented to the payment of the secured indebtedness (with an exception as to fees, touching which the question was reserved) in order to save accruing interest on the secured debts.

6. BILLS AND NOTES—NONPAYMENT OF INTEREST—ELECTION TO DECLARE WHOLE AMOUNT DUE.

Where a promissory note was due five years from its date, with interest payable annually on a fixed day, but included a provision that, if the interest was not paid when due, the payee might declare the entire debt due; and where, after the failure to pay an installment of interest, the attorneys for the creditor gave notice to the administrator of the deceased debtor of an intention to bring suit on the note to the next term of court, and on the return day of such term suit was brought by the creditor for the entire amount of the note, this was evidence of an election to declare the whole debt due for nonpayment of the interest.

7. SAME.

This would not be altered by the fact that the maker of the note had died, and an administrator had been appointed, nor because the cred itor did not bring a separate suit on the note, but joined with other creditors in an equitable petition, praying to have its right enforced, and also for the administration of the estate by a court of equity.

8. SAME—ATTORNEY'S FEES—RIGHT TO RECOVER.

Where a provision for the payment of attorney's fees is included in a note, the death of the debtor insolvent will not destroy the right to recover such fees as against the administrator, upon compliance with the statute in respect to giving notice.

9. SAME.

Where notice was duly given, in accordance with the act of 1900 (page 53), to an administrator of an intention to bring suit upon certain promissory notes made by the decedent, which contained a provision for the payment of attorney's fees, and where the estate was insolvent, and by reasons of complications it was necessary to place the assets in the hands of a receiver, and to have an accounting as to assets and debts, and where, on the last day for bringing suit to the next term of the superior court (in this state called the return day), the creditors holding such notes and others filed an equitable petition under which a receiver was appointed and an administration of the assets of the estate had, and where the auditor, to whom the case was referred, found that the administrator had no money with which the notes might have been paid, and could not borrow it, and in effect that no payment could have been made, the holders of the notes were not prevented from recovering attorney's fees thereon because the suit was commenced on such return day.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Bartow County; A. W. Flite, Judge.

Action between A. De R. Harris and H. M. Powers and one Nolan and others. From the judgment, Harris brings error, and Nolan and Powers assign cross-bills. Judgment on the main bill with exceptions affirmed, and on the cross-bills reversed.

Jno. L. Norris, for A. De R. Harris. Thos. W. Milner & Sons, Jno. W. & Paul F. Akin, Joe M. Moon, Thos. C. Milner, G. H. Aubrey, and J. B. Conyers, for H. M. Powers and others.

LUMPKIN, J. This case arose upon an equitable petition, under which an insolvent estate of a decedent was placed in the hands of a receiver upon the application of creditors. It was referred to an auditor to take an accounting and make a report, with a view to the proper administration of the assets under decree of the court. Among the creditors who filed the original petition were the holders of deeds made by the decedent in his lifetime to secure certain debts, bonds to reconvey upon payment having been made to him by the grantees in the deeds respectively. There were also unsecured creditors. The widow claimed dower. One of the secured creditors claimed attorney's fees under a provision in the note held by it. An unsecured creditor also claimed attorney's fees. The auditor refused to allow them, and exception was taken. Pending the case, under an interlocutory decree of the court, the receiver sold the lands, paid off the holders of the secured debts, and had in hand a surplus amounting to several thousand dollars. The auditor found that the widow was entitled to dower in the equity of redemption, or, in lieu of it, in the surplus of the proceeds of the lands after paying off the debts secured by the deeds. To this other creditors filed exception, contending that the widow was not dowerable in such equity or surplus. The widow filed exceptions, claiming that she was entitled to dower, not only in the surplus, but to be measured on the basis of the value of the entire lands. She sought to have set apart to her a sum of money in lieu of dower in the lands, alleging that this was by agreement under the statute. Civ. Code 1895, § 4695. Motions and counter motions were made to dismiss various exceptions, which were overruled. The presiding judge overruled all of the exceptions of law and fact, and entered a decree accordingly. All parties excepted; a main bill of exceptions, a cross-bill of exceptions, and two independent bills of exceptions being filed. With one of these we have dealt separately. Pendley v. Powers, 58 S. E. 653. The others we will consider together.

We deem it unnecessary to deal with the demurrers to exceptions and motions to dismiss them, or with exceptions to an allowance of an amendment to one set of exceptions, further than to say that we think there is enough properly before us to raise the questions above indicated, and we will deal with them accordingly.

It has been said that dower was introduced into Denmark by Sweyn, the father of Canute, out of gratitude to the Danish ladies, who sold all their jewels to ransom him when taken prisoner by the Vandals, and that, possibly, the English dower was a relic of the Danish custom, though the reason given for its adoption in England was the more practical one of making provision for the sustenance of the wife, and the rearing and education of the younger children. 2 Bl. Com. 129. If, indeed, dower had an origin so tinged with grateful gallantry, and having for its purpose the rewarding of the generous ladies of Denmark by conferring upon them a right in respect of their husbands' lands, with or without the consent of the husbands, it is not surprising that, when it became a part of the law of England, it should have been often declared to be a favored right especially by the courts of equity, which delighted in being called "courts of conscience." The effort to harmonize the holding of the courts of law that dower was a legal right, that seisin, which was necessary to the perfection of a freehold, was necessary to dower, and that a widow could only take dower in a legal estate, with general ideas of moral duty on the part of the husband to support his wife and children, and with broad equitable views, gave rise to a series of decisions which are not easily to be reconciled on a basis of sound and consistent principle. An excellent discussion of this subject will be found in Park on Dower, 124-140 (as contained 11 Law Lib. pp. 56, 64); D'Arcy v. Blake, 2 Sch. & Lefr. 388. Whatever real or apparent differences, however, there may have been among some of the decisions, the rule of the common law was ultimately determined to be that a widow could not take dower in an equity of redemption. In Dixon v. Saville, 1 Bro. C. C. p. 326, decided by the Lords Commissioners of the Great Seal in 1783, it was held that "a widow is not dowerable of an equity of redemption." Lord Loughborough treated the rule as so well settled that, after considering the arguments which discussed numerous cases, he dismissed the entire matter in the following brief opinion: "The argument in the cases cited has generally sprung from compassion. The case of an estate by the courtesy in a trust is the anomalous case, not the rule that the wife shall not have dower. I confess I think it so much settled that it would be wrong to discuss it much." Mr. Park says: "This has been since recognized to be the law by universal practice, and by several of the most learned judges." Park on Dower, 137 (11 Law Lib., top p. 63). As early as 1712, in the case of Bottomley v. Fairfax, Prec. Ch. 336, it was said that "in this case it was clearly agreed that if a husband before marriage conveys his estate to trustees and their heirs in such manner as to put the legal estate out of him, though the trust be limited to him and his heirs, that of this trust estate the wife after his death shall not be endowed, and that this court hath never yet gone so far as to allow her dower in such case." That the common-law rule, prior to Dower Act, 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 105, was that the wife was not entitled to dower in an equity of redemption, see, also, Dawson v. Bank of Whitehaven, L. R. 6 Ch. Div. 218; Mayburry v. Brien, 15 Pet. (U. S.) 20, 10 L. Ed. 646; Stelle v. Carroll, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 201, 9 L. Ed. 1056; 11 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) 210; 4 Kent's Com. 43 et seq.; Bispham's Eq. (5th Ed.) 616. In 14 Cyc. 909 the rule is thus succinctly stated: "At common law seisin of a legal estate is an essential requisite to the right of dower, and therefore the widow is not entitled to dower in lands to which her husband had only an equitable title." On page 914 it is said: "The right of redemption from mortgages being regarded as a mere equitable title, the common law did not recognize dower right of a widow in her husband's equity of redemption." In 10 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law (2d Ed.) 162, it is said: "The familiar rule of equity that all the incidents of legal estates shall attach and apply to equitable estates did not, at common law, include the right of dower. This exception, it is said, was contrary to all the analogies of legal and equitable estates, and, if it were now open to question, would be no longer recognized. It has been changed in England, Canada, and most of the United States." The revolt against the common-law rule was greatly forwarded, if not led, by the distinguished chancellor Kent, as early as 1804, in the case of Waters v. Stewart, 1 Oaines' Cas. (N. Y.) 47, 68. He discussed at length the position of the holder of an equity of redemption in possession of the debtor, and held that, under the New York statute, it could be seized and sold under an execution. This was followed in 1821 by Titus v. Nelson, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 452, holding that the widow was entitled to dower in the land, subject to the mortgage, and that the court would allow her dower out of the surplus proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged premises on a bill for a foreclosure and sale. In that case, however, it was still recognized that "in England dower is considered as a mere legal right, and equity follows the law, and will not create the right where it does not subsist at law." See, also, Hitchcock v. Harrington, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 290, 5 Am. Dec. 229. For a full development of this theory, see the authorities above cited, and also 1 Jones on Mortgages (6th Ed.) § 604, p. 658 et seq. Whatever may be the justice or injustice of the English rule as to dower in an equity of redemption, or what is analogous to it under our system, it was enacted by the Legislature of this state on February 25, 1784, that the common law of England of force prior to May 14, 1776, should be of force in this state. Cobb's Dig. 721, § 3; Pol. Code 1895, § 1, par. 3; Prince's Dig. p. 570. Thus, then, so far as the common-law rule is applicable to the present situation, it must remain of force until changed by legislation. Under the common law, dower attached to all of the lands and tenements of which the husband was seised in fee simple or fee tail at any time during the coverture, and of which any issue which the wife might have had might by possibility have been heir. Under the law of this state, "dower is the right of a wife to an estate for life in one-third of the lands, according to valuation; including the dwelling house (which is not to be valued unless in a town or city) of which the husband was seised or possessed at the time of his death, or to which the husband obtained title in right of his wife." Civ. Code 1895, § 4687. As a husband's marital rights no longer attach to his wife's property, the last clause of this definition can have no application, except to cases arising prior to what is known as "the married woman's law of 1866," and may be disregarded in the present consideration. The change authorizing the husband to convey his property free from the right of dower on the part of his wife, and without relinquishment from her except as to property which he received through her, dates back to 1826. Cobb's Dig. 171, § 29. But it will be noticed that, to entitle a widow to dower, the husband must have died seised and possessed. Except as modified by statute, and with a possible exception in 10 Ga., infra, the word "seised" has always been treated as referring to a legal title, or certainly a perfect equity, equivalent thereto, relatively to applications for dower.

In Chapman v. Schroeder, 10 Ga. 321, dower was recognized as a legal claim. It was, indeed, there held that a widow was dowable of wild and uncultivated lands, whether in England she would have been so or not, owing to the situation and circumstances of our people, as well as and by reason of implications from certain laws. In Bowen v. Collins, 15 Ga. 100, it was held that a purchaser of land who held under a bond for title, with part of the purchase money paid at the time of his death, was not seised and possessed of the land within the meaning of the law. It was said that, whatever might be the meaning of the word "seisin," it included in it this ingredient: "A title which is complete." See, also, Clements v. Bostwick, 38 Ga. 1; Day v. Solomon, 40 Ga. 32; Klinnebrew v. McWhorter, 61 Ga. 33; Raley v. Ross, 59 Ga. 862; Hill v. Hill, 81 Ga. 516, 8 S. E. 879 (2); Pirkie v. Equitable Mortgage Co., 99 Ga. 524, 28 S. E. 34 (the ruling that the clause inserted in the conveyance involved in that case made it a mortgage has since been reversed in Pitts v. Maier, 115 Ga. 281, 285, 41 S. E. 570); Ferris v. Van Ingen, 110 Ga. 102, 115, 35 S. E. 847. In Latham v. McLain, 64 Ga. 320, it was held that where one entered into the possession of land under a parol contract to purchase, but paid no part of the purchase money to the holder of the legal title, he was not seised as against the latter and those claiming under him; and on his death, even after he had tendered the purchase money, his widow was not dowable of the land. It was there recognized that legal seisin might be obtained by paying the purchase money in full, where a bond for titles or other written contract for sale and purchase had been entered into, or that title might be acquired by deed or prescription. Bleckley, J., said: "Mere tender of money does not operate as payment, nor work a transmutation of title. The money which the complainant's husband tendered to the railroad company remained his money, and, if it was still on hand when he died, became assets of his estate. And, if he owned the money at the time of his decease, he surely did not own the land also. The tender, together with the other facts, put him in a situation where he might have filed a bill for specific performance, and obliged the railroad company to invest him with title, but he did not pursue that course. He took no steps to strip off the title with which the company was clothed. The most that can be said is that he died possessed of a right to become seised of the land by the appropriate proceeding in equity; and possibly, if the right were now actually enforced by his executors, administrators, or heirs at law, so as to render the land the property of the estate fully and completely, the widow might be dowable of it on the doctrine of relation." In McDonald

v. McDonald, 120 Ga. 403, 47 S. E. 918 it was held that where a husband borrowed money, made an absolute deed under the provisions of the Code to secure it, received a bond for titles from the lender, and at the time of his death had paid none of the notes given for the borrowed money, he had no interest in the land except the equity of redemption, and his widow was not entitled to dower therein. In that case the objection was made by the administrator, and it was held that he had a right to do so, although the holder of the security deed withdrew all objection on its part. In other cases the holder of the security deed was involved, but in the McDonald case it was not so; and therefore it is a direct adjudication controlling in the present case, if the creditors here had the right to make the objection. We have granted permission to review the case last cited, and have carefully considered the briefs and arguments of counsel. We cannot, however, overrule it. What has been said above will show the reason on which it rests. It was contended that the act of 1884 (Acts 1884-85, p. 92), now codified in section 4688 of the Civil Code of 1895, changed the law so as to allow dower to be assigned in an equity of redemption. That section reads as follows: "Dower may be assigned in lands held under deed, bond for titles, or other instrument in writing having like effect, where a portion of the purchase money has been paid, but the estate in dower shall be liable for the unpaid purchase money where the vendee held under bond for titles or other instrument having the same effect, or under deed where contemporaneously with the execution of the deed the vendee encumbered the land with a mortgage for the purchase money." Apparently the act was passed to meet the ruling in Bowen v. Collins, 15 Ga. 100, and perhaps in part Wilson v. Peeples, 61 Ga. 218. It is limited to the cases mentioned in it. Whether the payment of a part of the debt secured by deed with bond to reconvey would be analogized to payment of a part of the purchase money is not now before us, as there was no such payment. Nor is the law which requires seisin as a basis for dower changed by section 4696 of the Code, which allows the widow, with the assent of the executor or administrator, and the approval of the ordinary, to elect, in lieu of her dower, an amount in money to belong absolutely to her, to be estimated and determined by the commissioners appointed to assign dower, whose report shall be subject to the same objection as are admeasurements of dower in land. This simply authorized the payment of a sum of money in lieu of the dower in the land, but did not create a right of dower where none existed before. If there was no right to dower in the land, there was no right to an equivalent sum of money in lieu of it. This is made clear by the closing part of the section, which declares that the amount so awarded shall be paid in preference to all other claims "out of the proceeds of the sale of the lands." There are some differences between our statutory deed to secure a debt, with bond for titles to be made on repayment, and a mortgage under the common law. The deed to secure a debt is a statutory creation, and has given rise to some decisions which do not very closely follow analogies. The deed conveys the title, but the grantee cannot recover possession until after failure to pay. Even then, if he recovers possession, he has not a perfect, indefeasible title, but is liable to an accounting for rents, issues, and profits to be applied to the satisfaction of the debt, and, after it has been discharged, the grantor is again entitled to the land. Gunter v. Smith, 113 Ga. 18, 38 S. E. 374; Polhill v. Brown, 84 Ga. 339, 10 S. E. 921. If the debtor remains in possession and the land is sold under execution against the grantee, the purchaser does not acquire a perfect title, but only the rights of the grantee. Bridger v. Exchange Bank, 126 Ga. 822, 56 S. E. 97. But to a considerable extent there is an analogy between our security deed and a common-law mortgage, and rulings in regard to the latter may be considered to furnish a guide as to the status of the former on the subject of dower. Ashley v. Cook, 109 Ga. 653, 657, 35 S. E. 89.

It is urged that the maker of the deed in possession should be treated, as to all the world except the grantee, as the owner of the property. This is to a large extent true. Thus, where such grantor brings an action of ejectment, the defendant cannot set up the security deed, even after maturity of the debt, as an outstanding title to defeat the action, unless his possession is connected with such title. Ashley v. Cook, 109 Ga. 653, 657, 35 S. E. 89. The statement is broadly made in Wilkins v. Gibson, 113 Ga. 31, 60, 38 S. E. 374, 84 Am. St. Rep. 204, that, as against every one except the grantee in the security deed, the maker could set up that he was the owner of the property and entitled to all the rights as such, and that his vendees could do the same. In some respects the maker of the deed, though in possession, is not the absolute owner relatively to every one save the grantee. Thus the rule laid down in New York and other states, that the equity of redemption held by the grantor is subject to levy, has not been followed. On the contrary, it has been held not to be so subject. Groves v. Williams, 69 Ga. 614; Shumate v. McLendon, 120 Ga. 396, 48 S. E. 10. Following the contention just above referred to, it was further insisted that the creditors could not assert the existence of the deed in order to defeat the widow's dower. They are not seeking to claim any right under the deed, nor do they occupy the position of a defendant in ejectment setting up an outstanding title. An insolvent estate of a decedent has been taken in charge by a court of equity for administration. If one claimant gets more than he or she is entitled to, another loses correspondingly. What these creditors are doing is to seek to prevent the estate, which is being administered through the court of equity, from being diminished by unlawful claims, which will cause them to lose all or a part of what is due to them. We know of no reason why this cannot be done. Counsel for the widow argued that the administrator, by reason of the grant of an injunction and the fact that he had been appointed receiver, had been prevented from proceeding to handle the estate as administrator, and could not set up this defense against the claim of dower so as to protect the estate for creditors. If this is true, it surely cannot be that the court will prevent the administrator from protecting the estate for creditors, and at the same time will refuse to allow the creditors to protect themselves. See Pendley v. Powers (decided to-day) 58 S. E. 653. Another anomaly which has grown up in the law of dower is this: Under the English common law, a widow being entitled to dower in all the land of which her husband was seised at any time during coverture in fee simple or fee tail, with a possibility of inheritance in her issue, this right was considered as a sort of claim or quasi incumbrance or interest in her favor attaching to all such land. It was even sometimes referred to as a species of inchoate estate in her. If the husband made a mortgage, and she did not release her dower, upon his death she was entitled to dower in the land without regard to the mortgage. If she did release her right of dower in favor of the mortgagee, it was nevertheless contended that this operated only as a waiver or estoppel in favor of the mortgagee, or those succeeding to his rights, and that the inchoate right still existed as against others. Out of this situation probably arose the adjudication of some of the courts that the widow was entitled to redeem the land, replacing the title in the estate of her husband, and then by a species of relation, treating the land as having been in the seisin of her husband at his death. This redemption by the widow was, of course, with her own funds, not with the funds of others, or of the estate, which she had no right to control. It was said that, if she thus redeemed, she might claim as a creditor for the redemption money in excess of her proper proportion. There are also rulings that, if an heir or the administrator in the ordinary course of administration should redeem the land, she might claim dower, paying her proper proportion of the redemption money. In Georgia a mortgage conveys no title, but only creates a lien. Civ. Code 1895, § 2723. The wife has no inchoate right or claim of dower in respect of the lands of which her husband was seised at any time during coverture, but only as to that which he was seised and possessed of at his death. His deed carries perfect title, without any joinder or waiver from her, except as to lands which he acquired through her prior to the married woman's act. Doubtless to prevent the great complications which arose from the old law, and in the interest of ready transmission of titles, and that they might bring full market value, unhampered by the danger of possible claims for dower at some uncertain future time, the Legislature as early as 1826 declared that the husband might convey a free and unincumbered title to his lands without the wife joining him. Cobb's Dig. 171, § 29. Nevertheless, though the wife had no inchoate interest in the property conveyed by her husband, the privilege on her part to redeem land which had been conveyed by him to secure a debt, and then to claim dower in it, was recognized and seems to have become imbedded in our law, as will be seen by consulting the authorities above cited.

In the present case there was no redemption by the widow, none by the heir, and none by the administrator in the ordinary course of administration, if either of the latter would give a right of dower. The widow did not offer to pay any part of the redemption money, but merely desired to reduce the general estate, which was insolvent, to increase her dower. At the instance of creditors, the insolvent estate was taken in custody by a court of equitable jurisdiction. The holders of the security deeds were parties, and sought to have their rights as such enforced. A sale was made by the receiver under order of the court, and the security debts were paid off, except as to attorney's fees, which will be dealt with hereinafter. Had the sale been made by regular suit, filing a deed, and levying the execution in a court of law, the payment by the sheriff of the amount due on the security debts would not have entitled the widow to dower in the surplus representing the equity of redemption. That there was a judicial sale under decree of a court of equity did not alter the case. Nor did the fact that the other creditors may have made no objection to the payment of the secured debts accomplish such a result. There is some language in the original petition which might indicate that the widow could set up a right of dower except as against the secured creditors. But other creditors evidently did not concur in this view. Exceptions were filed to the auditor's report, and the question is presented for the determination of this court as one of law.

From what has been said above, it will be seen that the common-law rule touching dower in an equity of redemption was adopted in this state, whatever may be the rulings on that subject in other states, that the Legislature has modified that rule only in certain cases, and that this is not one of them. It is our duty to adjudicate what is the law, not to amend it. If the Legislature is of the opinion that dower should be allowed in cases like the present one, it is within their power to amend the law accordingly. Whether the law as it stands may work some hardship or not is not the question for the courts. They cannot change the law to suit what may appear to be a hardship in any particular case. It may be mentioned, however, in passing, that a year's support of $3,000 was allowed from the estate, and that the widow and children were not left entirely without provision.

One further question remains for decision. The note held by the John Hancock Life Insurance Company, secured by deed, was dated August 23, 1902, and due August 23, 1907, with interest payable annually on November 1st, and with a provision for the payment of 10 per cent. attorney's fees. The note further provided that, if the interest was not paid when due, the payee or owner might declare the whole debt due. One installment of interest was not paid. Thereafter, on May 18, 1904, the attorneys for the company gave notice to the administrator of their intention to bring suit on the note to the June term, 1904, of Bartow superior court. Subsequently, on the return day, the company and other creditors joined in the equitable petition under which the receiver was appointed and the other proceedings had. John W. Akin, Esq., also held a note which provided for the payment of attorney's fees, and as to which notice was likewise given, and suit brought by joining in the equitable petition and praying that judgment should be rendered. The auditor held that no attorney's fees could be recovered. He said that "there was no evidence before me of the election of the John Hancock Insurance Company to declare the debt due," and also that "it does not appear to me to be equitable, or that it was the purpose of the lawmakers, to have the act of 1900 bear such a construction as to impose upon an insolvent estate a large sum for attorney's fees, as contended in this case." The giving of notice of an intention to sue for the entire indebtedness because of the failure to pay the interest, followed by the actual suit, in which it was alleged that the plaintiff had exercised its option to have the entire debt fall due and had given notice to the administrator, was evidence of an election to declare the debt due. The law does not prohibit the rendering of a judgment for attorney's fees because the debtor's estate is insolvent. Such a condition may make it more difficult, and sometimes impossible, for a creditor to realize upon his judgment; but he is not debarred from the privilege of obtaining it.

It was urged before us that, under the act of 1900 (Acts 1900, p. 53), the debtor had the entire return day in which to pay the debt and thus avoid a judgment for attorney's fees; that this included until the very end of the return day; that the equitable suit was filed and the receiver appointed before the expiration of that day; that, therefore, these creditors took part in a proceeding to remove the assets from the custody of the administrator as such, and place them in the hands of a receiver, and thus destroyed any right which they might have had to recover judgments for attorney's fees. Prior to the act of 1900 the law provided that "obligations to pay attorney's fees upon any note or other evidence of indebtedness, in addition to the rate of interest specified therein, are void, and no court shall enforce such agreement to pay attorney's fees, unless a plea or pleas be filed by the defendant and not sustained." Civ. Code 1895, § 3667. By the act of December 12, 1900 (Acts 1900, p. 53), the requirement that a plea or pleas should be filed and not sustained was stricken, and the section quoted was amended so as to read as follows: "Obligations to pay attorney's fees upon a note or other evidence of indebtedness, in addition to the rate of interest specified therein, are void, and no court shall enforce such agreement to pay attorney's fees, unless the debtor shall fail to pay such debt on or before the return day of the court to which suit is brought for the collection of the same; provided, the holder of the obligation sued upon, his agent or attorney, notifies the defendant in writing ten days before suit is brought of his intention to bring suit, and also the term of the court to which suit will be brought." The intention of the old law was to prevent the collection of attorney's fees provided for in a note, unless the debtor should file a defense and fail to sustain it. The amending act adopted a different scheme, which was to require notice of an intention to sue to be given at least 10 days before suit should be brought, to allow the debtor until return day to pay the debt, and thus to save the creditor the necessity and expense of bringing suit at all. If he should voluntarily bring suit before return day, it would be at his own risk of being paid subsequently. To put the construction upon the act of 1900 which is insisted upon by counsel opposing the allowance of fees would make the act in substance conflict with itself. Thus it is required that the notice shall specify the term of the court to which suit will be brought. In order to bring suit to that term according to the notice, it must be brought on the return day at the latest. If it is not then brought, it cannot be brought to that term, and a new notice would have to be given of a suit to another term. If the debtor is allowed until the last instant of the return day to make payment in order to avoid the necessity for the bringing of a suit, the incurring of attorney's fees, and the right to recover them, then the creditor could not know whether to bring his suit until after the return day had expired, and it was too late to sue. If the view above expressed of the purpose of the amendment is correct, it ought to be construed as a whole in harmony therewith. The right of the debtor to pay on or before return day, and the necessity for the creditor to sue on that day should both be considered in construing the act. In this light we think that the proper construction is that the debtor shall have until return day, and as much of that day as may elapse until the suit is actually filed.

But it is said that the filing of this petition operated to render it impossible for the administrator to pay the debt. The petition alleged that the estate was insolvent; that the administrator could not pay the debts; that there was an unpaid judgment for a year's support, which could not be paid without the interposition of equity to bring the estate into a condition to be wound up; and that the administrator had no funds on hand with which to pay, and had failed to pay the indebtedness on which attorney's fees were claimed after due notice. The auditor found that there was a judgment of $3,000 for the 12 months' support of the family, which was a lien of the highest dignity against the assets of the estate, except that conveyed to creditors to secure debts; that all of the property of the estate not conveyed to secure debts was not worth half enough to pay the 12 months' support and other claims of first dignity having priority over ordinary debts; that the administrator could not, without the consent of the security deed holders, sell the incumbered lands of the estate; that the estate had no money, and he could not borrow it, to pay the note of Judge Akin, or the interest on the insurance company's note. This finding negatives the contention that the plaintiffs prevented the administrator from making payment. The death of the debtor did not affect the law as to attorney's fees. They could be recovered against his legal representative as they could against him. It made no difference that the plaintiffs did not bring separate suits, but joined in a common equitable proceeding in which they prayed judgments for the amounts due them.

The judgment on the cross-bill (Nolan et al. v. Harris et al.) is reversed, and the judgment complained of in the main bill of exceptions, being controlled by this ruling, is affirmed. In the case of Powers et al. v. Harris et al. the judgment is reversed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 267)

SOUTHERN RY. CO. v. THOMPSON.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 8, 1907.)

1. RAILROADS — FIRES — ACTIONS — INSTRUCTIONS.

The charge did not accurately state the contention of the defendant as set out in the answer.

2. SAME.

A railroad company is liable for damages to property proximately caused by a fire negligently set out by the running of one of its engines.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 41, Railroads, § 1657.]

3. SAME—NEGLIGENCE—PRESUMPTION.

If, without more, it should be shown by evidence that a fire was set out by the operation of an engine of a railroad company, a presumption would arise that the company or its agents were guilty of the acts of negligence alleged in the petition.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 41, Railroads, §§ 1710-1712.]

4. SAME—REBUTTAL.

If such a presumption arises, it may be rebutted by evidence. This may be done by evidence introduced by the plaintiff, as well as that introduced by the defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 41, Railroads, §§ 1710-1712.]

5. SAME.

If the presumption of negligence arises against the defendant, it must show that it and its agents used all ordinary and reasonable care and diligence in regard to the matters charged against it.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 41, Railroads, §§ 1709-1712.]

6. SAME—SAFE APPLIANCES—OPERATION.

Such ordinary care and diligence must be used as well in the equipping of its engine with proper appliances for preventing fires, and keeping them in proper condition, as in the operation of the engine.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 41, Railroads, §§ 1668-1671.]

7. SAME—DEGREE OF CARE REQUIRED.

The measure of diligence which the law places upon a railroad company, in respect to the providing and keeping in repair of spark arresters or other appliances for the prevention of fire, is to use ordinary care and diligence to apply to its engines the best appliances in general use, the use of which is consistent with the practicable operation of its engines, and to use reasonable care and skill in keeping the same in good order.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 41, Railroads, §§ 1657-1671.]

8. SAME—RIGHT OF WAY—NEGLIGENT CONDITION.

If the company is wanting in ordinary care in allowing grass, weeds, rotten wood, and other combustible material to accumulate on its right of way, and as a result thereof damage by fire occurs, this would also furnish a ground for holding the company liable.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 41, Railroads, §§ 1673-1676.]

9. TRESPASS—DAMAGE TO FREEHOLD—POSSESSION.

Actual possession will support an action of trespass against a wrongdoer. If nothing appears to the contrary, such actual possession is sufficient prima facie evidence of title to authorize a recovery of damages to the freehold.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trespass, §§ 32-47.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Wayne County; T. A. Parker, Judge.

Action by Ely Thompson against the Southern Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant brings error. Reversed.

Thompson brought suit against the Southern Railway Company to recover damages caused by a fire which was alleged to have burned certain cross-ties, a number of panels of a fence, a dwelling house, a cornercrib, and standing timber. The negligence alleged was that the defendant, by itself, agents, servants, or employes, in the careless and negligent handling of the cars, engines, or other machinery upon the railroad, or in the negligent and careless use of defective engines, cars, and other machinery operated thereon, permitted and allowed fire to ignite the weeds, grass, rotten wood, trash, and other combustible material that had been carelessly allowed to accumulate upon the right of way of the railroad, by the throwing out or emission of fire, sparks, live coals, or cinders from the engines, cars, or other machinery, which said fire so kindled was communicated to and upon the land of the petitioner, and thus injured, damaged, and destroyed his property, etc. Negligence was also alleged in allowing the right of way to grow up in grass and weeds, and to have on it trash and other combustible matter. The defendant denied all the allegations of negligence. The jury found for the plaintiff $250. A motion was made for a new trial, which was overruled, and the defendant excepted.

Bennet & Conyers and Littlefield & Poppell, for plaintiff in error. Jas. R. Thomas and C. C. Tindall, for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. (after stating the facts as above). 1. One ground of the motion for a new trial complained that the court incorrectly stated the contentions set out in the defendant's answer, and placed upon it a heavier burden than it assumed, or than the law put upon it. The presiding judge charged that the defendant had filed a plea; that it denied liability, or "that it was in any manner negligent"; that, if the fire was set out by the engine, "it could not be avoided"; and that the company had used all ordinary and reasonable care and diligence in operating, equipping, and providing the engine with the most modern and best known appliances for the purpose of preventing the emission of sparks and fire, and was therefore not liable. The plaintiff alleged certain acts of negligence. The defendant denied them. This charge elaborated the issue thus made in the pleadings, and, in doing so, attributed to the defendant certain positions which were stronger than its denial of the plaintiff's allegations. The plaintiff did not deny that "it was in any manner negligent." It denied that it was guilty of the acts of negligence charged by the plaintiff. Nor did it state in its answer that, if its engine set fire to the property, "it could not be avoided"; nor did it make the affirmative allegation in regard to its appliances mentioned above. It is probable that the presiding judge in charging on these subjects had in mind some of the developments of the evidence, and the contentions which he thought arose out of it. But, as delivered, the charge apparently had reference to the pleadings. Even with reference to the evidence, as will be seen from what has been said above, it placed the defendant in the attitude of making a more rigid contention than was necessary to defeat the plaintiff's action.

2-4. The court also charged that, if the engine set out the fire which burned the property of the plaintiff, "then the law would presume that it was negligently done, unless the company introduces evidence which shows that they did, through their agents, servants, and employes, exercise all ordinary and reasonable care and diligence, and that they had their engine properly equipped with the most modern and best known appliances for the prevention of the setting out of fire," etc. The law declares that a railroad company shall be liable for any damage done to persons or property by the running of its locomotives, cars, or other machinery, unless the company shall make it appear that its agents have exercised all ordinary and reasonable care and diligence; the presumption in all cases being against the company. Civ. Code 1895, § 2321. This statute has been held to apply to cases of fire set out by the running of an engine. When it has been shown that the operation of the engine set out the fire, a presumption arises against the company that it or its agents were guilty of the acts of negligence charged in the petition and connected with the injury; and the burden is shifted to it to show the exercise of all ordinary and reasonable care and diligence in respect thereto. Talmadge v. Central of Ga. Ry. Co., 125 Ga. 400, 54 S. E. 128. The plaintiff cannot recover except upon the acts of negligence set out in the petition. Georgia Brewing Association v. Henderson, 117 Ga. 480, 43 S. E. 698; Hudgins v. Coca Cola Bottling Co., 122 Ga. 695, 50 S. E. 974; Western & Atlantic Railroad Co. v. Branan, 123 Ga. 692, 51 S. E. 650; Augusta Ry. & Elec. Co. v. Weekly, 124 Ga. 384, 52 S. E. 444. And it has been held that the presumption which arises against a railroad company, upon proof of damage to property by the operation of its engine, is that it was guilty of the acts of negligence alleged in the petition. Cen. of Ga. Ry. Co. v. Weathers, 120 Ga. 475, 479, 47 S. E. 956; Ga. Ry. & Elec. Co. v. Reeves, 123 Ga. 698 (8), 51 S. E. 610. In the absence of a request for more specific instructions on this subject, the charge in general terms as to a presumption of negligence arising from proof of damage by fire from the engine, taken in connection with the entire charge, would not require a new trial. Cen. of Ga. Ry. Co. v. Bagley, 121 Ga. 781, 49 S. E. 780. If the presumption arises, it must be rebutted by evidence; but this may be done by evidence drawn from the plaintiff or his witnesses, as well as by that introduced by the defendant. In East Tenn. Ry. Co. v. Hesters, 90 Ga. 11, 15 S. E. 828, it was held that, upon proof that the plaintiff's property was burned by a fire resulting from the emission of sparks by one of the defendant's locomotives whilst running on the road, a presumption of negligence arose, and the burden was on the company to show the exercise of all ordinary and reasonable care and diligence, and that "such care and diligence would include keeping the locomotive in proper condition to be run with ordinary safety, as well as properly managing and operating it whilst the running was in progress at the time and place in question." In Gainesville R. Co. v. Edmondson, 101 Ga. 747, 29 S. E. 213, Mr. Justice Little in the opinion said that, after proof of damage from sparks from a running locomotive and the raising of the presumption of negligence, the burden was on the company to show that the emission of such sparks, or the escape of the fire from the engine, "was not due to the want of ordinary diligence on the part of itself or its servants, either as to the condition of the locomotive or in its management or operation." See, also, Sou. Ry. Co. v. Williams, 113 Ga. 335, 38 S. E. 744. In the case at bar there was involved an additional allegation in regard to whether the defendant had been negligent in allowing grass, weeds, rotten wood, and other combustible material to accumulate on its right of way. The rule is often stated to be that it is the duty of a railroad company, in equipping its trains, to use such appliances as are up to the standard of those in general use and reasonably adapted to the purposes for which they were intended. Alabama Midland Ry. Co. v. Gullford, 119 Ga. 526 (concurring in by five justices), 46 S. E. 655; Higgins v. Cherokee Railroad, 73 Ga. 149 (9b); 2 Thomp. Neg. § 2253, and citations. In the last-cited authority it is said: "It may be collected from many recent holdings that the measure of diligence which the law puts upon a railroad company in this respect is to apply to its engines the best improvements in general use, the use of which is consistent with the practicable operation of its engines, and to use reasonable care and skill in keeping the same in good order. While it has been inadvertently said that they are bound to adopt the latest improvements in general use, yet the better view is that they are not to be charged with negligence in not adopting such an appliance until it has become well known, and until its efficiency has been demonstrated by actual use. The doctrine on which many of the decisions unite cannot better be formulated than by saying that railroad companies, while not bound to use every possible precaution to prevent the escape of fire from their locomotives that the highest scientific skill may have suggested, are required, in the exercise of reasonable care, to avail themselves of the most approved practicable appliances for the purpose."

In the supplement to Thompson on Negligence, edited by Mr. Edward F. White, referring to the above quoted section, it is said: "The recent decisions support the rule that a railroad company in the operation of its locomotives is only required to use ordinary care to provide the same with appliances to prevent the escape of fire. It is not an insurer of the completeness or perfection of the devices adopted. It is not demanded that the company should equip its engines with the 'best approved' spark arrester, but merely with such approved appliances as are in general use." In Texas there is a statute requiring issues of fact to be submitted to the jury, and prohibiting the judge from charging or commenting on the weight of the evidence. The Supreme Court of the state held that it was error to charge that it was the company's duty to equip its engines with the best approved spark arresting devices in use. Missouri Ry. Co. v. Carter, 95 Tex. 461, 68 S. W. 159. In Missouri Ry. Co. v. Hopkins (Tex. Civ. App.) 80 S. W. 414, it was held that "an instruction authorizing recovery if the locomotive setting out a fire was not equipped with the most approved spark arrester in use is erroneous; the duty of the railroad company being only to exercise ordinary care in the selection of spark arresters." See, also, Missouri Ry. Co. v. Jordan (Tex. Civ. App.) 82 S. W. 791; Anderson v. Oregon R. Co., 45 Or. 211, 77 Pac. 119; Frankfort, etc., Turnpike v. Philadelphia, etc., R. Co., 54 Pa. 345, 93 Am. Dec. 708; Hoye v. Chicago, etc., Ry. Co., 46 Minn. 269, 48 N. W. 1117, 1118. In Lesser Cotton Co. v. St. Louis Ry. Co., 114 Fed. 133, 52 C. C. A. 95, it was said that "It is the duty of a railway company to exercise reasonable care to provide itself with the most effective mechanical contrivances in known practical use to prevent the escape of sparks and coals from its engines; but the law does not impose upon it the duty to absolutely provide such contrivances, or make it the insurer of their completeness or perfection." In many of the decisions which state generally that the company must furnish appliances of a certain kind, the question discussed was whether certain evidence authorized a recovery. The form of the charge was not considered. In some states the presiding judge is not prevented from expressing an opinion on the facts, or stating what, in his opinion, would constitute negligence, even when there is no violation of a statute or ordinance. Here he is prevented from so doing by a statute which is so stringent that it has come to be known among the members of the legal profession as the "dumb act." Civ. Code 1895, § 4334; Atlanta & West Point R. Co. v. Hudson, 123 Ga. 108, 51 S. E. 29, and cases there cited. Under our statute, if the evidence has raised a presumption of negligence, it may be rebutted by showing the use of all ordinary and reasonable care and diligence. This rule, requiring the use of ordinary care and diligence, applies to the equipping of the engine with proper appliances to prevent fire, as well as to keeping them in proper repair and to the operation of the engine, and also as to the condition of the right of way. A railroad company is bound to use all ordinary and reasonable care and diligence "to apply to its engines the best improvements in general use, the use of which is consistent with the practicable operation of its engines, and to use reasonable care and skill in keeping the same in order." The charge complained of in effect required the defendant to rebut the presumption against it by proving both the use of all ordinary and reasonable care and diligence, and also that it equipped its engines "with the most modern and best known appliances." This was too stringent.

9. The court charged substantially that actual possession of one claiming as owner would furnish a basis for recovery in favor of the possessor against a wrongdoer, and that, if the company was Mable, "the plaintiff would be entitled to recover such damages as he sustained by reason of the burning of those houses and the burning of that 315 panels of fence, and the cross-ties that he cut and had there upon this land." Actual possession, under claim of ownership, is prima facie evidence of title, and is sufficient, in the absence of anything appearing to the contrary, to authorize a recovery against a wrongdoer for damages to the property. If there is nothing to show that the title or interest of the possessor is less than a freehold, he may recover for damages to the freehold. The contention is that the possessor might be a mere tenant or lessee or owner of an estate less than the fee, and that he should not be allowed to recover except for the injury to his possession. But, in the absence of anything to the contrary, his possession is apparently that of the owner in fee, and would sustain a recovery as such. Southern Ry. Co. v. Horine, 121 Ga. 386, 49 S. E. 285. The language of the charge as to "those houses, the burning of that 315 panels of fence and the cross-ties he cut and had there on his land," is near to, if not actually, an intimation on the facts. As to the measure of damages in that part of the case relating to the loss of standing timber, see Southern Ry. Co. v. Herrington, 128 Ga. 438, 57 S. E. 694.

5. The other grounds of the motion do not require a new trial.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 353)

LYNDON v. GEORGIA RY. & ELECTRIC CO.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. On Rehearing, Oct. 3, 1907.)

1. WRIT OF ERROR—ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR.

Where the case brought to this court or the Court of Appeals is not one in which a judgment on a motion for a new trial is to be reviewed, the plaintiff in error shall plainly and specifically set forth the errors alleged to have been committed.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 2968-2972.]

2. SAME—EXCEPTION TO JUDGMENT.

If exception is taken to a final judgment as being erroneous in itself, the assignment of error should specifically set forth the error or errors in it which are complained of.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 2968, 3025-3027.]

3. SAME—GENERAL EXCEPTIONS.

If the ruling or decision complained of as erroneous is one preceding the final judgment, and, if it is specifically made the subject of exception and of proper assignment of error, and the final judgment is excepted to, not because of additional error in it, but because of the antecedent ruling complained of, which entered into and affected the further progress or final result of the case, a general exception to the final judgment and an exception to and a specific assignment of error on the antecedent ruling will suffice, relatively to the point now under consideration, to give the reviewing court jurisdiction.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 2, Appeal and Error, § 1626.]

4. SAME—AMENDMENT OF PETITION—MATERIAL RULING.

A petition was filed for the recovery of damages on account of personal injuries received by a passenger on a street car by being thrown down by a jerk of the car. The plaintiff offered an amendment, alleging that the conductor refused him equal accommodation with other passengers by failing to furnish him a seat while other passengers were so furnished, and that by reason of being required to stand, he was not able to resist the jerk of the car as he would have done had he been seated, and also that these circumstances and other things alleged created circumstances of aggravation. The trial court refused to allow the amendment. Held, that this ruling cut off a part of the case which the plaintiff claimed the right to set out in his petition as a basis for recovery, and prevented him from relying on a ground of recovery which he sought to set up. It was such a ruling as necessarily controlled the final judgment in the sense that it prevented the plaintiff from placing before the jury at all a substantial allegation of duty violated, constituting negligence, on the basis of which a recovery was claimed. A fortiori it was a material and substantial ruling.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 2, Appeal and Error, § 706.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Action by Oscar Lyndon against the Georgia Railway & Electric Company. A judgment was rendered in favor of defendant, and plaintiff brought error to the Court of Appeals, which certified questions to the Supreme Court.

This case was transmitted to the Supreme Court with the following certificate:

"The Court of Appeals desires the instruction of the Supreme Court as to the following questions of law for the proper decision of the above-stated case, to wit:

"(1) Has this court jurisdiction of a case where the bill of exceptions, brought by the plaintiff in the court below, contains only the following assignments of error: (1) An assignment that the court erred in refusing to allow an amendment to the petition. (2) An assignment upon the final judgment as follows: 'After said rulings the case went to trial regularly on its merits, with submission of evidence and charge of the court, and a verdict was rendered for the defendant, and judgment entered thereon. Having refused to allow the petition to be amended as above recited, and such rulings being controlling, as plaintiff in error contends, in the result of the case, the court erred in permitting said verdict to be rendered and said judgment to be entered. To the action of the court in permitting said verdict to be rendered and said judgment to be entered the plaintiff in error excepted, and now excepts and assigns the same as error, upon the ground that the same was contrary to law, and that the court having refused to let the petition be amended, and such refusal, as plaintiff in error contends, being controlling in effect, the said verdict and judgment could not be a legal termination of the case.'

"(2) Is the assignment of error last mentioned above a sufficient assignment of error upon a final judgment, as contemplated by the decision of the Supreme Court in Newberry v. Tenant, 121 Ga. 561, 49 S. E. 621, and cases therein cited?

"(3) Where a petition is filed for the recovery of damages on account of personal injuries received by a passenger on a street car by being thrown by a jerk of the car, and the plaintiff offered amendments alleging that the conductor refused him equal accommodations with other passengers by failing to furnish him a seat while other passengers were so furnished, and that, by reason of being required to stand, he was not able to resist the jerk of the car as he would have done had he been seated, and also that these circumstances and other things therein alleged created circumstances of aggravation, and the trial court refused the amendments, is an exception to the refusal of the court to allow the amendments a necessarily controlling ruling within the purview of the act approved December 20, 1898, relating to practice in the Supreme Court (Acts 1898, p. 92)? The petition, proposed amendments, and the other portions of the record necessary to the determination of this question are set forth fully in the bill of exceptions and record herewith transmitted; and request is made that the Supreme Court have reference to the same in connection with this question. Counsel for plaintiff in error requests the court to consider and review the case of Hendricks v. Reid, 125 Ga. 775, 54 S. E. 747, and the cases which it follows, and the case of Henderson v. State, 123 Ga. 739, 51 S. E. 764, and any case it may follow, and, pursuant to the rule of this court, the request is transmitted herewith for the action of the Supreme Court."

Henry A. Alexander, for plaintiff in error.
Rosser & Brandon, W. T. Colquitt, and Ben J. Conyers, for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. It is of great importance that rules of practice should be settled, so that attorneys may know how to comply with them in bringing their cases to this court or the Court of Appeals. In the past there has been some difference of views in regard to the sufficiency of certain exceptions and assignments of error; and, where the decision has not been unanimous, it has sometimes resulted in a lack of harmony in rulings. We deem it desirable to arrive at a unanimous decision on the question of practice before us. In a matter not involving substantive law touching the rights of parties, but a matter of practice, it is sometimes better to mutually somewhat modify individual views, where it can be conscientiously done, than to adhere to the letter of former utterances. The holder of each view may contribute something to make a consistent and harmonious rule of practice. The main point involved in the questions certified by the Court of Appeals may be resolved into three questions: (1) Is it necessary to except to a final judgment in order to reverse such judgment, or can it be done by merely excepting to a ruling during the trial? (2) What kind of exception or assignment is required, where the error is in the final judgment itself—in its form or substance? (3) Is the same particularity of exception and assignment as to the final judgment requisite where the error does not arise in the judgment itself, but where the judgment is infected with error by reason of some antecedent error committed during the pendency of the case, or during the trial, which is material, or is controlling, and which enters into the final result?

In Harrell v. Tift, 70 Ga. 730, it was said that "there must be a valid exception to some final ruling of the court below, on which to predicate other assignments of error." In that case the bill of exceptions excepted to and assigned error on the rejection of certain evidence. It then recited the returning of a verdict, and that the bill of exceptions was tendered within 30 days from the end of the term. Apparently there was no exception at all to the final judgment; and the question of what would have been a sufficient exception and assignment of error was not discussed. In Rodgers v. Black, 99 Ga. 142, 25 S. E. 20, it was ruled that "a bill of exceptions which does not complain of any ruling or decision of the trial judge, and contains no assignment of error except the following: 'And the defendant assigns said verdict and judgment as error, the same being contrary to law'—is palpably without merit. As has been repeatedly ruled, a verdict cannot be thus reviewed in the Supreme Court." Here, also, there was not a question as to what exception to or assignment of error upon the final judgment would have sufficed to furnish a basis for exceptions to and assignments of error upon rulings during the trial. It may be mentioned, in passing, that the judgment entered was one of affirmance, rather than dismissal. In Kibben v. Coastwise Dredging Co., 120 Ga. 899, 48 S. E. 330, it was sought to bring to this court a ruling striking an amendment to a petition alone, without any exception being taken to the final judgment. It was held that this could not be done; but what kind of exception to the final judgment was necessary, or what sort of specification of error, was not dealt with. Then came Newberry v. Tenant, 121 Ga. 561, 49 S. E. 621, where it was held that a general statement in a bill of exceptions that "plaintiff excepts to said verdict and judgment as being contrary to law" was not valid; that a direct bill of exceptions to a ruling pendente lite, which did not assign error upon any final judgment, would not be entertained, and therefore that where all the assignments of error were to the rulings pendente lite, except that as to the final judgment, which was as above indicated, the case could not be heard. This went further than the preceding decisions. Only headnotes were filed. They were made by putting two rulings already noticed together, and from them drawing a conclusion. We are not wholly satisfied with a part of it, and we shall modify it and the cases following it. The point of dissatisfaction is this: In order to get rid of a judgment, the plaintiff in error should ask in a legal way to get rid of it; that is, should except to it. If error inherent in the judgment itself is complained of, not only should it be excepted to, but the assignment should specify the error. To illustrate: If the error claimed should be that it did not follow the verdict, or was rendered in vacation without authority of law, or if the case were submitted to the court without a jury, and he decided it on the law and the facts, an assignment of error should not merely generally allege that the judgment was wrong, but show wherein it was wrong. It may be wrong on the law for some reason. It may be wrong on the facts. If the judgment is erroneous, not in itself, but because of antecedent error which entered into or infected it, then there can be no separate and distinct assignment of error on the judgment for other reason than because it was so infected or controlled thereby. If the final judgment is excepted to, and exception is made to an error duly assigned upon the ruling complained of, specifications of error in the ruling need not be repeated in the exceptions to the final judgment, if they alone are relied on as making the judgment erroneous. Hendricks v. Reid, 125 Ga. 775, 54 S. E. 747, merely followed the ruling in Newberry v. Tenant, as to the sufficiency of the assignment, without approving it, but holding it binding until reviewed and reversed or modified. The same is true of Montgomery v. Reynolds, 124 Ga. 1053, 53 S. E. 512. In the Hendricks Case there was no exception at all save to interlocutory rulings.

The case of Henderson v. State, 123 Ga. 739, 51 S. E. 764, not only produced a diversity of opinions among the members of this bench, but it is feared has been somewhat misapprehended by some of the members of the bar. The writer of the majority opinion, in dealing with and having in view the specific subject before him—an effort to segregate a ruling and bring it up apparently under the act of 1898 (Acts 1898, p. 92)—and in referring to the “short form” of bill of exceptions under that act, as contrasted with bringing up the case “in the usual form,” did not describe or state in detail what was meant by “the usual form.” On page 749 of 123 Ga., on page 768 of 51 S. E., it was said that: “There are two ways by which a case may be brought to this court. One is by the usual and ordinary methods of procedure. The other, for convenience, may be called the ‘short form.’” The expression “short form” referred to excepting to the judgment, decree, or verdict, segregating a certain ruling, assigning error on it, and bringing it up as a necessarily controlling ruling in the brief mode set out in the act of 1898. What was the “usual form” referred to in the second headnote, or the “usual and ordinary methods of procedure” referred to in the excerpt from the opinion above quoted, as contrasted with the short form mentioned? Obviously it referred to some form or methods for bringing cases to this court which were usual before or aside from the act of 1898. What were they? The forms and methods under the act of 1889 (Civ. Code 1895, § 5528 et seq.), which are published in the Code in a chapter headed, “Of Taking Cases to the Supreme Court,” and in an article entitled, “Mode of Procedure.” The majority of this court did not hold that these sections were repealed or any right of exception under them was cut off by the act of 1898; but that the act sought to provide a brief method for excepting to a verdict or judgment and assigning error on rulings which were necessarily controlling. Thus ordinarily, to determine whether rulings on evidence, or as to matters of practice in the trial of the case, or charges and the like, are erroneous, or, if so, are of such materiality as to cause a reversal, it is necessary to have a brief of evidence in the bill of exceptions or the record under the general law. The question of what exceptions to rulings require the presence of evidence is not here involved. This question arises on a ruling as to pleading. By the act of 1898, the majority of the court thought that the Legislature intended to provide a briefer mode of procedure in certain cases, but that, in order to proceed under that act, the case must be brought within its terms; and that, while the act of 1889 provided for omitting the evidence where it is unnecessary, and certifying to that fact, the two acts were not identical in all respects, and the Legislature had not merely re-enacted the sections of the Code. In the opinion in the Henderson Case, it was also stated, though not elaborated, that there was no brief of the evidence, and no exception at all to the final judgment—nothing, in fact, but an effort to except to two rulings pending the trial. Apparently it was sought to except under the act of 1898, but the majority of this court thought the bill of exceptions was not sufficient. Our learned Brother Cobb differed from the majority. He thought that the act of 1898 added nothing to and detracted nothing from the law as it already stood, but merely redeclared the existing law. His views will be found in his dissenting opinion stated fully and more cogently than the writer can state them.

This extended reference to the Henderson Case is made not with the intention of again discussing the two views there presented, but in order to show that there may have been some misunderstanding of what was said in that case, and that in fact, the two views are not so wide apart or so irreconcilable as may have been supposed, or as to preclude a conscientious reconciliation and meeting on a common ground, at least as to the questions now presented by the Court of Appeals. Briefly, then, we may say that we all concur in holding that the act of 1889, codified as stated above, has not been repealed or restricted by the act of 1898, and that what could have been done before the act of 1898 can still be done. Whether or not there are cases as to which the act of 1898 authorizes a short or brief form of bill of exceptions, which might not suffice under the prior law, is immaterial to the question now in hand.

Section 5526 of the Civil Code of 1895, reads as follows: “No cause shall be carried to the Supreme Court upon any bill of exceptions, so long as the same is pending, in the court below, unless the decision or judgment complained of, if it had been rendered as claimed by the plaintiff in error, would have been a final disposition of the cause, or final as to some material party thereto; but, at any stage of the cause, either party may file his exceptions to any decision, sentence, or decree of the superior court; and if the same is certified and allowed, it shall be entered of record in the cause; and should the case at its final determination be carried by a writ of error to the Supreme Court by either party, error may be assigned upon such bill of exceptions, and a reversal and new trial may be allowed thereon, when it is manifest that such erroneous decision of the court has or may have affected the final result of the case.” As to the rulings prior to the original Code, see Carter v. Buchanan, 2 Ga. 337; Jones v. Dougherty, 11 Ga. 305; Johns v. Fuller, 13 Ga. 506; Allen v. Ball, 9 Ga. 286 (3), 293 (cited by Mr. Justice Cobb, in Kelly v. Strouse, 116 Ga. 884, 885, 43 S. E. 280). It is unnecessary to discuss decisions as to what judgments fall within the meaning of this law. Nor are we dealing with what assignment is sufficiently specific as to judgments on applications for injunctions, and the like. In Civ. Code 1895, § 5528, it is said that “the plaintiff in error shall plainly and specifically set forth the errors alleged to have been committed.” In the case before us a verdict was found and final judgment was rendered. Exception was taken to and error assigned on the ruling rejecting the amendment. Exception was also made and error assigned on allowing the verdict to be taken and judgment entered, because the erroneous ruling entered into and affected the final judgment, or, as the bill of exceptions alleged, controlled it. Was this sufficient? What more could the plaintiff in error have said? If taken alone and disconnected from the ruling which the plaintiff thought erroneous, he did not contend that the judgment was error, or that he could assign some other error in it. He could do nothing truthfully but what he did, and we think the law required no more. In such a case we think it would suffice to keep the plaintiff in error in court to show how the case terminated, to except generally to the final judgment, and duly assign error in the ruling really complained of.

As a result of what has been said, we answer the questions certified to us by the Court of Appeals as follows:

(1) The assignment of error upon the refusal to allow the amendment to the petition, and that upon the final judgment was sufficient to give the Court of Appeals jurisdiction.

(2) The assignment of error on the final judgment in this case is sufficient in specification, even under the decision in Newberry v. Tenant, 121 Ga. 561, 49 S. E. 621, and cases therein cited; but we think that the decision in that case laid down too stringent a measure as to the requirement of specification of an assignment of error on the final judgment, where the only real error complained of is in some antecedent ruling or decision, and the final judgment is not complained of for some independent error inhering in itself, but because the ruling claimed to be erroneous controlled or affected the final result. Of course, a general exception and assignment of error would not alone suffice, nor would it raise any question as to errors other than those pointed out.

(3) The refusal to allow the amendment to the petition involved in this case, if erroneous, was such a controlling error as could be brought up under the act of 1898, and a fortiori a substantial ruling, which, if erroneous, would be a material error, reviewable under the provisions of the Code, upon a proper bill of exceptions brought up in accordance therewith. We do not hold broadly that all rulings on amendments to pleadings are necessarily controlling rulings, or even substantial, but that the ruling here complained of is so. It cut off a material part of the case the plaintiff sought to set up in his pleading and to base a recovery upon, and thus limited the range and scope of his case. Wright v. Hollywood Cemetery Corporation, 112 Ga. 884, 38 S. E. 94, 52 L. R. A. 621.

If anything which may have been said in any of the cases referred to, or those cited in them, or following them, conflicts with what is here ruled, it is modified accordingly. But we think, as stated above, such conflict is often more apparent than real, when the cases are carefully considered, and results from expressions here and there which were not really necessary to the points decided.

On Rehearing.

Just before the close of the March term, 1907, of this court, which by operation of law must end, at the latest, on the Saturday before the beginning of the October term, counsel for defendant in error in the Court of Appeals applied for a reopening of the decision made by us, and a further hearing, on the ground that, if the Court of Appeals should decide that there was error at all in the rejection of the amendment offered, yet, comparing it with the original petition of the plaintiff and the amendment allowed, after the parts stricken on demurrer were eliminated, no injury could have resulted to the plaintiff, because there was enough in his pleading to raise all the questions which he could legitimately make with the aid of the amendment. We must decline the motion. No such question as this was made by the questions certified to us by the Court of Appeals, as we construe them. The merits of the case were not before us. We only passed upon the questions presented. We cannot reopen the case for argument on a point thus suggested.

It was further asked that counsel have leave to have additional record sent to this court to indicate that the evidence submitted on the trial, and the charge of the court would throw any light on the question of whether any injury was done to the plaintiff. There are several reasons why we cannot grant this request, among them being what has just been said, and that the case was carried from the trial court to the Court of Appeals, not to this court, and comes here on questions certified and the record sent from that court; and also that, on inquiry, counsel frankly admitted that neither the evidence nor the charge had ever been written out or filed and become a part of the record, and therefore the suggestion was not to have an existing record sent up, but to add to the record now on file in the trial court, and have the addition transmitted.

(129 Ga. 403)

GILLIS v. POWELL.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 8, 1907.)

1. WRIT OF ERROR—RECORD—NEW TRIAL—REVIEW.

A ground of a motion for a new trial, which contains an assignment of error upon the refusal of the judge to continue the case, will not be considered when the evidence introduced on the motion to continue is not set forth in the motion for new trial, nor attached thereto as an exhibit, but reference must be had to the brief of the evidence in order to ascertain the same.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 2944-2946.]

2. NEW TRIAL—GROUNDS—AMENDMENT TO PETITION.

Exception to the allowance of an amendment to the petition cannot properly be made in motion for a new trial.

3. SAME—DEMURRER—MOTION TO DISMISS—EXCEPTION.

Exception to a judgment overruling a demurrer to the petition or motion to dismiss a case, for the reason that the petition is insufficient in law, cannot be properly made the ground of a motion for a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, New Trial, § 25.]

4. SLANDER—MALICE—EVIDENCE—AGE.

Where the matter under investigation is whether the words or conduct of a person is malicious, the age of the person may not, in some circumstances, be an immaterial fact.

5. SAME—PRIVILEGE.

Words uttered in good faith, for the sole purpose of securing or preserving evidence to be used in the prosecution of one for a crime of which the speaker was the victim, are privileged.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 32, Libel and Slander, § 149.]

6. SAME—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—APPLICABILITY TO PLEADING.

The answer of the defendant, when properly construed, did not contain any admission that the defendant had uttered the words charged in the petition, and an instruction having the effect to convey to the mind of the jury the impression that the answer contained such admission was erroneous.

7. SAME.

Some of the instructions complained of were calculated to weaken the defense of privileged communications, even if they did not entirely take away the defense.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Worth County; W. N. Spence, Judge.

Action by S. A. Powell against W. D. Gillis. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant brings error. Reversed.

Powell sued Gillis for slander, laying his damages in the sum of $2,000. The petition alleged that the defendant "did maliciously say of and concerning your petitioner, on the 2d day of August, 1902, the following false and defamatory words, to wit: 'S. A. Powell swore a lie.'" It is alleged that the defendant on the date named, in the presence of divers good and worthy citizens, used language of and concerning the plaintiff, the purport of which was to charge him with the offense of perjury, which is a crime punishable under the laws of this state; that the plaintiff is a poor, hard-working man, respected by his neighbors, and filling offices of trust and responsibility, to wit, constable and postmaster; that being charged with an offense of the grave character above referred to is calculated to injure him in his standing in the community, and especially when used by a person of the standing and character of the defendant, who is a man of great wealth and influence; that the charge against plaintiff was made immediately after the defendant had lost a case in which he was the plaintiff and the plaintiff was the defendant; that the defendant was merely venting his malice when he uttered the words; that the use of the words, under the circumstances and with this motive, was an aggravated injury, both in the act and in the intent. By amendment the plaintiff alleged that in August, 1902, the defendant, in a certain discourse of and concerning the plaintiff, in the presence of Lott Branch and other good and worthy citizens, falsely said of and concerning the plaintiff the following false and malicious words: "Bink Powell [meaning the plaintiff] swore a lie, and I will prosecute him when the grand jury meets." The defendant filed an answer, in which he denied using the language charged in the petition. He averred that all that he said of the plaintiff was in his testimony on the trial of the case in the justice's court, so far as he recollected, and he did not use the language charged, or anything of like purport, and what was said on the trial was without malice, and was true. It is also averred that defendant stands ready to prove the truth of any utterance made concerning the plaintiff on that day, and that whatever the defendant said was privileged and made in good faith, with a view to protecting his own interest, without malice and with no purpose whatever to injure or defame the plaintiff. In an amendment to the answer, the defendant denied that he used the language stated in the amendment, or any language of like purport, to Lott Branch or in his presence, or in the presence or hearing of any person whatever, and here reiterated the statement made in the original answer, that whatever the defendant said to Lott Branch, or any other person, was true, and said in good faith and with a view to preserving the testimony to be used in a then contemplated prosecution of the plaintiff. The trial resulted in a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for $2,000, and the defendant assigns error upon the overruling of the motion for a new trial.

T. R. Perry and J. H. Tipton, for plaintiff in error. Sam S. Bennet, Claude Payton, and Frank Park, for defendant in error.

COBB, P. J. (after stating the facts as above). 1. One ground of the motion for a new trial assigns error upon the refusal of the judge to continue the case. The complete showing for the continuance is not set out in the ground; but for the evidence introduced on the showing reference is made to the brief of the evidence filed in the case. Under repeated rulings of this court, this ground cannot be considered. This court will not consider an assignment of error in a ground of the motion for a new trial which is not complete in itself, or which may not be rendered complete by an exhibit to the motion itself. It is not permissible to refer to the brief of the evidence, or other parts of the record, in order to complete the ground of the motion.

2. Another ground of the motion complained of the ruling of the judge allowing the amendment to the petition. An assignment of error of this character cannot properly be made a ground of a motion for a new trial. It is only necessary to cite one of the more recent cases on this question. Lowery v. Idleson, 117 Ga. 778, 45 S. E. 51.

3. Another ground of the motion for a new trial assigns error upon the judgment overruling the demurrer to the petition and motion to dismiss the same. Such a ruling cannot properly be made a ground of a motion for a new trial. It is only necessary to cite one of the more recent decisions on the question. Willis v. Harrell, 118 Ga. 906, 45 S. E. 794 (1).

4. Error is assigned upon the refusal of the judge to allow the defendant to prove, by himself, when he was on the stand, that he was 72 years of age. The court rejected this testimony, upon the ground that it was irrelevant. The contention is that the evidence should have been admitted to be considered by the jury on the question as to whether, considering the age of the defendant in connection with the other circumstances in the case, the words uttered by him were uttered with malice, or, as contended by the defendant, in good faith, and for the purpose of enforcing a criminal law in a matter where he was interested. While we do not think that it would have been erroneous for the judge to admit the testimony, still we do not think that his refusal to do so was an error of such a character as would necessarily require the granting of a new trial. The defendant was before the jury. They could judge themselves as to his condition, both mental and physical; and these were proper matters for them to take into consideration. The exact number of years that he had lived would not have aided them materially in determining whether, from his condition, mental and physical, and his temperament, as indicated by his manner and testimony, the charge made against the plaintiff was likely to have been malicious or made in good faith. The important elements in the case were before the jury; that is, the general appearance of the man, the state of his mind and body, and his temperament, as indicated by what he said and the manner in which it was said.

5. The original petition alleged the words to be, "S. A. Powell swore a lie," and that they were uttered on August 2, 1903. These words standing alone would import the crime of false swearing rather than perjury. Smith v. Wright, 55 Ga. 218. But it is also alleged that the words were uttered immediately after the trial of a case between the parties, and the inference is that the plaintiff had testified as a witness. The words of the character indicated, uttered in such circumstances, would be equivalent to a charge of perjury. The amendment alleged the words spoken were: Powell "swore a lie, and I will prosecute him when the grand jury meets." These words import the offense of false swearing, and there is nothing to indicate what were the circumstances in which they were uttered. The witness Branch testified that he was the justice who tried the case between the parties, and that when Gillis, who had lost the case, paid the costs, he said that Powell swore a lie, and wanted him "to bear it in mind," but he did not say anything about the grand jury. Another witness, Taylor, testified that, soon after the trial in the justice's court, Gillis said to him that Powell swore a lie, and he was going to get a bill against him when the grand jury met. Hall, a constable, testified that he was present when Gillis paid the costs to Branch, and he heard him say to Branch that Powell had sworn falsely and he was going to prosecute him, and that he wanted Branch to bear in mind what Powell had sworn. The defendant testified that he remembered the conversation with the justice of the peace, and that he intended to have the plaintiff arrested for perjury, and he told the justice to be sure and keep in mind what the plaintiff had testified. He also swore that he presented the case to the grand jury, but they did not act on it. He said that to the best of his recollection he told the justice that he intended to prosecute the plaintiff for perjury, and he wanted him to keep fresh in his mind all of the testimony in the case; that he did not want to injure anybody, but that the plaintiff certainly owed him on the notes that he had sued on. He denied having any conversation with the witness Taylor. It appears, from the evidence, that in the suit in the justice's court the plaintiff in the present case was the defendant, and that he swore that he had paid the notes. That he had not paid them with money is now admitted; but it is claimed that what was meant by payment in the testimony thus delivered was a transaction between the plaintiff and defendant, which was incomplete at the time of the trial, but which one party considered as satisfying the obligation and the other party did not. The evidence is of such a character as to authorize a finding that each side could be honestly mistaken in their statement when one swore that the notes were paid and the other that they were not. There could have been an honest difference of opinion as to the legal effect of the transaction as it stood on that day. While all the evidence indicates that the plaintiff in the present case, when he swore that he had paid the notes, was mistaken, and the notes were not paid, the effect of the charge made by the defendant against the plaintiff, when he said that he swore to a lie in the trial, was that he had committed willful perjury. And there was evidence in the present case from which the jury could find that the testimony of the witness, although not true, was not willfully false. When the character of the words uttered and the circumstances in which they were spoken are considered, the effect of the words was to charge the plaintiff with the crime of perjury. Bryan v. Gurr, 27 Ga. 378; Salmons v. Tait, 31 Ga. 676; Brown v. Hanson, 53 Ga. 632. To utter of another words which impute to him a crime punishable by law is slander, and the wrong thus committed is actionable without proof of special damage. Civ. Code 1895, § 383. From motives of public policy, however, the law will sometimes relieve a person who makes a false charge against another from liability for damages. Communications which would otherwise be slanderous are protected as privileged, if made in good faith and in the prosecution of an inquiry regarding a crime which has been committed, and for the purpose of detecting and bringing to punishment the criminal. Chapman v. Battle, 124 Ga. 574, 52 S. E. 812. There is no crime known to the law which is more odious than the crime of perjury, and the law authorizes a prosecution for this offense, as well as all others, either at the instance of the person aggrieved or any other citizen who may be interested in the preservation and maintenance of the law. Therefore, in a well-defined case, where it appears that the words were uttered in good faith and for the sole purpose of bringing to punishment the supposed perjurer, and the element of malice is not at all present, and the communication is made at a time and place and to a person when all the circumstances indicate purely an intention to vindicate the law, one who makes a statement which may afterwards develop to be false will be protected, and not rendered liable to be mulcted in damages. But one who intends to prosecute another for the crime of perjury must make known his intentions in reference to the same at a time and place and to persons that are proper. If made at other times and other places and to other persons, the communication is made at his peril; and, if what is stated is false, he must bear the consequences resulting from the slander. See, in this connection, Atlanta News Pub. Co. v. Medlock, 123 Ga. 714, 51 S. E. 756, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1189; Holmes v. Clisby, 121 Ga. 241, 48 S. E. 934, 104 Am. St. Rep. 103; Sheftall v. Central of Ga. Ry. Co., 123 Ga. 589, 51 S. E. 646. Whether the communication is made at a proper time and proper place and to a proper person is a question for the jury in the particular case. If the time and place are not proper, there is no privilege. If the person is not one to whom the communication is necessary to be made to effectuate the purpose of vindicating the law, there is no privilege. If the time and place and person are all appropriate, but the manner and form of the communication are such as to indicate, not a desire to vindicate the law, but to injure and defame the person whose name is disclosed in the communication, the privilege does not exist. The privilege is given by the law for a wise purpose, and the law will not tolerate its being used to vent the malice of any individual, even though he may be one who thinks he has been grievously wronged.

6. The judge charged the jury: "You have the right to show that the language was used by admissions or confessions either in the pleadings or from the witnesses." The error assigned upon the charge is that, as there were no admissions in the pleadings, it was misleading to the jury and prejudicial to the defendant. The answer and amended answer each denied that the defendant had uttered the words charged in the petition, or any words of like import. It is true that the answer alleged that the defendant was ready to prove the truth of any words that may have been spoken by him on the day of the trial in the justice's court, but there was no evidence as to any words spoken on that day. Properly construed, we do not think that the answer contained any admission that the words charged in the petition were uttered by the defendant. In the circumstances of the present case, we are of the opinion that this erroneous interpretation of the plea was prejudicial to the defendant.

7. The judge charged the jury: "In considering that question [the question as to whether the defendant used the language that he is shown to have used bona fide, in an effort to preserve the testimony of the witnesses with a view to instituting criminal prosecution against the plaintiff], gentlemen, you will take into consideration the nature of the crime charged against the plaintiff, see what the nature of it was, and see whether the evidence shows that the plaintiff really did commit any crime; see whether he, the defendant, had the knowledge of whether the plaintiff had really committed the crime of perjury; see whether it rested with the defendant in this case, or whether he—so as to determine—see whether he had personal knowledge of it, or whether he didn't have personal knowledge of it, so as to see whether he was acting in good faith, bona fide, in good faith, intending to institute a prosecution against the defendant for perjury, or whether he was simply using that as a slander to perpetrate the slanderous words or defame the character of the plaintiff." This charge is assigned as error for various reasons, but it is only necessary to refer to the assignment setting up that the effect of the charge was to deprive the defendant of his main defense, that of privileged communication. The judge, in effect, says that Gillis would not be protected under his plea of privilege unless Powell had really committed the crime and Gillis had personal knowledge of it. The plea of privilege is broader than this. If Gillis had no personal knowledge in reference to the matter, but honestly and in good faith believed that Powell was guilty of perjury, and there were reasonable and probable grounds upon which to base this belief, and he took steps to inaugurate a prosecution with no other purpose than a vindication of the law, words spoken by him at proper times and places and to proper persons, for the sole purpose of effectuating the prosecution, would be privileged, even though it should finally develop that Powell was innocent. There is in this charge, and also in some other portions of the charge, an indication that the judge had construed the answer as in the nature of a plea of justification, and some of the instructions place upon the defendant the onerous burden resulting from such a plea. As we construe the answer, it contained both a general denial and a plea of privilege. It is true that these are inconsistent, but that is permissible under our practice. The defendant, in effect, says: "I do not remember what I said, but I did not say what is charged, and whatever I did say was solely for the purpose of preserving evidence to effectuate a prosecution for crime." The plea of privilege should have set forth the words admitted to have been used, and then alleged the circumstances showing that they were privileged; but this defect was one that was subject only to special demurrer, and the judge did not err in submitting the defense of privilege to the jury. In fact, it would have been erroneous to do otherwise, as the evidence under the plea had been admitted without objection. Bryan v. Gurr, 27 Ga. 378.

We think the errors above referred to are such as to require a reversal of the judgment, in order that the defendant may receive the full benefit of his plea of privilege. If, on another trial, it should appear that the defendant had probable cause to institute a prosecution of Powell for perjury, and what he said in reference to his testimony at the trial in the justice's court was said in good faith and without malice, and to the proper persons, at proper times and places, he would be entitled to a verdict in his favor. On the other hand, if it should appear that he was animated by malice in his statements, the plaintiff would be entitled to recover. There are assignments of error upon the charge other than those that have been commented upon, but we do not consider it necessary to discuss them in detail. From what has been said it can be readily seen whether any of these instructions will be appropriate to the case on another trial.

Judgment reversed. All the Justices concur.

(129 Ga. 143)

ROBERT R. SIZER & CO. v. G. T. MELTON & SONS.

(Supreme Court of Georgia. Oct. 5, 1907.)

1. REFERENCE — REPORT — EXCEPTIONS — AMENDMENT.

Since the passage of the act of 1894 (Civ. Code 1895, § 4589), requiring exceptions to an auditor's report to be filed within 20 days, if an amendment can be allowed at all after the expiration of that time so as to add a new and distinct exception to those already made, it would at least be necessary to show some good and sufficient reason why the exception was not filed with the others in due time.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 42, Reference, § 159.]

2. SAME.

No such reason appears in the present case.

3. EVIDENCE — ADMISSION — INTERROGATORIES — ANSWERS — DIFFERENT CASE.

A party's answer to interrogatories are evidence against him as admissions, though the interrogatories may belong to a different case.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 20, Evidence, §§ 739-743.]

4. DISCOVERY — ANSWERS TO INTERROGATORIES — ADMISSION.

The mere fact that a corporation sued out interrogatories for its "vice president and southern manager" in one case would not of itself render his answers admissible in another case as admissions of the company; and this is specially true where it did not appear that they were introduced in evidence by the principal.

5. WITNESSES — REFRESHING RECOLLECTION — MEMORANDUM.

A witness may refresh and assist his memory by the use of a written instrument or memorandum, provided he finally speaks from his recollection thus refreshed, or is willing to swear positively from the paper. In order to swear positively from the paper, it is essential that the witness should at some time have had personal knowledge of the correctness of the memorandum.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 50, Witnesses, §§ 803-892.]

6. SAME — SUBPENA DUCES TECUM — SUFFICIENCY.

If a subpoena duces tecum was served in a case pending before an auditor, and the papers called for were produced and used in evidence, the sufficiency of the subpoena to require the production and the ruling of the auditor on that subject became immaterial questions.

7. SALES — CONTRACT TO DELIVER — BREACH — MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

The general rule is that the measure of damages recoverable of a seller for failure to deliver goods sold is the difference between the contract price and the market value at the time and place for delivery; and it is incumbent on one who seeks to recover such damages to submit evidence as to the market price at the time and place for delivery, in order to recover compensatory damages.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 43, Sales, §§ 1174-1201.]

8. SAME — ABSENCE OF MARKET VALUE.

To this general rule as to the measure of damages there are some exceptions, as, for instance, growing out of contracts in relation to the sale or furnishing of things which are not dealt with in the market, and have no market price in the ordinary sense of that term, or contracts in regard to the manufacture of certain articles.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 43, Sales, § 1182.]

9. SAME.

It cannot be held as matter of law that the lumber, the sale of which is involved in the present case, had no market value, and that the auditor erred in referring to the market value in considering the measure of damages.

10. REFERENCE—REPORT—IMMATERIAL ERRORS.

Where it was found in an auditor's report that a seller was not liable at all for alleged breaches of contracts to deliver lumber, if this finding should be affirmed, inaccuracies in his report, in discussing what would have been the measure of damages if the liability had existed, would be immaterial.

11. TRIAL—MISCONDUCT OF JURY—VERDICT—PUBLICATION—OBJECTIONS—WAIVER.

Where, in a civil case, after the judge had concluded his charge to the jury, by agreement of counsel he instructed the sheriff that, if the jury found a verdict by a certain hour, the judge and counsel should be notified, and that the court would reconvene to receive the verdict, but, if it should be found after that hour, they should prepare a sealed verdict and disperse for the night, and the verdict should be returned in to court on the following day, and where the jury found a verdict before the hour designated in the judge's instructions, but without communicating with the court or counsel, sealed it up, delivered it to the clerk, and dispersed, and the verdict was returned into court on the following morning, the jury were called into the box, and in their presence and that of the court and counsel the verdict was published by the clerk, if counsel knew the facts, it was incumbent on them to object to the reception and publication of the verdict before it was done. If they failed to do so, it was a waiver of the irregularity.

12. WRIT OF ERROR—REVIEW.

None of the other rulings complained of require a reversal.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Appling County; T. A. Parker, Judge.

Action by G. T. Melton & Sons against Robert R. Sizer & Co. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant brings error on separate bills of exceptions. Reversed.

G. T. Melton & Sons sued out an attachment against Robert R. Sizer & Co., a corporation of the state of New York. The declaration in attachment alleged, in brief, as follows: During the year 1901 Robert R. Sizer, doing business under the name and style of Robert R. Sizer & Co., was engaged in buying and selling lumber, and shipping it from the port of Brunswick, Ga., and had an office in that city. While so engaged, the plaintiffs entered into certain contracts with the defendant for the manufacture, sale, and delivery of certain lumber. The agreements were originally entered into verbally with Sizer, doing business under the name of Robert R. Sizer & Co., during the latter part of the year 1901. On or about January 1, 1902, Robert R. Sizer, without the knowledge of or notice to the plaintiffs, surreptitiously, clandestinely, and with intent to cheat and defraud the plaintiffs, incorporated the business under the laws of New York under the same name and style as that which he had been using previously. No change in letterheads or stationery was made, so as to put the public on notice of any incorporation. Plaintiffs did not know of the fact of the incorporation. The company gave written orders for the lumber under the same name and style, and the plaintiffs furnished it. The corporation, having thus ordered the lumber, received, used, and converted it. Defendant only paid for a part of the lumber so furnished, leaving a balance due of $1,665.45. Subsequently to the delivery of the lumber the plaintiffs learned that Sizer had transferred his business to Robert R. Sizer & Co., as a corporation, including all existing contracts and liabilities connected with the business, which were assumed and accepted by the company. After January 1, 1902, the corporation was the only person engaged in the lumber business in Brunswick under the name and style stated. It was alleged in a second count that the plaintiffs sold and delivered to the defendant the lumber, and that the defendant accepted it at the prices stated. In a third count it was alleged that the plaintiffs delivered the lumber to the corporation and the latter received it; that it was of the fair market value of the prices charged, as set out in an exhibit; and that the defendant made certain payments, but refused to pay the balance. Defendant demurred to the declaration, and objected to the amendments adding counts. The case was referred to an auditor. He found in favor of the plaintiffs $1,664.93 principal. A motion was made to re-refer the case for fuller report, which was overruled. Exceptions of law and fact were filed by the defendant. It was allowed to amend by adding an exception of law, which complained of the overruling of the demurrer. To this the plaintiffs excepted pendente lite. The exceptions of law were overruled. The exceptions of fact were submitted to a jury, who found against them. Defendant moved for a new trial, which was refused, and it excepted.

Kay, Bennet & Conyers, for plaintiff in error. N. J. Holton and Harry F. Dunwoody, for defendant in error.

LUMPKIN, J. (after stating the facts as above). In musical parlance, this case may be said to comprehend a theme and variations. The theme is the question of the liability of a corporation which obtained a charter in the same name as that in which an individual (previously conducting the business) had agreed to buy lumber, gave orders for the lumber in that name, without any notice of change to the vendors, received and used it, recognizing the prices charged as proper, partly paid for what it received, and then declined to pay the balance due. The principal variation arises from a claim of recoupment set up by the defendant on account of an alleged noncompliance by the plaintiffs with their contracts as to the furnishing of the lumber. Minor variations include a motion to recommit the case to the auditor, objections to amendments, exceptions to the report, a motion for a new trial after verdict of the jury on the exceptions of fact, and a bill of exceptions and a cross-bill (all forming a sort of double chromatic scale, extending up and down, with the addition of a few extra notes beyond the 26 which would suffice to constitute a complete double scale).

1, 2. The auditor to whom the case was referred found in favor of the plaintiffs. The defendant filed exceptions to his report. After the lapse of 20 days, an amendment was tendered, making an additional exception. This amendment was allowed over objection, and this ruling has been brought here by a cross-bill of exceptions filed by the defendant in error. The ground of the exception was as follows: The auditor's report stated that "at the time appointed to take testimony, and before hearing the same, I heard argument upon the demurrers filed by the defendant, and I overruled the demurrers on all the grounds therein, all of which is a matter of record in said cause." The errors assigned were (a) that this was contrary to law; (b) because there is no record or entry made by the auditor overruling said demurrers; (c) because there could be no overruling of the demurrers, except by a formal order signed by the auditor for that purpose; (d) because the auditor should have found in favor of the demurrers, and should have passed and signed an order sustaining each and all of the grounds thereof. If the auditor failed to pass on some necessary question, the proper remedy was by a motion for a re-reference, rather than by exception to the report. Fricker v. Americus Improvement Co., 124 Ga. 165, 52 S. E. 65. The auditor stated in his report that he had overruled the demurrers, and we incline to think that this amounted to a ruling on that subject. But, whether it did or not, what the auditor did was just as clear and complete when he filed his report; and gave notice of it as it was at any time thereafter. It is very doubtful whether, after the expiration of the 20 days allowed by law for filing exceptions, a new and distinct exception can be added to those already filed by way of amendment. If it can be done at all, such an amendment is not a matter of course, but some good and sufficient reason must be shown for its allowance. To permit a party to file a formal exception to an auditor's report within 20 days, and then add new grounds of exception at any time thereafter when he may so desire, as matter of right, would practically destroy the purpose of the statute. Civ. Code 1895, § 4589; Moss v. Chappell, 126 Ga. 196, 199, 54 S. E. 968, and citations. Here no sufficient reason was shown why this exception should not have been filed in due time. If what the auditor did was erroneous and furnished ground for exception, it was just as erroneous when he did it as it ever became. The presiding judge erred in allowing the amendment; but he corrected the error, as far as he could, by overruling the exception and adding to his order a statement that the demurrers themselves were overruled.

3, 4. In another case than that on trial the evidence of the vice president and southern manager of the defendant had been taken by interrogatories. In the present case these interrogatories and answers were offered by the plaintiffs to show admissions of material facts. Objection was made to this evidence, but it was overruled, and this furnished a ground of exception to the auditor's report. "A party's answers to interrogatories are evidence against him as admissions, though the interrogatories may belong to a different case." Whitlock v. Crew, 28 Ga. 289 (3); Maxwell v. Harrison, 8 Ga. 61, 52 Am. Dec. 385 (5). The interrogatories and answers offered in this case were not those of a party, but of an officer and agent of a corporation taken in another case. For them to be admissible against the principal, it must be on one of two theories—either because the agent had authority to make the admissions for his principal, or else because his testimony was taken and so dealt with by the corporation as to become a quasi admission by it. Testifying as a witness in a lawsuit is no part of the res gestæ of the transaction involved in the litigation, and, as a general rule, the declarations of an agent, to affect his principal, must be a part of the res gestæ. Savannah, Florida & Western Ry. Co. v. Flannagan, 82 Ga. 580 (5), 587, 588, 9 S. E. 471, 14 Am. St. Rep. 183. The title of vice president does not in itself imply authority to make admissions for a corporation. The title of southern manager may imply authority to manage business in the south. But testifying as a witness is not such a normal part of the lumber business as that testimony given by him as a witness is impliedly an admission of the lumber company. The decision in Krogg v. Atlanta & West Point Railroad, 77 Ga. 202, 4 Am. St. Rep. 77, probably went as far as any case in this state on the admissions of an agent. It has been since criticised, explained, and differentiated. Carroll v. East Tenn. Ry. Co., 82 Ga. 452, 476, 10 S. E. 163, 6 L. R. A. 214; Electric Ry. Co. v. Carson, 98 Ga. 652, 27 S. E. 156; Chattanooga R. Co. v. Liddell, 85 Ga. 492, 11 S. E. 853, 21 Am. St. Rep. 169. In the Krogg Case the statement of the general manager was said to have been made while acting in the line of his duty. And so likewise of the president in Imboden v. Etowah Mining Co., 70 Ga. 86 (12c). In Dobbins v. Pyrolusite Manganese Co., 75 Ga. 450, the admission of the president was apparently made in connection with the business of the company. On the other theory, the matter might be disposed of by saying that it was stated in the record that the interrogatories were sued out in another case, but it was not shown that they were introduced in evidence by the corporation, and the mere suing out by a party of the interrogatories or taking the depositions of a witness does not render them admissible against him as an implied admission in a subsequent litigation. Hovey v. Hovey, 9 Mass. 216; Hallett v. O'Brien, 1 Ala. 585, 589. But, had it appeared that they were introduced on the former trial, would this alone have made them admissible? We think not. If a party makes an express admission, or if he expressly states that a certain piece of evidence given by another is correct, it may be introduced against him. The ground on which the admissibility of implied admissions rests is this: If the conduct of a party is such as to amount to or imply an admission, this may be shown; thus if one conceals evidence, or seeks to bribe a witness, or remains silent when he should deny a statement, or the like. And so, in a lawsuit, if one knowingly offers a particular statement for a specific purpose, he may impliedly make it his own admission. But a litigant does not by implication approve and adopt as his own all statements in depositions, testimonies, and affidavits offered in his behalf, so that afterwards they may be used against him as admissions. Such a rule would breed great confusion, and tend to hamper, rather than aid, the free investigation of questions involved in litigation. A party may often prove some facts by one witness and others by another. The two may not coincide in some respects. Has he admitted both ways? He may not impeach his own witness, unless entrapped by him, but may show that the facts are different from the statement of the witness. Civ. Code 1895, § 5290; Moultrie Repair Co. v. Hill, 120 Ga. 730, 48 S. E. 143 (3).

In Richards v. Morgan, 4 Best & Smith, 641, 660, et seq. (10 Jur. N. S. 559, 564), is an able and elaborate discussion of the subject by Cockburn, C. J. He declared that merely calling a witness does not render all he says admissible against the party calling him; and, after reviewing previous cases, said: "It would be in the highest degree unreasonable to suffer the party using the evidence to be affected by that portion which he may have repudiated or disregarded, on the ground that the statements of the witness must be taken to be his. Bearing in mind that the true ground on which such evidence is admissible is that a party seeking to establish a fact by evidence in a court of justice must be taken to assert the fact if he so seeks to prove, it seems to me to follow, on the one hand, that oral evidence, so far as it shall appear to have been used to establish a specific fact, will be evidence against the party using it, as an assertion of that fact; and, on the other, that written evidence will be admissible against the party using it in a subsequent proceeding with a different party, not for the purpose of proving all the statements it may contain, but only so far as it shall appear to have been used to establish a given fact or facts. It is not because a witness may have been called or a deposition may have been used, that all the statements made are to be considered as having been adopted by the party using the evidence. In order to render this species of evidence admissible as the assertion of a particular fact by the party using it, it must appear, either from the evidence itself, or from the extrinsic circumstances, that it was used for the purpose of proving such fact." Crompton, J., concurred in the judgment. Blackburn, J., dissented. A simple illustration may make the position clearer: On a trial, suppose a question involved is whether the defendant was at the city of A. on a given date. He introduces a witness for the purpose of showing that he was not at A., but at the town of B. This amounts to an implied assertion that he was at B., and not at A. Subsequently, in another litigation, he claims not to have been at B., but at A. It may be shown that in the former case he introduced the evidence of the witness to prove his absence from A., and his presence at B. The basis for admitting such evidence at all is that, under the circumstances, there was an implied assertion of a fact. And a party does not broadly assert by implication everything said by a witness whom he puts on the stand, or examines by interrogatories. The distinction at one time sought to be made between the two modes has been repudiated. These interrogatories and answers were not offered for the purpose of impeachment, or to show notice of any fact, but as containing admissions. Under what has been said above, as the case now appears in the record, the admission of this evidence was erroneous. See, on the general subject, 2 Wigmore, Ev. § 1075, and notes; Evans v. Methyr, et al., Council (1899) 1 Ch. 241, 250, 251; Bageard v. Consolidated Traction Co., 64 N. J. Law, 316, 45 Atl. 620, 49 L. R. A. 424, 81 Am. St. Rep. 498; Wilkins v. Stidger, 22 Cal. 231, 83 Am. Dec. 64; Martin v. Root, 17 Mass. 227.

5. A witness may refresh and assist his memory by the use of any written instrument or memorandum, provided he finally speaks from his recollection thus refreshed, or is willing to swear positively from the paper. Civ. Code 1895, § 5284. In order to swear positively from the paper, it is essential that the witness should at some time have had personal knowledge of the correctness of the memorandum. Lenny v. Finley, 118 Ga. 427, 430, 45 S. E. 317; Hematite Mining Co. v. East Tenn., Va. & Ga. Ry. Co., 92 Ga. 268, 18 S. E. 24. The evidence made out such a case as authorized the witness to swear from the memoranda. Where a lumber raft was made up at one point on a river and floated down to another and delivered, it was relevant evidence, on the question of what lumber was delivered, to show what lumber went into the raft at the starting point.

6. Exception was taken to an order of the auditor requiring certain papers to be produced under a subpoena duces tecum; but the papers were in fact produced and put in evidence, and the sufficiency of the subpoena, and the ruling of the auditor as to it, became immaterial questions. Starr v. Mayer, 60 Ga. 546 (3).

7-10. The general rule is that the measure of damages recoverable of the seller for failure to deliver goods sold is the difference between the contract price and the market value at the time and place for delivery. Where the vendee seeks to recover damages for a failure to deliver such goods, under the general rule, it is incumbent on him to submit evidence as to the market price at the time and place for delivery, in order to recover actual damages. Bloom v. Americus Grocery Co., 116 Ga. 784, 43 S. E. 54. Where the delivery is to be made in instalments, the measure of damages is the sum of the differences between the contract price and the market price at the several times for delivery. 24 Am. & Eng. Enc. Law, 1152(c), and note 1. To this general rule there are some exceptions. Thus the thing contracted for may be such as cannot be bought in the market, or of a kind as to which there are no dealings, so as to fix a market price. The property may be of a character which has to be specially made for the particular purpose for which it is ordered—as a machine or a part of a machine needed to meet a special purpose or requirement, and which is not of such a character as is kept for sale on the market, or as has a market value or price in the usual sense of that term. In such cases the general rule cannot be applied, but the “damages recoverable for a breach of contract are such as arise naturally and according to the usual course of things from such breach, and such as the parties contemplated when the contract was made, as the probable result of its breach.” Civ. Code 1895, § 3799. Any necessary expense which one of two contracting parties incurs in complying with the contract may be recovered as damages. Civ. Code 1895, § 3806. As to the measure of damages, where the contract contemplates the manufacture of certain articles, and is not an ordinary contract of bargain and sale, see George Delker Co. v. Hess Spring & Axle Co., 138 Fed. 647, 71 C. C. A. 97; Roehm v. Horst, 178 U. S. 1, 20 Sup. Ct. 780, 44 L. Ed. 953. In Den Bleyker v. Gaston, 97 Mich. 354, 56 N. W. 763, it was held that lumber of a particular grade, cut into strips for a special purpose, and as to which there was no market price, did not fall within the general rule. We need not discuss the subject of damages in mutual contemplation of the parties. We cannot say as matter of law that the lumber ordered in this case did not have a market price. In the Southwestern R. Co.

v. Rowan, 43 Ga. 411, there was evidence of a difference in market price. In discussing the subject McCay, J., said: “The case of Bryan v. Southwestern Railroad Company, 41 Ga. 71, was a case of cross-ties, an article the market value of which it is almost impossible to fix, since there is ordinarily but one purchaser in a community. The case of stringers stands on a different footing. Sawed lumber has a distinct market value in almost every community.” In Fontaine v. Baxley, 90 Ga. 416, 426, 17 S. E. 1015, the subject under discussion was whether there was mutuality, so as to make certain contracts binding. In dealing with this question Bleckley, C. J., remarked that: “It must be remembered, in behalf of both these contracting parties, that cross-ties are not a commodity of general commerce; that they are neither to be procured at all times in the market by one wishing to buy them, nor to be disposed of readily and quickly by one wishing to sell them. On the contrary, demand must prearrange for supply, and supply before becoming abundant must prearrange for demand.” The question of the measure of damages was not there directly under consideration. Whether lumber of the character involved in the present case was a commodity having a market value, and to which the general rule could be applied, seems rather to be a matter of fact than one of law. There may be clear cases where the courts can take judicial cognizance that a thing has or has not a market, and a market value; but there are also cases where this information must be derived from the facts. The courts will need no proof that corn, flour, hay, and other things of like character are commonly dealt with on the market, and have a market value. There are other things which at first may not be kept on the market, but with an increased dealing in them may come to be marketable things, with a market price. Some of the auditor's discussion in regard to the measure of damages was not strictly accurate. But he only made a report on the measure of damages in case his finding in regard to the right to recover damages should be reversed. On that subject he said: “I do not find, therefore, that any of the contracts were broken by the plaintiffs, and do not therefore reduce plaintiffs' recovery any amount for damages.”

11. The court finished charging the jury just at the hour for adjournment in the afternoon. By agreement of counsel, the court instructed the sheriff to take the jury out, and, if they found a verdict by 9 or 10 o'clock at night, to communicate with the judge and counsel, and the court would reconvene to receive the verdict; that, if the verdict was not found until after that time, then the jury might disperse after preparing a sealed verdict to be returned into court the following day. The jury found a verdict before 7 o'clock in the evening, and, without communicating with the court or counsel, sealed it up, delivered it to the clerk, and dispersed. The sealed verdict was returned into court the following morning, the jury were called into the box, and the clerk opened and read the verdict in the presence of the jury, the court, and counsel. It does not appear that counsel were not aware of all the facts, or that they made any objection to the publication and recording of the sealed verdict. If they knew the facts, and sat quietly by and permitted the verdict to be received and published without objection, this operated as a waiver of the defect. A party cannot wait to see which way the jury finds, and then, if the verdict is adverse to him, object to some mere irregularity in the mode of receiving or publishing it, of which he has knowledge in advance. Adkins v. Williams, 23 Ga. 222; Stix v. Pump, 37 Ga. 332 (3); Barfield v. Mullino, 107 Ga. 730, 33 S. E. 647; Bowdoin v. State, 113 Ga. 1150, 39 S. E. 478.

12. The various other objections, exceptions, and grounds of the motion for a new trial do not require a discussion in detail. Suffice it to say that none of them necessitate a reversal.

Judgment reversed on both bills of exceptions. All the Justices concur, except ATKINSON, J., disqualified.

(2 Ga. App. 620)

MURRAY v. STATE. (No. 645.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 14, 1907.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW — CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE—WEIGHT.

No fact or circumstance in the evidence raised a reasonable inference of guilt. The hypothesis of guilt was entirely hypothetical, and fully overcome by positive testimony and several reasonable hypotheses of innocence.

2. SAME—NEW TRIAL.

The verdict, being wholly without support of evidence, is without foundation of law, and the refusal to grant a new trial was error.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, §§ 2297, 2298.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Stephens County; J. J. Kimsey, Judge.

Carrie Murray was convicted of an offense, and she brings error. Reversed.

Termor Barrett and R. A. Naves, for plaintiff in error. W. A. Charters, Sol. Gen., for the State.

HILL, C. J. Judgment reversed.

(2 Ga. App. 607)

MANDEVILLE MILLS v. DALE (two cases). (Nos. 453, 454.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 14, 1907.)

1. NEGLIGENCE—DANGEROUS PREMISES—DUTY OF OWNER.

The elements of legal liability of the owner or proprietor of premises for injuries occasioned to persons thereon vary according to whether the person injured was, at the time of the injury, a trespasser, a licensee, a visitor under invitation express or implied, or a person standing in some special relation recognized by law.

(a) Under the allegations of the petition in the present case, the injured person was a visitor by invitation upon the defendant's premises.

(b) When the owner or proprietor of premises by invitation, express or implied, induces or leads others to come upon his premises for a lawful purpose, he is liable in damages to such persons for injuries occasioned by his failure to exercise ordinary care in keeping the premises and approaches safe for such use.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, Negligence, §§ 42-47.]

2. SAME—DEATH—PETITION.

The petition in the present case is good against general demurrer.

3. PLEADING—TIME—SPECIAL DEMURRER.

A petition which does not aver a time as to every material or traversable allegation is subject to special demurrer pointing out the defect. (Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Carrollton; W. C. Hodnett, Judge.

Consolidated actions of S. J. Dale and Ella Dale for the wrongful death of their son, Roy Dale, deceased, against the Mandeville Mills. From judgments for plaintiffs, defendant brings error. Affirmed.

For the homicide of Roy Dale, his father and mother brought separate suits against the Mandeville Mills. The allegations of both petitions, so far as matters material to the questions here made are concerned, are identical. In substance, the petitions state that Roy Dale was at the time of his death 12 years old; that he was learning the profession of a mill operative in defendant's factory, but was off duty on temporary leave that he might attend school; that on the day of his death he came into the defendant's mill to see his father, who was employed there, and who worked on the second floor, on a matter of business; "that there was a narrow stairway leading from the room below up to the floor upon which the father was at work; that there was no banisters, or railing, to said stairway, and the steps upon the same from long and constant use had become very slick; that the said Roy Dale, after having visited his father, left him to return to his home, and started to descend said stairway; that when he had gone some two or three steps down said stairway his feet slid from under him, and there being no banisters, as aforesaid, to protect persons ascending and descending said stairway, he fell violently to the floor below and was so injured, maimed, and bruised, that he died some 36 hours thereafter; that defendant, the said Mandeville Mills, through its agents, officers, and employes, were well informed and aware of the dangerous condition of said stairway, and had made no effort to remedy the same, notwithstanding its attention had been frequently called to the same; that defendant was guilty of gross negligence in erecting said stairway and not putting a banister or hand railing upon the same; that they were guilty of gross negligence for permitting said stairway to remain in said dangerous condition after having ample opportunities to learn of its dangerous condition having increased by means of the steps wearing slick and dangerous."

By amendment it is alleged, among other things, "that at the time Roy Dale visited his father, as set out in the original petition, he entered the room downstairs in which his father discharged some of the duties necessary as an employé of defendant, and was informed that the latter was upstairs. Whereupon he ascended the stairway hereinbefore described; that being the only means by which he could go from said room upstairs. Defendant through its agent and employé, S. T. Pitts, was aware of the presence of said Roy Dale, and of his ascending and descending said stairway at the time of said injuries, and made no objection, notwithstanding it had full knowledge of the danger incurred and the tender years of the said Roy Dale. That the said Roy Dale was invited by the defendant, through its agents and employé, Sank Lovvorn, who had authority so to do, to visit his father while at work in said mill at any time on business. Said stairway heretofore referred to was erected for the purpose of furnishing a way for persons upon the lower floor and in the room first entered by the said Roy Dale to ascend to the second floor and descend from the second floor to the first floor, and was being used for that purpose. The slick and slippery condition of said stairway was a latent defect in the same, which was unknown to the said Roy Dale, and which could not have been discovered by him in the exercise of ordinary care."

The defendant filed a general demurrer; also, special demurrer to the paragraph of the petition alleging the invitation, on the ground that no time was averred. The defendant's demurrers having been overruled, it brings error.

S. W. Harris and Brown & Root, for plaintiff in error. Hamrick & Smith, for defendants in error.

POWELL, J. (after stating the facts as above). 1. The liability of the owner or proprietor of premises for injuries received by persons while present upon such premises may be viewed in four aspects: (1) Where the person injured is there as a trespasser; (2) where he is there as a licensee; (3) where he is there by invitation of the owner or proprietor; (4) where he is there under some other special relation.

In the first case, that of the trespasser, liability arises only where the injury has been occasioned by the willful and wanton negligence of the proprietor or owner. No duty of anticipating his presence is imposed, and as was pointed out by this court in Charleston & W. C. Ry. Co. v. Johnson, 1 Ga. App. 441, 57 S. E. 1064, the duty to use ordinary care to avoid injuring him after his presence and danger is actually known is in point of fact merely the duty not to injure him wantonly or willfully. So, in the first case, wanton or willful negligence is essential to liability.

In the second case, that of the licensee, there is a slightly higher duty on the part of the owner or proprietor of the premises. He must not wantonly and willfully injure the licensee, and since his presence as a result of his license is at all times probable, some care must be taken to anticipate his presence, and ordinary care and diligence must be used to prevent injuring him after his presence is known or reasonably should be anticipated. The fundamental concept in this class of cases, as in that of trespassers, is of a liability only for willful or wanton injury; but it is usually willful or wanton not to exercise ordinary care to prevent injuring a person, who is actually known to be, or reasonably is expected to be, within the range of a dangerous act being done. See Southern Ry. Co. v. Chatman, 124 Ga. 1026, 53 S. E. 692, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 283. To the licensee, as to the trespasser, no duty arises of keeping the usual condition of the premises up to any given standard of safety, except that they must not contain pit-falls, man-traps, and things of that character.

In the case of persons on the premises by invitation of the owner or proprietor a higher degree of care is demanded. "Where the owner or occupier of land, by express or implied invitation, induces or leads others to come upon his premises for any lawful purpose, he is liable in damages to such persons for injuries occasioned by his failure to exercise ordinary care in keeping the premises and approaches safe." Civ. Code 1895, § 3824. The definition of the word "invitation," as given in leading cases, shows why this should be so. We quote from Sweeny v. Old Colony R. Co., 92 Mass. (10 Allen) 373, 87 Am. Dec. 644: "The general rule or principle applicable to this class of cases is that an owner or occupant is bound to keep his premises in a safe and suitable condition for those who come upon and pass over them, using due care, if he has held out any invitation, allurement, or inducement, either express or implied by which they have been led to enter thereon. A mere naked license or permission to enter or pass over an estate will not create a duty or impose an obligation on the part of the owner or one in possession to provide against the danger of accident. The gist of the liability consists in the fact that the person injured did not act merely for his own convenience and pleasure, and from motives to which no act or sign of the owner or occupant contributed, but that he entered the premises because he was led to believe that they were intended to be used by visitors or passengers, and that such use was not only acquiesced in by the owner or person in possession and control of the premises, but that it was in accordance with the intention and design with which the way or place was adapted and prepared or allowed to be so used. The true distinction is this: A mere passive acquiescence by the owner or occupier in a certain use of his land by others involves no liability; but if he directly or by implication induces persons to enter on and pass over his premises, he thereby assumes an obligation that they are in a safe condition, suitable for such use, and for a breach of this obligation he is liable in damages to a person injured thereby." It is likewise said in Turesa v. New York R. Co., 61 N. J. Law, 314, 40 Atl. 614: "'Invitation' is a term whose legal import is known, and may be used to express the relation between an owner or occupier of land, and one who comes thereon under certain circumstances. The invitation which creates such a relation may be express, as when the owner or occupier of lands by words invites another to come on it, or make use of it or something thereon. Or it may be implied as when such owner or occupier by acts or conduct leads another to believe the land or something thereon was intended to be used as he uses them, and that such use is not only acquiesced in by the owner or occupier, but is in accordance with the intention or design for which the way or place or thing was adapted and prepared or allowed to be used." The distinction between the duty to a licensee and to one entering the premises under invitation is thus expressed in Beehler v. Daniels, 18 R. I. 563, 565, 29 Atl. 3, 27 L. R. A. 512, 49 Am. St. Rep. 790: "There is a clear distinction between a 'license' and an 'invitation' to enter, premises, and an equally clear distinction as to the duty of an owner in the two cases. An owner owes to a licensee no duty as to the condition of premises, unless imposed by statute, save that he should not knowingly let him run upon a hidden peril, or willfully cause him harm; while to one invited he is under obligation for reasonable security for the purposes of the invitation."

Mere permission to enter the premises creates the relation of licensee; invitation, express or implied, is necessary to create the more responsible relation and the consequent higher duty upon the owner or proprietor. In this class of cases, willfulness and wantonness is not necessary to the existence of liability; but merely ordinary neglect either through act of omission or of commission. See Atlanta Cotton Seed Oil Mills v. Coffey, 80 Ga. 145, 4 S. E. 759, 12 Am. St. Rep. 244; Archer v. Blalock, 97 Ga. 719, 25 S. E. 391; Central R. Co. v. Robertson, 95 Ga. 430, 22 S. E. 551. The case of Augusta R. Co. v. Andrews, 89 Ga. 653, 16 S. E. 203, and 92 Ga. 706, 19 S. E. 713, is not authority for the proposition that mere permission is equal to an invitation, but for the proposition that a duty is owing to a licensee.

The fourth class we shall not take up in detail; but it consists of those cases wherein, by reason of contract, public policy, or otherwise, there is imposed upon the owner or proprietor of the premises extreme care and caution. The duty owing by a carrier to his passenger is within this class.

The plaintiff in error asserts that young Dale was within the second class mentioned above—was a bare licensee. The defendant in error says that he was within the third class—was upon the premises of the mill company by invitation. If the petition had not been amended, the contention of the plaintiff in error would have been well founded; but taking the unequivocal statement of the amendment, "that the said Roy Dale was invited by defendant, through its agent and employé, Sank Lovvorn, who had authority so to do, to visit his father while at work in said mill at any time on business," coupled with the further allegation that with the full knowledge and consent of the defendant company he did upon the day of the fatal injury enter upon the premises of the defendant to visit his father on business, we are constrained to hold, under the admissions of the demurrer, that he was not a bare licensee, but was a person lawfully on the defendant's premises by invitation. As to this feature of the case the general demurrer was therefore properly overruled.

2. We come therefore to the question whether the petition shows a failure on the defendant's part to exercise ordinary care and diligence to make his premises reasonably safe for his invited visitor. Ordinary care and diligence, as applied to the keeping of premises in safe condition, is a very elastic term, varying the quantum of actual caution to be exercised according to the nature of the use to which the property is devoted. We think, however, that the allegation as to the worn and slippery condition of the stairway makes an issuable question as to the defendant's negligence. If the stairway was no more worn and no slicker than those in ordinary use in other mills and similar places, the defendant was guilty of no breach of duty. We must confess that our greatest doubt in the case has arisen over the question as to whether the allegations as to the stairway show a case of negligence at all; but we have finally concluded that enough is alleged to authorize submission to the jury on this point.

The question of the failure of the boy that was killed to use ordinary care to protect himself is also a jury question, not to be decided on demurrer. The jury may take the fact of his previous acquaintanceship with the premises into consideration, not only in determining whether he could by the exercise of ordinary care have avoided the fatal injury, for if he knew of the condition of the stairway, and was capable of appreciating its condition, a recovery cannot be had; but also in determining whether the owner of the premises was negligent in inviting him in, under the circumstances, for it might be reasonably safe to allow a person acquainted with the condition of things to enter where it would be wholly unsafe and correspondingly negligent to allow the same privilege to persons ignorant of the conditions.

3. A special demurrer raises the point that no time is alleged as to the allegation that the defendant's agent invited young Dale to enter. The petition must "aver a time when every material or traversable fact transpires." This ancient rule of pleading has been recognized by our Supreme Court in its earliest utterances (Bond v. Central Bank, 2 Ga. 92, 100) as well as in its later rulings (Warren v. Powell, 122 Ga. 4, 49 S. E. 730). Usually any date may be alleged, due regard being had for the statute of limitations, where applicable, for in ordinary cases the pleader will not be confined to the actual day named; but some specific time must be averred. Direction is therefore given that the trial court require the plaintiff to amend accordingly, and in default thereof the petition be dismissed.

Judgment affirmed, with direction.

(2 Ga. App. 626)

JENKINS v. STATE. (No. 675.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 14, 1907.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW — TRIAL — INSTRUCTIONS — ASSUMED FACTS.

To instruct a jury in a case where the defendant is charged with carrying a concealed pistol, and where the defendant's defense was that he had no pistol at all, "that if the pistol was carried so exposed to view that it could be readily recognized as a pistol, he carried it in legal contemplation in an open manner; if he carried it concealed even for a minute, the offense of carrying concealed weapons is complete"—is, in the absence of any instructions to the jury that they must determine from the evidence whether the defendant actually had a pistol or not, such an intimation of opinion on the part of the judge that the defendant had a pistol as practically eliminates the defendant's defense and demands the grant of a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 1754-1764.]

2. SAME—APPLICABILITY TO EVIDENCE.

It is erroneous to instruct the jury that a witness, sought to be impeached, may be sustained by proof of general good character, in the absence of any evidence as to the good character of such witness. The law should fit the facts.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Ashburn; W. A. Hawkins, Judge.

John Jenkins was convicted of carrying concealed weapons, and he brings error. Reversed.

Jas. H. Pate and J. J. Forehand, for plaintiff in error. J. A. Comer, Sol., for the State.

RUSSELL, J. The defendant was convicted of the offense of carrying concealed weapons. Outside of the general grounds of the motion for new trial, the assignments of error all relate to alleged errors in the charge of the court.

The first instruction complained of is as follows: "I charge you, gentlemen of the jury, that, if the pistol was carried so exposed to view that it could be seen and readily recognized as a pistol, he carried it in legal contemplation in an open manner; if he carried it concealed, even for a minute, the offense of carrying concealed weapons is complete." The objection raised is that this instruction contained an intimation of opinion, unless it had been qualified by the appropriate charge that it would be the duty of the jury first to determine whether or not the defendant did have a pistol at the time and place charged in the accusation. It is possible to construe the language of the judge, taken by itself, so as to infer that he had in contemplation the pistol mentioned in the evidence, but the instruction complained of must be considered in connection with its context. The sentence complained of follows immediately a quotation of section 341 of the Penal Code of 1895, defining the defense, and immediately precedes the proper instruction of the court on the presumption of innocence. The only criticism, therefore, that can be passed upon the excerpts of the charge complained of, when taken by itself, is that the definite article, "the," is used, instead of the indefinite, "a." The charge would have been more exact had the judge said, if "a" pistol is carried, etc., and the substitution of "a" for "the" would have relieved this first difficulty. But this does not reach the root of plaintiff in error's complaint. The essence of defendant's defense was that he did not have a pistol at all, concealed or not concealed. The court omitted anywhere in the charge to clearly present this defense to the jury. The language used in the instruction complained of, if nothing else, made it absolutely necessary that this theory should be presented. If the court had instructed the jury that unless they were satisfied that the defendant had a pistol they should acquit him, or, if they were not satisfied that he had a pistol at the time and place alleged, the language used would have not amounted to such an intimation of opinion as to constitute reversible error. If the judge had even inserted parenthetically into the first portion of the charge complained of the words, "if you believe from the evidence that defendant had a pistol at the time alleged," the jury might not have been influenced, the charge might not have been error. See A. & B. A. L. Ry. v. McManus, 1 Ga. App. 302, 58 S. E. 258. But with the theory of the defendant's statement not presented, although in the absence of request it need not be generally be presented, the language used could convey to the jury the impression that the defendant had a pistol at the time and place alleged, and that the jury had only to determine the single question whether it was concealed.

The second portion of the charge excepted to is that relating to the impeachment of witnesses. It was inapplicable to the facts. The portion excepted to was as follows:

"When thus impeached, he may be sustained by proof of general good character. The effect of the evidence is to be determined by the jury." This charge was inappropriate and erroneous, because no testimony was introduced as to the general good character of the witness sought to be impeached, nor was there any other testimony by which the impeached witness could have been corroborated.

There is no proper assignment of error as to the third portion of the charge to which exception is taken, and therefore the exception cannot be considered.

Judgment reversed.

(2 Ga. App. 624)

MCCLURG v. STATE. (No. 669.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 14, 1907.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—TITLE TO LAND—PAROL EVIDENCE.

Parol evidence is not admissible to prove title to real estate, and it was error to refuse to repel the statements of witnesses as to the ownership of land when such evidence was properly objected to.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 882.]

2. MALICIOUS MISCHIEF—EVIDENCE.

The time, place, and the circumstances of the act are all relevant for the purpose of disproving malice.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 33, Malicious Mischief, § 14.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Moultrie County; R. L. Shipp, Judge.

H. J. McClurg was convicted of maliciously destroying property belonging to another, and she brings error. Reversed.

D. W. Rountree, W. C. McCall, and J. D. Wade, Jr., for plaintiff in error. W. F. Way, for the State.

RUSSELL, J. The turning point in this case is whether the trough or gutter which the plaintiff in error was alleged to have maliciously destroyed, and which she admitted she cut to pieces, was rightfully on the land of another, or whether it was being used (apparently wantonly) to stop up the only road plaintiff in error had to go to her home, and thus to destroy her only means of ingress or egress from her property. The destruction of the property alleged in the accusation was admitted. The only other question that could arise in the case was whether the destruction was malicious. If the gutter was on land on which it properly belonged, the law might infer malice from the fact of the destruction. If it were on a roadway, the circumstances leading up to the destruction might rebut the presumption of malice. Over the objection of defendant's counsel, the court permitted parol evidence as to the ownership of the land where the gutter was alleged to have been placed, and in this we think the court erred. As stated by the Supreme Court in Bleckley v. White, 98 Ga. 598, 25 S. E. 592: "The law goes quite far enough to presume possession rightfully." The bare statement of a witness that he owns certain real estate is no proof of title. It is uncontradicted in the evidence that the gutter or water trough from Jones' well to the horse lot was built across what had been used for from 18 to 21 years as a private road leading from the public road to Mrs. McClurg's home. This being true, Jones and Christian would have had no right to close this road by building a trough 35 feet in length, leading from the well to the horse lot, even though by changing her course of travel Mrs. McClurg could have gone around the well and back into the road beyond the trough, and as it appears that Mrs. McClurg had frequently been compelled, at no little trouble and inconvenience as well as the exercise of physical force, to lift the middle portion of the trough or gutter, which was 15 or 16 feet long, out of the road in order to effect a passage, and as this road was her mill road, market road, and road to her mail box, it cannot be said that this blocking of her only means of ingress and egress to her home was not vexatious. Whether the destroying of this heavy obstacle was or was not malicious is, of course, a question for the jury. As to whether, when Mrs. McClurg cut this gutter to pieces she was influenced by ill will towards the owners of the gutter, or whether, even though illegally, she was endeavoring to relieve herself from an unwarranted and aggravating invasion of her right of locomotion, is to be determined by the jury. To show that the gutter is on land owned by a private individual overcomes the presumption of innocence, and in every criminal case the law requires that this can only be done by legal evidence. The evidence of Jones and Norman, as set out in the fourth, fifth, and sixth grounds of the motion for new trial, was not such legal evidence. The objections offered to the admission of this testimony were proper and timely. Title to land cannot be shown by the statement of a witness that he owns the land. There was therefore no proof to contradict the testimony in behalf of the plaintiff in error that the gutter was erected across a private road, and the verdict was, for that reason, without evidence to support it.

Judgment reversed.

(2 Ga. App. 622)

BRADLEY v. STATE. (No. 646.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 14, 1907.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—ACCESSORY—CORROBORATION.

Although a person may have had information of the defendant's intention to commit the crime under investigation prior to the time of its commission, and may afterwards have concealed it, he is not an accomplice of the defendant.

within the meaning of the rule requiring corroboration of the testimony of an accomplice.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 1082-1088.]

(a) An accessory after the fact is not an accomplice.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 71, 1085.]

(b) Nor is a receiver of stolen goods an accomplice of the principal thief.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 32, Larceny, § 57; vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 1088.]

2. BURGLARY—INDICTMENT—OWNERSHIP OF PROPERTY.

The ownership of personal property, in an indictment for larceny or for burglary, may be laid in the person having actual lawful possession of the same, although he may be holding it as agent or bailee of another. Wimbish v. State, 89 Ga. 294, 15 S. E. 325.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 8, Burglary, § 65.]

3. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL.

No reversible error appears in the record. (Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Walker County; Moses Wright, Judge.

G. W. Bradley was convicted of burglary, and he brings error. Affirmed.

Jno. W. Bale and F. W. Copeland, for plaintiff in error. W. H. Ennis, Sol. Gen., and Walter B. Shaw, for the State.

POWELL, J. 1. The defendant was convicted of burglary. The witnesses upon whose testimony the conviction rested was that of his accomplice, House, and the latter's wife. Certain assignments of error raise the question as to whether Mrs. House was not also an accomplice. She heard the defendant and her husband planning the burglary, and advised them against it; but after the crime had been committed, and a portion of the stolen money had been left in her house, she attempted to secrete it from the officers who were searching for it. She was not a principal, for she did not directly or indirectly participate in the crime. She was not an accessory before the fact, because she did not procure, counsel, or command it to be done. She may have become an accessory after the fact, or may have been guilty of the independent offense of receiving stolen goods; but neither of these relations to the case makes her an accomplice. Lowery v. State, 72 Ga. 649; Springer v. State, 102 Ga. 447, 30 S. E. 971; Allen v. State, 74 Ga. 772.

2. The indictment alleged the ownership of the property to be in one Berry. The proof showed that the money actually belonged to a Tennessee corporation by whom Berry was employed, but that it had been intrusted to Berry for the purpose of paying off hands, and that it was stolen from Berry's trunk, where he had placed it for safe-keeping. This is sufficient.

3. There are other assignments of error in the case, but we find none of them meritorious. The testimony against the defendant did not come from a very satisfactory source, and he may not be guilty; but he has had a fair trial, and we have no power or inclination to interfere in such cases.

Judgment affirmed.

(3 Ga. App. 637)

DAWSON v. STATE. (No. 723.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 14, 1907.)

1. HOMICIDE—ASSAULT TO MURDER—EVIDENCE.

The evidence justified the conviction.

2. CRIMINAL LAW—INSTRUCTION—CREDIBILITY OF WITNESSES.

The charge of the court upon the impeachment of witnesses was substantially correct; especially so in view of the fact that the testimony of the witness alleged to have been successfully impeached was corroborated.

3. HOMICIDE—ASSAULT TO MURDER—INSTRUCTIONS.

While it is improper for the judge to instruct the jury, without qualification, in a case of assault with intent to murder, that the offense would be complete if an assault were made which, if death had ensued, would have been murder; yet it is entirely correct for the court to charge: "Where a defendant is under the charge of an assault with intent to murder, in order to make out the charge of an assault with intent to murder, the proof made by the state must show that, if the act had resulted in death, the killing would have been murder. If it was not done under such circumstances that the killing would have been murder, the offense of assault with intent to murder would not be made out." Duncan v. State, 1 Ga. App. 118, 58 S. E. 248; Burris v. State, 58 S. E. 545.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 28, Homicide, §§ 597-603.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Early County; W. C. Worrill, Judge.

John Dawson was convicted of assault with intent to murder, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Park & Collins and Pottle & Glessner, for plaintiff in error. J. A. Laing, Sol. Gen., R. R. Arnold, and J. B. Ridley, for the State.

POWELL, J. We shall discuss only the matters referred to in the second headnote. There was an attempt to impeach one of the state's witnesses by proof of contradictory statements. There was other testimony corroborating him as to the facts concerning which he testified. The court instructed the jury: "One of the modes of impeaching a witness [is] by proof of contradictory statements previously made by him as to matters relevant to his testimony and to the case. When a witness is successfully contradicted as to a material matter, his credit as to other matters is for the jury. But if a witness swear willfully false, his testimony ought to be disregarded entirely, unless corroborated by circumstances, or other unimpeached evidence. It is for the jury to determine the credit to be given his testimony where impeached for general bad character or for contradictory statements out of court. You will understand now, where an attempt is made to impeach a witness by proof of contradictory statements made out of court, and that is one of the modes of impeachment under the law, it is for the jury to say whether or not that attempt has been successful. If the jury believe that the attempt has been successful, the jury ought to disregard the testimony of the witness, if you believe that the witness was impeached for contradictory statements made out of court. If the jury do not believe that the attempt has been successful, why then the jury will not regard the evidence in the case so far as it relates to the impeachment of the witness." This, we hold, correctly states the rule. See Powell v. State, 101 Ga. 9, 29 S. E. 309, 65 Am. St. Rep. 277; Smith v. State, 109 Ga. 479, 35 S. E. 59.

Judgment affirmed.

(2 Ga. App. 632)

ZEIGLER v. STATE. (No. 686.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 14, 1907.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—GRAND JURY—BAILIFF IN CHARGE—QUALIFICATION—PRESUMPTIONS.

Where it appears from an inspection of the minutes of the superior court that a named person was selected as bailiff of the grand jury, a presumption arises that as such bailiff he was duly sworn and qualified to act in such capacity. Bird v. State, 53 Ga. 603.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, §§ 3024, 3033.]

2. SAME—RECORD.

There is no law requiring the bailiff of the grand jury to be sworn in open court and the fact entered on the minutes of the court. The solicitor general can properly administer the oath to such bailiff in open court or before the grand jury. Pen. Code 1895, § 798(3).

3. WITNESSES—COMPETENCY—MEMBERS OF GRAND JURY.

A member of the grand jury who was present and saw and heard the oath administered to the bailiff in open court is competent to prove that fact. Elliott v. State, 1 Ga. App. 113, 57 S. E. 972.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 50, Witnesses, § 186.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Sylvania; H. A. Boykin, Judge.

Charlie Ziegler was convicted of an offense, and he brings error. Affirmed.

E. K. Overstreet, for plaintiff in error. T. J. Evans, for the State.

HILL, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

(2 Ga. App. 620)

RUMSEY v. STATE. (No. 643.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 14, 1907.)

1. COURTS—RULES OF DECISION—PREVIOUS DECISION AS CONTROLLING.

Upon the general grounds this case is controlled by Plummer v. State, 1 Ga. App. 507, 57 S. E. 969.

2. CRIMINAL LAW—NEW TRIAL—GROUNDS—EXCESSIVE SENTENCE.

The contention that the sentence is excessive cannot properly be made a ground of a motion for a new trial. Baldwin v. State, 75 Ga. 482; Sturkey v. State, 116 Ga. 526, 42 S. E. 747; Bellinger v. State, 116 Ga. 545, 42 S. E. 747; Burgamy v. State, 114 Ga. 852, 40 S. E. 991.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, § 2292.]

3. SAME—DISQUALIFICATION OF JUROR—RELATIONSHIP.

"A new trial will not be granted in a criminal case because of the relationship within the prohibited degrees of a juror to the accused, although such relationship was unknown to the accused and his counsel until after verdict." Downing v. State, 114 Ga. 30, 39 S. E. 927, wherein previous decisions to the same effect are expressly approved after review. See, also, Olliff v. State, 1 Ga. App. 553, 554, 57 S. E. 941.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, §§ 2225, 2230.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Stephens County; J. J. Kimsey, Judge.

Minnie Rumsey was convicted of an offense, and she brings error. Affirmed.

R. A. Naves and McMillan & Erwin, for plaintiff in error. W. A. Charters, Sol. Gen., for the State.

POWELL, J. Judgment affirmed.

(2 Ga. App. 638)

SIMMONS v. STATE. (No. 747.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 14, 1907.)

LARCENY—ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE—ANIMUS FURANDI.

A conviction for larceny cannot be sustained when all the circumstances are inconsistent with the existence of an animus furandi.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Americus; Chas. R. Crisp, Judge.

Louis Simmons was convicted of larceny, and he brings error. Reversed.

Blalock & Cobb and H. B. Simmons, for plaintiff in error. Zach Childers, for the State.

POWELL, J. The defendant was charged with larceny from the house, in that he stole from the house of George Oliver a bushel of oats, a bushel of corn, and 90 pounds of hay, the property of said Oliver. Oliver did not prosecute, but one Charlie Burke, an employé of his, did so. The undisputed evidence shows that the defendant was a team driver for Oliver, who was a contractor, and who was engaged in having some dirt moved at what is called in the record the "gully," or "fill." Oliver kept in Americus a store and warehouse. It was the duty of the defendant to feed the stock, and he had been bringing them to the stables at the warehouse and feeding them there. On the morning of the alleged larceny, he went to the warehouse, and in the presence of Oliver's clerk or superintendent, a white employé in the store, whose business it was to overlook the feeding of the stock, took out a bushel of oats, a bushel of corn, and the bundle of hay, put them on the wagon at the side door, and drove around to the front of the store, where Burke, another clerk of Oliver's, stopped him and told him to put the feed back. The defendant stated at the time that he was taking the feed stuff in order that he might feed the mules down at the "gully," where they were working, instead of bringing them back to the warehouse at noon. This occurred in December. The defendant continued to work for Oliver, and Oliver paid him his wages. Afterwards he quit working for Oliver, and at that time was indebted to him in the sum of $3. After the defendant quit work, thus indebted, Burke, at Oliver's instance, so Burke says, though Oliver denied remembering this instruction, in the April following instituted this prosecution.

That an intent to steal is essential to the existence of the crime of larceny is so elementary as to require no citation of authorities. While this intent may be circumstantially proved, and may be inferred from a state of facts capable of supporting that inference, yet there must be some legal proof of it in every case. We have no hesitancy at all in saying that the facts in this case are utterly inconclusive of any such inference. In fact, the record much more strongly indicates malice in the prosecution than it does guilt on the part of the defendant. Mitchell v. State, 103 Ga. 17, 29 S. E. 435; Causey v. State, 79 Ga. 564, 5 S. E. 121, 11 Am. St. Rep. 447.

Judgment reversed.

(2 Ga. App. 638)

McDONALD v. STATE. (No. 689.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 14, 1907.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—EVIDENCE—JUDICIAL NOTICE—MONETARY STANDARD.

The courts will judicially recognize that the word "dollar" is the money unit of the United States of the value of 100 cents, and will also recognize the different kinds and denominations of the currency issued by the United States.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 714.]

2. SAME—"GREENBACK."

The courts judicially know that the term "greenback" is the popular name used to designate a certain species of the currency of the United States.

3. LARCENY—MONEY—DESCRIPTION.

The description of the property stolen in an accusation for larceny as "ninety dollars of the lawful currency of the United States of America" is sufficiently proved by evidence that the money was in $10 and $20 bills; that one of the bills had the word "gold" on it, and the rest of the money was "greenback."

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 32, Larceny, § 155.]

4. SAME—EVIDENCE.

The evidence required the judgment rendered, and there was no error of law.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

5. WORDS AND PHRASES—"DOLLAR."

The word "dollar" is used to signify the money unit of the United States of the value of 100 cents. It imparts to the common understanding the meaning of a thing of value.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 3, pp. 2160-2164.]

6. SAME—"GREENBACK."

The term "greenback" is a popular name applied to all United States treasury notes.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 4, pp. 3164-3165.]

Error from Superior Court, Baldwin County; H. G. Lewis, Judge.

Joe McDonald was convicted of larceny, and from an order vacating a writ of certiorari he brings error. Affirmed.

Kenan Crawford, for plaintiff in error. Jos. E. Pottle, Sol. Gen., and Carl Vinson, for the State.

HILL, C. J. Plaintiff in error was tried by the judge of the county court of Baldwin county without a jury, on an accusation charging him with the offense of simple larceny. He was adjudged guilty, and thereupon petitioned for a writ of certiorari. His petition was sanctioned, and the writ granted. On the hearing of the certiorari by the judge of the superior court of said county, the same was overruled, and to this judgment error is assigned.

There is but a single question made by the record for the decision of this court. Was the property alleged to have been stolen sufficiently proved as described in the accusation? The accusation describes the property feloniously taken and carried away as "ninety dollars of lawful currency of the United States of America of the personal goods of one Jordan Lord of the value of ninety dollars." The evidence pertinent to said allegation and descriptive of the property stolen was as follows: The prosecutor testified "this money (referring to the stolen money), was in $10 and $20 bills. I counted it, and there was $90. This money was given me in payment of a check on the Merchants' & Farmers' Bank at Pelham at said bank. This money was in my pocketbook, a black leather book with Merchants' & Farmers' Bank of Milledgeville stamped on it. I don't know just what kind of money was in the book. It was paper bills, tens and twenties, such as I have used every two weeks for the last few years and passed as money. I never read any of the bills except the figures on them showing the amount of these bills. I do not know whether they were issued by the United States government or the Bank of England, or any other bank. All I can say about that is that it was the kind of money that I had gotten from the bank and used and other people have used. It was worth $90." Another witness described the money as follows: "I counted the money twice. There was $90 in all, three $20 bills and three $10 bills. One of the bills had 'gold' on it. The rest of it was greenback."

It is well settled that the accusation need not have alleged that the property or money stolen was lawful currency of the United States, yet, if alleged, the description must be proved as laid. Watson v. State, 64 Ga. 61; Fulford v. State, 50 Ga. 591. "If a necessary allegation is made unnecessarily minute in description, the proof must satisfy the description as well as main fact, since the one is essential to the identity of the other." 1 Bishop, New Criminal Procedure, § 484; Clark, Crim. Procedure, 182. In our opinion, the proof sustained the allegation as laid in the accusation. In other words, we think that the evidence sufficiently shows that the property alleged to have been stolen was lawful currency of the United States of America.

The prosecutor described the property stolen as $90 in money in $10 and $20 bills, such as he had used every two weeks for three years and passed as money; the same kind of money that he had gotten from banks and used and other people had used. The courts will judicially recognize that the word "dollar" is the money unit of the United States of the value of 100 cents. The word "dollar" imparts to the common understanding the meaning of a thing of value, and when the charge is that the defendant stole $90 in lawful currency of the United States, it means by common understanding that that amount of money in coin, banknotes, or notes issued by the government of the United States, was stolen by him. Leonard v. State, 115 Ala. 80, 22 South. 564. The courts also will judicially recognize that among the denominations of currency issued by the government of the United States are $10 and $20 treasury notes and national bank notes. Under the allegations of the accusation, the currency in question might either have been coin or notes or bills issued by authority of the United States. Under the evidence, it is definitely shown that the currency in question was either the notes or bills issued by the national banks of the United States or Treasury notes of the United States. It matters not which, for both are lawful United States currency. No other money of the denomination of $10 and $20 bills is current in and circulated throughout the United States as a medium of trade except the foregoing. The evidence is that these bills were procured at a bank and were similar to the money which had been used by the prosecutor for years, as well as by other people. There can be but one rational conclusion from the foregoing evidence: That the $90 stolen was lawful currency of the United States.

Another witness describes the money as three $20 bills and three $10 bills. One of the bills had the word "gold" on it, and the rest were greenbacks. The term "greenback" is a popular name applied to all United States Treasury notes. This being the case, it is as certain in the description of the property stolen as if the phrase "Treasury notes" had been used. Hickey v. State, 23 Ind. 21. United States notes are commonly known as "greenbacks." United States v. Howell (C. C.) 64 Fed. 110. In an indictment which alleges the larceny of $80 in money, consisting of $10 bills and $20 bills currency of the United States of America, if the evidence shows that the money stolen consisted of "greenbacks," without any other description, there is no variance. Gady v. State, 83 Ala. 429, 8 South. 429; Levy v. State, 79 Ala. 259. Where the indictment charged larceny of Treasury notes, it was held sufficient to prove that the property stolen was "greenbacks." Hickey v. State, 23 Ind. 21. Treasury notes of the United States, or in common parlance "greenbacks," are lawful currency of the United States, and a legal tender in the payment of all debts, private or public. Act Cong. May 31, 1878, c. 146, 20 Stat. 87 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 2397]; Legal Tender Case, 110 U. S. 421, 4 Sup. Ct. 122, 28 L. Ed. 204. We think also that the fact, as testified to, that one of the bills had the word "gold" printed on it, strongly indicated that such bill was a "gold certificate," or lawful currency issued by authority of the United States. Besides, the court judicially knows that Treasury bills or greenback and gold certificates, as matter of law, are prima facie of the commercial value equal to that imported by their face; but there was both allegation and positive proof that these bills were of the value of $90.

In short, we are clearly of the opinion that the evidence in this case sufficiently established the allegations made in the accusation that the money stolen was lawful currency of the United States. To hold otherwise would be absurd, and, under the undisputed facts in this case, a palpable miscarriage of justice. The judgment of the lower court in overruling the certiorari is therefore affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

(3 Ga. App. 651)

CARLISLE v. STATE. (No. 698.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1907.)

FALSE PRETENSES—INDICTMENT—MISREPRESENTATIONS OF OWNERSHIP.

In a prosecution for cheating and swindling through the making of false representations as to the ownership of property, an allegation in the indictment that the defendant knew that the representations made by him were false is a material allegation and must be supported by the proof in the case. As to this element of the charge in the present case, the testimony, which was circumstantial only, was too inconclusive to justify a conviction.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 23, False Pretenses, §§ 37, 62.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of LaGrange; Frank Harwell, Judge.

Stanmore Carlisle was convicted of cheating by false pretenses, and he brings error. Reversed.

E. T. Moon and D. B. Whitaker, for plaintiff in error. Henry Reeves, for the State.

POWELL, J. The indictment charged that the defendant "unlawfully did defraud and cheat W. A. Holmes in the sum of one hundred and twenty-five dollars by reason of the following means and artful practice, to wit: Said Carlisle and Burpee represented to said Holmes that said Carlisle owned a certain red colored horse mule for the purpose of selling said mule to said Holmes, and, relying upon said representation being true, he, the said Holmes, bought said mule from said Carlisle and Burpee, and paid him therefor the sum of one hundred and twenty-five dollars, when said representations were false, and said Carlisle and Burpee then and there knew were false, and intended to be false, the truth being that said Carlisle did not own said mule, which truth said Carlisle and Burpee then and there well knew, and because of said false and fraudulent representations said Holmes sustained loss as aforesaid, which was intended by defendant." The evidence for the state shows that the defendant and one Burpee came to town leading the mule behind a buggy. The prosecutor asked the defendant what he would take for the mule, and made him an offer for it. The defendant said that he had bought the mule out of a drove, and that no one else had owned it since. He said that it was his own mule. In response to an inquiry as to the mule's eyes he said that he had worked the mule on his farm; that he bought it two or three years ago. Burpee also told the prosecutor that he had better buy the mule, that it would be a good trade, and finally the trade was closed at the original offer of $125. The prosecutor then delivered the mule into the care of one Cameron. About 12 months later, two men, one of them claiming to be the sheriff of an adjoining county, came and got the mule from Cameron. One Hendricks then testified that he was the man who went with the sheriff to Cameron's and got the mule. That it was his mule. That shortly before the time the defendant sold the mule to the prosecutor the mule had disappeared from his home in the adjoining county. That he did not know how he got away; that he had mortgaged the mule to Burpee and also to his cousin. The mule was taken from Cameron's under the foreclosure of the mortgage which he had given his cousin. That while he did not know how the mule got away from his place, yet it was taken away without his consent. That he got home one night about 11 o'clock and found the lock to his barn broken and the mule gone. This was all the evidence for the state. The defendant stated that he bought the mule from Burpee out of a drove which Burpee had, and gave him $100 for it; that he did not know anybody had an interest in the mule, or that anything was wrong with it; that he bought it in good faith, and believed that it was his mule; that he told the prosecutor that he had bought the mule out of Burpee's drove, which was a fact.

In a prosecution of this kind, knowledge on the part of the defendant that the representation made by him is false is material. A mere false statement by the defendant, accompanied by loss to the prosecutor, is not sufficient. While such knowledge may be proved indirectly or inferentially, yet the burden is upon the state to make it appear, and if the facts proved are consistent, reasonably consistent, with the defendant's lack of knowledge, he cannot be convicted. The defendant, it is true, did state that he owned the mule, but he stated in connection therewith that he bought it out of a drove, and, according to the undisputed testimony, bought it out of Burpee's drove. Burpee was present when this statement was made, and, so far as the record shows, made no denial of this fact. While the testimony of the defendant that he had owned the mule for two or three years was false, and under the testimony probably knowingly false, yet the length of time that he owned the mule was not material in the state of his title. And while ordinarily the falsity of this statement might have had some probative value as tending to show a fraudulent design on the defendant's part for the purpose of concealing the true state of his title, yet in the present instance this inference cannot be legitimately indulged, because this statement as to the length of time he had owned the mule was not made in response to any inquiry as to the state of his title, but in response to an inquiry in regard to a defect in the eyes of the mule. If the prosecution had been based upon any fraud in connection with the condition of the mule's eyes, then this statement would have been material and of strong probative value; but not so in the present case. There was no proof that the defendant did not buy the mule out of Burpee's drove, just as he said he bought it; that he paid $100 for it; and that he believed he owned it. That he did buy it out of Burpee's drove is corroborated somewhat by the fact that Burpee had a mortgage on the mule, as well as in the fact that while the mule was taken from Hendrick's lot, in Hendrick's absence, he did not appear to set up the contention that the mule had been stolen from him, and this fact would further indicate that he recognized that the mule had probably been taken by Burpee under the mortgage; the act of seizure being made in Hendrick's absence. If the state had shown that the defendant did not buy the mule from Burpee's drove, or had shown circumstances indicating that he and Burpee had conspired and colluded together to sell a mule which he knew to have been unlawfully taken by Burpee, a conviction could be sustained; but not so in the present state of the record. See Crawford v. State, 117 Ga. 247, 252 (4), 43 S. E. 762.

Judgment reversed.

(2 Ga. App. 649)

THARPE v. STATE. (No. 676.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1907.)

CRIMINAL LAW—COMMISSION OF OFFENSE—TIME.

It is essential to a conviction that the proof show that the offense was committed prior to the returning of the indictment or the filing of the accusation. Davis v. State, 92 Ga. 458, 17 S. E. 336.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 1270.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Ashburn; W. A. Hawkins, Judge.

Landy Tharpe was convicted of an offense, and he brings error. Reversed.

R. L. Tipton and J. H. Tipton, for plaintiff in error. J. A. Comer, for the State.

POWELL, J. Judgment reversed.

(2 Ga. App. 657)

BROWN v. STATE. (No. 732.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1907.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT—CROPPERS—OFFENSES—DISPOSAL OF CROP.

A prosecution under Pen. Code 1895, § 680, will not lie for the protection of the landlord as to any indebtedness other than advances necessary to make the crop.

2. SAME—EVIDENCE.

The conviction is not justified by the evidence.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Statesboro; J. F. Brannen, Judge.

G. W. Brown was convicted of selling a crop without the consent of his landlord, and brings error. Reversed.

H. B. Strange, for plaintiff in error. Fred T. Lanier, for the State.

POWELL, J. The defendant was a cropper of the prosecutor, and he was tried and convicted of a violation of section 680 of the Penal Code of 1895, which provides: "Any cropper who shall sell or otherwise dispose of any part of the crop grown by him, without the consent of the landlord, and before the landlord has received his part of the entire crop and payment in full for all advances made to the cropper in the year the crop was raised, to aid in making it, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor." The accusation alleged a loss of $31.25.

The only items definitely shown by the evidence to be owing by the defendant to the prosecutor were for an old buggy, $15, and for a doctor's bill of $16, not contracted with the prosecutor, but bought up by the prosecutor from the physician. The Code section does not protect landlords as to indebtedness due them other than advances necessary to make the crop. The buggy was primarily not such an article of necessity to make the crop, nor was it shown to be by the evidence. The physician's bill was not an advancement by the landlord at all. Elliott v. Parker, 94 Ga. 620, 20 S. E. 106; Brimberry v. Mansfield, 86 Ga. 794, 13 S. E. 132; Scott v. Pound, 61 Ga. 579; Barge v. Weems, 109 Ga. 685, 35 S. E. 65. There are other indications in the record that the prosecution did not come up to the true spirit of the section cited from the Penal Code, but the above reason alone is sufficient to require a reversal. Judgment reversed.

(2 Ga. App. 659)

LEWIS v. STATE. (No. 649.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 16, 1907.)

1. RIOT—ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE—EVIDENCE.

Where three men in front of a citizen's house at night curse and threaten him in loud voices, repeatedly firing a gun thereby greatly frightening him and members of his family, each participating in such conduct, they are all guilty of the offense of riot.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 42, Riot, § 1.]

2. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS.

The excerpts objected to, when considered in connection with the entire charge, contain no material or hurtful error of law.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 1990.]

3. SAME—EVIDENCE.

The evidence supported the verdict, and the judgment of the court refusing a new trial will not be disturbed.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Waynesboro; P. P. Johnston, Judge.

Tom Lewis was convicted of riot, and he brings error. Affirmed.

Brinson & Davis and H. J. Fullbright, for plaintiff in error. F. S. Burney and Lawson & Scales, for the State.

HILL, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

(2 Ga. App. 648)

KOLMAN v. STATE. (No. 672.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1907.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS—OFFENSES—KEEPING OPEN ON SUNDAY—EVIDENCE.

The evidence is legally insufficient to justify the conviction.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 29, Intoxicating Liquors, §§ 158, 231.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

2. WORDS AND PHRASES—"TIPPLING HOUSE."

A barroom is a "tippling house," within the law requiring tippling houses to be closed on Sunday.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, vol. 8, pp. 6976-6978.]

Error from Superior Court, Chatham County; Geo. T. Cann, Judge.

Mary Kolman was convicted of keeping her tippling house open on Sunday, and she brings error. Reversed.

Gordon & Charlton, for plaintiff in error.
W. W. Osborne, Sol. Gen., for the State.

POWELL, J. Mrs. Kolman and one Johnson were jointly indicted, tried, and convicted of the offense of keeping open a tippling house on the Sabbath. Mrs. Kolman alone excepts. The testimony upon which the conviction against Mrs. Kolman rests is substantially as follows: Mrs. Kolman ran a barroom and grocery store at the corner of Bryan and Jefferson streets in Savannah. One Sunday a man named Green saw two men standing at a gate to the rear of her premises, and he approached them and said he wanted some whisky. Johnson took the money and went off across the yard in the direction of the bar, and soon came back with a pint of whisky, which he delivered to Green. The witness was unable to say whether he entered the bar or not. So far as he knew, the bar was closed. Mrs. Kolman made a statement in which she said that her bar and grocery store were closed throughout the entire Sabbath, and that she had the key in her pocket. Johnson made a statement in his behalf in which he said that he had the whisky on his person, and that though he worked for Mrs. Kolman he did not open the bar. The state in rebuttal proved that Johnson after his arrest had admitted that he went into the bar and got the whisky.

As a matter of law, the barroom was a tippling house. If the room was opened on the Sabbath day, even for a moment, by Mrs. Kolman or by her clerk or agent, with her consent, actual or tacit, she was guilty. Klug v. State, 77 Ga. 737, and cases cited. If it was opened by her clerk or employé, the burden was on her to show both lack of knowledge and lack of consent as to the fact. Klug's Case, supra. But where is the legal evidence that the room was opened, or that Johnson was her employé? Johnson's statement that he was her employé, and his admission that he had entered, was evidence solely against him and has no probative value against her. Berry v. State, 122 Ga. 429, 50 S. E. 345. Johnson was properly convicted, but as to Mrs. Kolman the Scotch verdict of "not proven" needs be entered.

Judgment reversed.

nature of the offense, the accusation is not demurrable.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 27, Indictment and Information, § 182.]

2. CRIMINAL LAW—EVIDENCE—JUDICIAL NOTICE.

The court judicially knows that the land lots in what was formerly Irwin county, then Worth, and now Turner county, contained 490 acres of land. The words "two hundred and forty acres of land, second district, lot of land No. 70," would not indicate in what portion of land lot No. 70 the premises lay. Consequently, an objection to this evidence, as contained in the register of posted land, should have been sustained.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 705.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Ashburn; W. A. Hawkins, Judge.

John, alias Will, Williams was convicted of fishing on posted land after he had been forbidden by the owner, and he brings error. Reversed.

John B. Hutcheson, for plaintiff in error.
J. A. Comer, for the State.

RUSSELL, J. The defendant was convicted of misdemeanor—fishing with hook and line on land duly posted according to law after he had been forbidden by the owners thereof. Before trial he demurred to the accusation and filed exceptions pendente lite to the order of the court overruling the same. The overruling of the demurrer and the judgment refusing a new trial are the errors presented for our consideration.

1. We think the demurrer was properly overruled. The accusation sets forth the offense charged with sufficient clearness for the defendant to be enabled to prepare his defense and for the jury to clearly understand the charge against him.

2. We think that the court erred in admitting the register of posted lands for Turner county. The objection of defendant's counsel that the register failed to describe the lands posted and identify them as the lands on which defendant was alleged to have illegally fished was well taken. The court judicially knows that the land lots in what was formerly Irwin county, then Worth, and now Turner, contained 490 acres of land. The description in the register of the land posted was too vague and indefinite for purposes of description. "Two hundred and forty acres of land, second district, lot of land No. 70," would not indicate the location of the land or in what portion of the lot of land it lay. The 240 acres might be on the north side of the lot, the east side of the lot, west side, south side, or in the center of the lot. The evidence should have been repelled, and for this reason a new trial should have been granted.

The second ground of the motion, as stated, presents no reason why the court should

(2 Ga. App. 629)

WILLIAMS v. STATE. (No. 678.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 14, 1907.)

1. INDICTMENT AND INFORMATION—REQUISITES.

Where every essential ingredient of the offense charged is set forth with sufficient clearness to enable the defendant to prepare his defense and the jury clearly to understand the have ordered a mistrial, and the grounds complaining of the judge's charge present no such assignment of error as can be considered by this court.

The fourth ground cannot be considered, because it is well settled that the overruling of a demurrer is not a proper ground of a motion for a new trial. For these reasons it is unnecessary to consider any of the remaining grounds of the motion for new trial. Judgment reversed.

(2 Ga. App. 639)

WILLIAMS v. STATE. (No. 677.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 14, 1907.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—WRIT OF ERROR—SCOPE OF REVIEW—NEW TRIAL—GROUNDS—VERIFICATION.

The grounds of error set out in the amendment to the motion for a new trial, not having been approved or verified by the trial judge, will not be considered by this court. Jackson v. State, 116 Ga. 834, 43 S. E. 255; Dunn v. State, 116 Ga. 515, 42 S. E. 772; Taylor v. Brown, 114 Ga. 290, 40 S. E. 281; Long v. Scanlan, 105 Ga. 424, 31 S. E. 436.

2. SAME—PLEA IN ABATEMENT—EXCEPTIONS.

A judgment sustaining a demurrer to a special plea in bar to an indictment cannot be made a ground of a motion for a new trial. Exception to such judgment must be taken either by a bill of exceptions sued out within twenty days from the date of the judgment, or by exceptions pendente lite properly allowed and certified on which error is duly assigned. Rogers v. State, 1 Ga. App. 527, 58 S. E. 236; Long v. State, 118 Ga. 319, 45 S. E. 416.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, § 2152.]

3. SAME—EVIDENCE—REVIEW.

The statutory grounds of the motion for a new trial are without merit; there being some evidence to support the verdict which was approved by the trial court.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Ashburn; W. A. Hawkins, Judge.

George Williams was convicted of an offense, and he brings error. Affirmed.

R. L. Tipton and J. H. Tipton, for plaintiff in error. J. A. Comer, Sol., for the State.

HILL, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

(2 Ga. App. 639)

HARRIS v. STATE. (No. 674.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 16, 1907.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—WRIT OF ERROR—ASSIGNMENTS OF ERROR—APPROVAL—REVIEW.

The assignments of error made in the amendment to the motion for a new trial, not being approved by the trial judge, will not be considered by this court.

2. SAME—BRIEF OF EVIDENCE.

There being no approved brief of evidence in the record, the statutory grounds for new trial cannot be decided.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Ashburn; W. A. Hawkins, Judge.

Emanuel Harris was convicted of an offense and he brings error. Affirmed.

R. L. Tipton and J. H. Tipton, for plaintiff in error. J. A. Comer, Sol., for the State.

HILL, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

(145 N. C. 232)

McCASKILL et al. v. WALKER et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 16, 1907.)

NONSUIT—MOTION—CONSTRUCTION OF EVIDENCE.

Upon a motion for nonsuit, the evidence must be taken in its most favorable view for plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, § 374.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Robeson County; Webb, Judge.

Action by J. C. McCaskill and another against Sarah E. Walker and others. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed and remanded for new trial.

McIntyre & Lawrence and J. D. Proctor, for appellants. R. H. Battle & Son and McLean & McCormick, for appellees.

BROWN, J. It is admitted that John Walker, Jr., was seised and possessed of the lands in controversy. The evidence shows that he conveyed the land by deed dated June 2, 1869, to Hector J. MacLean, under whom plaintiffs claim. The record evidence tends to prove that plaintiff McCaskill claims three fourths of the land by purchase from the heirs of Hector J. MacLean, and the other fourth is claimed by plaintiff Lola Wright, the remaining heir at law of said MacLean. The defendants pleaded adverse possession, and that Hector J. MacLean obtained the deed to the land from John Walker, Jr., by fraud, and that defendants are the heirs at law of Walker and claim the land as such.

The ground of the nonsuit, as we understand the record, is that the evidence offered by the plaintiffs proves title in the defendants by adverse possession, and that therefore the plaintiffs, upon their own showing, are not entitled to recover. We do not think that the evidence as set out in the record is sufficient to sustain his honor's ruling. The evidence tends to show that there were two tracts of land owned by John Walker, a 40-acre tract, which is the one in controversy, and a 32-acre tract, whereon John Walker lived, and died in 1872, and where, according to the evidence of one witness, the widow and children of John Walker have lived ever since. The evidence, taken in its most favorable view for plaintiff, as is the rule upon a motion to nonsuit, tends to prove that the 40-acre tract is woodland and was used for getting firewood and straw very generally from 1888 to 1901 by those claiming under Hector J. MacLean. There is some evidence also of a like use by defendants during same period, but it is not sufficiently definite, certain, and exclusive to justify a court in holding as matter of law that it establishes adverse possession for 20 years.

His honor erred in sustaining the motion. New trial.

58 S.E.—68

(146 N. C. 203)

BRICK v. ATLANTIC COAST LINE R. CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 16, 1907.)

1. JUDGMENT—RES JUDICATA.

A judgment of the Supreme Court, affirming a judgment for defendant rendered on appeal from a justice's judgment on the ground that the justice had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter, is not a bar to a subsequent suit on the same cause of action.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, §§ 1001, 1009.]

2. CARRIERS—TRANSPORTATION OF BAGGAGE—LIABILITY.

A carrier is an insurer of the personal baggage of a passenger.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 9, Carriers, § 1519.]

3. SAME—PERSONAL BAGGAGE—WHAT CONSTITUTES.

The personal baggage of a passenger includes jewelry carried for his personal use, but not that carried for sale or for the use of another.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 9, Carriers, §§ 1520–1523.]

4. SAME—CARRIAGE OF BAGGAGE.

The carriage of the personal baggage of a passenger is incident to the ticket purchased, and is personal to the user of the ticket, except where several members of a family are traveling together, in which case articles belonging to them may be checked as the baggage of one.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 9, Carriers, § 1507.]

5. SAME—LOSS OF BAGGAGE—RIGHT OF ACTION.

Where the user of a ticket was not the owner of the goods checked as baggage, and he and the owner were not traveling together, the owner was the proper party to sue for loss of the baggage, and not the user of the ticket.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 9, Carriers, § 1559.]

6. SAME—LIABILITY OF CARRIER.

Where goods not the personal baggage of a passenger are checked as his baggage without the fact being brought to the knowledge of the carrier, the carrier is liable only as a gratuitous bailee, and to recover for a loss gross negligence or willful injury must be clearly shown.

7. APPEAL—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR.

In an action against a carrier by the owner of lost baggage, which had been checked on a ticket bought for another person, a charge that plaintiff could not recover, while error, because the carrier, being a gratuitous bailee, was liable for gross negligence, was harmless; there being no evidence of gross negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 4219–4228.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Robeson County; Webb, Judge.

Action by A. B. Brick against the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company. From a judgment of nonsuit, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed. See 55 S. E. 194.

The plaintiff sued to recover the value of the contents of a trunk by him delivered to the defendant. It was in evidence that the plaintiff, who was a merchant, packed the trunk with certain wearing apparel, and also placed therein certain jewelry. The plaintiff purchased a ticket and checked the baggage and delivered the ticket to his brother, who was a clerk in the employ of plaintiff, and who was going to Chadbourne for the purpose of clerking in the plaintiff's store. Plaintiff's brother used the ticket. The jewelry was to be sold in plaintiff's store at Chadbourne. Demand was made upon the defendant for the baggage, and it has failed to produce same or account for its nonproduction. It is admitted that the defendant had no knowledge of the contents of the trunk. The value of the wearing apparel was $46.75, and the jewelry $207.83. On the trial of a former action before the justice, plaintiff remitted all of his claim in excess of $200. The justice rendered judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed. Upon the trial in the superior court, his honor charged the jury that in no event could the plaintiff recover the value of the jewelry. Thereupon a verdict was rendered for $46.75, the value of the wearing apparel, and plaintiff appealed to the Supreme Court. This court affirmed the judgment below, declaring that the justice had no jurisdiction of the cause of action for the value of the jewelry, inasmuch as this demand was in tort and in excess of $50. 142 N. C. 359, 55 S. E. 194. Thereupon the plaintiff instituted this new action in the superior court, founded in tort, asking for the recovery of the value of the jewelry. A jury trial was waived, and thereupon the court found the facts to be as testified to by the plaintiff on the former trial. His honor further found the value of the jewelry to be $207.83. Upon the uncontroverted facts his honor, being of opinion that the plaintiff could not recover, consulted the plaintiff, and he appealed.

McIntyre & Lawrence, for appellant. McLean, McLean & McCormick, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. The plaintiff is not estopped by the former judgment (142 N. C. 359, 55 S. E. 194), because it was held therein that the court of justice of peace (in which that action began) had no jurisdiction as to the tort for nondelivery of the jewelry. The subject-matter of this action was not passed upon, and could not have been, in that action. Harrington v. Hatton, 130 N. C. 89, 40 S. E. 848; Smith v. Garriss, 131 N. C. 34, 42 S. E. 445.

The common carrier is "insurer of the personal baggage of the passenger, and this includes jewelry, carried for the personal use of the passenger, to a reasonable extent, but not when it is carried for the purpose of sale or for the use of some one else." 3 A. & E. Encyc. (2d Ed.) 534; Humphreys v. Perry, 148 U. S. 627, 13 Sup. Ct. 711, 37 L. Ed. 587. This last case, citing many others (page 642, of 148 U. S. [13 Sup. Ct. 711, 37 L. Ed. 587]), holds that in such case the carrier is chargeable merely with the duty of a gratuitous bailee and liable not in contract, but in tort, and hence only for gross negligence or willfulness. "Articles carried for sale are not baggage, whatever the articles may be." 2 Fetter, Carriers of Passengers, § 587, p. 1440, and cases cited. Nor is the carrier insurer of merchandise delivered to the carrier by a passenger as personal baggage, without notice of the contents. Id. § 602, p. 1459; 6 Cyc. 668; 3 A. & E. Encyc. (2d Ed.) 539; 3 Thomp. Neg. § 3417, and cases cited.

Even when it is personal baggage, the carriage is incident to the ticket purchased, and is personal to the user of the ticket. There are exceptions, as where several members of a family or husband and wife are traveling together, and articles belonging to both are in a trunk. 3 Thomp. Neg. 3424. The user of the ticket in this case was not the owner of the trunk and contents, nor were he and the owner traveling together. He could not recover for the baggage of another. 3 A. & E. Encyc. 533; 2 Fetter, Carriers, § 600, p. 1455. This action is properly brought by the party in interest, the owner of the property.

Where the baggage is not personal baggage, or, if such, when it is not the personal baggage of the passenger, it is a fraud on the carrier, unless that fact is made known, and the baggage is notwithstanding accepted for carriage. Unless this is done, there is no contract, and the liability of the carrier is that of a gratuitous bailee, responsible only for gross negligence or willful injury. 1 Fetter, Carrier of Passengers, § 607, p. 1470; 3 A. & E. Encyc. 533. In such cases, negligence must be clearly shown and cannot be presumed by the mere fact of loss or injury, as in the ordinary case of loss of, or injury to, the personal baggage of a passenger. 3 A. & E. Encyc. (2d Ed.) 542; Young v. Railroad, 116 N. C. 936, 21 S. E. 177. It would be otherwise if the carrier received the trunk with knowledge of its contents. Trouser Co. v. Railroad, 139 N. C. 382, 51 S. E. 973, where the subject is fully discussed by Walker, J.

The plaintiff here can maintain the action, though he was not the passenger using the ticket, but only by showing gross negligence or willful misconduct.

The court erred in holding that in no event could the plaintiff recover; but, as there was no evidence of gross negligence, this was harmless error, and the judgment is affirmed.

(145 N. C. 234)

FLOWERS v. KING.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 16, 1907.)

1. JUDGMENT—VACATING—VOID JUDGMENT.

Where the summons was not served on defendant, and he did not enter an appearance nor have any knowledge of the action until after default judgment, the judgment was void and might be set aside on his motion.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, § 686.]

2. SAME—PROOF OF MERITS—NECESSITY.

A judgment which is void because of want of jurisdiction of the party against whom rendered may be set aside without proof of merits, though an irregular judgment is ordinarily not disturbed without proof of facts making a valid defense.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 80, Judgment, §§ 751, 752.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Wayne County; E. B. Jouis, Judge.

Ejectment by Charles Flowers against Lewis King. From a judgment setting aside a default judgment for plaintiff and restoring defendant to possession, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Aycock & Daniels and Isaac F. Dortch, for appellant. Stevens, Beasley & Weeks, for appellee.

HOKE, J. It appears from the facts found by the judge on the hearing that defendant has been ejected from a piece of land by virtue of final process of the court issued on a judgment by default in the present cause; the original process having been served on a different man of the same name as the defendant. In regard to service on defendant, the court finds the facts to be as follows: "The court finds that the summons in this action had never been served upon the real defendant, Lewis King, a negro, and the said Lewis King has never entered an appearance in said suit, either in person or by attorney, and had no knowledge of the pending action until the writ of possession was served upon him." On these facts it is well established with us that the judgment against the defendant is absolutely void, and may be set aside on motion of defendant or treated as a nullity when and wherever the entire lack of jurisdiction is made to appear. Card v. Finch, 142 N. C. 140, 54 S. E. 1009; Carter v. Roundtree, 109 N. C. 29, 18 S. E. 716; Doyle v. Brown, 72 N. C. 398; Copper Co. v. Martin, 70 N. C. 300; Black on Judgments, § 307. It is urged that the judgment should not be set aside because the affidavits have failed to disclose any facts which would enable the defendant to make a valid defense against the plaintiff's demand. This is usually required before a court will disturb an irregular judgment. As said in Becton v. Dunn, 137 N. C. 559-562, 50 S. E. 289, 290, speaking of irregular judgments: "The authorities are all to the effect that an irregular judgment may be set aside at a subsequent term, independent of section 274 of the Code. Wolfe v. Davis, 74 N. C. 597. This is not done as a matter of absolute right in the party litigant, but rests in the sound legal discretion of the court. It is always required that a party claiming to be injured should show that some substantial right has been prejudiced, and he must proceed with proper diligence and within a reasonable time." But no such requirement exists when the judgment is void by reason of an entire lack of jurisdiction of the party. In that case the judgment is a nullity, and the party affected is entitled to have same set aside, whenever such fact is made to appear, and without proof or suggestion of merits. Black on Judgments, § 348, citing Dobbin v. McNamara, 113 Ind. 54, 14 N. E. 887, 3 Am. St. Rep. 626; Roberts v. Pawley, 50 S. C. 491, 27 S. E. 913. The doctrine of the text is fully supported by the authorities cited and is in accord with the principles established by our own decisions.

There is no error, and the judgment of the court below is affirmed.

Affirmed.

(145 N. C. 218)

MODLIN v. ROANOKE R. & LUMBER CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 16, 1907.)

1. DEEDS—CONSTRUCTION—RECONCILING DIFFERENT DESCRIPTIONS.

The rule of construction of deeds that a specific description will control a former more general description only obtains to the extent required to reconcile the two descriptions, in subordination to the principle that all the clauses of a deed should be given effect as far as they can be harmonized by fair interpretation.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 16, Deeds, §§ 267-273.]

2. LOGS AND LOGGING—SALE OF STANDING TIMBER—DEED—CONSTRUCTION.

A deed conveyed "all the pine, oak, ash, cypress and poplar timber * * * upon" a certain tract, "containing forty-two acres more or less, all the pine, poplar, and cypress timber on said land on the southern side of Cooper swamp, and in said swamp and ravines." Held, that the deed conveyed all the pine, oak, ash, cypress, and poplar on the entire tract, except as to that portion of the timber lying on the south side of Cooper swamp, and as to that only the pine, poplar, and cypress timber was passed.

3. FRAUD—ACTIONS—REMEDY.

One who has been induced to convey property by fraud may elect to sue to set aside the conveyance, unless the property has passed to a purchaser for value without notice, or he may allow the conveyance to stand and sue for damages.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 23, Fraud, § 27.]

4. SAME—CONDITIONS PRECEDENT.

Where one has been induced to convey property by fraud, a return or offer to return what he has received under the contract is not a condition precedent to his suing for deceit, since he is entitled to the benefit of the contract plus the damage caused by the fraud.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 23, Fraud, § 29.]

5. DEEDS—EXTRINSIC EVIDENCE—CONSTRUCTION.

An option on property given prior to a deed of it is inadmissible in aid of the description in the deed, where the latter stands alone as embodying the contract, and makes no reference to the option.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 16, Deeds, § 239.]

6. FRAUD—DECEPTION CONSTITUTING FRAUD—FRAUDULENT REPRESENTATIONS.

One who intentionally asserts a fact to be true of his own knowledge, when he does not know whether it is true or false, is as culpable, where another is thereby injured, as one who makes an assertion which he knows to be untrue.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 23, Fraud, §§ 3-5.]

7. SAME—ACTIONS—NATURE OF REMEDY.

Where one has been induced to convey timber by fraud, and the timber has been again conveyed to a bona fide purchaser, the right of the original seller to an action for deceit is not affected by the fact that the timber has not yet been removed.

8. SAME—LIMITATIONS—ACCRUAL OF ACTION.

The registration of a fraudulent deed which conveyed property other than that intended by the donor was not sufficient notice of the fraud to set in motion Revisal 1905, § 395, subsec. 9, providing a limitation of three years for an action for fraud, and that the cause of action shall not be deemed to have accrued until discovery of the fraud.

Connor, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Martin County; Biggs, Judge.

Action by C. S. Modlin against the Roanoke Railroad & Lumber Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

There was evidence tending to show that on the 15th of November, 1899, plaintiff contracted to sell to defendant company that portion of the pine, cypress, and poplar timber on a tract of land belonging to plaintiff, and known as the "Harmon-Modlin land," which was situated on the south side of Cooper swamp, "as far as the muck and mire" comes, for the sum of $80; that plaintiff was an ignorant man, being unable to read or write, and that on the 18th of November following the defendant company, by false and fraudulent representations as to its contents, and making plaintiff believe that it was in compliance with the contract, induced plaintiff to execute a deed conveying to defendant company a much larger amount of the timber on the said tract than was included in the terms of the contract; that defendant afterwards sold the timber to the Dennis-Simmons Lumber Company, and conveyed same to that company by deed in the exact terms of the said deed to defendant, and by reason of the fraud and deceit so practiced on plaintiff he was damaged to the amount of $1,000. The action to recover damages for said wrong was commenced on the 3d day of April, 1906, and that the fraud practiced on plaintiff by defendant and the sale to Dennis-Simmons Lumber Company was not discovered until December, 1905. The deed to defendant company was registered January 9, 1900, and that to Dennis-Simmons Company was registered February 24, 1902, and no timber has yet been cut by either company. Defendant company denied the fraud, claimed that the deed in effect only conveyed the lumber embraced under the terms of the contract, and that no injury had been wrought to plaintiff, and pleaded the statute of limitations. The jury rendered a verdict as follows: "(1) Did defendant procure the execution of the deed of date November 18, 1899, by false and fraudulent representation, as alleged in the complaint? Answer: Yes. (2) What damage, if any, has the plaintiff sustained in respect to the highland timber? Answer: $250, with interest from November 18, 1899. (3) What damages, if any, has the plaintiff sustained in respect to the swamp and ravine timber? Answer: $40, with interest from November 18, 1899. (4) Is the plaintiff's cause of action barred by the statute of limitations? Answer: No." There was judgment for plaintiff, and defendant excepted and appealed.

Winston & Everett and B. A. Critcher, for plaintiff. A. O. Gaylord, for defendant.

HOKE, J. (after stating the facts as above). The verdict, when considered in connection with the allegations and the admissions and testimony, establishes the proposition that, under a contract to convey the pine, poplar, and cypress timber on the tract which was situated on the south side of Cooper swamp as far as the muck and mire comes, the plaintiff has been induced by fraud and deceit to convey to defendant company the timber described in the deed as follows: "All the pine, oak, ash, cypress, and poplar timber of and above the size of twelve inches in diameter on the stump when cut in and upon the following described tracts of land, situated in Jamesville township in the aforesaid county of Martin, adjoining the lands of S. L. Wallace, H. M. Modlin and others, and known as the Harmon-Modlin tract, containing forty-two acres more or less, all the pine, poplar and cypress timber on said land on the southern side of Cooper swamp, and in said swamp and ravines." And the damage fixed at $290.

Defendant objected to the validity of this recovery, for the reason chiefly that, by correct interpretation, the deed only conveys to the defendant the timber specified in the contract, and on the principle that the latter part of the description, "All the pine, poplar and cypress timber on said land on the southern side of Cooper swamp," being more specific, will control the former and more general description, "all the pine, oak, ash, cypress and poplar timber on said tract," and so restrict the timber conveyed to that which was actually embraced within the terms of the contract, citing Peebles v. Graham, 128 N. C. 220, 39 S. E. 24. The principle contended for by the defendant is well recognized, but we do not think its correct application to the terms of the deed will sustain the position of defendant. Conceding that the latter part of the description is more specific, it would only control the former to the extent required to reconcile the two, and in subordination to the principle that all the clauses of the deed should be given effect as far as they can be harmonized by fair and reasonable interpretation. Jones v. Casualty Co., 140 N. C. 265, 52 S. E. 578, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 982, 111 Am. St. Rep. 842. To apply, therefore, both of these rules of construction, we think it clear in the instrument now before us the former and more general clause conveyed to the grantee all the pine, oak, ash, cypress, and poplar of the dimensions specified within the boundaries of the entire Harmon-Modlin 42-acre tract, except as to that portion of said timber lying on the south side of Cooper swamp, and as to that only the pine, poplar, and cypress timber was passed, allowing the latter and more specific description to limit the kind of timber conveyed on the portion of the tract south of the swamp, leaving out the oak and ash. This being the true significance of the deed, the plaintiff has been wrongfully deprived of all of his timber in excess of that described in the original contract, which was only the "pine, cypress, and poplar within that portion of the tract on the south side of Cooper swamp as far as the muck and mire ran." It is right, therefore, on the issue as to defendant's responsibility, that the verdict be sustained, for it is well established that one who has been induced to convey his property by fraud and deceit has an election of remedies, and may either bring an action to set aside the conveyance, unless the property has passed into ownership of a purchaser for value, and without notice (Summers v. Mfg. Co., 143 N. C. 102, 55 S. E. 522), or he may allow the conveyance to stand and sue to recover damages for the pecuniary injury inflicted upon him by the fraud (May v. Loomis, 140 N. C. 350, 52 N. E. 728).

And it is further held that retaining the purchase price is not such a ratification of the contract as prevents the injured party from maintaining his action for damages to recover for the injury over and above the amount already received under the contract. 20 Cyc. p. 91; Andrews v. Jackson, 168 Mass. 266, 47 N. E. 412, 37 L. R. A. 407, 60 Am. St. Rep. 390; Shinnabarger v. Shelton et al., 41 Mo. App. 147. As said in Cyc. supra: "As indicated above a return or an offer to return what plaintiff has received under the contract, induced by the fraud, is not a condition precedent to his maintaining an action for deceit, since he is entitled to the benefit of his contract, plus the damage caused by the fraud." And the general principles sustaining plaintiff's right to recover are well stated in the cases of Sprinkle v. Wellborn, 140 N. C. 163, 52 S. E. 666, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 174, 111 Am. St. Rep. 827; Griffin v. Lumber Co., 140 N. C. 514, 53 S. E. 307, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 463. An effort is made to support the interpretation of the deed insisted on by defendant by construing the deed and option together, using the option in aid of the description contained in the deed. It is familiar learning, however, that user of the option for such purpose is not permissible. The deed now stands alone as embodying the contract between the parties. It makes no reference to the option for description, or for any other purpose; and, while this last paper is competent evidence on the question of fraud, and to show whether or not the deed complies with the option, the authorities are clear that the paper is not relevant in aid of the description in the deed, and any attempt to use it for such purpose would therefore be improper. Farthing v. Rochelle, 181 N. C. 563, 43 S. E. 1. Again, it is contended that a great wrong has been done defendant in this trial, and a verdict has been rendered fixing it with a gross fraud, without any sufficient evidence to support it; but we find nothing either in the record or the testimony to justify this position. It appears that plaintiff gave an option at the price of $60 to sell to the defendant company the pine, cypress, and poplar timber in the swamp and ravines as far as the muck and mire comes "on a tract of land consisting of about seven acres of the land known as the Harmon-Modlin tract, on the eastern side of the Washington & Jamesville road, and the southern side of Cooper swamp, and agreed that the company should have five years in which to cut and remove the same. By the representation of the defendant's agent, plaintiff was induced to sign and deliver a deed conveying to the defendant all the pine, oak, ash, cypress, and poplar timber upon the entire tract of land, known as the Harmon-Modlin tract, containing forty-two acres, more or less, all the pine, poplar, and cypress timber on such land on the southern side of Cooper swamp, and in said swamp and ravines, being the land conveyed to said Modlin as per record in Martin county by deed dated 18 February 1898"—giving 10 years in which to remove it. Speaking of the transaction by which this result was effected, the plaintiff testified as follows: "The highland part of the Harmon-Modlin tract is covered with pine, oak, and poplar timber. It is good timber. There is pine, ash, poplar, and cypress timber in the swamp. None of the timber has ever been cut. Mr. Arthur Hardison came to my house to buy my timber for the company. I gave him an option on the swamp timber as far up as the muck and mire goes. I did not sell him any of the highland timber. He was to cut timber down to 12 inches in diameter at the stump in the swamp and ravines. I signed the option, my wife and I. Hardison gave it to M. Jordan. I have seen it since. Mr. Jordan read it to me at his home in Beaufort county some weeks before the suit was brought. In 1905 was the last time I saw the option, just before I brought this suit. It was a 30-day option. M. Jordan came with a deed at the end of the 30 days. M. Jordan said the deed was exactly like the option; that it was written word for word like the option. I asked him to read the deed over to me. He said it is no use reading the deed. It is exactly like the option, and is all right. I cannot read, and M. Jordan knew that I could not read or write. I sold the timber for five years in the option, and Mr. Jordan said the deed was exactly like the option in every respect. On this statement and relying on it, I signed the deed, my wife and I signed it, and Mr. Jordan took private examination and paid me $59 in check on the company. One dollar had been paid by Hardison when the option was taken. It is admitted that the defendant paid $60. M. Jordan acted for the defendant."

Thus it will be seen that plaintiff, as we interpret the deed, who had given an option at the price of $60 to convey the pine, cypress, and poplar timber on seven acres of Judson Harmon land lying south of the Cooper swamp, and "as far as the muck and mire runs," has by the false representations of the defendant's agent been induced to convey all the pine, cypress, poplar, oak, and ash on the entire tract, except that part lying south of Cooper swamp, and all the pine, cypress, and poplar south of Cooper swamp, without limiting this amount by the restriction "as far as the muck and mire runs," the timber so conveyed amounting in value to $350, being $290, the amount of damage found by the verdict, plus $60, amount paid under the contract. On the moral aspects of the question there is here, in our opinion, ample evidence to establish willful misrepresentation on the part of defendant's agent and to justify the verdict as rendered. If it be suggested that there is no evidence that the agent Jordan was aware of the contents of the option, the answer is that he positively asserted that he knew the contents and that the deed was in exact compliance with the same, and it is well established that one who intentionally and positively asserts a fact to be true of his own knowledge, when he does not know whether it be true or false, is as culpable, in case another is thereby misled or injured, as one who makes an assertion which he knows to be untrue.

It is further urged in objection to this recovery that no timber has yet been cut and may never be, but the law must deal with facts, and not with possibilities, which rest only in suggestion, and unfortunately for the defendant he has so dealt with this contract that his mental attitude toward it has ceased to be of importance. He has conveyed the timber bought by him to the Dennis-Simmons Lumber Company by deed containing a description exactly similar to his own. This last company is not a party to this record, and we are not informed of its purpose. Certain it is, however, that, if our interpretation of this deed be correct, it has a right to enter upon the plaintiff's land and cut and appropriate all the timber of the kind and dimensions specified on the entire Judson Harmon tract, to the value of $350, when the plaintiff had only agreed to sell $60 worth of timber on seven acres of the property. This being true, and the result indicated having been brought about by the fraudulent misrepresentations on the part of defendant's agent, the plaintiff's right to recover on the main issue comes clearly within the principle so well stated in Griffin v. Lumber Co., 140 N. C. 514, 53 S. E. 307, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 463: "Where the parties made a contract for the sale of certain timber, reserving a well-defined class of trees, and defendant undertook to reduce the contract to writing, in accordance with its terms, but knowingly included the reserved timber and falsely represented to plaintiff that said timber was reserved in the deed, and, by means of this false representation, procured the execution of the deed, the plaintiff has a cause of action for deceit, and this is not dependent upon the removal of the timber."

Defendant assigns for error, further, that on the issue as to the statute of limitations the judge below declined to charge, as requested, that the registration of defendant's deed was in itself such a notice of the alleged fraud as would put the statute in motion for the defendant's protection, and in bar of plaintiff's claim; but the point has been decided against the defendant. The statute applicable (Revisal 1905, § 395, subsec. 9) provides that actions of the present kind are barred in three years after the discovery by the aggrieved party of the facts constituting the fraud, and, construing this subsection, the court has decided that the statute commences to run when the aggrieved party first discovered the facts or could have discovered them by the exercise of proper effort and reasonable care, and that the registration of the deed or knowledge of its existence by which the fraud was accomplished was not of itself sufficient notice of such facts. Peacock v. Barnes, 142 N. C. 215, 55 S. E. 99; Stubbs v. Motz, 113 N. C. 458, 18 S. E. 387.

There is no error, and the judgment of the lower court is affirmed.

Affirmed.

CONNOR, J. (dissenting). I am unable to concur in the conclusion reached by the court in this case. If nothing more was involved than a small sum of money, I would be content to note my dissent and say no more; but, as I interpret the record, a gross, moral fraud is by the verdict of the jury fixed upon the defendant, a corporation, it is true, but corporations commit frauds only by their agents and servants. It is impossible to disassociate them. I, of course, accept as true the allegation in the complaint and every statement made by plaintiff and his witness in regard to the terms of the option, and the contract upon which it is founded. I also accept, as true, his testimony in regard to the declarations and conduct of defendant's agent when he presented the deed for plaintiff's signature. I am, however, of the opinion that, instead of speaking a willful, deliberate falsehood in regard to the timber conveyed in the deed, he spoke the exact truth; that the deed, properly construed in the light of the option, conveys no other and no more timber than is included in the option. I freely concede that if I am in error in this, and if the agent, who it seems did not take the option, or draw the deed, knew that it included more, and other, timber than the option called for, he was guilty of a gross fraud upon the plaintiff. It is so easy to charge men with fraud, and unfortunately we are so prone to take the accusation for the proof, that courts should be cautious to see that conduct, capable of more than one construction, should not be hastily, or, upon insufficient evidence, branded as fraudulent when it may be consistent with an honest mistake. The complaint sets out the terms of the option, and in that respect it is fully sustained by the testimony. The option was for "the pine, cypress and poplar timber in the swamp and ravines up as far as muck and mire comes, consisting of about seven acres, on the land known as the Harmon-Modlin land, on the eastern side of the Washington and Jamesville road and the south side of Cooper swamp." The charge is that defendant "willfully and wickedly contrived to defraud plaintiff," and "fraudulently and purposely" inserted in the deed other timber, to wit, "oak and ash," on the swamp and ravine, and "pine, oak, ash, cypress, and poplar" on the highland, etc.

Plaintiff introduces Mr. Hardison, who says: "I took an option on the swamp and ravine timber. * * * The plaintiff had other timber than swamp and ravine. I did not buy the timber on the highland." Plaintiff testifies: "I gave him [Mr. Hardison] an option on the swamp timber as far up as the muck and mire goes. I did not sell him any highland timber. He was to cut timber down to 12 inches in diameter at the stump on the swamp and ravine." The deed contains the following description: "All the pine, oak, ash, cypress and poplar timber of and above the size of twelve inches in diameter on the stump when cut in and upon the following described tracts of land, situated in Jamesville township in the aforesaid county of Martin, adjoining the lands of S. L. Wallace, H. M. Modlin and others, and known as the Harmon-Modlin tract, containing forty-two acres more or less, all the pine, poplar, cypress timber on said land on the southern side of Cooper swamp, and in said swamp and ravines. Being the land conveyed to said Modlin as per record of Martin county by deed dated the 18th February, 1898." It bears date November 13, 1899, and is recorded December 19, 1899. No timber has been cut, and defendant has never claimed, but expressly disclaims, any other timber than that included in the option. Its contention is thus stated in the record: "The defendant contends that the deed to it did not convey any timber except that in the swamp and ravines." Thus the issue is sharply presented. Plaintiff charges that defendant fraudulently included all of his timber in the deed, whereas, defendant disclaims ever taking, owning, or acquiring the timber on the highland. The controversy, so far as the quantity of timber is concerned, depends upon the construction of the deed. It will be noted, that although the plaintiff alleges that defendant fraudulently inserted in the deed "oak and ash" in "the swamp and ravine," the deed conveys only "pine, poplar and cypress," the exact language of the option. The controversy is therefore narrowed to the question whether, reading the deed in the light of the option, any other timber is conveyed than that on the "southern side of Cooper swamp and in said swamp and ravines." His honor construed the deed to convey all of the timber on the Harmon-Modlin land; thus giving no effect to the last restrictive words in the description. I take it as settled that courts in such cases will, for the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the parties, "endeavor to place themselves in the position of the parties at the time of the conveyance." Cox v. McGowan, 116 N. C. 131, 21 S. E. 108. We should read this deed as if the description referred to the option. The question which the court is to ask in such cases is thus clearly stated by Judge Walker in Gudger v. White, 141 N. C. 507, 54 S. E. 386: "After all, the simple question is: What does the whole description show was actually intended to be conveyed? When reading the deed and looking at the facts and circumstances, as they appear, what impression is left on the mind as to the purpose of the parties?" "When a general description is joined with a particular one, it is a rule of construction that the latter prevails over the former. A general description may be limited, restrained, or controlled by a particular description; but, as a rule, a particular description is not limited, restrained, or controlled by a general description. The real intent of the parties should, when possible, be gathered from the whole description." Jones on Conv. § 410. It is sometimes said that the first description will control a later one. This rule is, however, applied only when the question as to which conveys the intention is so exactly balanced that it is necessary to invoke it "to tip the nodding beam." "But whether a specific description comes before or after a general description, it must prevail, upon underlying principle that the law will always demand the production of the highest evidence, and, as between two descriptions, will prefer that which is most certain." Cox v. McGowan, supra. In Carter v. White, 101 N. C. 30, 7 S. E. 473, the grant described the land as: "A tract containing sixty-seven and a half acres lying and being in the county of Currituck, known by the name of Walker's Island, beginning," etc. These words were followed by a specific description which did not include the whole of Walker's Island. Smith, C. J., said: "While the words recited, unconnected with others, will embrace a water-bound tract as an island, yet, upon every well-settled rule of interpretation, subsequent restrictive words, giving and defining its boundaries, must have the effect of qualifying the preceding general designation. The island determines, as does the mention of the county, the locality of the land granted; the particular description, what portion is intended, and thus the general and true intent is reached and an apparent repugnancy avoided, and the deed rendered self-consistent." The learned chief justice says that the proposition is so manifest that he refrains from citing authority for its support. In Peebles v. Graham, 128 N. C. 218, 39 S. E. 24, the testator, under whom both parties claimed, gave plaintiff "all the lands included under the name of the Arnold, the Geer and the Jones lands—all east of the Raleigh and Roxboro road." Furches, C. J., said: "If the description had closed with all the lands included, * * * and the dispute had been whether the 64½ acres were a part of the Arnold land, it would have been proper for the court to submit that question to the jury. But the description did not stop here. It added, 'all east of the Raleigh and Roxboro road.' This qualification must mean something. It would not have been added if it did not. The description, without this qualifying clause, would undoubtedly have given the plaintiff all the Arnold tract. * * * As [to] this language, according to all rules of interpretation, the only meaning it can have is to restrict the gift to the east side of the road." Proctor v. Pool, 15 N. C. 371. In these cases the court had no facts and circumstances allude the deed to aid it, whereas, we have the option pursuant to which the deed was drawn. The option includes "pine, cypress, and poplar timber." The specific description in the deed is confined to "pine, cypress, and poplar timber." The option calls for the timber "in the swamp and ravines"—the exact words of the deed. The option confines the timber sold to the "Harmon-Modlin land on the eastern side of the Washington and Jamesville road, on the south side of Cooper swamp." The deed confines the grant to the timber on the "south side of Cooper swamp."

No point is made of the omission to insert the road. But it is said that the words "up as far as the muck and mire comes" are omitted. No reference is made in the complaint of this omission. The only complaint made of the description as to the land on the "south side of Cooper swamp in the swamp and ravines" is that the deed includes "oak and ash," whereas, the option includes only "pine, cypress and poplar," and, when the deed is read, it appears that "oak and ash" are not in it. I fail, after careful inspection, to find any evidence suggesting that plaintiff was claiming any damage for fraud as to the swamp and ravine timber. His action is for the value of the timber on the highland. It is conceded that no timber has been cut. There is no suggestion that defendant, or its grantee, has ever claimed to own the highland timber. On the contrary, defendant expressly disclaims such ownership. I think that his honor was in error when he held, as a matter of law, that the deed conveyed all of the timber on the Modlin land. There is not the slightest evidence that Jordan, or any one else, ever made any such claim. While it is conceded that defendant did not request his honor to submit the question of the intention of the parties to the jury, it did except to his instruction that, as a matter of law, the language of the deed included all of the timber. If the question was for the jury, I think the exception extends to all errors in the charge in that respect. If the description was ambiguous and obscure, it would seem clear that the question as to what was included in the deed, in the light of the "facts and circumstances," should have been submitted to the jury. Ward v. Gay, 137 N. C. 397, 49 S. E. 864. It is said that defendant conveyed the timber to the Dennis-Simmons Lumber Company by deed containing the same description as is found in the deed from plaintiff. There is no suggestion that the lumber company has ever claimed that the highland timber passed, although eight years have elapsed since plaintiff's deed was made. I confess to some difficulty in comprehending how a person, either natural or corporate, can be fixed with actual, intentional fraud in respect to property which it does not claim to own, has never asserted any right to, and when, after eight years from the date of the alleged fraud, it is first notified that any such construction is put upon the deed, promptly disclaims title to the property. The defendant is made to buy property at plaintiff's price, which it does not want, has never purchased or claimed to own, and, for the purpose of compelling the purchase, is fixed with a gross, wicked fraud. It is made to pay interest for eight years. The deed was recorded immediately.

It will be further observed that although the defendant's grantee, by the judgment, is compelled to take the timber, it is given only two years within which to remove it. If it be not removed within that time, the plaintiff receives $290, with interest for eight years, and retains his timber. Bunch v. Lumber Co., 134 N. C. 116, 46 S. E. 24, and other cases in which we have held that at the expiration of the time fixed for removal, the estate of the purchaser reverts in the vendor. Assuming that ten years was inserted, instead of five, for removal, the difference in the price is fixed by the testimony. This amount, easy of calculation, plaintiff would recover. It may not be improper to say that, upon the argument, the attorney who wrote the deed, a man utterly incapable of committing a fraud, had the original deed showing that a portion of the description was printed, thus explaining how the ambiguity occurred. The written words constitute the specific description.

I think that, in any aspect of the case, there should be a new trial, to the end that the rights of all parties may be adjudged and protected.

(145 N. C. 214)

ALLEN v. ATLANTIC COAST LINE R. CO.
(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 18, 1907.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT—ACTION BY SERVANT FOR INJURY—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE—“LAST CLEAR CHANCE.”

In an action by a servant, a brakeman, for personal injuries, evidence considered, and held not to warrant the submission of the issue of “last clear chance.”

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Master and Servant, §§ 1131, 1132.]

2. SAME — METHOD OF WORK — “FLYING SWITCH” AS NEGLIGENCE PER SE.

Making a flying switch is not negligence per se as to the employé performing it. It is the attempt to make a running switch when the detached car has no brakeman on it, and is under no control, that is declared to be negligence, because highly dangerous.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Master and Servant, § 756.]

3. SAME — CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE OF SERVANT.

In an action by a servant, a brakeman, against a railroad company for personal injuries, evidence as to contributory negligence considered, and held sufficient to go to the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Master and Servant, §§ 1089-1132.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Lenoir County; E. B. Jones, Judge.

Action by William Allen against the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

The court submitted the following issues:

“(1) Was the plaintiff, William Allen, injured by the negligence of the defendant? (2) Did the plaintiff, William Allen, contribute to his injury by his own negligence? (3) What amount, if any, has plaintiff been damaged?” The jury answered first issue, “Yes,” and second issue, “Yes.” From the judgment that the defendant go without day, the plaintiff appeals.

Loffin & Varner, G. V. Cowper, and M. H. Allen, for appellant. Rouse & Land, for appellee.

BROWN, J. Upon the trial the plaintiff tendered the issues submitted, and also another issue, as follows: “If the plaintiff contributed to his own injury, could the defendant have avoided the injury by due care?” The refusal of the court to submit this issue is strongly pressed by plaintiff as error. The contention of a plaintiff that, although he may be guilty of negligence, yet the defendant had the last opportunity to prevent injury, can be presented under the issue of contributory negligence, as negligence to bar recovery must be shown to be the proximate cause. Baker v. Railroad, 118 N. C. 1021, 24 S. E. 415; Ramsbottom v. Railroad, 138 N. C. 38, 50 S. E. 448. We find nothing in this case which warrants the application of the so-called doctrine of the “last clear chance.” The only person who it is claimed could have intervened and saved the plaintiff from injury was the brakeman, Outlaw; and we see nothing in the evidence to sustain the contention that he could have done it. It appears by plaintiff’s own testimony that he had been employed on a freight train of defendant and was an experienced brakeman; that he was ordered by the conductor to go help Elias Outlaw place some shanty cars on the siding; that, instead of going to the side of the shanty cars where the ladders were, he let the shanties pass, and jumped on a coal car, which was the first car after the shanties passed. In respect to this contention, the plaintiff’s evidence is as follows: “As soon as I caught the coal car, which was the first car that reached me after the shanties passed, I got upon the platform of the coal car and at once started to step from it to a ladder on the shanty car, which I was going to place on the said track. Just as I was stepping to this ladder on the shanty car, the switchman cut off the cars, and dropped me from the center of the track down to the ground.” This testimony makes the acts of plaintiff and the switchman, Outlaw, practically simultaneous. Upon the plaintiff’s statement, then, there was no intervening time between his step and the act of Outlaw in disconnecting the cars to have enabled any agency to have been brought to bear upon the occurrence which could have averted the injury. Therefore there is no possible deduction in the testimony which would have permitted the submission of this issue. Again, there is no evidence in the record that Outlaw saw the plaintiff as he started to climb from the moving coal car onto the shanty, or that Outlaw had any reason to expect the plaintiff to take that way of going on top of the shanty, instead of the usual method of climbing from the ground by the ladders. There was no “last clear chance” left to Outlaw to avoid the injury, and no evidence that he neglected any duty he as a fellow servant owed the plaintiff. The evidence, therefore, does not support the issue tendered, and, for the same reason, we think his honor properly declined to give plaintiff’s prayer for instruction embodying such contention. Ellerbe v. Railroad, 118 N. C. 1026, 24 S. E. 808; Taylor v. Railroad, 109 N. C. 236, 13 S. E. 736. The only exception to the evidence and most of the prayers for instruction relate to the first issue, and, as the jury answered that issue in favor of the plaintiff, it is unnecessary to consider them.

2. The contention of plaintiff, as presented in prayers for instruction upon the second issue, that “kicking” cars is negligence per se, and the proximate cause of the plaintiff's injury, seems to be founded upon a misapprehension of the decisions. The word "kicking" seems to be used in railroad parlance as synonymous with making a "flying switch." This court has never held such operations to be per se negligence in respect of the employees performing them. It is "the attempt to make a running switch when the detached car has no brakeman on it, and is under no control, that is declared to be negligence, because highly dangerous." Wilson v. Railroad, 142 N. C. 336, 55 S. E. 257, and cases there cited.

3. The plaintiff further requested the court to charge that there is no evidence of contributory negligence. We think his honor properly denied his prayer. There is ample evidence in the record to go to the jury upon that issue. In fact, his honor might well have instructed the jury that the plaintiff upon his own showing was guilty of contributory negligence, and by his careless conduct caused his injury. Plaintiff was ordered to assist the switchman, Elias Outlaw, in sidetracking the "shanties." Being a brakeman, he knew his place was on top of the shanties and at the brakes, so he could control the cars as they were "shunted" or "kicked" from the track onto the switch. He jumped from the ground to the moving coal car, next to the shanty, for the purpose of ascending the ladder. When he mounted the coal car, he saw the switchman at the crank, and knew he was in the act of "cutting loose" the shanties, as ordered. The plaintiff never called to Outlaw, but took his chances, and endeavored to leap onto the shanty car just as the switchman "cut it loose." The plaintiff probably believed that he could successfully make the leap, or doubtless he would not have attempted it. He made a mistake as other unfortunate men have done before, and fell to the ground between the moving cars, and was injured.

The majority of the court is of opinion that there is no error.

(145 N. C. 248)

BONEY v. ATLANTIC & N. C. R. CO.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 16, 1907.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT—MASTER'S LIABILITY FOR INJURY TO SERVANT—ASSUMPTION OF RISK—STATUTORY PROVISION.

Under Revisal 1905, § 2646, denying the defense of assumption of risk when an employé is injured by any defect in machinery, a nonsuit in an action by a servant for injuries resulting from a defective handcar on which he was riding is properly refused.

2. SAME—NOTICE TO MASTER.

Where a servant who was injured while riding on a defective hand car had repeatedly reported it to his superior as defective, and the superior had promised to furnish another, but had failed to do so, there was no assumption of risk.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Master and Servant, §§ 638-643.]

3. SAME—ACTIONS—SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action by a servant for injuries received while riding on a defective hand car, evidence considered, and held to sustain a finding against contributory negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Master and Servant, §§ 939-949.]

4. SAME—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—PROXIMATE CAUSE.

Contributory negligence to bar a recovery must be shown to be the proximate cause of the injury.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Master and Servant, § 795.]

5. DAMAGES—PERSONAL INJURIES—QUESTIONS FOR JURY—AMOUNT OF DAMAGES.

In a personal injury action, the amount of damages is a question for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Damages, § 533.]

6. NEW TRIAL—GROUNDS—EXCESSIVE DAMAGES.

If the verdict is for excessive damages, the court has power to set it aside.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, New Trial, §§ 153-156.]

7. APPEAL AND ERROR—REVIEW—DISCRETION OF LOWER COURT—EXCESSIVE VERDICT.

A refusal of the trial court to set aside a verdict as excessive is not reviewable.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 3873.]

Walker, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Lenoir County; Long, Judge.

Action by H. F. Boney against the Atlantic & North Carolina Railroad Company. Judgment for plaintiff and defendant appeals affirmed.

Rouse & Land and L. I. Moore, for appellant. G. V. Cowper and Loftin & Varser, for appellee.

CLARK, C. J. The plaintiff was injured in consequence of using a defective hand car, whose defects he had repeatedly reported to his superior, who had promised to furnish another hand car, but had failed to do so. The nonsuit was properly refused, both because of the fellow servant law (Revisal 1905, § 2646), which denies the defense of assumption of risk when an employé is injured "by any defect in the machinery, ways and appliances of the company" (Coley v. Railroad, 128 N. C. 534, 39 S. E. 43, 57 L. R. A. 817), and, even independently of that statute, because the plaintiff had reported the defective hand car to his superior, and had been promised another one (Labatt, Master & Servant, p. 86 [b], and section 423, p. 1193).

The defendant relied on the defense of contributory negligence, but that issue was found in favor of the plaintiff. The acts complained of were that the plaintiff, in charge of the hand car, was standing up, helping his men work the lever up and down running the car, and, looking back, saw the train six miles off, and about this time the hand car flew the track, solely from the defect, previously reported, in its running gear. The rules of the company required the hand car to be taken off 20 minutes before the train passed. It is not clear whether the accident occurred 20 minutes before the train passed or not, but there was no causal connection between the passage of the train and the injury, and the jury so found. It may be that the court might well have instructed the jury that, if they believed the evidence, to find the issue of contributory negligence in the negative. Certainly the defendant has no cause of complaint, for the court gave the instructions asked by the defendant with the proper modification that, if the conduct of the plaintiff should be found as stated in the defendant's prayers and was the proximate cause of the injury to answer the issue of contributory negligence, "Yes," otherwise, "No." Negligence to bar a recovery must be shown to be the proximate cause of the injury. Baker v. Railroad, 118 N. C. 102, 24 S. E. 415; Reemsbottom v. Railroad, 138 N. C. 38, 50 S. E. 448, cited and affirmed Allen v. Railroad (at this term) 58 S. E. 1081. The charge as to quantum of damages follows that approved in Wallace v. Railroad, 104 N. C. 452, 10 S. E. 552, and recently in Ruffin v. Railroad, 142 N. C. 129, 55 S. E. 86.

The amount of damages was a matter of fact, of which the jury were the judges. If their finding was excessive, his honor, who heard the evidence, had the corrective power to set it aside. His refusal to do so is not reviewable by us. This is well settled by numerous decisions of this court. Norton v. Railroad, 122 N. C. 937, 29 S. E. 886, and cases there cited. There are states under the wording of whose Constitutions the appellate court can review the question of excessive damages, and it may not be improper to say that in those courts verdicts for damages for wrongful death and for personal injuries sustained by employes and others by reason of negligence in operating railroads, much greater in amount than those ordinarily returned by juries in cases coming up to this court, have been sustained as not excessive.

No error.

WALKER, J. (dissenting). I wish that I could fully concur with my associates in the decision of this case, because I regard the neglect of the defendant to repair the hand car, if the evidence is to be believed, as not only gross, but cruel. It is one of the first duties of the master to care for the safety of his employes, and in the discharge of that duty to use reasonable care in furnishing him with such tools and implements to perform his work as will not unnecessarily expose him to danger. Marks v. Cotton Mills, 135 N. C. 287, 47 S. E. 432; Witsell v. Railroad, 120 N. C. 557, 27 S. E. 125; Hicks v. Mfg. Co., 138 N. C. 319, 50 S. E. 703. That duty was not performed in this case, as the jury evidently found; and if this were all, I would not hesitate to give my assent to the conclusion of the court. But it is not by any manner of means. It appears here that the servant knowingly and deliberately violated the defendant's orders to remove the hand car from the track at least 20 minutes before the passage of a train—freight or passenger. The plaintiff actually saw a train approaching, and knew that it was on its schedule time. If he had complied with the rule and the instruction of his employer, the accident would not have occurred and the master's default, while gross and inexcusable, was not the proximate cause of his injury, as it must be to entitle him to a verdict, but his own neglect in disobeying orders. Besides, it is perfectly apparent, from the nature of the accident and the manner in which it occurred, that it was not the result of the particular defect in the hand car complained of, but was produced by the effort of the plaintiff to reach a point beyond that where he should have removed the hand car from the track. If he had complied with explicit orders, he would not have been hurt. This court has held repeatedly that, where an injury is caused by a departure from the employer's instructions to his servant, the latter is not entitled to recover because he is considered as the author of his own injury—"Volenti non fit injuria"—and it is not within the terms of the contract of employment that the master should protect him from such an injury. Whitson v. Wrenn, 134 N. C. 86, 46 S. E. 17; Stewart v. Carpet Co., 138 N. C. 60, 50 S. E. 562. And, as being more directly in point, Hicks v. Mfg. Co., 138 N. C. 319, 50 S. E. 703, where the principle is clearly and definitely stated by Justice Hoke for this court. We have also laid down the same doctrine at this term in Patterson v. Lumber Co. (N. C.) 53 S. E. 437. While the plaintiff has my sympathy in his misfortune, decisions of this court cannot be based upon sympathy, but must be founded upon the law, as we said in Crenshaw v. Street Railway, 144 N. C. 314, 56 S. E. 945.

There was just as much causal connection between the plaintiff's negligent act and the injury in this case as there was in any of those cases we have cited, wherein the servant was denied the right of recovery, and there are many more decisions which might be cited to the same effect.

(145 N. C. 188)

WEBB et al. v. BORDEN et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 10, 1907.)

1. PLEADING — ISSUES — ALLEGATIONS — EVIDENCE — PAROL EVIDENCE — CONTRADICTION OF DEED.

Where plaintiff claimed under a deed for which, after its destruction, a later deed was substituted, and plaintiff alleged that the second deed conveyed the land in the same way and manner as the first, and did not allege any mistake in the second deed, nor seek to have it corrected, parol evidence was inadmissible to show that such deed did not convey the same estate as the first deed.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 39, Pleading, §§ 1237, 1250.]

2. REFORMATION OF INSTRUMENTS—JURISDICTION—PLEADING.

While plaintiff, in an action to recover land, may reform a deed in his chain of title, he must, in order to obtain such relief, make the essential averments in his complaint so that an issue may be framed to present the controversy, if any.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 42, Reformation of Instruments, §§ 141-146.]

3. TRUSTS—NATURES—COLLECTION OF RENTS AND PROFITS.

Where land was conveyed to certain grantees to pay over annually and deliver to W. the rents and profits thereof during W.'s natural life, and to permit him to occupy the premises as a home for himself and family for that period, the trust was an active; and not a passive, one.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 47, Trusts, §§ 178, 179.]

4. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—OUSTER OF CESTUI QUE TRUST.

Where land was conveyed in trust to collect the rents and profits and pay the same to W. and permit him to occupy the premises as a home for life, the ouster of W. was the ouster of his trustees, and started limitations against both which barred their right to recover after seven years.

5. SAME—JOINT TENANCY—ESTATE OF TRUSTEES.

Under Revisal 1905, § 1580, providing that trustees shall hold as joint tenants in all respects as joint tenants held before 1874, where limitations had barred the entry of one trustee, the entry of his co-trustees was also barred.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 33, Limitation of Actions, § 659.]

6. JUDICIAL SALES — FRAUD — VACATION — LACHES.

Where a commissioner's deed to land was not at most voidable for fraud practiced either by the commissioner alone or in conspiracy with others, and no action was taken by the parties in interest to vacate the deed until 28 years elapsed, and until after the clerk of the court in which the proceedings were had for the sale of the property had died, he being charged with participating in the fraud, complainant was barred by laches from impeaching the deed.

Walker, J., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Lenoir County; Webb, Judge.

Action by George B. Webb and others against P. B. Borden and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Civil action for the recovery of a lot in the city of Kinston.

The facts material to an understanding of the appeal, as shown by admissions in the pleadings and the uncontradicted evidence, are: The title to the land in controversy was prior to March 1, 1869, in James B. Webb, father of plaintiff, Geo. B. Webb, and those under whom the feme plaintiff, Emma P. Webb, claim. On the 1st day of March, 1869, the land was sold by the sheriff of Lenoir county under executions issued upon judgments against said James B. Webb, and conveyed to Mary M. Webb, his daughter, who intermarried with Robert S. Hay. Plaintiffs allege that: Subsequently, in the year 1869, the said Mary H. Webb conveyed said lot of land by deed in fee simple, as tenant in common, to Benj. T. Webb, Geo. B. Webb, N. H. Webb, now the wife of H. G. West, J. W. Webb, Carrie J. Webb, now the wife of D. R. Midyette, Emma Webb, now the wife of T. W. Noland, and Martha J. Webb, subsequently the wife of one Lewis Meyer, and who has since died, leaving as her only heirs at law Lilly and Daisy Meyer surviving her. That in said deed mentioned in the fourth paragraph of this complaint the said James B. Webb was given and granted an estate in said lot of land for his own life, the grantees named in said fourth paragraph to have and to take their interest in the same after the death of the said James B. Webb. That the said deed was recorded in the register's office of Lenoir county and said state, in Book No. 42, p. 295, the records of which have been destroyed by the fire of 1878 or 1880, except the index thereto, and the said deed itself is lost or destroyed, and cannot be found after a thorough search therefor. That the said Mary M. Webb, who on the 28th day of June, 1881, was Mary M. Hay, wife of Robert S. Hay, did, together with her said husband, execute on said 28th day of June, 1881, another deed in place of said lost or destroyed deed, conveying said lot of land in the same way and manner as did the said lost or destroyed deed, except as to Martha J. Webb, who intermarried with one Lewis Meyer, and, she having died prior to said 28th day of June, 1881, her share in said lot of land is in the substituted deed conveyed to her only heirs at law, Lilly and Daisy Meyer, see said deed recorded in said county and state, in the register's office in Book No. 6, pp. 558, 559, 560, as part of this complaint. The deed of June 1, 1881, referred to, was put in evidence, and contained the following language: "That whereas on or about the first day of March, A. D. 1869, the said Mary M. Hay, then Mary M. Webb, for and in consideration of natural love and affection, did sell and convey to the said Benj. T. Webb, George B. Webb, N. M. Webb (now N. M. West), J. W. Webb, Carrie J. Webb, Emma Webb, and Martha J. Webb (mother of the said Lilly and Daisy Meyer), and their heirs, certain tracts or lots of land in the county of Lenoir in and near the corporate limits of the town of Kinston, * * * adjoining the lots of John Ennls and John D. Long. And whereas the said lots of land was by the said Mary M. Hay, then Mary M. Webb, conveyed and assigned to the said B. T. Webb and others, and their heirs by a certain deed of absolute conveyance duly executed, but with the special trust and confidence that they, the said B. T. Webb and others, pay over and deliver to their father, Jas. B. Webb, the rents and profits of said lands during his natural life, and that the said J. B. Webb be allowed to occupy the said premises as a home for himself and family during his natural life. And whereas the said deed of conveyance is now supposed to be lost: Now, therefore, this indenture witnesseth that for and in consideration of the foregoing premises, together with the further consideration of the love and affection to them the said B. T. Webb and others, borne by the said Mary M. Hay and husband, Robert S. Hay, have given, granted, released, confirmed, and quitted claim and by these presents do give, grant, release, confirm, and quitclaim unto the said B. T. Webb and others, their heirs and assigns, all their right, claim, interest, and property in and to the aforesaid parcels of land to have and to hold to them the said B. T. Webb and others, and their heirs in fee simple forever. But with this special trust that they pay over annually and deliver to Jas. B. Webb the rents and profits of said lands for and during his natural life, and they permit the said Jas. B. Webb to occupy and use said premises as a home for himself and family during the term of his natural life." On the 17th day of December, 1874, B. T. Webb, one of the sons of James B. Webb, executed a deed describing said lots to R. W. King, in which are set forth the following recitals: "Whereas Benjamin T. Webb, commissioner appointed by the court to sell a certain lot of land mentioned in the petition of B. T. Webb, Lewis Meyer, and wife, Martha Jane, George B. Webb, Nannie Webb, Caroline J. Webb, Emma Webb, and James B. Webb and wife, Margaret, and whereas, in pursuance to the order of said Court, I, Benjamin T. Webb, commissioner, as aforesaid, having advertised said lot of land agreeably to law, and agreeably to the order of said court, for more than thirty days, did expose the same at public sale at the court-house door in the town of Kinston, Lenoir county, on the 14th day of December, A. D. 1874, when and where Richard W. King became the purchaser, he being the last and highest bidder," etc. R. W. King conveyed the lot to one Anthony Blount, and, by a connected chain of conveyances, such title as King acquired vested in the defendants Peter R. Borden and E. W. Borden during the years 1885 and 1886, at which time they entered into possession, and have continued therein, claiming under said deed until the institution of this action April 1, 1902. The deeds from King and others in the claim of defendants' title, including those to themselves, are duly recorded. Plaintiffs allege that the deed of B. T. Webb, commissioner, to King, was void and conveyed no title, by reason of fraud, misrepresentation, etc., in respect to the alleged proceedings under which it purports to have been made, etc. It is unnecessary to set forth in detail plaintiffs' contentions in this respect. James B. Webb died August 3, 1901. Plaintiff Geo. B. Webb was of full age July 8, 1876. The youngest child, a daughter, was of full age February 17, 1888. All of the daughters married before reaching their full age. The children of James B. Webb, except plaintiff Geo. B. Webb, executed deed for such interest as they had in the lot to plaintiff, Emma P. Webb, wife of Geo. B. Webb, after the death of their father.

Plaintiffs demand judgment for possession of the land and damages for withholding, etc. Defendants, conceding that James B. Webb owned the lot and that his title vested in his daughter Mary, allege that by virtue of the deed of B. T. Webb, commissioner, and the mesne conveyances, they are the owners thereof. They also rely upon the several statutes of limitation, etc. His honor was of the opinion (1) that the deed executed by Mary Hay January 28, 1881, referred to in paragraph 7 of the complaint, did not vest a life estate in James B. Webb; (2) that parol evidence was not admissible to contradict the averments in allegation 7 of the complaint. He expressed the opinion that plaintiffs were not entitled to recover, whereupon they excepted, submitted to judgment of nonsuit, and appealed.

Loftin & Varser and Wooten & Wooten, for appellants. Rouse & Land, Y. T. Ormond, and W. D. Pollock, for appellees.

CONNOR, J. (after stating the facts as above). Plaintiffs proposed to show, by B. T. Webb, that the deed of March 1, 1869, made by Mary M. Webb, who intermarried with Robt. S. Hay, conveyed the lot in controversy to Jas. B. Webb and his wife for their joint lives and the life of the survivor, remainder to their children. It was admitted that the courthouse "in which the deed was recorded was destroyed by fire during the year 1880, and that the original deed was lost. The court, upon defendants' objection, excluded the testimony and plaintiffs excepted. The purpose of the proposed testimony was to avoid the effect of the substituted deed of June 28, 1881, by showing that the recital therein and the habendum were incorrect. It will be observed that in the seventh paragraph of the complaint plaintiffs, referring to the deed of March 1, 1869, and its destruction, say that the said Mary Hay executed the deed of June 28, 1881, "conveying said lot in the same way and manner as the said lost or destroyed deed" (except that the name of the children of a deceased daughter was inserted). The substituted deed of June 28, 1881, is made a part of the complaint. It is true that in a preceding paragraph they say that the lost deed of March 1, 1869, conveyed to Jas. B. Webb a life estate. The deed of June 28, 1881, which "conveyed the land in the same way and manner," when made a part of the complaint and put in evidence, became the basis upon which the court must, by its construction, ascertain what estate is conveyed. The plaintiffs, having elected to claim under this deed, cannot show, in the absence of any allegation of mistake in the maker or draftsman, that the deed of March 1, 1869, conveyed a different estate from that described in the deed. This would be not only to contradict their own allegation, but the deed under which they claim. While, under the Code system of procedure, it is settled by may decisions of this court that, in an action for the recovery of land, the plaintiff may, by proper averments, invoke the equitable power of the court to reform a deed in his chain of title, he must make the essential averments, so that the defendant may either admit or deny them, and an issue may be framed presenting the controversy in that respect. He cannot set up a deed as the foundation of his title, and, without amendment of his complaint, when he finds that it does not serve his purpose, attack it by parol evidence. The law is well stated by Mr. Justice Walker in Buchanan v. Harrington, 141 N. C. 39, 53 S. E. 478. Referring to an attempt to introduce testimony of this character, he says: "But the pleadings do not raise any issue to which it was pertinent. If the petitioners desired to have the deed reformed, relying upon their right to the equity of correction, this matter should have been set up by proper averment and a corresponding issue submitted to the jury. * * * If a party demands equitable relief, he must specially allege the facts upon which he seeks the aid of the court in the exercise of its equitable jurisdiction." The wisdom of the law, in this respect, is illustrated by this record. The parties went to trial upon the allegations in the verified complaint. The deed was made a part thereof and introduced in evidence. To permit the plaintiffs, without any notice to defendants, to introduce parol evidence of an interested witness, based upon his recollection of the contents of a deed, which it seems he never saw but once, and then more than 30 years ago, to contradict the solemn declarations, by way of recital in another deed, made in substitution of the first, more than 20 years ago, would be to place the security of defendants' title upon the slippery memory of the witness, without any opportunity to apply the usual tests or contradict him. It appears, from this record, that the deed of September 21, 1881, was drawn by an intelligent and careful attorney by whose testimony plaintiffs now propose to contradict it. This witness, plaintiffs charge, fraudulently executed another deed for this same property. His honor's ruling was manifestly correct. To have admitted the testimony would have violated all those rules of evidence which experience has shown to be essential to the security of titles.

We are thus brought to the consideration of the deed of June 23, 1881, for the purpose of ascertaining what estate was vested in Jas. B. Webb. Whatever he acquired by that deed he also had by the deed of March 1, 1869, because his daughter conveyed by the latter deed "in the same way and manner" as in the first. Plaintiffs insist that the trust declared was passive, and that, by operation of the statute of uses, Jas. B. Webb took an estate for his life in the land. From this position, they conclude that the children had no title to, or estate in, the lots other than a vested remainder, until the death of Jas. B. Webb, August 3, 1901, and that, therefore, the statute of limitations began to run against them at that time. Defendants, on the contrary, insist that the trust impressed upon the legal title was active, imposing upon the grantees and trustees duties in respect to the property which made it necessary for them to hold the legal title; that Jas. B. Webb took no estate in the land; that the case comes within one of the well-recognized classes not affected by the statute of uses. From this position they conclude that the ouster, under the deed of B. T. Webb, December 17, 1874, put the statute of limitations into operation against the trustees, and that, being under color, it ripened into a perfect title at the end of seven years. The solution of this controversy depends upon the character of the trust created by the deed. The lot is conveyed to B. T. Webb and others in trust, "that they pay over annually and deliver to Jas. B. Webb the rents and profits of said lands for and during his natural life and they permit the said Jas. B. Webb to occupy and use said premises as a home for himself and family for and during his natural life." It is well settled that "the duty to collect or receive the rents, profits, and income of the estate, and pay over the same to the person entitled thereto, is generally inseparable from the personal control and supervision of the estate by the trustee, and requires the legal title to the corpus upon which the rents and profits accrue shall be in the trustee." 28 Am. & Eng. Enc. 926. We had occasion to consider the question in Perkins v. Brinkley, 133 N. C. 154, 45 S. E. 541, where we quoted, with approval, the language of Mr. Tiederman. "Where a special duty is to be performed by the trustee in respect to the estate, such as to collect the rents and profits, to sell the estate, etc., the trust is called active." Real Prop. § 494. Whereas, as said by Mr. Lewin: "If the trust be simply to permit A. to receive the rents, the legal estate is executed in A.; this being a mere passive trust." Trusts, § 18. In Hicks v. Bullock, 96 N. C. 164, 1 S. E. 629, it is held that "where, by a will, land is devised to a trustee to rent and pay the rents over to a person during his life, the cestui que trust takes no estate in the land, but only the right to have the rents paid to him." In McKenzie v. Sumner, 114 N. C. 435, 19 S. E. 375, Shepherd, C. J., emphasizes the fact that the trustee is charged with no specific duties in respect to the property. Here the holders of the legal title are required to "pay over annually and deliver the rents and profits" to Jas. B. Webb during his life. How can they pay over and deliver, unless they "rent and collect?" It seems clear that to execute the trust, to discharge the duty imposed, they must of necessity hold the legal title, control and manage the property. They are further to permit him to occupy the premises "as a home for himself and family"; thus showing the intention of the maker of the deed that, as to the portion of the property suited for that purpose, the father is to "occupy" for the restricted purpose named, and, as to the other part, they are to rent it out and receive the rents and pay them over to him annually. We think it apparent, in view of the fact that the property had just preceding the execution of the deed been sold under executions against him, that it was the purpose of his children to take the title and impress upon it a charge, or trust, for the benefit of their father, to remove it beyond his control, or power to dispose of it; in other words, to create an active trust for his benefit. The deed is carefully drawn to effectuate that purpose, and apt language is used to that end. This being settled, it follows, upon the well-settled doctrine of this court, that the ouster of Jas. B. Webb was the ouster of his trustees, and put them to their action. This principle was clearly announced by Smith, C. J., in Clayton v. Rose, 87 N. C. 106, 110, and followed in a well-considered opinion by Shepherd, J., in King v. Rhew, 108 N. C. 696, 13 S. E. 174, 23 Am. St. Rep. 76; Kirkman v. Holland, 139 N. C. 185, 51 S. E. 856; Cameron v. Hicks, 141 N. C. 21, 53 S. E. 728, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 407. The result of this rule is that, if the trustees are barred, the cestui que trust is likewise barred. If this is true when the trustee is a stranger to the remainderman, the same process of reasoning would seem to lead to the conclusion, with even greater force, that, when the trustees were entitled as remaindermen, they should be barred after permitting the statutory period to expire. It was the duty of the trustees to bring an action against the dissolator within seven years. They would have recovered the possession to enable them to execute the trust and protect the remainder. If their failure to do so, for the statutory period, barred their entry for one purpose, or in one right, it must do so for all purposes. It was not only the interest of Jas. B. Webb, which the dissolator acquired by seven years adverse possession under color of title, but the title as against all who had a right of entry, and therefore a cause of action. It would seem that, under our statute (Revised 1905, § 1580), trustees are seised as joint tenants and not as tenants in common, resulting in the conclusion that, if one is barred of his entry, his co-trustees are also barred. Cameron v. Hicks, supra. B. T. Webb was 24 years of age in 1874, and plaintiff Geo. B. Webb 19 years of age at that time. They are clearly barred, and by the decision of this court it is settled that their co-trustees are equally so. It is immaterial, for this purpose, whether the ouster be fixed at the date of the deed of B. T. Webb, commissioner, to King—December 17, 1874—or at the date of defendants' deed 1885. From either date the same result follows. What we have said is upon the assumption that the deed of B. T. Webb, commissioner, is absolutely void and the entry under it wrongful.

There is, however, another view of the case equally decisive of plaintiffs' contention. The deed from B. T. Webb, commissioner, reciting that proceedings were had in the superior court upon the petition of himself and the other owners of the lot resulting in his appointment as commissioner, sale of the property, payment of the purchase money, etc., was recorded immediately after its execution, and, upon the destruction of the courthouse, recorded a second time in 1881. There is evidence in the record showing conclusively that the purchasers under that deed took possession and those claiming under them have continued therein; that the defendants have put valuable improvements upon the property; that plaintiff Geo. B. Webb has made conveyances of adjoining lots calling for the lines of the one in controversy as the property of the purchasers; that all of these facts have been known to him since 1874. It is also apparent that Jas. B. Webb and other persons having knowledge of these facts are dead. It also appears that B. T. Webb, the person who made the deed and received the purchase money in 1874, being $118, has, since the death of his father, executed a deed to Geo. B. Webb conveying his undivided one-fifth interest for $500 to the wife of Geo. B. Webb; that the other children have likewise conveyed to her for a recited consideration of $500 for each share. The deed made by B. T. Webb, commissioner, is not, upon plaintiffs' averments, void, but, if they be true, may it be in equity set aside for fraud practiced by said B. T. Webb, either alone, or, as charged by plaintiffs, in conspiracy with others. In view of these facts, and the lapse of 28 years of unexplained silence, it would seem that a court of equity would refuse to interfere by setting aside the deed. In Harrison v. Hargrove, 109 N. C. 346, 13 S. E. 939, the time elapsing since the proceeding was only 17 years. There was an outstanding life estate, and the fact was found that no service was made of the summons on the petitioners. This court, by Shepherd, J., held that the petitioners were guilty of laches, and relief was refused. His language is peculiarly applicable to this record. "Indeed, if there is anything in the rule which requires long delay to be explained and knowledge of a decree to be negated, we can conceive of no stronger case than the present one." No one can read this record without being deeply impressed with the remarkable combination of facts and circumstances surrounding plaintiffs' alleged claim.

Although it was the imperative duty of the plaintiff Geo. B. Webb and the other children of Jas. B. Webb to protect the interest of their father and secure to him the annual reception of the rents and profits and a home for himself and family, they permit him to be ousted and remain so for 27 years by the alleged fraud of their brother. They took no steps to recover the property for his use, and after his death, and the death of the clerk of the court seek to have the deed declared fraudulent upon the testimony of their brother, who they charge with active participation in the fraud, and to whom they have paid, as shown by his deed, $500 for his alleged interest in the property which he sold in 1874, and for which he received the purchase money. It is significant that the clerk who is charged with aiding him in perpetuating the fraud is dead. In any aspect of the case his honor correctly directed judgment of nonsuit.

Affirmed.

WALKER, J. (dissenting). I do not understand the facts of this case as do my associates. It seems to me that there was sufficient allegation in the complaint of an intention and agreement on the part of Mary H. Webb (afterwards Mrs. Robert S. Hay) to convey to James B. Webb an estate for life in the land, and whether legal or equitable can make no difference in the view I take of the law of the case. If, therefore, the substituted deed of June 28, 1881, did not convey such an estate as the parties intended should pass to James B. Webb, and as they distinctly allege did pass by the original deed, why were not the plaintiffs entitled to establish the mistake, if they could do so by the requisite proof? If the deed of June 28, 1881, while intended to take the place of the one of 1869, which gave James B. Webb a life estate, failed by reason of the mistake of the draftsman to convey a life estate to him, and there was a mutual mistake, as I think is sufficiently alleged in the complaint, though not very formally or with that precision so much to be desired in pleadings, it would seem that his honor erred in excluding the evidence offered for the purpose of proving the fact. Can the mere circumstance that the plaintiffs have placed a wrong construction upon the deed of 1881, as the majority think they have, preclude their right to have it conformed to what was really the purpose in making it? The substance of the allegation, when properly considered, is—and that is what the plaintiffs really meant—that the deed of 1881 did convey a life estate to James B. Webb, but, if it did not, then that it should be corrected so as to carry out the agreement of the parties in respect to that contemplated effect of the deed. Pleadings should not be construed too strictly, for narrow and technical interpretations often defeat justice. "In the construction of a pleading for the purpose of determining its effect, its allegations shall be liberally construed with a view to substantial justice between the parties." Revisal 1905, § 495. The plaintiffs also allege that all of the successive purchasers had full notice of their equity. The defendants plead that they have had 20 years' adverse possession of the land and 7 years' adverse possession under color of title, but there is no plea of the statute especially addressed to plaintiffs' equity for a correction of the deed, and, if there were, I doubt if, under the facts and circumstances of this case, as they now appear, it should be allowed to avail the defendants.

I gave my concurrence to the decisions in Kirkman v. Holland, 189 N. C. 185, 51 S. E. 856, and Cameron v. Hicks, 141 N. C. 21, 53 S. E. 729, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 407, most reluctantly and only in deference to the prior decisions in King v. Rhew, 108 N. C. 696, 18 S. E. 174, 23 Am. St. Rep. 76, and Clayton v. Rose, 87 N. C. 106, and the greater learning and wisdom of my Brethren, because I believe the principle underlying those decisions is essentially wrong and will work, if it has not already wrought, great injustice. I do not think that when a life tenant is ousted, even though he has only an equitable estate, the legal title being in a trustee for him, and the disseisin continues long enough to bar his trustee, that persons entitled in remainder should be prejudiced by the inaction of the trustee, and there is eminent authority for this position. The bar should operate only against the estate of the life tenant, just as an estoppel is not permitted to extend beyond the estate of the person bound by it. James B. Webb died in August, 1901, and the life estate then fell in. This action was commenced in April, 1902, by the remaindermen, in full time for the assertion of their rights by the plaintiffs.

I am also of the opinion that there was evidence tending to show that the proceedings for the sale of the land which are attached for fraud, irregularity, and upon other grounds were of such a character as not to obstruct the plaintiffs' right to equitable relief. But his honor ruled out important and material evidence that plaintiffs proposed to introduce, on the other branch of the case, and peremptorily decided that they could not recover. They were deprived in limine of the benefit of proof essential to their success, and finally denied the right to recover in any aspect of the case. This, in my judgment, was error. It would, perhaps, have been better to submit the case to the jury upon proper issues, so that the facts might have been found. The jury may have found against the plaintiffs, but they should, at least, have had an opportunity to prove their case or to develop it. No issues were framed, but the case was most manifestly tried upon the understanding that proper issues would be submitted when the evidence had all been introduced. It does not seem to me, upon a review of the entire record, that the plaintiffs have had the full benefit of their legal rights, and, being of this opinion, I must dissent from the opinion of the majority, which I always do with extreme regret. My inclination always is to concur with them, not only because of their great learning and ability, but also because I well know with what anxious care and patient investigation they consider and decide cases coming before them. I would enter more fully into the discussion of the principle involved in King v. Rhew, Kirkman v. Holland, and Cameron v. Hicks, if it would not extend this opinion to an unreasonable length. I may undertake to express my views at length on that subject at some future and more opportune time. The principle herein applied goes beyond what was there decided, it seems to me.

I agree with my Brethren that this case bears no resemblance to Joyner v. Futrill, 136 N. C. 301, 48 S. E. 649, or Perry v. Hackney, 142 N. C. 368, 55 S. E. 289, and for that reason they were not cited. In the former of those two cases, the trust was a passive one, and was executed by the statute of uses plainly and unmistakably, and, besides, it was clearly confined to the life estate. The remainder was devised, freed, and discharged of the trust. In Perry v. Hackney the devise was made directly to Nancy Richardson of the "use, benefit, and profit" of the property in controversy. There was no intervention of a trustee upon whom duties were conferred that created an active trust. She got the whole estate, because the language was capable of no other construction; and the rule in Shelley's Case was held to apply as the limitation then was "to the lawful heirs of her body" after her death. The statute of uses had no application, nor did the question presented in this case arise.

(145 N. C. 242)

SMITH v. GODWIN et al.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 16, 1907.)

1. MORTGAGES—ASSIGNMENT—RIGHTS PASSING AS INCIDENTS.

Y. held a note against H. secured by a mortgage on land. The note being past due, H., for the purpose of paying it and discharging the mortgage, executed an absolute deed of the land to Y., who gave him a receipt in full, but retained possession of the note and mortgage. Y. then deeded the land to V. The deed recited that the consideration was a certain sum, but that it was understood that only a certain part had been paid, and that the deed would only become operative as a fee-simple deed on the payment of the balance. February 2, 1902, Y. gave plaintiff his note for $1,000, and on February 3, 1903, indorsed to him as security the H. note and transferred the mortgage as security and also certain shares of stock. Subsequent to February 3, 1903, the deeds from H. to Y. and Y. to V. and the cancellation of the mortgage from H. to Y. were recorded. In June, 1904, Y. was adjudged a bankrupt, and defendants G. and others appointed as trustees. Plaintiff seeks to recover of defendant V. the balance due on the purchase price of the land described in the H. mortgage conveyed to him by Y. Held, that under the express provisions of Revisal 1906, §§ 2214, 2215, when Y. indorsed the note, although past due, to plaintiff, he warranted that it was genuine, that he had a good title to it, that he had no knowledge of any fact which would impair its validity or render it valueless, and that on presentment it would be paid; and hence plaintiff's right to demand all securities which Y. held, including any interest in the land, is clear, and he has an equitable lien on the debt of V. for the balance due on the purchase price of the land.

2. BANKRUPTCY—LIENS—VALIDITY AGAINST TRUSTEE.

Under these circumstances, the trustees in bankruptcy for Y. did not take title to the V. debt free from the equitable lien of plaintiff, since trustees in bankruptcy take title to the property of the bankrupt subject to all the rights and equities existing in favor of third persons.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 6, Bankruptcy, §§ 286-295.]

3. MORTGAGES—ASSIGNMENT AS SECURITY.

No demand having been made on plaintiff to apply the stock transferred to him to the payment of his note, he may enforce his lien against the debt of V. without doing so, since he may realize on either of his securities in the order which he prefers.

4. BANKRUPTCY—RIGHTS OF TRUSTEE AS AFFECTED BY LIEN.

Under these conditions, it being conceded that the amount recovered by plaintiff in this action is insufficient to discharge his note, the trustees of Y. are entitled to an accounting of the funds in plaintiff's hands, to the end that they may have the stock sold and the balance after paying plaintiff's note paid to them.

Appeal from Superior Court, Harnett County; Peebles, Judge.

Action by Edward Smith against R. L. Godwin and others to recover the balance due on the purchase price of land. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

The facts, as shown by the pleadings, admissions, and verdict are: E. F. Young held a note against one B. F. Hamilton, secured by a mortgage on land in Harnett county, for $1,256, dated March 1, 1896, subject to certain indorsed credits. On January 7, 1902, the note being past due, Hamilton, for the purpose of paying the note and discharging the mortgage, executed an absolute deed, for the land, to Young, who gave him a receipt in full, but retained possession of the note and mortgage. On the same day, January 7, 1902, Young executed a deed for the land to defendant W. R. Vann. The consideration, recited in the deed, was $3,100, followed by the following provision: "It is distinctly understood and agreed between the parties hereto that only the sum of $1,692.05 of the consideration of $3,100, above written, has been paid, and that this deed shall become operative as a fee-simple deed of conveyance only from and after the payment of said balance in full with interest." On March 1, 1904, Vann paid Young on account of the balance due $1,014.24, leaving due, at the time of the trial, $746.76. The deed from Hamilton to Young and from Young to Vann were recorded subsequent to February 3, 1903, as was the cancellation of record of the mortgage from Hamilton to Young. On February 2, 1902, Young executed to plaintiff, for a valuable consideration, his promissory note for $1,000, due November 1, 1902, no part whereof has been paid. On February 3, 1903, Young indorsed to plaintiff as collateral security for said note, the Hamilton note, and transferred the mortgage executed to secure the same. There was apparently due on said note at that time $1,053.96. On June 4, 1904, Young was duly adjudged a bankrupt, and defendants Godwin and others appointed his trustees. Plaintiff has not proven his debt against Young. At the time of the transfer of the Hamilton note and mortgage, Young, for the same purpose, transferred to plaintiff certain shares of stock in incorporated companies. Plaintiff, in this action, seeks to recover of defendant Vann the balance due on the purchase price of the land described in the Hamilton mortgage, conveyed to him by Young. He avers that, by the transfer of the note, he acquired an equitable lien on the debt. Defendant Vann is ready to pay the amount as the court may adjudge. Defendants, trustees, insist: (1) That plaintiff took the note after maturity and subject to all infirmities and defenses attaching thereto in the hands of Young. (2) That they took the debt, as trustees, free from any liens or equities attaching to Young's title. (3) That, in any event, plaintiff cannot recover the debt until he accounts for the value, or the amount which he ought, by due diligence, to have realized from a sale of the stocks. His honor being of the opinion that there was no evidence that Young, or his trustees, had notified plaintiff to dispose of the stocks, could not compel him to account for their value before realizing on the Vann debt, that they could, at any time, demand the return of the stocks by paying the note, he therefore declined to submit an issue in regard to the sum which Young could have realized by a sale of the stocks. Defendants duly excepted to these rulings. From the judgment rendered, the trustees appealed.

Godwin & Townsend and R. L. Godwin, for appellants. J. C. Clifford and Rose & Rose, for appellees.

CONNOR, J. (after stating the facts as above). It is conceded, as contended by defendants, that, as against Hamilton, the plaintiff took the note by indorsement from Young, subject to defense accruing to him by reason of the execution of the deed of January 7, 1902, and the receipt by Young; he could not have maintained an action on the note against Hamilton. This question, however, is not involved here. When Young indorsed the note, although past due, to plaintiff, he warranted that it was genuine—that he had a good title to it—that he had no knowledge of any fact which would impair its validity or render it valueless; and that, on presentment, it would be paid. Revisal 1905, §§ 2214, 2215. Hence his title to the note and his right to demand all securities which Young held is clear. While the record presents a peculiar state of facts, we can see no good reason why the same equitable principles which carries to the purchaser of a note all securities held by the assignor for its payment may not be invoked by plaintiff. Certainly, in good conscience and equity, Young should be treated as holding such security for the benefit of his assignee—the principal having passed, the incident goes with it. This is elementary. Hamilton was entitled to demand of Young the surrender of his note and cancellation of the mortgage. He permitted him, however, to retain the one and leave the other open upon the record. When Young sold to Vann, he expressly retained a lien upon the land to secure the unpaid balance of the purchase money. This represented in Young's hands, the note and mortgage which he held against Hamilton. A court of equity which always disregards mere form, so that substantial justice will be done, finds no difficulty in treating Young as a trustee for plaintiff in respect to the amount due by Vann. Defendants insist that, however this may be as against Young, they take under the bankrupt law, title to the debt free from such equity, or, to state their contention in the language of their well-considered brief: "When they were appointed trustees of Young's estate, and were, by operation of law, vested with the title to Young's property, they took that title which Young could, prior to his adjudication in bankruptcy, have transferred to an innocent purchaser for value." In considering this question, the fact that Hamilton's note was overdue and open to defense by him is immaterial. Plaintiff, as against Young, acquired a perfect title to the note. This being true, we are unable to see how his subsequent bankruptcy in any manner affected plaintiff's title, either to the note or any securities which Young held for its payment. We do not think plaintiff's right grows out of an estoppel; but equity, regarding that as done which ought to have been done, treats the Vann debt as having been transferred to plaintiff as incident to the transfer of the note, or, which amounts to the same thing, considers Young as trustee for the plaintiff. Whether if Young had, for value and without notice of such trust, transferred the Vann debt to a purchaser, plaintiff would have been without remedy, is not presented here.

While there is some apparent confusion in the decisions of the federal District and Circuit Courts, upon the question, we find that the Supreme Court of the United States has held that the trustees in bankruptcy take the assets of the bankrupt subject to rights, liens, and equities existing against them in the hands of the bankrupt. In Thompson v. Fairchild, 196 U. S. 513, 25 Sup. Ct. 306, 49 L. Ed. 577, it is said: "Under the present bankrupt act, the trustee takes the property of the bankrupt, in cases unaffected by fraud, in the same plight and condition that the bankrupt himself held it and subject to all equities impressed upon it in the hands of the bankrupt." Mfg. Co. v. Cassell, 201 U. S. 344, 26 Sup. Ct. 481, 50 L. Ed. 782. The result of the decisions is thus stated in 5 Cyc. 341: "The trustee becomes vested with the same kind of a title as though he were a purchaser, but such title is subject to all the rights and equities existing in favor of third persons against the bankrupt." Bank v. Iron Co. (C. C.) 102 Fed. 753. The same principle has been recognized by this court in regard to assignees of property to secure the payment of existing debts. In Potts v. Blackwell, 56 N. C. 449, Pearson, J., speaking of the title acquired by such assignees, says: "It would seem that they take subject to any equity that attached to the property in the hands of the debtor and cannot discharge themselves from it on the ground of being purchasers without notice." This cause was reheard, and, after most exhaustive argument by counsel of marked learning, affirmed. It has been uniformly followed in this court, and is sustained by reason. 57 N. C. 58. While there are some apparently conflicting rulings in the bankrupt courts, we think that they are more apparent than real, being controlled frequently by local statutes regarding registration of deeds and mortgages. No question of that kind is presented in this case. Plaintiff did not acquire any interest in the land sold to Vann, but became entitled to the debt for the purchase money. It will be observed that at the date of the assignment to plaintiff the mortgage from Hamilton had not been canceled, nor the deeds from Hamilton to Young or Young to Vann recorded. So far as plaintiff's knowledge or information extended, the Hamilton note and mortgage were intact. This fact shows the strength and justice of his equity against Young and equally so against his trustees.

The next exception made by defendants involves the right of plaintiff to recover in this action, before disposing of the stocks transferred to him. We can perceive no reason, in the absence of a demand upon him to do so, why he may not realize on either of his securities in the order which he prefers. It is conceded that the amount recovered by him in this action is insufficient to discharge his note. The trustees of Young are entitled, if so advised, to have an accounting of the fund in plaintiff's hands—to the end that they may either have the stocks sold and the balance, after paying plaintiff's note, paid to them—or, we presume, by an order of the bankrupt court they may redeem the stocks and dispose of them for the benefit of the estate. Discussing the duty of a pledgee of stocks to secure debts, Mr. Justice Blatchford, in Culver v. Wilkinson, 145 U. S. 205, 12 Sup. Ct. 832, 36 L. Ed. 676, says: "A sale, in the absence of a request to sell, or the commencement of a suit, was not compulsory, but was at the discretion of the pledgee." We concur in the opinion of his honor. Lake v. Little Rock Trust Co., 77 Ark. 53, 90 S. W. 847, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1199, that: "Young had a right to pay plaintiff's note and take back his collaterals, or he could have instructed plaintiff to sell them." This right passed to his trustees. Neither he nor they did so.

There is no suggestion of any other breach of duty on the part of plaintiff in respect to the stock. Upon a careful examination of the record, with the aid of the well-prepared briefs and arguments of counsel, we find no error. It was in the sound discretion of his honor to set aside the verdict on the eleventh issue, and, as we have seen, in the absence of any notice to sell, the issue was unnecessary.

The judgment must be affirmed.

(145 N. C. 264)

OLDHAM v. RIEGER.

(Supreme Court of North Carolina. Oct. 16, 1907.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—CLAIMS—ESTABLISHMENT—ENFORCING PAYMENT—PROCEEDINGS.

Where a debt was established by a judgment against one in his lifetime, it is not necessary to establish the debt after his death by a new adjudication on the judgment before taking proceedings to enforce payment.

2. SAME.

Where, in an action to compel an administrator to account and to pay a judgment against his intestate, limitations were pleaded, the court should first determine that issue, and should not order an account and settlement, under Revisal 1905, § 104 et seq., unless it found against the plea.

3. SAME.

Under Revisal 1905, § 129, conferring on the superior court jurisdiction of actions against administrators, and section 614, providing that when any proceeding begun before the clerk of any superior court shall be sent to the superior court, the judge shall have jurisdiction, the superior court has jurisdiction of an action commenced before the clerk to compel an administrator to account and to pay a judgment, and transferred by the clerk to the court.

4. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—DEFENSES—AVAILABILITY.

Under Revisal 1905, § 360, declaring that the objection that an action was not commenced within the time limited can only be taken by answer, the bar of limitations cannot be raised by demurrer or motion to dismiss.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 33, Limitation of Actions, § 670.]

5. SAME.

Where the complaint sets out a cause of action which is barred, and the facts are admitted by answer, and the statutory bar is pleaded, the court may decide the question as a matter of law, but where the complaint states a cause of action apparently barred, and the answer denies the facts and sets up the bar, the court cannot dismiss on a motion for nonsuit, since under Revisal 1905, § 485, a plea of the statute does not require a reply, and since, under section 248, evidence that the action is not barred on the ground of infancy, etc., may be shown by evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 33, Limitation of Actions, § 727.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Brunswick County; Webb, Judge.

Action by W. P. Oldham against Sarah M. Rieger. From a judgment of dismissal, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

The plaintiff alleges, in his complaint, that he recovered judgment against A. W. Rieger on December 14, 1895, for $126.31 in New Hanover county before a justice of the peace, and the judgment was duly docketed on the same day in the superior court under the statute; that the said Rieger died in Brunswick county, the place of his domicile, on December 3, 1903, and the defendants Sarah M. Rieger and M. B. Mintz qualified as administrators of his estate in said county of Brunswick on the 8th day of December, 1903; that the plaintiff duly demanded payment of the judgment from the defendants, as administrators, which was refused. They further allege that more than two years have elapsed since the defendants qualified as administrators, and that the judgment still remains unpaid. The defendants answer the complaint and admit the death of A. W. Rieger and administration on his estate, as alleged in the complaint, but they deny all the other allegations of the complaint, except the one that two years have elapsed since letters of administration were taken out by them. They then plead the statute of limitations, denying the material allegations of the plaintiff's complaint, except as hereinbefore stated, and averring that, even if they be true, the plaintiff's cause of action, upon the facts stated in the complaint and the additional facts averred in their plea of the statute, is barred. The full administration of the estate is alleged, with the usual allegations as to legal notice to creditors, and so forth. The plaintiff brought this action (or proceeding) before the clerk of the superior court of Brunswick county, where administration was granted, to have an accounting of the defendants, as administrators of the estate of A. W. Rieger, and to compel the payment of their judgment; the suit being in the nature of a creditors' bill, under the statute. The clerk ruled that the case was cognizable by him and issued the necessary notices. Upon the issues joined between the parties, he then transferred the case to the superior court at term for trial. The plaintiff moved to remand the case, and the judge was of the opinion, as we infer from the briefs, though not, necessarily, from the record, that it was the duty of the plaintiff to have prosecuted an independent action upon his judgment, before proceeding to call the defendants to an account of their administration of the estate of their intestate. He thereupon rendered judgment dismissing the action, but coupled it with an order, made in open court, directing the clerk "to require the defendants to file accounts and make a proper settlement of the estate according to the law in such cases made and provided; the said account and settlements to be filed at once, after citation to the proper parties." The plaintiff duly excepted and appealed.

S. M. Emple, for appellant. E. K. Bryan, for appellee.

WALKER, J. (after stating the facts as above). It is stated in the plaintiff's brief, and the argument, which is so ably presented in the defendant's, seems to admit, that the learned judge, who presided at the trial of this case, ruled as he did, because he was of the opinion that the plaintiff should have sued upon the judgment independently and established his claim against the estate before bringing this proceeding. In this ruling, if it is correctly stated in the briefs, though it does not so clearly appear in the record, we do not concur. There was a special plea in bar, namely, the statute of limitations, and we think this plea should have been determined before ordering an account, or a reference to ascertain the exact condition of the estate. It was not necessary to establish the claim of the plaintiff by a new adjudication upon his judgment. Bank v. Harris, 84 N. C. 206; McLendon v. Commissioners, 71 N. C. 38; Glenn v. Bank, 72 N. C. 626. The debt had already been established by a judgment against A. W. Rieger in his lifetime. The court should have submitted to the jury, unless the parties could agree upon the facts, the issue raised by the pleadings, to wit, whether the plaintiff's claim was barred, and, if it was found that the statute was not in the way of the plaintiff's recovery, then the court should have proceeded to order an account and settlement. Revisal 1905, § 104 et seq. The superior court had full possession of the case by the transfer, and therefore jurisdiction, under the statute (Revisal 1905, § 129), and the decisions of this court, to finally determine all matters of controversy between the parties. This has been the law in cases of administrators, since Acts 1876-77, p. 446, c. 241 (Code 1883, § 1511), as construed in Haywood v. Haywood, 79 N. C. 42, and Pegram v. Armstrong, 82 N. C. 327; Bratton v. Davidson, 79 N. C. 423; Clark's Code (3d Ed.) pp. 263, 264; Revisal 1905, § 614; Capps v. Capps, 85 N. C. 408; McMillan v. Reeves, 102 N. C. 550, 9 S. E. 449; Roseman v. Roseman, 127 N. C. 494, 37 S. E. 518; Ledbetter v. Pinner, 120 N. C. 455, 27 S. E. 123; Faison v. Williams, 121 N. C. 152, 28 S. E. 188; Fisher v. Trust Co., 138 N. C. 90, 50 S. E. 592. Indeed, Acts 1887, p. 518, c. 276 (Code, § 255; Revisal 1905, § 614), as above cited, provided that, whenever a cause which was originally brought before the clerk is constituted in the superior court at term by transfer, appeal, or in any other way, that court shall proceed to hear and determine all matters in controversy, with power to remand in its sound discretion, if, by that method, justice can be more speedily and cheaply administered. In re Anderson, 132 N. C. 243, 43 S. E. 649.

Not having had the benefit of an oral argument from the learned counsel who represented the respective parties, which is always desirable, we were somewhat troubled to decide upon the reasons assigned in one of the briefs, whether the proceedings should not be dismissed in this court, because it appeared, prima facie at least, upon the complaint, that the cause of action is barred by the statute of limitations, which is pleaded in the answer. But slight consideration of that question and a cursory examination of the authorities convinced us that the point was entirely without merit. The bar of the statute of limitations could not be raised by demurrer or motion to dismiss. Under the former system, it could have been done in equity (Robinson v. Lewis, 45 N. C. 58; Whitfield v. Hill, 58 N. C. 316; Smith v. Morehead, 59 N. C. 360); but it cannot be under the new procedure, for the law provides that "an objection that the action was not commenced within the time limited can be taken only by answer." Clark's Code (3d Ed.) § 138, and notes (Revisal 1905, § 360). The change, under the reformed procedure, is noted and fully discussed by Shepherd, J., in Guthrie v. Bacon, 107 N. C. 337, 12 S. E. 204, and Randolph v. Randolph, 107 N. C. 506, 12 S. E. 374. See, also, Freeman v. Sprague, 82 N. C. 366. When the complaint sets out a cause of action which is clearly barred, and the facts are admitted by the answer, and, in addition to the admission, the statute is pleaded or relied on, then the court may decide the question as a matter of law. This was the case, as will appear by reference to the statement of the facts in Shackelford v. Staton, 117 N. C. 73, 23 S. E. 101, and Cherry v. Canal Co., 140 N. C., at page 426, 53 S. E., at page 139 (111 Am. St. Rep. 850), in the last of which cases Justice Hoke says: "The facts are uncontroverted." But when the complaint states a cause of action apparently barred, and the answer properly denies the facts, or the cause of action, and then sets up the bar of the statute, the court cannot dismiss upon a demurrer or tenuis, or a motion to nonsuit, for when such a motion is made it must be decided upon the pleading of the plaintiff, or of the adversary of the party who makes the motion, and the court has no right to look at the pleading of the opposing party, except to see if the facts are admitted so as to present merely a question of law. No defendant can therefore, in the science of good pleading or practice, demur to the cause of action of the plaintiff and call in aid the averments of his own pleading, unless they amount to an admission of what is alleged in the complaint. This would be in the nature of a "speaking demurrer," and would be no more permissible than if a defendant, after all the evidence had been introduced, should move to nonsuit the plaintiff or to dismiss his action, upon the evidence introduced by himself. There is excellent reason for this rule, in the case of pleadings, when the statute of limitations is set up as a bar, and it is this: When the plaintiff alleges the facts constituting his cause of action, and the defendant denies the material allegations, and then pleads the statute of limitations as a bar, the court evidently has no facts before it upon which it can declare the law, as to the statutory bar, because there are no facts admitted or found by a jury, and for one other reason at least, if not still for others just as sound and conclusive, namely, that the plaintiff has the right, without any special or written reply (Clark's Code [3d Ed.] § 248; Revisal 1905, § 485), to show in evidence that his cause of action is not barred, although apparently so, as, for instance, that he was an infant, or imprisoned, or insane, or, if a feme, that she was covert at the time the cause of action accrued, or any other good and sufficient disability which would exempt his or her cause of action from the operation of the statute. This being so, how could the judge dismiss, and thereby exclude the plaintiff from his right to repel the plea of the statute by proof? It must be remembered that the plea of the statute does not, like a counterclaim, require any special written reply; but a reply is always deemed to have been made as upon a direct denial or avoidance, as the nature of the case may require. Clark's Code (3d Ed.) § 248, and notes; Revisal 1905, § 485; Askew v. Koonce, 118 N. C. 526, 24 S. E. 218.

We have discussed this question somewhat fully, because it does not seem to be very clearly understood. The court erred in not first submitting to the jury the plea of the statute, instead of ordering an immediate accounting in limine. The plea in bar should have been disposed of, because, if found in favor of the defendant, no reference or accounting would have been necessary. Royster v. Wright, 118 N. C. 152, 24 S. E. 746, and cases cited; Smith v. Barringer, 74 N. C. 665; Clements v. Rogers, 95 N. C. 248; Kerr v. Hicks, 129 N. C. 141, 39 S. E. 797; Bank v. Fidelity Co., 126 N. C. 320, 35 S. E. 588, 83 Am. St. Rep. 682; Austin v. Stewart, 126 N. C. 525, 36 S. E. 37; Jones v. Wooten, 137 N. C. 421, 49 S. E. 915. The court could hardly have proceeded under Revisal 1905, § 100, which requires the clerk of the superior court to compel the filing of accounts within 20 days by executors or administrators who have neglected to comply with their statutory duty.

There was error in the ruling of the court.
Error.

(73 S. C. 334)

THOMPSON v. SEABOARD AIR LINE RY.
(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 17, 1907.)1. RAILROADS—INJURIES TO ANIMALS AT CROSSING—NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In an action against a railroad company for killing a team stalled on the track at a crossing in consequence of the wheel of the wagon going into a ditch by the side of the railroad bridge at the crossing, the evidence showed that the road ran beside the track, that at the bridge it made a short turn to cross the track, making a long bridge necessary, and that the bridge had been reported to the county supervisor as unsafe. Held that the question whether the bridge was unsafe was for the jury, though it had been in like condition for some years.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 41, Railroads, §§ 1627-1630.]

2. SAME—PROXIMATE CAUSE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

Where a team stalled on a railroad track at a crossing in consequence of a defect in the railroad bridge was killed by a train, the question whether the defect in the bridge was the proximate cause of the accident was for the jury. (Per Pope, C. J., and Jones, J.)

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 41, Railroads, § 1640.]

3. APPEAL—QUESTIONS NOT RAISED IN TRIAL COURT—REVIEW.

A question cannot be raised for the first time in the Supreme Court on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 2, Appeal and Error, §§ 1018-1034.]

4. TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—REFUSAL TO GIVE INSTRUCTIONS EMBODIED IN THOSE GIVEN.

It is not error to refuse a requested charge covered by the general charge.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, §§ 651-659.]

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Richland County; Geo. E. Prince, Judge.

Action by J. M. Thompson against the Seaboard Air Line Railway. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Eldred & Dreher and Lyles & McMahan, for appellant. G. T. Graham and Nelson & Nelson, for respondent.

POPE, C. J. The plaintiff, J. M. Thompson, a citizen of Lexington county, owned, in March, 1905, a pair of mules, wagon, and harness. On the 9th of March he hired them to his brother to do some hauling, who about 9 o'clock that night was traveling along the Two Notch road, a public highway in Richland county, at a point where the highway crosses the track of the defendant, about 9 miles from Columbia. In attempting to cross a bridge at the crossing the front wheel of the wagon missed the end of the bridge and went into the ditch, thus stopping the mules. The vestibule train of the defendant, known as the "Florida Limited," due about that time at Weddell, a small station a few hundred yards from the crossing, struck the mules and killed them and injured the harness and wagon considerably. The plaintiff brought suit alleging negligence on the part of the defendant in failing to keep the bridge in proper repair, and willfulness and wantonness in running its train at an excessive rate of speed and in failing to stop in time to prevent injury to plaintiff's property. The answer of the defendant was a general denial. The case came on for hearing at the January, 1907, term of court for Lexington county, and resulted in a verdict of $450 for the plaintiff. The defendant appeals.

The first exception alleges error on the part of the circuit judge in refusing to charge that there was no evidence tending to show that the plaintiff's property was injured by reason of the alleged improper construction of the bridge in question. That there was at least some evidence tending to show that the bridge was not properly constructed we think is quite clear. It was shown that the road ran right down beside the railroad track and that this bridge made a sharp turn to cross the railroad, thus making a long bridge necessary. Again, there was evidence that the bridge had been reported to the county supervisor as unsafe. True, the bridge had been in like condition for some years, but that fact would not raise a conclusive presumption that it was properly constructed. What is proper construction under all of the circumstances is a question which must be left to the jury.

There being some evidence of negligent construction of the bridge, the question then arises as to whether this negligent construction was the cause of the accident. The plaintiff alleges that the driver of the wagon exercised due care in attempting to cross. The evidence of the defendant certainly did not so clearly negative due care as to enable the court to say as a matter of law that there was a failure of such care. This question was likewise properly left to the jury. We are aware that this conclusion is adverse to the doctrine laid down in Brown v. Railway, 57 S. C. 434, 35 S. E. 731, but after mature consideration it seems that the holding in that case was wrong in principle and should be overruled. It is not our purpose, however, to consider the question at length, for it is ably set forth in the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Jones in the case above referred to. Suffice it to say here that the question of proximate cause is one peculiarly within the province of the jury. Therefore, where a plaintiff alleges negligent construction or repair of a bridge on a railroad's right of way, and injury resulting from such negligence, the trial judge is invading the province of the jury when he attempts to say that some other agency brought about the injury. The case of Felder v. Railway, 76 S. C. 554, 57 S. E. 524, has no application to the case in question, for the reason that there was evidence tending to show that the bridge at the crossing here extended clear across the track. Even if it did apply to the railroad's liability for the proper construction of the bridge, not having been contested below, that question cannot be raised for the first time in this court.

Again, error is alleged in refusing the following charge: "If you find from the evidence that the driver of the wagon in question was negligent in missing the end of the bridge with his wheel, if you find that he did so drive it, and that such negligence on his part was the proximate cause of the injury, then you must find for the defendant." Examination of the record fails to disclose the ground on which the refusal was made; but, be that as it may, language almost identical with the alleged rejected charge was used to the jury in the general charge. Thus the instruction was: "If it was the plaintiff's servant's negligence which was the proximate cause of the injury, the railroad is not responsible; if the driver—if you should find that there was a driver in charge of that team, and if that team was injured through the negligence of the driver as the proximate cause—why, then, the defendant would not be responsible if the negligence of the driver was the sole proximate cause of the injury." Where a request to charge is fully covered by the general charge, it is not error on the part of the circuit court to refuse such a request. The aim of permitting requests is to secure a full presentation to the jury of the law applicable to the case. When this result is secured independent of such requests, it is not error to refuse to reiterate the same law. We think the charge in this case was full and clear, covering thoroughly the law applicable. Therefore all objections are overruled.

It is the judgment of this court that the judgment of the circuit court be affirmed.

JONES, J., concurs. WOODS, J., concurs in the result.

GARY, A. J., I concur in the result, as I do not think the case of Brown v. Railway, 57 S. C. 433, 57 S. E. 731, should be overruled.

(78 S. C. 237)

OWENS v. HEYWARD, Governor, et al.
DUNCAN v. SAME.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Sept. 24, 1907.)

Applications by W. R. Owens and W. H. Duncan for injunction against D. S. Heyward, Governor, and others, constituting the state board of education. From an order of Associate Justice Woods (54 S. E. 760), refusing a temporary injunction, petitioners appeal. Affirmed.

The petition, answer, and exceptions are as follows:

Petition:

"To the Honorable the Justices of the Supreme Court:

"Your petitioner would respectfully show unto the court:

"(1) That your petitioner is a citizen and resident taxpayer of the county of Barnwell, having children of lawful school age in attendance upon the free public schools of said county, in which schools only such books are permitted to be used as are prescribed by the state board of education, pursuant to the power vested in it by section 1184 of the Civil Code; and your petitioner is required to pay for said books such prices as said board may contract for with the publishers thereof.

"(2) That on the 20th day of January, 1906, the Governor, as ex officio chairman of said state board of education, issued his proclamation, 'To Whom It may Concern,' calling for 'bids for contracts to furnish for use in the public schools in the state, for a period of five years, from July 15, 1906, * * * a uniform series of text-books as described,' and accompanying said proclamation was a copy of certain resolutions of said board and a form of the required contract, all of which were designed and intended to inform the bidders of the requirements of said board, a copy of which proclamation, resolutions, and contract is hereto attached as a part of this petition.

"(3) That on the 22d day of June, instant, pursuant to said proclamation and resolutions, the bids which had been filed by competing publishers were opened and considered, and certain school books adopted thereunder, to be contracted for under the terms of the proposed contract, for use in the free public schools.

"(4) That in the third section of said proposed contract it is provided, 'The party of the second part (meaning the publishers) further agrees to and with the party of the first part (meaning said board, the state) that it will furnish the books named in this contract to its own agencies, to the county depositories, and to individuals in the state, through a central depository, to be located in the city of Columbia, in the county of Richland, said depository and its manager to be approved by the state board of education; and it is further agreed that if any books are furnished to the above-named agencies, depositories, and individuals in any other manner, said books shall be furnished at the same price and upon the same terms as those furnished through the state depository.' And your petitioner is informed and believes, and so alleges, that all of the bidders for contracts to furnish said books thereunder considered the extra expense which would be incurred in establishing and maintaining the required 'central depository,' and added the estimated amount thereof, to wit, 10 per cent., to the cost price of the books to the purchaser, over and above what said books would have been sold at, if the board had not required the maintenance of said newly created 'central depository,' and required all of said books furnished under said contract to be furnished through the same.

"(5) That by section 1184 of the Civil Code of 1902 (volume 1), 'the general powers of the board' are defined, inter alia, by the fifth subdivision as follows: 'To prescribe and to enforce, as far as practicable, the use of a uniform series of text-books in the free public schools of the state; to enter into an agreement with the publishers of the books prescribed, fixing the time of prescription and the price above which the books shall not be retailed during the period of prescription, and a rate of discount at not less than which the books shall be furnished to the retail dealers in this state; to require the publishers, in the discretion of the board, to establish in each county one or more depositories of their books within the state, at such place or places as the board may designate, and where such books may be obtained without delay; and to exact of the publishers a bond in the sum of not more than five thousand dollars conditional for the faithful performance of the agreement, and with a penalty of twenty-five dollars for each violation of the agreement, the form and execution of the bond to be approved by the Attorney General of the state, which agreement and bond shall be deposited with the State Treasurer, all recoveries thereon to go into the state treasury for school purposes.' And in section 1239 of said Code it is prescribed: 'The county boards of education of the several counties of this state are hereby authorized and required to set aside from the public school fund of their respective counties an amount not exceeding five hundred dollars, for the purpose of providing the pupils attending the free public schools of their counties with school textbooks at actual cost or exchange prices. The amount so set aside from the school funds shall be paid to the county superintendent of education by the county treasurer, out of the unappropriated general school funds in his hands, on the warrant of said county board of education, and shall be and remain a permanent fund in the hands of the county superintendent of education, to be used in purchasing and keeping on hand school text-books for sale to pupils attending the free public schools of his county, for cash, at actual cost or exchange prices, and to be used for no other purpose, and in no other manner; and the place where said school text-books are kept and sold shall be deemed depositories, under the control of the state, as provided in the seventh article, or provision, in the contract made in 1893 with the publishers of school text-books. That the county superintendent of education in every county in the state be, and he is hereby, required to keep his office open each day of the week prior to the time appointed for schools to open in his county, and for one week immediately after, and for at least one day in each week during the remainder of the school term, for the convenience of those wishing to purchase books. The 'seventh article or provision' referred to in the above section is as follows: '(7) That if the Legislature of the state, or the state board of examiners, should hereafter provide for a system of depositories under the control of the state, they agree to furnish their adopted books to the depositories at their best rate and terms of exchange, their best prices and terms of introduction, and their greatest rate of discount, set forth in their original and supplemental propositions to the state board of examiners, pay the transportation charges on all cash orders for such books when shipped by freight, and to so ship when so ordered, and to make no charge at any time for box, packing or drayage, and to conform to all reasonable orders of the state board touching the regulations of same.'

"(6) That your petitioner is informed and believes that the amount annually expended for the purchase of school books for the free public schools of the state for which said books are prescribed is at least $100,000, and it is estimated that the entire amount of sales for the succeeding five years provided for in the proposed contract is between $500,000 and $600,000, of which amount, as above set forth, 10 per cent. over and above all other expenses incurred in distributing the school books is intended to go to the 'central depository' in payment of services rendered and expenses incurred by said central depository, exclusive of and in addition to the cost and expenses of maintaining the various county depositories, and is an additional expense which would not be incurred but for the illegal establishment of said 'central depository,' and the incurring of said expense is without the warrant of law, and is an indirect tax illegally levied upon the patrons of the public schools, and the same is practically a bonus contributed to private enterprise.

"(7) Your petitioner is informed and believes, and so alleges, that since the date of the acceptance of the bid and the adoption of said books for the next succeeding five years as above mentioned, to wit, on the — day of June, instant, the various publishers, or a majority thereof, whose bids had been accepted by the board, met and selected, as the manager of the 'central depository,' in the city of Columbia, a retail book concern of said city, and then and there agreed to give as compensation to said book concern, for acting as the said central depository, 10 per cent. of the gross price of all books to pass through the hands of said dealer or shipped to county depositories or individuals by its order, under its direction or through said 'central depository,' and said extra 10 per cent. being in addition to the net price of said books as furnished to the county depositories, and the 10 per cent. allowed said county depositories for their immediate remuneration and expense.

"(8) And your petitioner contends and charges that the amount so allowed to the central depository is an additional amount over and above the actual cost of the books which the law contemplates shall be charged to the patrons of the schools, and, being charged solely for the maintenance of the central depository, is a violation of the law, in that it increases the number of middlemen acting between the publisher and the ultimate purchasers, to the cost and damage of the latter.

"(9) Your petitioner respectfully contends that by the statutes of this state the cost of the books to patrons of the school shall be the net price received by the publishers, plus the percentage allowed to the local county depositories, and that it is unlawful and beyond the power of the board to add, by any means whatsoever, and especially by newly created and additional agencies, any sum, however small, to the cost of these books which the purchaser is required to pay.

"(10) That the said third section of the proposed contract, in requiring that books furnished to 'individuals in any other manner' than 'through the state depository' shall be furnished at the same price and upon the same terms as those furnished through the state depository, compels the patrons of the school, when procuring the books directly from the publishers, without the intervention of county depositories of the state depository, to pay 10 per cent. beyond the price for which the books would otherwise be provided to them, and that said 10 per cent. is either a bonus given by the board to the state depository for services not rendered, or is allowed to the publishers in addition to the cost, and is a penalty imposed upon the individual for failing to procure said books through the county depositories or the state depository, and is in violation of the legal rights of your petitioner and the other patrons of the schools, and without warrant of law.

"(11) That the first section of said contract is as follows: 'That the party of the second part hereby covenants and agrees to and with the party of the first part to establish and maintain from and after the 1st day of September, 1906, up to the 31st day of August, 1911, not fewer than three depositories or agencies in each and every county of the state, said depositories to be approved by the state board of education, where there shall be constantly on hand for sale to the children attending the public schools a sufficient number of the books hereinafter named, and at the prices hereinafter named in this contract to supply the demands, the same to be established at such places as will afford proper facilities for the purchase of such books: provided, however, that nothing herein contained shall prevent the said party of the second part from establishing such additional agencies or depositories as it may deem necessary and proper, it being understood that the failure of the party of the second part to supply a sufficient number of depositories or agencies as may be determined by the state board of education of South Carolina shall operate a forfeiture of this contract.'

"(12) That the said proposed contract contains many provisions not warranted by law, as a mere inspection of the same will show; and therein it is required that the bond provided for shall contain conditions not in accordance with law, and the said proposed contract attempts to change the procedure which has prevailed in the courts of this state for a century for the collection of official or statutory bonds.

"(13) That your petitioner respectfully contends that the county depositories provided by the statutes of this state are amply sufficient, together with the services of the county superintendents of education, as means for the efficient distribution of all the school text-books to be used in the free public schools of this state, and that the additional agencies cannot legally be created at the expense of the people by the said board of education, and that an attempt to do is utterly ultra vires.

"(14) That your petitioner is informed and believes that it is the intention of the said board of education, pursuant to the proclamation, resolutions and 'adoption' before mentioned, to enter, with the publishers successfully bidding thereunder for the furnishing of the school books of the state, into a contract identical with, or similar to, the proposed contract before mentioned, embodying all of the essential provisions thereof, and that unless this honorable court shall enjoin said board from attempting to execute said contract with the same will be entered into between said publishers and the state board, and that your petitioner and the other patrons of the public schools of the state will have no remedy or relief against the enforcement of its unjust and unlawful terms.

"(15) That your petitioner has no adequate remedy at law, other than as this honorable court may grant in its proceedings.

"(16) That, the conditions upon which the bids were made having required the establishment of the illegal and 'state depository,' it is respectfully contended that the bidding and 'adoption' before mentioned were not such as is contemplated by law, and, in that the bids were not for the cost of the books, such as is estimated by law, that the action of the board in the premises was null and void.

"(17) That on account of the matters hereinbefore alleged the petitioner charges that not a single legal and lawful bid was made by any book-publishing house, and on that account no legal adoption or award could be made by the said board to any of said publishing houses so bidding; that said bids were caused directly and immediately by the action of the said board in requiring said bidding publishing houses to bid with reference to said central depository and the additional cost and expense of school books necessitated thereby.

"Wherefore your petitioner prays that the said state board of education be enjoined from entering into the proposed contract, or doing or performing any other act pursuant to said illegal bidding and awarding of the contract, and for such other and further relief as may be just and equitable."

Answer:

"The defendants above named, answering the petition herein, allege:

"(1) As to the first paragraph thereof, that they are informed and believe, and allege, that the said W. H. Duncan is at present a taxpayer and patron in the Barnwell graded school district, which school district was created by an act of the General Assembly approved December 23, 1886. See Vol. 19, Statutes of South Carolina, pp. 552, 553. That section 5 of article 11 of the Constitution, by special provision, retains and maintains the integrity and powers of such special school district. That said act (1886) provides that the board of trustees of the Barnwell graded school district shall have the following powers and duties: (1) To discharge the duties of school trustees, and have all the powers, privileges, rights, and liabilities now possessed by and pertaining to school trustees. (2) To determine the studies and class books to be used in the schools of said district. That they are informed and believe that the said trustees adopt their own books and fix their own prices, independent of the adoption of the state board of education, and that the said W. H. Duncan, as a citizen of said school district, is exempt from the adoption and prices fixed by the state board of education, and that he has relief through such trustees without petitioning to the courts, if the state board of education should provide unsatisfactory books and unsatisfactory prices. And these defendants allege that they have no knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the truth of the allegations contained in the first paragraph of the petition, except as the same may have been hereinbefore admitted.

"(2) As to the second paragraph of the petition, they admit the allegations thereof.

"(3) As to the third paragraph of the petition, they admit the allegations thereof.

"(4) As to the fourth paragraph of the petition, they admit that in the third section of the said contract it is provided as therein alleged, but they deny each and every other allegation in said fourth paragraph of the petition contained.

"(5) As to the fifth paragraph of the petition, they admit the allegations of the same, except that, in quoting section 1239 of the Civil Code of 1902, the date of the contract therein referred to is incorrectly given as '1903,' whereas said date as given in said section 1239 is '1893,' and they allege that the said 'contract made in 1893 with the publishers of school text-books' has long since expired by its own limitation, and that the said 'seventh article or provision' thereof has no longer any force or effect.

"(6) As to the sixth paragraph of the petition, they admit so much thereof as alleges the amount of the annual expenditure for school books in this state, and the estimated amount for the next five years, but deny each and every other allegation thereof except as hereinafter admitted. And they allege that the 10 per cent. on the retail price of the books which is to go to the manager of the central depository is in lieu of and supersedes the greater expense that would otherwise be incurred by the publishers at their offices in Richmond, New York, Boston, Chicago, and elsewhere, for storage, insurance, taxes, extra clerk hire, extra bookkeepers, the additional expense of collecting small amounts scattered over a large area of territory, and the excess of freight and express charges that would be involved in shipping the books in small lots to the local depositories in the several counties, as compared with shipping same in large or car load lots to the central depository at Columbia; all the freight and express charges of distributing books from the central depository at Columbia to the local depositories in the several counties being included in and covered by the said 10 per cent. going to the manager of said central depository.

"(7) As to the seventh paragraph of the petition, they admit the selection of a manager of the central depository at Columbia, as therein alleged, and that such manager is to receive 10 per cent. on the retail prices of the books handled through such central depository, but deny each and every other allegation of said paragraph except as the same may be admitted in the next preceding paragraph of this answer.

"(8) As to the allegations of the eighth paragraph of the petition, they deny the same.

"(9) As to the ninth paragraph of the petition, they deny the allegations thereof.

"(10) As to the tenth paragraph of the petition, they deny the allegations thereof.

"(11) As to the eleventh paragraph of the petition, they admit the allegations thereof.

"(12) As to the twelfth paragraph of the petition, they deny the allegations thereof.

"(13) As to the thirteenth paragraph of the petition, they deny the allegations thereof.

"(14) As to the fourteenth paragraph of the petition, they admit the allegations thereof, except that they allege that the contract with some of said publishers has already been executed, and except that they deny that the terms thereof are either unjust or unlawful, and further deny that petitioner has no remedy or relief other than the injunction sought by him in this action.

"(15) As to the fifteenth paragraph of the petition, they deny the allegations thereof.

"(16) As to the sixteenth paragraph of the petition, they deny the allegations thereof.

"(17) As to the seventeenth paragraph of the petition, they deny the allegations thereof.

"(18) They deny each and every allegation of the petition not hereinbefore admitted.

"(19) And, further answering the petition herein, these defendants allege that pursuant to the statutes in such case made and provided, and pursuant to the proclamation of Gov. D. C. Heyward, chairman of the state board of education, and pursuant to the resolutions of the board, they met as the state board of education of South Carolina on the 22d and 23d days of June, 1906, and adopted a series of text-books for the five years next ensuing from and after September 1, 1906, after the bids of the competing publishers had been duly filed and examined, and that some of the successful bidders had signed their contracts and executed and filed their bonds in the office of the state board of education before the commencement of this action, and, as defendants are informed and believe, have already begun the manufacture of the special South Carolina edition of said text-books, with the indorsements required by this board printed on the back thereof; that the form of contract between the state and the publishers adopted by the board is in strict accordance with the statutes of this state, and a copy of said contract is hereto appended as a part of this answer, which said contract was duly approved by the Attorney General of this state, and reference thereto is hereby craved, especially to the last sentence of the third paragraph thereof, added thereto by way of amendment by the advice of the Attorney General; that the method of supplying text-books to the patrons of the free public schools of this state as outlined in said contract was determined upon by said board after careful consideration as not only in accordance with law, but as the best possible method from the standpoint of convenience and economy to the patrons of said schools; that under said method, the patrons of said schools will be able to procure said books with greater convenience and at as low or lower prices than under the next previous contract of 1900, although in many respects the books to be furnished under the present contract are much superior in quality to those furnished under the former contract of 1900; that under the former contract the said text-books were often sold by the retail dealers to the patrons of the schools at 25, 40, 50, 60, and even 75 per cent. above the contract price, whereas, under the present contract, it will be impossible to sell said books to the patrons of said schools at anything above the contract retail price stamped on the back of each book; that under the present arrangement many thousands of dollars will be saved to the patrons of said schools; that all heretofore existing contracts for school books have expired by their own limitations, and that the state of South Carolina has now no contracts for text-books for its schools, except those contracts now made and being made which plaintiff seeks to enjoin; that the public schools of the state will begin to open about the middle of the month of August next, and they will be seriously disorganized and embarrassed by even a temporary injunction, pending this action, restraining these defendants from executing the said contracts agreed on by them with the publishers.

"Wherefore these defendants pray that the interlocutory injunction herein may be vacated, and that the petition herein may be dismissed."

Exceptions:

"(1) His honor erred in dissolving the temporary restraining order; the actions being brought solely for an injunction, and a prima facie case being made for the same by the verified petitions.

"(2) His honor erred in not granting an interlocutory order, restraining the respondents from entering into the contract mentioned in the petitions until the cases could be heard by the court upon their merits; the actions being brought solely for an injunction, and the verified petitions making on their face a prima facie showing for same.

"(3) His honor erred in dissolving the temporary restraining order, and in refusing to grant an interlocutory order restraining the defendants from executing the contract mentioned in the petitions, because as the proceedings were brought solely for an injunction, and, as the verified petitions made a prima facie showing therefor, he could not determine the questions raised by the petitions upon the showing before him adversely to the petitioners, without denying to them a hearing upon the merits in the mode prescribed by law.

"(4) His honor erred in holding that the state board of education had authority to authorize and to establish a central depository, and to provide for and insert in the contracts with the publishers whose books were adopted a provision creating this central depository, because, under and by the terms of the contract set out in the petition, and which the state board of education was about and intended to enter into, the price of school books was made 10 per cent. higher than the same should have been, and would have been, had the said board not established said central depository, and required all bids to be made with reference thereto, and the additional expense thereby occasioned.

"(5) His honor erred in not holding that the state board of education was without authority to create or establish said central depository; the law providing how, when and where depositories should be established, and the compensation to be allowed to those keeping the same.

"(6) His honor erred in not holding that as the state board of education was the creature of the statute, and as it had no authority other than therein given to it, and as such statute gave it no authority to establish a central depository, but only to establish county depositories, it was without power to create and establish this central depository, or to require the publishers to bid with reference thereto, and the additional expense and cost in text-books occasioned thereby.

"(7) His honor erred in not holding that the only depositories authorized by law are county depositories, and that consequently the state board of education had no authority to establish a central depository for the entire state—really a state depository—and thus add to the cost of the text-books in the free public schools.

"(8) His honor erred in holding that the petitioners could not bring and maintain these proceedings, but that they could only be brought by or on behalf of the state, as the alleged injuries did not differ in kind from that suffered by the people at large.

"(9) His honor erred in holding that the personal interest of the petitioner was exceedingly small, and that on that account the wrong complained of should not have the same standing in court it would have had had his interest been exceedingly large, because, while the individual cost to the plaintiff of paying the additional expense occasioned by the central depository may be small, yet thousands and thousands of school patrons are similarly affected.

"(10) His honor erred in holding that the petitioner had waited without excuse to bring these proceedings until the board had expended much time and labor in the adoption of text-books, because, as it was impossible for the plaintiff to have known of the purpose or intention of the state board of education with regard to a central depository, a sooner action would have been impertinent and discourteous to the state board, and would have been based upon an assumption that they would exceed their authority under the law, when every citizen has a right to assume that public officers will act within the scope of their authority and will obey the law.

"(11) His honor erred in holding that the establishment of the central depository by the state board of education did not increase the cost price to the school children of text-books over and above what the same would have cost, had there been no central depository created by the board.

"(12) His honor erred in not granting an interlocutory order in each case restraining the state board of education from entering into the contract mentioned in the petitions herein, until these proceedings could be heard upon their merits and the facts ascertained and determined in the manner and mode prescribed by law.

"It is agreed that the above two cases shall be consolidated and heard together, and that when the case, with exceptions, is printed, it shall constitute the return required by the rules of court, and may be filed with the clerk of the Supreme Court as and for such return."

Bellinger & Welch, for appellant. Le Roy F. Youmans, Atty. Gen., D. C. Ray, Asst. Atty. Gen., and J. S. Muller, for respondents.

JONES, J. The petition in each of these cases is addressed to the justices of this court, and seeks to enjoin the state board of education from entering into certain contracts with certain publishers to furnish school books for the free public schools of the state. Applications were made before Hon. C. A. Woods, Associate Justice, at chambers, for temporary injunctions, and he, on July 19, 1906, in an opinion published in 74 S. C. 560, 54 S. E. 760, rendered judgment refusing the temporary injunction sought. The petitioners appeal to this court from said order on a number of exceptions, which, with the complaint and answer and order appealed from, will be set out in the report of this case. After careful consideration, the exceptions are overruled, and the order of Associate Justice Woods is affirmed, for the reasons therein stated.

(78 S. C. 388)

COBB & SEAL SHOE STORE v. AETNA INS. CO.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Oct. 18, 1907.)

Appeal from Common Pleas Circuit Court of Abbeville County; R. O. Purdy, Judge.

Action by the Cobb & Seal Shoe Store against the Aetna Insurance Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed by an equally divided court.

King, Spalding & Little and M. P. De Bruhl, for appellant. W. P. Greene, for respondent.

WOODS, J. The plaintiff recovered judgment on defendant's policy of fire insurance covering a stock of shoes in a store at Edgefield, S. C. Motions made by the defendant for direction of a verdict and for a new trial were refused, and the main points involved in the appeal relate to the grounds on which these motions were based.

The plaintiff was duly incorporated under the name of Cobb & Seal Shoe Store, but did business under the name of Cobb & Seal, and the policy was issued in the name of Cobb & Seals, instead of the proper corporate name. The defendant asked the court to hold, as a matter of law, the corporation Cobb & Seal Shoe Store could not recover on a policy of insurance issued in the name of Cobb & Seals. O. H. Cobb testified to informing Norris, the insurance agent, of the incorporation, and of the true corporate name, when he was negotiating for the insurance, and before the policy was issued. If the real meaning of the contract was to insure the corporate property for the benefit of the corporation, designating the corporation as Cobb & Seals, instead of using its true corporate name, cannot have any effect to relieve the insurer from liability. A contract is good between the parties, no matter how incorrect the names used in the paper may be, if it appears they were intended as the names of the parties to be bound by the contract or to receive its benefits. Neely v. Yorkville, 10 S. C. 147; 1 Thompson on Corporations, § 294. Evidence that there was no such legal entity as Cobb & Seals, and that the defendant's agent, before issuing the policy, knew the property was owned by the corporation, Cobb & Seal Shoe Store, tended strongly to show the failure to use the true corporate name in the policy was a mere inadvertence, and that "Cobb & Seals," in the contract, meant the corporation. It follows there was no such failure to show a contract with the plaintiff corporation as to require the court to direct a verdict for the defendant or order a new trial.

The policy requires: "(1) The insured will take a complete itemized inventory of the stock on hand at least once in each calendar year, and, unless such inventory has been taken within twelve calendar months prior to the date of this policy, one shall be taken in detail within thirty days of the issuance of this policy, or this policy shall be null and void from such date, and upon demand of the assured the unearned premium from such date shall be returned." The plaintiff, having just opened the Edgefield store, had not taken stock, and had no inventory when the contract of insurance was made, unless the invoices of the goods purchased are to be so regarded. The invoices and all the books relating to the Edgefield business were burned in the store; but there was evidence that the plaintiff kept in a safe in its Abbeville store duplicate invoices of all goods sent to the Edgefield store. As an inventory at the time the business opened, which was less than 12 months before the date of the policy, the plaintiff offered a set of these invoices, showing all goods which had been received at the opening. A merchant's invoices are written itemized accounts, sent to him by the seller, of the goods purchased and the prices charged. His inventory of goods is his stock taking written out in detail. It consists of a detailed descriptive list of all the articles in the store, with a bona fide estimate of the market value of each article. Obviously it is not true as a general proposition that a collection of all the invoices less the aggregate sales is the equivalent of an inventory. After goods have reached the storehouse, they may be stolen, or prove to be worth less than the invoice price, because unsalable or shopworn. The difference between the invoice price and the inventorial value increases with the duration of the business. Therefore, when applied to a mercantile business which has continued long enough for the difference between the sum of the invoices, less the sales, and the inventory to be material, we give full assent to the following cases holding the inventory required by this provision of a policy cannot be supplied by the invoices: So. Ins. Co. v. Knight, 111 Ga. 622, 36 S. E. 821, 52 L. R. A. 70, 78 Am. St. Rep. 216; Fire Ass'n v. Masterton, 25 Tex. Civ. App. 518, 61 S. W. 962; Home Ins. Co. v. Delta Bank, 71 Miss. 608, 15 South. 932. This business had continued for about five months, a period long enough for material loss and depreciation when the fire occurred, and therefore we think the plaintiff's position that the sum of all the invoices, less the sales, was equivalent to an inventory made at the time of the fire, is untenable.

But at the beginning of the business a formal inventory or taking of stock would show practically the same articles in the storehouse as the invoices preserved by the merchant as a record of the goods in his store at the opening. As the valuations in the inventory rest on the merchant's own estimate, the inventory taken at the beginning would show stock of estimated value greater than the sum of the invoices; for it is fair to assume the business would not be undertaken unless the merchant supposed the goods to be worth more in his storehouse than the invoice prices. Therefore, with perfect fairness to the insurer, at the opening of the business invoices of the goods received might be regarded the same as a formal inventory; that is, the merchant's descriptive list of all articles in the store, with his estimate of the value of each. In this case the policy was issued about 20 days after the business opened, and O. H. Cobb, the head of the plaintiff corporation, produced a separate set of invoices, which he testified was a complete list of the goods on hand when the business was opened, and which he had kept in the store at Abbeville. These invoices may fairly be taken as an inventory made within 12 months prior to the date of the policy. Such an inventory, like any other, is, of course, subject to attack for lack of verity. We are of the opinion the circuit judge was right in refusing to direct a verdict against the plaintiff for failing to comply with the requirement of the policy as to the inventory. The plaintiff at the least was entitled to have the jury decide whether the invoices of the goods on hand at the time the store was opened was in substance an inventory. Madden v. Insurance Co., 70 S. C. 302, 49 S. E. 855. This conclusion was in accord with the decision of the court of West Virginia in Reffner v. Insurance Co., 59 W. Va. 432, 53 S. E. 944. In Carp v. Nat. Assurance Ass'n (Mo. App.) 99 S. W. 523, plaintiff's file of invoices was held equivalent to a book showing all goods purchased.

The iron-safe clause further provides: "(2) The assured will keep a set of books, which shall clearly and plainly present a complete record of business transacted, including all purchases, sales, and shipments, both for cash and credit, from date of inventory as provided for in first section of this clause, and during the continuance of this policy. (3) The assured will keep such books and inventory, and also the last preceding inventory, if such has been taken, securely locked in a fireproof safe at night, and at all times when the building mentioned in this policy is not actually open for business; or, failing in this, the assured will keep such books and inventories in some place not exposed to a fire which would destroy the aforesaid building. In the event of failure to produce such a set of books and inventories for the inspection of this company, this policy shall become null and void, and such failure shall constitute a perpetual bar to any recovery thereon." Having held that under the evidence the jury might consider the invoices kept in the store at Abbeville, a place not exposed to the fire, to be in substance an inventory, it follows there was no error in refusing to direct a verdict for defendant for failure to keep the inventory in an iron safe in the storehouse mentioned in the policy, or in some place not exposed to a fire which would destroy that building. But, as shown by plaintiff's own evidence, the books presenting a record of the business were not kept in an iron safe in the store, nor in a place free from exposure to the fire, as required by the policy, but, on the contrary, were habitually kept in the store without protection from fire, and were burned with the store and goods. The plaintiff, being unable to produce such books for the inspection of the insurance company, failed to comply with the policy. The defendant insists for such failure the policy was rendered void. This result must follow, unless prevented by estoppel or waiver.

Was there evidence of waiver or estoppel to support a verdict for the plaintiff? Norris, the agent who issued the policy, admitted knowledge that the plaintiff had no iron safe in the store. He does not say with definiteness when he acquired the knowledge; but, taking his testimony as a whole in connection with the evidence on behalf of plaintiff, there was room to infer he knew this fact at the time he delivered the insurance policy. Knowledge by the agent at the inception of the contract that the books could not be kept in an iron safe on the premises estop the insurance company from claiming a forfeiture on that ground. The cases in this state announcing the principle are cited in Pearlstone v. Insurance Co., 74 S. C. 250, 54 S. E. 372, Doyle v. Hill, 75 S. C. 261, 55 S. E. 446, and Fludd v. Insurance Co., 75 S. C. 315, 55 S. E. 762. But the contract itself provides the precautions to be taken when the insured for any cause fails to keep the books in an iron safe. In that case the agreement is to keep them in some place not exposed to a fire which would destroy the storehouse. We do not think any evidence was adduced of waiver or estoppel before the fire as to this agreement. Assuming that Norris, the agent, knew at the time the policy was issued, the plaintiff's books were kept in the store, this would be no notice that the plaintiff would continue to keep them there after making a most important contract depending for its validity on keeping them elsewhere. But it is insisted the agent had an office near by, was frequently in and about plaintiff's place of business, and had abundant opportunity to observe that the books were not carried from the store at night. There is no pretense of actual knowledge brought home to Norris, either as defendant's agent or as an individual, of the plaintiff's habit of leaving the books in the store, unprotected from fire. The claim is that it was his duty on behalf of the insurance company to think of the books when he saw the plaintiff's employes leave the store, and protest against the failure to take them out. Slight circumstances have been allowed by the courts to support verdicts as some evidence of waiver or estoppel, but to sustain this contention would be going beyond reason. Whether Norris was an agent whose power embraced the authority to waive any or all of the conditions of the policy it is not necessary to decide; for, even if he had such authority, neither the company nor its agent was under any obligation to the plaintiff to watch its officers and employes for violations of the policy, and warn them against continuing such violations. The plaintiff's duty was to have the conditions of the contract in mind and observe them, and he cannot shift the duty to the shoulders of the defendant's agent. Night after night, for five months, the plaintiff left its books in the store unprotected, because its officers either did not bear in mind the conditions of the policy, or, having them in mind, chose not to comply with them. It cannot escape the consequences by saying the defendant's agent should have had the matter on his mind and seen to the removal of the books. Further, when Norris had the opportunity to observe the failure to take the books out of the store, there is no evidence that he was engaged in or about defendant's business with the plaintiff or any one else. At the most, he merely saw some of those in charge of plaintiff's store, from time to time, enter and leave the store, as any other citizen of the town might have seen them. There is no evidence that he ever thought of the insurance contract in connection with their coming and going; on the contrary, he testifies he never thought of the subject at all. This statement of the law, as taken from 19 Cyc. 810, is in accord with the cases in this state on the general powers of an agent, and is supported by numerous authorities cited in the text: "Any knowledge of the agent, to be considered in law that of the insurer, must have been acquired in the course of his business; and the company is not chargeable with information acquired by an agent in transactions without the agency, unless it appears that such information was remembered and in the mind of the agent during the time of the transaction upon which the insured claims a waiver." Knoblock v.

Bank, 50 S. C. 290, 27 S. E. 962. There was no evidence whatever of waiver or estoppel before the fire, and therefore it was error to submit to the jury the question whether the company had waived, before the fire, the requirement of the policy that the books should be kept in an iron safe and produced after the fire.

The actions of the defendant and its agents after the fire are to be considered in the light of a nonwaiver agreement. According to the testimony of E. E. Cobb, the general manager of the store, Norris in the presence of the adjuster wrote a paper to the effect that plaintiff had goods in the store of value far in excess of the insurance, and asked Cobb to go with him to get the best men in Edgefield to sign it. The same witness also testified Norris told him, while procuring signatures to this paper, he would have no trouble whatever in getting the insurance. Norris testified he expressed only the hope that the policy would be paid. The mere expression of hope or confidence by the agent, after the fire, that the insurance would be paid, is no evidence of waiver. Young v. Insurance Co., 68 S. C. 391, 47 S. E. 681; Joye v. Insurance Co., 54 S. C. 374, 32 S. E. 446. But trouble taken by Cobb, plaintiff's manager, at the instance of Mr. Norris, defendant's local agent, with the acquiescence of its adjuster, in procuring signatures to the statement of the value of the stock, with reasonable belief that the defendant regarded the policy as valid, under the cases of Kingman v. Insurance Co., 54 S. C. 599, 32 S. E. 762, and Montgomery v. Insurance Co., 55 S. C. 6, 32 S. E. 723, would ordinarily be some evidence of waiver. So, also, as a general rule, waiver could be inferred from the testimony that the adjuster demanded proof of loss, and the production of the invoices heretofore mentioned. Curnow v. Insurance Co., 46 S. C. 79, 24 S. E. 74; Norris v. Insurance Co., 57 S. C. 358, 35 S. E. 572. But the plaintiff, after the fire, made a non-waiver agreement in these words: "It is hereby mutually understood and agreed by and between Cobb & Seal, of the first part, and the Aetna Insurance Company, Hartford, Conn., and other companies signing this agreement, parties of the second part, that any action taken by said parties of the second part in investigating the cause of fire, or investigating and ascertaining the amount of loss and damage to the property of the parties of the first part, alleged to have occurred on Thursday night, June 7, 1906, shall not waive or invalidate any of the conditions of the policy of the parties of the second part, held by the parties of the first part, and shall not waive or invalidate any rights whatever of either of the parties to this agreement. The intent of the agreement is to preserve the rights of all parties hereto, and provide for an investigation of the fire and the determination of the amount of loss or damage, in order that the party of the first part may not be delayed unnecessarily in * * * business, and in order that the amount of * * * loss and damage may be ascertained and determined without regard to the liability of the parties of the second part." This language is too plain to require a restatement of its meaning. The plaintiff's contention that a request or demand made by defendant of plaintiff is not an act of the defendant within the meaning of the agreement is an attempt at refinement wholly inadmissible. The request for the estimate of other persons of the value of the insured property, demand for proof of loss, and the examination of the invoices were all acts looking to the ascertainment of the amount of the loss, and therefore of the nature expressly covered by the agreement.

The nonwaiver agreement should be given full effect as the contract of the parties. Joye v. Insurance Co., 54 S. C. 375, 32 S. E. 446; Hayes v. Insurance Co., 132 N. C. 702, 44

S. E. 404; Shawnee Fire Ins. Co. v. Kneer, 72 Kan. 385, 83 Pac. 611; Sun Ins. Co. v. Dudley, 65 Ark. 240, 45 S. W. 539; Keet-Rountree Co. v. Mercantile Ins. Co., 100 Mo. App. 504, 74 S. W. 469. But is it to be strictly construed against the insurer, and should not be extended by implication. The agreement here introduced does not in terms embrace any acts indicating waiver done by the insurer prior to its execution, and the court will not extend it by construction to such acts; for that would be holding the forfeiture to be revived by implication. Forfeitures are not favored, and, when once waived, the waiver is irrevocable, except by consent of the party against whom it is claimed; and his consent will not be implied from an agreement against waiver which does not distinctly refer to past transactions, but appears on its face to contemplate future action. There was evidence of some acts done after the fire and before execution of the nonwaiver agreement from which the jury might infer waiver. There was, therefore, no error in refusing to direct a verdict or order a new trial on the ground that there was no evidence of waiver of the forfeiture.

There should be a new trial, however, for error in the charge heretofore pointed out.

JONES, J. I dissent. There was some evidence tending to show waiver. See McMillan v. Insurance Co. (filed Oct. 11, 1907) 58 S. E. 1020.

GARY, A. J. I dissent.

(107 Va. 292)

DOUGLAS LAND CO. v. T. W. THAYER CO.

(Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia. Sept. 12, 1907.)

1. BOUNDARIES — EVIDENCE — DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE.

Where, in partition, several tracts were allotted to the parties, and the deeds to them called for the lines of designated patents, the patents were relevant evidence on the issue of the boundary line between the tracts.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 8, Boundaries, § 160.]

2. SAME—ACTS OF PARTIES — EVIDENCE — ADMISSIBILITY.

Where, in a suit involving the boundary line between plaintiff's and defendant's lands, it appeared that an agent of defendant, while endeavoring to determine the true line, adopted a corner and marked timber to identify it, proof that a third person, who owned land adjoining the land of defendant, pointed out to the agent the corner, was admissible in support of plaintiff's claim that the line from the corner was the correct line.

3. SAME.

In a suit involving the location of a boundary line, the admission in evidence that a witness received from plaintiff's counsel, in the presence of the counsel and general manager of defendant, instructions with respect to the running of a line from designated points, was not erroneous, where the counsel and manager of defendant likewise directed the running of the line.

4. SAME—DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE.

In a suit involving the location of a boundary line, a deed of a part of the land allotted to plaintiff's predecessor in title, in a suit for partition, and which called for the dividing line between that allotment and defendant's land, was relevant to show that the vendors in the deed claimed the line as called for in the deed.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 8, Boundaries, § 160.]

5. SAME—ACTS OF PARTIES.

In a suit involving the location of a boundary line, the testimony of a witness that he had heard an agent of defendant say that it had twice run the boundary line was relevant to show the acts done by defendant in its efforts to locate its boundary lines.

6. WRIT OF ERROR—ERRONEOUS ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE—RIGHT TO COMPLAIN.

A party eliciting evidence to establish a fact cannot avail himself of an objection to evidence of the adverse party establishing the same fact.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 3597.]

7. BOUNDARIES—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where, in a suit involving the location of a boundary line, there was evidence to prove that the lines and corners of an entry were identical with the calls of a patent, the entry was admissible, especially where some of the marked trees in the entry were called for in the deeds under which the parties claimed.

8. WRIT OF ERROR—EXCLUSION OF EVIDENCE—REVIEW.

Where the record is silent as to what answers were expected to be elicited from questions propounded, the sustaining of objections to the questions was not reviewable.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Appeal and Error, §§ 2905-2909.]

9. WITNESSES — COMPETENCY—TRANSACTIONS WITH DECEASED PERSONS.

One having no interest in a suit involving the location of a boundary line, and connected with it only as surveyor and witness, may testify with reference to the direction given him by the general manager of defendant as to how a line should be run, though the general manager is dead.

10. BOUNDARIES — EVIDENCE — CONDUCT OF PARTIES—ADMISSIBILITY.

In a suit involving the location of a boundary line, the testimony of a surveyor with reference to the direction given him by the general manager of one of the parties as to the running of a line is admissible as against the objection that the manager had no authority to make parol disclaimer of the title of his employer.

11. SAME—GENERAL REPUTATION — ADMISSIBILITY.

Parol evidence of the general reputation and tradition with respect to the corner of an ancient patent and the old line between Virginia and Tennessee is admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 8, Boundaries, § 155.]

12. WRIT OF ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE—EXCEPTIONS—REVIEW.

Where, in a suit involving the location of a boundary line, evidence of the location of a corner of an ancient patent had been admitted without objection, an exception to evidence of the general reputation and tradition with respect to the corner was not available.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 4161.]

13. EVIDENCE—OPINION EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

The opinion of a witness that a corner of an ancient patent was on the old state line is incompetent.

14. WRIT OF ERROR—HARMLESS ERROR—ERRONEOUS ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Where, in a suit involving the location of a boundary line, evidence that third persons had made statements to the agent of defendant which had been acted on by him in attempting to locate the boundaries was admitted, evidence that the third persons had made similar statements to others was not prejudicial.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 4161.]

15. EVIDENCE—SELF-SERVING DECLARATIONS.

In a suit involving the location of a boundary line, the testimony of a witness that a particular line was plainly marked is admissible as against the objection that the evidence is self-serving, on the ground that the line had been recently marked.

16. BOUNDARIES—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where the call in a deed is for a line over "Cat Face" to a tree, evidence of the location of the natural monument referred to by the designation "Cat Face," together with the traditional derivation of the name, was admissible to identify and locate the call.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 8, Boundaries, §§ 155, 178.]

17. WRIT OF ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE—EXCEPTIONS—REVIEW.

Where the exception to the refusal of the court to strike out evidence does not point out the specific evidence objected to, the exception cannot be regarded.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 2, Appeal and Error, § 1620.]

18. TRIAL — INSTRUCTIONS — IGNORING EVIDENCE.

Where, in a suit involving the location of the boundary line between tracts as partitioned among the heirs of a decedent, the controlling inquiry was as to the location of the line fixed by the commissioners and confirmed by the court, an instruction ignoring the theory that the parties had acquiesced in the line for which one of the parties contended, and yielding precedence to the supposed intention of the commissioners, was erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, § 613.]

19. SAME—UNDUE PROMINENCE TO PARTICULAR MATTERS.

An instruction must not call special attention to a part only of the evidence and the fact which it tends to prove, and disregard other evidence relative to the issue.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, § 577.]

Error to Circuit Court, Washington County.

Action by the T. W. Thayer Company against the Douglas Land Company. There was a judgment for plaintiff, and defendant brings error. Reversed and remanded.

Daniel Trigg, Fulkerson, Page & Hurt, and J. C. Padgett, for plaintiff in error. White & Penn, for defendant in error.

WHITTLE, J. This case involves the location of the true dividing line between the lands of Mrs. Monroe and George Douglas, Jr. (predecessors in title respectively of the defendant in error, the T. W. Thayer Company, plaintiff in the lower court, and the defendant, the Douglas Land Company, the plaintiff in error), both of whom derived title from a common source, their father, George Douglas, as established by the commissioners and confirmed by the circuit court of Washington county in the suit to partition the lands of George Douglas, deceased, amongst his heirs.

The plaintiff brought an action of trespass on the case against the defendant and its lessee, the Laurel River Lumber Company, to recover damages for the alleged cutting and removing of timber from its premises, and to an adverse judgment against the defendants this writ of error was allowed.

The lands which were the subject of partition consisted of three tracts—one containing 62,800 acres, another 10,712 acres, and the third 13,655 acres. The first two tracts, which embrace the land in controversy, were patented to James Heron December 14, 1795. The three tracts were divided into four parcels. The eastern portion of the largest tract was allotted to William Douglas, the central portion to Mrs. Cruger, and the western to Mrs. Monroe, while the two smaller tracts were allotted to George Douglas, Jr. The partition was confirmed in 1846, and carried into deeds in severalty by a special commissioner appointed by the court for that purpose. The deed to Mrs. Monroe calls for the northwest and southwest corners of the 62,800-acre tract, and also for the eastern lines of two older patents, Hunt's and Furman's. The calls in the deed to George Douglas, Jr., are for the northeast corner of the Hunt patent and Mrs. Monroe's western division line. The disputed lines are from "M" to "C" (contended for by the plaintiff), and from "O" to "5," and thence to the end of the dotted line (claimed by the defendants), as shown on the "Buchanan Map," a copy of which is filed with this opinion.

The action of the court in admitting in evidence the Hunt and Furman patents constitutes the first ground of exception.

As remarked, the lines of these patents are called for in the partition deeds, and they are, therefore, relevant evidence to sustain the theory of the plaintiff as to the true line between the claimants. The land included in the Furman patent adjoins the Hunt patent on the south, and the eastern boundary lines of the two patents are coincident, and according to the claim of the plaintiff constitute in part the western line of the 62,800-acre patent. The patents and deeds in the line of the Douglas title refer to the Hunt land and Furman land interchangeably as the Hunt and Furman land, and evidence was admissible to prove that both tracts were sometimes called the "Hunt land."

The next exception is to the admission of the testimony of the surveyor, Buchanan, that the Debusks, who owned part of the Hunt land adjoining the Douglas land, pointed out to Gen. Greever the northeast corner of the Hunt patent at "C."

Greever was the agent of the defendant, the Douglas Land Company, and was endeavoring to determine the true line between Mrs. Monroe and Douglas, and there was evidence tending to show that he adopted the corner at "C" and marked timber to identify it. This evidence was admissible as conducing to establish the plaintiff's claim that the line from "M" to "C" was the correct line.

In Harriman v. Brown, 8 Leigh (Va.) 706, Judge Tucker observes: "It is not the mere declaration of Milburn that the witness gives in evidence; but it is an act, to wit, the showing of certain corner trees, which the general reputation of the neighborhood fixed upon as the corners to Harriman's land. * * * Even if Milburn's showing certain trees as the corners of the land was not evidence to establish them as corners, the fact that he pointed out trees, which by other evidence are established as true corners, could not be rejected.

The objection to the testimony of the same witness, that he had received direction from plaintiff's counsel to run the line from "M" to "F," is also without merit. The instruction was given in the presence of counsel for the defendants and their general manager, and the latter likewise directed the running of the line. But it was also proper, by way of inducement, to show why the witness ran the line.

There was, moreover, an exception to the admission of what is known as the "Clement deed." That deed embraced 2,574 acres of the western portion of the land allotted to Mrs. Monroe, and called for the dividing line between that allotment and the defendant's land as its western boundary, and was relevant as tending to show that Clement's vendors, who were vendees in the line of Mrs. Monroe's title, claimed the line "M" to "F" as their western boundary line.

The next objection was to the admission of the statement of the witness Buchanan that he had heard Gen. Greever say that the Douglas Land Company had twice run the northern line of the 62,800-acre patent.

We think this was relevant evidence to show acts done by the defendant in its efforts to locate its lines. But, if the testimony were objectionable, the same fact was elicited by the defendant, and consequently cannot be availed of. Thornton v. Garr, 87 Va. 315, 12 S. E. 753; Va. & S. W. Ry. Co. v. Bailey, 103 Va. 205, 49 S. E. 33.

Exception 9 was to the introduction of the Fulton entry of April 8, 1837.

There was evidence going to prove that the lines and corners of that entry were identical with the calls of Hunt's patent, and it was offered to explain the presence of newly marked timber in the lines of that patent; and, besides, the evidence is admissible, because some of the marked trees in the entry are called for in the partition deeds.

In Clement v. Packer, 125 U. S. 332, 8 Sup. Ct. 907, 31 L. Ed. 721, it was held that, when the lines and corners of a senior patent had become uncertain, evidence showing the lines of a junior patent, which called for those of the senior patent, was admissible, not as controlling, but to aid in identifying the older lines.

Exceptions 10, 11, and 12 are to the action of the court in refusing to permit the witness Buchanan to answer certain hypothetical questions.

It is sufficient to say, with respect to those exceptions, that the questions propounded were not within the scope of expert testimony, and, if they had been, the record is silent as to what answers were expected to be elicited. Holleran v. Meisel, 91 Va. 143, 21 S. E. 658.

Exception 13 involves the action of the court in overruling the motion of the defendant to exclude the testimony of the same witness with reference to the direction given him by Watson, general manager of the Douglas Land Company, to run the line from "M" to "F," on the ground that Watson was dead, and, furthermore, that he had no authority to make a parol disclaimer of the title of his principal.

The ruling was right in both particulars. Buchanan's connection with the case was merely as surveyor and witness, and he had no interest whatever in the litigation. In no sense was he a party to the controversy, and hence the rule of exclusion invoked was not applicable. Nor was the direction alleged to have been given by Watson a disclaimer of title in his principal. It was only an acquiescence on his part to running a line which might throw light on the question at issue.

Exceptions 14 and 14½ involve the admissibility of parol evidence to prove by general reputation and tradition the southwest corner of Furman's patent, which issued in 1788, and the old line between Virginia and Tennessee. It is well settled that such evidence is admissible. Harriman v. Brown, supra; Clements v. Kyle, 13 Grat. 468, 477. But in this instance, also, similar evidence of the location of the corner had been introduced without objection, and therefore, under the authorities cited, the exception cannot avail. We think, however, that the opinion of the witness Mock that the corner was on the old state line was not competent evidence and ought to have been excluded.

Exceptions 15, 16, and 18 challenge the admissibility of Mock's and Lewis' testimony of what the Debusks had told them concerning the location of the eastern line of the Hunt patent.

In view of the fact that evidence had already been introduced tending to prove that these parties had made similar statements to Gen. Greever, agent of the Douglas Land Company, which had been acted on by him, it is not perceived that the admission of this evidence could have been prejudicial.

Exception 17 is to the admission of the testimony of Lewis that the line between Douglas and Clements was plainly marked.

This objection is founded on the fact that the line had been comparatively recently marked, and that the evidence was self-serving. That question is settled adversely to the exceptor by the case of Clement v. Pack-er, supra.

Exception 19 is to the action of the court in overruling the objection to a question propounded to the witness Lewis with respect to the location of the cliff and traditional origin of the name "Cat Face," a projection of rocks on the western slope of Pound Mountain.

The call in the partition deed to Monroe and wife, after leaving the Hunt and Furman line, is for a line east 400 poles over "Cat Face" to a beech and sugar tree on the dividing ridge. Several witnesses testified to the location of that natural monument and the traditional derivation of its name—that the caverns on its face afforded dens to wild cats. We think the evidence was admissible to identify the cliff and locate the call in the partition deed.

Exception 20 questions the admissibility of the Fulton entry, and is controlled by what was said in regard to exception 9.

We are of opinion that the leases referred to in exceptions 21 and 22 were rightly excluded. It was not shown that either of them covered the land in controversy, nor did their relevancy otherwise appear.

There is no avowal of what answers were expected to the questions whose exclusion is made the ground of exceptions 23 and 24, and, if material, as before observed, the objection could not be considered.

The answer of the witness to the question, the exclusion of which constitutes exception 27, "that he did not know whether there was any controversy over the land referred to," shows that the exception was immaterial.

Exception 28 is to the refusal of the court to strike out the cross-examination of the witness Mock, "wherein he speaks of what Mr. White told him of the controversy having been settled." The exception is amenable to the objection that the exceptor has omitted to point out the specific answers objected to, and for that reason it cannot be regarded. N. & W. Ry. Co. v. Ampey, 93 Va. 108, 25 S. E. 226; Hughes v. Kelly, 30 S. E. 387, 2 Va. Dec. 588.

We are of opinion that the question and answer which were admitted by the court over the objection of the defendant (exception 29) were merely intended to explain the attitude of counsel in the matter involved and could not have prejudiced the defendant.

The remaining exceptions (save only the last, which is to the refusal of the court to set aside the verdict as contrary to the law and evidence) are to the giving and refusal of instructions.

It is unnecessary to prolong this opinion by specific consideration of these assignments of error. We shall content ourselves with calling attention to one of the instructions which the court gave, the unqualified language of which would naturally have induced the jury to give predominance to what they may have believed the commissioners intended, without regard to what they may have done in establishing the line in controversy. The controlling inquiry in the case at last is the ascertainment of the line fixed by the commissioners and confirmed by the court; and that fact, if proved and acquiesced in by the parties, would take precedence over any presumed intention of the commissioners. On the other hand, the intention of the commissioners, to be gathered from the partition proceedings, in connection with the facts and surrounding circumstances, constitutes an important factor in aiding the jury to determine the correct location of the line.

In Smith v. Davis, 4 Grat. (Va.) 50, the commissioners intended the dividing line to be a straight line between known corners, and directed the surveyor so to run it; but the land was in forest, and the surveyor, without intending it, ran and marked a curved line. The court approved an instruction which told the jury that, if they believed from the evidence that the commissioners intended to run the division line as a straight line between ascertained corners, then a straight line was the true division line, unless they should believe from the evidence that the parties had agreed to and acquiesced in the crooked line. The court also held an instruction erroneous which charged the jury that if the division line was actually run and marked at the time the division was made, and that the line thus made was the crooked line laid down on the plat returned by the surveyor, the crooked line should prevail, although the call of the plat and report of the commissioners was for a straight division line. It will thus be observed that the instruction which the court approved modified the effect which the jury were to allow the intention of the commissioners by acquiescence of the parties in the curved line run and chopped through mistake by the surveyor.

So, in this case, an instruction which ignores the theory of the defendants that the parties had acquiesced in the line for which they contend, and without qualification yields precedence to the supposed intention of the commissioners, is erroneous. See cases cited in note to Smith v. Davis, 4 Grat. (Va. Rep. Ann.) 36, and Elliott v. Horton, 28 Grat. (Va.) 768, 772.

The prayer in question also contravenes the doctrine of that line of decisions which hold that "an instruction must not call special attention to a part only of the evidence and the fact which it tends to prove, and disregard other evidence relevant to the matter in issue." Seaboard, etc., Ry. Co. v. Joyner, 92 Va. 354, 23 S. E. 773; Hansbrough v. Neal, 94 Va. 722, 27 S. E. 593; Montgomery's Case, 98 Va. 852, 37 S. E. 1; Boush v. Fidelity, etc., Co., 100 Va. 735, 42 S. E. 877.

We are of opinion that, in so far as the ruling of the circuit court in giving and refusing instructions at the previous trial is in conflict with the views expressed in this opinion, it is erroneous. For this reason, the judgment complained of must be reversed, the verdict of the jury set aside, and the case remanded for a new trial.

(2 Ga. App. 636)

WALLER v. STATE (No. 718.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 14, 1907.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—FORMAL ARRAIGNMENT—WAIVER.

The right of formal arraignment and plea will be conclusively considered as waived where the defendant goes to trial before the jury on the merits, and fails until after verdict to bring to the attention of the court that he has not been formally called upon to enter a plea to the indictment. Pol. Code 1895, § 10; Hudson v. State, 117 Ga. 704, 45 S. E. 66; Bryans v. State, 34 Ga. 323.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 2118.]

2. SAME—NEW TRIAL—GROUND—SEPARATION OF JURY—PREJUDICE.

The unauthorized separation of the jury will not of itself require a new trial. Prejudice must have resulted from such separation, and, where it is affirmatively shown that the jurors who temporarily separated themselves from the jury had no communication with any one upon the subject of the trial, either directly by conversation, or individually by hearing the observations of others, the presumption of injury arising from such irregularity would be sufficiently rebutted.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, §§ 2257-2262.]

3. SAME—WAIVER.

Where pending the trial of a misdemeanor case two of the jurors temporarily separated from the jury, and this fact was at the time known to the defendant or his counsel, and the attention of the court was not called to the irregularity until after verdict, a new trial will not be granted therefor, but an implied assent thereto by the defendant will be presumed. Kirk v. State, 73 Ga. 620; Carter v. State, 56 Ga. 467 (4); Eberhart v. State, 47 Ga. 598 (5).

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 2126.]

4. SAME—MISCONDUCT OF OFFICER.

The fact that the officer in charge of the jury in a criminal case, after they had retired to consider of their verdict, permitted them to sit in a body in a veranda and eat watermelons sufficiently near to the sidewalk to hear a discussion of the case by persons thereon, will not require a new trial, where it affirmatively appears that the jury while on said veranda were in charge of the officer, and neither discussed the case themselves nor heard any one else discuss or refer to it.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, § 2275.]

5. SAME.

The paramount duty of courts is to insure fair and impartial trials. Mere irregularities which do not affect or prevent the full and complete accomplishment of this duty should not require new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, §§ 2128-2145.]

6. SAME—WRIT OF ERROR—NEW TRIAL—DENIAL—REVIEW.

The evidence was weak and conflicting, but considered by the jury sufficient to convict. The discretion of the trial court in refusing a new trial will not be disturbed.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, §§ 3067, 3068.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Cairo; J. R. Singletary, Judge.

C. C. Waller was convicted of an offense, and he brings error. Affirmed.

R. C. Bell and J. O. Smith, for plaintiff in error. S. P. Cain, Sol., for the State.

HILL, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

(2 Ga. App. 631)

LEDBETTER v. STATE (No. 683.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 14, 1907.)

1. CLERKS OF COURTS—DEPUTIES—DE FACTO OFFICER—POWERS.

The office of deputy clerk of the superior court exists. Therefore one may de facto hold that office who is not entitled to hold it de jure, because of a failure to take the oath. The acts of such de facto officer are as effective in matters, both civil and criminal, as if he were regularly qualified. Civ. Code 1895, § 4359; Pol. Code 1895, § 242; Ballard v. Orr, 105 Ga. 195, 31 S. E. 554; Gunn v. Tackett, 67 Ga. 725; Herrington v. State, 103 Ga. 318, 29 S. E. 931, 68 Am. St. Rep. 95; Brooks v. Rooney, 11 Ga. 423; Allen v. State, 21 Ga. 219, 68 Am. Dec. 457; Tietjen v. Merchants' Bank, 117 Ga. 503, 43 S. E. 730.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 10, Clerks of Courts, §§ 10, 11.]

2. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEAL—CONCLUSIVENESS OF FINDINGS—PLEA IN ABATEMENT.

The evidence not being such as to preclude a finding that the indictment had been returned into court and delivered to the clerk or to his de facto deputy, a finding by the trial judge, acting by consent as trior, against a plea in abatement alleging to the contrary, will not be disturbed.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Sylvania; H. A. Boykin, Judge.

Son Ledbetter was convicted of misdemeanor, and he brings error. Affirmed.

The defendant, Son Ledbetter, was indicted by the grand jury of Screven county for a misdemeanor. The indictment was transferred from the superior court of Screven county to the city court of Sylvania, in which court the defendant filed a plea in abatement, alleging, in substance, that the indictment was delivered into court from the grand jury by one Gilbert, who was not the bailiff of the grand jury, and who was not a sworn officer of the court, and was without authority of law to hand said indictment into said court, and that the delivery of the indictment into court by Gilbert was not in the presence of the grand jury, but was handed in by him privately after the grand jury had taken a recess for the day. The state filed a traverse to this plea, and the issue thus raised was by consent tried by the judge without a jury. The evidence introduced by the defendant in support of the allegations of his plea was substantially as follows: Two witnesses testified that they were in the office of the clerk of the superior court on the day the indictment was found; that one Gilbert, an assistant to the Solicitor General, came into the office from the direction of the grand jury room, and handed the clerk a batch of indictments, including the one in question; that at this time the grand jury was not in session. There is no direct evidence in the record as to the source from which Gilbert got the indictment. The evidence on the part of the state showed that the clerk of the superior court had a deputy by the name of Potter, who habitually performed the functions of clerk, frequently receiving the indictments returned into court by the grand jury, and doing other routine work under the supervision of the clerk. He had never taken an oath of office. He testified that after indictments had been delivered into court by the grand jury he often turned them over to the Assistant Solicitor General for the purpose of having bench warrants issued on them. The regular bailiff of the grand jury testified that he never delivered any indictments to Gilbert, but always turned them over to the clerk or his deputy. The theory of the state under this testimony was that the indictment against the defendant had been returned into court by the regular bailiff of the grand jury and delivered by him to the clerk or his de facto deputy, and had then come into the possession of the Assistant Solicitor. The evidence does not preclude a finding to this effect. After hearing the evidence, the trial judge overruled the plea, and his decision is assigned by the defendant as error.

E. K. Overstreet, for plaintiff in error. T. J. Evans, Sol., for defendant in error.

POWELL, J. Judgment affirmed.

(2 Ga. App. 649)

ROSENBLATT v. STATE. (No. 679.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1907.)

CRIMINAL LAW—PLEA IN ABATEMENT.

There was no error in deciding adversely to the plea in abatement.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Ben Hill County; U. V. Whipple, Judge.

J. Rosenblatt was convicted of the illegal sale of intoxicating liquor, and, from a decision of the superior court adverse to him on a writ of certiorari, he brings error. Affirmed.

The defendant was indicted by the grand jury of Ben Hill county for illegally selling liquor. The case was transferred for trial to the city court of Fitzgerald. The defendant filed a plea in abatement, which alleged, among other things, that the indictment against him was void because (1) the jury commissioners, appointed to select the grand jury which found the indictment against him, did not before entering upon their duties subscribe the oath required by section 814 of the Penal Code of 1895; and (2) under the act creating the Cordele circuit only the judge of the superior court of Ben Hill county was authorized to draw the grand jurors for the spring term, 1907, of said court. The evidence disclosed the fact that the ordinary administrator prescribed the oath to the jury commissioners before they entered upon their duties, but the oath was not subscribed by them until two or three days later. As to whether or not the subscription of the oath took place before or after the final selection of the grand jury there was some conflict; but there was evidence from which the court could find against the defendant as to that point, for two of the jury commissioners testified that "none of the names of the persons who were finally selected as grand jurors and whose names were put in the grand jury box, had been selected prior to the time that the oath of jury commissioners was subscribed to by the jury commissioners, the work done prior to that time being the work of going over the tax digest for the purpose of getting the names of all the poll taxpayers of the county, from which the names of the grand jury were to be selected." After hearing the evidence, the judge directed a verdict against the plea in abatement; but the assignment of error is sufficient only to raise the same question as if the jury had found the verdict without the direction. See Dickenson v. Stuts, 120 Ga. 632, 48 S. E. 173 (1). The case went to trial on the merits, and the defendant was convicted. He carried the case to the superior court by certiorari; and, the decision of the judge on the return of the writ being adverse to him, he assigns this decision as error.

E. W. Ryman and E. Wall, for plaintiff in error. E. D. Graham, Sol. Gen., Alex. J. McDonald, Sol., and W. F. George, Sol. Gen., for the State.

POWELL, J. (after stating the facts as above). The judgment of the trial court overruling the certiorari will be affirmed for several reasons. First There having been an issue of fact as to whether the jury commissioners drew the list before or after they subscribed the oath, the finding of the trial court as to that is final. Further, if they were not de jure officers, their acts as de facto officers were not invalid. Ledbetter v. State (No. 685) 53 S. E. 1106. Also, "the official acts of an officer are none the less valid for his omission to take and file the oath, unless in cases when so specifically declared." Pol. Code 1895, § 242. And, they having actually taken the oath, their subscription of it related back. McLain v. State, 71 Ga. 279; Roby v. State, 74 Ga. 812.

While under the act creating the Cordele circuit (Laws Ga. 1906, p. 52) the judge of the superior court had the power to draw the grand jury, this in no wise interfered with the power of the jury commissioners under the general law.

Judgment affirmed.

(2 Ga. App. 659)

SUTTON v. STATE (No. 681.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 16, 1907.)

1. ASSAULT AND BATTERY—DEFENSES—ABUSIVE LANGUAGE.

Abusive language, without more, is not a valid defense to a battery with a large pistol sufficient in severity to knock down and cause unconsciousness.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 4, Assault and Battery, § 95.]

2. SAME.

The aggressor in the use of opprobrious words cannot set up as a defense to a violent battery with a pistol the use of similar words provoked by his own language.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 4, Assault and Battery, § 95.]

3. SAME—VERDICT—EVIDENCE.

The verdict rendered was the verdict required by the undisputed evidence and the defendant's statement considered separately or together.

4. SAME—NEW TRIAL.

The grounds in the motion for a new trial are utterly without merit.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Sylvester; Frank Park, Judge.

R. L. Sutton was convicted of assault and battery, and he brings error. Affirmed.

Polhill & Foy, for plaintiff in error. J. H. Tipton, for the State.

HILL, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

(2 Ga. App. 660)

PAULK v. STATE (No. 744.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 16, 1907.)

1. COURTS—CITY COURTS—JUDGES—PRESIDING IN OTHER COURTS.

The city court of Baxley is a constitutional city court, and the judge of said court is authorized under the Constitution of 1877 to preside in the superior court of Appling county in any case where the judge of the latter court is disqualified, and, when presiding in said court in the trial of such disqualified case, "becomes the impersonation of the superior court for that case."

2. LARCENY—INSTRUCTIONS—REQUESTS.

On the trial of an indictment for the offense of hog stealing, where the issue of fact was as to the intention of the defendant, it being contended by the defendant that his intent was not to steal the hog in question, but to wound and kill it, it was error in the presiding judge to refuse a written request timely made and pertinent to this issue.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 32, Larceny, §§ 191, 192.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Appling County; J. H. Thomas, Judge.

George Paulk was convicted of larceny, and he brings error. Reversed.

W. W. Bennett, for plaintiff in error. John W. Bennett, Sol. Gen., and W. W. Lambdin, for the State.

HILL, C. J. Plaintiff in error was convicted of the offense of simple larceny in the superior court of Appling county. The judge of the superior court of said county was disqualified to try the case, and the judge of the city court of Baxley presided on the trial. The defendant moved for a new trial, which was overruled, and he excepted.

1. The first question made is whether the judge of the city court of Baxley had the right, under the Constitution of 1877, to preside in said case. It was admitted that the judge of the superior court of that county was disqualified. The Constitution of 1877 (article 6, § 5) provides as follows: "In any county in which there is or hereafter may be a city court, the judge of said court and of the superior court, may preside in the courts of each other, in cases where the judge of either is disqualified." This provision of the Constitution has been decided by the Supreme Court to apply only to constitutional city courts. The fact that the city court has only jurisdiction to try misdemeanor cases does not affect the constitutional right of a judge of a constitutional city court from presiding in the superior court in a felony case where the judge of the latter court is disqualified. As to the disqualified case in the superior court, the judge of the city court is invested with all the power and authority of the judge of the superior court. In the language of Mr. Justice Jackson in the Northwestern Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Wilcoxon, 64 Ga. 566: "He becomes the impersonation of the superior court for that case during the term." The city court of Baxley has been decided by the Supreme Court to be a constitutional city court. Sellers et al. v. Mann, 113 Ga. 643 (1), 39 S. E. 11; Heard v. State, 113 Ga. 444, 39 S. E. 118; Ivy v. State, 112 Ga. 180, 37 S. E. 398; Acts 1897, p. 420.

2. The next ground of error insisted upon is that the court erred in refusing to give the following written instruction to the jury: "Gentlemen of the jury, if you find from the evidence in this case that this defendant, in company with the other defendant, with a gun shot and wounded the hog in question without any intention of stealing it, and then with a club beat the hog to death and threw it into the water of a river swamp, without any intention of stealing it, and without converting it to their own use, but simply killed it and left it there to rot, that then, and in that event, he would not be guilty of the offense of simple larceny, as charged in this indictment." Under the evidence, there was no question that the defendant and his codefendant did kill and drag the hog of the prosecutor described in the indictment from the place where they killed it and hid it behind a log in the shallow water of the lake swamp. The material question was as to their intention. Did they intend to steal the hog, or did they intend wantonly and maliciously to maim and kill the hog? The learned judge charged the jury the general elements constituting the offense of simple larceny as applicable to the facts of the case, and as contended for by the state. He failed to charge the contention of the defendant that the jury would not be authorized to convict if the intention of the defendant was not to commit the crime of larceny, but some other offense not set out in the indictment. We think this was error, and that the above request was pertinent to the issue and contentions as made by the evidence, and should have been submitted to the jury. For this reason alone, we are constrained to grant a new trial.

Judgment reversed.

(2 Ga. App. 662)

PAULK v. STATE. (No. 743.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 16, 1907.)

1. COURTS—CITY COURTS—JUDGES—TRIAL OF CASES IN OTHER COURTS.

The judge of the city court of Baxley was qualified under the Constitution of 1877 to preside in the superior court and try this case; the judge of the latter court being disqualified. Const. 1877, art. 6, § 5; Paulk v. State (No. 744, Court of Appeals of Georgia) 58 S. E. 1108.

2. JURY—DISQUALIFICATION—SERVICE ON PRISON JURY.

It is no cause of challenge to the array that 12 of the 48 jurors constituting the array had just served as a jury on the trial of another person jointly indicted with the defendant in which a verdict of guilty was rendered, and that the witnesses and evidence in the present case would be the same as in the former. Such cause of challenge was not good against the panel, but would have been available only by challenges to the polls. Schnell v. State, 92 Ga. 459, 17 S. E. 968.

3. CRIMINAL LAW—INSTRUCTIONS—REQUESTS.

The written requests to charge on the issue made by the facts proved as to whether the specific intent of the defendant was to commit the offense of larceny, or some other offense, was fully covered by the charge of the court on that subject.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 2011.]

4. SAME—VERDICT.

No error of law was committed, and the verdict is supported by the evidence.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Appling County; J. H. Thomas, Judge.

Will Paulk was convicted of larceny, and he brings error. Affirmed.

W. W. Bennett, for plaintiff in error.
John W. Bennett, Sol. Gen., and W. W. Lambdin, for the State.

HILL, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

(2 Ga. App. 658)

SHELL v. STATE. (No. 762.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1907.)

CRIMINAL LAW.

Owing to the nature of the charge against the defendant, and of the testimony in the record, we shall make no report of the facts. We have, however, made a careful study of the assignments of error, but find nothing requiring the grant of a new trial.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Carrollton; W. C. Hodnett, Judge.

Jim Shell was convicted of an offense, and he brings error. Affirmed.

Beall & Adamson and Griffith, Weatherby & Mathews, for plaintiff in error. C. E. Roop and S. Holderness, for the State.

POWELL, J. Judgment affirmed.

(3 Ga. App. 657)

GATES v. STATE. (No. 717.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1907.)

CRIMINAL LAW—EVIDENCE—NEW TRIAL—NEWLY DISCOVERED TESTIMONY.

The evidence authorized the conviction. The trial judge did not abuse his discretion in overruling the motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered testimony.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of LaGrange; Frank Harwell, Judge.

Limus Gates was convicted of an offense, and he brings error. Affirmed.

E. T. Moon, for plaintiff in error. Henry Reeves, for the State.

POWELL, J. Judgment affirmed.

(2 Ga. App. 656)

McALLISTER v. STATE. (No. 710.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1907.)

INDICTMENT—TRUE BILL—SIGNING.

That the foreman of a grand jury did not sign the entry of true bill on an indictment is no ground for a motion in arrest of judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 27, Indictment and Information, § 129.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Bartow County; A. W. Fite, Judge.

John McAllister was convicted of a misdemeanor, and he brings error. Affirmed.

Jas. B. Conyers, for plaintiff in error. Sam P. Maddox, Sol. Gen., for the State.

RUSSELL, J. After his conviction for the offense of a misdemeanor, the defendant made a motion in arrest of judgment. His motion was overruled, and he excepts to this judgment.

The motion in arrest of judgment is predicated upon the fact that the indictment was not signed by the foreman of the grand jury. In Barlow v. State, 127 Ga. 62, 56 S. E. 181, Judge Lumpkin remarks that the proper practice is for the foreman of the grand jury to sign a finding of true bill on the back of the indictment, and this is the universally recognized practice. But there is no positive law requiring that the foreman of the grand jury shall sign the finding at all. It was not required at common law. If it be indispensable that the foreman shall sign it, the defect arising from failure to sign is at least not ground for a motion in arrest of judgment. That has been definitely decided in McGuffie v. State, 17 Ga. 510. In Hughes v. State, 76 Ga. 40, the same question was before the court, and it was held that: "All exceptions which go merely to the form of the indictment shall be made before trial, and no motion in arrest of judgment shall be sustained for any matter not affecting the real merits of the offense charged in the indictment. If a plea in abatement had been filed, it might be that the state would have shown from the minutes of the court the finding of the grand jury." The court therefore committed no error in refusing to arrest the judgment.

Judgment affirmed.

(2 Ga. App. 654)

McALLISTER v. STATE. (No. 709.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1907.)

CRIMINAL LAW—CONFESSIONS—WEIGHT.

The confession not being plenary, and not being connected with the specific act which was the basis of the criminal offense charged, the conviction of the defendant was not authorized by the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 1227-1229; vol. 1, Adultery, §§ 21-23.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Bartow County; A. W. Fite, Judge.

John McAllister was convicted of adultery, and he brings error. Reversed.

Jas. B. Conyers, for plaintiff in error. Sam P. Maddox, Sol. Gen., for the State.

RUSSELL, J. The defendant, John McAllister, was indicted and convicted for the offense of adultery and fornication and excepts to the overruling of his motion for a new trial. The only question presented by the record is whether the verdict is contrary to law, in that the evidence is insufficient to support it.

This court is especially reluctant to interfere with the verdict of a jury, and for that reason we have carefully scrutinized the record to ascertain if in any view of the case the verdict of the jury can be supported by law. The evidence for the state, in brief, was that one witness saw the defendant running after the married woman with whom the intercourse is alleged to have taken place and slapping her on the rump. Another witness at another time saw the defendant kiss the female in question. The state then produced the following statement made by the defendant to another witness: "The defendant told me that he did it to [the woman in question] whenever he wanted to do it." Another witness detailing this same conversation said that the defendant said that he did it to her one time. This was all the evidence in behalf of the state. The defendant stated that he had never had intercourse with the female in question, and she testified to the same effect. A confession corroborated will authorize conviction of a criminal offense; the amount of corroboration being solely for the jury. The error of the trial judge in this case grew out of his failure to recognize the distinction between a confession incomplete and a plenary confession. We think that the circumstance that a gentleman boarder was seen familiarly slapping the rump of his landlady, who was a married woman, and the further circumstance that he was seen holding her by the chin and kissing her, would afford strong corroborative testimony of a plenary and specific confession of sexual intercourse. But the witnesses for the state as to the confession did not detail a statement by the defendant which would authorize a conviction, even if the law permitted convictions by confessions uncorroborated. From this statement, denominated a confession, it does not appear that the intercourse took place in Bartow county, nor that it was within two years prior to the finding of the indictment, nor is there any circumstance to connect it with the facts upon which the state relied for corroboration.

Clark, in his work on Criminal Procedure (page 532), lays the rule down thus: "An extrajudicial confession, in order to warrant a conviction, must be corroborated by other evidence tending to prove the corpus delicti." Wharton, after stating the conditions upon which voluntary confessions are admissible, says: "While voluntary confessions of specific charges or of inculpatory facts are always admissible under conditions above stated, they cannot sustain a conviction unless there be corroborative proof of the corpus delicti." Whart. Cr. Ev. 632. In 1 Greenleaf on Evidence, § 217, in discussing the question whether extrajudicial confessions, uncorroborated by any other proof of the corpus delicti, are sufficient to support a conviction, the learned author says: "In each of the English cases usually cited in favor of the sufficiency of this evidence, there was some corroborative circumstance. In the United States the prisoner's confession, when the corpus delicti is not otherwise proved, has been held insufficient for his conviction; and this opinion certainly best accords with the humanity of the Criminal Code, and with the great degree of caution applied in receiving and weighing evidence of confessions in other cases, and it seems countenanced by approved writers upon this branch of the law." In People v. Badgley, 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 53, it was held: "Evidence of confession alone, unsupported by corroborating facts and circumstances, is not sufficient to convict. There must be proof alunde of the corpus delicti, although such proof need not be conclusive." In Stringfellow v. State, 26 Miss. 157, 59 Am. Dec. 247, it was held: "In capital felonies, the extrajudicial confessions of the prisoner, where the corpus delicti is not proven by independent testimony, are insufficient to warrant a conviction of the accused." In Johnson v. State, 59 Ala. 37, following Matthews v. State, 55 Ala. 187, it was held: "An extrajudicial confession, not corroborated by independent evidence of the corpus delicti, will support a conviction of a felony." In Kentucky, as in Georgia, this principle is embodied in the statutory law of the state. Cunningham v. Com., 9 Bush, 149. This seems to be true in Iowa. State v. Feltes, 51 Iowa, 601, 1 N. W. 755. In U. S. v. Mayfield (C. C.) 59 Fed. 118, Boorman, J., said: "Before a conviction is justified, the government should be required to establish the corpus delicti by some degree of circumstantial or other evidence independent of the defendant's extrajudicial confessions." In Priest v. State, 10 Neb. 394, 6 N. W. 468, the rule was laid down this way: "A confession is not sufficient evidence of the corpus delicti. There must be other evidence that a crime has actually been committed, the confession being used to connect the accused with the crime."

We think, therefore, that the verdict, for lack of evidence, is contrary to law, and that a new trial ought to have been granted.

Judgment reversed.

(2 Ga. App. 639)

TOMPKINS v. STATE. (No. 761.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 14, 1907.)

INTOXICATING LIQUORS—WRONGFUL SALE—PRESUMPTIONS.

In the absence of evidence to the contrary, it may be inferred that a liquor called for and delivered and paid for as whisky is whisky, and therefore an intoxicating liquor.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 29, Intoxicating Liquors, § 275; vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 718.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Newnan; A. D. Freeman, Judge.

Lee Tompkins was convicted of the illegal sale of intoxicating liquors, and he brings error. Affirmed.

Robert Orr, for plaintiff in error. W. L. Stallings, for the State.

RUSSELL, J. The plaintiff in error was indicted for the offense of selling whisky and convicted. The specific words of the charge were, "did unlawfully sell and barter for valuable consideration alcoholic, spirituous, malt and intoxicating liquors and intoxicating bitters and beer and wine."

No complaint is made of any error in the admission or rejection of evidence or in the charge of the court. Only one question is raised by the record: Is the evidence sufficient to support the verdict? There can be but one answer to the question. The evidence was ample, the one witness testified in the case. This witness testified that he bought 25 cents worth of rye whisky from the defendant, Tompkins, for each in Coweta county and within two years immediately preceding the return of the indictment (December 31, 1906). It is immaterial that the sole witness for the state testified that he told defendant that he wanted whisky, and that the defendant stated that he could get it for him, because it is undisputed that the witness saw defendant himself and not another, pour the liquid out of a quart bottle into a beer bottle, which was delivered to the purchaser. It is immaterial that the witness testified that he did not drink any of the whisky. The fact that the witness swore that it smelled like rye whisky might be corroborative of the already existent testimony that the fluid was whisky, but under the indictment it was not material for the state to show that the intoxicating liquor sold was rye whisky. It was enough if it was made to appear beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant sold whisky. The court would take knowledge of the fact that all whisky is intoxicating, and proof of sale of whisky would conform with the allegation that alcoholic, spirituous, and intoxicating liquors were sold by the defendant. The jury may infer that a liquor is intoxicating from its effect when drunk. Much more can they infer that a liquid, though not imbibed, is whisky where the purchaser plainly asks for whisky, and the seller furnishes it in compliance with his request.

The writ of error is entirely without merit. Judgment affirmed.

(2 Ga. App. 613)

HARWELL v. STATE. (No. 631.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 14, 1907.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT—FRAUDULENT BREACH OF CONTRACT—FRAUDULENT INTENT—REBUTTAL.

The presumption of fraudulent intent arising under the labor contract law of 1903 (Acts 1903, p. 90) is not rebutted as to one who obtains advances on the faith of his contract for services to be performed at a future time, and who does not enter upon such service, by repayment of the advance, unless such payment be made on or before the date fixed by the contract for the commencement of such labor or service.

2. CRIMINAL LAW—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—INAPPLICABILITY TO EVIDENCE.

A charge not applicable to the evidence, or without evidence to support it, is erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 1924, 1980, 1981.]

3. MASTER AND SERVANT—FRAUDULENT BREACH OF CONTRACT—CRIMINAL PROSECUTIONS—DEFENSES—INSTRUCTIONS.

Under the decision of the Supreme Court in Howard v. State, 128 Ga. 538, 55 S. E. 239, the court should have charged the jury that if it appeared from the evidence that the accused was a minor, and that the failure on his part to perform the services required under the contract was due to parental interference and control, that the presumption of fraudulent intent, arising from the fact that the money was procured on the faith of the contract, and the service not rendered, or the money returned, would be rebutted, and the defendant could not be convicted. The failure to so instruct the jury requires the grant of a new trial.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Monticello; A. S. Thurman, Judge.

Earnest Harwell, alias Isaac, was convicted of swindling, and he brings error. Reversed.

A. Y. Clement, for plaintiff in error. Doyle Campbell, for the State.

RUSSELL, J. The defendant was indicted for the offense of misdemeanor, cheating and swindling by procuring $20 from one M. Benton, by means of a contract with said Benton to work as a farm laborer; this sum, as alleged, having been fraudulently procured after the contract. Before trial the defendant demurred to the indictment, both generally and specially. The court overruled the demurrer, and exceptions were taken pendente lite. The grounds of the demurrer were as follows: "(1) Because said indictment in the matters therein contained is insufficient in law, and he ought not to be required to answer same. (2) Because the allegations in said indictment are too vague, indefinite, and uncertain. (3) Because said indictment in the averments therein contained does not charge any offense under the law. (4) Demurring specially, defendant says it appears from the face of said indictment that the time has not expired in which said service was to be performed, and that under the statute he has the right and privilege of returning the money with interest thereon at any time before the expiration of the year 1907, and that it cannot be legally presumed that he will not return the money with interest thereon before the expiration of said period, and for this reason said indictment is premature and invalid. (5) Specially, because said indictment does not allege that said contract was in writing, nor does it allege that defendant was contracted with as an 'overseer,' but negatives that implication that he was 'to work as a farm laborer for one year beginning January 1, 1907,' said indictment shows upon its face that the alleged contract was void, illegal, contrary to public policy and the statute of frauds, and was not binding, for the reason that it appears that said contract was 'not to be performed within one year from the making thereof,' and that said contract was made December 28, 1906, and that the term of service was for 'one year beginning January 1, 1907.' Defendant says that the said indictment shows that the alleged contract was 'not to be performed within one year from the making thereof.' It is essential to the validity of said indictment that the alleged contract was in writing, or that the alleged contract was made with defendant as overseer, and in the absence of both of these essential averments it is apparent that the alleged contract was void and illegal, and therefore said indictment is invalid and sets forth no offense against defendant. (6) Specially, because said indictment is fatally defective, in that it fails to allege when said service is to be performed, or within what particular period it was to be performed. It should allege not only when said service was to 'begin,' but when it was to end."

Upon the trial the defendant was convicted. He made a motion for new trial, and now excepts to the order overruling his motion. In the motion for new trial, in addition to the general grounds, it is insisted: (4) That the court erred in admitting the alleged written contract between the defendant and prosecutor, which contract was as follows: "Monticello, Ga., 12, 27, 1906. I, Earnest Harwell, of Jasper county, Ga., formerly of Morgan county, Ga., in consideration of $20.00 advanced to me by M. Benton of Jasper county, Ga., do contract and agree to work for the said M. Benton for the year 1907, do any and all kinds of farm work that may be required of me by the said Benton or his agent. M. Benton agrees to pay the said Earnest Harwell $10.00 per month and one-half of every Saturday. Earnest Harwell agrees to work Saturday evening when called on and is to receive 25 cts. extra for said extra work. Isaah Byrd signs the above contract for security for the $200.00 advanced.

his [Signed] Earnest Harwell. Isaah X Byrd. mark.

his
M. Benton. Witness to contract: Isaah X
mark.

Byrd." In the fifth ground it is insisted that the court erred in permitting the solicitor to ask the witness Allie Isaac, over defendant's objection that the questions and answers were irrelevant, immaterial, and inadmissible: "How old are you? How old were you when you were married? How long had you been married when the defendant was born?" In the sixth ground of the motion, it is alleged that the judge erred in charging the jury as follows: "If you believe from the evidence that defendant had a good and sufficient reason for not performing the services or returning the money advanced under said contract, if you find there was a contract, then you would be authorized to acquit him; but if you believe from the evidence or the statement of the accused that he entered into said contract with the intent of procuring the money and not performing the service, and that he did not have a good and bona fide reason for nonperformance, and that the reason he offers is a mere excuse for the purpose of escaping punishment, then you would be authorized to convict." The seventh and eighth grounds complain of refusals of the judge to charge certain requests submitted by defendant's counsel. The ninth ground insists that the court eliminated from the jury as an element of good faith on the part of the defendant, and as a defense, the evidence that the defendant gave a security on the contract by an additional charge delivered to the jury after they had started to the jury room to consider their verdict, and it is insisted that the additional charge at the time and under the circumstances and in the manner given was hurtful to defendant. The tenth ground of the motion insisted that the judge erred in charging the jury that: "If the defendant had made a false representation as to his age, and this fact might be looked to by the jury in ascertaining the intention of the defendant at the time." The eleventh ground of the motion assigns error in that the judge failed to instruct the jury upon the subject of circumstantial evidence.

It is unnecessary to rehearse the evidence. The evidence in behalf of the state was sufficient to authorize the verdict of guilty, and there was no error in overruling the motion for new trial, unless the rules and instructions complained of were, for the reasons assigned, erroneous.

1. We think the court properly overruled the demurrer. It is necessary for the period of time within which the money may be returned to have expired in order that the legal presumption may arise that the defendant intended to defraud, or that he does not intend to return the money advanced with interest thereon. The contract referred to in the act of 1903 is not one for the repayment of money, but to perform service. Nor was the indictment demurrable, in that it appeared that the contract was made December 28, 1906, and the term of service was for one year beginning January 1, 1907, because contrary to the statute of frauds. It was unnecessary to state in the indictment that the contract was in writing. It would be presumed to be in writing unless the contrary appears. And by the language used in the indictment, "did contract with one, M. Benton," and "after having so contracted procured," etc., applying the language of the act, it could only be understood that the contract was in writing. Nor was the indictment demurrable upon the ground that it failed to allege when the service was to be performed. It is undoubtedly true that indictments brought under this act must allege when the service is to be performed or within what particular period it was to be performed, but there was nothing vague or doubtful in the statement of the indictment that the service was for the period of "one year, beginning January 1, 1907." This would necessarily mean from January 1, 1907, to December 31, 1907, inclusive.

2. Our ruling on the fifth ground of the demurrer disposes of the fourth ground of the motion for new trial. If the language of the act requires that the word "contract" be considered as referring to a writing, then not only was there no error in admitting the writing to which objection was made in the fourth ground, but the state's case would have failed unless the contents of the contract had been proved, and the writing itself is the best proof of what it contains. The fact that Isaah Byrd was security on the contract, and that the contract showed credit indorsed thereon, would not affect the admissibility of the evidence as showing a contract to have been made between the defendant and the prosecutor. It might affect the result of the trial.

3. We find no error in the charge complained of in the sixth ground. The objection made to it was that it intimated an opinion; that the reason offered by the defendant for nonperformance was not a good and bona fide reason, and tended to discredit the defense set up by the defendant. It is plain that all that the judge said as to the defense being a mere excuse for the purpose of escaping punishment, or that it was not a good and bona fide reason for not performing the contract, is qualified, limited, and controlled by the words "If you believe from the evidence."

4. The charge requested in the seventh ground is a correct presentation of principles applicable to the cause on trial, and should have been presented to the jury. But the judge is not required to present the charge in the verbiage or connection of the request. His instruction to the jury upon each of the subjects contained in the request being clear, full, and explicit, there was no error in not presenting the request in its exact language.

5. The judge properly refused to charge that: "If the jury believe from the evidence that M. Benton took Isaah Byrd as security on said contract, and that he looked to Isaah Byrd for the payment of the money in the event the defendant failed and refused to do so, you could not legally convict the defendant." As remarked before, the purpose of the contract was to perform service. It would be immaterial whether the money were paid back or not, if the service were performed. If the service was not performed, it would still be immaterial, if it were apparent that the defendant intended at the time of procuring the money not to perform the service, unless in fact the money was returned before prosecution. Certainly it does not follow that, because the prosecutor took security for money advanced to the defendant on the faith and representation of the defendant to do certain work, for this reason the defendant could not have had the intention to cheat and swindle the prosecutor by not working, as he contracted to do, it is possible that he might have both intended to cause the security to lose the money and the prosecutor the labor.

6. The fact that Isaah Byrd was security for the payment of the advancement is immaterial, as we have just remarked, if the defendant did not intend to perform the service he had contracted to perform. Isaah Byrd was security only for the repayment of the advancement. For this reason, there was no error in the charge complained of in the ninth ground of the motion for a new trial. And the charge excepted to is not for any reason erroneous. The fact that the judge recalled the jury after they had started to retire to the jury room is not a circumstance of prejudice to the defendant. The judge had not instructed them one way or the other in the previous charge as to the fact of Isaah Byrd's being security. It was proper that they should be instructed as to this contention, and they were properly instructed after they were recalled.

7. In the tenth ground of the motion, it is insisted that the judge erred in charging the jury that: "If they believe the defendant stated to M. Benton, the prosecutor, at the time said contract was made, that he was 21 years of age, and that he was not 21 in fact, that said false representation as to his age might be looked to by the jury in ascertaining the intent of the defendant at the time." Upon the examination of the record, we find that this instruction was unauthorized by the evidence. Both Benton and Byrd testified that defendant said that he was not 21 at the time the contract was made. The charge contains no intimation of opinion on the part of the judge as to any portion of the evidence, but, because it presents a theory not authorized by the evidence, it is reversible error.

8. As held by this court in the case of Riley v. State,<sup>1</sup> where a conviction depends solely upon circumstantial evidence, the jury could be instructed that the proof offered must not only be consistent with the guilt of the accused, but must exclude every other reasonable hypothesis. In this case, the guilt of the defendant was dependent entirely upon the intent to defraud existent at the time he obtained the advancement. This intent or lack of intent could only be determined by circumstances. So in its essence, the case depended entirely upon circumstantial evidence. The rule of law above stated was absolutely pertinent, and the jury should have been instructed with reference thereto, even in the absence of a request.

Our judgment is controlled by the decision of Howard v. State, 126 Ga. 538, 55 S. E. 239. The trial judge in this case entertained the correct view of the law embodied in Acts 1903, p. 90, as to all of the matters with regard to which complaint is made; but, under the decision above cited, he should have presented to the jury the defendant's defense that he was prevented from performing his contract of labor on account of his minority and the parental control of his mother, and should have instructed the jury that, if they believed that the accused was a minor, and that his failure to perform his contract was due to the mandate of his mother, the presumption of fraudulent intent would be rebutted, and they would be authorized to acquit the defendant.

Judgment reversed.

(2 Ga. App. 663)

BAKER v. STATE (No. 750.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 16, 1907.)

COURTS—FORMER DECISIONS AS CONTROLLING.

This case is controlled by the decisions of this court in Mosely v. State, 58 S. E. 298, and Harwell, alias Isaac, v. State (No. 631, decided October 14, 1907) 58 S. E. 1111, and in the case of Millinder v. State, 124 Ga. 452, 52 S. E. 760. (Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Baxley; J. H. Thomas, Judge.

Alex Baker was convicted of an offense, and he brings error. Affirmed.

Jas. R. Thomas and Jos. A. Morris, for plaintiff in error. V. E. Padgett, for the State.

HILL, C. J. Judgment affirmed.

(2 Ga. App. 623)

BUTLER v. STATE. PETTUS v. SAME. BENSON v. SAME. SIMPSON v. SAME. MARLOW v. SAME. GIBSON v. SAME. (Nos. 660, 661, 662, 663, 664, and 665.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 14, 1907.)

GAMING—OFFENSES—EVIDENCE.

The verdict was fully authorized by the evidence, and no error of law was committed. (Syllabus by the Court.)

<sup>1</sup> 1 Ga. App. 661, 57 S. E. 1081.

Error from Superior Court, Wilkes County; H. M. Holden, Judge.

Charlie Butler and five others were separately convicted of gaming, and they bring error on separate bills of exceptions. Affirmed.

F. H. Colley and Wm. Wynne, for plaintiff in error. D. W. Meadow, Sol. Gen., for the State.

HILL, C. J. Six men were jointly indicted in the superior court of Wilkes county for the offense of gaming. They were tried together, and were all convicted, and their motions for new trial were overruled. The grounds of the motion in each case were similar, and were the statutory grounds and one special ground, the refusal of the court to charge the following written request: "The mere fact that a piece of money was on the table when a game of cards was being played, without some evidence to show that it was being bet or staked on the game, will not authorize a conviction."

1. According to the testimony of an officer of the law, he saw all six of these defendants in the back end of Abe Williams' place of business. These defendants were sitting "around a box, or something like a trunk," and each was playing with cards, and money was on top of the box or trunk partly covered up with a piece of paper. The players were so busily engaged in the game that they did not see the witness until he put his hand on one of the players. This player immediately arose and grappled with the officer, and all the others ran out of the room, in their hasty exit throwing the box, the cards, and the money on the floor. The money was silver money, but the witness could not tell how much there was, but there were several stacks or piles. We think the verdict of the jury was authorized by the foregoing evidence. Hicks v. State, 1 Ga. App. 722, 57 S. E. 958; Pacetti v. State, 82 Ga. 297, 7 S. E. 867. The strong inference of guilt arising therefrom was not weakened by the testimony of each one of the defendants in behalf of the others that they were playing, but were not betting for money or other thing of value. Such denial is not unusual in criminal cases, but is very frequently the protest of guilt, even when caught in the act. Nor do we think the fact that certain reputable citizens bore testimony to the good character of the defendants was sufficient to generate any doubt as against the positive facts clearly indicating guilt. There are a great many excellent people who probably would not permit their good opinion of a man to be affected by the fact that he played cards for money or other thing of value. Many good men classify gaming as malum prohibitum with no element of malum in se.

2. The request to charge stated a truism so manifest and simple that it might reasonably and safely have been left to the ordinary intelligence of the jury without any instructions; but the request itself was fully covered by the general charge, and especially that part in the following language: "I charge you, as requested by defendants' counsel, there is no law in this state which forbids the playing of cards. It is necessary for it to be a crime for money or other thing of value to be staked on the game. Before you can convict the defendants, it must appear that they played for some thing of value."

Judgment affirmed.

(2 Ga. App. 634)

JENKINS v. STATE (No. 687.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 22, 1907.)

1. BURGLARY—VERDICT—EVIDENCE.

The evidence fully authorized the verdict, which was approved by the trial judge, and no reason appears why a new trial should be granted.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 8, Burglary, §§ 104-107.]

2. SAME—STOLEN GOODS—RECENT POSSESSION—CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

Under the evidence disclosed in the record, the jury were authorized to infer that the goods which had been recently stolen, and which were found in the possession of the defendant's wife, had been delivered to her by the defendant, and that the possession of the wife was constructively the possession of the husband, regardless of the marital relation existing between them. The evidence for the state, though entirely circumstantial, excluded every other reasonable hypothesis, save that of the defendant's guilt.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 8, Burglary, § 94.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Terrell County; W. C. Worrill, Judge.

Ed Jenkins was convicted of burglary, and he brings error. Affirmed.

At the November term, 1906, of Terrell superior court, Ed Jenkins was indicted by the grand jury of said court for the offense of burglary, by breaking and entering house and carrying therefrom two pairs of pants of the personal goods of one Ike Barney. The jury returned a verdict of guilty. The defendant made a motion for new trial, and the same was overruled.

The plaintiff in error in his motion for new trial relied upon the general grounds, first, of the verdict being against the weight of the evidence; and, second, because it is contrary to law and the principles of equity. An examination of the evidence in the records shows that Ike Barney's dwelling house was broken open and entered last year while he was at court on Monday, at the fall term of court, and that his house was located in Terrell county, and that, when he left home, he closed his door by a leather latch and nailed it, securely fastening the same; that he was the owner of two pairs of pants, of the value of $8. He testified positively that he saw the pants before leaving home in the morning, and that they were gone when he got back in the afternoon, and that the next place he saw the pants was at Ed Jenkins' wife's home, and that Ed Jenkins was there present at the time the officers went with him there to secure the pants; that he found the pants in Terrell county. The evidence further shows that Jenkins had made an effort to buy the pants from the witness Joe McLendon, but that Ike Barney purchased them before he did. There is further evidence to show that there were tracks about the window corresponding to the track of the shoe about the size which Jenkins wore. The witness McLendon swore that the pants the bailiff found at Jenkins' wife's house were those sold to Ike Barney. The testimony of Lottie Dixon shows that Ed Jenkins was on Monday, the day the pants were stolen, working in the field near the home of Ike Barney, and that he knew Ike Barney had gone to town to attend court. The evidence further shows that Ed Jenkins left the field on that day, and those with whom he was working did not know where he had gone. No theory is suggested by the evidence by which the pants could have reached Ed Jenkins' wife's house as reasonable as that the defendant carried them there, and the recent possession thus shown in him was not explained.

H. A. Wilkinson, for plaintiff in error.
J. A. Laing, Sol. Gen., R. B. Arnold, and J. B. Ridley, for the State.

RUSSELL, J. Judgment affirmed.

(2 Ga. App. 673)

GOODWILL v. PEEPLES. (No. 486.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 22, 1907.)

REPLEVIN—TRESPASSING LIVE STOCK—IMPOUNDING—NOTICE.

Possessory warrant will lie against one who in a stock-law county impounds trespassing live stock and fails within due time to give the statutory notice.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Marion County; Wm. A. Little, Judge.

Action by Jerry Peebles against Eugene Goodwill. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant brings error. Affirmed.

Geo. P. Munro, for plaintiff in error. W. D. Crawford, for defendant in error.

POWELL, J. The hogs of the defendant in error, who was the plaintiff in the court below, strayed into the growing crops of the plaintiff in error in a stock-law county. The latter impounded them, but failed to stray them as required by Pol. Code 1895, § 1775. On the fifth day a brother of the plaintiff, who himself had wrongfully obtained possession of the hogs prior to the time they escaped into the defendant's crop, made an arrangement with the defendant whereby the latter was to retain the hogs till he should pay him the damages. The plaintiff, finding the hogs thus in the possession of the defendant, brought possessory warrant and secured a favorable judgment. The defendant took certiorari, which on hearing in the superior court was overruled, and he now brings error.

The possession of the defendant was originally lawfully acquired, and for three days was lawfully retained. After the third day it became unlawful and criminal. Pol. Code 1895, § 1776. This raises the question whether possessory warrant lies where the defendant's possession is originally lawful, but subsequently becomes unlawful. Such a case does not appear to be within the words of the statute. Civ. Code 1895, § 4799. However, in the case of Meredith v. Knott, 34 Ga. 222, the property came into the defendant's possession peacefully and lawfully, but afterwards "the possession was changed, and that of Meredith was wrongful, tortious, and fraudulent," and, says the court, "in all such cases we hold that a possessory warrant is the proper remedy." In the case of Sheriff v. Thompson, 116 Ga. 436, 42 S. E. 738, the precise question again came before the Supreme Court, which, after citing the case of Meredith v. Knott, and after reviewing all intermediate cases apparently in conflict to that ruling, adhered to the former decision. In that case Justice Little, who in his subsequent capacity of judge of the superior court tried the present certiorari in the court below, dissented. We are inclined to agree with the view then entertained by him, at least to the extent of thinking that such cases are not within the letter of our statute on possessory warrants; and we unhesitatingly agree with him in his present ruling that that decision of the Supreme Court is binding precedent and controlling in this case.

Judgment affirmed.

(2 Ga. App. 641)

AMERICAN SURETY CO. v. WOOD. (No. 237.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 15, 1907.
Rehearing Denied Oct. 23, 1907.)

1. ADMINISTRATORS — BONDS — ACTION — PARTIES.

A suit can be maintained against the surety on an administrator's bond alone, where it appears that the principal, the administrator, is dead, and his estate is unrepresented. The case is not altered if the administrator dies pending the suit. The plaintiff, at his option, may either proceed against the representative of the deceased administrator's estate and the surety jointly, or he may proceed against the surety alone.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 22, Executors and Administrators, § 2541.]

2. SAME—PARTNERSHIP ASSETS—ADMINISTRATION.

In a case where a surviving partner and an administrator are in fact one and the same person, the law presumes that any property rightfully belonging to the administrator has been placed in his hands by such surviving partner. While it is the duty of the surviving partner to first pay all partnership indebtedness, still, whenever all partnership liabilities have been satisfied, if there is a surplus remaining in the hands of such surviving partner and administrator, it becomes subject-matter of administration.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 22, Executors and Administrators, § 295.]

3. SAME—SUPPORT OF WIDOW.

If, after payment of the partnership liabilities, a surplus remains in the hands of the administrator, it is liable for the year's support regularly allowed the widow of the intestate.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 22, Executors and Administrators, § 661.]

4. EVIDENCE—BEST EVIDENCE—ADMISSIONS.

No sufficient reason appears from the assignments of error as to the admission of evidence or the charge of the court that a new trial should be granted.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 20, Evidence, §§ 536, 1135.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Dublin; J. E. Burch, Judge.

Action by W. A. Wood against the American Surety Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant brings error. Affirmed.

T. L. Griner and Jackson & Orme, for plaintiff in error. Jas. B. Sanders, W. C. Davis, and K. J. Hawkins, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. This case has already been to the Supreme Court, and is reported in 121 Ga. 471, 49 S. E. 295. The present defendant in error was then plaintiff in error, and the judgment of the lower court in awarding a nonsuit was reversed upon the express ground that the evidence for the plaintiff was sufficient to take the case to the jury. Wood v. Brown, 121 Ga. 471 (3), 474, 49 S. E. 295. Upon the subsequent trial which is now the subject of review not only was every fact, which appears in the former record, proved, but the plaintiff introduced additional testimony. The defendant surety company also introduced witnesses. In so far as there is a conflict in the evidence the jury have concluded the issue by their verdict, and the only question, therefore, so far as the exception that the verdict is contrary to the evidence is concerned, is: Was the evidence in behalf of the plaintiff sufficient to authorize the verdict? If it was, and if the judge of the city court did not err in permitting the plaintiff to strike the principal and proceed alone against the surety on the bond, the American Surety Company, then the judgment overruling the motion for new trial was right. If it be true either that the court erred in allowing the case to proceed against the surety alone, or that the evidence was insufficient to establish a breach of the bond, then his judgment should be reversed. This summary leaves out of immediate consideration the exceptions taken to the charge of the court which we reserve to a later portion of our decision. Of course, so far as any of the points now involved were determined by the decision of the Supreme Court, they are conclusive, and hence we might perhaps omit any consideration of the sufficiency of the evidence. Upon the same facts as appear in the record now before us, the Supreme Court held, when the case was before them, that the evidence was sufficient to go to the jury, from which it follows that, if such evidence was not rebutted and disproved to the satisfaction of the jury, the plaintiff would be entitled to recover, and for that reason a new trial could not have been granted upon that ground.

1. Counsel for plaintiff in error insists that his motion to dismiss the petition should have been sustained because the action could not proceed against the American Surety Company, the security on the administrator's bond, alone. Since the former trial of this case, as appears from the record, the administrator, R. E. Brown, having died, his death was only suggested of record. So far as appears there was no administration upon his estate, and at the trial the plaintiff announced that he elected to proceed against the surety alone, without making the estate of said R. E. Brown a party to the litigation. The surety company objected thereto and moved to dismiss the suit. The court overruled the motion to dismiss and proceeded with the trial, and the court certified and defendant filed his exceptions pendente lite thereto, as follows, after stating the case: "The death of R. E. Brown, one of the defendants in the above-stated case, the administrator of the estate of A. H. Brown and the principal in the bond signed by the American Surety Company of New York on which this suit is based, having been suggested of record, and the estate of R. E. Brown, deceased, not having been made a party to this action, defendant moved to dismiss the petition of the plaintiff upon the ground that the suit could not proceed against the American Surety Company, surety, which motion the court overruled, to which ruling the defendant, the American Surety Company of New York, hereby excepts, and assigns the same as error, and prays that these, its exceptions, be certified by the court and entered on the minutes."

We find no error in the ruling of the court. Unquestionably, if the administrator had died before the plaintiff had begun his suit, the plaintiff could have instituted his action on the bond against the surety alone, and the right to proceed against the surety alone arises whenever, by the death of the principal on the bond, or the fact that the principal's estate is unrepresented, gives rise to such difficulties, delay, or inconvenience as section 3398 and section 3501, Civ. Code 1895, were expressly intended to prevent. Electing to proceed against the surety alone is the same (certainly in its effect upon such surety in relation to his rights as against the principal) as if the principal had not been joined in the suit in the first instance. This being true, we are of opinion that the exception filed pendente lite is wholly without merit.

The exceptions stated in sections 3398 and 3501, under which the surety may be sued alone, such as the removal of the administrator from the state, his death, or the fact that his estate is without representation, as pointed out by Judge Bleckley in Giles v. Brown, 60 Ga. 658, are recognized and provided for the benefit of the uses or beneficiaries of the administrator's bond, and when the necessity arises the remedy may be applied. Sections 3398 and 5041, Civ. Code 1895. Learned counsel for the plaintiff in error insists that surety on an administrator's bond cannot, in the first instance, be sued alone for its breach; that the principal or his representative must be a joined party defendant. Counsel construed section 3399 as limiting section 3398, and as affording a protection to the surety. To quote from counsel's brief: "Though he may be sued with his principal in the first place in the action, he is entitled still to have his principal's property first exhausted in such an action before his can be levied upon." We hold that section 3398 and section 3399 have no connection with each other, and that each is applicable to a different state of facts. The first section is as follows: "The administrator and his sureties shall be held and deemed joint and several obligors, and may be sued as such in the same action, and if the administrator is beyond the jurisdiction of this state, or is dead, and his estate unrepresented, or is in such position that an attachment may be issued against him, the sureties, or any one or more of them, may be sued. No prior judgment, establishing the liability of the administrator for a devastavit by him, shall be necessary before suit against the sureties on the bond." The purpose of this section is merely to deal with the relation of the principals and surety on the bond as it affects those entitled to its protection. It puts principal and surety in the same class (as joint obligors), and then under certain circumstances virtually applies the rule of section 5041. Section 3399 is as follows: "In all cases of judgments recovered against the administrator and his sureties, the execution issued shall be first levied on the property of the principal, and no levy shall be made on the property of the sureties until there is a return of nulla bona as to the principal, unless the plaintiff in fi. fa. shall file with the levying officer an affidavit that the surety is actually removing or secreting his property so as to avoid the payment of such judgment." Manifestly it applies only to those cases where (the principal not having died, or his estate being represented, or not having subjected himself to attachment or not having left the state) the plaintiff was compelled to sue the principal and surety together and has obtained judgment against both. In such a case it provides that the effects of the principal shall be exhausted before the surety can be attacked. Section 3399 is for the benefit of the surety, as against his principal. It has no reference to the plaintiff. Section 3398 is for the benefit of the plaintiff in the action on the bond. It is not concerned with lightening the burden the surety has assumed.

2. The court properly refused to direct a verdict for the defendant. Indeed, to have done so would have been manifestly erroneous. The evidence for the plaintiff, in any view of the case, showed the receipt by the administrator of assets in excess of his disbursements.

3. Exception is taken in the second ground of the motion to the admission of testimony of Judge Wood, to the effect that R. E. Brown had made returns as administrator, and that these returns were filed, but were withdrawn; the objection being that the entries thereon were the best evidence as to whether or not returns were made to the court and then withdrawn. The facts that the returns were filed and withdrawn, if true, were substantive facts, even if it had not appeared from the evidence without contradiction that the returns were withdrawn by counsel of record for plaintiff in error and were presumably in his possession.

4. The objection to the testimony to the effect that a witness had bought a horse from the principal on the bond, but that said principal, R. E. Brown, had told him that the horse was the property of A. H. Brown, and that he paid $40 of the purchase price to R. E. Brown after the death of A. H. Brown, was properly overruled. The objection urged is that the statement of R. E. Brown, the principal on the bond, made prior to the death of his intestate and before giving the bond of the American Surety Company, is not admissible to charge the security. In our opinion it was certainly competent for the plaintiff to prove by the admissions of R. E. Brown that the debt due on the horse at the time of A. H. Brown's death was a part of the property of the intestate unaccounted for in the hand of the administrator, whose bond was secured by the obligation of the American Surety Company. Declarations of a person since deceased against his interest, and not made with a view to pending litigation, are admissible in any case. Lumber Co. v. Sirmans, 122 Ga. 297, 50 S. E. 92. This ruling also disposes of several other exceptions in the record.

5. In the fourth ground of the motion objection is made to testimony offered for the purpose of showing the state of the partnership said to exist between R. E. Brown, the administrator, and A. H. Brown, his intestate, the value of the property owned by the partnership, and that said partnership only owed a very small amount of partnership debts. The evidence was objected to on the ground that it was inadmissible because irrelevant and cannot be used to bind the surety; the argument being that the bond was given to cover the liability of R. E. Brown as administrator, and not as surviving partner. We think the court did right in overruling the objection and in admitting the testimony. While it is unquestionably true that the administration of partnership property falls upon the surviving partner, and that it is his duty to first pay all partnership indebtedness, still, whenever the point has been reached that the partnership owes no debts when all liabilities have been satisfied, then the surviving partner should turn over to the administrator the interest of the deceased in the partnership property. In this case, the surviving partner and the administrator being one and the same person, it would be presumed that as soon as the debts were paid the interest of the surviving partner, whatever it might be, would immediately pass to the administrator, be in his hands, and be subject to the year's support of his intestate's widow.

6. The objection to the testimony of W. R. Hudson was properly overruled for the reasons just stated above. This witness testified to an admission of the administrator that the notes and accounts of R. E. and A. H. Brown amounted to between $2,200, and $2,300, and they were worth $1,700, or $1,800. The testimony that the notes amounted to $2,200, in view of the rulings in Adkins v. Hutchings, 79 Ga. 261, 4 S. E. 897 (5), would not have charged the administrator; but the admission of the administrator that these choses in action were worth $1,800 was competent to do so.

7. The sixth ground of the motion for new trial complains of the refusal of the court to give in charge to the jury certain requests submitted by counsel for plaintiff in error. Upon examination of the charge as delivered by the court, we find that these requests, so far as applicable, were submitted to the jury. The latter portion of the first request to charge, in so much as the court was requested to instruct the jury that, "if the administrator came into possession of property, but disposed of it prior to the filing of proceedings for the year's support and the entering of the judgment, no breach of the bond has appeared, and you must find for the defendant," was not a statement of the law. If the administrator in the legal disposition of the property legally and properly disposed of it, then, and only then, could it be said that there was no breach of the bond.

The court did not charge the principle requested by the plaintiff in error that the inventory of the administrator is not sufficient evidence to charge him, and the request to thus charge the jury was properly refused. When this case was before the Supreme Court it was expressly held that "his inventory of assets as belonging to his intestate puts the burden on him to show its incorrectness." This is a distinct holding so far as this case is concerned, but no further, that the inventory is sufficient to make a prima facie case of such assets in his hands as may be shown by the inventory.

8. We find no error in the extract from the charge complained of which would authorize the grant of a new trial. In the brief of learned counsel of plaintiff in error our special attention is directed to the following sentence of the charge: "If you should find that this was partnership property that went into his hands, then he had the right to apply a sufficient amount of the property to the payment of the debts of the firm." Counsel complain that this charge "leaves the jury as judge as to whether or not partnership property shall be used in the payment of partnership debts when it is a matter not in their discretion." We do not think the exception as stated is well taken. The judge should have told the jury that it was the duty of the administrator to apply a sufficient amount, etc., instead of instructing them that "he had the right to apply," etc. The charge seems to leave it discretionary with the surviving partner (who was also administrator) as to whether he paid the partnership debts first and would be subject to that objection. But a minor error in the charge would not require the grant of a new trial in a case where the verdict rendered is demanded by the evidence. The judge very inaptly told the jury in effect that the surplus, after paying A. H. Brown's one-half interest due on the debts, might be subject to the year's support. But we think it was clear to the jury, as it is to us, that as the property was jointly owned by R. E. and A. H. Brown, and as the inventory was a return of A. H. Brown's half interest in the partnership property, the jury were not misled by this expression. Indeed, when it is considered, in connection with the other portions of the charge the jury could not fail to understand that what the judge really meant was that deducting from A. H. Brown's half interest in the partnership assets whatever might be one-half of the total indebtedness of the firm, after all the debts were paid, would enable them to ascertain as to whether there was really any surplus of A. H. Brown's undivided one-half interest remaining in the hands of the administrator. The legal calculation would be to take the assets of the partnership as a whole, deduct all of the indebtedness as a whole, divide the remainder, if any, by two, and the result would be the surplus, subject to the widow's year's support. Yet, as a matter of mathematics, the result reached in dollars and cents would be exactly the same.

We have carefully reviewed the entire evidence, and have no hesitation in saying that the jury would have been authorized (under the admissions of the administrator, the evidence submitted as to the value of his intestate's property, deducting every credit proved by the defendant surety to find a greater surplus in the hands of the administrator, placed there after the payment of every partnership debt which the evidence disclosed) to have found the surety liable for a larger amount than the verdict rendered.

Judgment affirmed.

(3 Ga. App. 684)

WOLFE v. STATE. (No. 658.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 22, 1907.)

HOMICIDE—SHOOTING AT ANOTHER—EVIDENCE.

The trial was fair, the charge unexceptionable, and the verdict supported by the evidence. (Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Worth County; W. N. Spence, Judge.

Tom Wolfe was convicted of shooting at another, and he brings error. Affirmed.

Payton & Hay, for plaintiff in error. W. E. Wooten, Sol. Gen., for the State.

POWELL, J. The defendant was indicted for assault with intent to murder, and convicted of the offense of shooting at another. We have carefully examined the entire charge of the court, to which many exceptions were taken in the motion for a new trial, and we are struck with its clearness and its fairness. Of all the charges which it has been our pleasure and duty to review since we have been in this service, we have not noted any which excels this one in these cardinal particulars. Indeed, in light of the evidence, as shown in the record, the verdict as rendered is a testimonial to the skill of counsel for plaintiff in error as trial advocates; for the evidence of the defendant's guilt of the higher crime of assault with intent to murder is almost overwhelming. In fact, the state of the evidence is almost, though not quite, such as to make the verdict of shooting at another unjustifiable under the principles of the Kendrick Case, 113 Ga. 759, 39 S. E. 286. We have examined all the exceptions made in the record. Since they present no new questions of law, it will be profitless to set them out at length.

No good ground for disturbing the verdict is shown, and the judgment refusing a new trial is affirmed.

(2 Ga. App. 678)

HIXON v. CALLAWAY, Sheriff. (No. 501.)
(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 22, 1907.)1. SHERIFFS—RULES—ANSWER—TIME.

Rules against officers of court for breaches of duty are not within the purview of statutes regulating defaults under ordinary procedure by petition and process. The court, in its discretion, may allow the officer to make answer at any time before the rule is made absolute.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 43, Sheriffs and Constables, § 288.]

2. SAME—FAILURE TO LEVY—INJURY—PRESUMPTION—DEFENSES.

Whenever an execution is placed in the hands of a levying officer with direction to levy the same (the defendant being in possession of property), and he fails to make the money within the time prescribed by law, the law presumes injury to the plaintiff in fi. fa. The officer may successfully defend against a rule brought by showing that despite the defendant's possession of the property there was outstanding in a third person a title thereto superior to the plaintiff's judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 43, Sheriffs and Constables, §§ 267-271, 290.]

3. CHATTEL MORTGAGES—JUDGMENT—LIEN—PRIORITY—GROWING CROPS.

The lien of a judgment duly recorded on the general execution docket is, after the maturity of a growing crop of the defendant in fi. fa., superior to the title thereto obtained through a bill of sale, to secure a debt executed by the defendant in fi. fa. to a third person after the judgment is recorded, but before the crop is mature.

(a) The act of December 21, 1899 (Laws 1899, p. 78), providing that mortgages given to secure supplies necessary to make a crop shall be superior to older judgments, does not include within its purview bills of sale given to secure such supplies.

(b) It appearing in this case that the defendant in fi. fa. was in possession of a mature crop sufficient in amount to pay off the judgment of the plaintiff in fi. fa., and that this fi. fa. was placed in the hands of the sheriff with directions to levy, and, the excuse of the sheriff for not levying being the existence of a bill of sale to secure a debt executed by the defendant to a third person subsequently to the recording of the plaintiff's fi. fa. on the general execution docket, the court erred in not making the rule against the sheriff absolute.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Washington; S. H. Hardeman, Judge.

Rule by J. W. Hixon against J. W. Callaway, as sheriff, to compel the latter to show cause why he did not levy a fi. fa. on certain property pointed out to him by plaintiff as the property of the execution debtor. From a judgment discharging the rule, plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

W. A. Slaton and J. W. Hixon, for plaintiff in error. F. H. Colley and Wm. Wynne, for defendant in error.

POWELL, J. The plaintiff in error, Hixon, had a judgment against Henry Tunnell dated April 15, 1906, on which execution was issued April 19, 1906, and recorded on general execution docket May 7, 1906. In the fall of 1906 he placed the execution in the hands of the defendant in error. Callaway, then sheriff of Wilkes county for levy. He pointed out certain mules and a crop in the possession of the defendant in fi. fa. to be levied on. The sheriff failed to levy, and at the January term, 1907, Hixon brought petition for rule against him. The judge issued the rule requiring the sheriff to answer instant; and this was served upon the sheriff. The sheriff did not answer until April term of the court; but no rule absolute was taken. At the April term of the court the sheriff answered substantially that he had not levied because the defendant in fi. fa. had no property subject to levy. The plaintiff moved to strike the answer because it was not filed at the first term. The court overruled the motion, and this ruling is the basis of an exception in the record. The plaintiff traversed the answer and evidence was introduced. There was undisputed evidence that the mules were not subject, and the plaintiff abandoned any claim as to these. As to the crop, it appeared that the defendant in fi. fa., as a tenant of one Carlton, made crops in the year 1906 of greater value than the plaintiff's fi. fa. On May 19, 1906, to secure the necessary supplies in the sum of $250, he executed to the Tyrone Mercantile Company a bill of sale to the growing crop. This bill of sale was recorded May 30, 1906. On account of this bill of sale the sheriff declined to levy. The court upon the hearing discharged the rule, and the plaintiff in fi. fa. brings error.

1. As to the exception that the court erred in not striking the answer of the sheriff because it was not filed at the first term, we hold that the court did not abuse its discretion. Rules against officers are sui generis, and are governed more largely by the discretion of the court in each particular case than by the technical rules of ordinary procedure. In an ordinary action begun by petition and process the judge would not have had the power to allow the belated answer filed. Beacham v. Kea, 118 Ga. 406, 45 S. E. 398; Dodson Printers' Supply Co. v. Harris, 114 Ga. 966, 41 S. E. 54. But rules against officers are not within the purview of these statutes regulating defaults. Holcombe v. Dupree, 50 Ga. 336; Wakefield v. Moore, 65 Ga. 268. While the court might have made the rule absolute at the first term for failure of an answer, yet, not having done so, he had the right to allow the answer to be filed subsequently. See Brantley Co. v. Southland, 1 Ga. App. 806, 57 S. E. 960.

2. "Whenever an execution is placed in the hands of an officer for collection, and he fails or neglects to collect it in the time prescribed by law, the law presumes that the plaintiff was injured; and, upon a rule against the officer to show cause why he should not be attached for contempt, the burden is upon him to show that the plaintiff was not injured." Reeves v. Parish, 80 Ga. 222, 4 S. E. 768. The plaintiff makes a prima facie case for the full amount of his judgment by showing that a valid execution was placed in the hands of the sheriff for levy, and that the defendant in fi. fa. was in possession of sufficient property to satisfy it. The sheriff may successfully defend by showing that, despite the defendant's possession of the property, there was a title thereto paramount to the plaintiff's judgment outstanding in a third person. Brannon v. Barnes, 111 Ga. 850, 36 S. E. 689; Wilkin v. American Freehold Land Mortg. Co., 106 Ga. 182, 32 S. E. 135. The measure of liability is the actual injury sustained by the plaintiff in fi. fa.

3. This brings us to the question whether the bill of sale of the Tyrone Mercantile Company was superior to the plaintiff's judgment. In point of time both of actual creation and of record the judgment was superior. Ordinarily this would make a case where the outstanding title would not be paramount to the plaintiff's judgment, and would therefore not afford a defense to the sheriff upon the rule. However, two reasons are set up why this rule does not apply. The first is based upon the act of December 21, 1899 (Laws Ga. 1899, p. 78), which provides that "the lien of mortgages on crops, which mortgages are given to secure the payment of debts for money, supplies and other articles of necessity, including live stock, to aid in making and gathering such crops, shall be superior to judgments of older date than such mortgages." Since the Tyrone Mercantile Company did not take a mortgage, which is a mere lien, but a bill of sale, which passes title, the statute is not applicable. As Justice Lamar, in the case of Franklin v. Callaway, Sheriff, 120 Ga. 383, 47 S. E. 970, says: "this act is limited in its application. * * * The solitary provision is that such mortgages for supplies shall take priority over older judgments." In many respects bills of sale to secure debts are similar in effect to mortgages; but in other cardinal features they are totally different. The existence of such a bill of sale when superior to the judgment prevents levy of the fi. fa. until the amount of the debt due on the bill of sale is paid or tendered. Shumate v. McLendon, 120 Ga. 396, 48 S. E. 10 (5, 6, 9); Civ. Code 1895, § 5433. The existence of a mortgage, although superior to the judgment, as to rank of the respective liens, does not prevent the levy of the fi. fa.; and indeed (to follow the analogy of Prince v. Walker, 1 Ga. App. 282, 58 S. E. 61), would not be a sufficient answer by the officer when ruled for failure to levy; although after the levy and sale the mortgagee might take the money on a rule to distribute.

The other contention is based upon Civ. Code 1895, § 5425, which provides: "No sheriff or other officer shall levy on any growing crop of corn, wheat, oats, rye, rice, cotton, potatoes, or any other crop usually raised or cultivated by the planters or farmers of this state, nor sell the same, until such crop shall be matured and fit to be gathered: provided this provision shall not prevent any levying officer from levying and selling crops as heretofore practiced in cases where the debtor absconds or removes from the county or state, or from selling growing crops with the land." It is contended that, since the crop was not mature at the date of the execution of the bill of sale, it was not subject to levy; and that, therefore, the lien of the judgment did not attach. Application of general legal principles to cases respecting growing crops has given courts and law commentators no little trouble. Indeed we are prepared to indorse heartily the frank confession of Chief Justice Simmons in the case of Bagley v. Columbus Southern Ry. Co., 98 Ga. 631, 25 S. E. 638, 34 L. R. A. 286, 58 Am. St. Rep. 325, when, after reviewing a mass of decisions of courts and statements of text-writers, he notes the hopeless confusion, and says: "Any one wishing to further entangle himself in the mystic maze of uncertainty and contradiction in which the law governing growing crops has become involved may profitably direct his attention to the legion of cases cited by the various text-writers to whom we have above referred. The field thus open to him is promising even unto distraction." For some of the confusion of opinion existing in this state the decision in Scolley v. Pollock, 65 Ga. 339, must be held responsible. In that case the plaintiff held an old judgment. The defendant in fi. fa. sold his crop before maturity to the claimant, who took possession and cultivated it to maturity, and the court held that the crop was not subject to the fi. fa., which antedated the purchase. The headnote in that case is in the following language: "Cotton in the field, not matured, as early as the 28th day of July, is not the subject of levy and sale, and therefore the purchaser of the crop in its then condition from the defendant in execution obtains a good title." In the body of the decision, the court, after stating the facts, cites and sets out the Code section above, and immediately thereafter quotes from the case of Pitts v. Hendrix, 6 Ga. 455, as follows: "By law the growing crop could only be sold separately after maturity. Before maturity of the crops they are appurtenant to the land, constitute a part thereof, and pass by and with the land." And then further says: "Before maturity, the crops only constitute an element of value, and are not themselves distinct chattels." And then, by what seems to be a glaring non sequitur, holds as we have just shown in the quotation from the headnote of the case. It seems clear to us that, while the statute postpones the time of levy, it does not prevent the lien of the judgment attaching in the meantime. If for lack of "corporeal status competent for seizure," no lien can attach; for the same reason delivery, which is essential to a complete sale, would seem to be precluded. This and other apparent inconsistencies resulted in this case being brought under review by the Supreme Court in the case of Phillips v. Dean, 76 Ga. 10. After distinguishing the case from the one then at bar, the court says: "We were asked to review that case, but it is unnecessary, as we think it differs widely from this. Some of the principles therein expressed, however, are doubted, and will hardly be extended beyond the facts therein, or similar facts to them." The Supreme Court having left the case of Scolley v. Pollock, supra, thus doubted, limited, and partially disapproved, we will treat it likewise. The present case, as well as the case of Phillips v. Dean, supra, is distinguishable from that case by reason of the fact that the defendant in fi. fa. there delivered possession of his inchoate property to the claimant, who by his cultivation brought it to maturity. Possibly in such cases the title of the purchaser should be superior to the lien of the judgment until he has been paid for the labor and expense incurred by him in bringing the crop to maturity, and that equitable procedure would be necessary to subject the inchoate interest formerly possessed by the defendant in fi. fa. In the case at bar no such state of facts exists. The opening sentences of Chief Justice Bleckley in the opinion in the case of Green v. Franklin, 86 Ga. 360, 12 S. E. 585, while excluding the decision of the question as not being in the case before him, bear an undercurrent of intimation that the lien of a judgment is superior to a subsequent sale of an immature crop. It is not necessary, however, to decide what would be the respective rights of the holder of a lien by judgment and of the holder of a bill of sale (whether absolute, or as security for a debt) prior to the maturity of the crop. The question is as to their rights after the crop has been matured by the defendant in fi. fa. While the lien of the judgment may not seize the crops prior to maturity, it ranks as of the date of the judgment, and not as of the date the crop became mature. This is plain; for, if the crop should be seized under two judgments or under a judgment and an ordinary mortgage, we would not, in determining priorities, declare the liens equal on the theory that both attached at the same instant, to wit, the moment the crop became mature, but would look only to their respective dates. The lien of the judgment is enforceable only after the crop is mature; but, under Civ. Code 1895, § 2779, when it is properly entered on the general execution docket, it takes precedence over the interest of all persons (holders of special liens declared superior by statute of course being necessarily excepted) who thereafter "may have acquired a transfer or lien binding the defendant's property." It follows that Hixon's judgment was superior to the bill of sale of the Tyrone Mercantile Company; and that the court erred in discharging the rule against the sheriff.

Judgment reversed.

(3 Ga. App. 686)

SHERMAN v. STATE. (No. 699.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 22, 1907.)

1. ARREST—WARRANT—EXECUTION—FUNCTUS OFFICIO.

Where a warrant was placed in the hands of an officer of the law for execution, and subsequently the person against whom the warrant issued voluntarily appeared for commitment trial before the magistrate who issued the same, the officer having such warrant in his possession also being present, and the magistrate thereupon continued the case and allowed the defendant to go at large on his personal recognizance, such voluntary appearance of the defendant was tantamount to an arrest, and such disposition of the case by the magistrate constituted satisfaction of the warrant, and it became functus officio, and any subsequent arrest thereunder was illegal.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 4, Arrest, § 178.]

2. ARREST—RELEASE ON BAIL—REARREST.

To authorize the rearrest of a defendant for the same offense when he has been lawfully allowed his liberty on his personal bond for his appearance on a certain named day to stand his preliminary trial, a forfeiture of his bond must be duly declared and another warrant for said offense thereupon issued.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 4, Arrest, § 178.]

3. CRIMINAL LAW—EVIDENCE UNLAWFULLY OBTAINED—WEIGHT AND SUFFICIENCY.

The only evidence incriminating the defendant having been obtained by an unlawful search and seizure of his person while he was in custody under an illegal arrest, his conviction was unlawful, and the verdict must be set aside.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 877.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Americus; Chas. R. Crisp, Judge.

Ed Sherman was convicted of carrying concealed weapons, and he brings error. Reversed.

See 58 S. E. 393.

H. B. Simmons, for plaintiff in error.
Zach Childers, Sol., for the State.

HILL, C. J. Sherman was convicted of the offense of carrying concealed weapons, and his motion for a new trial was overruled. The only evidence against the defendant was given by the deputy sheriff into whose custody he had been delivered by the arresting officer and the bailiff who made the arrest. The witnesses testified that while the defendant was in the custody of the deputy sheriff, before he was put in jail, the latter searched him and found a pistol concealed on his person. This testimony was objected to on the ground that the search and seizure of the defendant was unlawful as he was under an illegal arrest, and that he was compelled by an officer of the law to furnish incriminating evidence against himself.

In order to determine this assignment of error, it is necessary to consider the facts and circumstances of the defendant's arrest. It appears from the brief of the evidence in the record that there were several warrants issued against the defendant by a justice of the peace of said county for different offenses; that these warrants had been placed in the hands of the bailiff for execution. Before any of the warrants had been executed by the bailiff, the defendant appeared before the justice who issued said warrants for a preliminary trial, and said justice without a trial allowed the defendant to go at large on his own recognizance until the next term of the court. The bailiff who had the warrants in his possession did not make any formal execution of any of them, but was present and heard the order of the court permitting the defendant to go on his own recognizance. The defendant did not appear at the next term of the court, but the prosecutor, the constable, and the defendant's counsel were present in court, and an agreement was made between them, which agreement was approved by the court, that the defendant should remain at large on his personal recognizance until the court heard from defendant's attorney. Before the court had heard from his attorney, without any order of the court revoking his previous order that the defendant should remain at large on his personal bond, and without any forfeiture of said bond, the bailiff arrested the defendant on one of the warrants issued by said justice and from which the defendant had been released by the order of the justice, discharging him on his own recognizance as above set forth. On the day the bailiff arrested the defendant, he delivered him into the custody of the deputy sheriff of the county, and this officer before putting him in jail, and while having him in such custody, searched his person and found concealed thereon a pistol.

Under these facts, which are not disputed, was the testimony obtained by such search and seizure admissible against the defendant on his trial, for carrying concealed weapons? We think, under the foregoing facts, the arrest of the defendant by the bailiff was illegal. When the defendant appeared before the justice who had issued the warrants against him for the purpose of having a commitment trial, and the bailiff who had the warrants in his possession was also present, this constituted an arrest under said warrants. Courtoy v. Dozier, 20 Ga. 369. It amounted to a waiver of the defendant's right to see said warrant, and was a voluntary surrender thereunder to the court. The court, having legal custody therefore under these warrants, was authorized to hold the commitment trial, or to postpone the trial, and, in the latter event, to require an appearance bond to be executed with or without security. Allowing the defendant to go on his own bond until the next term of the court, and when that day arrived, again postponing the commitment trial and allowing the defendant to remain at large on his own recognizance, rendered the warrant upon which such action was taken by the court functus officio; and the defendant could not thereafter be legally arrested for the offense covered by said warrant until his personal recognizance had been forfeited, and a new warrant issued for said offense. An arrest on a warrant and a bond thereunder satisfies the warrant, and there can be no other arrest thereunder. If a defendant, after an arrest, has been allowed to give bond, such bond must be forfeited, and another warrant issued, before he can be lawfully arrested for the offense covered by the first warrant. The arrest of the defendant, therefore, by the bailiff under the warrant which had become functus by the previous action of the justice, was an unwarranted exercise of authority, and such arrest was illegal. His search and seizure by the deputy sheriff while in his custody by virtue of such illegal arrest was unlawful, and the testimony obtained by such unlawful search and seizure following the illegal arrest was not admissible against him on his trial for carrying concealed weapons, and, these facts clearly appearing from the evidence, such testimony should have been excluded by the court. Hammock v. State, 1 Ga. App. 126, 58 S. E. 66; Hughes v. State (Ga. App.) 58 S. E. 390; Sherman v. State, 2 Ga. App. 48, 58 S. E. 393.

Judgment reversed.

(3 Ga. App. 711)

BONNER v. STATE. (No. 733.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 22, 1907.)

1. INTOXICATING LIQUORS—WRONGFUL SALE—EVIDENCE.

On a trial for the unlawful sale of spirituous liquors, evidence that the accused had on several occasions received packages or boxes through the express office, with physical marks thereon indicating that their contents was whisky, is relevant and admissible.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 29, Intoxicating Liquors, §§ 293, 295.]

2. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS.

The charge of the court upon which error was assigned was objectionable for the reasons stated in the opinion.

3. CRIMINAL LAW—VERDICT—EVIDENCE.

A verdict wholly unsupported by any evidence must be set aside as contrary to law.

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Early County; W. C. Worrill, Judge.

Davis Bonner was convicted of selling whisky in prohibition territory, and he brings error. Reversed.

Park & Collins, for plaintiff in error. J. A. Laing, Sol. Gen., R. R. Arnold, and J. B. Ridley, for the State.

HILL, C. J. Davis Bonner was convicted of the offense of selling whisky in Early county, where the sale of spirituous liquors is prohibited by law. His motion for a new trial being overruled, he brings the case to this court.

Error is assigned upon the ruling of the court in admitting, over the objection of the defendant, the following testimony: "That on several occasions packages or boxes had come through the express office addressed to Davis Bonner, and on looking through the cracks of the boxes bottles were seen that looked like they might be quarts of whisky; that on two different occasions the defendant, Davis Bonner, had carried from the express office two large boxes weighing about 60 lbs., having printed thereon 'Seventy-two half pints White Oak Whisky, Chattanooga.'" We think the testimony was admissible as against the objection that it was irrelevant and immaterial, while it was not a violation of law to purchase whisky outside of the county and ship it thereto, yet, where the defendant is charged with selling whisky in the county in violation of the statute, evidence that he was receiving whisky was a relevant fact in connection with the charge. Considered alone, of course, it would not be sufficient and would have to be supplemented by evidence showing that a sale had been consummated in the county by the defendant.

The following charge we think is justly assigned as error: "If you believe, gentlemen of the jury, that the defendant, Davis Bonner, received of Dock Knight money and went off and in a short time returned and furnished Dock Knight with whisky, that would make him guilty, unless he has given the jury satisfactory information as to how he got the whisky, and that his connection therewith was lawful." We think that these facts would be evidence of more or less probative value to be determined by the jury. But the charge that this fact "would make him guilty," even if unexplained by him, expresses too strongly the inference arising from said facts. This charge leaves out of consideration entirely that the money must have been given by the defendant to Dock Knight for the purpose of buying whisky, which he subsequently delivered to him. The case relied upon by the solicitor general in support of this charge is Billups v. State, 107 Ga. 766, 33 S. E. 659. In that case, the Supreme Court said, in substance, that if the state proved by a witness that he (the witness) had given the accused money with which to buy whisky, and that the accused was absent about half an hour, and when he returned he brought back a bottle of whisky and delivered it to the witness, that this made out a prima facie case for the state; but the important fact that the money must have been given by the witness to the accused for the purpose of buying whisky is entirely omitted from the charge complained of.

The most serious objection to this verdict, however, is that there is no evidence in the record which in any measure gives it support. The only fact proved by the state was that a witness had given the accused 25 cents for the purpose of going to the express office and getting a package of whisky for him, paying the express thereon with the 25 cents, and that subsequently the party who gave the 25 cents to the accused for this purpose went to the house of the accused and got this whisky. The witness who testified to this fact was introduced by the state, and his testimony is as follows: "I saw Davis Bonner down about the store of Rob Knight, and handed him a quarter, and told him to go down to the express office and get me a package of whisky, and that day when I started hunting I went by Davis Bonner's house, and he handed it to me; that is, the bottle of whisky. I never paid Davis Bonner for the whisky, but I bought it myself from the Albany Whiskey House in Albany, Ga. Davis Bonner never sold it to me, but I gave him a quarter to go to the express office and get it for me and pay the express on it." Another witness for the state testified that he saw the witness who had testified about giving the 25 cents to the accused, go into the house of the accused when he started out hunting and come back with a bottle of whisky. This is all the testimony in the record except that mentioned in the first part of this opinion, that the accused had received express boxes at the express office indicating that they contained whisky, and it is clearly insufficient to prove the defendant's guilt. The verdict is therefore set aside, and a new trial ordered.

Judgment reversed.

(2 Ga. App. 675)

HINES v. McCOMBS et al. (No. 495.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 22, 1907.)

1. LIFE ESTATES—RIGHTS OF LIFE TENANT—LEASES—DURATION.

One who by will is made not only the devisee of a life estate in the lands of the testator, but is also made executor of the will and trustee of the fee, and is given full power of disposition as to all property, real, personal, or mixed, to the end that an income may be derived for the support of himself and children, may lawfully execute a lease of reasonable duration upon the lands of the estate, and such a lease will not expire upon his death, even though it occur before the last year of such lease.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 33, Life Estates, § 47.]

2. SAME—RENT NOTES—RIGHTS OF REMAINDERMEN.

In such a case the executor or trustee may transfer to another by assignment the rent notes taken as consideration for the lease, and the rights of the transferee in the rents will be superior to that of the remainderman, even after the death of the life tenant.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 33, Life Estates, § 47.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Baldwin County; H. G. Lewis, Judge.

Action by J. R. Hines against J. W. McCombs and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, plaintiff brings error. Reversed.

Isabella Hendrix died leaving a will. So far as they are material to this controversy, the provisions of the will are substantially as follows: Her husband, H. E. Hendrix, is appointed executor and trustee, and in both capacities he is relieved from accountability to any court for his conduct. To said trustee, H. E. Hendrix, is devised all the testator's property, real, personal, and mixed. "Said H. E. Hendrix, as trustee as aforesaid, shall have absolute custody and control of each and all of said property, with power to sell or exchange any part thereof, as a change of investment for the purpose of this will, or to make advancements to our children, in his discretion, to provide for their maintenance and education, then especially to secure a maintenance to and for himself therefrom during his natural life. At the death of the said H. E. Hendrix, trustee, all of said property remaining, or those substituted therefor by exchange, shall be equally divided between my surviving children and their children, per stirpes, having regard to any advancements that may have been made to any."

In pursuance of his power under the will, H. E. Hendrix rented certain of the lands of the estate to Tom Legin for the years 1903 and 1904, and took from Legin a rent note therefor; the note being made payable to "H. E. Hendrix, Ext." On May 15, 1903, Hendrix transferred the note to G. T. Whilden, signing the transfer "H. E. Hendrix, Ext." In August, 1903, Whilden transferred the note to the plaintiff in error Hines. In May, 1903, H. E. Hendrix died. Hines collected the rents from Legin for the year 1903; but in December of that year the latter surrendered the possession to Mrs. McCombs and Mrs. Allen, who were the children of Mrs. Hendrix, and therefore remaindermen under her will, and who had also qualified as administrators de bonis non c. t. a. on her estate. They re-rented the land to Legin for the year 1904. This was done without Hines' knowledge or consent. In the fall of 1904 Legin brought the rent cotton and delivered it to Mrs. McCombs and Mrs. Allen in payment of his rent. Hines caused a distress warrant to be levied on the cotton, and it was resisted by Legin as well as by Mrs. McCombs and Mrs. Allen; their several rights being by a consent arrangement joined in one defense. To a judgment adverse to him Hines brings error.

Hines & Vinson, for plaintiff in error. D. B. Sanford and D. S. Sanford, for defendants in error.

POWELL, J. (after stating the facts as above). Under the will H. E. Hendrix was not only the executor and the holder of the life estate, but he was also the donee of an additional power not ordinarily attaching either to the office of the executor or to the estate of a life tenant. Viewed solely as a tenant for life, he would have possessed the statutory power of control over the entire estate for the purpose of rentals and leases only to the end of the year of his death. See Story v. Butt, 2 Ga. App. 119, 58 S. E. 388. However, a review of the English cases will show that long before the enactment of St. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 25 (from which our section 3093 of the Civil Code of 1895 was adopted), which gives the statutory power to the life tenant of making a rent contract binding to the end of the year of his death, or of the British land settlement acts, which have further extended this power, it was not uncommon for grantors and testators to confer upon life tenants or trustees for life estates the power of making leases which would be binding after the death of the life tenant; and the right of grantors and testators to make the grant of such powers has never been questioned either before or since the passage of the statutes referred to above. Under the will before us, H. E. Hendrix had not only the right to enjoy the estate for life, but also to dispose of any or all of it, and especially to derive an income therefrom; and the remaindermen by express terms of the will took an estate in only the "property remaining" undisposed of at his death. We do not mean to say that, if he had attempted to sell any of the lands, he would not have been compelled to expose it at public outcry under Civ. Code 1895, § 3460; but to rent lands for two years is not to sell them. Hutcheson v. Hodnett, 115 Ga. 990, 42 S. E. 422. The terms of the will in that case are very similar to those of the will now in question, and we quote the headnote there as pertinent here: "A trustee in possession of land, charged with the duty of managing and controlling it and using the income therefrom for the maintenance, support, and education of the beneficiaries of the trust, may grant leases of the same, provided the time fixed for the duration of the leases is not unreasonable, and the amount stipulated to be paid as rental is a reasonably fair compensation for the use of the land for the time specified in the leases; they being otherwise reasonable in their terms." The rent contract between Hendrix and Legin was a valid contract for the full term. We probably should call attention to the fact that in the case just cited the trustee was expressly forbidden to encroach upon the corpus for the purpose of raising income for the maintenance of the beneficiaries, while in the present case Hendrix was expressly authorized to do so. The legal fee stood in him as trustee, and "trustees who have the legal fees in lands may lease them to any extent; the right being incident to the legal estate." 1 Wash. Real Prop. (6th Ed.) 629, cited approvingly in Hutcheson v. Hodnett, supra. Possibly in this state this general statement should be limited to leases under which only a usufruct passes.

The further question that arises is: Did Hendrix have the right to transfer the rent note, which we have just held was lawfully taken by him? This rent note under the law was income. Manget v. Hightower, 63 Ga. 217. He had full power of disposition over the income. The note was not payable to his intestate, but to himself either personally or in his representative capacity. In either event, section 3449 of the Civil Code of 1895, regulating the mode of sale of insolvent papers of estates, is not applicable; but the common-law rule, which gives the trustee power to transfer a paper payable to himself, though taken in his representative capacity, applies. See Thompson v. Thompson, 77 Ga. 697, 8 S. E. 261. If, instead of taking a note, he had been paid in advance in cash for the rents for the full term, he could have spent the cash without accountability. He had a similar right to take a note, instead of cash, and to convert the note into money and use it. The tenant by attorning to the remaindermen could not divest Hines of his lien upon the crops raised on the rented premises.

Judgment reversed.

(2 Ga. App. 704)

GLAZE v. STATE (No. 729.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 22, 1907.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW — INSTRUCTIONS — CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

In a criminal case, where the guilt or innocence of the defendant is wholly dependent upon circumstantial evidence, the jury should be instructed, without request, that the guilt of the accused must be shown to the exclusion of every other reasonable hypothesis.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 1887.]

2. SAME.

The controlling issue in a case must be submitted to the jury with such appropriate instructions as will not only call the attention of the jury to the existence of such issue, but the charge of the court must further contain such clear, apt, and definite exposition of the specific principles of law applicable to the case as will enable the jury to deal with the real issue in the case and to properly decide it; and this is true whether a specific request be made or not.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 1803-1809.]

3. SAME.

Where there is only one defense on which a party relies, failure to instruct the jury as to this defense so specifically that the jury will be not only required to pass upon it, but will be able to do so intelligently under pertinent rules of law and evidence, practically withdraws that defense, and is, in effect, tantamount to directing a verdict.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 1806-1807.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Americus; Chas. R. Crisp, Judge.

Alexander Glaze was convicted of larceny from the house, and he brings error. Reversed.

Shipp & Sheppard and J. A. Hixon, for plaintiff in error. Zach Childers, Sol., for the State.

RUSSELL, J. Plaintiff in error was tried and convicted for the offense of larceny from the house. The evidence showed that Glaze went into the store of E. A. Luke, in the presence of a clerk and a customer who was at that time being waited upon by the clerk, and that he claimed to want to buy a gun. The clerk was busy waiting on the other customer, and Glaze, while in plain view of the clerk, went to the gun rack and took down the gun alleged to have been stolen, and began to examine it, simultaneously speaking to the clerk, who was also the brother of the prosecutor. The clerk was, at that time, cutting off a piece of meat for his customer, and only 10 or 15 feet from the defendant. The clerk, the customer, and the defendant were the only persons in the store. Before the clerk finished waiting on the other customer, a noise was heard on the outside, and a buggy passed. The defendant started out hurriedly, carrying the gun with him, and the clerk called to him to "put down that gun." The buggy which was passing was the buggy of the defendant, which he had previously refused to lend to one of the parties whom he found in the buggy and who was driving away. When the clerk called out, "Put down that gun," the defendant immediately dropped it, or, as he claims, stood it against the store immediately outside the store door and ran on and took possession of his buggy, which was being rapidly driven off by the parties in it.

There was practically but little difference between the state and the defendant as to any of the material facts. The defendant claimed that he set the gun down and pursued the parties who were attempting to carry off his buggy. The state insists that the defendant ran off with the gun and only dropped it because his theft was discovered. The prosecutor immediately pursued the defendant and overtook him before he had succeeded in overtaking his buggy, and when the prosecutor seized the defendant the latter jerked loose, saying he had done nothing, and continued running until he overtook his buggy. It is not necessary to consider the evidence, however, as to the pursuit of the defendant, because his conduct would be just as consistent with the theory that he was trying to overtake his buggy, if he were innocent, as that he was trying to escape, if he were guilty, for he was well known both to the prosecutor and to his brother, the clerk in the store. The only question in the case, therefore, which the jury had to determine, was whether at the time that the defendant went out of the store he had the intention of stealing the gun, or, having only the intention of getting possession of his buggy, he thoughtlessly took the gun with him without any intention of converting it to his own use. The question of the defendant's intention is the only question in the case. It is the paramount, the only, issue. The accusation alleged that "Alex. Glaze on the 20th day of October, 1906, and with force and arms, the house, to wit, the storehouse of E. A. Luke, in said county situate, enter, and having entered, one double-barrel breach loading shotgun of the personal goods of E. A. Luke in the said house then and there found of the value of $15.00, did wrongfully, fraudulently, and privately take therefrom and carry away with intent to steal the same."

The accusation is good under either section 178 or section 182 of the Penal Code of 1895. As the offense is denominated "misdemeanor," it was perhaps intended to be brought under section 182; but, whether brought under section 178 or section 182 there is no allegation that the defendant entered the storehouse with intent to steal. "Larceny from the house is the breaking or entering any house with the intent to steal or after breaking or entering said house stealing therefrom anything of value." Section 178, Pen. Code 1895. Under the statute the offense can be committed in four different ways. It may consist in the breaking a house with intent to steal, provided the offense is not burglary; entering any house with intent to steal; breaking a house and stealing therefrom, where it can be accomplished without entry or entering and stealing. The offense can be stated therefore in more than one way in the accusation, but in this accusation only one method is charged, to wit, that the defendant, after entering the house, carried away the gun with intent to steal it. And if the offense be based upon section 182, the same thing is true, for the state's case as set out in the bill of indictment limited the charge to entering the store and stealing therefrom.

Section 182 of the Penal Code of 1895 defines two classes of larceny from the house and distinguishes them. It says: "Any person breaking and entering any house or building (other than a dwelling house or its appurtenances) with intent to steal, but is detected and prevented from carrying such intent into effect." This is the first class. It is directed against those who break and enter a certain class of houses with intent to steal, but are detected before they succeed in stealing any of the articles therein contained. The section then proceeds in the following language: "Any person breaking or entering any such house or building and stealing therefrom any money, goods, chattels, wares or merchandise or any other article of value shall be guilty of a misdemeanor." Of course, this second division of the section is itself subdivided into thefts where there is a breaking and entering in order to accomplish the theft, and where there is no breaking, but merely an entrance into the building and a theft is accomplished. But in both cases a theft must actually be committed. Under the first portion of section 182, as in the first clause of section 178, where a house other than a dwelling house and its appurtenances is broken and entered with intent to steal, and the offender is detected, he is guilty of larceny from the house, though nothing be taken.

Whether the accusation, therefore, be construed as based upon section 178 or section 182 of the Penal Code of 1895, the state relied for conviction solely upon proof that the defendant, after having entered the store, formed the intent to steal, and upon the sole charge that the gun was carried away with the intent to steal the same. The distance of the asportation would make no difference if the defendant in carrying away the gun intended to steal it. That he dropped the gun, instead of carrying it with him, would afford him no excuse or defense if before he dropped it he had intended to steal it. The intention of the defendant therefore becomes a matter of most paramount importance to be considered by the jury. If the jury should find that he carried the gun out of the store with the intent to steal it, he would be guilty; if, on the contrary, the evidence does not establish this fact, the defendant should be acquitted. The intention is always a material element in the offense of larceny. In this case it is especially material, in view of the fact that the taking was admitted, and the defendant's only defense was that there was no intention to steal it. The defendant's complaint is that not only was his defense practically withdrawn from the jury by the charge of the court, but, further, that the jury should have been fully instructed upon the law on the subject of intent, so as to enable them to intelligently weigh and consider the testimony in the case.

It is also insisted by the plaintiff in error that the verdict is contrary to the evidence. The plaintiff in error insists that the court should have charged the jury the law relative to circumstantial evidence as applicable to the circumstances of the case and to the intention of the defendant at the time of the taking. In his motion for new trial the defendant further contends that there was no issue between the state and the defendant as to the taking or the manner of the taking. The only contested issue being, as to the intention of the defendant at the time of the taking, and the court having failed to charge the jury with reference to intention in this connection, was failure on the part of the court to charge the jury with the law touching the material issue involved in the case. The trial judge, in his charge, made no reference to the subject of intention, other than by quoting section 178, Pen. Code 1895, and giving the following explanatory instruction: "Now, gentlemen of the jury, if you are satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that Alex. Glaze, in Sumter county, at the time alleged in the accusation, wrongfully, fraudulently, and privately took and carried away from the storehouse of E. A. Luke, one double-barrel breach loading shotgun, the property of E. A. Luke, and the gun had any value, with the intent to steal the same, he would have violated the law, and you should find him guilty of the offense charged. On the contrary, if you do not believe this, or if you have reasonable doubt of it, he would not be guilty, and you should acquit him."

We think the complaint of the plaintiff in error is well founded. The charge of the court is correct in so far as it goes, but it does not go far enough. The jury should have been instructed that the intention of the defendant in taking the gun was the matter especially to be considered by them, and, in view of the fact that this could be shown only by circumstantial evidence, the jury should further have been instructed that where the guilt of the defendant was dependent entirely upon circumstantial evidence the guilt of the accused must be shown to the exclusion of every other reasonable hypothesis. Riley v. State, 57 S. E. 1031.<sup>1</sup> There was only one material issue in the case, to wit, whether there was an intent to steal the gun, existing in the mind of the defendant at the time that he carried it away. This issue was not dependent upon the defendant's statement for its existence. It necessarily arose, regardless of the statement from the other evidence in the case, and the jury should have been more fully instructed with reference to this issue, than by mere reference to the intent in the language of the statute. It is not only error to submit to the jury an issue which has no foundation in the evidence, or give instructions which are not applicable to the evidence, or to present a contention which is not urged by the party. It seems to have been uniformly held by the Supreme Court that the omission to submit the controlling issue in the case to the jury was such an error as demanded the grant of a new trial. And such issue must be submitted with such appropriate instructions as will not only call the attention of the jury to the existence of the issue; but the charge of the court must contain such clear, apt, and definite exposition of the specific principles of law applicable to the case as will enable the jury to deal with the real issue in the case and properly to decide it. And this is true whether a specific request be made or not. Where there is only one defense on which a party relies, to fail to instruct the jury as to this defense so specifically that the jury will be not only required to pass upon it, but will be able to do so intelligently under pertinent rules of law and evidence, virtually withdraws that defense, and is in effect to direct a verdict. When the only real contention in a case is only mentioned en passant, and then dismissed, as it were, with a wave of the hand, it is worse than ignored. To use the language of Justice Lumpkin, in Smith v. State, 109 Ga. 485, 35 S. E. 61, the defense is "chilled by judicial oversight or blighted by implied judicial disapproval."

In Railroad Co. v. Voils, 113 Ga. 362, 38 S. E. 819, the Supreme Court granted a new trial solely upon the ground that the judge did not submit to the jury the main defense relied upon by the defendant. In the opinion the court says: "Where the company relies mainly upon one defense, and introduces evidence to sustain it [and the same thing would be true if the evidence introduced by the opposite party sustains it], it is error demanding a new trial to call the attention of the jury to this defense. This is true whether or not he is requested by counsel to do so. Unless the judge charges upon such defense, and thereby calls the attention of the jury to it, the case is not properly tried." It is true that the Voils Case was a civil suit, but, unless the right of personal liberty is inferior to the right of property, the same rule must govern in a case wherein a citizen is charged with crime, especially where the defense is not dependent alone upon the statement of the defendant.

In Central R. R. v. Harris, 76 Ga. 509, the point was made that a plaintiff in error could not use the same exception as that now insisted upon in the present case, because "he did not call the attention of the court below to the omission of which he now complains"; but Chief Justice Jackson, reviewing all of the former decisions of the Supreme Court, says: "The cases cited, and the principles on which they rest, do not apply to the clear omission to notice in the charge a plain defense of the company arising out of the evidence so as not to escape the observation of the judge. * * * The courts will not allow a party to lie in wait for the judge when he charges substantially the law of the case, and then object to the insufficiency of a part of it; but in every case the law of it must be given in substance to the jury, because, if it is not given, the general verdict they give is not upon the law of the case, but on facts without instructions on the law of the case. The ship is at sea without chart or pilot, and can never reach the port to which it is bound without their guidance. The verdict can never be a legal verdict unless instructions on the law of the case be given by him who presides for that purpose." 76 Ga. 510. See, also, 76 Ga. 511, citations. The judgment was reversed, as expressly stated, solely because the charge ignored the defense set up by the defendant.

In view of the fact, as it appears from the record, that the defendant had and could not have any other defense other than that his taking (which was admitted) was not with intent to steal, we think that an instruction to the jury to the effect, first, that they should consider what was the intention at the time that he took the gun and carried it out of the store, and that, secondly, unless the jury were satisfied to the exclusion of every other reasonable hypothesis or supposition that when the defendant took the gun, if he took it, he intended to steal it, they should acquit him, was demanded even without request.

<sup>1</sup> 1 Ga. App. 651.

In Horton v. State, 120 Ga. 307, 47 S. E. 969, the judgment was reversed, and it was held that the defendant was entitled to a charge on the subject of manslaughter, although his counsel (so far from requesting that the law of manslaughter be charged) actually insisted at the trial that there was "no manslaughter in the case." Our opinion is further confirmed by the rulings in Phenix Mfg. Co. v. Hart, 112 Ga. 765, 38 S. E. 67; Seymour v. State, 102 Ga. 806, 30 S. E. 263; Mays v. Shields, 117 Ga. 817, 45 S. E. 68; Whelchel v. Electric Ry. Co., 116 Ga. 431, 42 S. E. 776 (3); and Whedon v. Knight, 112 Ga. 642, 643, 37 S. E. 972.

The publicity of the taking, the delay of more than two months in beginning the prosecution, and the admission of the prosecutor that negotiations were meanwhile being carried on with reference to the payment of an indebtedness of $150 due him by a brother-in-law of the defendant, as well as the undisputed fact that one of the main witnesses for the state had settled with the prosecutor for a stolen gun and had never been prosecuted for the theft, render us the less reluctant to order a new trial in which the guilt of this defendant, if he be guilty, can be established beyond legal question.

Judgment reversed.

(2 Ga. App. 713)

FOUNTAIN v. CITY OF FITZGERALD.
(No. 734.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 22, 1907.)

DISORDERLY CONDUCT—ELEMENTS OF OFFENSE—POINTING GUN—JURISDICTION.

There was no error in refusing to sanction the petition for certiorari in this case.

(a) That a charge that the defendant pointed a gun at another is included as one of the acts constituting the offense of disorderly conduct under a city ordinance does not subject such accusation to the objection that an offense of which the state has jurisdiction is charged and that the municipal court is for that reason without jurisdiction.

(b) In an affidavit in which it is alleged that the defendant did commit the offense of disorderly conduct by fighting, cursing, using profane language, pointing a gun at one Bullard to intimidate said Bullard, and generally conducting himself in a tumultuous and riotous manner on the streets of Fitzgerald, Ga., the statement that the defendant pointed a gun may properly be included to authorize proof that the defendant acted in a disorderly manner, without in any way affecting the guilt or innocence of the defendant of the offense of pointing a weapon at another, under the terms of section 343 of the Penal Code of 1895.

(c) The demurrer to the accusation was also properly overruled for the reason that the language used with reference to pointing the gun was not sufficient to set forth a violation of section 343 of the Penal Code of 1895, and for that reason could neither create conflict between the authority of the state and municipal courts nor put the defendant twice in jeopardy.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 1270, 1277, 1284.]

(Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from Superior Court, Ben Hill County; U. V. Whipple, Judge.

Charles Fountain was convicted of disorderly conduct by the mayor of the city of Fitzgerald, and from an order of the superior court, refusing a writ of certiorari, he brings error. Affirmed.

O. H. Elkins and McDonald & Quincey, for plaintiff in error. E. W. Ryman, for defendant in error.

RUSSELL, J. The plaintiff in error was found guilty of disorderly conduct by the mayor of Fitzgerald. He then presented a petition for certiorari to the judge of the superior court, who refused to sanction the petition. The order of the judge refusing the issuance of the writ of certiorari is excepted to. The accusation (or, rather, the affidavit, which seems to have taken the place of an accusation) alleged that "Charlie Fountain did, on the 3d day of August, 1907, within the limits of the city of Fitzgerald, commit the offense of disorderly conduct by fighting, cursing, using profane language, pointing a gun at one Bullard to intimidate said Bullard, and generally conducting himself in a tumultuous and riotous manner on the streets of Fitzgerald, Ga., contrary to the good order of the said city of Fitzgerald." The defendant demurred to the accusation, insisting that the portion charging him with pointing weapons at said Bullard set forth no offense against the city ordinances, and that the defendant cannot be tried for same by the mayor, nor fined for the same, for that it sets forth an offense against the laws of the state of Georgia; and, secondly, because the allegation that the acts were to intimidate said Bullard constitutes no offense against the city laws. The defendant also moved to strike that part of the accusation which charged Charlie Fountain with pointing a gun, upon the ground that same was a state offense; and that part of the accusation which charged him with conducting himself in a tumultuous and riotous manner he moved to strike, because it was not specific enough to put the defendant on notice with what he was charged. Both the demurrer and the motion to strike were overruled in the mayor's court. The evidence in behalf of the city established the charge as laid in the accusation, though some of the acts alleged were contradicted by testimony in behalf of the defendant.

We find no error in the judgment of the judge of the superior court in refusing to sanction the certiorari. The errors alleged by the defendant in his petition for certiorari are: (1) That the court erred in overruling the motion to strike certain parts of the accusation. (2) That the court erred in overruling the demurrer. (3) That the finding and judgment are contrary to law, contrary to the evidence, and without evidence to support it. The motion to strike and the de-murrer may be considered together. Thus considered, three objections were made to the accusation: (1) That the offense was not cognizable by the mayor's court of Fitzgerald, because it charged an offense against the laws of the state, the city could not proceed against him, and the ordinance would be void. (2) That the allegation that the acts were to intimidate Bullard constituted no offense against the city laws. (3) That the charge that defendant conducted himself in a tumultuous and riotous manner is not sufficiently specific.

1. (a) The charge made against the defendant was disorderly conduct, and the reference in the accusation to the pointing of a gun does not charge that as a separate offense, but is merely a part of the description of how the offense of disorderly conduct was committed; nor was there any attempt in the accusation to charge more than the one offense of disorderly conduct. Proof of the same act may supply the basis for a prosecution by both municipal and state authorities, and yet the offense may not be the same. An illustration of this is found in the ordinances of many cities in this state, which affix penalties to the keeping of intoxicating liquors for sale, and yet the only evidence of the violation of the city ordinance—the only proof that the liquor was kept for sale oftentimes is—may be testimony showing a sale. It is true that a municipality, without an express and specific legislative grant of authority, cannot deal with any criminal offense which is the subject-matter of the penal statutes of the state. But, while a municipal court could not try A. B. for murder, it could try A. B. for disorderly conduct in murdering C. D., if, in murdering C. D., A. B. disturbed the public peace and tranquility. A safe test to apply is whether the language of the municipal ordinance and of the accusation drawn in pursuance therewith contain the same essentials for the creation of a criminal act as the penal statutes of the state. Judged by this standard, the statement that defendant pointed a gun at Bullard to intimidate him would not sufficiently charge the offense defined in section 343 of the Penal Code of 1895. The fact that a charge that a defendant pointed a gun at another is included as one of the acts committed by the defendant which, considered together, constituted the offense of disorderly conduct under the terms of a city ordinance, will not subject the accusation for disorderly conduct to the objection that an offense against the state, of which the municipal court has no jurisdiction, has been charged.

(b) Nor is there any merit in the second ground of the demurrer, when considered (as it must be for the purposes of the demurrer) in connection with the accusation. Whether a gun or a stick were used, the intimidation of a citizen, in the peace of the state, by the defendant, would properly come within the definition of disorderly conduct; and it is only in the description of the acts constituting the disorderly conduct on the part of the defendant that the language employed is used. The same may be stated of the objection to the accusation that the defendant acted in a tumultuous and riotous manner is not sufficiently specific. Even if it is not specific enough to authorize conviction when considered alone, it is immaterial when considered in connection with the other descriptive averments of the defendant's alleged disorderly conduct, and therefore the error, if any, in failing to strike it, would be immaterial and harmless.

It is insisted that there was no proof of a proper ordinance of the city of Fitzgerald on the subject of disorderly conduct. If there was no such ordinance, it would devolve upon the defendant to show that fact. In Chambers v. Mayor and Council of Barnesville, 89 Ga. 739, 15 S. E. 634, it was held: "There being no ordinance in the record, and no complaint that a sufficient ordinance, if the mayor and council had power to pass it, did not exist, the court will presume that such ordinance did exist." When it was alleged that the defendant committed the offense of disorderly conduct, in the absence of proof to the contrary, the court would presume the passage of a legal ordinance defining, forbidding, and punishing disorderly conduct; and in connection with the other statements in the accusation the averment that the defendant pointed a gun, as has already been stated, may properly be included to authorize proof that the defendant acted in a disorderly manner, without in any way affecting the guilt or innocence of the defendant of the offense of pointing a weapon at another, in the terms of section 343, Pen. Code 1895. In the present case, under the accusation now under consideration, the proof would be limited to whether the defendant pointed a gun at Bullard, as to whether such pointing was for the purpose of intimidating Bullard, and as to whether such intimidation was, under the circumstances, disorderly conduct. As already intimated, however, the allegation with reference to the gun contained in this accusation falls far short of what would be required to be stated in an indictment against the defendant for pointing a weapon at another in the terms of section 343, Pen. Code 1895. For that reason the accusation in the city court could neither create a conflict between the authorities of the state and municipal courts, nor put the defendant twice in jeopardy.

It is insisted that the finding of the mayor was contrary to the evidence, and two points were urged. It is insisted in the first place that there was failure to prove the venue. Though not personally fully concurring in the strictness of the Supreme Court upon the subject of venue as evidenced in the Gosha Case, 56 Ga. 38, the case of Futch v. State, 90 Ga. 472, 16 S. E. 102, the case of Cooper v. State, 106 Ga. 119, 32 S. E. 23, and various other cases which might be cited, this court has more than once followed these decisions, as we are bound to do, in all their strictness; and, if this were a case in which it were necessary to prove that the offense was committed in a definite county in order to give the court jurisdiction, we would be bound by the decisions before cited, and especially the Cooper Case. But inasmuch as the mayor's court of the city of Fitzgerald is confined as to its jurisdiction to the limits of the city, and the testimony of one of the witnesses establishes unequivocally the fact that the defendant was at a certain place "in this city, on the corner of Pine and Sherman streets," there is no trouble whatever about the venue. It is true that the witness and the father of defendant went a few feet away to hold a conference; and, as held in the Gosha Case, this might leave the inference that they, even in that short distance, went outside of the city limits. But the defendant, according to the testimony, who was talking and singing in a loud tone of voice, and attempting, apparently, to get an excuse to shoot the witness; did not move from the spot which was fixed in the testimony as being in the city of Fitzgerald.

The point is also made that the testimony described the date of the offense as August 3d, without fixing the year. The language employed by witness, as all other language, should be given a reasonable intendment. No point was made before the lower court that the evidence showed that the offense, if any, was barred by the statute of limitations, or that it was committed after the accusation. The warrant was sworn out the 5th of August, 1907. From all of the evidence it appears that the transaction was recent; that the difficulty started the previous Saturday afternoon about some costs due for the arrest of a negro. It was plain from the testimony that the origin of the difficulty was in 1907, and consequently no other inference can be entertained but that, when the difficulty itself was testified to have occurred on August 3d, it meant August 3, 1907.

Judgment affirmed.

(2 Ga. App. 663)

THOMAS & McCAFFERTY v. SIESEL.
(No. 304.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 22, 1907.)

1. WRIT OF ERROR—DISMISSAL.

Under the decision of the Supreme Court in the certified case of Lyndon v. Georgia Railway & Electric Company (Ga.) 58 S. E. 1047, wherein former contrary rulings are modified and overruled, the writ of error in the present case is not subject to dismissal.

2. SAME—RECORD.

Where exception is taken to the refusal of the court to allow an amendment to pleadings, the proffered amendment should be set out, literally or in substance, in the bill of exceptions, or attached as a duly authenticated exhibit thereto. This court cannot consider it, if it be brought up in the transcript of record. Walker

v. Equitable Mortgage Company, 114 Ga. 862 (7), 40 S. E. 10.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 2347.]

3. PLEADING—EVASIVE ANSWER—MOTION TO STRIKE.

It is not error for the court to strike on demurrer an ambiguous and evasive answer to a suit on promissory notes. Brinson v. Birge, 102 Ga. 802, 30 S. E. 261.

4. SAME—NON EST FACTUM.

A plea of non est factum is subject to be stricken on demurrer which does not unequivocally deny that the notes sued on are the act and deed of the defendant. Lester v. McIntosh, 101 Ga. 675, 29 S. E. 7.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 7, Bills and Notes, §§ 1514-1518.]

5. PAYMENT—PLEA—REQUISITES.

A plea of payment, which fails to allege when, how, and to whom the payment was made, is properly stricken on demurrer. Wortham v. Sinclair, 98 Ga. 173, 25 S. E. 414; O'Neal v. Phillips, 83 Ga. 556, 10 S. E. 352; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Hart Lumber Co., 2 Ga. App. —, 58 S. E. 316 (3).

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 39, Payment, §§ 144-149; vol. 7, Bills and Notes, § 1535.]

6. BILLS AND NOTES—TITLE OF HOLDER—DEFENSES.

The title of the holder of a note cannot be inquired into, unless it is necessary for the protection of the defendant, or to let in a defense which he seeks to make. Civ. Code 1895, § 3698.

7. PLEADING—MOTION TO STRIKE.

Where, in an answer by paragraphs to a petition bringing suit on promissory notes, the defendant makes, in answer to one of the paragraphs, a general denial of the indebtedness, but such answer nowhere sets up any legal defense, the answer is properly stricken on demurrer. Johnson v. Cobb, 100 Ga. 139 (2), 28 S. E. 72. (Syllabus by the Court.)

Error from City Court of Macon; Robt. Hodges, Judge.

Action by Thomas & McCafferty against S. Siesel, as survivor, etc. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff brings error. Affirmed.

Roland Ellis, Richard Curtt, Anderson, Felder, Rountree & Wilson, for plaintiff in error. Nottingham & Cabaniss, for defendant in error.

POWELL, J. Judgment affirmed.

(2 Ga. App. 665)

NATIONAL SURETY CO. OF NEW YORK
et al. v. MEDLOCK. (No. 478.)

(Court of Appeals of Georgia. Oct. 22, 1907.)

1. BANKRUPTCY—DISCHARGE—LIBEL.

A liability on account of a libel is not released by a discharge in bankruptcy.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 6, Bankruptcy, § 787.]

2. CORPORATIONS — DISSOLUTION — BANKRUPTCY.

A corporation is not dissolved by an adjudication that it is bankrupt.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 12, Corporations, § 2388; vol. 6, Bankruptcy, § 142.]

ment proceeding, sued out within four months of the adjudication in bankruptcy against the defendant in the main suit, which was an action upon a debt from which a discharge in bankruptcy would be a release. In that case the court held that, the original action being founded on a debt dischargeable in bankruptcy, no judgment could be rendered against the defendant in the main action, and that, the lien of the garnishment upon the funds in the hands of the garnishee having arisen within four months prior to the adjudication in bankruptcy, no judgment could be had upon the answer of the garnishee without working a preference under the bankruptcy act; hence, neither of the two preliminary judgments essential to a judgment on the dissolving bond being obtainable, the third or final judgment, necessary to fix the liability of the surety on the bond, could not be rendered. A very exhaustive discussion of the garnishment proceedings of this state appears in that case. The gist of the decision is contained in this extract: "The liability of the surety on the dissolving bond is not altered by the discharge of the bankrupt defendant, but the discharge prevents the happening of the contingency on which liability depends." The decision of our Supreme Court in the case of Odell v. Wooten, 38 Ga. 225, to the same effect, is quoted approvingly. Compare Phillip Carey Co. v. Viaduct Place, 1 Ga. App. 707, 58 S. E. 274.

In the case at bar the contingency on which the liability of the surety depends has happened. Judgment has been regularly obtained both against the defendant in the main action and against the fund impounded by the garnishment; and, as the court says in the Klipstein Case, the liability of the surety is not altered by the bankruptcy of the principal. See Bankr. Act, § 16. The judgment against the surety on the dissolving bond was therefore properly rendered. If the enforcement of the judgment has the effect of giving to this plaintiff a preference over the other creditors of the bankrupt corporation, in that she will receive a higher percentage of her debt than they will receive, the answer is that such preference, in the first place, is not being enforced against the assets of the bankrupt estate; and, in the second place, it arises, not in contravention of the bankruptcy act, but through its very terms, which render debts of the character of the one held by the plaintiff not discharged, and which do not prevent a creditor of the bankrupt from taking full satisfaction from a personal surety.

Very ably it has been argued to us that under the laws of this state a summons of garnishment creates no lien, and that the lien arises only when the judgment is entered on the answer of the garnishee, and that, since the judgment against the funds admitted by the garnishee was dated subsequently to the adjudication in bankruptcy, such judgment immediately falls as being in contravention of the bankruptcy act. In support of this contention we are cited to the case of Willis v. Parsons, 13 Ga. 335, wherein the court, in the discussion, says of a garnishment founded on a pending proceeding, not an attachment: "It is true that the act intended to afford a new remedy in certain cases therein specified, by authorizing summons of garnishment to issue 'as in cases of attachment,' but not to create a lien as in cases of attachment." In that case the court was merely discussing the peculiar rule existing in this state in the distribution of funds brought into court between creditors whose respective rights are based upon attachment, garnishment, and common-law judgments. That case merely holds that, by the terms of the statutes regulating priorities under a rule to distribute the priority between a garnishing creditor and a creditor by common-law suit is to be determined by a comparison of the dates of their respective main judgments; and the fact that the fund came into court by reason of the service of a summons of garnishment on behalf of one of the creditors prior to the date of the other judgment will not give the former the superior right, unless his judgment in the main action be also the first obtained. Compare, in this connection, the case of Andrews v. Kaufman, 60 Ga. 273, wherein it is held that, upon rule to distribute, a creditor who holds a common-law judgment prior in date to the main judgment of another creditor who has proceeded by attachment is to be preferred to the latter, although the action in which the common-law judgment was obtained was instituted subsequently to the levy of the attachment; yet it will not be disputed that the levy of the attachment creates a lien. See Civ. Code 1895, §§ 4577, 4578. It may be noted that by an amendment (Laws Ga. 1890-91, p. 75), now incorporated as a part of the Code section last cited, an attachment will have priority over an ordinary judgment obtained on a suit instituted after the levy.

In Armour Packing Co. v. Wynn, 119 Ga. 683, 46 S. E. 865, a case wherein the summons of garnishment was sued out within four months of the bankruptcy of the defendant, although the garnishment was predicated upon a prior judgment more than four months old, the court held that the lien on the funds in the hand of the garnishee was "obtained through a legal proceeding instituted within four months prior to the filing of the petition in bankruptcy," and was rendered void by section 67 (f) of the bankruptcy act. In the opinion in that case the following (which is plainly obiter) appears: "It has been several times held, where an ordinary action has been brought and a garnishment summons is served, and a judgment is obtained by the plaintiff against the defendant within four months of the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, and a like judgment is obtained thereafter against the gar-nishee, that the lien of the garnishment is rendered null, even though it may have provisionally attached by being served more than four months before the filing of the petition in bankruptcy. In re Lesser (D. C.) 108 Fed. 201; In re McCartney (D. C.) 109 Fed. 621, 6 Am. Bankr. Rep. 387." The learned justice who wrote the opinion manifestly overlooked the fact that the Lesser Case, on which this statement is predicated, had been reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Metcalf v. Barker, 187 U. S. 165, 23 Sup. Ct. 67, 47 L. Ed. 122, 9 Am. Bankr. Rep. 38.

Whether the summons of garnishment creates a lien depends upon the particular shade of meaning given to the word "lien." If it be used in the old common-law sense of the right to immediately grasp or hold in manual possession a chattel till something be performed or done by the owner, then a summons of garnishment does not create a lien on the funds in the hands of the garnishee. But the word has also a broader meaning. "The term 'lien' in a narrow and more technical sense, signifies the right by which a person in possession of personal property holds and detains it against the owner in satisfaction of a demand; but it has a more extensive meaning, and in common acceptation is understood and used to denote a legal claim or charge on property, either real or personal, for the payment of any debt or duty. Every such claim or charge is still a lien on the property, although the property be not in the possession of him to whom the debt or duty is due." "A lien is defined to be a hold or claim which one has upon the property of another as security for some debt or charge. At common law there could be no lien without possession. It is therein defined as a right in one man to retain that which is in possession and belonging to another. In maritime law, liens exist independently of possession, either actual or constructive; and in the courts of equity the term 'lien' is used as synonymous with a charge or incumbrance upon the thing, where there is neither jus in re nor ad rem, nor possession of the thing." See Words & Phrases Judicially Defined, vol. 5, p. 4144 et seq., where these and a variety of similar definitions are given. See, also, In re Byrne (D. C.) 97 Fed. 762, 764; Downer v. Brackett, 21 Vt. 599, 602, Fed. Cas. No. 4,043; United States Blowpipe Co. v. Spencer, 40 W. Va. 698, 21 S. E. 769.

Whether the service of a summons of garnishment creates a technical lien on the funds in the hands of the garnishee or not, still, especially when the garnishee admits liability and pays the fund into court, or in lieu of such actual payment a statutory bond is substituted, the court acquires such a hold upon the money or the res, such a right to retain and administer the fund, or what has been substituted for the fund, the bond, that the subsequent adjudication in bankruptcy, made more than four months thereafter, will not disturb it. Pickens v. Roy, 187 U. S. 177, 23 Sup. Ct. 78, 47 L. Ed. 128, 9 Am. Bankr. Rep. 47, sub nom. Pickens v. Dent, 106 Fed. 653, 45 C. C. A. 522. In that case the court, reasserting the rule that the court which first obtains rightful jurisdiction over the subject-matter shall hold it, quotes approvingly from Frazier v. Southern Loan & Trust Co., 99 Fed. 707, 40 C. C. A. 76, 3 Am. Bankr. Rep. 710, as follows: "The bankrupt act of 1898 does not in the least modify this rule, but with unusual carefulness guards it in all of its detail, provided the suit pending in the state court was instituted more than four months before the District Court of the United States had adjudicated the bankruptcy of the party entitled to or interested in the subject-matter of such controversy." See, also, in the same connection Metcalf v. Barker, 187 U. S. 165, 23 Sup. Ct. 67, 47 L. Ed. 122; Collier on Bankruptcy (6th Ed.) 571; Boston Mercantile Co. v. Ould-Carter Co., 123 Ga. 453, 51 S. E. 466.

Judgment affirmed.

(78 S. C. 294)

ARMOUR & CO. v. ROSS et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 4, 1907.)

Petition for rehearing denied.

For former opinion, see 58 S. E. 941.

PER CURIAM. After careful consideration of the petition herein, this court is satisfied that no material question of law or of fact has either been overlooked or disregarded. It is therefore ordered that the petition be dismissed, and that the order heretofore granted staying the remittitur be revoked.

(78 S. C. 433)

McMILLAN et al. v. INSURANCE CO. OF NORTH AMERICA.

SAME v. INSURANCE CO. OF NORTH AMERICA et al.

(Supreme Court of South Carolina. Nov. 2, 1907.)

On petition for rehearing. Denied.

For former opinion, see 58 S. E. 1020.

PER CURIAM. After careful consideration of the petition for rehearing herein, the court is satisfied that no material issue of law or fact has been overlooked or disregarded. It is therefore ordered that the petition be dismissed, and that the stay of remittitur heretofore granted be, and is hereby, revoked.

